32-35. He should worship Vighnakartā with Drāviṇī in the north-west corner. All of them have the noose, goad, mudrā of protection in their hands. They have the lustre resembling the young sun and are adorned with the bees covetous of ichor oozing out of their cheeks. On each side of the ṣaṭkoṇa (two intersecting triangles) the two divine treasures śaṅkha and padma are to be meditated upon along with their śaktis and worshipped as before. In the filaments of the lotus he should worship the six aṅgas (limbs) and on the petals eight mātṛs are to be worshipped. He should worship Indra etc. and the weapons vajra (thunderbolt) etc. in the bhūgṛha (the square outside the cakra). Thus worshipping Vighneśa one should achieve one's cherished desires.

36. The intelligent devotee shall perform attentively the tarpaṇa rite of Gajāsya (the elephant-faced deity) by means of pure water four hundred and fortyfour times every day.

37-38. He should captivate kings by means of oblations through lotuses, their queens by lilies, one shall captivate the ministers through kumuda (white lilies) flowers and brahmins by means of the auspicious twigs of fig trees. A learned man should captivate kings by means of udumbara twigs : vaiśyas through plakṣa twigs and the castes placed in the last.

39. One obtains prosperity and glory by means of ghee and acquisition of gold by means of honey. Cows are obtained through cow's milk and one shall have all prosperity through curds.

40. The acquisition of cooked food (anna) by means of (Homa) oblation is done with cooked rice. Water is obtained by means of samidh (fuel) of Vetasa reeds. One obtains clothes by performing the sacrifice with the auspicious kusumbha flowers.

41. Henceforth, I shall recount tarpaṇa that are repeated four times and which bestow desired things to everyone. In the beginning he should offer water four times to everyone uttering the mūlamantra.

42-43. He should perform tarpaṇa four times with each of the syllables of the previous mantra, then four times with the mantra ending in svāhā : then propitiating the deity four times with the mūlamantra, he should propitiate the pairs (of deities) in the previous manner. The Śakti accompanied by the lord and the lord accompanied by the Śakti should be propitiated.

44. Thus there will be twentysix pairs. He should perform tarpaṇa by means of seed letters which is the first letter of their respective names.

45-47. Thus it will be four hundred and fortyfour times in aggregate. After doing propitiation of the deity in this way, he should then offer (upacāra) services as before. Then praying for all his cherished desires and paying homage to the deity, the learned devotee should dismiss the lord. He shall begin the vrata thus. On the fourth day, in the dark half of the month of Bhādra, he should be free from lassitude

(in performing the Vrata). Beginning with the sunrise till the rising of the moon he should not take his seat on the ground, he should have control over his speech, and attain steadiness of mind.

48. When the moon rises, the mantrī (the worshipper of a mantra) should worship Gaṇanāyaka properly in the manner mentioned before, by means of various offerings of flowers.

49. He should offer to him twentyone modakas (sweet meat). He should repeat mantra one thousand and eight times before him.

50. Then he should offer arghya with camphor, saffron, red flowers and sandal pastes with the mūlamantra adding gaṇapati in the dative in the end.

51. (Idamarghyam kalpayāmi namaḥ) I present this arghya and bow. This is considered to be the mantra for the arghya. After eulogising, bowing down and dismissing (the deity) he should worship the moon again.

52. He should offer arghya four times. Then after worshipping his preceptor, he should give half the number of sweet meats and the arghya to brāhmaṇas.

53-55. Half the number of sweet meats he shall himself partake of. He should avoid sexual intercourse and should have control over his senses. One who performs this vrata properly for a year, attains sons, grandsons, happiness, wealth and health. If he is unable to perform vrata (the pious observance) beginning from sunrise, the knower of the mantra should perform it from the sunset till the rising of the moon according to procedure given before. Even if he performs thus, he would certainly attain fruits as stated before.

56-58. The idol of Gaṇeśa is to be made of ivory, or of a margosa tree (branch) broken by a monkey or an elephant or of a white arka plant. After instilling prāṇa in it and invoking Gaṇeśa there and worshipping him properly when the moon is in eclipse, he should touch it without taking any food and should carry it in the śikhā (the sacred hair on the hair). Thereby he shall be victorious in gambling, battles and legal disputes.

59-60.[1] Bījam (gam) Varāha (ha) adorned with bindu (m) then k and l adorned with Manu (au) and bindu, smṛti (ga) māṁsa (la) attached with manu (au) and bindu, then one should utter Karṇa (a), Ucchiṣṭagaṇe, baka (ś) with a long vowel (i.e. ā) then pavana (ya), then utter mahā Yakṣāya unto the great Yakṣa this bali (offering) is presented. This mantra is intended for presenting an offering which serves the purpose of attaining all desired ends.

61-62. Praṇava = om, then bhuvaneśvarī = hrīm, then after the deitie's own bīja = gam the nine-syllabled mantra. will come which is hasti piśācī likhe and agnisundarī = Svāhā This nine-syllabled one which has just been mentioned is the bestower of all siddhis to those who worship (it). With all the letters of the mantra he should make six ancillary parts.[2]

63. O Nārada, everything else is similar to the previous mantra. Henceforth, I shall duly recount the mantra of the excellent Vakratuṇḍa.

64. Toya = va, Vidhi = k, attached with Vahni = ra, Hari is equipped ith Karṇa = t u; indu = ., dīrghadāraka = ḍāya. This six-syllabled mantra ends with Varman = hum.[3] (The whole mantra comes to this : Vakratuṇḍāya hum).

65. Bhārgava is its sage, the metre is anuṣṭup, the lord is Gaṇādhipa. (He who) is called Vakratuṇḍa is the = Bīja (the seed), Vam is Śakti and Kavaca (coat of mail).

66-69. With the syllables of the Mantra stationed between tāra = Om and hṛt = namaḥ and bedecked with candra = . He shall make the syllables of the Mantras for the six limbs. He should fix the syllables of the mantra in the middle of the eyebrows, in the neck, in the heart, in the navel, the penis and in feet. After the nyāsa rite he shall perform the Vyāpaka rite with the whole mantra. One should worship the elephant-faced lord whose lustre is like that of the rising sun, who holds the noose, goad, the gestures of offering boons and assurance and whose ornaments and garments are red. Thus meditating he should

1. These two verses give the Bali mantra thus :
Gaṁ haṁ klauṁ glauṁ ucchiṣṭa-gaṇeśāya mahāyakṣāyāyam baliḥ.
2. The combination of the mantra will be as follows :
Oṁ hrīṁ gaṁ hastipiśācilikhe svāhā.
3. It gives the mantra thus : Vakratuṇḍāya hum.

perform japa of the mantra for twelve lakhs of times. By eight kinds of articles he should perform homa one tenth of the number of japa. He should worship the lord along with Tīvrā etc. in the pedestal. He should conceive of the idol with the root Mantra. After invoking the Lord in it, he should worship him there.

70-73. In the six corners the six aṅgas (limbs) and in the (eight) petals the Śaktis shall be worshipped. One should worship Vidyā (learning), Vidhātrī (the dispenser of destinies). Bhogadā (the bestower of worldly enjoyment) Vipraghātinī (the annihiletrix), Nidhipradīpā (one who has the treasure-trove as the light), Pāpaghnī (the destroyer of sins), Puṇyā (meritorious goddess), then in the end Śaśīprabhā (having the lustre of the moon). At the tips of the petals Vakra-tuṇḍa, Ekadamṣṭra, Mahodara, Gajāsya, Lambodara, Vikaṭa, Vighnarāṭ, Dhūmravarṇa (are worshipped).

Outside, he shall worship lords of the worlds equipped with weapons. Thus performing worship of Gaṇanāyaka along with his five āvaraṇa deities, one shall achieve all desirable things by the grace of Vakratuṇḍa.

74-75. The celibate shall obtain the mantra from the teacher along with dīkṣā (initiation) and saṁskāra (consecration). He shall pertake of only haviṣya, be truthful in speech, should have control over his senses. He should perform japa for twelve thousand times along with the homas for six months. Then he can withstand poverty and becomes comparable to Kuvera.

76. Beginning with the fourth day (of the lunar fortnight) to the end of the other caturthī (the fourth day) he should respectfully complete japa for ten thousand times. By performing homa for hundred and eight times everyday he shall attain benefit as before.

77. In both the halves of the lunar months the repeator of the mantras shall perform hundred Homas with apūpas (sweet pies) on the caturthī day. Within a year he shall attain the highest prosperity.

78. One shall perform worship of the Lord, in accordance with the injunctions on the aṅgāraka caturthī when a Tuesday falls on the Caturthī day) and performs homa with havis. He shall make milkpudding as naivedya (food offering).

79-80. Thereafter, the intelligent devotee shall duly worship and feed the preceptor. He shall perform Homa in the fire for a thousand times by means of offerings dedicated. By doing thus for a year he shall attain great glory and prosperity.

Henceforth, I shall recount another means (of attaining glory) with a desire for the welfare of the world.

81-84. The intelligent devotee shall worship Gaṇeśa with the offerings of beaten rice, milk-pudding, sweet pies, other sweets and fruits. Then repeating the mantras he shall take turmeric, sea salt, orris root weighing half a niṣka or still half of it. (A niṣka = 16 māṣas). He shall purify them and grind them into powder. Keeping powder in the palm of his hand he shall repeat the mantra. He shall drop powder in Cow's urine. Then charging them with the mantra thousand times, the wise devotee should make the lady who has just bathed after menstruation and has become pure and put on beautiful white clothes, to drink the medicine just before the deity. Even a barren woman will give birth to a son endowed with good marks.

85-87. Henceforth, I shall mention a wonderful secret. One shall strenuously smear a plot of ground extending to gocarman (i.e. 150 hastas in length and 150 hastas in breadth). He should strew grains over there and place a jar over it. The jar should be filled with pure water. As auspicious new platter shall be placed over the jar, the platter should be filled with ghee made of tawny cow's milk. A nice wick shall be lighted therein with six-syllabled and eight-syllabled mantras.

88. He should invoke the Lord in the lamp and worship him with sandal pastes, flowers etc. The wise devotee shall also worship a virgin or a bachelor who has taken his (her) bath.

89. The bachelor or the virgin should be placed in front of the lamp. Then meditating the lord in the lamp thus placed he should repeat the mantra and look to it as if he was Gaṇeśvara himself who had taken the form of a brahmin.

90. Then, the virgin or the bachelor will be able to answer any question concerning riches, things lost or any matter of the future.

91. If one adds hṛt = namaḥ to the six syllabled mantra it becomes eight-syllabled one. O Celestial sage, there are other Mantras in the Tantra of Gaṇeśa.

92. What is it in the three worlds that cannot be achieved by Sādhakas ? One cannot see anything that cannot be achieved by means of twentyeight syllabled mantra or nine syllabled mantra.

93. Thus the procedure of the mantras of Gaṇeśa has been recounted to you. Do not mention this to the knaves or cheats or anyone other than disciples.

94. He who worships Lord Gaṇeśa, the bestower of everything, shall attain all pleasures here and in the end will attain salvation.

CHAPTER SIXTYNINE

The procedure of repeating the mantras

Sanat Kumāra said :

1. Henceforth, I shall mention the procedure of repetition of the Mantras of the sun god whose physical body is the Veda, on the propitiation whereof, one shall attain things wished for on the earth.

2-6.[1] (Mantra) Tāra = Om, = Medhā = gha attached with recikā = r, rati = ṇa joined with netra = i, that is joined with visarga = :, bhṛgu = sa endowed with vāmakarṇa = u and marut = ya which has become āsana = seat of Vahni = ra, the rest is

1. The mantra of Sūrya runs thus Oṁ ghṛṇiḥ sūrya ādityaḥ.

ādityа. (Oṁ ghṛṇiḥ Sūrya āditya is the mantra). This is the mantra which is the bestower of worldly pleasure and salvation. The sage of the mantra is Devabhāga, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is the Sun. The bija is māyā = hrīm, the Śakti is ramā Śrīm. The utility of it is what is seen and what is unseen. Sattva in the dative is said to be hṛdaya = namaḥ, Brahmā in the dative is said to be dviṭh = svāhā, in the śikhā = vasaṭ, viṣṇu in the dative (should be uttered), Varma = hum is said to be Rudra in the dative, agni in the dative, netra = vauṣaṭ (should be said) afterwards, Sattva in the dative is said with astra = phaṭ. Tejo Jvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ svāhā is the series of the mantra. Then again placing the six-syllabled mantra within hrīm and śrīṁ he should make the nyāsa of six limbs.

7-8. He should perform nyāsa[1] (fixation) in the head, heart, in the belly and in the back by means of their names ending in the dative case. Thereafter he shall fix Āditya, Ravi, Bhānu, Bhāskara and Sūrya on the head, in the face, in the heart in the rectum and in the feet. He shall fix five short vowels = (o,e,u,i,a) beginning with Sadya = Oṁ using (the words) in the dative case. They will end in hṛdaya = namaḥ (om ādityāya namaḥ etc.)

9. He shall fix eight syllables beginning with tāra (oṁ) etc. placing them between hrīṁ and śrīṁ on the head, face, neck, chest, belly, navel, penis and rectum.

---

1. These verses give the method of fixation in the following manner :

Satyāya tejojvālāmani hum phaṭ svāhā, hṛdayāya namaḥ; Brahmaṇe tejojvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ svāhā, śirase svāhā; Viṣṇave tejojvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ svāhā, śikhāyai vasaṭ; Rudrāya tejojvālāmaṇi Kavacāya hum phaṭ svāh hum; Agnaye tejojvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ svāhā netratrayāya vauṣat, Sarvāya tejojvālamani hum phaṭ svāhā, Karatalapṛṣṭhābhyām astrāya phaṭ. The nyāsa rite in the fingers is performed in the similar way. Then again the fixation is done by adding hrīm in the beginning and śrīm in the end. According to some scholars the mantra of Sūrya begins with Om hrīm and ends with śrīm and to others it begins with Om śrīm and ends with hrīm.

2. The verse gives the direction of the nyāsa. We have a clear conception of the method from Rāghava Bhaṭṭa's commentary on Śāradā Tilaka, p. 582. He states thus : Om Ādityāya namaḥ, om Ravaye namaḥ, om bhānave namaḥ, ım bhāskarāya namaḥ, aṁ sūryāya namaḥ.

3. These verses give the method of Maṇḍalanyāsa which is as follows; Oṁ hrīm tejojvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ svāha candramaṇḍalāya śrīm. Om hrīm

10. He shall perform nyāsa of the sphere of the moon beginning on the head and ending with the neck with vowels followed by bindu and the word, the disc of the moon in the dative, while doing this he should meditate on the moon.

11. All the sparśas, i.e. the consonants (beginning with ka and ending with ma) added with bindu should be uttered. Then he should utter the disc of the sun in the dative and then meditating on the sun pradyotana (the lustrous one) he should fix them (the letters) beginning with the neck and ending with navel.

12-15. Then uttering ya etc. with bindu one shall fix them from the navel to feet along with the disc of the fire in the dative. While doing this he should meditate on fire. This is called maṇḍalanyāsa (the placement of the disc) which is the giver of great brilliance. The excellent sādhaka shall fix the disc of the moon in the dative preceded by the letters beginning with a and ending with that and followed by namaḥ in the end. (aṁ somamaṇḍalāya namaḥ). They should be fixed beginning from the head and ending with the heart. The letters from da to Kṣa and the disc of fire ending in the dative case should be fixed with good concentration to the places beginning with the heart and ending with feet. This nyāsa (fixation) is of the nature of fire and moon and is the bestower of all siddhis.

16. One shall perform the nyāsa rite of the syllables of the alphabets ending in jaya = m with bindu and should utter puruṣātmane namaḥ. He will do the vyāpaka nyāsa finally. This is called haṁsanyāsa.

17-18. He shall fix eight vowels twice and then five other consonants and then five consonants. In this order he shall use all letters. He shall fix nine planets beginning with the sun. He shall fix them respectively in the ādhāra = mūlādhāra (rectum), penis, navel, heart, and throat, in the orifice of the mouth, in the middle of the eye-brows on the forehead and in the Brahmarandhra (the cerebral orifice).

tejojvālāmaṇi hum phaṭ, bhāskaramaṇḍalāya śrīm, Om hrīm tejojvālāmaṇi vahnimaṇḍalāya śrīm. But regarding the nyāsa there is difference of opinion.

19. He shall again perform the three nyāsas, viz the haṁsa, agnīsoma and maṇḍalatraya (the three spheres). With the mūlamantra he shall perform the vyāpaka rite.

20-21. After performing nyāsa, one shall meditate on the sun in his lotus-like heart. The sun is conceived as holding two lotuses and the gestures of gifts (dāna) and assurance (abhaya) with his hands. He wears ear-rings, bracelets, on the upper arms and necklaces. His physical body is made of trayī (the three vedas. After meditating thus the repeater of the mantra shall perform japa eight hundred thousand times.

22-23. To the one-tenth of the number of japa, he shall duly perform homa in the fire with red lotuses or gingelly seeds. At the outset he should worship pīṭha where there is the location of dharma etc. Then he should worship (in four corners) the Śaktis named Prabhūtā, Vimalā, Sārā and Samārādhyā, then Paramamukhā in the middle and end the disc of the sun.

24-27. After worshipping the disc of the moon and the fire he should worship the disc of the sun. The śaktis associated with the Pīṭha are dīptā (illuminated), sūksmā (suble), jayā (victorious), bhadrā (gentle), Vibhūti (prosperity), vimalā (devoid of impurities), amoghā (non-futile), vidyutā (lightning) sarvatomukhī (facing all round). Excepting the three short vowels (a,i,u) and the neuter ṛ,ṝ,ḷ,ḹ all the vowels possessed of fire = rā and indu = m, are the bījas of the śaktis (i.e., ram, rim, rum, rem, raim, rom, raum, ram, raḥ). The śaktis preceded by by these bījas (seeds) are to be worshipped. The seat should be worshipped with the pīṭhamantra beginning with tāra = om. It is of the nature of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Śiva which are joined with saura in the dative and ending with Yogapīṭhātmane the pīṭha is of the nature of yoga, then he should utter hṛdaya = namaḥ.

28. Dhruva = om, viyut = ha with bindu, kham, Khakholkāya hrt = namaḥ is the mantra. To this nine-syllabled mantra the learned worshipper should objectify the form of the deity.

29. One should worship the cosmic witness of the worlds after duly invoking him in the conceived form. Thereafter, he should worship six limbs and in the quarters he should worship eight limbs.

30. After worshipping Āditya in the middle and Ravi, Bhānu, Bhāskara and Sūrya in the four quarters with sadya = om and with these four short vowels.

31. The śaktis are to be worshipped in the intermediate quarters with the first letters of their respective names. They are Uṣā, Prajñā, Prabhā and Sandhyā. Then he should worship Brahmā etc, 32-33. Aruṇa should be worshipped in the front. So also Soma, Guru (Jupiter), Bhṛgu (Venus) should be worshipped. Aryamā and others are to be worshipped in the quarters. As before he should worship Mars, Rāhu and Ketu in the corners. The intelligent devotee shall worship Indra and others as well as Vajra (thunderbolt) etc as before.

34. Thus worshipping the sun favourably disposed to the devotees, he shall, with full concentration, offer arghya to the sun-god every day.

35. Sitting on a good ground he shall perform the prāṇāyāma and after doing nyāsa as stated before, he worship the pīṭha of the Sun as before, he should make a maṇḍala (mystic diagram) of the Sun and worship the pīṭha of the Sun as before.

36-37. After meditating on the sun, he should offer divine and mental services. He should a place beautiful copper vessel that can hold a prastha measure of water on the mystic diagram drawn by red sandal paste and fill it with water while he should repeat the alphabets in the reverse order (from kṣa to a) and mūla mantra.

38-39. The water should be conceived as emerging from the Sun's disc like the ocean of nectar. He should put saffron, yellow pigment, black mustard, sandal and red-sandal, Kara-vīra, japa (chinese rose), kuśa grains of Sāli and Śāmyāka rice. He should put gingelly seeds, bamboo shoots and barley grains also in the water.

40. After invoking the sun with his ancillaries and the surrounding deities, he should worship him as before, by means of sandal pastes, flowers, incense, lamps, food offerings (naivedya) etc in accordance with the prescribed rules.

41. After performing prāṇāyāma three times he should do aṅganyāsa as before. He shall write Śuddhabīja = Vam in his right hand by means of sandal paste.

42-45. With that (i.e. with the hand) he shall cover the arghya vessel and repeat the mantra with singleness of mind for one hundred and eight times. He shall worship the sun again. Then lifting the arghya vessel with both the hands he should kneel on the ground and raise the vessel up to the head. Then he should fix his vision on the sun in the sky along with his surrounding deities. Then worshipping the sun mentally again he should repeat the mūlamantra intellectually conceiving himself as one with him. Then meditating the sun in the maṇḍala drawn by red sandal paste, he should offer arghya. Then offering handful of flowers he should repeat the mantra hundred and eight times.

46-47. Everyday or on Sunday he shall offer arghya to vivasvān. Being thus propitiated, the Sun bestows riches, fame and happiness on him. He grants sons, nay, everything that is desired. This is called arghyadāna (the offering of arghya). It increases span of life and health.

48. It is the bestower of wealth, grains, animals, welfare, landed property, friends and womenfolk. It yields splendour, virility, fame, glory, learning, riches and worldly pleasures.

49. One who is devoted to the propitiation of Gāyatrī, one who is devoutly engaged in worshipping Sandhyā (dusk and dawn prayer), a brahmin who regularly repeats this mantra in this way, never falls into misery.

50-52. After worshipping (the deity) in this manner, the nirmālya (the remains of an offering to the deity) should be handed over to Vikartana. The bīja called Mārtaṇḍa Bhairava fascinates the three worlds (runs like this): Viyat = ha, vahni = ra, marut = va, sadyānta = au, arghīśa = ú is attached with bindu. If this bija is enclosed with bimba bīja = thrīm, it bestows all desired objects.

Everything should be known as before, by the learned man. The mantra of the moon runs thus: bhṛgu = sa, jala = va endowed with bindu = and manu = au, then soma in the dative and ends with hṛdaya = namaḥ.

53. This king of mantras consists of six syllables. Its sage is considered to be Bhṛgu, the metre is paṅkti and the deity is known to be Soma.

54. The first (i.e. svaum) is the bīja, namaḥ is the śakti. The purpose is for the acquisition of everything. One shall perform the rite of ṣaḍaṅga nyāsa by means of six long vowels adding to the bīja.

55. One shall make meditation on the moon whose face is like that of the full moon, whose lustre is that of the crystal, whose face shines with the dark forelocks, who holds the desired Kumuda (lily) and who wears a necklace of pearls.

56. One shall repeat the mantra for six hundred thousand times (ṛtulakṣa). To a tenth of it (i.e. sixty thousands) he shall perform homa with milk-pudding and ghee. This should be done after one has ended the worshipping of the moon in the pedestal.

57. By the mūlamantra one should conceive the deity there and should worship the moon in the proper procedure. The ancillary worship aṅgapūjā should be performed in the filament of the lotus and in the petals the following śaktis should be worshipped.

58. The śaktis are Rohiṇī, Kṛttikā, Revatī and Bharaṇī, then again Rātridā, Ārdrā, Jyotsnā (moon light), Kalā (digit) that has the lustre similar to that of the necklace (i.e. white).

59. All of them are auspicious. They wear white garlands and clothes spotlessly. They are bedecked in pearl necklace. They are endowed with heavy bosoms. They are fair and possessed of folded hands.

60. All of them are drawn towards their lover mentally. They are slow in conquetry due to intoxication of passion. These lotus-eyed ones with faces resembling the full moon are to be worshipped.

61-62. The eight planets beginning with the sun are to be worshipped at the tips of the petals. The sun, the son of the earth (i.e. Mars), Budha (Mercury), the Saturn, the preceptor of the gods (i.e. Jupiter), Rāhu, Venus and Ketu are to be worshipped at the tips of the petals. They are of these colours respectively: red, pink, white, blue, yellow, smoke-coloured, white and black.

63. They have placed their left hands on their thighs. With their right hands they show the gestures of fearlessness. The intelligent devotee shall worship the guardians of the worlds and their weapons outside it (i.e. the lotus).

64. The Mantra, thus propitiated, will grant desires of one's soul.

One should keep fast on the full-moon day and offer the arghya when the moon appears.

65-68. He shall make three mystical diagrams on the ground extending from east to west. Sitting on the lower diagram, he shall place the articles of rituals in the middle one. He shall worship Soma in the third diagram with lotuses drawn properly. But this should be done after completing the worship of the pedestal. The knower of mantra should place a silver vessel, in front. Then filling it with sweet-smelling cow milk and touching it, he should repeat the mantra for one hundred and eight times. Then the knower of the mantra should offer arghya to the moon for attaining siddhis by means of Vidyāmantra.

69. According to this procedure he should perform the rite every month with alertness. Within a year the man attains the desired objects in the earth.

70. (Vidyāmantra) One should utter first Vidye Vidyā-mālini, then utter candriṇi, candramukhi, the vidyā-mantra is said to end with dviṭha. The whole mantra runs thus: Vidye vidyāmālini candriṇi candramukhi svāhā.

71. He who thus repeats steadily the mantra of the lord of lilies (i. e. the moon) before long achieves wealth, grains, sons, grandsons and good fortune.

72-73. Henceforth, I shall recount the mantra of Aṅgāraka (Mars). It bestows wealth and sons (the mantra runs thus) Tāra = om, vyoma = ha joined with dīrgha = ā and indu = ., this (ha) again is equipped with indu = ., sānta = sa attached with (vi) sarga = :, caṇḍīśau = dual kha attached with bindu = ., and Visarga = : respectively (the whole mantra is: Om hāṁ haṁ aḥ khaṁ khaḥ).

This great mantra of Maṅgala (Mars), consisting of six syllables, is the bestower of every desire.

74. The sage is Virūpākṣa, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is Kuja. After performing the aṅganyāsa rite with the six syllables of the mantra one should meditate on the son of the earth (i.e. Mars).

75. One should meditate the son of the earth seated on a ram bearing red garments and limbs and holding the trident, sword, club and gesture of granting boons by means of his hands. He is born of the sweat of Īśāna.

76. He should repeat the mantra nine hundred thousand times. By the tenth portion (of the mantra repeated) he should perform homas into the fire with the fuel born of Khadira (catechu) tree. He shall worship Kuja (Mars) in the pedestal of Śiva.

77-80. After propitiating the aṅgas first, he should worship the twentyone forms of Aṅgāraka in twentyone squares. The following are the twentyone forms of the son of the earth: Maṅgala, Bhūmiputra (son of earth), Ṛṇahartā (remover of debts), Dharmaprada (bestower of wealth), sthirāsana (having a steady seat), Mahākāya (of huge body), Sarvakarmarodhaka (obstructor of all rites), Lohita (red one), Sāmagānām kṛpākara, (merciful unto the singers of Sāman), Dharmātmaja (son of earth), Bhauma the son of earth), Bhūmida (bestower of lands), Bhūminandana (son of earth), Aṅgāraka (Mars), Mahisūnu (son of earth) Sarvarogāpahāraka (remover of ailments), Vṛṣṭikartā (the cause of rains), Vṛṣṭihartā (remover of rain), Sarvakāryārthasidhida (bestower of fulfulment of all tasks).

81. The repeater of mantras shall worship Maṅgala and others in order as they are seated in their respective places. He shall also worship Indra and others with Vajra etc. Thus the mantra becomes effective.

82. A fawn-eyed lady, desirous of a son, shall observe the rite pertaining to Mars). The commencement of the vrata in the month of Mārgaśira (Nov-Dec) or Vaiśākha (April-May) is specially recommended.

83. She shall get up at the rise of Aruṇa (i.e. before dawn). After completing necessary activities she must cleanse her teeth with apāmārga twigs (the plant Achyranthes Aspera) with control of speech.

84. After the bath she shall wear red clothes and red garlands of flowers. She shall smear herself with red unguents. The food offerings and other requisites shall also be of red colour and should keep them ready.

85. She shall invite qualified brahmins and worship the Mars in accordance with his permission. She shall sit on a red seat on the ground smeared with cowdung of a red cow.

86. After sipping the water thrice and remembering the place and time she shall utter the desired object. She shall perform the nyāsa rite of the names of the Mars in her own limbs.

87. The chaste lady shall make a nyāsa (fixation) of Sāmagānāṁ kṛpākara in the face. Dharātmaja in the nostrils, Kuja in the eyes, Bhauma on the forehead.

88. She shall fix Bhūmida in the middle of the eyebrows, Bhūminandana on the head, Angāraka in the tuft of hair, Mahīsuta all over the body.

89. She shall fix them Sarvarogāpahāraka in both the arms and the wise one then fix vṛṣṭikartā in places beginning with the head and ending with the feet.

90. She shall fix vṛṣṭikartā in the places beginning from the feet and ending with the head. Then she shall fix in the end in all quarters Sarvakāryārthasiddha.

91. After quickly fixing the son of the earth, thus in the navel, heart, head and the face, in one's own body, she shall, as before, meditate on Dharātmaja (son of earth).

92-95. Then after worshipping with mental offerings, she shall place arghya. She shall get a triangle inscribed in a copper-plate and within it twenty one squares drawn. She shall invoke Aṅgāraka there and worship him with red flowers etc. After worshipping the ancillary deities first she should worship Maṅgala and others in the twentyone squares. After worshipping Cakra, Āra and Bhūmija in three corners of the triangle she should worship again Indra and others and Vajra etc outside of it. After offering the incense and the lamp she should offer cooked food of wheat as naivedya.

96. She shall fill a copper vessel with pure water and put red sandal, red flowers, fruits and rice grains therein. She shall then offer the arghya to Maṅgala reciting the following couple of mantras.

97-98. O son of earth of great splendour, O lord of the sweat of the pināka-bearing lord (Śiva), seeking a son I have sought refuge in you. Accept the arghya, obeisance to you. O lord resembling the red coral and the japā flower (China rose), O son of Mahī, O highly blessed one, accept this arghya. Obeisance to you.

99. The twentyone names mentioned above should be used in the dative case ending with namaḥ and beginning with tāra = Om and then she should bow down. The circumambulations are of the same number.

100. She should say : I bow down to Maṅgala who was born of the womb of the earth, whose lustre is like that of the cluster of lightning, who is a bachelor and who holds a sword in his hand.

101. With charcoal of Khadira she shall make three lines. Then with concentration of mind she shall wipe them off with her left foot while repeating the following two mantras.

102. For the removal of misery and ill-fortune, for the sake of obtaining a male child, I am wiping off the three-marked lines by means of my left foot.

103. In order to do away with indebtedness, for the achievements of desired object of my heart, I am wiping off the three black lines originating from the three births.

104. Then taking flowers in her hand she should eulogise the son of Dharaṇī (earth) while meditating on his lotus feet for the achievement of Pūjā with all its ancillaries.

105-112. Obeisance to you, the remover of debts and the destroyer of misery and penury. O son of earth, be of perpetual bestower of good fortune and happiness on me. O lord, you resemble molten gold, your lustre is similar to that of the mid-day sun, you bestow happiness, good fortune and destroy indebtedness and poverty. O lord, you are the cause of all happiness. O king of planets. obeisance be to you. O lord of Devas, be graceful to us. O lord, you are the receptacle of all goodness. Devas, Dānavas, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas and serpents attain welfare and obtain the fulfilment of desire (by your grace). Obeisance to that son of earth by propitiating whom the people in the world obtain happiness. Obeisance to that son of earth who bestows misery on people when it is in retrograde motion and who bestows happiness and good fortune on being worshipped. Obeisance to you, O Maṅgala, you shine in the sky, you are the cause of welfare and of riches and progeny. O Bhauma, be pleased with me, O Maṅgala, bestower of auspiciousness, O Rudra incarnate, O ram-vehicled lord, give sons, riches and fame.

113. After eulogising thus and bowing to him she shall dismiss the son of earth. After giving gifts in accordance with her capacity she shall receive blessing of the brahmins.

114-115. After giving fees to the preceptor she shall partake of the naivedya offerings given to the deity. She shall observe these rites every Tuesday for a year. After performing homa with sesame seeds she shall feed fifty brahmins.

116. She shall give away a gold image of Bhauma (Mars) to the preceptor. She should worship (Mars) in a jar placed on the mystic diagram for achieving the fortune of getting a son.

117. A woman who is devoted to the ritualistic vow like this shall obtain fortunate sons. A man should perform this vrata for the removal of indebtedness and the acquisition of wealth.

118-120. A brahmin should repeat the Vedic mantra of Agnirmūrdhā etc. For the completion of worship I shall recount the Gāyatrī of Aṅgāraka. At the end of the word Aṅgārakāya (to Mars) one should utter Vidmahe (we know). At the end of syllables Śaktihastāya (to one who has śakti in his hand) one should utter Dhīmahi (we meditate). Thereafter he shall utter the syllables Pracodayāt also (the Mars should guide us). This is the Gāyatrī of Mars. It bestows all desires upon those who repeat it.

121-122. This is the mode of worship of Bhauma. Henceforth, the mantra of Budha is mentioned. The end of the (syllable) pha = ba united with indu = ., Karṇa = u, then budha with ṅe = in the dative case and in the end it end in hṛt = namaḥ. (the mantra runs thus : Bum Budhāya namaḥ.) This is the mantra of Budha consisting of six syllables (rasārṇā). Brahma is known to be its sage. The metre is paṅkti and the deity is Budha, the bestower of all desired things on men.

123-125. The first syllable (i.e. bum) is the bīja, namaḥ is the śakti. The application of it is for attaining everything. (He shall meditate upon Budha thus :) I salute Budha with great devotion, who is adorned with yellow garments and ornaments. His left hand is placed over his knee and the right hand shows the gesture of assurance. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times after keeping his senses controlled. With one tenth of it (the repeated mantra) he shall perform homa with ghee. He shall worship in the pedestal mentioned before. He shall worship Budha along with aṅgas (ancillaries), Mātṛs (mothers), Dikpālas (guardians of the quarters and their weapons).

126. When the mantra becomes ripe in this way, the repeater of the mantra shall achieve his desires. Everyday he shall repeat the mantra a thousand times and continue it for ten days.

127. There is no doubt that his affliction arising from the planet will soon disappear. The procedure for the propitiation of Budha has been recounted. Now listen to the mode how Jupiter should be propitiated.

128-129. The mantra of Jupiter : The word Bṛhaspati is used in the dative case preceded by its initial letter ba along with indu and agha = ṛ (i.e. Bṛm). It ends in namaḥ. The mantra consists of eight syllables. Bṛṁ Bṛhaspataye namaḥ The sage of it is Brahmā, the metre is anuṣṭup, the deity is the preceptor (of gods) and the bīja is the first syllable (i.e. bṛm hṛt = namaḥ is the Śakti. The nyāsa rite should be performed with a long vowel with the pair of fire (ra and indu = m.

130-131. He shall remember the preceptor of gods thus : He has placed his left hand on the heap of jewels, with his right hand he is scattering them. He is bedecked in yellow flowers, ornaments, unguents and garments. He is the storehouse of vidyās. He has golden lustre. The mantra should be repeated hundred thousand times. With one tenth (of the mantra repeated) he should perform homa either with ghee or cooked food.

132-133. He shall worship the deity in the pedestal of dharma, along with the ancillaries, guardians of the quarters and their weapons. When the mantra is ripe in this way, the repeater of the mantra shall achieve his desire.

134. By performing homa for three days with the niśā flowers soaked in ghee for two thousand times, the repeater of the mantra attains clothes and lands soon.

135-136. The mode of propitiation of Jupiter has been recounted. Now, listen to that of Śukra (Venus). The mantra of Śukra runs thus: Give unto me the cloth, Śukrāya i.e. Śukra in the dative case, which ends with ṭhadvaya = svāhā and begins with dhruva = om. This mantra consists of eleven syllables. Brahmā is its sage, the metre is virāṭ, the deity is the proceptor of Daityas, the bīja is Dhruva = Om and the Śakti is Vasupriyā.

137-138. The six saḍaṅga nyāsa shall be performed with one, two, one, two, three and two syllables of the mantra. The intelligent devotee shall meditate on Śukra who has white garments, unguents and ornaments, who hands over wealth by means of his left hand and shows the gesture of teaching by means of his right hand. He shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times and perform homa a thousand times with ghee.

139. He shall worship the deity in the pedestal of dharma etc. with the ancillaries, Indra and others and their ornaments. On Friday, he shall perform homa with white flowers and sweet scents. He who performs this twentyone times obtains silk garments, and jewels. All these mantras are to be preserved as secrets. They should not be given to anybody. They may be given to a devoted disciple or one's own son.

CHAPTER SEVENTY

The japa of Mahāviṣṇu

1. Henceforth, I shall recount the mantras of Mahāviṣṇu. These mantras are very rare in the world. On receiving them human beings attain their desired object.

2. By the mere utterance of these mantras, hosts of sins get dissolved. It is on knowing these that Brahmā and other become competent to create the universe.

3-4. The word Nārāyaṇa[1] should be used in the dative case (i.e. Nārāyaṇāya) preceded by tāra (om) and hṛt (namaḥ). (the combination is, 'Om namo nārāyaṇāya'). This is the eight-syllabled mantra. The sage to be mastered is Nārāyaṇa. Gāyatrī is its metre, the immutable (Lord) Viṣṇu is the deity. Om is the bīja, so also yaṁ is śakti. Its application is aimed at the acquisition of everything.

5-7. The word kruddholkāya is followed by hṛdaya (kruddholkāya namaḥ). Maholkāya is the head, vīrolkāya is the tuft of hair, Dyulkāya is known as Kavaca. Maholkāya is the astra. The nyāsa (fixation) on five limbs is done thus : Kruddholkāya hṛdayāya namaḥ, Maholkāya śirase svāhā, Vīrolkāya śikhāyai vaṣaṭ, Dyulkāya Kavacāya hum, Sahasrolkāya astrāya phaṭ.) Again one shall perform (the ṣaḍaṅga nyāsa rite) by means of six syllables from the mantra (oṁ hṛdayāya namaḥ naṁ śirase svāhā. Om śikhāyai vauṣaṭ, nām kavacāya hum, rām netratrayāya vauṣaṭ, yam astrāya phaṭ). With the two remaining syllables (i.e, na and ya) one shall fix in the belly and on the back. Thereafter he shall perform the rite of digbandha (arresting the quarters) by means of the mantra of Sudarśana.[2]

8. Tāra = om, then the word namaḥ, then he shall utter the word Sudarśana in the dative case. Then 'astrāya phaṭ' is uttered. Thus the twelve-syllabled mantra has been recounted.

---

1. This verse gives the mantra of Nārāyaṇa thus Om namo Nārāyaṇāya.
2. It gives the mantra of Sudarśana thus :
   Om namaḥ Śudarśanāya astrāya phaṭ.

9-14. I shall recount the nyāsa rite called Vibhūti Pañjara (cage of prosperity). It consists of ten repetitions. One shall fix the syllables of mūlamantra in one's body, in the ādhāra (the base), in the heart and in the face, then in the roots of hands and feet and in the nose. Thus the first repetition is mentioned. The second repetition (of nyāsa) is performed in the throat, in the navel, in the heart, in the breast, in the sides and in the back. The third repetition of nyāsa is performed in the head, face, eyes, ears and nostrils. The fourth repetition should be done in the joints of fingers (excluding the thumb and the toe) of hands and feet taking four at a time. Thereafter one shall fix the seven constituents of the body, prāṇas (vital breath) and the heart. The intelligent devotee shall fix syllables of the mantra one by one and in order. He shall make a fixation of the four syllables of the mantra in the heart, in the shoulders, in the thighs and the feet. He shall fix the remaining ones in the discus, in the conch, in the iron club, in the lotus and in the feet with their respective mudrās (gestures). This is the most excellent of all nyāsas. It is called Vibhūti pañjara.

15. One should fix the syllables of the mantra one by one enclosed between tāra and bindu. But others say that each syllable shculd be fixed with namaḥ in the end (preceded by oṁ)

16. Thereafter, he shall perform the rite of Tattvanyāsa for the attainment of the mood of Viṣṇu. It has been stated by ancient seers that it consists of eight syllables which have the characteristics of eight Prakṛtis.

17. These are the eight Prakṛtis : viz the earth and four other bhūtas (elements), then Ahaṁkāra (ego), Mahat and Prakṛti.

18. The excellent sādhaka shall perform a nyāsa in the foot, in the penis, in the heart, in the face, on the head, in the chest and in the cardiac region and with the single mantra he shall make a nyāsa all over the limbs.

19. The learned devotee shall fix each syllable of the mantra in its respective place uttering each individual name thus: om, then hṛt = namaḥ, then parāya followed by the principle of prakṛti and ending with namaḥ (Om namo parāya pṛthivyai tattvātmane namaḥ, is the combination).

20-23. This nyāsa is called Tattvanyāsa. It is excellent of all nyāsas.

One shall fix the twelve mūrtis (physical forms) united with twelve ādityas. The twelve syllables are united with twelve vowels (excluding ṛ ṝ ḷṛ). The eight-syllabled mantra is mentioned to be having the eight Prakṛtis as its ātman. By adding four syllables to them the total number shall be twelve. The repeater of the mantra shall fix the twelve mūrtis in the forehead, in the belly, in the heart, in the neck, in the right side, in the right shoulder, in the throat and thereafter in the left side, left shoulder, the neck, the back and the hump in their respective order.

24-27. He shall fix Keśava along with dhātṛ, Nārāyaṇa along with Aryaman, Mādhava along with Mitra, Govinda with varuṇa, Viṣṇu united with Aṁśu, Madhusūdana with Bhaga, and Trivikrama united with Vivasvān, Vāmana along with Indra, Śrīdhara along with Pūṣan, and thereafter he shall fix Hṛṣikeśa accompanied by parjanya, Padmanābha united with Tvaṣṭṛ and Dāmodara united with Viṣṇu. Thereafter, he shall fix the twelve-syllabled mantra on the entire head.

28-31. Afterwards the intelligent devotee shall perform the nyāsa rite of the all-pervasive with kirīṭa mantra.

(The Kirīṭa mantra runs thus :) At the end of the word kirīṭa, keyūra and hāra say makara and kuṇḍala. At the end thereof mention cakra, śaṅkha, gadāmbhojahasta (one who has discus, conch, iron club and the lotus in the hands). Pītāmbara (O yellow robed one) śrīvatsāṅkita vakṣasthala one (whose chest is marked with the scar of śrīvatsa). Thereafter, the two lumanaries of the ātman accompanied by Śrī and Bhūmi. Thereafter, he shall say dīptikarāya sahasrādityatejase (to the illuminator who has the brilliance of a thousand suns). At the end he shall say namaḥ. The mantra of Kirīṭa consists of sixty five syllables. After performing nyāsa rite thus, he shall meditate on lord Nārāyaṇa. (The combination of Kirīṭa mantra is as follows: Oṁ kirīṭa-keyūra-hāra-makara-kuṇḍala-śaṅkha - cakra - gadāmbhojahasta-pītāmbaradhara-śrīvatsāṅkita vakṣassthala-śrībhūmisahitātmajyotirdvaya-dīpta-karāya sahasrā ditya-tejase namaḥ).

32-33. One shall remember the yellow-robed deity who is refulgent like a crore of rising suns, who holds in his hand the conch, discus, iron club and the lotus, whose either side is beautified by Bhūmi and Śrī, who has the scar of śrīvatsa in his chest, whose neck shines by means of Kaustubha jewel, who has necklaces, bracelets, bangles and shoulderlets.

34. With the sense-organs under restraint (the devotee shall duly repeat the mantra as many hundred thousand times as there are syllables therein. Certainly the self is purified by the first hundred thousand.

35. By the repetition of the mantra for two hundred thousand times the purification of the mantra is achieved. If the japa is continued to three thousand times, he attains the heavenly region.

36. By the japa of mantra for four hundred thousand times a man attains the vicinity of Viṣṇu. By the japa of mantra for five hundred thousand times knowledge becomes free from impurities.

37. Through the japa extending to six hundred thousand times the repeater of the mantra attains the steadiness of the mind to Viṣṇu. By performing the japa seven hundred thousand times the repeater of the mantra attains identity with Viṣṇu.

38-39. If the repeater of the mantra performs eight hundred thousand japas, he attains salvation. After performing japas, the wise devotee shall perform homa by means of lotuses soaked in honey in the consecrated fire. This should be preceded by worshipping the maṇḍūka in the beginning and ending with the parātattva (the highest principle). This should be done with care in the pedestal.

40. The nine śaktis are vimalā (pure). Utkarṣiṇī (that which attains eminence), jñāna (knowledge), kriyā (rite), Prahvī (humble), Satyā (truthful), Īśāna (lordly). Anugrahā (blessing) is known to be ninth.

41-42. Tāra = Om, then say namo bhagavate viṣṇave sarvabhū, then complete it with tātmane vāsudevāya, then say the word sarvātma, then after saṁyogayogapadma say pīṭhāya, then end it with hṛdaya = -namaḥ (Om namo bhagavate viṣṇave sarvabhūtātmane vāsudevāya sarvātmasaṁyogayogapīṭhātmane namaḥ is the whole combination). This is the pīṭha mantra of thirtysix syllables. By means of this mantra he shall point out the āsana (seat).

43-46. One shall worship the deity by the mūlamantra and invoke the idol therein. At the outset he should worship the aṅgas of the mantras in the filaments (of the lotus). He shall then worship in the eastern petal etc. the following deities viz Vāsudeva, Saṁkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha. He shall then worship the śaktis in the corners in the order of Śānti, Śrī, Rati along with Sarasvatī. They are clad in golden yellow, tamāla, indranīla and they are clad in yellow garments. All these have four hands and they hold a conch, a discus, an iron club and a lotus. The śaktıs have the colours as follows: White, golden, cow milk colour and the colour of the dūrvā grass.

47-48. At the tips of the petals he shall worship the discus, conch, iron club, lotus. Kaustubha jewel, musala (threshing rod), sword and Vanamālā (garland of sylvan flowers), respectively. They have the colours, red, transparent, yellow, golden, dark, black, white, clear white respectively. Outside of it and in front (i.e. in the square) he shall worship the lord of birds having saffron lustre.

49-50. Afterwards, at the sides (i.e right and left of the square) he shall, in due order, worship the treasure of śaṅkha and padma resembling pearls and rubies. He shall worship the (dhvaja) emblem in the west (i. e. behind the deity). In the south east he shall worship Vighna of red colour, in the south-west the dark coloured Ārya, in the northwest Durgā of dark complexion and senānī of yellow colour in the north east.

51-52. The intelligent devotee shall worship the guardians of quarters along with their weapons in the exterior. He who worships the unchangeable Vıṣṇu with his (āvaraṇa) (enclosing deities) shall enjoy all pleasure here and attain Viṣṇu's region finally.

One shall meditate on earth, the deity dark in complexion like the leaves of dūrvā grass and holding the ears of paddy for the purpose of acquiring field, food grains and gold.

53-55. One should meditate on goddess Bhāratī holding a vīṇā and a book who is located at the right side of the Lord of Devas. Her face resembles the full moon. She is clad in white garments resembling the cluster of foams in the ocean of milk. One who meditates on God, the supreme, accompanied by Bhāratī, will be the knower of vedas and their real meaning and will be the excellent of knowers of everything.

56. Meditating on the extremely terrible lord Narasiṁha as his own self and charging the weapon with the mantra, (if he applies it), it comes back to him after killing his enemies.

57-68. The aspirant shall add the bīja of Narasiṁha with the mantra and make a repetition of it for one hundred and eight times and with his left hand sprinkle drops of water and charge with the mantra again and again (over the patient). Even a person bitten by a serpent comes back to life. Adding the garuḍa bīja with the mantra he shall make a repetition of the five-syllabled mantra. For allaying the influence of poison he should meditate on Viṣṇu sitting on garuḍa. The devotee shall inscribe the figure of Tārkṣya on the plank of Aśoka (the tree Jenesia Asoka Roxb) tree and keep it on a mass of Aśoka (foliage). He shall worship the deity with Aśoka flowers. In front of the lord he shall perform homa of those flowers during three sandhyās (dawn, midday and dusk) for seven days. The bird will directly be perceived and will grant the desired boon. After adding the bīja of Gaṇapati to the mantra one should repeat it for a hundred thousand times observing the vow of living on water. He shall see Mahāgaṇapati directly. Adding the mantra with the bīja of vāṇī he should repeat it for six months. Then he shall become a great poet and charm the entire world. The aspirant who performs homa with pieces of guḍūcī half aṅgula in length each soaking in curd, honey and ghee, conquers death. On saturdays one shall touch aśvattha tree closely with hands and perform repetition of the mantra one hundred and eight times, he shall then conquer premature death in the battle.

One shall repeat the mantra twentyfive times and drink water in the morning. He will be free from all sins and ailments and gain knowledge. A jar should duly be installed and filled with clean water. Repeating the mantra ten thousand times, he should sprinkle water on him. This bath will dispel all ailments. During the solar and lunar eclipses the best of the aspirants shall observe fast and repeat the mantra eight thousand times. After repeating the mantra by looking at the brāhmīghṛta (ghee mixed with the leaves of brāhmī plant) he should drink it. There is no doubt that he obtains intellect, poetic talent and fluency of speech.

69-71. He shall perform homa with bilva by performing which he will become the lord of immense wealth. This mantra of Nārāyaṇa is the most excellent of all mantras. It is above all attainment. O Nārada, it has been recounted to you. (Gāyatrī of Nārāyaṇa).[1] After the end of the word Nārāyaṇa vidmahe should be uttered, then after the word vāsudeva ending with the dative case one should utter dhīmahi. He shall utter syllables : tanno Viṣṇu pracodayāt.

72-73. This is called Viṣṇu Gāyatrī which removes all sins. Tāra = om., hṛt = namaḥ, then bhagavān ending in the the dative case, then vāsudevāya. This great mantra consisting of twelve syllables gives enjoyment and salvation. This is to be used without tāra = oṁ by women and śūdras but by the twice-born it is used with tāra = om.

74-76. The sage of it is Prajāpati, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Vāsudeva, the bīja and Śakti are dhruva = om and namaḥ. The conception of aṅgas is performed with one (om), two (namaḥ), four (bhagavate), five (Vāsudevāya) and with all letters. One shall fix in sequence on the head, on the forehead, in the hands, in the heart, in the body, in the eyes, in the mouth, in the throat, in the navel, in the penis, in the knees and in the feet. This is called the nyāsa of creation (Sṛṣṭinyāsa).

77. They call it Sthitinyāsa (preservation), if it begins with the heart and ends with the head. They know it saṁhāraka nyāsa if the fixation begins with the feet and ends with the head.

78-81. Thereafter, he shall perform the tattvanyāsa (the nyāsa of principles). This is well-guarded in the Tantras. The twelve tattvas are as follows: Jīva (Individual soul), prāṇa (vital breath) citta (mind), hṛtpadma (the lotus of the heart)

1. The Viṣṇu Gāyatri runs thus :
Nārāyaṇāya vidmahe Vāsudevāya dhimahi tanno Viṣṇuḥ pracodayāt.

the spheres of the sun, moon and fire, then Vāsudeva, Saṁkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna, Aṉiruddha and Nārāyaṇa. Uttering the name of the tattva one should fix them in due order from the head etc. He should utter the mūla mantra, thus hṛt = namaḥ, then parāya, then the name of the tattva, end with the hṛt = namaḥ (Oṁ namaḥ parāya jīvatattvātmane namaḥ etc). The meditation here also is as mentioned before. The repetition of the mantra is for twelve hundred thousand times.

82-84. He shall perform homa with sesame seeds soaked in ghee. The number of homas is one tenth of the mantra repeated (i.e. one hundred and twenty thousand times). Then conceiving the mūrti (the idol of the deity) by means of the mūla (basic) mantra in the pedestal mentioned before, he should worship Vāsudeva, the lord of gods, after invoking him there. But he should worship the ancillaries (aṅgāni), first he should worship Vāsudeva and others. The śaktis beginning with śānti etc. should be worshipped in the quarters and the interstices as before. The twelve mūrtis (idols) as stated before should be worshipped in the third enclosure.

85-87. He shall worship Indra and others equipped with weapons in the abode of Dharaṇi (the last square of the diagram). Thus worshipping Viṣṇu, the immutable lord along with five āvaraṇas (i.e. in five different locations of the mystical diagram), one obtains all desired objects and in the end goes to the region of Viṣṇu.

Viṣṇu with the name Puruṣottama, has four forms. The first of them is called Trailokya-mohana, then Śrīkara. Hṛṣikeśa and the fourth is Śrīkṛṣṇa.

88-89. Puruṣottama Mantra:[1] Tāra = (om), Kāma (klīm) then Ramā (śrīm) and Pūruṣottama ends in the dative case. It ends with varma (hum), astra (phaṭ) and agnipriyā (svāhā). The mantra consists of thirteen syllables (i.e.) vahni 3, indu = 1, according to the traditional way the figure is written from the left to the right, hence it is 13. The sage is Brahmā,

1. These verses give the Puruṣottama mantra thus :
Oṁ klīṁ śrīm Puruṣottamāya hum phaṭ svāhā.

the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is Puruṣottama. The bīja is smara (klīm) and the Śakti is indirā (śrīm).

90. Classifying the syllables of the mantra in groups of one (bhū), one (candra), one, six (rasa), two (akṣi) and then two (akṣi), he shall perform the nyāsa in his limbs and then make a meditation properly on Puruṣottama.

91. One should meditate on Śrī Puruṣottama who resembles the rising sun, whose hands shine with a conch, a discus, an iron club and a lotus and who is clad in yellow garments.

92-94. The shining Toraṇa maṇḍapa (the portal platform) is studded with clusters of costly jewels, the spreading canopy is shining with strings of pearls. It represents tranquility and restraint. On the shining ruby-set altar that has the splendour of ten thousand bright suns, which echos with the tinkling sound of the anklets of groups of dancing celestial damsels and which is refulgent by the jewels set at the edge of the crowns of the host of Devas. (One shall meditate thus). He shall repeat the mantra nine hundred thousand times and perform homa with one tenth of the number (i.e. ninety thousand times).

95-97. He shall perform homa by means of blooming lotuses. He shall worship in the aforesaid pedestal of Viṣṇu. Thus worshipping the lord of gods he attains great prosperity. He attains sons, grandsons, fame, splendour, worldly pleasure and salvation.

Śrīkara mantra: One should utter uttiṣṭha (get up) first, then utter Śrīkara (the maker of prosperity) and the last word is agnipriyā (i.e. svāhā). (The whole mantra is Uttiṣṭha Śrīkara svāhā) Thıs is an eight-syllabled mantra. Its sage is Vyāsa, the metre is paṅkti. The deity is Hari Śrīkara. He is the bestower of all desired things.

98-100. The word 'bhīṣaya' (terrify) is uttered twice and it is the hṛt, 'trāsaya' uttered twice shall be the head, the word 'pramardaya' uttered twice shall be the tuft, the word 'pradhvaṁsaya' uttered twice is the varma, the word 'rakṣa' uttered twice is the astra. All these end with hum.

He shall perform the nyāsa rite properly on the head, in the ears, in the neck, in the heart, in the navel, in the thighs, in the calves and in the pair of feet. Thereafter, he shall perform the nyāsa rite by means of the mantra mentioned in the Puruṣa Sūkta.

101. In the face he shall fix this mantra i. e. Brāhmaṇo-sya mukhamāsīt (the brāhmaṇa was in his face). He shall fix the mantra Bāhū Rājanyaḥ (the royal family is his arm) in the pair of arms.

102. He shall perform the nyāsa of the mantra ūrū tadasya yadvaiśyaḥ (it is his thighs that produced the Vaiśya) in the pair of the thighs. The repeater of the mantra shall fix in the pair of feet with the mantra 'padbhyāṁ śūdro ajāyata' (the śūdra was born of his feet).

103. He shall fix the discus, conch, iron club and the lotus at the tips of his hands. After performing the rite of nyāsa, he shall perform meditation in the platform mentioned before.

104-106. He shall meditate on Lord Śrīkara whose form has been recounted before as one who fascinates the world and who is stationed on Tārkṣya (Garuḍa), who is seated on a pink lotus seat. After meditating thus, the repeater of the mantra shall repeat the mantra eight hundred thousand times. With one tenth of them (i.e. eight thousand) he shall perform homa by means of red lotuses or sacrificial twigs of Vilva (one of the species of fig tree). The homa shall be performed with concentration by means of milk, cooked rice or ghee severally. Aśvattha, Udumbara, Plakṣa and vaṭa are known to be kṣīrī trees (milk exuding trees).

107-109. The idol (mūrti) shall be conceived in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu by means of mūla mantra surrounded by ancillary deities, āvaraṇas (enclosing deities), the guardians of the quarters and their weapons. Thus when the mantra is ripe, he shall make applications of it as before.

Varāha mantra : The syllable tāra (om), then hṛt (namaḥ) is uttered. Thereafter, the word Bhagavān in the dative (i.e. Bhagavate) and then he shall utter Varāharūpāya (om obeisance to the lord in the form of a boar). Then he shall say Bhūḥ, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, Lohita (pa), kāmika (ta), viz. Bhupatitvaṁ ca me dehi, dadāpaya (grant me kingship), then śucipriyā (svāhā), fond of purity cause it to be handed over.

The combination of the mantra comes to this : Oṁ namo Bhagavate Varāharūpāya Bhūrbhuvassvaḥ pataye Bhūpatitvaṁ me dehi dadāpaya śvāhā.

110. The mantra consists of thirtythree syllables. (Rāma = 3, agni = 3). Its sage is Bhārgava. Anuṣṭup is the metre, the deity is the primordial Boar.

111-113. One should conceive five limbs with Ekadaṁṣṭra in the heart (ekadaṁṣṭrāya hṛdayāya namaḥ), vyomaka is known for the head (Vyomolkāya śirase svāhā), Tejodhipati in the tuft (tejodhipataye śikhāyai vaṣaṭ), viśvarūpa as the varma (viśvarūpāya kavacāya hum). Mahādaṁṣṭra is the astra (mahādamṣṭrāya astrāya phaṭ). Thus he shall conceive the five aṅgas.

Or he shall divide the syllables of the mantra into groups of seven (giri), six, seven, five (vana), eight (vasu) syllables and conceive the five aṅgas (ancillaries). Thereafter he shall meditate on Ādivarāha (the Primordial Boar) who is as refulgent as many suns.

114-118. Oṁ hrīm, one shall remember the deity who is gold-coloured beneath the knees, who is white in brilliance beneath the navel, who holds in his hands the desired posture of offering assurance, an iron-club, a conch, a discus, a sword, a javelin and an iron-club; at the tip of whose tooth the shining earth rests. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times and with the tenth of the number, ten thousand times, he shall perform homa by means of lotuses soaked in honey. He shall worship in the pedestal of Viṣṇu mentioned before after conceiving the form (mūrti) by means of mūlamantra and worship the Lord there, for the realisation of the full benefit, the worship of the ancillaries, the enclosing deities, the guardians of quarters, their weapons and the Yantra (the mystical diagram). The Lord will grant earth, money, grains, landed property and prosperity to the worshipper.

When the sun is in the zodiacal sign of Leo, on the eighth day in the bright half of the lunar month a pure piece of stone shall be placed into pañcagavya (five products of the cow collectively: (urine, cow-dung, milk, curd and ghee). Then touching it one should repeat the mantra ten thousand times.

119. The repeater of the mantra facing the north will put the stone inside the ground. Thus he will be able to ward off the troubles that may arise due to goblins, ghosts, serpents, thieves and others.

120-122. He shall bring some soil from a ground on the morning of Friday. Then charging it with the mūla mantra he shall divide it into three portions. One portion will be smeared over the hearth and another over the cooking vessel. The third portion shall be put into the cow milk and stirred well there. Then he shall put purified rice grains into it. The devotee shall cook the Caru sitting in a properly clear place and repeat the mantra (while the cooking goes on): Then taking the Caru down it should be offered into the fire according to the proper method.

123. After performing worship by means of incense, lamp etc, he shall perform homa with the Caru soaked in ghee. The intelligent devotee shall perform homa in the consecrated fire one hundred and eight times.

124. Thus during seven Fridays the repeater of the mantra shall perform homas. The disputes regarding lands is removed, so also troubles from enemies, thieves etc. are also dispelled.

125-126. According to instructions given before, the devotee shall bring clay from the field of Sādhya (the person for whose benefit the rituals are performed) at sunrise on a Tuesday. As before he shall prepare havis and perform homa in the kindled and consecrated fire as many times as before with great respect. Thus he shall perform homas for seven Tuesdays for the acquisition of lands.

127. He shall perform homa one hundred and thousand times by means of pañcagavyas along with milk-pudding. There is no doubt that he attains thus the over-lordship of the desired land.

128-130. With great concentration one should meditate thus : He has kept his iron club like arms lifted up. He is of a divine nature. He holds earth at the tip of the white curved fangs. He is golden in colour. The devotee shall conceive and meditate thus in the yellow sphere of the earth. By the grace of Varāha, the devotee by thus meditating attains a beautiful plot of land.

One shall meditate on Varāha resembling snow in the sphere of Varuṇa. Undoubtedly the great troubles will subside. In order to keep people under control one shall always meditate on (Varāha) resembling fire in the sphere of fire.

131-133. For the eradication (uccāṭana) of enemies, he shall meditate on (Varāha) having dark lustre in the sphere of Vāyu. The form of Varāha not stationed on any maṇḍala (sphere) is pure and the bestower of all siddhis. For the removal of affliction from enemies, goblins, evil planets, poison and sickness (one shall meditate on Varāha). The one-syllabled mantra of Varāha is like another wish-yielding kalpa tree. (The bīja runs thus) : Vyoma = ha. It is accompanied by arghīśa = u the head of which is decorated with bindu = ., (The mantra is hum). One shall perform pūjā and offer arghya and other rituals in the manner mentioned before.

134. The nidrā (bha) shall be associated with the left ear (u) and then say Varāhāya and end it with hṛt (namaḥ). This mantra[1] is preceded by tāra (om) and consists of eight syllables : It bestows riches and glory.

135-138. The sage is Brahmā, the metre Gāyatrī, the deity Varāha. The conception of limbs is to be performed by means of letters (of the mantra) divided thus : one, one, four, two and with all the letters. One shall assign the mode of meditation, worshipping, application etc. for this also as given before.

Praṇava is uttered in the beginning. Thereafter, the word Bhagavatī is used in the dative (i.e. Bhagavatyai to the goddess). Then he shall utter Dharaṇi twice and Dhare twice and in the end Vahnipriyā (svāhā) is uttered. The mantra[2] consists of nineteen syllables. Its sage is Varāha, the metre is

---

1. It gives the Varāha mantra thus :
   Om bhū Varāhāya namaḥ.
2. It gives the dharaṇī mantra. The text says it consists of nineteen syllables but it lacks two syllables. If namaḥ is added the combination will be as follows :
   Om (namo) bhagavatyai dharaṇi dharaṇi dhare dhare svāhā.

Nivṛd Gāyatrī, Dharaṇī is the deity and tāra (om) is the bīja, vasupriyā (svāhā) is the Śakti. The five aṅgas are conceived by means of syllables grouped into Rāma (three), Veda (four), agni (three), Vana (five), akṣi (two) and netra (two).

139-141. He shall meditate upon goddess Dharā (earth) as follows. She is dark in complexion. She has ornaments of various colours. She is situated in the lotus. She has elevated breasts. With her hands she holds two blue lotuses, the ears of śāli grains and a parrot and she is clad in garments of variegated colours. After meditating thus he shall perform a hundred thousand japas. To the extent of the one-tenth of the number, the repeater of the mantra shall perform homa by milk-pudding along with ghee. He shall worship in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu. After conceiving the idol with the mūlamantra he shall worship the earth therein.

142-156. After propitiating the ancillaries at the outset he should worship the Earth, fire, water, wind in the petals situated in four quarters, and in the petals of the corners the Kalās.

The names of its Kalās are Nivṛtti, Pratiṣṭhā, Vidyā and Śānti. Then he should worship Indra and others as well as Vajra (thunderbolt). Thus when the mantra is ripe, he shall achieve his desire, worshipping the Earth thus with the animals, jewels, garments etc. he shall be beloved of the Earth. He shall live happily for a hundred years.

The mantra called Trailokyamohana (enchanting the three worlds), the lord of the universe, is as follows:—

The mantra of Jagannātha:[1]

Uttering the word tāra (om) the Kāma bīja (Klīm), Ramā (śrīm) then after hṛt (namaḥ), Puruṣottama. Śrīkaṇṭha,

---

1. They give the Jaganmohana mantra of Viṣnu :

Oṁ klīṁ śrīṁ namaḥ Puruṣottamaḥ Śrīkaṇṭhaḥ Pratirūpa Lakṣmi nivāsa Sakala Jagat Kṣobhaṇa sarvastrīhṛdayavidāraṇatribhuvanamadonmādakara surāsuramanujasundarijanamanāṁsi tāpaya tāpaya dīpaya dīpaya śoṣaya śoṣaya māraya māraya stambhaya stambhaya mohaya mohaya drāvaya drāvaya ākarṣaya ākarṣaya samastaparamopeta subhagasaṁyutasarvasaubhāgyakara sarvakāmaprada amukuṁ bana bana cakreṇa gadayā khaḍgena sarvabāṇaiḥ bhinda bhinda pāśena kaṭṭa kaṭṭa aṁkuśena tāḍaya tāḍaya kuru kuru kim tiṣṭhasi tāvat yāvat samihitam me siddham bhavati hum phaṭ namaḥ. This mantra contains two hundred syllables. See Śāradā Tilakam, pp. 681-682.

Pratirūpa (no-replica i.e. Puruṣottama-pratirūpa), utter Lakṣmīnivāsa. Then at the end of the words sakala, jagat kṣobhaṇa should be uttered. Then after the word surāsura place manuja sundarījana and the pairs of tāpaya and dīpaya, then the pair of Śoṣaya and then the pair of māraya. Then again place the pair of stambhaya and again the pair of mohaya, then the pair of drāvaya and then the pair of ākarṣaya. It is attached with samastaparama and subhaga, then at the end of the word sarvasaubhāgya, utter kara and sarva, then with Kāmaprada add amu then, brahmā = ka with bindu (= amukam) and then utter the pair of hana (kill) by means of discus then with the iron club, then with the sword, with all the arrows add the pair of (bhinda), then after the word pāśena utter the pair of kaṭṭa, then uttering the word aṅkuśena utter the pair of tāḍaya. Then uttering the pair of the word kuru utter kiṁ tiṣṭhasi, then after the word tāvat and yāvat say samīhitam, then say me and siddham and bhavatu and in the end utter varma (hum) and phaṭ. This great mantra ends with namaḥ and is mentioned as containing two hundred syllables. The sage is Jaiminī and the metre is Amita (immesurrable), the deity is Jagannātha, the primordial one. Kāma (klīm) is the bīja, ramā (śrīm) is śakti and the application (of the mantra) is for the purpose of acquisition of everything.

157-167. After the word Tribhuvanamadonmādaka (one who makes the three worlds mad) the word varma (hum) is used followed by hṛdaya (namaḥ). The śiras (svāhā) should end with Varma (hum) proceeded by the word Sakalajagat kṣobhaṇa Lakṣmīdayitā, the śikhā (vaṣaṭ) again after the word Manmathottama and maṅgala should be uttered, then uttering kāmadāyinī hum the fixation of varma should be done. The kavaca (phaṭ) is known to be bhṛgu (sa) karṇa (u) and bhaga, then the word sarva and saubhāgyakara. Then at the end of surāsura one should say manuja sundarī, then at the end of hṛdaya and after vidā one should utter the word raṇa. Then utter the word praharaṇadharasarvakāmika, then the pair of word hana, then utter hṛdayam bandhanāni afterwards. Then the pair of the word ākarṣaya, then the word mahābala then utter varma (hum). Thus the astra (phaṭ) has been mentioned. Then netra (Vauṣaṭ) comes afterwards. One should utter tribhuvana, then Īśvara, sarvajana, then manāṁsi, then at the end of the pair hana and the pair of dāraya one should utter me vaśamānaya. The mantra ends with varma (hum). This is known to be netra mantra. The mantras of ṣaḍaṅga(six limbs) have tāra (om) in the beginning and end with phaṭ and namaḥ.

At the end of tāra (om) and the word trailokya one should utter the word mohana then uttering Hṛṣīkeśa and after the word apratirūpa and Manmatha one should say sarvastrīṇām hṛdaya, then the word ākarṣaṇa and āgacchāgaccha. This ends with hṛdaya (namaḥ) with the mantra one should make the vyāpaka (pervasive nyāsa) and then the wise man should meditate on Jagannātha.

168-173. He shall meditate on a forest on the banks of the ocean of milk. It is beautiful with trees and creepers. When the sun rises plenty of lotuses bloom. With its lustre it brightens the faces of the quarters. It is full of the humming sounds of bees that are mad after the frequence of bunches of flowers in it. The sky is clouded with the dust with the pollen of the lotuses waved by the divine breeze. It is beautiful with the sweet, and melodious songs of celestial damsels. Within that forest there is a platform shining with the richly laid jewels. There is a canopy shining with the string of pearls. There is an altar set with gems. The tips of the coronets of heaven-dwellers touch it reverentially. O Brahmin, you should think of the Lord seated on a divine throne. He holds in his hands the conch, noose, arrow, bow, threshing rod, iron-club, sword Nandaka and goad. His chest is in the close embrace of Lakṣmī with her eyes shining, by virtue of love, she observes him as though the glory of the lotus in her lap.

174-175. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra four hundred thousand times. To the extent of a tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of lotuses or jāti flowers in the sacrificial pit or in the pit with the shape of the half-moon. The learned man desirous of worshipping the lord of the universe shall sprinkle sacrificial ground, the articles for the sacrifice and himself with water repeating Gāyatrī.

176. At the end of the word Trailokyamohanāya one should utter the word vidmahe (we know). After repeating smarāya dhīmahi we meditate on smara (cupid) he shall say tanno viṣṇuḥ pracodayāt.[1]

177. This is called Gāyatrī which is the greatest purifier of everything. The intelligent devotee shall offer a seat in the pedestal mentioned before. It belongs to Viṣṇu.

178. This is called Pīṭhamantra (the mantra of the pedestal) which follows: Pakṣirājāya ṭhadvandvam (svāhā). With this mantra he shall invoke the deity in the mūrti (the form) conceived by the mūlamantra.

179. He shall then devoutedly worship the deity by the pervasive nyāsa mantra. He shall worship śrīvatsa in the breasts by śrīvatsa and hṛdaya (namaḥ)

180. With hṛt (namaḥ) in the end he shall worship Kaustubha (the jewel) (Kaustubhāya namaḥ—obeisance to Kaustubha). With the words Vanamālāyai hṛt (namaḥ) (obeisance to the garland of sylvan flowers) he shall worship in the neck.

181. He shall duly worship the ancillary deities in the pericarp. Afterwards in the petals he shall worship Lakṣmī and others covered with Cāmaras (chowries).

182. They have the lustre of bandhūka flowers (a kind of china rosé). Their breasts shine with pearl necklaces. Their eyes resemble full blown lotuses. They are slow because of amorous grace originating from intoxication of love.

183. The Devīs are Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Dhṛti, Prīti, Kānti, Śānti, Tuṣṭi and Puṣṭi. The bīja is used in the beginning. The above names are used in the dative case and end with namaḥ.

184-190. Bhṛgu (sa) equipped with Khaḍgīśa (va) and moon (m). This is the bīja of the goddess used with all vowels except the three short vowels and the neuter ones (i.e. a, i, u, ṛ, ṝ, ḷ, ḹ).

The bījas of the goddesses should be used by the devotee in the beginning of the deity in their due orders.

---

1. The verse gives the Gāyatri thus :
Trailokyamohanāya vidmahe smarāya dhimahi tanno viṣṇuḥ pracodayāt.

At the tips of the petals he shall worship śaṅkha, bow, discus, sword, iron-club, goad, threshing rod and the noose severally by means of their mudrās (gestures) and mantras.

(The mantra runs thus) : At the end of the word mahājalacarāya, hum phaṭ and svāhā should be used. In worshipping the conch the word pāñcajanyāya is used with om in the beginning and namaḥ in the end (i.e om mahājalacarāya hum phaṭ svāhā pāñcajanyāya namaḥ). At the end of the word Śārṅgāya (to śārṅga) saśarāya (with the arrow) add hum phaṭ and svāhā. In the worship of śārṅga the mantra is preceded by the word mahā then śārṅgāya and hṛdaya (namaḥ) (i.e. mahāśārṅgāya saśarāya hum phaṭ namaḥ). (For the worship of Cakra) one should utter at the end of sudarśana-mahā the word cakrarāja (O Sudarśana, O great king of the discuses), then the pair of the word daha, then at the end of the sarvaduṣṭabhayam utter the pair of the word kuru, the pair of the word chindhi. Thereafter, the pair of words Vidāraya.

(After the word) paramantrān repeat grasa twice (swallow the mantras of enemies). Then repeat the word bhakṣaya twice (eat, eat). After the word bhūtāni repeat the word trāsaya twice (terrify, terrify all beings). Then lastly the kavaca (hum) and phaṭ and the vahnisundarī (Svāhā).

191-196. (obeisance unto Sudarśana) Sudarśanāya hṛdayam (namaḥ) is the mantra for worshipping the cakra. After the word mahākhaḍga tīkṣṇa he should utter the pair of words chindhi. In the worship of Khaḍga hum phaṭ svāhā khaḍgāya namaḥ (obeisance to the sword) (is to be said).

At the end of the word Mahākaumodaki, one should say mahābale (O strong one). Thereafter add the word Sarva-surāntaki (the destroyer of all demons). Then say prasīda (be pleased) twice. Then hum, the weapon (phaṭ) and svāhā, O Kaumodaki, obeisance in the end. The mantra in the worship of Kaumodaki has been recounted. It is the achiever of all objects.

After the word Mahāṅkuśa (the great goad) say the word (kuṭṭa (grind) twice, hum phaṭ svāhā. Obeisance to the goad has been recounted.

At the end of words Saṁvartaka and mahā one should say the word musala (O great annihilator, the threshing rod), utter the pair of words pothaya (crush) then varma (hum) phaṭ and in the end vahnisundarī (svāhā). Obeisance to musala. The mantra in worship of the musala has been recounted.

197. At the end of the word Mahāpāśa (great noose) utter the word bandha (bind) twice and the word ākarṣaya twice (pull, pull) hum, phaṭ and svāhā. Obeisance to the noose. This is the mantra in the worship of the noose.

198-200. All these mantras begin with tāra (om). Thereafter, he shall worship Indra and others. After worshipping vajra etc. he shall be the lord of all achievements. After worshipping for a month with the flowers of hayāri (a kind of flower or with lilies, he shall perform homa one thousand and eight times. Within a month all excellent kings will come under him.

201-202. If any one repeats any mantra ten thousand times the deity connected with it will become his slave at once with the power of the mantra. What is the use of much talk. With this mantra the aspirant shall realise all desires. He becomes equal to Viṣṇu. There is no doubt about it.

CHAPTER SEVENTYONE

The worship of Nṛsiṁha

Sanatkumāra said :

1. O Nārada, listen. I shall recount to you the divine Mantras of Narahari (Manlion) by propitiating whom Brahmā and others performed the activities of creation etc.

2-3 The Mantra is the Saṁvartaka (kṣa) created (m). It is bedecked in fire and Manu (Au). The Mantra consists of a single syllable (Kṣraum). It is like the wish-yielding Deva tree (i.e. Kalpa tree) unto those who resort to it. The sage is Atri. O foremost one among intelligent beings, the metre is Jagatī, the deity is Narahari. Its utility is for acquiring everything.

4-5. Kṣam is Bīja. I is śakti. The six aṅgas are conceived by six long syllables. One shall remember Nṛhari (Manlion) whose eyes are the sun, Moon and fire whose lustre is like that of the autumnal moon and who holds with his hands, bow, discus and the gestures of fearlessness and granting of booms. The japa is for one hundred thousand times. To the extent of a tenth of it (ten thousand times) are the homas with ghee and puddings.

6-7. He shall worship the deity in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu. He shall worship the ancillaries in the filaments. In the four quarters he shall worship the lord of the birds (i.e. Garuḍa). Śaṅkara, Śeṣa and Śatānanda. He shall worship Śrī Hrī, Dhṛti and Puṣṭi in the corner petals. In the tips he shall worship all the Nṛharis in the due order.

8-11. The Thirtytwo lions are mentioned as follows : Kṛṣṇa, Rudra, Mahāghora, Bhīma, Bhīṣaṇa, Ujjvala, Karāla, Vikarāla, Daityānta, Madhusūdana, Raktākṣa, Piṅgalākṣa, Añjana, Dīptaruci, Sughoraka, Suhanu, Viśvaka, Rākṣasāntaka, Viśālaka, Dhūmrakeśa. Hayagrīva, Ghanasvana, Meghavarṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, Kṛtānta, Tīvratejas, Agnivarṇa, Mahogra, Viśvavibhūṣaṇa, Vighnakṣama, and Mahāsena.

12. The learned devotee shall worship externally the guardians of the quarters along with their weapons. When the Mantra is realized thus, the repeater of the Mantras shall realize his desires.

13-15.[1] Viṣṇu = u is = Śārṅgin = ga, is accompanied with agni = ra, thus endowed with Pradyumna = ., (the combination

1. The mantra of Nṛsiṁha is as follows : ugraṁ vīraṁ mahāviṣṇumjvalantaṁ sarvatomukhaṁ Nṛsiṁhaṁ Bhīṣaṇam bhadram mṛtyumṛtyuṁ namāmyahaṁ.

A detailed account of this mantra is given in Nṛsiṁha-Pūrvatāpanyupaniṣat and in Śrī Vidyārṇava Tantra, page 456. The existing lines of the verses in the Purāṇa lack two syllables viz. aham.

In Śrī Vidyārṇava Tantra it is stated that this mantra is to be sticked between Vedāli (Om) or Māyā (hrīm). It is the view of some scholars.

thus becomes ugram), then vīra and mahān be added to Viṣṇu. Then Jvalantam, then Bhṛgvīśa = sa will be followed by va as the seat of fire = ra added by Hari = ta with Vāsudeva = u (thus the combination becomes ugraṁ vīram mahāviṣṇuṁ jvalantaṁ sarvatomukham), when Vaikuṇṭha = ma is attached with Viṣṇu = u and kadī = kha is endowed with indu = . Then Nṛsiṁham, Bhīṣaṇam (the terrible), Bhadra (gentle) are followed by mṛtyumṛtyum (death of death), then śauri = na, bhānu = mā with nārāyaṇa = ā.

16. This mantra of thirtytwo syllables of Nṛhari is the bestower of an empire. The sage is Brahmā, the metres Gāyatrī and anuṣṭup are also cited. Its deity is Nṛhari. He is the bestower of all desired benefits.

17-19. Ham is the bīja, im is the Śakti; its utility is for the acquisition of everything. The excellent Sādhaka shall divide the syllables of the Mantra into groups of four, four, eight, six, six and four syllables and perform the rite of ṣaḍaṅga. He shall then fix the syllables originating from the Mantra, on the head, forehead, eyes, mouth, arms, joints and tips of the feet, belly, heart, neck, sides, back and the hump. He shall intersperse the syllables with the Praṇava.

20-33. There are ten types of nyāsa[1] facilitating the proximity of Nṛsiṁha as follows : He shall fix in the first eight fingers and toes severally, then in the knots of fingers, then in all the fingers. After this, the remaining ones he shall fix in the two palms. The clever devotee shall fix the syllables on the head, forehead, between the two eyebrows, eyes, ears, cheeks, at the roots of the ears, in the chin, upper lip, and the lower lip, in the neck, nose, arms, heart, body, navel, palm of the hand other than the right, hips, penis, thighs, knees and calves, heel, toes and fingers, in joints, hair, blood, bones and marrow in the body.

He shall fix syllables in the foot, regions of the heel, knee, hips, umbilicus, heart, the two arms, neck, chin, lips and cheek.

---

1. For the detailed procedure of nyāsa see Śāradā Tilaka, chapter 16, pp. 645-646.

He shall fix words in the ears, mouth, nostrils, eyes and on the head.

He shall fix syllables in the mouth, on the head, in the nose, eyes and ears.

He shall fix quarters of the mantra in the mouth, heart, umbilicus and limbs.

He shall fix the two hemistitches on the head and limbs from the heart to the foot.

He shall fix portions containing ugra and other words ending with namaḥ as well as 'I bow down to the Death of Death" in the mouth, nose, eyes, ears, eyelashes, heart, umbilicus, region beginning with hips and ending with feet. He shall fix them in nine places. He shall fix the portion beginning with 'vīra' (hero) etc. in the same places as before. The intelligent devotee shall fix the portion beginning with Nṛsiṁha etc. in the same places as before.

He shall divide the syllables of the mantra into groups of one, three, four, six, three, two, eight, two and one syllables and fix them in the places in due order : In the root from the root and ending with the umbilicus, beginning with the umbilicus and ending with the heart, beginning with the heart and ending with the two eyebrows, in the three eyes and on the head. He shall then fix them in the arms, in the fingers, in the vital breaths, beginning with the head and ending with the foot. The intelligent devotee shall fix them along with their names. This is called Harinyāsa.

The only person who knows the greatness of this nyāsa is Hari himself. After performing the nyāsa rite thus, he shall meditate on Nṛhari in the heart.

34-35. May Nṛsiṁha protect us always—Nṛsiṁha whose arms shine in close juxtaposition with his neck, touching the hair (the manes), who holds the lotus and the discus, who has split the lord of the Daityas with the tips of his claws, who is accompanied by clusters of flames, whose tongue is illuminated, who has three eyes and whose face is very fierce due to the curved fangs. He moves about in dry land, water as well as the firmament.

36-44.[1] After meditating thus he shall show the mudrā (gesture) of Nṛsiṁha, the great ātman. He shall make the chin and lips fixed equally in between the knees. He shall keep the two hands fixed on the ground. He shall be trembling frequently. He shall keep the mouth open and expanded and the tongue moving. This is glorified as the chief mudrā pertaining to Narasiṁha. The thumb and the little fingers of the left hand are kept joined together and remaining three fingers are kept raised like the trident. He shall make this mudrā pertaining to Nṛsiṁha. The two thumbs and the little fingers are kept inter-locked. The other fingers are pointed towards the ground. The two hands faced down are spread in the umbilical region. With the two index fingers the hands are taken to the shoulders. This is called Antraṇamudrā, (gesture of entrails).[1] Keep the hands facing up and the middle fingers joined to the palms. The ring finger of the right hand is fixed into that of the left hand. The two index fingers are joined behind and the thumbs are united to the index fingers. This shall be the Cakramudrā (the gesture of Discus). It is thought to be close to Nṛhari. After showing the Cakramudrā one shall prod the middle fingers by means of the cidex fingers. This is daṁṣṭramudrā (gesture of curved fangs). It is destructive of all sins. These mudrās are honoured in all the mantras of Nṛsiṁha.

45. He shall repeat the mantra as many hundred thousand times as there are syllables therein. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of milk-puddings soaked in ghee into the fire. He shall worship in the previously mentioned pedestal.

46. After propitiating the aṅgas (Ancillaries) at the outset he shall worship Garuḍa and others in the petals in all the quarters, he shall worship Śrī and others in the interstices and the guardians of the worlds externally.

47. The Mantra realized thus shall fulfil all desires.

1. Rāghava Bhaṭṭa in his Padārthādarśa, the commentary on Śāradā Tilaka, chap. 16 quotes these verses, but in verse 41 in place of āntraṇa mudrikā he quotes it to be antrākhya mudrikā and similarly instead of calling it Cakramudrā in verse 43 of the text he calls it Vaktra mudrā.

One shall remember the gentle deity in a gentle activity. The learned man shall remember the ruthless deity in a ruthless activity.

48-49. In the first one of the two words mṛtyu (Death), substitute the name of the enemy. Then meditate as though he is being eaten by the sharp claws and curved fangs by Hari himself. One shall with alertness repeat the mantra hundred and eight times every day. Before a maṇḍala (forty days) if the enemy passes by, he shall become the guest to the god of death.

50-56. I shall mention the different kinds of meditation that yield all siddhis. A person desirous of prosperity and glory shall continuously meditate on white-complexioned Nṛhari mentioned above. He is embraced by Lakṣmī stationed to his left side with the lotus in her hand. He is destructive of all sorts of harassment such as poison, death, secondary ailments etc. Narasiṁha is extremely terrible and has the lustre of Kālānala (deadly fire). He wears a garland of entrails. He is terrible. He is bedecked in necklace. Serpent is his sacred thread. He shines in his five faces, each face having three eyes, blue neck and the moon for its crest. He appears splendid with his arms resembling iron club, lotus, conch resembling cow, milk, bow, threshing rod, excellent discus, sword, trident and arrow. Nṛhari has the form of Rudra. He is having blue lustre. He resembles the glow-worm. His lustre is like that of the moon. He resembles gold. Beginning from the fore part and ending with the bend one he has every colour. His face is lighted up.

57. After meditating thus on the divine form that dispels death and bestows siddhis by mere remembrance, the repeater of the Mantras shall perform japa for the sake of release from all ailments.

58. When the task is huge and strenuous, he should meditate upon Nṛsiṁha as having sixteen hands. Nṛsiṁha, the lord of all worlds, is bedecked in all ornaments.

59-60. Two of the hands are engaged in the splitting, two in the act of lifting up the entrails, two hold the conch and the discus, two hold the arrow and the bow, two hold the sword and the iron club, two hold the mace and the lotus, two hold noose and the goad and two are kept on the crown of the enemy.

61. Thus, O Nārada, the devotee shall with his intellect not directed to anything else, meditate on lord Narahari equipped with sixteen baton-like arms, should the rite be a fierce one.

62-68. In the course of an extremely great task, Nṛsiṁha, the lord of all living beings, the cause of realisation of all siddhis should be meditated upon by the learned men as one having thirtytwo hands. Thirteen of the right hands hold discus, lotus, axe, noose, ploughshare, threshing rod, (the gesture of) fearlessness, goad, sword, paṭṭiśa bhindipāla mudgara and tomara (all varieties of iron clubs). Thirteen of the left hands hold the conch, iron club, Kheṭa, noose, spear, fire, the (gesture of) granting boon, the Śakti, the kuṇḍikā (water pitcher), the bow, the mudrā of threat, the gadā (mace), drum and the sieve. With a pair of hands he should press down the knees and the head of the enemy. With a pair of arms lifted up, the lord should hold aloft the clusters of entrails. With the lowermost pair of arms he tears asunder Hiraṇyākṣa. Thus the devotee shall remember Nṛsiṁha who is pleasing to the devotees, who is terrifying to the daityas and who causes fear even to the great God of Death. After meditating thus the repeater of the mantras shall perform japa for the purpose of achieving objects.

69-73. Henceforth, another auspicious mode of meditation that is destructive of all ailments of mouth and face is being recounted. The devotee meditates on Nṛsiṁha who is seated on the gold-coloured Suparṇa, who possesses manes like the clutter of lightning streaks, whose lustre is like that of a crore of full moons put together, whose face is beautiful, who has three eyes, whose physical body is quiescent, who has yellow garments and great ornaments and who holds in his hands the discus, conch and gestures of fearlessness and of granting boons. He subdues poison and ailments and he is saluted by Devas with their meditations. If the sādhaka strives to check and withstand the armies of the enemies he shall meditate upon lord Nṛsiṁha as the suppressor of enemies. With flowers and other requisites of service he shall worship the deity.

He shall perform a thousand homas with the white seeds of Śara grass plucked along with the roots. He must perform japa as though he would swallow the enemy. He must consign the seeds into the fire as though he would burn the enemy. The fire shall be kindled with the fuel of the tree Terminalia Belerica.

74-76.[1] After performing homa for seven days the repeater of the mantras shall send off the favourite armies of the king in an auspicious hour with the desire of conquering the enemy's kingdom. He shall perform the japa of Nṛhari after remembering Nṛhari slaying the group of enemies. He shall stand in front of the army (as long as the japa is conducted). Delighted in his mind the king shall please the repeater of the Mantras with riches till the return of the army with heroic glory and happiness, after conquering the enemies.

77-79. (He shall propitiate the repeater of the Mantra) with elephants, horses, chariots and jewels, with villages, fields, wealth and other things. If the repeater of the Mantra is not satisfied, great harm will befall the king. There is great danger to life in his kingdom. One shall dispel the poison originating from mice, spider, scorpion etc. with the ashes charged with the mūla mantra one hundred and eight times. If anyone smears it over his body he is undoubtedly liberated from all ailments.

80. By performing homa with the Semanti flowers (The Indian white Rose) he shall attain great glory. By performing homa with udambara twigs (figus glomerata) he shall have plenty of grains.

81-83. By performing a hundred thousand homas with baked pies be shall become comparable to Vaiśravaṇa (Kubera). One shall repeat the Mantra a hundred and eight times in the presence of an angry king. Immediately he becomes pleased and free from impurities. By performing homa with kunda flowers (a variety of Jasmine) one attains rise and by performing homa with banana fruits one is able to destroy obstacles. One attains great glory by performing homa with tulasī leaves.

---

1. The verses showing similar result are found in Prapañcasāra Tantra, chap. fifteen, verse 39.

By performing homa with the flower of the fried śāli rice grains one is able to make the entire universe subservient.

84-88.[1] By performing homa with madhūka flowers (Bassie Latifolia) what is desired will be realized. With the candied-sugar-coated myrobalam one can make others benumbed. If anyone performs ten thousand homas with four digits long Guḍūcī twigs soaked in the mixture of curds, honey and ghee he lives a hundred years vanquishing all ailments. On Saturdays one shall touch aśvattha (Holy fig tree) and repeat the Mantra one hundred and eight times; one shall then conquer premature death and live for a hundred years. Henceforth, I shall recount to you the Yantra (Mystic diagram) trailokyamohana by wearing which one shall have all riches.

89. One shall draw the diagram of a lotus with thirty-two lions on a white birch bark. In the middle he shall draw the bīja of Siṁheśvara (Kṣraum) as before. Then he should encircle it with three rings containing Śrībīja (Śrīṁ) inside. Then encircling it (Yantra) with noose and goad one shall worship the excellent Yantra. This is called Trailokyamohana (that which fascinates the three worlds). It achieves the desired objects.

90. This cakra is the king of all discuses. He is the overlord of the lords of all multitudes. By wearing it one attains victory. True, it is true. There is no doubt.

91-95.[2] Henceforth, O Nārada, I shall recount another yantra which bestows siddhi. Listen. One shall draw the mystic diagram neatly with eight petals. It must have the pericarp. One shall write the mūlamantra therein, accompanied by praṇava. In the middle the single-syllabled Narasiṁha mantra is written along with its sādhya (the person for whose sake the ritual is performed). He should draw a circle with the cord of gold, silver and pure copper outside in due order. He shall repeat the mantra one thousand and eight times. After making it

1. Rāghava Bhaṭṭa quotes verses 87-90 in his commentary on Śāradā Tilaka, pp. 652-53.
2. Rāghava Bhaṭṭa quotes verses 92-98 also in the same text.

enveloped in lac, he shall charge it with the Mantra. He shall wear the excellent yantra round the neck or the arms or in the tuft. Men, women, and kings everyone in the world, will become subservient to him. Wicked ghosts, serpents and demons do not harass him.

96. He shall attain success everywhere, thanks to the grace of the king of Yantras. Henceforth, I shall mention another Yantra that keeps everyone under control.

97. The intelligent devotee shall draw a great Yantra with twelve petals as before. The devotee shall write the twelve mantras in the petals, with their subtle divisions.

98. The mantra in the middle is united with Śakti. One shall envelop the same with Śrībīja. The cakra (discus, wheel) which is called kālāntaka is one that fascinates Devas and asuras as well as keeps them subservient.

99. One shall engrave the Yantra in the birch bark. It wards off all enemies. Merely, by wearing this, one shall be victorious everywhere.

100-103.[1] Henceforth, I shall mention (the mantra that is called Jvālāmālī. It yields what is desired by everyone. The bīja (Kṣraum) hṛt (Namaḥ) and word Bhagavān is used in the Dative, Bhagavate Narasiṁhāya (unto Lord Narasiṁha). Then Jvālāmāline (unto one who has garlands) Dīptadaṁṣṭrāya (unto one whose curved fangs are illuminated), agninetrāya (unto one whose eyes are fiery). To one who is the first of all and who slays the demons. Hari who is the origin of all and who des-

1. The above give the Jvālāmālī mantra of Nṛsiṁha. In Śāradā Tilaka we find Bijam: namo bhagavate Narasiṁhāya Jvālāmāline dīptadaṁṣṭrāya Agninetrāya sarvarakṣoghnāya.

Sarvabhūtavināśaṁ ca nakāro dīrghavān marut |
Sarvajvaravināśānte nāyārṇau dahayugmukam ||
Pacadvayaṁ rakṣayugaṁ hum phaṭ svāhā dhruvādikā.

The combination gives the following mantra : Oṁ Kṣraum namo bhagavate Nṛsiṁhāya Jvālāmāline dīptadaṁṣṭrāya agninetryāya sarvarakṣoghnāya sarvabhūta vināśanāya sarvajvaravināśanāya daha daha paca paca rakṣa rakṣa hum phaṭ svāhā.

The specific ancillary nyāsa of the above mantra as prescribed in Śāradā Tilaka is as follows :

Hṛt trayodaśabhiḥ proktā varmāṣṭādaśabhirmatam |
Varṇair dvādaśabhir netramastraṁ syāt kiraṇākṣaraiḥ ||

troys (everything) in the end. He is the destroyer of all fevers. At the end of the name one shall repeat daha twice (Burn burn) and paca twice (cook, cook).

Then rakṣa (protect) twice, varma (hum), astra (phaṭ) dvitha (svāhā) should be uttered with dhruva (Om) in the beginning. Thus the excellent Jvālāmālī is said to consist of sixtyeight syllables.

104-105. The merit etc. has been mentioned before. The aṅgas are conceived with groups of thirteen, ten, eleven, eighteen and twelve syllables. One shall remember Nṛhari with previously mentioned form having clusters of flames and garlands.

106. The japa is for one hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it one shall perform homa with the ghee obtained from the milk of two-coloured cow. This excellent Mantra is destructive of terrible epileptic fits, harassment of goblins, etc.

107. Pāśa (am), Māyā (Hrīm), Nṛsiṁha (Kṣraum), aṁkuśa (Krom), varma (hum), astra (phaṭ) are said to be the great six[1] syllables of mantra and which is the bestower of all desires.

108. The sage is Brahmā, the metre is Paṅkti, the deity is Narahari (Manlion). With the Bīja having six long vowels one shall perform Ṣaḍaṅga rites.

109. One shall perform meditation and Pūjā in accordance with the injunctions mentioned before. With the realization of the mantra he will have every Siddhi.

110-111. The mantra is preceded by Ramā bīja (Śrīm), the metre is anuṣṭup and constitutes thirtythree syllables. The anuṣṭup and Lakṣmī and Nṛsiṁha are the deities. The aṅgas are conceived through all the words. After fixing five aṅgas thus, one shall arrange for the protection of the soul.

112-113. Touching the right arm one shall repeat the mantra of Śarabha.[2] (It runs thus) Praṇava, then hṛt (namaḥ), then Śivāya (i.e. Oṁ namaḥ Śivāya), then mahate, then

---

1. The Six-syllabled mantra runs thus : aṁ hrīṁ kṣraum kroṁ huṁ phaṭ.
2. The Śarabha mantra is as follows : Oṁ namaḥ Śivāya mahate Śarabhāya Śarabha. The mantra ends with Svāhā. It is cited for the purpose of protection. Or after Ramā repeat Kṣraum twice.

114-118. Or he shall strenuously arrange for protection with Keśava and other name. May Keśava protect my feet, may Nārāyaṇa protect my hips, may Govinda guard my privies, may Viṣṇu protect my umbilicus, may Madhusūdana protect my belly, may Trivikrama protect my thighs, may Nara protect my heart, may Śrīdhara protect my neck, may Hṛṣīkeśa protect my face, may Padmanābha protect my breasts, may Dāmodara protect my head, after fixing thus in the limbs during the time of japa the sādhaka becomes fearless from goblins, vampires, evil planets and demons. Again he shall perform the Nyāsa rite strenuously performing meditation with great concentration.

119. May Keśava whose lustre is like that of gold and who has the discus protect me in front: may Nārāyaṇa who holds Śaṅkha and who resembles the blue cloud protect me from behind.

120. May Mādhava, the wielder of gadā (mace), dark in complexion like the blue lotus, protect the upper region. May Govinda the great wielder of the bow, with the lustre of the moon, protect me on the right hand side.

121. May Viṣṇu the wielder of the ploughshare, resembling the filaments of the lotus protect me in the north. May Madhu-sūdana the lotus-eyed, wielder of the threshing rod, protect me in the south-east.

122. May Trivikrama having the fiery lustre and the sword in the hand protect me in the South-west. May Mādhava resembling the midday sun and wielding the thunderbolt protect me in the North-west.

123. May Śrīdhara the lotus-eyed, protect me in the North-east. May Hṛṣikeśa with the lustre of lightning protect me from above by means of his Mudgara (iron-club).

124-125. May Padmanābha resembling the thousand-rayed sun in lustre protect me from below. He wields all weapons. He is Omnipotent. He is the foremost of all. He has faces everywhere. May Hari, Dāmodara whose lustre is like that of the glowworm, who has the noose in his hand and who is never vanquished, protect my body from within and without. —

126. Thus I have entered a twelve-barred cage which has no loop-hole anywhere. I have nothing to fear at any time.

127. After making arrangements for the protection thus, a man becomes invincible. In the mantras of Nṛhari this is the procedure.

128-129. One shall perform meditation, pūjā and everything else according to the injunction mentioned before. He shall pray to the deity thus—"O lotus-eyed one, you have won. O creator of the universe, obeisance be to you." O Hṛṣikeśa, obeisance be to you. O great Puruṣa, obeisance unto you. After the japa and the prayer this verse shall be recited and the lord is ritualistically dismissed.

130a. When the mantra is realized thus, the repeater of the mantra becomes the possessor of all riches.

130b. (Mantra in eight syllables) jaya jaya Śrī Nṛsiṁha[1] Be victorious, be victorious, O Nṛsiṁha). This excellent mantra consists of eight syllables.

131. The sage is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is the glorious Jaya Nṛsiṁha who is the bestower of all desired objects.

132. The devotee of vast intellect shall perform ṣaḍaṅga rites with Govinda (i) and the viyat (sky) = ha along with the moon (bindu) and six long vowels added with the bīja).

133-135. Then he shall meditate on Lord Nṛsiṁha the moon-created deity in the heart. O glorious deity in the physical body of man-lion the only kinsman of the universe. O glorious blue-necked one, O Ocean of mercy, O king of Sāmans having fire for your eyes, O Pināka-wielding, moon-crested Viṣṇu, Lord of Ramā, save me. After meditating thus, the repeater of mantras shall perform eight hundred thousand japas. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homas by means of milk-pudding and cooked rice soaked in ghee. The worship is to be performed as before.

136-139.[2] Tāra (Om), then māyā (hrim), then at the end of the bīja (kṣraum) add karṇa (ūm) and utter ugraṁ vīram. Then he shall utter Mahāviṣṇu who is blazing all round.

1. This gives the mantra of Jaya Nṛsiṁha thus : jaya jaya Nṛsiṁha.

2. This verse gives another mantra of Nṛsiṁha : Oṁ hrīṁ kṣraum ugraṁ vīraṁ mahāviṣṇuṁ jvalantaṁ sarvatomukhaṁ sphura sphura bandha bandha ghātaya ghātaya ghātaya hum phaṭ Nṛsiṁham bhīṣaṇam bhadram mṛtyumṛtyum namāmyaham.

Then he shall utter sphura, sphura (throb, throb), prasphura, prasphura (throb well, throb well), then the word ghora (terrible). then ghoratara (extremely terrible), then after tanurūpam (body and form) add Caṭa (lick) twice and uttering pracaṭa twice (lick well), repeat kaha twice, cama twice, bandha (bind) twice, ghātaya ghātaya (kill, kill) twice. Then he shall utter varma (hum) and astra (phaṭ). Then say Nṛsiṁham bhīṣaṇam bhadram mṛtyumṛtyuṁ namāmyaham. (I bow down to the terrible and gentle Nṛsiṁha who is death into the god of death". This mantra consists of eighty-five syllables. It is the bestower of desired things unto those who resort to him.

140. The sages are Aghora and Brahmā, the metres are Triṣṭup and anuṣṭup, terrible Nṛsiṁha is the deity.

141. The intelligent one shall perform meditation and worship by means of Anuṣṭup. This leading mantra is the protector of everyone.

142. The Bīja is the pair jaya jaya. Afterwards the eight-syllabled Mantra of Nṛsiṁha. Its sage is Prajāpati. The metre is Anuṣṭup.

143. Its deity is glorified as Vidāraṇa Nṛsiṁha (Nṛsiṁha who tears). jam is the Bīja, haṁ is Śakti. Its utility is for the acquisition of everything.

144. He shall perform the rite of Ṣaḍaṅga Nyāsa by means of Nṛsiṁha (seed) equipped with the long vowels. He shall meditate on the terrible. Nṛsiṁha who tears up the heart of the enemy.

145. (Nṛsiṁha) whose weapons are the claws and the curved fangs, who bestows fearlessness on the devotees, who is the abode of Śrī, whose eyes are fires that blaze like molten gold near the forelocks.

146. O divine lion, the mere touch of whose claws is more powerful than the thunderbolt, obeisance be to you. The sage is said to be Brahmā and the metre is said to be Anuṣṭup.

147. The deity of this mantra with thirtytwo syllables is Divine Nṛsiṁha. The pañcāṅga rites should be performed with the four quarters and with everything.

148. O Leading sage, the meditation, worship and everything else is said to be as mentioned before. The rites mentioned before become realized.

149-151.[1] "Oṁ namo Bhagavate Narasiṁhāya namaḥ Tejase" is more for the splendour.

Be manifest, be manifest. Then at the end of the adamantine claws and body Vajranakhadaṁṣṭrakāya, repeat trāsaya trāsaya (terrify, terrify) twice, krandaya, krandaya (make them yell) twice, then grasa, grasa twice (swallow, swallow), then after the word svāhā say abhaya (fearlessness), then ātmani bhūyiṣṭhā (be established in the soul). The mantra ends with oṁ with the bīja (Kṣraum). This mantra consists of sixtytwo syllables. Its sage etc. are mentioned as stated before.

152-153.[2] Tāra (Oṁ), then Narasiṁhabīja (Kṣraumṁ), then the words Namo Bhagavate Narasiṁhāya (obeisance to Narasiṁha), then tāra and bīja as before unto the form of fish. Oṁ, bīja unto the tortoise-formed one, om, bīja unto the form of the the Boar. Tāra (Oṁ) and bīja after Nṛsiṁha.

154-156. Unto the form, Tāra (Oṁ), its own bīja at the end of Vāmana. The word dhruva (Oṁ) uttered thrice and bīja (thrice) into the form of Rāma. The nigama (Oṁ), bīja unto Kṛṣṇa, at the end tāra (Oṁ), bīja unto Kalki.

1. This verse gives another mantra of Nṛsiṁha : Oṁ namo Bhagavate Nṛsiṁhāya namaḥ tejase āvirāvirbhava vajranakhadaṁṣṭrakāya trāsaya trāsaya krandaya krandaya, grasa grasa svāhā abhaya ātmani bhūyiṣṭhā oṁ kṣraum.

2. The mantra of Nṛsiṁha is given thus:

(a) Oṁ kṣraum namo Bhagavate Nṛsiṁhāya

(b) Then following the mantra of Matsya and others:

(i) Oṁ kṣraum Matsyarūpāya.
(ii) Oṁ kṣraum kūrmarūpāya
(iii) Oṁ kṣraum Varāharūpāya
(iv) Oṁ kṣraum Vāmanarūpāya
(v) Oṁ kṣraum Nṛsiṁharūpāya
(vi) Oṁ Oṁ Oṁ Kṣraum kṣraum kṣraum Rāmāya
(vii) Oṁ kṣraum Kṛṣṇāya
(viii) Oṁ kṣraum Kalkine
(ix) Jaya Jaya Śālagrāmanivāsine divyasiṁhāya svayambhupuruṣāya namaḥ.

Repeat Jaya (be victorious) twice unto the resident of Śālagrāma, Divyasiṁha (unto the divine lion) Svayambhū in the dative, then hṛt (namaḥ) unto the Puruṣa (Being), then tāra (oṁ) and its own bīja : This is the mantra, the bestower of a great empire.

157-158. The Mantra of Nṛsiṁha has ninety syllables, the sage glorified is Atri, the metre is Atijagatī, Nṛhari, one of the ten incarnations is the deity of the Mantra. Kham is the bīja, the unchanging is the Śakti, the ancillaries made with the bīja equipped with six long syllables and conceived as such.

159. May Nṛhari enhance my happiness—Nṛhari who resembles many moons, who is viewed by Lakṣmī and others and who is accompanied by ten incarnations.

160. The japa is for ten thousand times, to the extent of one tenth of it is the homa with milk-pudding. After conceiving the Mūrti (form of the deity) with the mūla mantra he should worship in the pedestal mentioned before.

161. He shall worship the ancillaries etc. at the outset and then worship Matsya (Fish incarnation) etc. in the petals of the quarters. After worshipping Indra and others as well as thunderbolt etc. he will attain the desired object.

162-205. Mantra having one thousand syllables :[1]

I shall mention the great mantra of one thousand syllables,

---

1. These verses give the thousand-syllabled mantra of Nṛsiṁha. The text seems corrupt in many places. However, the mantra runs thus. It is a mūla mantra.

Oṁ hrīṁ śrīṁ klīṁ krodhamūrte Nṛsiṁha mahāpuruṣa Pradhāna dharmādharmanigaḍanirmocana Kālapuruṣa Kālāntaka sadṛktoyam(?) soeśvara sadṛgjalam (?) śrānta niviṣṭa (?) caitanyacit sadābhāsaka kāladyatīta nityodita udayāstamayākrānta mahākāruṇika hṛdayābjacaturdala niviṣṭita caitanyātmaṁścaturātman dvādaśātman caturviṁśātman pañcaviṁśātman Baka (?) *Hari sahasramūrte ehi ehi bhagavan Nṛsiṁhapuruṣa krodheśvara sahasravanditapāda kalpānāgnisahasrakoṭyābha Mahādeva nikāya śatayajñātala amala amala piṅgalekṣaṇa saṭādaṁṣṭrāyudha nakhāyudha dānavendrāntaka vahni śoṇita saṁsaktavigraha bhūtāpasmāra yātudhāna surāsura vandyamāna pādapaṅkaja Bhagavan vyoma cakreśvara prabhavāpyayarūpenottiṣṭha avidyānicayaṁ daha daha jñānaiśvairyam prakāśaya prakāśaya Om sarvajña aveśa jambhājṛmbhyavatārakasatyapuruṣa sadasadmadhya niviṣṭam mama duḥsvapnabhayaṁ nigaḍabhayaṁ kāntārabhayaṁ viṣa jvara ḍākinīkṛtyā ādhva Revatī bhayam aśani durbhikṣa bhayam mārībhayam chāyā_skanda apasmāra bhayaṁ caurabhayaṁ jalasvapnāgnibhayam gajasiṁhakept well guarded in the Tantras. Tāra (Oṁ), Māyā (Hrīm) Ramā (Śrīm), Kāma (Klīm), bīja (Kṣraum) and then the word Krodhamūrti (having the form of anger).

At the end of it, the word Nṛsiṁha, utter mahāpuruṣa, (the great being). Then mentioning pradhānadharmādharma (the primary cause, virtue and evil) utter the word nigaḍa (fetters) nirmocana (remover) at the end of it.

At the end of it, utter the word Kālapuruṣa (person superintending time). The toya (water) is like Kālāntaka (the annihilator of Time). At the end of the word Sveśvara (One's own lord) Sadṛgjalam (?) srānta, niviṣṭa (that which has entered Caitanyacitsadā (always conscious), at the end of bhāskara (illuminator), Kālādyatīta (transcending time), nityodita (ever shining) udayāstamayākrānta (Overcome by both rising and setting) Mahākāruṇika (excellently merciful), hṛdayabījacaturdala, niviṣṭita, having his seat in the four petals of the lotus of the heart, Caitanyātman, (O soul of consciousness) Caturātman (four-souled one), Dvādaśātman bhujaṅga bhayaṁ janma jarā maraṇa bhayaṁ nirmocaya nirmocaya praśamaya praśamaya jñeyarūpadhāraṇa Nṛsiṁha Bṛhat sāma puruṣa sarvabhayanivāraṇa aṣṭāṣṭaka catuḥṣaṣṭi ceṭikābhayam vidyāvṛta trayastriṁśaddevatā koṭi namita padapaṅkajānvita sahasravadana sahasrodara sahasrekṣaṇa sahasrapādasahasrabhujasahasrajihva sahasralalāṭa sahasrāyudha tamaḥ prakāśaka puramathana sarvamantrarājeśvarā vihāyasagatiprada pātālagatiprada yantramardana ghorāṭṭahāsa hasita viśvāvāsa vāsudeva Akrūra Hayamukha Paramahaṁsa Viśveśa viśva viḍambana niviṣṭa prādurbhāvakāraka Hṛṣīkeśa Svacchanda niḥśeṣajīva grāsakamahāpiśitāsṛglampaṭa khecarī siddhipradāyaka ajeya avyakta brahmāṇḍodara brahma sahasra koṭi srag muṇḍamāla paṇḍitamuṇḍa matsya Kūrma Varāha Nṛsiṁha Vāmana Trailokyākramaṇa pādaśālika Rāmatraya Viṣṇurūpa tattvatraya Praṇavādhāra śikhāpādaniviṣṭa svāhā svadhā vaṣaṭ vauṣaṭ hum prāṇādhāra ādideva prāṇāpāna nivi-ṣṭita pāñcarātrika ditija vinidhanakara mahāmāyā amoghādarpa daityendradarpadalana tejorāśin om klīm tejasvarapuruṣāya satyapuruṣāya phaṭ oṁ om phaṭ om namaḥ vāsudevāya phaṭ om māyāmūrte phaṭ klīm amūrte phaṭ om kraum viśvamūrte phaṭ om hrīm viśvātmane phaṭ om sau caturātmane phaṭ om viśvarūpin phaṭ om au hrai parama hrai parama hram sa phaṭ om hraḥ Hiraṇyagarbharūpadhāraṇa phaṭ om hraum anau-pamyarūpadhārin phaṭ oṁ kṣaum Nṛsiṁharūpadhārin klaṁ śaḥ aṣṭāṅga vinyāsa vinyastamūrtidhārin phaṭ krau nisargasiddhaikarūpadhārin, phaṭ om hum hum hum kraum anuka mastakaṁ khaṇḍa khaṇḍa khādaya khādaya klim sādhyamānaya ānaya mahātman samyag darśaya darśaya kṣīm kṣīm kṣūm kṣaim kṣaum kṣaḥ kṣraum kṣupita kalmāṣa yam yam drām drīm klīm blūm saḥ Nṛsiṁhāya jvālātmane svāhā Nṛsiṁhāya kālātmane svāhā oṁ kṣraum klīm śrīṁ śrīṁ hrīm om.

---

O twelve-souled one), Baka (crane), Hari, Sahasramūrte (having one thousand forms), O Lord Nṛsiṁha Puruṣa, Krodheśvara (Lord of anger), Rasasahasravanditapāda (O lord, with feet bowed by thousands of worlds) Kalpāntāgni-sahasra-koṭyābha, (O one with the lustre of thousands of crores of the fire during the end of the kalpa), Mahādeva (O great lord), Nikāyadaśa (one with ten assemblages), Daśaśatayajña (one who has performed a thousand yajñas), Atala (nether worlds), should be known. Then Amalayugmakam (free from impurities twice), then piṅgalekṣaṇa (O tawny-eyed one), piṅgaladaṁṣṭra (O tawny-maned, O tawny-fanged one), Daṁṣṭrāyudha (one with fangs as weapons), Dānavendrāntaka (O annihilator of demons), Śoṇita-saṁskṛta-vigraha (One whose body is mixed with blood), O destroyer of all epileptic fits.

Surāsuravandyamānapādapaṅkaja (one whose lotus-like feet are worshipped by Devas and asuras), Bhagavan vyomacakreśvara (O lord of the circle of vyoma), prabhavāpyaya (O source of origination and dissolution), rise up, rise with that form, burn and burn the cluster of ignorance, bring to light, bring to light that prosperity of knowledge. O omniscient one, you are devoid of anger, O you are the cause of bringing down the magical formularies (jambha and jṛmbha), O truthful being, utter sadasadmadhyaniviṣṭam stationed between sat and asat (non-existent), then say, remove my fear from fellers, fear from forest, fear from poison. Then utter viṣa (poison), jvara (fever), ḍākini (witches), kṛtyā (action of black-magic), Revatīs (demons) Aśani thunderbolt), durbhikṣa (famine), mārī (plague and pestilence) add bhaya to all the above, then after mārīca (demons), add bhaya then chhāyā (shadow), then after the word skandāpasmāra add bhaya, then after caura (thief) add bhaya, then say jala svapna agni (water, slumber and fire), add bhaya to each, then after elephant, lions, and serpents say bhaya. then after the word birth, old age and death add bhaya. Then bhayaṁ nirmocaya, nirmocaya (remove fear, remove fear), praśamaya praśamaya (lessen, lessen) O jñeyarūpadhārin (O you who have assumed the form of objects of experience), O Nṛsiṁha of Bṛhatsāma (holy Sāma text), sarva bhayanivāraṇa

(O remover of all sorts of fear), the fear of eight into eight (sixtyfour) ceṭikās (slave girls) surrounded by vidyās (learning incarnates), trayastriṁśaddevatākoṭinamitapādapaṅkajānvita (O deity equipped with the lotus-like feet bowed by thirtythree crores of devas).

At the end of the word sahasravadana, (thousand faces, sahasrodara (thousand bellies), sahasrekṣaṇa (thousand eyes), sahasrapāda (thousand feet).

After uttering sahasrabhuja (thousand arms) utter sahasrajihva (thousand tongues) at the end say sahasralalāṭa (thousand foreheads), then say sahasrāyudhadhara (one holding a thousand weapons).

(Then utter) tamaḥprakāśa (one who illumines darkness), puramathana (destroyer of cities), Sarvamantrarājeśvara (the lord of all great mantras) Vihāyasagatiprada (one who bestows the ability to move about in the sky).

At the end of the word pātālagatiprada (the bestower of the ability to move about in the nether worlds) utter yantra-mardana (the suppressor of yantras) ghorāṭṭahāsahasita (one who laughs the terrible laugh), viśvāvāsa (the above of all), Vasudeva (the deity who has the abode in the heart), akrūra O horse-faced one, O great one, O lord of the world, O deliverer of the world, O immanent one, utter the words Viśvaprādurbhāvakāraka (one who causes the manifestation of the universe), O Hṛṣīkeśa, O svacchanda (O free one), then say niḥśeṣajīvagrāsaka (O swallower of all living beings).

Then utter the words mahāpiśitāsṛglampaṭa (one who is excessively fond of the plenty of flesh and blood), khecarīsiddhipradāyaka (giver of the khechari siddhi i.e. power of moving about in the sky), ajeya (unconquerable), brahmāṇḍodara (one who has the whole cosmic egg within the belly), Brahmasahasrakoṭisragmuṇḍamāla (one having thousands and crores of heads of Brahmā as garlands), paṇḍitamuṇḍa (of scholarly head), then say matsya, kūrma, varāha, Nṛsiṁha, Vāmana trailokyākramaṇapādaśālika (O Vāmana whose feet had measured the three worlds), Rāmatrayas (three Rāmas = Paraśurāma, Balarāma and Śrī Rāma), Viṣṇurūpadhara (one holding the form of Viṣṇu), tattvatraya (jāgrat, svapna and suṣupti), praṇavādhāra tacchikhāniviṣṭa (One who is established in Oṁ and its śikhā i.e., its subtle states as its flames).

At the end of the word svāhā utter svadhā, then vaṣaṭ, netra (vauṣaṭ), varma (hum) and astra (phaṭ), utter prāṇā-dhāra (support of the vital breath), ādideva (O primordial lord), then utter prāṇāpānaniviṣṭita (one who resides in prāṇa and apāna), Pañcarātrika (the sole resort of Pañcarātra) Ditijavinidhanakara (One who causes the death of the sons of Diti), Mahāmāyā, (the great deluder), amoghadarpa (one who has the unfailing boastfulness), daityendradarpa-dalana (the subduer of the valour of demons) oṁ, klīm, tejeśvarāya Puruṣāpāya satyapuruṣāya (unto the truthful person, the lord of Puruṣas with brilliant lustre), then astra (phaṭ), acyuta(oṁ), tāra(oṁ), astra (phaṭ) oṁ, then Vāsudeva (phaṭ) Oṁ Māyāmūrti,(phaṭ), kāma (klīm), O you who possess the form of the first letter of the vowels (svarādima-mūrti), then phaṭ, avyaya (oṁ) bīja (kṣraum) viśvamūrte (O immanent) then phaṭ, then oṁ, then māyā (hrīm) the immanent one, then phaṭ, then oṁ sau caturātmane (the four-formed one).

Phaṭ, tāra (Oṁ), I, O universal formed one, then phaṭ, then two oṁkāras, then hrai at the end of parama, hrām, along with phaṭ and oṁ.

Hraḥ Hiraṇyagarbharūpadhāraṇa (one who has the form of Hiraṇyagarbha,) then phaṭ, dhruva (oṁ), Hraum to one who has assumed the inimitable form,) varma (hum), dhruva (oṁ) thereafter. Kṣaum O you who have assumed the form of Nṛsiṁha, Oṁ Klīm ślaḥ, then taking the first letter of the vowels i.e. a and adding it to ṣṭāṅga vinyāsa vinyastamūrti-dhārin (one who takes the form in eight places as fixed in the eight limbs of the body), then phaṭ. Then hrau nisargasid-dhaikarūpadhārin (one who assumes the natural forms as esta-blished there). Then phaṭ. Oṁ hum for three times, then the hand and the head of the person referred to in the rite. Then repeat khaṇḍa twice (split, split), khādaya twice (eat, eat), klīm bring the sādhya (the person for whom the rite is per-formed), repeat ānaya twice (bring, bring), O noble soul, show well, well.

Then utter the bīja (Kṣraum) six long syllables, Kṣapitāntakalmāṣa (onc who destroys sins). Repeat then aya (twice?) or five bījas of the arrow (drām, drīm, klīm, blūm, saḥ), svāhā to Nṛsiṁha with the form of flame. Then svāhā unto Nṛsiṁha with the form of the Kāla (the destroyer). Then its own bīja (kṣraum), the bīja of Lakṣmī (śrīm), māyā (hrīm), tāra (oṁ). This is the mantra consisting of one hundred thousand syllables.

206-207. Its sage is Kapila, the metre is Jagatī, the deity is Śrī Lakṣmī Nṛhari, the bīja kṣraum the śakti is vahnivallabhā svāhā, the colour is white, the note is udātta (high pitch) as mentioned by learned men, the kṣetra (the field) is the supreme soul, its utility is for the acquisition of everything.

208-210. Kṣaḥ unto the deity who has a thousand arms and who holds a thousand weapons. At the end of the word Nṛsiṁha (utter) svāhā, Astrāya phaṭ The mantra is thus mentioned after effecting the purity of the hands by means of this. Then he shall perform the aṅganyāsa rites.

211-213. Tāra (oṁ) Kṣām sahasrākṣara vijṛmbhita (one stretching out with a thousand syllables Nṛsiṁhāya svāhā—this is mentioned as the mantra in the heart. Māra klīm, kṣīm mahātenu prabhāvikara (at the end of the great, the following lustre is scattered) Nṛsiṁhāya svāhā. This is glorified as the hṛdayamantra, tāra (oṁ) kṣūm utter tapta-yaṁhāya dṛkkeśānta unto the heated yaṁha from the eye upto the end of hair jvalati avikala kūrma (the tortoise that is unimpaired blaze). The long one is more than the thunderbolt. O lord, Divine Lion, thanks to the touch of the claws. O Hari, obeisance be to you. Repeat these words twice each Mahādhvasta, Jagadrūpa, Nṛsiṁhāya, (the great one destroyed, one of the forms of the universe, unto Nṛsiṁha). By means of this the tuft of hair is mentioned. Then the Kavaca is mentioned.

214. Tāra (Oṁ), Kṣaim good varṇa (?), madamattavihvalita Nṛsiṁhāya svāhā svāhā (unto Nṛsiṁha who is excessively intoxicated). This is said to be the kavaca (hum).

215. Tāra (Om) Kṣaum, O thousand-eyed, O wearer of the universal form. This mantra ending with svāhā is glorified as the mantra of netra (Vauṣaṭ).

216. Tāra (Oṁ) Kṣaḥ, sahasrabāhave (One having thousand hands) sahasrāyudhāya Nrsiṁhāya svāhā (Svāhā unto Nṛsiṁha having thousaıd weapons).

217-221. The astra mantra has thus been recounted.

Thereafter, he shall meditate on the Man-Lion—who has the lustre of thousand rising suns, who has three eyes, who has terrible ornaments and who tears asunder the daitya with the sharp points of his baton-like hands.

After meditating thus, the repeater of the mantras shall perform japa a thousand times. He shall perform homa with milk-pudding soaked in ghee. The mantra shall be perfectly realised. After conceiving the mūrti by means of the mūla mantra, he shall worship Nṛhari mentioned previously. Then, at the outset, he shall worship the aṅgas, discus, conch, noose, goad, thunderbolt, mace, dagger and bamboo in the petals. Thereafter he shall worship the guardians of the quarters and thunderbolt etc.

222-227. When the mantra is achieved thus, the repeater of the mantra should apply it for the practical use. If any one is caught hold by evil planets he shall charge bhasma, with the mantra and smear it over the afflicted person. By the application of Bhasma the evil planets are destroyed. There is no doubt in this that in the same manner Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Kinnaras, goblins, ghosts and evil spirits do perish. The evil spirits induced by other's black magic perish when this mantra is repeated. If the bhasma is smeared, the man becomes invincible immediately. The devotee shall keep it in a jar in a mystic diagram called Sarvatobhadra, on an auspicious day. He shall then fill it with sacred waters and repeat the mantra hundred and eight times. A man who performs his ablution thereby certainly crosses all mishaps. Of what avail is much talk ? This excellent Mantra is the bestower of all desired things.

228. "We know the deity with adamantine claws. We meditate on the deity with sharp fangs. May Nṛsiṁha urge us, therefore", this is Nṛsiṁhagāyatrī.[1] It bestows all desired things. By remembering this alone all sins will be dispelled.

1. Nṛsiṁha Gāyatrī mantra is as follows:
Vajranakhāya vidmahe | tīkṣṇadaṁṣṭrāya dhīmahi | tanno Nṛsiṁhaḥ pracodayāt.

CHAPTER SEVENTYTWO

The worship of Hayagriva

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Oṁ namo Viṣṇave Surapataye Mahābalāya Svāhā (Obeisance unto Viṣṇu, the extremely powerful lord of Devas Svāhā). This is the eighteen-syllabled mantra.

2. Its sage is Indu (the moon), the metre is virāṭ, the deity is Dadhivāmana,[1] Oṁkāra is the bīja, svāhā is Śakti.

3-5. The syllables of the mantra are grouped into classes of one, two, three, five and two syllables and the nyāsas in six limbs are performed. Then, the syllables are fixed in the head, on the forehead, in the eyes, ears, lips, palate, throat, arms, on the back, in the belly, umbilicus, private parts, thighs, knees, calves and the feet. The syllables originating from the mantra are only eighteen. Thereafter, he shall meditate on the lord.

6-8. He shall meditate on the lord who is white like the pearl, who has jewels and ornaments, who is stationed in the moon, whose face shines by means of forelocks resembling bees and who holds a jar filled with pure water and a cup filled with curd-soaked rice with his hands. He shall worship him and repeat the mantra three hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with milk-pudding and cooked rice soaked in ghee or with curd-soaked rice in accordance with injunctions. In the fancied pedestal on the top of the moon, as mentioned before, he shall worship him.

9-11. After duly worshipping the fancied idol reciting the mūla mantra he shall worship the six aṅgas in the filaments. Vāsudeva, Saṁkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna, Aniruddha in the petals of the quarters, Śānti, Śrī, Sarasvatī and Rati in the corner petals and the emblem Vainateya, Kaustubha, Vanamālikā, conch, discus, ironclub and the bow (Śārṅga) in the eight petals.

The mantra of Dadhivāmana is given in the verse:
Oṁ namo Viṣṇave surapataye mahābalāya svāhā
In Śaradā Tilaka the mantra is given in the verse as follows:
Tāro hṛt viṣṇave paścāt ṅentaḥ surapatir bhavet /
Mahābalāya ṭhaddvandvam manuraṣṭādaśākṣaraḥ //

12-15. At the lips of the petals he shall worship Keśava etc and the guardians of the quarters thereafter. After worshipping their weapons he shall worship the eight elephants of the quarters viz Airāvata, Puṇḍarīka, Vāmana, Kumuda, Añjana, Puṣpadanta, Sārvabhauma and Supratīka. The female elephants, their mates, are Abhramu, Kapilā, Piṅgalā, Anupamā, Tāmrakarṇī, Śubhradantī, Aṅganā and Añjanāvatī. When everything is propitiated thus, the devotee shall be the perfect possessor of the Mantra. One who is desirous of prosperity and glory shall give the desired things to the repeater of the mantra. The intelligent devotee shall perform homa for a thousand times with milk-pudding and ghee.

16-18. He shall obtain great splendour and glory, by performing homas with grains. By performing a thousand homas with the seeds taken from Śatapuṣpa, one dispels great fear. No hesitation, no doubt need be entertained in this respect. One gets liberated from ill fortunes by performing homa with pure curd-soaked rice. After meditating on the form of Trivikrama, he shall, with great concentration, repeat the Mantra. One who is imprisoned in a jail shall be released, thanks to the power of the mantra.

19. One shall get the painting of the lord of Devas either on the wall or on the plank and worship it every day with great fragrant flowers. He shall attain great glory and prosperity.

20. By performing homa with red lotuses the repeater of the mantra can make the entire universe subservient to him. He shall perform homa every day with cooked rice soaked in ghee. He shall perform twenty-eight homas every day.

21-24. One who performs homa duly with sugar, ghee and cooked rice shall attain everlasting cooked rice. One shall perform homas with (baked pies) having six tastes. He shall perform homa eight thousand times. He shall withstand ill fortune and attain great glory and prosperity. The repeater of the mantra shall perform ten thousand homas with curd-soaked rice mixed with sugar. Wherever he may reside he shall attain a mountain (huge quantity) of cooked rice there. A man shall perform a thousand billion homas staying near a bilva (tree). There is no doubt in this that he obtains great fortune there and then. If a man forms a hundred thousand homas with milk-pudding, he shall become equal to the lord of speech.

25. After repeating the mantra a hundred thousand times he shall perform Homa to the extent of one-tenth of it by the fruits of Putrajīva (Nagdie Putranjīva) into the fire kindled by the twigs of that tree. One shall attain a son.

26-27. That yantra (amulet) is conducive to richness, the yantra which contains Tāra (oṁ) as Sādhya (the person for whose good the rite is performed) which shines with its pericarp, which consists of shining filaments of good colour with Om in the centre and has two syllables of the mantra in each of the eight petals which contains the remaining two syllables of the mantra in the last petals which is enveloped by twelve syllables (of the vowels) and all the letters of consonants externally.

28. After meditating on red Trivikrama, the repeater of the mantra shall perform ten thousand homas with flowers red in colour. He shall be victorious everywhere.

29. If one meditates on the deity as occupying the seat on the moon and performs ten thousand homas with lotuses, one shall attain a kingdom endowed with all characteristics and free from thorn.

30. By performing ten thousand homas with cloves soaked in honey or with the petals of apāmārga flowers along with the repetitions of the name of the sādhya (i.e. the person to be brought under control), he shall certainly become controlled.

31. By performing hundred and eight homas with the auspicious petals of apāmārga flowers or by performing so many japas for seven days he shall be relieved from great ailments.

32-33. He shall repeat the following mystic words,[1] "udgirat

---

1. The mantra of Hayagriva is given in Śāradā Tilaka in the following verse:
udgirat padamābhāṣya praṇavodgithaśabdataḥ /
Sarvavāgīśvaretyante pravadetīśvaretyatha //
Sarvavedamayācintyapadānte sarvamuccaret /
Bodhaya dvitayāntoyam *mantra*tārādiriritaḥ //
The mantra of Hayagriva then comes to this :
"Oṁ udgirat oṁ sarvavāgīśvareśvara sarvavedamayācintya sarvaṁ bodhaya bodhaya".

Oṁ udgītha Sarvavāgīśvara", then he shall repeat sarvavedamaya (O deity identical with all the Vedas) acintya (the inconceivable) sarvaṁ bodhaya, bodhaya (enlighten, enlighten everything). The mantra begins with tāra (OṀ).

34. Its sage is Brahmā, the metre is anuṣṭup and the deity is Hayagrīva, the lord who bestows speech and prosperity.

35-37. He shall conceive the five aṅgas by uttering Oṁ and the (four) quarters of the mantra. He shall then meditate on the deity—"I salute the Horse-faced lord whose lustre is equal to that of the snow-capped mountain, who is bedecked in garlands of tulasī leaves and whose high region is that of speech. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the Mantra ten thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with milk-puddings soaked in honey. After conceiving the idol by the mūla mantra he shall worship it in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu, accompanied by Vimalā etc.

38-40. In the four quarters inside the pericarp beginning with the east he shall worship Sanandana, Sanaka, Śrī and Pṛthivī (Earth). In its exterior he shall worship the four Vedas. In the six corners he shall worship these six Vedāṅgas namely Nirukta (Etymology), Jyotiṣa (Astronomy), Vyākaraṇa (Grammar), Kalpa (rituals), Śikṣā (Science of Euphony and proper pronunciation) and Chandas (Prosody). Then he shall worship the eight mothers at the eight petals.

41-42. The sādhaka (aspirant) shall worship Vakratuṇḍa and others, eight in all, in the middle of the petals. Afterwards he shall worship the eight Bhairavas in the tips of the petals. Asitāṅga, Ruru, Bhīṣaṇa, Raktanetraka, Baṭuka, Kāladamana, Dantura and Vikaṭa.

43. Exterior to it in the sixteen petals he shall worship the ten incarnations of Hari as well as the six weapons viz., the Conch, discus, iron club, lotus, sword Nandaka and the bow Śārṅga.

44-47. Exterior to it in the outermost quarters he shall worship the ten guardians of the quarters beginning with Indra. After worshipping the thunderbolt etc. exterior to it he shall in due order worship at the entrances, Mahāgaṇapati, Durgā, Kṣetreśa and Baṭuka. The entire group of the Yoginīs beginning with Prakaṭa shall be in the outside. Still exterior to it are the seven rivers and exterior to it, the nine planets. After worshipping the Horse-faced deity thus for fifteen times he shall become equal to the lord of speech in fluency of speech and the lord of wealth by means of his riches.

48-49. When the mantra has been achieved thus the repeater of the mantra can apply it to practical purpose. He shall charge pure water with the mantra one thousand and eight times and for a month with the mūla mantra. He who conquers his sense organs and drinks this water becomes very intelligent. Even a born dumb man certainly attains the achievement of fluency of speech.

50-51. The bīja is said to be Viyat (ha) Bhṛgu (sa) and arghīśa (u) stationed with the firmament (indu) (ṁ). At the time of the lunar or solar eclipse he shall pour milk into a gold vessel and put vaṭa (arris root) into it. The repeater of the mantra shall stand in water upto the neck and reverentially perform Japa of the mantra throughout the duration of eclipse.

52-54. He shall then drink the entire milk immediately. He shall have good fluency of speech. He shall take the seed of the jyotiṣmatī creeper and inspire it with the mantra. He shall then eat it. The number of seeds must be increased by one everyday till it comes to one hundred and eight. It is true that man will be an incarnation of Sarasvatī on the earth. O leading brahmins, of what use is much talk? By the grace of this mantra he shall become an interpreter of the Vedas, Āgamas etc and possess knowledge. In combination it is Hsaum.

CHAPTER SEVENTYTHREE

The worship of Rāma etc.

Sanat kumāra said :

1. Henceforth, the mantras of Rāma are being recounted. They bestow siddhis on the aspirants. By their propitiation, people are able to cross the ocean of worldly existence.

2. Of all the excellent mantras and those of Gaṇapati, Sūrya, Śakti and Śiva, the Vaiṣṇava mantra is the most excellent. It is the bestower of desired objects.

3. Even among the Vaiṣṇavas the mantras of Rāma are more efficacious. They are millions of times more fruitful than those that are related to Gaṇapati, etc.

4. Vahni (ra) is stationed on the couch of Viṣṇu (a), its head is bedecked with moon (m). Thc mantra ends with āya. Rāmāya namaḥ. It is destructive of multitude of great sins.

5-8. Among the mantras related to Rāma the six-syllabled one is the most excellent. By the mere utterance of this mantra the sins of slaughtering thousand brahmins, committed knowingly or unknowingly, sins of stealing gold thousand times, drinking of wine and defiling of preceptor's wife, and thousands and millions of subsidiary sins, undoubtedly perish instantaneously.

The Sage is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī and Rāma is the deity. The first one (Rāma) is the bīja, hṛt (namaḥ) is the śakti. Its utility is the acquisition of everything. He shall perform Ṣaḍaṅga Nyāsa by means of the bīja of long vowels.

9. After fixing the syllables of the mantra in the brahmarandhra (cerebral orifice), in the middle of the eyebrows, in the heart, in the navel, in the rectum and in the feet in their specific order, he shall fix Keśava and others.

10-13. After performing the rite of Pīṭhanyāsa he shall meditate on the excellent scion of the family of Raghu in the heart. He is as resplendent as the dark clouds. He is seated in the posture of Vīrāsana[1] (Heroic Posture). He shows the gesture (mudrā) of knowledge[2] by means of his right hand and

1. In Śāradā Tilaka, Virāsana is defined as follows:

Ekam padamadhaḥ kṛtvā vinyasyorau tatthetaram /
Ṛjukāyo viśed yogi virāsanamitIritam //

Chap. 25, verse 15

2. Jñānamudrā is a kind of posture of hands and fingers. It is defined thus: One should join the tip of the forefinger with the thumb of the right hand and place the hand before the chest—the palm of the hand should remain stretched, the left hand should be placed on the left thigh upside down".

keeps the other hand on the knee. Sītā with a lotus in her hand is at his side. She has the lustre of lightning, she is bedecked and decorated in various ways. She is looking at the lotus-like face of Rāma. After meditating thus, the repeater of the Mantra shall perform six hundred thousand japas (i.e. as many hundred thousands as there are syllables). To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa into the fire by means of lotuses. Thereafter, he shall feed the brahmins. He shall then worship in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu accompanied by Vimalā etc.

14. The Sādhaka (aspirant) shall conceive the idol by means of the mūla mantra. He shall invoke the deity therein. He shall worship Sītā seated on his left by means of her mantra.

15. Rāma (Śrīṁ) Sītā used in the dative case and ending with svāhā which constitutes the mantra of Jānakī. After worshipping Śārṅga in front he shall worship the arrows in both sides.

16-18. He shall worship the six aṅgas in the filaments and in the petals and should worship Hanumān, Sugrīva, Bharata, Vibhīṣaṇa, Lakṣmaṇa, Aṅgada, Śatrughna and Jāmbavān in their respective order. He shall worship Hanumān who is reading in front (of Rāma) holding a book. He shall worship Bharata and Śatrughna who hold the chowries at the two sides. He shall worship Lakṣmaṇa who stands behind (Rāma) holding umbrella with his two hands.

19-20. Thereafter, he shall worship in the eight petals the following deities, viz. Sṛṣṭi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Surāṣṭra, Rāṣṭrapāla, Akopa, Dharmapālaka, Sumantra. After worshipping them, the guardians of the quarters equipped with their weapons should be worshipped. By propitiating Rāma thus one becomes Jīvanmukta (liberated in this very existence).

21. In order to keep the king under control he shall with concentration of mind perform homa with āti flowers smeared with the sandal paste. For the achievement of wealth and grain he shall worship with lotuses.

22. He who desires fortune shall perform homa by means of flowers originating from bilva; he shall keep the entire universe subservient if he worships with blue lotuses soaked in ghee.

23. The devotee shall be long-lived and free from ailments if he worships with śataparvī (bambo shoots) smeared with ghee; by performing homa with red lotuses he attains desired wealth.

24-26. By performing homa with palāśa flowers (Butee Frondora) he becomes very intelligent. He shall drink water charged with the mantra. Within a year he becomes a kingpoet. For suppressing great ailments he shall eat rice charged with that mantra. By performing homa with the medicine mentioned he shall be relieved from the ailment instantaneously. If the devotee shall observe payovrata (taking in only milk, water) and perform japa of the mantra a hundred thousand times on the banks of a river or in a cowpen and then perform homa with milk pudding soaked in ghee he shall become the storehouse of learning.

27-29. If a man loses his overlordship (or finds it depreciating) he shall take in only vegetables. Standing within water he shall perform japa a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with bilva flowers. Undoubtedly he shall regain the same overlordship. A man shall observe fast and seated on the banks of the Gaṅgā repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To one tenth of it he shall perform homa with lotuses or flowers originating from Bilva mixed with the three sweet things sugar, honey and ghee. He shall attain the glory of a kingdom.

30. In the month of Mārgaśīrṣa (Nov-Dec.) the devotee shall take to diet of bulbous roots, roots and fruits and staying under water perform japa of the mantra, a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it, he shall perform homa into the fire by means of milk-puddings.

31-35. A son or a grandson resembling Śrī Rāmacandra is born to him. There are many other applications of this great mantra. But there is no other world in regard to those who make this application. He shall draw a diagram with six corners with eight leaves and then externally draw a lotus consisting of twelve petals. The expert shall write six syllables of the mantra in the corners (angles). In the eight petals he shall write the eight syllables with the Oṁkāra within. In the Ravidala (i.e. in the twelve petals) he shall write kāmabīja (klīm) in the middle, then the name shall be written enveloped by the mantras. It shall be enveloped with sudarśana (ca) externally and in the quarters enveloped by the vowels. The Bhūpura (the External walls) shall shine due to the thunderbolt (va). The corners shall shine through Kandarpa (ka), the goad (krom), noose (am) and the earth (lam). This is known as Yantrarāja (the king of Yantras).

36-37. The mantra shall be written with Aṣṭagandha (eight fragrant substances) in a birch bark and shall be worshipped in the manner mentioned before. In the six corners and the twelve lotus petals evolved by pairs, and in the filaments of the eight-leafed lotus, the learned man shall write two vowels in each of eight petals. He shall write mātṛkās outside of it. Then the mantra (of Rāma) will be the giver of life to it.

38. The repeater of the mantra shall wear this Yantra on an auspiciọus day round his neck, on his right hand or on the head. He is liberated from all sins.

39-42. The (practice of the mantra shall begin) on an auspicious day with an auspicious constellation. It shall be practised in a good spot devoid of any cause for poignant grief. The practice of Vaśya (controlling), ākarṣaṇa (attracting), vidveṣa (hatred), drāvaṇa (routing) and uccāṭana (eradication) shall be initiated in due order on Punarvasu, Puṣya, Āśleṣā, Ārdrā and Maghā constellation. For the purpose of controlling, the diagram should be inscribed with the pen (quill) made of Dūrvā grass; in the case of attraction the pen is that which is taken from karañja (Galedupa Arborea); in the case of bringing about death the pen is to be made of human bone; in bringing about arresting activities the pen is that which originates from Vṛkṣarāja (the fig tree). For achieving peace, nourishment and longevity, for the suppression of all adversities generating blunder and perturbation, the expert shall engrave it on the stone. If he wishes to cause hatred he shall write on the hide of a donkey and for the purpose of driving away the enemy he shall write in the emblem.

43. In the activity of generating fever, distress, sorrow and death of enemies the excellent Sādhaka (aspirant) shall write the mantra on a yellow cloth and practise.

44-45. In vaśya and ākṛṣṭi (controlling and captivating) he shall worship duly by means of eight fragrant things, in the case of striking and driving away he shall make the inscription by a piece of charcoal from funeral pyre. If the inscription is made of poisonous milky exudation of arka (sun) plant, death will certainly take place. After writing the Yantrarāja thus he shall worship it with sandal paste, flowers, etc.

46. The excellent sādhaka should wear it after covering it with trilauha (gold, silver and copper).

The bīja (rāṁ) Rāmāya Svāhā is the mantra which contains six syllables.[1]

47-52. The great Sudarśana mantra,[2] the bestower of all achievements is being given. After mentioning Sudarśana mahācakra-rājeśvara (The lord of the king of cakras). One should say duṣṭāntaka (annihilator of the wicked), duṣṭabhayānaka (terrible unto the wicked), duṣṭabhayaṁkara (cause of terror for the wicked), chindhi twice (split, split), vindhi twice (pierce, pierce), then vidāraya twice (tear off, tear off) paramantrān grasa grasa (swallow, swallow the mantra of others) then bhakṣaya (terrify, terrify), then hum should be uttered. The mantra ends with svāhā.

This mantra is said to consist of sixty-eight syllables. This is in enveloping the Yantra.

Mūlamantra : Tāra (oṁ), hṛt (namaḥ) bhagavān in the dative (unto the lord), Raghunandana in the dative (unto the delighter of the family of Raghu), Rakṣoghnaviṣadāya (unto

---

1. The mantra runs thus—
   Rāṁ Rāmāya Svāhā.
2. Mahāsudarśana mantra is as follows:
   Sudarśana mahācakra rājeśvara duṣṭāntaka duṣṭabhayānaka duṣṭabhayaṁkara chindhi chindhi bhindhi bhindhi vidāraya vidāraya paramantrān grasa grasa bhakṣaya bhakṣaya trāsaya trāsaya huṁ phaṭ svāhā. It consists of 68 syllables.

one who is clever in slaying the demons), madhura prasanna-vadanāya (unto the one who is sweet smiling-faced) amitatejase (unto the one who is possessed of illimitable splendour), then bālāya Rāmāya Viṣṇave namaḥ (obeisance to the boy Rāma who is Viṣṇu himself). This is called mahāmantra consisting of forty-seven syllables.

53. Its sage is Viśvāmitra, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Śrī Rāma, Oṁ is the bīja and Svāhā is the śakti.

54. He shall conceive the aṅgas by means of bīja (Rāṁ) and māyā (hrīm) along with six long vowels. He shall perform its meditation and worship as before.

55.-57. The mantra when propitiated grants all desires.

The five-syllabled mantra adorned with own bīja (Rāṁ), Kāma (klīm), Śakti (hṛīm), Vāg (aim) Lakṣmī (śrīm) tāra (Oṁ) separately in six ways takes the form of six types of mantra. Thus, it becomes the bestower of four vargas (the four aims of human life). Their sages are Brahmā, Sammohana, Śakti, Agastya, Dakṣiṇāmūrti, and Śrīśiva respectively. They are mentioned to you in their order. Or Viśvāmitra is the sage of the mantra beginning with Kāmabīja.

58. Gāyatrī is the metre, Śrī Rāma is the deity, the bīja and Śakti are as mentioned above, the ṣaḍaṅga nyāsa shall be the syllables of the mantra.

59-62. Or by means of the bījas equipped with the long syllables he shall fix the syllables of the mantra. One shall meditate on the lord seated inside the aeriel chariot named Puṣpaka on the cloth that covers the throne. It is at the root of the divine Kalpa tree in a golden platform. In a lotus of eight petals, the lord whose lustre is like that of sapphire, is seated in a heroic posture (Vīrāsana). He shines, with the gesture of perfect knowledge. He has kept his left hand on his left thigh. He is being served by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. He is decorated in jewels. After meditating on the lord he shall repeat the mantra for as many hundred thousand times as there are syllables in it. Or he shall remember Hari who shines like the victory of Kāma and other mantras.

63-64. The worship, rites according to one's desires and all other things, shall be performed as are done like the six-syllabled mantra.

The word Rāma is preceded by dhruva (Oṁ) and followed by either Candra or bhadra. It should be in the dative case, Śrī Rāmacandrāya or Śrī Rāmabhadrāya, (the word namaḥ is added in the end). Then the two mantras become eight-syllabled ones.[1] If tāra (oṁ) is added in the end they become nine-syllabled ones. The repeater of the mantra shall worship these as in the case of the six-syllabled mantra.

65-67. "Huṁ (i.e. Kavaca—coat of mail) Jānakīvallabhāya svāhā". This is ten-syllabled great mantra. Its sage is Vaśiṣṭha, its metre is svarāṭ. Sīta's consort is the deity, the first one is bīja, svāhā is śakti. He shall perform Ṣaḍaṅga nyāsa in due order by means of Kāma Vīja (klīm). He shall perform nyāsa rite for ten syllables in the head, forehead, middle of the eye-brows, palate, throat, heart, umbilicus, feet, knees and legs.

68-73. In the city of Ayodhyā, in a golden dais studded with jewels of variegated colours, under a canopy decorated with mandāra flowers and equipped with festons, Rāghava, is seated in the aerial chariot. He is being eulogised by Rākṣasas, monkeys, and Devas of auspicious nature seated in good aerial chariots. He is served by humble sages. His left side is decorated by Sītā. He is made elegent by Lakṣmaṇa. He is dark in complexion, his face is beaming with delight, he is bedecked in all kinds of ornaments. After meditating thus, the repeater of mantras shall with concentration repeat the mantra as many hundred thousand times as there are syllables therein.

Rāmāya Dhanuṣpāṇaye Svāhā. This is the ten-syllabled mantra. Its sage is Brahmā, its metre is Virāṭ. Rāma, the suppressor of the Rākṣasas is mentioned as the deity.

74-77. The first one is the bījā, svāhā is the śakti, he shall conceive the aṅgas through the bīja. The fixation of the

---

1. The combination of the mantra is as follows:
Oṁ Rāmacandrāya namaḥ
OR
Oṁ Rāmabhdrāya namaḥ

syllables, worship, etc he shall perform in the same manner as mentioned in the case of the ten-syllabled[1] mantra. He shall remember the deity as holding the bow and the arrows.

Tāra (Oṁ) namaḥ Bhagavate Rāmacandrāya (Rāma-bhadrāya). The two mantras are twelve-syllabled ones, the sage, the mode of meditation etc are as before. The name of Rāma can be prefixed with Śri and again with jaya twice followed by Rāma, is of thirteen syllables. The sage is Brahmā, the metre is Virāṭ, Rāma the destroyer of multitudes of sins is mentioned as the deity.

78. He shall perform Saḍaṅga nyāsa with the three words repeated twice. Its meditation, worship, etc., he shall perform as in the case of the ten-syllabled mantra.

79. "Oṁ namo Bhagavate Rāmāya mahāpuruṣāya namaḥ". This is the eighteen-syllabled mentra.

80-81 The sage is Viśvāmitra, the metre is Dhṛti, Rāma is its deity, tāra (Oṁ) is the bīja, namaḥ is the Śakti. With great concentration he shall perform Ṣaḍaṅga nyāsa by the syllables of the mantra grouped into one, two, four, three, six and two syllables.

82-86. Meditation : When the dance is begun with the noise of different kinds of drums, conch and musical instruments, when the auspicious speed about victory is spreading everywhere, when the place is rendered sweet smelling with sandal aguru musk, camphor, etc, when the air is rendered fragrant wafting the sweet smell of different kinds of flowers, when everything has been beautified by the singing of Deva and Gandharva, when Rāghava is seated on a throne over the aeriel chariot Puṣpaka. He is accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā. He appears splendid with the matted hair and his crown. He holds the bow and the arrows. He is accompanied by Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa. He is dark in complexion. He is on his way back after killing Rāvaṇa. He has thus protected the three worlds. After meditating thus the repeater of mantra shall perform japa as many hundred thousand times as there are

---

1. The combination of the mantra is as follows :
Oṁ namo bhagavate Rāmacandrāya or Rāmabhadrāya
This mantra contains twelve syllables.

syllables in the mantra. To the extent of one tenth of it, he shall perform homa with milk pudding and then offer worship as before.

87. Praṇava (Oṁ), namaḥ, Sītāpataye Rāmāya, hana, hana,hum (coat of mail), astra, (phaṭ) and in the end svāhā.[1]

88. This is nineteen-syllabled mantra and it achieves all objects. Its sage is Viśvāmitra and the metre cited is anuṣṭup.

89. The deity is Rāmabhadra, jam (?) (Om) is the bīja and namaḥ is śakti. (The nyāsa rite should be performed) duly by the syllables beginning with the mantra. Then he shall meditate as before.

90(a) The worship and other activities for the fulfilment of cherished desires, every thing in regard to this mantra is as in the case of the six-syllabled mantra.

90(b) Tāra (Om), its own bīja Kamalā (Śrīm), Rāmabhadra maheṣvāsa.

91-92. O heroic scion of Raghu's family, O great wielder of bow, Nṛpottama (O excellent king) Daśāsyāntaka (O destroyer of the ten-headed demon, māṁ rakṣa (save me). Dehi paramām me śrīyam (grant great prosperity to me). The mantra shall be one of thirtyfive syllables. Devoid of bījas this mantra is of thirtytwo syllables and it bestows fruit.

93. Its sage is Viśvāmitra, anuṣṭup is cited as the metre, the deity is Rāmabhadra, the bīja is its own and Indirā is its Śakti.

94. The knower of the mantra shall perform all rites through the words beginning with the three bījas and by means of the entire mantra. After fixing the five aṅgas he shall perform nyāsa rites of the syllables in the order.

95-96. He shall perform nyāsa rites of the mantra on the head, forehead, in the eyes, ears, cheek, nose, mouth, joints of the hands, breasts, heart, umbilicus, hips, penis, rectum and in the joints of the legs. He shall as before perform meditation, worship etc.

97. The Puraścaryā (repetition of the mantra with the homa) is for three hundred thousand times, the havana is to be

---

1. It gives another mantra of Rāma:
Oṁ namaḥ Sītāpataye Rāmāya hana hum phaṭ svāhā.
It contains nineteen syllables.

done by means of milk pudding. With great concentration he shall perform japa for a hundred thousand times after meditating on Râma as yellow-complexioned deity.

98-101. To the extent of one tenth of it, he shall perform homa with lotuses. He will become a Kubera in possession of riches.

"Oṁ hrīṁ śrīṁ śrīṁ Dāśarathaye namaḥ."[1] This is eleven-syllabled mantra. The sage, the mode of worship etc of this is as before.

Trailokyanāthāya namaḥ (obeisance unto the lord of three worlds). This is eight-syllabled mantra. In regard to this also, everything is as before i.e. the nyāsa, the meditation, the worship, etc.

Āñjaneyāya Gurave namaḥ (obeisance to Āñjaneya, the preceptor. This is a nine-syllabled mantra. Its worship is the same as before "Rāmāya namaḥ". This is a mantra with five syllables.

102-104. Its sage, meditation, worship, nay everything is the same as in the six-syllabled mantra. Rāmabhadrāya svāhā or Rāmacandrāya svāhā are mentioned. They are two separate mantras. Their sage, worship etc. is as before. Vahni (Ra) is accompanied by Śeṣa (Ā). Its head is bedecked in the moon (m). There is another single-syllabled mantra of Raghupati. It is another divine Kalpa tree. The sage is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī. Its deity is Rāma.

105-108. He shall perform Ṣaḍaṅga rites by means of mantra consisting of six long syllables.

On a lotus seat (posture) in the bower of mandāra trees on the bank of Sarayū, the dark-complexioned lord is seated in a heroic pose. He appears splendid with the mudrā of perfect knowledge. He has placed his left hand on his left thigh. He is accompanied by Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa. He surveys himself. He has the unmeasured brilliance and manmatha. He resembles pure crystal. The devotee shall think about the deity only with a desire for salvation. He shall think of the great Ātman. He shall repeat the Mantra six hundred thousand times. Everything is as in the case of six-syllabled mantra, viz the homa, deity, worship, etc.

1. It gives an eleven-syllabled mantra of Rāma : Oṁ hriṁ śrīṁ śrīṁ Dāśarathaye namaḥ.

109. Vahni (Ra) is seated on Śeṣa (ā) which is added with the end of bha (ma) with (ḥ). This mantra has only two syllables. The sage, the mode of meditation and worship is as in the case of single-syllabled mantra.

110. Tāra (Oṁ) māyā, śrī, Rāma, astra, bīja taking one of these it becomes three-syllabled one. It shall be of six varieties. It bestows all desired things.

111. Two-syllabled mantra ending with Candra or Bhadra. It is of two types and hence four-syllabled. The sage, mode of meditation, worship etc. of these is as in the case of single-syllabled mantra.

112. Tāra (Oṁ) Rāmāya huṁ phaṭ svāhā. This great mantra is of eight syllables. The sage, the mode of worship etc. is in the case of six-syllabled mantra.

113. Tāra (Oṁ), māyā (hrīm), Rāmāya namaḥ Om. This Rāma mantra of eight syllables is known as Śiva-Umā mantra. It bestowes all siddhis.

114. Sadāśiva is the sage, Gāyatrī is the metre. The deity is Śiva, Umā or Rāmacandra.

115. After performing ṣaḍaṅganyāsa with māyā (hrīm) having six long vowels or with (Oṁ) with five syllables (of the mantra) he shall meditate in the heart on the deity worshipped by gods (as follows).

116. We worship Rāma who has three eyes, who wears the crescent moon, who is excellent one, who wields trident, who has dusted his limbs with ash and who has matted hair.

117. He shall meditate on the beautiful lady. She has excellence of beauty by decorating her head with the moon. She holds noose, goad, bow and arrows and has three eyes.

118. After meditating thus, he shall perform japa for as many hundred thousand times as there are letters in the mantra. He shall perform homa with leaves of bilva tree, its fruits, or gingelly seeds, or with lotuses mixed with three sweets (Sugar, Honey and ghee).

119-121. Wealth and siddhis desired even by gods themselves come in their own way.

Tāra (Om), māyā (hrīm), Bharatāgraja Rāma (the elder brother of Bharata) manobhava klīṁ svāhā. This is a twelve-syllabled mantra which is like another divine kalpa tree. The sage is Aṅgiras, the metre is Gāyatrī, Śrī Rāma is the deity. Bhauma (hrīm) is the bīja, svāhā is the śakti. The aṅgas are conceived by the syllables classified into groups of one, one, seven, two and one letters.

122-124. Its meditation, worship etc be performed as are done in the case of six-syllabled mantra.

Oṁ namaḥ Sītāpataye Rāmāya hana hana hum phaṭ. This mantra consists of sixteen syllables. Its sage is Agastya, the metre is Bṛhatī and the deity is Śrī Rāma, aham is the bīja. Rām is the śakti. The five aṅgas are to be performed by means of syllables grouped into three, four, three, four and two syllables.

125-127. He shall perform meditation, worship and everything else as are performed in the case of six-syllabled mantra.

Tāra (Oṁ) hṛt (namaḥ) Brahmaṇyadevāya (unto one who is worthy of being served and who is favourably disposed towards Brahmins), Rāmāyākuṇṭhatejase (unto Rāma whose splendour is unobstructed) uttamaślokadhuryāya (the foremost among meritorious persons), kha (ha) Bhṛgu (s) joined with Kāmikā (ta), and unto whose foot is placed the staff of the hand (of the devotee). This mantra contains thirtytwo syllables).[1]

The sage is Śuka, the metre is anuṣṭup and the deity is Rāma.

128. By means of its fourth part and the entire mantra the expert devotee shall perform the five ancillaries. Every other thing should be performed as is done in the case of the six-syllabled mantra. The japa is done for a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it the expert devotee shall perform homa by means of milk pudding.

---

1. The mantra is given a full form in Prapañcasārasamgraha thus:
Namo Brahmaṇyadevāya Rāmāyākuṇṭhatejase /
Uttamaślokadhuryāya hastadaṇḍārpitāṅghraye //

129-131. The mantra which has been accomplished gives worldly pleasures, salvation and causes destructions of sins. In the beginning one should utter Dāśarathaye vidmahe (we realise the son of Daśaratha). Then one should say Sītāvallabhāya dhīmahi (we meditate on the lover of Sītā), tanno Rāmaḥ pracodayāt (so Rāma may urge us). This is called Rāmagāyatrī.[1] It bestows the benefit of every desired object.

132. Padmā (śrīṁ) Sītāyai svāhā. This is the six-syllabled mantra. This sage is Vālmīki, Gāyatrī is the metre, goddess Sītā is the deity. Śrīm is the bīja, svāhā is the śakti.

133-135. He shall conceive aṅgas with the bīja joined with six long vowels. Thereafter, he shall meditate on Sītā the great goddess, worshipped by the three worlds. She has the lustre of the molten gold. She holds two lotuses in her hands. Her body shines in divine lustre of good jewels and ornaments. She is of auspicious nature. She has diverse kinds of garments. Her face shines like the moon. Her eyes resemble the lotus. She is glancing at the meritorious scion of the family of Raghu. She is worthy of seating herself in a splendid couch. She is the goddess of the six attributes.

136. After meditating thus, the repeater of the mantra shall perform as many hundred thousand japas as there are syllables in the mantra. He shall perform homa with full blown lotuses. He shall worship the deity seated in the pedestal previously mentioned.

137-139. He shall conceive of the mūrti (manifested form) by mahāmantra and invoke Jānakī therein. After worshipping Rāma on the right hand side and the son of the wind (i.e. Hanumān)in front he shall worship Lakṣmaṇa behind. The worlds of the ancillaries are in the six corners. He shall worship the chief ministers on the leaves and the guardians of quarters externally. He shall worship thunderbolt and become the lord of all siddhis. In order to gain control over kings he shall perform homa by jāti flowers smeared with sandal paste.

---

1. The Verse gives Rāma-Gāyatri thus:
Dāśarathaye vidmahe Sītāvallabhāya dhimahi tanno Rāmaḥ pracodayāt

140. He shall obtain wealth and grain if he performs homa with lotuses, he will keep the universe subservient if he performs homa with blue lotuses. For the acquisition of property and glory he shall perform homa by the leaves of bilva tree. For the purpose of subduing ailments he shall perform homa with the dūrvā grass.

141. Of what avail is much talk ? Good fortune, wealth, sons, grandsons, great happiness, grains and salvation shall be obtained by propitiating Sītā.

142-143. Śakra (la) along with the moon (m), obeisance unto Lakṣmaṇa. This mantra is of seven syllables. Its sage is Agastya, the metre Gāyatrī and the deity the great hero Lakṣmaṇa. Lam and the word namaḥ are the bīja and the śakti. He shall perform ṣaḍaṅganyāsa rite by means of bīja, six long vowels.

144-145. He shall meditate on Lakṣmaṇa who has two arms whose body is handsome and resplendent like gold, whose eyes resemble lotuses, who holds bow and arrows in his hands and whose mind is attached and devoted to the service of Rāma. After meditation he shall perform japa as many hundred thousand times as there are syllables in the mantra. The repeater of the mantra shall perform homa to the extent of one tenth of it with milk pudding mixed with honey. He shall worship in the pedestal of Rāma.

146-147. His worship is similar to the worship of Rāma. Indeed he bestows all siddhis. If a man desires for the invariable success in the worship of Rāma he must respectfully worship Lakṣmaṇa. There are many ways for worshipping Śrī Rāmacandra which bestow all siddhis.

148. Auspicious propitiation of Lakṣmaṇa should always be performed by the devotee of Rāma also. With great concentration they shall worship him eight hundred or eight thousand times.

149-151. The Mantra of Lakṣmaṇa must be repeated by those with alertness who are desirous of salvation. If the people repeat the mantra of Rāma before repeating the mantra of Lakṣmaṇa, they will never be able to achieve siddhi. At every step they will have to face loss and destruction. He who continuously repeats the mantra of Lakṣmaṇa in a lonely place shall be liberated from all sins. He will attain all desires. This mantra assures immediate victory. It is the sole means of regaining kingdoms.

152. One shall with great concentration repeat the mantra for a hundred thousand times in order to regain the lost kingdom. There is no doubt that ere long, he will attain his own lost kingdom.

153. With the mind and intellect not dwelling on anything else, one shall perform the japa of the mantra fifty thousand times while meditating on Rāma crowned in Ayodhyā. He shall regain his lost kingdom.

154. After respectfully meditating on Lakṣmaṇa liberated from the binding nose of serpent, the devotee shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. He will be released from fetters.

155. After meditating on Lakṣmaṇa who has been relieved of pain through the medicinal herbs brought by the son of the wind-god, the devotee shall perform the japa of the mantra. Certainly he wins over premature death.

156. After meditating on (Lakṣmaṇa) who slays Meghanāda he shall perform the japa of the mantra for a hundred thousand times. He shall quickly defeat even the invincible hosts of enemies.

157. After meditating on Lakṣmaṇa mentally inclined to chop off the nose of Śūrpaṇakhā, one shall repeat the japa of the mantra for a thousand times. He shall defeat even lord Indra and others.

158. After attending one's mind to Lakṣmaṇa an earnest devotee to the lotus-like feet of Rāma, one should repeat the mantra in a lonely place for a hundred thousand times, then one gets rid of serious ailments.

159-160. One shall duly worship everyday with a hundred eight lotus flowers free from holes (in the petals) for three months after without taking food (i.e. observing fast) and repeat the mantra seven thousand times. He shall offer milk pudding along with sugar as offering. He is, then, liberated from the sickness of leprosy.

161. One shall observe fast and remain in a lonely place for six months and observe these rites. He shall be liberated from consumptive sickness. True, it is undoubtedly true.

162. With great concentration one shall charge the water thrice with this mantra either in the morning or during the three junctions (dawn, midday and dusk) and drink it everyday. He becomes free from all ailments.

163. His poverty is vanquished. He becomes comparable to Kubera. Never shall he suffer from the vitiating effect of poison etc.

164. One shall wash one's face everyday with the water, charged with the mantra. He shall conquer all fatal sicknesses and ailments that arise in the mouth, eyes, etc.

165-167. By drinking water charged with the mantra he shall certainly vanquish the ailments of the stomach. He shall make the image of Lakṣmaṇa with great devotion; he shall make a gift of it in accordance with the right procedure. There is no doubt that he gets free from all ailments. A person seeking a virgin, a person inclined to marry a girl free from blemishes shall meditate on (Lakṣmaṇa) and repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of lotuses. There is no doubt that very soon he will attain the virgin desired by him.

168-169. After meditating on Lakṣmaṇa initiated in the mantra of miraculous weapons and adhering steadfastly to the holy rites he shall perform the japa of the mantra for three months in accordance with the injunction. He shall have control over his senses and offer pūjās, and repeat the mantra seven thousand times. The man becomes expert in the principles of all lores.

170. By meditating on (Lakṣmaṇa) who has performed miraculous acts of exploits in the course of excellent sacrifice of sage (Viśvāmitra), the devotee shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. He is liberated from great danger.

171. After performing the daily rites one shall, with purity, repeat the mantra three times everyday. He shall be liberated from all sins and go to the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

172-174. The repeater of the mantra shall be duly initiated. He shall be endowed with good qualities and be devoid of sins. He shall strictly abide by his conventional duties. He shall have control over the sense organs. The housholder shall conquer his sense organs. He who does not wish for worldly pleasures and worship the lord without any personal desire shall burn off both merits and demerits. His mind shall be free from impurities. Without return from there he shall attain the permanent region. If the worshipper has desires, he attains the desired objects, enjoys all cherished pleasures of his mind and becomes a jātismara (one who can remember one's previous births). Remaining thus for a long time he attains Viṣṇu's region.

175-177. Nidrā (bha) accompanied by the moon (m). Afterwards Bharatāya namaḥ. This is the seven-syllabled mantra. Its sage etc, as well as the procedure of its worship are as before. Baka (stork) (sa) accompanied by the moon (m). Śatrughnāya namaḥ. This is the seven-syllabled mantra of Śatrughna. It bestows all desired siddhis.

CHAPTER SEVENTYFOUR

Sanat Kumāra Said :

1. Now, I shall mention the mantras[1] of Hanumān. They are the bestowers of all desired things. O leading brahmin, by propitiating them men are able to perform tasks similar to those performed by Hanumān.

2-7. The fourteenth vowel is joined with indu (m) and gagana (ha) is associated with bhaga (e); ha sa pha agni (ra) niśādhīśa (m) joined together give the second bīja; sa pha adorned with bhaga (e) and bindu are said to be the third bīja; viyat (ha) bhṛgu (sa) agni (ra) with bindu become the fourth one, the fifth one is bhaga (e) with bindu, viyat (ha),

1. The Verses give the seed mantra thus:
Haum hsfrem khftem hsrem hskhfrem. They are known to be Kūṭa mantra. When the above syllables are joined with Hanumate namaḥ the mautra becomes twelve-syllabled one.

bhṛgu (sa) pha and agni (ra), manu (au) adorned with indu (m) h and s, then Hanumān in the dative and ending in hṛdaya (namaḥ) is the sixth. This is the great mantra. It has twelve syllables. Its sage is Rāmacandra, the deity is Hanumān, the metre is Jagatī, the bīja is the sixth one and the second is the śakti. The six ancillaries are through the six bījas. The devotee shall perform nyāsa (fixation) of syllables on the head, in the forehead, eyes, mouth, throat, arms, heart, belly, umbilical region, penis, knees and feet.

8. He shall fix six bījas and two words on the head, forehead, mouth, heart umbilicus things, thighs, calves and the feet.

9-10. One shall worship and meditate on Hanumān born of the womb of Añjanī, lord of monkeys, who resembles a crore of rising suns, who causes the excitement and the agitation of the whole universe who is always engaged in the meditation on the feet of Śrī Rāma, who is worshipped by those whose leader is Sugrīva, who is the son of Maruta (the wind god) and who terrifies the Rākṣasas through his loud voice.

11. After meditating thus with full conquest over the sense-organs, the devotee shall perform japa for twelve thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with grains mixed with milk, curds and ghee.

12-16. The mūrti shall be conceived by the mūlamantra. Invoking the deity therein it shall be worshipped through pādya (offering for the feet) and other offerings in the previously mentioned pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu. He shall worship the ancillaries in the filaments. He shall worship the tips of the petals after repeating the names of Hanumān viz. a devotee of Rāma, one of brilliance, king of monkeys, one of strength, the remover of the Mountain Droṇa, one who worships the ridges of Meru, the sun in the southern quarter and the destroyer of all obstacles. Thereafter, the devotee shall worship the following in the petals viz—Sugrīva, Aṅgada, Nīla, Jāmbavān, Nala, Suṣeṇa Dvivida and Mainda. He shall worship the guardians of the worlds (the quarters). After worshipping thunderbolt etc (he shall find that) the mantra has been realized.

17. If a man performs japa of the mantra nine hundred times every night for a period of ten days his fears arising from kings and enemies shall perish.

18. He shall perform one thousand homas with the fruits of pomegranate, mango and banana and feed twentytwo pure brahmin religious students.

19. If this rite is performed thus, the various harassing calamities from goblins, poison, evil planets and diseases as well as adverse planets and demons perish at the same instant.

20-21. The water charged by the mantra hundred and eight times is destructive of poison. If there is fever due to affliction arising from goblins, epileptic fits and Kṛtyās (witches) the patient must be angrily hit with the bhasma or water charged with the same mantra. The man will be freed from fever in three days. He shall attain great happiness.

22. By taking in medicine or even water charged by the mantras one shall be able to dispel all ailments. He shall instantaneously be happy.

23. If the repeater of the mantra goes to fight after smearing his limbs with the bhasma charged with the mantras or after taking in water charged with the mantra he will not be afflicted by the groups of weapons.

24. They would be caused by weapons, swelling due to wounds, or swelling caused by spiders becomes undoubtedly healed, if smeared with the bhasma charged with the mantras repeated thrice.

25-26. The devotee shall repeat mantra from sunset to sunrise for seven days. He shall take Bhasma and a nail to the threshold of his enemies. Without being observed he shall fix the nail therein after repeating the mantra (once again). (As a result of this) the enemies will begin to hate one another and ere long they will flee.

27-31. If the repeater of the mantra gives anyone, the bhasma, water or sandal paste charged with this mantra and mixed with his food or other things he shall be like a servant to him (the repeater of the mantra). Cruel wild animals shall become subservient like this.

The devotee shall take the root of a Karañja tree (Galedupa arborea) growing in the North Eastern region. He shall make the image of Hanumān of the size of the thumb, thereby.

The rite of Prāṇapratiṣṭhā (instilling life therein) shall be performed and the deity worshipped with saffron etc. Repeating the mantra, the devotee shall install it at the doorway facing the house. Never shall any affliction due to evil planets, black magic, sickness, fire, poison, thieves and kings, happen. The house begins to flourish with wealth and progeny and continues thus for a long time.

32-34. In a forest, during the night, the devotee shall prepare with care the image of the enemy by means of bhasma or clay. The name of the enemy shall be written in the heart (of the image). He shall perform all the rites ending with prāṇapratiṣṭhā. Repeating the mantra he shall split the image by means of weapons. At the end of the mantra the devotee shall utter the name of the enemy and the words chindhi (cut) bhindhi (pierce) and māraya (kill). At the end he shall bite his lips with his teeth and press the image in his palms. Leaving the image there he shall go home. Doing thus for seven days he shall undoubtedly kill his enemy.

35-37. With his tresses loose and dishevelled the devotee shall sit facing the south in the cremation ground at night. He shall perform homa by means of mustard, salt, flowers and fruits of dhattūra, nails, hair, poison, the feathers of crow, owl and vulture or the twigs of śleṣmāntaka and akṣa trees, for three hundred times. Performing the rite thus for seven days he shall slay his haughty enemy.

38. The devotee shall fearlessly sit in the cremation ground at night for three days and repeat the mantra six hundred times. Thereupon a vampire will rise up and foretell future auspicious and inauspicious things.

39-40. He will behave as though he is a servant. He will carry out what the aspirant tells him. The devotee shall put bhasma in water and charge it with the mantra repeated a thousand times. He shall do thus for three days. Thereafter, he shall sprinkle that water on images and dolls whether large or small. There is no doubt that there will be movement therein, thanks to the powers of mantra.

41-44. The devotee shall prepare an image of Hanumān by means of Black gram dough soaked in oil over a plank on the eighth or fourteenth day in the lunar fortnight or on Tuesday or Sunday. It shall be beautiful. It must have all the characteristics. The devotee shall be pure in mind (while making the image). He shall place an oil lamp on the left side and a ghee-lamp on the right side. Repeating the mūla mantra he shall invoke the deity. The knower of mantra shall perform the rite of prāṇapratiṣṭhā and offer pādya etc. He shall worship the idol with red sandals, flowers, saffron etc.

45-47. After offering incense and lamp he shall offer naivedya (food offering) baked pie, cooked rice, vegetables, sweet-meats. Fried vaḍā etc shall be offered along with ghee repeating the mūlamantra. The knower of mantra shall take twentyseven betel leaves. He shall keep it in three sets of nine each which he shall offer along with nuts repeating the mūlamantra. After worshipping thus, the knower of the mantra shall repeat the mantra a thousand times.

48. The intelligent devotee shall perform the rite of āratrika (waving the light) with camphor. He shall pray in various ways and submit his desire. He shall then duly dismiss the deity ritualistically.

49. He shall feed seven brahmins with naivedya of the cooked rice. The betel leaves offered to the deity shall also be distributed among them.

50. The intelligent devotee shall give them monetary gifts according to his capacity and bid farewell to them. Thereafter, he shall silently partake of the food himself in the company of his relatives.

51. He shall lie on the bare ground that night and observe celibacy. He who performs thus shall certainly attain all desires ere long, thanks to the grace of the lord of monkeys.

52-54. The devotee shall paint a picture of Hanumān on the ground and write the mantra in front of it. The name of the person to be released shall be written in the Accusative case. He shall write Vimocaya, Vimocaya (release, release). First he shall wipe it off with the left hand and then write again. Thus he shall write it and wipe it off one hundred and eight times. If he performs like this he is liberated from the prison quickly. He shall perform other rites also, similarly by inscribing (the mantra) on the tender sprouts.

55. Homa for captivating persons is to be performed by means of mustard seeds, in those of hatred with Hayamāra seeds or saffron, any fuel, pepper or jīrā (cummini seeds).

56-62. In fever homa shall be with dūrvā, guḍūci curds, milk or ghee. In shooting pain, the homa is performed with the twigs of Karañja and vātari soaked in oil. Or he shall perform homa with nirguṇḍi twigs with oil smeared strenously over them. For the purposes of good fortune, homa shall be with sandal Indralocana or cloves. In order to secure garments, homa is performed with fragrant flowers, in order to secure grains homa is with the respective grains. If one performs homa with the dust from the feet of his enemy along with the mixture of white mustard and salt for seven nights, the enemy goes to the abode of Yama (i.e. dies). With grains grains are acquired and the flourishing. Cooked rice is obtained through homa with cooked rice. For securing prosperity in buffalows and cows homa shall be performed with gingelly seeds, ghee, milk and honey. Of what use is much talk? Whether it is a case of poison, sickness, suppression, agitation, fascination, kiiling, disputes, benumbing, game of dice, fear from goblins, difficult situation, attracting persons, war wounds, divine calamity, bondage and freedom, in all these cases this Mantra, when practised shall accord welfare. This is certain. Now I shall explain Hanumān Yantra (Mystic diagram of Hanumān) which accords all sorts of siddhis.

63-68. He shall draw three circles in the from of a tail. In the middle the name of the Sādhya (the person intended) shall be written. It shall be entered in the bīja of pāśa (ām). He shall make eight petals above and inscribe (hum) on the leaves. After drawing the tooth externally he shall inscribe a square exterior to it In one of the lines of the square he shall draw the tridents. He shall write saum, bīja in the eight vajra (sides) of the bhūpura (external squares). After drawing the goad (krom) in the corners he shall envelope it with mālāmantra (garland of mantra). All these shall be enveloped by the three circles of Yantra This Yantra can be drawn on a rock, a plank or a cloth, a palm leaf or the birch bark by means of the pigment rocanā, musk or kuṁkuma. After drawing the yantra, the devotee shall observe fast and be celibate and instal the prāṇa (vital breath) of the monkey. He shall worship it in accordance with the injunctions.

69. The learned man shall wear the yantra (amulet) for the purpose of subduing the miseries. This Talisman is destructive of all harassments such as pestilence, fever, black magic, etc.

70. If it is worn by women or children it is very alluring to the minds of the people. By its mere sight, it is destructive of goblins, witches and ghosts.

Mālā Mantra[1]

71-98. Now, I shall mention the garland of mantra. Tāra (om) vāk (aim), then śrīm, māyā (hrīm) with three long syllables and five kūṭas as mentioned before (haum hafrem khafrem hsraum hskhfrem etc.); then Oṁ namaḥ Hanumate (obeisance into Hanumān whose exploits are manifest, ākrāntadiṅmaṇḍala (one who has stepped over the zones of the quarters), Yaśovitānadhavalīkṛtajagattraya (one who has whitened the three worlds by means of his fame), vajradeha (of admantine body) jvaladagni sūryakoṭisamaprabha, (one who is resplendent

---

1. Verses 71-98 give the mālāmantra of Hanumān which is a little different from the one given in Prapañcasārasaṁgraha, pp. 533-534.

The Mālāmantra runs thus:

Om aim śrīm hrīm haum hsfrem khfrem hsram hskhfrem namo Hanumate prakaṭaparākrama ākrāntadiṅmaṇḍalayaśovitāna dhavalikṛtajagattritayavajradenajvaladagnisūryakoṭisamaprabha tanuruha Rudrāvatāra Laṅkāpuridahana Sitāśvāsana vāyusuta Añjanāgarbhasambhūta Śri Rāma Lakṣmaṇānandakara sainyaprākāra Sugrivasakhya Bālinibarhaṇakāraṇa Droṇaparvatotpāṭana Aśokavanavithidāruṇa Akṣakumāracchedana Vanarakṣākarasaṁūhavibhañjana Brahmāstra Brahmaśaktigrāsa Laṣmaṇaśaktibhedanivāraṇa maṇḍalagrasana Meghanādahomavidhvaṁsana Indrajidtvadhakāraṇa Sitārakṣaka Rākṣasisaṅghavidāraṇa Kumbhakarṇādivadhaparāyaṇa Śrī Kāmabhaktitatpara Samudravyomadrumalaṅghana mahāsāmarthya mahātejaḥpuñjavirājamāna svāmijanasampādita Arjunasaṁyugasahāya Kumārabrahmacārin gambhiraśabdodaya dakṣiṇāpathamārtaṇḍa Meruparvatapiṭhikācārya mama sarvagrahavināśana sarvāpattinivāraṇa sarvaduṣṭanibarhaṇa sakalamantramāpadām sarvāpattinivāraṇa sarvaduṣṭanibarhaṇa sarvavyādhibhayanivāraṇa sarvaśatruchedana mama parasya tribhuvanapuṁstri napuṁsātmakaṁ sarvajīvajātaṁ vaśaya vaśaya mamājñākārakaṁ sampādaya sampādaya nānā nāmadheyān sarvān rajñaḥ parivārān as crores of blazing fires and suns), tanuruha Rudrāvatāra (in whose hair Rudras have incarnated). Laṅkāpuridahana (one who has burnt the city of Laṅkā). Daśagrīva śirāḥkṛtāntaka (one who can be death into the head of the ten-headed) sītāśvāsana (one who gives consolation to Sītā) Vāyusuta (son of Vāyu), Añjanāgarbhasambhūta (one who was born of the womb of Añjanā), Śri Rāma Lakṣmaṇānvita (one accompanied by Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa), nandantikarasainyaprākāra (one who has gladdened the rampart of the army), Sugrīvasakhyakāraṇa (one who is the cause of alliance with Sugrīva), Bālinibarhaṇakāraṇa (one who is the cause of slaying Bāli) Droṇaparvatotpāṭana (One who has uprooted the mountain Droṇa). Aśokavanavīthidāruṇa (One who has appeared as terrible in the grove of Aśoka Trees), Akṣakumāra-cchedana (one who has slain prince Akṣa), Vanarakṣākara: samūhavibhañjana (one who breaks, shatters the group of guards over the park), Brahmāstra, Brahmāśaktigrāsa (one who swallows the weapon of Brahmā) Lakṣmaṇaśaktibhedanirvāṇa (one who has saved Lakṣmaṇa from the after-effects of being pierced by the Śakti), Viśalyoṣadhisaṁnayana (one who has brought the medicinal herbs called viśalya to remove arrows without being fatal when extracted), bāloditabhānumaṇḍalagrasana (one who swallows the disc of the early rising sun), Meghanāda-homavidhvaṁsana (One who has destroyed the homa of Meghanāda), Indrajidvadhakāraṇa (one who is the cause of slaying Indrajit). Sītārakṣaka (the rescuer of Sītā, Rākṣaṣī-saṅghavidāraṇa (one who has routed the band of she-demons), Kumbhakarṇādivadhaparāyaṇa (one who is interested in slaying Kumbhakarṇa etc), Śri Rāmabhaktitatpara (one who is devoted to Śri Rāma), Samudravyomadrumalaṅghana (One who has crossed ocean over the trees through the sky), mahāsā-marthya mahatejaḥpuñjavirājamāna (One who is greatly powerful and shines with a great mass of brilliance), Svāmi vacanasampāditārjunasaṁyugasahāya (one who has helped sevakān kuru kuru, sarvaśastrāstraviṣāṇi vidhvaṁsaya vidhvaṁsaya hrīm hrīm hrīm ho ho ho ehi ehi hsphrem hsram khfrem hsfrem hum sarvaśatrūn hana hana parabalāni prarasainyān kṣobhaya kṣobhaya mama sarva kāryajātam sādhaya sādhaya sarvaduṣṭadurjanamukhāni kīlaya kīlaya ghe ghe ghe hum hum hum hā hā hā svāhā.

---

Arjuna in the war at the instance of his master), Kumārabrahmacārin (one who has observed celibacy from boyhood), gambhīra (grave one), udayadakṣiṇāpathamārtaṇḍa (rising sun of the Southern region), Meruparvatapīṭhikārcana (who worships the pedestal of the Meru mountain). At the end of every mantra 'me' (mine) shall be uttered. O preceptor, destroyer of my evil planets, dispeller of my fevers, destroyer of my poison, remover of my adversities, slayer of all wicked persons, despeller of the fear of sickness, slayer of enemies, make me the controller of all burning beings, masculine, feminine and neuter, in the three worlds. Get me, Get me one who does according to my behest. Make, make all attendants of the king, of various names, my servants. Destroy, destroy the persons of all weapons and missiles, lajjā (hrīm) endowed with three long syllables.

Hā, hā, hā, ehi, ehi (come, come). The five-syllabled mantra in the reverse order. Kill, kill the enemies. Agitate, agitate the enemies, armies and forces. Accomplish, accomplish all my activities. Nail, nail the mouths of all wicked and evil men, ghe three times, hum three times, phaṭ three times, hām three times. This mantra ends with vahnipriyā (svāhā). It is called mūlamantra. It bestows the desires of everyone. This is a mantra of five hundred and eightyeight syllables. It achieves the desires of everyone.

99-101. If this mantra is uttered at the time of great fear or great calamity it destroys misery. Excepting the six Kūṭas (peaks) of the twelve syllabled mantra as well as the first bīja, the mantra of five peaks is the bestower of all desires. Its sage is Rāmacandra, Gāyatrī is the metre, Hanumān is the deity, its utility is for the acquisition of everything. With the five bījas and with the entire mantra one shall perform the rites of ṣaḍaṅganyāsa (the fixation of the six ancillaries).

102-103. The first one is Hanumān, then Rāmadūta (the messenger of Rāma), Lakṣmaṇaprāṇadātā (the restorer of the life of Lakṣmaṇa), the son of Añjanī, the destroyer of the sorrow of Sītā, the destroyer of the palace of Laṅkā. These six names are prefixed with the bījas and used in the dative case. Meditation, worship etc. should be done as before.

104. Om aim śrīm, māyā (hrīm) is attached with five Kūṭas (previously mentioned). This mantra contains eleven syllables. It is the bestower of all siddhis.

105. The meditation, worship, etc. of this mantra also are considered to be the same as before. The mantra, if propitiated duly is the bestower of all desires.

106-107. Obeisance unto the lord (the infinite and the mooncrested) son of Añjanī, unto one who is very strong, śvāhā. This is the mantra of eighteen syllables.[1] He who is named Īśvara is the sage, the metre is anuṣṭup. Hanumān, son of the wind god, is the deity.

108-109. Ham is the bīja and svāhā is the śakti, namaḥ unto Āñjaneya, śiraḥ (svāhā) unto Rudramūrti. In the śikhā vaṣaṭ unto vāyuputra (son of the wind god). In the coat of mail (hum) unto agnigarbha (once conceived in the womb by Agni), netram (vauṣaṭ) unto the messenger of Rāma. The astram (phaṭ) is mentioned unto Brahmāstra.

110. One shall remember Māruti (Hanumān) who resembles molten gold, who is the remover of fear, who has kept his folded hands in reverence (or who has kept his palms joined unto the dispeller of fear) whose face is brightly illuminated by the movement of ear-rings and whose eyes are like lotuses.

111. After meditating thus he shall perform japa for ten thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with gingelly seeds. He shall worship in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu in the manner indicated before.

112. The devotee shall conquer the sense-organs and take food only at night. He shall perform japa everyday for a hundred and eight times. There is no doubt that he will be liberated from all minor ailments.

113-118. For the cure of great ailments he shall perform japa everyday for a thousand times. After meditating on the monkey who kills the group of Rākṣasas and destroys sins, the devotee shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. Ere long, he will conquer his enemies.

---

1. The mantra of Hanumān runs thus: Namo Bhagavate āñjaneyāya mahābalāya svāhā. This contains eighteen syllables.

Remembering the monkey who unites Rāma with Sugriva, the devotee shall perform japa ten thousand times. He shall be able to make alliance between two warring elephants. After meditating on him, burning Laṅkā, the intelligent devotee shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. Everyday he shall be able to burn his enemies.

At the time of setting out on a journey, he shall meditate on Hanūmān and repeat the mantra. He who sets out thus, shall accomplish his task and desired object and ere long, return to his house.

He who worships Hanumān in his house and is interested in repeating the mantra obtains good health, prosperity and glory as well as splendour devoid of any harassment. This mantra, if remembered, shall save one from tigers and thieves in the forest.

119. At the time of going to bed he shall remember the mantra without directing his intellect towards anything else. He shall never have the fear from bad dreams and thieves.

120. The sky along with Indu (Moon) (ham), Hanumate Rudrātmakāya (unto Hanumān who is identical with Rudra. The coat (hum) and the astra (phaṭ) at the end. This great mantra of twelve syllables causes the eight siddhis (special achievements).

121. Its sage is Rāmacandra, Jagatī is the metre. The deity is Hanūmān. The bīja is the first one, Hum is mentioned as śakti.

122-125. He shall perform ṣaḍaṅga rite by means of the bīja having the six long syllables. After meditating on Hanumān who is rushing at Rāvaṇa after uprooting a huge mountain, who is ruddy and pink like the lac juice, who is terrible, who is camparable to Kāla the annihilator and Yama, who is equal to a blazing fire, who is victorious, whose lustre is like that of a crore of suns, who is surrounded by great heroes, Aṅgada and others, who has the form of lord Rudra, who makes a loud noise in the battle, stays behind and who has the form of a devotee of Śiva (after meditating on Hanūmān thus), the devotee shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times.

To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with grains mixed with milk, curds and ghee.

126. The worship of Hanūmān should be performed after conceiving the mūrti by means of the mūlamantra, in the previously mentioned pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu and accompanied by Vimalā and others.

127. By means of meditation alone it is undoubtedly possible for men to attain siddhi. Henceforth, I shall mention the means with a desire for the welfare of the worlds.

128. The means of realization of Hanūmān is holy. It is destructive of great sins. This is the greatest of secrets in the world. It is the most efficacious and it brings about siddhis quickly.

129-131. Thanks to his grace, the repeater of the mantra shall be the victor of the three worlds. He shall take bath early in the morning and sit on the kuśa grass mat on the banks of the river. He shall perform every rite such as prāṇāyāma, ṣaḍaṅga etc. by means of the mūla mantra. He shall offer eight handfuls of flowers and meditate on Rāma accompanied by Sītā. He shall keep pasted ordinary sandal in a copper vessel as well as an eight-petalled lotus with filaments. With a rod he shall write therein.

132. He shall write the mantra in the pericarp. The lord of the monkeys shall be invoked therein. After conceiving the idol with the mūlamantra and meditation on the deity he shall offer pādya, etc.

133-134. He shall offer scents, fragrant flowers, etc as naivedya with the mūlamantra. He shall perform the ṣaḍaṅga rites in the filaments and worship the following in the petals—viz. :—Sugrīva, Lakṣmaṇa, Aṅgada, Nala, Nīla, Jāmbavān, Kumuda and Lord Keśarin.

135. Thereafter, he shall worship the guardians of the quarters as well as the thunderbolt etc. When the mantra has been realized thus, the repeater of the mantra shall achieve all desires in his soul.

136. The expert aspirant shall select a proper spot on the banks of a river, or in the forest or in a lonely mountain and practise the mantra.

137-138. He shall conquer his diet, breath, speech and the sense-organs. After performing the rite of digbandhana (fixation of the quarters) etc along with nyāsa, meditation etc. and the worship as before, he shall perform the japa of this royal mantra. After performing japa for a hundred thousand times he shall find out an auspicious day and perform the great worship.

139. His mind should be fully concentrated. He shall meditate soundly on the son of the Wind God. Day and night he shall perform japa until the vision of the deity is possible.

140. After considering the aspirant steady, the delighted son of the Wind God appears before the aspirant at night.

141. After granting the desired boon to the aspirant the lord of the monkeys vanishes. After securing the boon the leading aspirant shall sport in his own happiness.

142. Indeed, this means of realization (sādhanā) is very meritorious. It has been revealed with a desire for the benefit of the worlds. It is a mysterious secret. It is difficult of access even to Devas.

143-144. He shall try to realize and practise other ceremonial rites as well that may be beneficial to himself. The sky is united with Indu (ham). Afterwards pavana-nandana is used in the dative pavanānandanāya svāhā. This mantra of ten syllables is the bestower of all desires. Its sage etc. are as mentioned before.

145-147. One shall meditate on Hanumān as follows : He is hastening to conquer Rāvaṇa in the battle. On seeing the great hero Lakṣmaṇa fallen in the battle-field he has risen up immediately. In order to uplift the heavy mountain he has generated great anger within himself. He has assumed a terrible and huge form that pervades the whole cosmic egg. He shakes the three worlds with proud utterances of "Hā Hā".

148. He shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. The intelligent devotee shall perform homa as before to the extent of one tenth of it. The mode of worship of this mantra is in the manner mentioned before.

149. When a mantra has been realized thus, the repeater of the mantra shall achieve his own benefit. The practice and realisation of this excellent mantra is a great secret.

150-151. This should be well preserved among the tantras. It should not be imparted to anyone and everyone.

The devotee shall get up in the Brahmamuhūrta (i.e. within an hour and a half before dawn). He shall, with great purity, perform the daily routine activities and go to the river. He shall take bath. He shall invoke the sacred water in eight ways. Repeating the mūlamantra he shall sprinkle twelve times.

152-155. After performing ablution, etc. he shall sit on the banks of the Gaṅgā or on a mountain or in the forest after selecting an excellent spot. The pūraka (inhalation) shall be performed by means of the first syllables (i.e. vowels) such as "g" etc. The Kumbhaka (Retention of breath) shall be done by means of the five principal classes of consonants (i.e. from ka to ma) and the recaka (exhalation) shall be practiced by means of the syllables beginning with "ya". The devotee shall perform prāṇāyāma rites thus and then the purification rites etc. of bhūtas and the fixation of the pedestal etc. Then he shall meditate on the lord of monkeys and worship him in the manner mentioned before. With great respect the sādhaka (aspirant) shall repeat every day the mantra for ten thousand times. On the seventh day he shall perform the greatest pūjā.

156-157. The repeater of the mantras shall perform japa of the mantra with the mind in full concentration both day and night. Certainly when the third portion of the night is left (that is two-third of the night has passed off), the son of the Wind-God grants the devotee fearlessness and approaches him. The lord of monkeys gives unto the aspirant the boon of his choice.

158-161. There is no doubt in this. Instantaneously he attains learning, wealth, kingdom or the destruction of his enemies. He will enjoy all pleasures in this world. Collect immediately the pair of vāyu (yam, yam) utter Hanumate, then after the word phala add pha kriya hā attached with netra (au) and kāmika (ta), then after the word dhag utter dhag and then the word āyurāsva, then lohita (pa), Garuḍa (kha) heti phaṭ.[1] This mantra consists of twentyfive syllables. Its sage etc. are as

1. The mantra after combination of all the syllables runs thus:
yaṁ yaṁ Hanumate phala phakriyā hauta dhag dhag āyurāsva pa kha heti phaṭ.

mentioned before. The monkey chief Hanumān removes the ailment of enlargement of the spleen.

162-163. Hanumān, the remover of the sickness of enlargement of the spleen, is the deity. A betel leaf should be placed over the belly of the patient suffering from the enlargement of the spleen. It shall be bandaged with a cloth turning round eight times. Thereafter the excellent aspirant shall throw over it a bit of bamboo-manna and remember the monkey.

164-165. He shall take a twig from the Badari (Jejube) tree and warm it in fire made of wild flax for seven times with this mantra. With that twig he shall strike the bamboo-manna kept over the belly for seven times. Certainly the ailment of the enlargement of the spleen shall vanish.

Mantra to release a prisoner :

166-168. Tāra (oṁ) namo Bhagavate Āñjaneyāya shall be uttered (oṁ obeisance to Lord Āñjaneya) amukasya sṛṅkhalām troṭaya troṭaya (break, break the fetters of so and so) bandhamokṣaṁ kuru kuru (release, release the bondage). This mantra ends with svāhā. Its sage is Īśvara. The metre is anuṣṭup. The deity is Hanumān, the son of the Wind and the liberator of fetters. Hanumān is the bīja, svāhā is the śakti and its utility is the liberation from bondage.

169-172. He shall conceive the aṅgas (ancillaries) by means of the bija along with six long syllables and vahni (fire) (ram). He shall meditate on the monkey who has golden complexion, who wears ear rings, who bears in his left hand the śūla (spear) that pierces the enemies and who bears the pure axe in the other (i.e. right hand). After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with the tender shoots of the Mango tree. Its mode of worship is as before. The man, imprisoned in a great jail shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. He shall be quickly liberated from the prison. He shall be certainly happy. I shall mention the yantra (mystic Diagram) regarding this. It is auspicious and conducive to liberation from bondage.

173. Within the eight petals a hexagon shall be drawn with the name of the object sought after, inscribed therein in the six corners he shall write the word Śrī Āñjaneyāya (unto the glorious son of Añjanā).

174-176. In the eight petals he shall write Oṁ Vātu Vātu. After drawing the excellent yantra with gorocanā (yellow pigment taken from cow) and saffron he shall wear it on his head and repeat the mantra ten thousand times for the purpose of liberation from bondage. After drawing this yantra on sand, the knower of the mantra shall wipe it off with his right hand. He shall do this every day and continue for forty days. When this is performed, the repeater of the mantra is liberated from the great jail.

177-179. Gaganam (ha), jvalana (ra), sākṣi (la) markaṭa (monkeys) then toya (vam) twice, saśeṣe, markaṭe (te), parimuñcati, muñcati (leaves, leaves) then śṛṅkhalakām (fetters).

This is the mantra with twenty-four syllables. He shall write this on the right hand and then remove it with the left. The learned devotee shall repeat the mantra hundred and eight times. There is no doubt that within three times seven days the man in bondage will be liberated.

180. Its sage etc. are as before. The worship and other rites shall be performed as before. The mantra is to be repeated a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of auspicious articles.

181. The devotee shall draw the beautiful form of the monkey chiefon a good cloth in the shape of a tail. A pointed dagger shall be the pen. He shall draw with the gandhāṣṭakas (eight fragrant substances).

182-184. In its middle he shall write the eighteen-syllabled mantra along with the name of the enemy. If this mantra is repeated and the cloth (in which it is written) is tied round the head, the king conquers hosts of his enemies certainly by force of his sheer vision. During the lunar and solar eclipse this mantra should be written on the emblem. The knower of the mantras shall take the emblem and keep it from the beginning to the end of the eclipse. He shall repeat the mātṛkā. Thereafter, he shall perform homa to the extent of one tenth of it.

---

In combination it forms: Harala Markaṭa vaṁ vaṁ saśeṣe te parimuñcati muñcati śṛṅkhalakām.

185-186. He shall perform homa unto the consecrated fire by means of gingelly seeds mixed with mustard. The king shall keep the emblem on the elephant and set out for the war. On seeing the emblem placed over the elephant, the enemies shall certainly run away. I shall clearly recount the yantra of Hanumān that is extremely protective and in power).

187-189. He shall draw the diagram of a lotus with eight petals. In the pericarp the name of the sādhya (the person intended) shall also be written. After inscribing an octagon in the petal, he shall envelop it with the Mālāmantra (a garland of mantras). After enveloping its exterior with the Māyā he shall perform the prāṇapratiṣṭhā rite (installation of the vital breath). The yantra shall be written in an excellent birch bark with a golden pen immersed in saffron and yellow pigment Rocanā. The yantra shall be enclosed with three meters. The devotee shall wear this yantra strenuously achieved, either on his arm or on his head.

190-191. He shall be victorious in the battle, in the game of dice, in arguments as well as in discussions. He is never overwhelmed by evil planets, obstacles, poisons, weapons or thieves. He will live for a long time, (even) a hundred years.

192-197. Gagana (ha) along with six long vowels attached with vahni (ra) prefixed and suffixed with tāra (oṃ).

This is a great mantra consisting of eight syllables. The Mūlamantra is now mentioned.

Oṃ vajrakāya vajratuṇḍa (oṁ, deity of admantine body, of admantine snout), kapila (reddish brown), piṅgala (tawny coloured), ūrdhvakeśa (one having the hair standing up), mahābala (of great strength) raktamukha (of red face), taḍi-jjihva (lightning-tongued), mahāraudra daṁṣṭrotkaṭa (possessed of highly terrible fangs), then utter the pair of kaha, karāla (terrible), mahādṛḍhaprahāreṇa (by means of terrible blow), Laṅkeśvaravadha (the destruction of the lord of Laṅkā i.e. Rāvaṇa), mahāsetubandha (the building of the great bridge), mahāśailapravāha (bearer of the great mountain), gaganecara (one who walks through the sky) utter ehi ehi (come, come) after saying bhagavān (lord) say mahābalaparākrama (O lord of great strength and exploit), Bhairava (O terrible one), ājñāpaya (order), come, come, they say mahāraudra (terrible one) dīrghapucchena veṣṭaya vairiṇam (encircle the enemy with your long tail) then uttering jambhaya, jambhaya (increase in size, increase in size) say varma (hum) astra (phaṭ).

1. Oṁ vajrakāya vajratuṇḍa kapila piṅgala urdhvakeśa mahābala raktamukha taḍijjihva mahārudra daṁṣṭrotkaṭa kaha karāla mahaddṛḍhaprahāreṇa Laṅkeśvara vadha gaganecara chi chi Bhagavān mahābalaparākrama bhairava ājñāpaya chi chi mahāraudra dirghapucchena ceṣṭaya vairiṇaṁ jambhaya jambhaya hum phaṭ.

198. O excellent brahmin ! this is the mālāmantra with hundred and twentyfive syllables. The sage etc. of the eight-syllabled mantra as well as the mālāmantra is as before. Their mode of worship is also the same.

199-202. When repeated, the mantra shall accord victory in the battle, in sickness it destroys the ailments. The repeater of the mantra who worships the lord of the monkeys attains all desires, is difficult of access even to Devas. He shall obtain wealth, grain, son, grandson, good fortune, unequalled renown, intellect, learning, lustre, kingdom, victory in arguments, activities facilitating the control of people and victory in the battle. When duly worshipped the deity born of the womb of Añjanā bestows these things in sufficient quantity.

CHAPTER SEVENTYFIVE

Procedure of showing lamp to Hanumān

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Henceforth, I shall mention the procedure of showing lamp to Hanumān along with its esoteric secrets. Merely by knowing it, the aspirant becomes a siddha (one who has realised great things).

2. I shall mention the magnitude of the lamp and the vessel as well as the measure of oil in due order. Also the quantity of the materials. The details of measuring units shall also be mentioned in due order.

3. I shall mention the difference in abodes and mantras. I shall mention the mantra for the gift of lamp separately. If it is offered with the oil made fragrant by means of flowers it is considered to be the bestower of all desires.

4. The gingelly oil is conducive to the acquisition of prosperity and glory and is to be used as an offering for the arrival of a traveller. It is decisively pointed out that the linseed oil is useful in the activities of attraction.

5. The mustard seed oil is conducive to the destruction of ailments as mentioned by those who are clever in the holy rites. In the activities of killing, the oil extracted from white mustard or Vibhītika seed (Terminalia Bellerica) is useful.

6. In the activities concerning ostracising, the oil from Karañja (Galedupa arborea); in the case of hatred, the oil extracted from madhu tree (Bassia Latifolia); if any or all of these oils are not available the gingelly oil is the most excellent.

7. Wheat gingelly seeds, black gram, green gram and rice. These are the pañcadhānya (the set of five grains) for the purpose of Nityadīpa (permanent lamp) unto Hanumān, the son of the wind-god.

8. The five grains ground and pasted into cake are very auspicious. Regarding the gift of the lamp it is said that it bestows all desires.

9. In the Vaśya (attracting and controlling) activities the ground and pasted rice is recommended. In māraṇa (destructive) activities, the ground and pasted black gram is used. In uccāṭana (Eradication) activities the ground and pasted black gingelly seeds are glorified.

10. At the advent of a traveller the ground and pasted wheat is recommended along with rice. In the mohana (fascinating) activities the ground and pasted āḍhakī (a variety of dāl) and in hatred the ground and pasted horse gram is recommended.

11. In regard to war, only black gram is recommended in the vessel of the lamp. In regard to alliance, the mixture of three grains, ground and pasted, is recommended. For gaining prosperity a musk is to be used.

12. For the purpose of acquiring bride to control and attract the king and in regard to friendship, that originating from cardemom, cloves, camphor and musk is to be used.

13. If any or all the other materials are not available the set of five grains is said to be excellent. Eight handfuls make a certain unit, eight times that unit makes one puṣkala.

14. Four puṣkalas make one āḍhaka, four āḍhakas make one droṇa and four droṇas make one khārī.

15. Four khārīs make one prastha.

16. Two palas make one prastha, two prasthas make one kuḍava, four kuḍavas make one prastha. Four prasthas make one āḍhaka.

17. Four āḍhakas make one droṇa and four droṇas make one khārī. In regard to the Ṣaṭkarman (i.e. śānti, vaśya, stambhana, vidveṣaṇa, uccāṭana and māraṇa (mentioned before) these measures are to be used in the vessel in the proper order.

18. Their measures are five, seven and nine in the proper order. In regard to sweet scents there is no specification about the measure. That is permitted to be used as one pleases.

19. The restriction as to the measure of the oils in the permanent vessel is as requires the special sacred vārttika (sticks). The grain shall be taken on a Monday and kept soaked in water.

20. Afterwards, it should be known that (the grains are taken) according to measure, ground and hand-pounded by virgins. The pounded grain shall be pasted in a pure vessel with river water and formed into a cake.

21. Thereafter, the pure devotee, with fully controlled mind shall make the vessel of the lamp (the cake is fashioned out in the form of a vessel). When the lamp is lighted in the vessel (the devotee) shall read the kavaca (special prayer) of the son of Māruti (wind god).

22-23. After placing it on the pure ground one should lighten it on Tuesday. One should make as many number of threads in the wick as there are syllables of the mūlamantra accompanied by the name of the sādhya (the person for whose purpose the ritual is intended). Or these shall be of the thirtieth part of the number of syllables, for in an important task all numbers are favourable.

24-25. In the permanent general lamp the number of wicks shall be equal to the number of the kūṭa mantra). The kūṭas are eleven-typed (Rudras are eleven in number). There is no restriction for the vessel.

Twentyone threads are said to be in the adhvani (on the path).

In offering lamp unto Hanumān red threads are glorified.

26. In regard to uccāṭana black thread is to be used. In hatred as well as māraṇa (destructive) rite, the pink (is to be used). In grave tasks the oil is as many palas as the kūṭas (the number of kūṭa mantra) i.e. the number of Śivas.

27-30. In the daily ritual the oil is stated to be of five palas or it may be as one likes. The lamp shall be offered in six places viz. in the vicinity of the idol of Hanumān, in the temple of Śiva, in the spot where nitya and naimittika rites are performed, in front of any idol, in any place as the devotee wishes in cases of affliction from goblins, evil planets etc. and in places where four roads meet. When offering a lamp unto Hanumān I am stating whatever there is any speciality which is favoured by Māruti.

31. It is said that offering a lamp unto Hanumān in the vicinity of a crystal liṅga or śālagrāma is conducive to different kinds of pleasures and prosperity.

32. In order to dispel the great calamity due to obstacles the lamp is offered in the vicinity of Gaṇeśa. In times of terrible danger (fear) from poison and ailments the lamp is offered in the vicinity of Hanumān.

33. During war the lamp is offered in the presence of Durgā, it is offered in the place where four roads meet, for the removal of ailments as well as when eyesight is impaired.

34. The lamp is offered at the threshold of the palace or in the prison when one is liberated from bondage. It is offered at the root of Aśvattha and vaṭa (the holy fig tree and the banyan tree) for the achievement of all affairs.

35-39. Offering of the lamp unto Hanumān is recommended on the following occasions :—in vaśya (fascinating) rites, on the occasion of fear, dispute, distress in the house due to war, game of dice, stunning of the eyes, (or vision) hatred, destructive rites, when dead body is lifted up, when the idol is shaken, poison, sickness, fever, affliction from goblins, when witches are released (against anybody) when swelling around a wound is formed, in the untractable great forest, when tigers, elephants camel and wild animals attack, for permanent release from bondage, at the arrival of a traveller, in a terrible spot, when the king is fascinated, at the time of arrival and departure (of prominent) people, at the threshold of the palace. No hesitation is to be entertained in this matter.

40-41. Twentyone piṇḍas (balls of cotton) for Rudra are divided into three Laghumāna (small measure) consisting of five seven or nine (units). When offering lamp unto Hanumān the idol is prepared by means of a cowdung with milk, butter or curds.

42-44. Hanumān should be painted on a wall, on a cloth or in the auspicious pedestal of Hanumān with face turned to the south. He is painted as a hero of lion's exploits with a foot resting on a bear. He shines with a crown on his head. While lamp is offered unto Hanumān the mālamantra is to be chanted. Nityadīpa (permanent daily lighting) shall be offered with the twelve-syllabled mantra.

45-46. Understand the special point in regard to the offering of the lamp. On the sixth day or the second day (of the lunar fortnight etc. he shall utter imaṁ dīpaṁ gṛhāṇa (Accept this lamp). He shall utter the remaining words as before. In the beginning he should say) kūṭa (one-syllabled mantra) and in the Nityadīpa (permanent daily lightning) he shall utter this twelve-syllabled mantra.

47-48. There, he shall perform the various rites with the mūla-mantra.

The ground shall be cleaned and smeared with cowdung. He shall draw a six-cornered triangle with a nice eight-petalled lotus on the ground with lines. The lamp shall be placed there.

49. He shall worship the son of Añjanā in the pedestal of either Śiva or Viṣṇu. He shall write the kūṭa of six (six seeds) in the six-angled figure. He shall write the great one (i.e. the word para) in the intervening position.

50. He shall then write the six aṅgas (ancillaries) along with the bījas, in the six corners. In the middle the gentle form of Māruti (Hanumān) is to be drawn after duly worshipping him.

51. In the six corners the six ancillaries and the names shall be worshipped in the manner as mentioned before. In the eight petals the eight following monkeys are to be worshipped.

52-55. (Obeisance unto) Sugrīva, Aṅgada, Suṣeṇa, Nala, Nīla, Jāmbavān, Prahasta and Suveṣa. He shall then worship the six ancillary deities. At the outset, obeisance unto the son of Vāyu, then unto Jānakījīvana (one who has enlivened Jānakī), then unto Rāmadūta (the messenger of Rāma) and thereafter unto one who wards off the mighty weapon called Brahmāstra. After worshipping duly with five kinds of offerings, he shall mention the place and time. Taking water and Kuśa grass he shall utter the mantra of the lamp.

56. The excellent aspirant facing the north shall repeat the same mantra for as many times as there are syllables in the kūṭa (seed mantra). Then he should throw water on the ground.

57-59. Thereafter he shall make his hands joined and facing the north repeat the mantra according to his capacity. He shall then say, O Hanumān, with this excellent lamp facing the north, please do such as would facilitate the realisation of my desires.

Thirteen materials are as follows: dung, clay, lamp-black, lac-juice, red lead, red sandal, sandal, honey, musk, curds, milk, butter and ghee.

60-62. Dung is of two types viz—buffalo dung and cow dung. In regard to the acquisition of lost articles the buffalo dung shall be used. At the advent of a traveller from far off places, for the protection of a great fort, in guarding and protecting children etc, in enchanting and controlling women and similar rites, O sage, the cow-dung is recommended. It should not be taken after it has touched the ground. It shall be gathered in a vessel midway (as it falls).

63. The clay is of four varieties, the white, yellow, pink and black. Gopicandana (a type of clay), yellow orpiment and Red chalk are included therein.

64-66. The lamp-black originates from lac-juice. All other things are well known. The intelligent devotee shall make a square with Gopicandana, as the abode of the deity. In the middle of it, he shall make the image of Hanumān by means of buffalo-dung. He shall with concentration draw the tail with krodha (hum). The repeater of the mantra shall bathe image by means of oil. He shall mark tilaka on the forehead with molasses. The incense out of resin taken from the śāla tree will smell as lotus.

67. The excellent aspirant shall offer oil lamp with five wicks. He shall offer curd and cooked rice as naivedya (food offering).

68-73. He shall repeat without making sound in the region of throat the syllables saśeṣa and viṣam (ha and m) thrice. If this is performed, lost buffaloes and even cows and absconding servants and maid servants shall be regained. If there is again any danger from wicked beings like serpents and thieves, he shall draw the diagram of an auspicious house having four doors. An elephant shall be placed in the eastern door. A buffalo is placed in the southern door, a serpent in the western door and a tiger in the northern door. In the same order a sword, a dagger, a baton and an iron club shall also be drawn. In the middle the image made of buffalo dung shall be kept. It has ḍamaru (small drum) in its hand and the eyes appear to be agitated and surprised. The idol shall be bathed in milk and sandal paste shall be smeared over. After the worship of the deity with the jāti jasmine flowers he shall offer incense.

74-75. The lamp offered shall be with ghee and milk-pudding as well as cooked rice shall be offered as naivedya. He shall repeat the mantra gagana (ha), dīpaka (u) joined with indu m (hum) and attached with astra (phaṭ) before the deity. By performing thus for seven days one is liberated from great danger. He shall begin these two rites on a Tuesday.

76. When there is fear (danger) from the enemies the following rites shall be performed. He shall draw the diagram with Gairika (Red chalk). Inside it he shall draw (the picture) of a palm tree slightly bent down.

77. He shall make the image of Hanumān hanging therefrom. The image is made of cowdung. The deity is painted as holding something on the top of the palm with his left hand and sharing the gesture of perfect knowledge (Jñāna-mudrikā) with his right hand.

78. Within a distance of a hasta from the root of the palm in the direction towards oneself he shall make a square abode and draw the picture of the physical form of the deity in its middle.

79. The deity shall be facing the south and be beautifully depicted with the region of the heart. With water the ablution rite shall be performed and scents etc. shall be offered in accordance with all possibilities.

80. Cooked rice and Kṛśara (edible prepared from gingelly seeds) shall be offered as Naivedya (food offering) along with the ghee. Two kili are the japa. He shall do thus every day.

81-85. If this be performed the travellers shall meet one another quickly.

The devotee shall draw a palace with a piece of black-rock. The outer wall shall have four main gates. In each of these he shall make the mūrti of Hanumān with cowdung. The tail shall have three circles round each of these figures (?). He shall worship with dhattūra flowers. The incense is taken from Jaṭāmāṁsī (Indian spikenard). The lamp has a mixture of oil and ghee. The naivedya is salted pancake made of black gram dough and smeared with gingelly oil. The monkey chief shall be meditated upon as holding the pancake in his right hand and chewing it. He stands there terrorising the armies of the enemies with stones (hurled) with the left hand. He has kept his eyebrow knit. He is killing, threatening and thrashing(them).

86. The devotee engrossed in meditation shall repeat Bhok Bhuk for a thousand times. If this is performed duly in accordance with the injunctions he will be able to destroy the armies of the enemies.

87. There shall be protection unto those who are in difficulties. True, it is true. There is no doubt about this. There are many practical applications (of the mantras and the Yantras of Hanumān). They have been briefly mentioned by me.

88. In the whole of the three worlds there is nothing which cannot be achieved by the person who offers lamp unto Hanumān in accordance with the injunctions.

89. This should not be imparted to one of wicked heart, nor to one whose intellect is engaged in wicked thoughts. It shall never be imparted to a disciple who is a backbiter or who is rude and impolite.

90. It shall not be given over to an ungrateful person. It shall be imparted only to a tested person. Of what avail is much talk ? The lord of the monkeys shall bestow everything.

91-96. Henceforth, I shall mention another mantra that bestows perfect knowledge of the principles.

Tāra (om) namo Hanumate (obeisance unto Hanumān.) Jaṭhara (ma) shall be repeated thrice (ma ma ma), then madana-kṣobhaṁ saṁhara saṁhara (dispel dispel the agitation due to cupid), ātmatattvam prakāśaya prakāśaya (reveal the truth of the ātman). The mantra ends with (huṁ) and (phaṭ) svāhā.[1] It has twentysix and a half syllables. Its sage is Vasiṣṭha, the metre is Anuṣṭup and the deity is Hanumāin. He shall divide the syllables of the mantra into groups of seven, seven, six, four, eight and four syllables (thus the total comes to thirtysix and not to twentysix and a half) and conceive the six aṅgas (ancillaries). He shall then meditate upon the lord of the monkeys who has kept his left arm on the knee, who shows the gesture of perfect knowledge in his heart, whose mind always dwells on spiritual matters who is seated in the middle of the plantain grove, who resembles a crore of rising suns and who is the bestower of perfect knowledge. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra for a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of gingelly seeds.

97. He shall perform homa with the gingelly seeds along with ghee. (The devotee shall worship the lord as before in the pedestal mentioned before. If the Japa is properly conducted,

1. The mantra runs thus: Om namo Hanūmate mama madanakṣobham saṁhara saṁhara ātmatattvam prakāśaya prakāśaya hum phaṭ.

the lord will certainly dispel the agitation of Madana (cupid).

98. Thanks to the grace of the lord of monkeys (the devotee) attains the perfect knowledge of reality.

Henceforth, I shall mention another mantra. It is extremely powerful for routing the goblins.

99-101. Tāra (om) Kaśī, Kukṣa, Vara Vara, Añjanā-varaputra (The excellent son of Añjanā) or Añjanā Pavana varaputra (the excellent son of wind god and Añjanā) then tāra (om) hrīm (Hanumān) astra (phaṭ).[1] The mantra consists of twentyfive syllables. The sage is Brahmā and Gāyatrī is the metre. The deity is Hanumān. Kamalā (hrīm) is the bīja, phaṭ is glorified as the śakti. He shall perform the six Ṣaḍaṅga rite by means of the bīja that consists of six long syllables.

102. The excellent aspirant shall meditate on the son of Añjanā whose face is red, whose physical body resembles the golden mountain and who is stationed at the root of the Pārijāta tree (celestial wish-yielding tree).

103. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. So the extent of one tenth of it, he shall perform homa with gingelly seeds soaked in trimadhu (the three sweet things, i.e. sugar, honey and ghee). The pedestal is in the same way as mentioned before.

104. With this mantra the repeater of the mantra can wipe off the grasp of the evil planet. The evil planet leaves him quickly as he shouts in grief and runs off.

105. These mantras are always to be guarded well. They should not be revealed to anyone and everyone. They may be bestowed upon a tested disciple or on one's own son.

106. The intelligent devotee engrossed in the worship of Hanumān shall attain the benefit mentioned after propitiating Kārttavīryārjuna particularly.

---

1. Om Kukṣa vara vara Añjanā-varaputra Pavanavaraputra om hrim Hanuman phaṭ. This is the combination of the mantra.

CHAPTER SEVENTYSIX

Kārttavīrya māhātmya kathanam
(The account stating the greatness of Kārttavirya).

Nārada Said :

1. Various kings like Kārttavīrya and others are born and get dissolved on the earth according to their deeds.

2. Then how did this excellent King, superseding others attain the status of one worthy of being served ? Please dispel this doubt of mine.

Sanatkumāra Said :

3. Listen O Nārada, to what I shall say for dispelling your doubts and as to how Kārtavīrya has attained the status of one worthy of being served.

4. He was the incarnation of Sudarśana Cakra on the earth. After propitiating Dattātreya he attained excellent brilliance.

5. O Nārada, by the mere remembrance of that leading king one is able to conquer enemies in the battle and immediately get back what is lost.

6. Hence his mantra,[1] worship etc. are kept secret in all the Tantras. I shall reveal it to you. It bestows the highest attainments (siddhis).

7-14. Raudrī (pha) attached with Vahni (ra) and tāra (om), lakṣmī (va) is associated with agni (ra,) indu (.) and śānti (ī), nidrā (bha) is associated with arghīśa (ū) agni (ra) and bindu (.), pāśam (ām), māyā (hrīm), aṅkuśa (krom) padma (śrīm), varma (hum), astra (phaṭ), then the syllables Kārtavī, then refa (ra) has its seat on vāyu (ya), then add

1. The mantra of Kārttavīryārjuna runs thus : Phroṁ vrīṁ klīṁ bhrūm āṁ hrīṁ kroṁ śrīṁ hum phaṭ Kārttavīryārjunāya namaḥ.
The nyāsa rites are to be performed in the following way :
āṁ phroṁ vrīṁ hṛdayāya namaḥ im klīṁ bhrūṁ śirase svāhā huṁ śikhāyai vaṣaṭ
Kraiṁ śraiṁ kavacāya hum hum phaṭ astrāya phaṭ.

ananta (ā) to it, then add Karṇa (u) and vahni ra to ja, then meṣa (na) with long (ā) and pavana (yn). The mantra is said to be ending with hṛt (namaḥ).

This mantra has nineteen syllables; when begins with tāra (om) then it contains twenty syllables. Its sage is Dattātreya, the metre cited is anuṣṭup, the deity is Kārttavīryārjuna, the bīja is dhruva (om) and namaḥ is its śakti.

The learned devotee shall perform the nyāsa rite with śeṣa (a) and the two first bījas (phroṁ, and vrīṁ) and with śānti along with the fourth vīja fixation should be made on the head. Fixation on the sikhā should be done with indu (.) vāmakarṇa (u) arghīśa along with māyā (hrīm) in the kavaca this should be done with vāg (aiṁ) associated with aṅkuśa (kraim) and padma (śrāim). On the palm of the hand varma (hum) and astra (phaṭ) is said to be done. The pervasive nyāsa is performed by the rest of the syllables (i.e. Kārtavīryāya namaḥ).

Placing two praṇavas in the beginning and at the end of ten seed letters in the middle one should perform nyāsa in the heart, in the belly, in the umbilicus, in the stomachs, in the private parts, in the right foot, in the left foot, in the hips, on the knees and in the calves.

15-16. He shall then fix the rest of the syllables beginning with om on the head, on the forehead, in the eyebrows, in the ears, in the eyes, in the nose, in the mouth, in the throat and on the shoulders. He shall make it pervasive by means of all the mantras throughout the body. He shall then meditate on Kārttavīrya, the lord of the people, for the sake of achieving all desired objects.

17-18. He shall meditate on King Arjuna who has the lustre of a thousand rising suns, who is shown obeisance by all kings, who holds arrows in his five hundred right hands and the bows in his five hundred left hands, who wears golden necklaces, who is clad in red cloth and who is the incarnation of the discus of Śrī Viṣṇu.

19. He shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa by means of gingelly seeds along with rice grains and milk pudding. He shall worship him in the pedestal of Viṣṇu.

20-21. He shall worship the six aṅgas on the six corners. He shall worship the following in the eight quarters : the dispellers of the pride of the thieves, the dispellers of the pride of pestilence, the dispellers of the pride of the enemies, the dispellers of the pride of the Daityas, the destroyers of the wicked, the destroyers of misery, the destroyers of adversities.

22-23. In the east and other quarters the eight Śaktis with black lustre are to be worshipped viz. Kṣemaṅkarī (she who causes wellbeing). Vaśyakarī (one who causes attraction of others); Śrīkarī (one who causes prosperity), Yaśaskarī (one who causes renown), Āyuḥkarī (one who causes longevity), prajñākarī (one who causes wisdom), Vidyākarī (one who causes learning) and the eighth one is Dhanakarī (one who causes richness).

Thereafter, the guardians of the quarters (Indra and others) are to be worshipped along with their weapons.

24. The mantra that has been practised thus becomes fit to be utilized practically.

Here the Pūjā yantra (the mystic diagram) of Kārttavīrya is being recounted.

25-26. In the diagram of the lord, his own bīja (phroṁ) kliṁ, oṁ and aiṁ should be inscribed on the pericarp of the petalled lotus. Then the ten syllables beginning with om and ending with phaṭ should be written on the petals, then the rest of the syllables should be written in the intervening places, the siblilants (śa, ṣa, sa, and ha) and the last vowel (aḥ) constitute the filaments. It is surrounded by the remaining syllables. The Bhūgṛha, the syllables of five elements (ya, ra, la, va, ha) are inscribed to decorate the corners. Such is the yantra of the Lord.

27. The Yantra must be drawn with respect on the pure ground by means of eight gandhas (fragrant substances). (The devotee) shall place the jar and invoke the king therein as well as worship him.

28. The devotee, conquering the sense organs, shall repeat the mantra a thousand times touching the jar (in the meantime). He shall perform the rite of ablution by means of the waters thereof. It is pleasing and conducive to the achievement of everything desired.

29. The man who performs the rite of ablution (with the waters) of the jar attains sons, renown, destruction of ailments, longevity amiability of the kinsmen, fluency of speech and beautiful ladies with lovely eyes.

30. When the village or city is faced with the harassment from the enemies, the people shall instal this Yantra to facilitate the recession of fear from the enemy.

31. The enemy is killed (if the homa is performed) with mustard arista (soapberry), garlic and cotton. If the homa is performed with dhattura, he is stunned, if the homa is performed with nimba (Margosa) he is made inimical and hating and he is controlled if the homa is performed with lotuses.

32. In uccāṭana (eradication) rites, the twigs of Vibhīta (Terminalia Belerica) and Khadira (Manosa Catechu) are used for homa. The articles of homa must be smeared with Kaṭutaila (Mustard Oil) or ghee produced from buffalo's milk.

33. If the homa is performed with barley grains, prosperity is achieved; if the homa is performed with gingelly seeds and ghee, sins are reduced. If the homa is performed with mixture of gingelly seeds, rice grains and white mustard, the king is enchanted and controlled.

34. The homa of Apāmārga, the sun plant and the dūrvā grass is the bestower of good fortune and the dispeller of sins. The homa of Priyaṅgu (Panicum Itelicum) facilitates the enchantment and attraction of women. The homa of nurā is the bestower of the quiescence of the Bhūtas (goblins).

35. By performing the homa with the twigs of Aśvattha, Udumbara, Plakṣa, Vaṭa and Bilva (the devotee) attains sons, longevity, wealth and happiness.

36. If the homa is performed with the slough, gold, thorn apple white mustard and salt thieves are destroyed. If the homa is with Rocanä (pigment) and cowdung, the enemy is stunned. If śāli rice is used for homa, lands are attained.

37. The number of homas in all cases ranges between one thousand and ten thousand. That must be fixed by the knowers of mantras according to the lightness or seriousness of the task on hand.

38. O learned man, the characteristics of the mantras of Kārttavīrya are being mentioned. The word Kārttavīrya inflected in the dative case shall be added on to all the mantras.

39. The mantra with its own bīja as the first one has ten syllables. / The others have nine or eleven syllables. The second mantra is uttered with the first pair of bījas.

40. The third mantra with the pair of sva (own) and kāma (phrom klīm) constitute the third; the pair of own bīja and bhrū is the fourth (phroṁ bhrūṁ), the fifth constitutes his own bīja (phroṁ) and pāśa (āṁ), the sixth one is with his own bīja (phroṁ) and hrīṁ.

41. The seventh one is made of his own bīja and aṅkuśa (krom), the eighth one is made of his own bīja and ramā (hrīṁ), the nineth one with those of its own bīja and aim, and the last one with varuṇa (hum) and astra (phaṭ).

42. In the (mantras) are beginning with the second and ending with the ninth the two bījas may be altered, in the tenth mantra there are nine syllables coming in between varma and astra (i.e. first hum, then nine syllables, then phaṭ).[1]

43. One shall resort to any one of these mantras that is favourable to any one among these excellent mantras. In the first one among these the metre is virāṭ and Triṣṭup is cited in the others.

44. These ten mantras that are mentioned when prefixed with (om) in the beginning will contain eleven syllables and the rest will contain twelve syllables.

45. (When Praṇava is added) in the first one the metre is Triṣṭup and in the others it is Jagatī. Thus the worship of the twenty mantras is done as before.

---

1. These verses give different mantras of Kārttavīryārjuna.
   1. Phroṁ Kārtaviryarjunāya namaḥ
   2. Phroṁ vriṁ . . . namaḥ
   3. Phroṁ klīṁ . . . . . .
   4. Phroṁ bhrūṁ etc.
   5. Phroṁ āṁ etc.
   6. Phroṁ hrīṁ etc.
   7. Phroṁ kroṁ etc.
   8. Phroṁ śrīṁ etc.
   9. Phroṁ Aiṁ etc.
   10. Huṁ Kārttaviryārjunāya namaḥ phat.

*46. He shall perform the six ancilliary rites (Ṣaḍaṅga) with the mūlabīja having six long vowels (phrāṁ, phrīṁ etc). Om namaḥ Kārttavīryarjunāya huṁ phaṭ Svāhā.

47. This mantra contains fourteen syllables. Its worship is considered to be as before. The syllables are divided into groups of one, two, seven, two and two syllables and the five and aṅgas are conceived by them.

48. Tāra (Om) namaḥ Bhagavate Kārttavīryārjunāya hum phaṭ svāhā. This mantra is said to contain eighteen syllables.

49-51. The five aṅgas of the mantra are conceived by means of three, four, seven, two and two syllables.

Om namo bhagavate Śrikārttavīryārjunāya (obeisance to the glories of Kārttavīryārjuna), sarvaduṣṭāntakāya (unto the annihilator of all wicked ones). Tapobala-parākrama-paripālita-saptadvīpāya (unto the one who has protected the seven continents by means of the strength of his penance and exploits), Sarvarājanyacūḍāmaṇaye (unto the crest-jewel of all kings), mahāśaktimate (unto one who has great strength), sahasradahanāya (to the scorcher of thousands). The great mantra ends with hum phaṭ.

52-55. This mantra is said to contain sixtythree syllables. By recalling it to the mind one dispels all obstacles. The Ṣaḍaṅga rites are performed by means of these words used in the dative case viz. Rājanya Cakravartin (the Emperor of all kings), Vīra (hero), Śūra (Valorous) is the third Māhiṣmatipati (the lord of the city of Māhiṣmatī). This is the fourth, Revāmbuparitṛpta (one who is contented with the water of Revā) Kārāgeha-prabādhitadaśāsya (one who put Rāvaṇa into the prison house).

One shall meditate upon the excellent haughty king who is sporting in the waters of Narmadā, who is being sprinkled

*It gives the fourteen syllabled mantra: Om namaḥ Kārttavīryārjunāya hum phaṭ svāhā.

These verses give the mantra of Kārttavīrya thus :
Om namo bhagavate Sri Kārttavīryārjunāya sarvaduṣṭāntakāya tapobala-parākrama-paripālitasaptadvīpāya sarvarājanya-cūḍāmaṇaye mahāśaktimate (sahasradahane) hum phaṭ.
The Mantra Mahodadhi reads sahasra-bāhave in place of sahasradahane.

with water by young women and who obstructs the rushing floods of water with his hands. After meditating thus the devotee shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. The other procedure of worship is as before.

56a. At the outset he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. The procedure of worship is as before.

56b-57a. The king named Kārttavīryārjuna had a thousand arms. By remembering him alone that which is lost and that which has been forfeited is regained.

57b-58a.[1] This excellent mantra has thirtytwo syllables. The five aṅgas are conceived by means of four pādas (quarters) and the whole mantra alongwith Meditation and Worship is as before.

58b-59. Kārttavīryāya vidmahe (we do know about Kārttavīrya), mahāvīryāya dhīmahi (we meditate on the one with great powers), tanno'rjunaḥ pracodayāt (let that Arjuna induce us).

60-61. This is called the Gāyatrī of Arjuna. At the beginning of the practical application (of the mantra), if any were to repeat the mantra in the Anuṣṭup metre at the night the gangs of thieves run away from their house. If they perform the tarpaṇa rite or homa rite (the same result takes place).

Lamp of Kārttavirya

Henceforth, I shall mention the procedure of offering dīpa which is very pleasing to Kārttavīrya.

62. The rite of offering dīpa may be inaugurated in the months of Vaiśākha, Śrāvaṇa, Mārgaśīrṣa, Kārttika, Āśvina, Pauṣa, Māgha, and Phālguna.

63-66. The beginning of the rite offering of dīpa on the following days is very auspicious. The tithi (lunar days) should not be the riktā one (i.e. the fourth, ninth and the fourteenth), the day of the week shall not be Tuesday and Saturday. The constellation shall be Hasta, Uttara (Phalgunī), Aśvini, Puṣyā, the star belonging to Rudra (Ādrā), Viṣṇu, Śravaṇā) and Vāyu (Svāti), (the Viśākhā star with two deities)

1. The Gāyatrī of Kārttavīrya runs thus :
Kārttavīryāya vidmahe mahāvīryāya dhīmahi tanno'rjunaḥ pracodayāt.

and on Rohiṇī. It shall be auspicious to inaugurate the lamp-offering during the ultimate Vyatipāta during prosperity and holy rites, when there is fortitude and delight, during occasion of good fortune, during auspicious times conducive to longevity during the Karaṇa (division of the day) when that is no Viṣṭi during eclipse, in the yogas such as Ardhodaya (half rise) etc., during the night as well as forenoon. It is very auspicious if it is begun at midnight on the saptamī (seventh) day in the bright half of Kārttika month.

67. If it coincides with Sunday and the constellation of Śravaṇa it is very rare (and hence auspicious). If the matter on hand is very urgent there is no rectification or correcting in regard to the months etc.

68-70. At the outset the devotee should observe celibacy. He abstains from taking food as well. He takes his bath early in the morning and sits on the pure ground cleaned with cowdung water mixed with yellow orpiment. He shall then restrain his breath and perform the rite of Saṁkalpa (ritualistic decision). Thereafter he shall perform the nyāsa rites mentioned before. On the ground he shall describe a hexagon by means of red sandal and rice grains. He shall write the mantra of Smara then, and write (the syllables) in the six corners. He shall then envelop it with the nine syllables and draw a triangle outside.

71. In the Yantra written thus, he shall keep the vessel of the lamp made of gold or silver or copper if the other is not available.

72. The vessel may be made of bell metal or clay. The best one is of metal (iron) and is used at the time of death. For the rites of Śānti (peace and quiescence) powdered green grain shall be used (i.e. pasted and made into a vessel). In the case of alliance powdered wheat is used.

73. If the ghee taken is a thousand palas, the vessel must be of hundred palas; if the ghee is ten thousand palas the vessel should be of five hundred palas.

74. If the ghee is seventyfive palas the vessel is of sixty palas. If the ghee is three thousand palas, candied sugar and the vessel must be of corresponding number of palas.

75. If the ghee is two thousand palas the vessel must be of two hundred palas. If the former is of a hundred palas the vessel must be of fiftytwo palas. On the other situations also he shall calculate it similarly.

76. In the permanent lamp the vessel is of three palas and the ghee one pala. After installing the vessel thus he shall drop the wicks taken from threads.

77. The number of wicks must be one, three, five, seven or any odd number calculating according to the tithis; the number of wicks may go up to a thousand.

78. The cow's ghee filtered with a pure cloth shall be poured therein. It may be a thousand palas if the matter is serious and a tenth of it if the matter is less serious.

79. The śalākā (rod to stir the wick) must be made of gold or other metal. It shall be beautiful. Its length may be sixteen, eight or four aṅgulas. The tip must be pointed and the root very thick.

80. He shall put it into the vessel after leaving four aṅgulas in the southern direction. The tip of the rod may remain to the south, in the middle of the vessel or on the top.

81. He shall fix an auspicious dagger therein with the point directed downwards and the handle to the south. One shall light the lamp there recalling Gaṇeśa in mind.

82. He shall place the jar to the east of the lamp in accordance with the injunctions in the mystic diagram of Sarvatobhadra or on a eight-petalled lotus made by means of rice grains.

83. He shall invoke the overlord of kings therein. The intelligent devotee shall worship the emperor as before. Taking up water and raw rice grains he shall perform the saṅkalpa (ritualistic vow) in front of the lamp.

*84-91. The mantra for the saṅkalpa rite of the lamp is being mentioned. It consists of one hundred and fiftytwo syllables. Om, ām, hrīm, śikhā (vaṣaṭ)and the syllables Kārttavīryārjunāya Māhiṣmatīnāthāya (unto Kārttavīrya, the lord

*These verses give the mūlamantra for offering the lamp. It runs thus : "Om ām hrīm vaṣaṭ Kārttavīryārjunāya Māhiṣmatīnāthāya sahasrabāhave sahasrakratudīkṣitahastāya Dattātreyapriyāya Ātreyānusūyāgarbharatnāya hrūm ām dīpaṁ gṛhāṇa amukaṁ rakṣa rakṣa duṣṭān nāśaya nāśaya pātaya pātaya ghātaya ghātaya śatrūñjahi jahi hrīm om phroṁ klīṁ svāhā" of Māhiṣmatī) sahasrabāhave (unto one with thousand arms, and who is initiated into a thousand yajñas, unto one who is favourite to Dattātreya, unto the excellent son of Atri, born of the womb of Anasūyā, then say nabha (ha) alongwith agni (ra) vāmakarṇa (ū) and indu (.). (i.e. hrūm), accept this lamp, protect, protect such and such a one, destroy the wicked, fell them down and kill them, kill, kill the enemies, māyā (hrīm), tāra (om) own bīja (phrom), klīm, svāhā. With this lamp facing the west—protect such and such a one, for the bestowing of such and such a boon, then vāmanetra (ī) alongwith candra (.) and ākāśa (ha) (i.e. him, him), śivā (hrīm) the first letter of the Vedas (om), kāma (klīm), Cāmuṇḍā (vrīṁ), svāhā, the tavarga and pavarga from ta to ma with bindu (.), then praṇava (om) and svāhā.

Thus the mantra contains one hundred and fiftytwo syllables. Dattātreya is glorified as the sage of the Mahāmantra.

92. Amita (unmeasured) is the metre, the deity is Kārttavīryārjuna. The mantra is the cause of attainment of everything. He shall perform the six aṅgas by means of Cāmuṇḍā (vrīm) endowed with six long vowels (i.e. vrām, vrīm, vrūm etc).

93. After meditating on the deity and reciting the mantra, water shall be sprinkled within the end. The bīja of Cāmuṇḍā is stated to be Half (ca) joined with Govinda (ī) and bindu (.) (i.e. crīm, but ra should be added.)

*94. Thereafter, he shall repeat the nine-syllabled mantra in front of him for a thousand times.

95. Tāra (om), ananta (ā) joined with bindu, māyā (hrīm), own bīja (phrom) joined with vāmanetra (ī), kūrma (va) alongwith candra (.) and agni (ra) and śānti (i) (i.e. vrīm), svāhā, kroṁ, dhruva (oṁ).

The sage is as mentioned before, the metre is aunuṣṭup and other things are as before.

---

anena dipavaryeṇa paścimābhimukhena, amukaṁ rakṣa amukaṁ varapradānāya hriṁ hriṁ hriṁ om kliṁ vrīṁ svāhā taṁ thaṁ daṁ dhaṁ naṁ pam phaṁ baṁ bhaṁ maṁ oṁ svāhā.

*This verse gives the nine-syllabled mantra.

Om ām hrīṁ phrīṁ vrīṁ svāhā kroṁ oṁ.

96. After performing the japa of the king of mantras he shall read the kavaca. Thus the performer of the rite of offering dīpa attains everything deserved.

97. At the time of enlightening dīpa one shall avoid inauspicious words. The sight of a brahmin there is glorified as the bestower of auspicious things.

98. The right of Śūdras is of medium benefit, that of a Mleccha is conducive to death and bondage. The sight of mice and cats is defiled, that of cows and horses is pleasing.

99. The evenly spread flame of dīpa is conducive to realisation; if it is curved it causes destruction. If it produces sound it is the bestower of fear to the performer (of the rite); if it is dazzlingly bright, it is considered to be the bestower of happiness.

100-103. If the flame is black it is conducive to the fear from enemies; if it vomits (i.e. if there are jerks etc.) it is destructive of animals. If, by chance the vessel appears broken when the dīpa-offering-rite is performed, the householder (who performs the rite) will pass away within a fort-night. If he has to use another wick, his task will be realised only after delay. If the dīpa has to be changed the performer shall become one bereft of eyesight. If an impure thing is touched there will be sickness; if the dīpa is destroyed there is fear from thieves. If a dog, a cat or mouse is touched. There will be fear from the ruler of the land. At the making of a vessel, the dīpa made with eight palas is the bestower of every desire.

104. Hence, the dīpa shall strenuously protect us from obstacles. Till the conclusion of the rite, one shall observe celibacy and lie down on the bare ground.

105. One shall avoid even the conversation with women, Śūdras and fallen persons. He shall perform the japa of the king of mantras of nine syllables, a thousand times on each occasion.

106-108. The recitation of the prayer must be conducted every day especially during mid-night. He who stands on a single foot in front of the dīpa and repeats the leading mantra, a thousand times, at night, shall attain the desired things quickly. The series of rites must be concluded on an auspicious day and the excellent brahmins must be fed. The priest shall sprinkle the performer (the householder) with the water from the jar and repeat the Mantra. The kartṛ (i.e. the householder who performs the rites) shall offer decent dakṣiṇā (fees) for the purpose of satisfying the deity.

109. If the preceptor is pleased the king, the son of Kṛtavīrya grants the desired thing. He shall himself do everything at the behest of the preceptor or the preceptor cause him to do.

110-112. O Nārada he shall do so after giving him money etc. for the purpose of offering dīpa.

He who performs the rite of offering dīpa without the permission of the preceptor and for realising his own desires can achieve it. At every step he will face only loss. The most excellent of all ghee is that produced from cow (cow's milk); that from buffalo's milk is of medium benefit. The oil from gingelly seeds also shall be like that; the ghee produced from the milk of goat etc. is the least one. In cases of ailments of the mouth and face, the devotee shall offer dīpa with sweet smelling oil.

113-114. For the purpose of destroying the enemies, he shall offer dīpa with the oil extracted from white mustard seeds. If even after offering with a thousand palas (of ghee etc.) the object is not realised, he shall perform the rite concerning dīpas three times. Then, even the most difficult task shall undoubtedly be fulfilled.

115. Kārttavīrya is fond of dīpas. Mārtaṇḍa (the sun god) is a lover of obeisances. Mahāviṣṇu is one who likes eulogy and Gaṇeśa is fond of the tarpaṇa (propitiation) rite.

116. Durgā is fond of worship (by means of floral offering). Indeed Śiva is one who likes ablution. Hence, in order to propitiate these respective deities those rites shall be respectfully performed.

CHAPTER SEVENTY SEVEN

Kārttavīrya Kavaca

The narration of Kavaca (the protective prayer) of Kārttavīrya

Nārada said :

1. Well done, well done, O highly intelligent one, O scholarly one, expert in all the Tantras, a procedure kept in Tantras has been mentioned to me by you.

2. O highly blessed one, O store-house of mercy, I now wish to hear the Kavaca of Kārttavīrya and Hanumān. Please recount it.

Sanatkumāra said :

3. O leading brahmin, listen. I shall recount the extremely wonderful Kavaca of Kārttavīrya, through which he causes the fulfilment of the tasks when he is delighted.

4-14. One shall meditate on Kārttavīrya as follows : His great Chariot resembles the thousand suns. It shines with different kinds of jewels. It contains brilliant flag-staff and banners, it is decorated with ten thousand horses. Its sound is as terrible as that of the Saṁvartaka cloud (of the great dissolution), the great umbrella that is lifted up has spread out like a canopy in the firmament. With the diverse kinds of weapons the great Chariot shines elegantly in which Kārttavīrya is seated steadily. He is large and elegant. He is adorned with a thousand arms. He holds strong bows with his left hands and with the others he holds arrows. He is bedecked with many kinds of ornaments such as coronet, necklaces, crown, shoulderlets, brace-lets, bangles, rings, belts round the belly, girdles, anklets and in various kinds of costly and shining ornaments. He has worn a coat of mail. He is a hero who appears delighted with his lotus-like face. He makes the three worlds tremble by means of leonine roar of the twangs from the bowstring. He makes his enemies dwindle in number. He dispels all ailments.

He is the bestower of all riches. He is served by the glory of victory. He bestows all good fortune, is gentle and offers fearlessness unto his devotees. He has worn divine garlands and exquisite unguents. He is characterised by all auspicious marks. He is the lord standing amongst the chariot soldiers, elephant soldiers, cavalry men and foot soldiers. He is the granter of boons. He is the lord of emperors. He is the sole protector of all the worlds. He has the lustre of a thousand suns rising up simultaneously. He has overwhelmed the three worlds by means of his glory, renown and great riches originating from Yogic powers. He is the glorious discus of Hari that has partially incarnated on the surface of the earth.

After meditating deeply on the deity as one with one's self he shall utter the rakṣā mantra.

15-16. Let the five forms of his aṅgas protect me. They are as refulgent as crystals. The heart etc. (hṛdayādi) with their shining forms all over and lying in corners (i.e. quarters) agni (south-east), Īśa (north-east), asura (south-west) and vāyu (north-west) (protect us). They have the conch, the leather shield and the sword in their hands. Their strength, overlordship, powers, ability and physical bodies are unobstructed.

17. May the deity accompanied by the Śaktis called Kṣemaṁkarī (the cause of conferring security protect the quarter east of mine. His weapons are the arrows and the bow. He is the destroyer of the groups of thieves.

18. May (the deity) accompanied by Śrīkarī Śakti (that which causes prosperity and glory) protect the southern direction. He is glorious. He holds the arrows and the bow. He is the dispeller of the fear from pestilence.

19. May the deity accompanied by the Śakti called Mahāvaśyakarī (the great enchanter and charmer) protect my western quarter. He is the destroyer of all enemies. He is the bearer of great arrows and bow.

20. May the deity accompanied by Yaśaḷkarī (the cause of renown and fame) protect my south-eastern direction. He is the destroyer of the groups of demons.

21. May the lord armed with the bow and accompanied by Vidyākarī (the cause of learning) protect the south western direction. He is the remover of great misfortune.

22. May the lord accompanied by Dhanakarī (the cause of wealth) protect me in the north-western direction. He is the destroyer of all sins. He holds arrows and bow.

23. May the deity accompanied by Āyuḥkarī (cause of longevity) protect my north-western direction. He is glorious. He is the destroyer of great fear. He holds the bow and arrows.

24. May the deity accompanied by Vijayaśrī (glory of conquest) protect my upper direction. He is the lord himself holding the thousand-spoked (discus). He is the person striking terror into all wicked ones.

25. May the holder of conch accompanied by Sumahāśakti (the very great power) protect my lower direction. He is the sun in piercing the darkness of misery.

26. May he who is endowed with great yogic power, who is the lord of great yogins and who has all the quarters as his sphere protect me all round. He is the bearer of the lotus.

27. These mūrtis (forms) are red in colour. They wear red garlands and garments. They are the principal deities and are stationed separately and severally in excellent chariots.

28. The Śaktis have lotus in their hands. They resemble blue lotuses. They wear white garlands and garments. They look brilliant with well-smeared tilakas(marks on the forehead).

29. May Indra and others who possess great strength and are stationed in their respective quarters, who are the leaders of his attendants and who have their own vehicles, weapons and ornaments, protect me.

30. All his Āvaraṇa deities (attending deities) have been mentioned. They may protect me from all directions with all their strength.

31. May those wish-yielding heavenly trees (the deities in that form) stationed in the form of brilliance, protect me in the heart, in the belly, in the umbilicus, in the stomach and in the region of the private parts.

32. May those great syllables (mātṛkās) in the form of highly brilliant mantras protect me from other quarters. By their pervasiveness may they protect me from the sole of the feet to the head.

33. May Kārttavīrya protect the head. May Haihayeśvara (the Lord of Haihaya) protect the forehead. May Sumukha protect my month. May he who pervades the three worlds, protect the ears.

34. May Sukumāra (the gentle one) protect the skin. May Dhanurdhara (the wielder of the bow) protect the pair of of eyebrows. May Puṇḍarīkākṣa (the lotus-eyed) protect the eye. May Guṇākara (the store-house of good qualities) protect my nose.

35. May Brahmajñeya (comprehensible only to Brahmā) ever protect the lips. May Kavi (the poet) protect the teeth. May Sarvaśāstra Kalādhārin (one who possesses all scriptural lores and arts) protect the tongue.

May Avyaya (the unchanging one) protect the chin.

36. May Dattātreyapriya (the favourite of Dattātreya) protect the neck. May Rājakuleśvara (the lord of the Royal family) protect the shoulders. May Daśāsyadarpaghna (the destroyer of the arrogance of ten-headed Rāvaṇa) protect the arms. May Mahābala (one of great strength) protect my heart.

37. My vidvān (scholarly one) protect my belly. May Parapurañjaya (the conquerer of the city of the enemy) protect the chest. May Sarvārthada (the bestower of all riches) protect the hands. May Jagatpriya (one who is the beloved of the world) protect the tips of the hands.

38. May Revāmbulīlāsaṁdṛpta (one who proudly sports about in the waters of Revā) protect the stomach. May vīra śūra (the hero and the valorous) protect my navel. May Sarvaduṣṭahā (the destroyer of all wicked ones) protect my sides.

39. May Sahasrabhujabhṛt (one who has a thousand arms) protect my back. May Saptadvīpādhipa (the lord of seven continents) protect the hips. May Māhiṣmatīnātha, the lord of Māhiṣmatī protect the thighs. May Bhuvaḥ Vallabhaḥ (the lover of the earth) protect the knees.

40. May vīrādhipa (the lord of the heroes) protect the calves. May Manojava (one who has the speed of the mind) protect the feet. May Sarvāyudhadhara (the wielder of all weapons) protect all limbs and all vulnerable joints.

41. May Sarvaduṣṭāntaka (the annihilator of all wicked persons) protect the body consisting of eight dhātus (fluids of the body). May Sarvaśiṣṭeṣṭada (the bestower of the desired object unto all good people of disciplined behaviour) protect the ten vital airs, the lords of life.

42-43. May vaśīkṛtendriyagrāma (one who has control over sense-organs) protect all my senses. May sarvalokanātheśvareśvara (the lord of the chiefs of all the rulers of all the worlds), protect all those spots within or without me that have not been mentioned. This body enveloped by the kavaca becomes more durable and powerful than thunderbolt.

44. May I become free from fear and liberated from hundreds of obstacles after tying up this kavaca of the ruler of Haihaya, which is divine and unbreakable.

45-50. I move about during the days and nights with my mind free from fear. I move about in the Royal highway, in an impassable road infested with thieves and others, in the rough inaccessible and terrible forests, in the forest fire, in the mountain caves, in the battle, when being attacked by weapons, in caves frequented by lions and tigers, in places full of hazards, at the time of dusk, in the palace, in the hot discussion, in the ocean with large undercurrents, on the banks of rivers, in a land full of enemies and overrun by plunderers and robbers, when the robbing of all possessions is imminent when the life is in danger, when attacked by diffcrent kinds of fevers and ailments, when harassed by ghosts and evil spirits, when afflicted by pestilence and evil dreams, when betrayed, when there is physical or mental distress and agony, when there is impediment of every sort blazing like a flame.

51-55. Let there be no fear unto me covered with this kavaca. Let the Mahāratha (the heroic warrior) with thousand strong arms prevent all those who come to rob us of our wealth. May the son of Kārttavīrya bind them with the thousand nooses brought by his hands. (The enemies) are very invincible. May he obstruct their movement and efficiency. May the crest-jewel of all kings defeat those who are inimical to us. May he pierce them with thousand goads, and cut them with a thousand arrows. May Kamalekṣaṇa (lotus-eyed) destroy all wicked ones beginning with thieves. May he smite them with thousand swords and suppress them with a thousand ironclubs. May the wielder of thousand and thousand-spoked discuses terrify them with the sound of his conch. May the direct incarnation of Hari protect everything belonging to me.

56-63. O Kārttavīrya of great prowess, O destroyer of all wicked ones, destroy, destroy the wicked thieves everywhere and forever. O slayer of the wicked, why do you sleep? Why do you delay? Why do you stop? Get up, save us from all dangers and fears as though we are your sons. May all these be destroyed viz. those who are thieves and removers of wealth, those who are violent, those who are inimical to us, those who instil fear in good men, the wicked and the deceitful ones, those who are evil-minded defiled kings of wicked hearts, wicked and sinful ministers, those who spoil the work of others those knavish enemies, those who are the five deceitful persons among looters of everything, the Mlecchas (outcastes) who inflict great pain, the stealthy Śūdras, those who commit arson, those who administer poison, those who cheat others, those armed with weapons, sinners of wicked activities, those who give pain, those whose intellect is depraved, those who indulge in fraud and artifice, those who go astray along evil paths, those who instil fear in others in various ways, those who are engaged in finding out the weak points in others and those who are attempting to harass us. May all these be struck down by the noise of the great conch of Kārttavīrya. May all those be dissolved suddenly. May they be deluded even from a great distance.

64-77. May all these be destroyed viz. Dānavas, great Daityas, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas the ghosts of great strength, Bhūtarākṣasas, Brahmarākṣasas (a ghost of a Brahmin who led an unholy life), epileptic fits, evil planets,[1] the great swallowers of blood, Vetālas (vampires), Guhyakas (demigods who attend kuvera) Gandharvas, Apsarasas, Siddhas, Devas, Dākinīs

---

1. Suśruta gives the names of different Grahas, see uttaratantra, chapter 27. The names are :
1. Skanda 2. Skandāpasmāra, 3. Śakuni, 4. Revatī, 5. Pūtanā, 6. Andhapūtanā, 7. Śītapūtanā, 8. Mukhamaṇḍikā, 9. Pitṛgraha. The text gives the account of how they take hold of the baby and the characteristic marks, by which the expert physician can ascertain which of the above evil spirits

(witches) with noses as large as trees, the ghosts, the Kṣetrapālas (the guardians of fields) the Vināyakas (the impeding deities), the great tigers, the great clouds, the devils with the size of huge horses, huge elephants, the great lions, the great buffalocs, those of the from of bears, boars, dogs, monkeys, and owls, those with the heads of huge camels, donkeys, cats, serpents, cows and bulls, great animals of diverse forms and sizes, those who cause thousands of pains and griefs, those who bring about different kinds of sickness, some small, some very terrible and serious like the gaseous, the beleous, the phlegmatic and those having all the humours deranged, the great evil planets belonging to Maheśvara, Viṣṇu and Brahmā the cruel ones belonging to Skanda, Vināyaka and Pramatha and Guhyaka which are greatly inimical and terrible. The terrible pestilence, small poxes, the great fevers of a single day, tertiary or of four day recurrence, those that happen every fortnight, or month, those that recur half-yearly or yearly, those terrible fevers without any remedy, the great calamities indicated by dreams, the evil planets producing evil dreams ,the different devils such as the Kuṣmāṇḍas, Jṛmbhikas, Bhaumas, Droṇas, Sānnidhya Vañcakas (those who cheat with their presence), the Bhramikas (those who cause whirling), the removers of vital breaths, the evil spirits affecting children, those who exercise evil influence is exercising evil influence over the baby. Dattanācārya, the commentator of the text, gives a mantra for propitiating Skandagraha in his commentary.

Suśruta says that these Grahas nine in number, some of which are male and others female, were born out of grace of Śiva, Umā and Agni to protect the child Kārttikeya when he was lying in the reed forest. It should be remembered that these Skandagrahas are not identical with Skanda, the great commander of Devas, but are his attendants who are always trying to find fault with others and when they find any they take a hold over them, for which the name graha is given to them.

Suśruta gives some more names of Grahas and classifies them into eight. They are as follows : 1. Devagraha, 2. Asuragraha, 3. Gandharvagraha, 4. Yakṣa-graha, 5. Rakṣograha, 6. Pitṛgraha, 7. Bhujaṅga graha, 8. Piśācagraha. They exercise evil influence over persons who take little care of remaining pure in body and mind during a particular tithi and the conjunctions of the day and night.

The Kavaca of Kārttavīrya is given in the uḍḍāmareśvara tantra and is quoted in Prāṇatoṣaṇī (pp. 252-256). In Prāṇatoṣaṇī we have some additional verses in the last portion but we do not find them in our present text.

over the mind and the senses and overpower them, the tumours that are caused by the great planets, the partakers of oblations who take huge quantity of food, those who feed on corpses, those terrible beings that move about during day time, those who stalk about during the nights, and those that move about during dusks, those that are mad and those that are not mad which attempt to harass me—May all these be struck by the arrows discharged from the bow of Kārttavīrya. May they be destroyed in their thousands with their strength, power and endeavour shattered.

78-84. May these spirits be destroyed viz. serpents, great snakes, those who lie in the crevasses of great mountains, black pythons, those with huge fangs called great Ajagaras, Ananta-śūlikas etc. (having endless pikes), who have poison in their fangs and that are very frightful, those that have many hundreds of heads, those terrible ones with broken tails, extremely poisonous leeches, scorpions with radiant tails, those poisonous serpents emitting poison in their very breath, those that are called great Hālāhalas, aquatic serpents, aquatic pythons, crocodiles under water, tortoises, fishes with poisonous tails, those other denizens under water, those that are born in water or the surface of the earth, those that have accidental poison and those that are extremely poisonous, those with hidden forms, those with concealed poison, the mice, the domesticated mon-gooses, other terrible animals with great or small quantity of poison in them, those who destroy the body and the vital breath and those who desire to harass us. May these be split asunder by a thousand swords of Kārttavīrya. Let them perish even from a great distance with their sense-organs and adventurous spirit impaired.

85-90. May these be destroyed viz. men, animals, bears, monkeys in the forest regions, lions, tigers, boars, buffaloes, and other great animals, the elephants, horses, the wild oxen, the donkeys, the fabulous eight-footed Śarabhas, wolves, dogs, rhinoceros, white cats, jackals eager to be in their dens, hares, vultures, garuḍas and other birds, Bheruṇḍas (species of wild birds), crows, eagles, swans, and other types of birds, the oviparous and viviparous beings, the sweat-born ones, in fact all those different types of beings which desire to attack us during twilight, by day or by night—May all these be shattered by the thousand maces of Kārttavīrya. May these perish with their movement and prowess impaired.

91-95. May all these be destroyed, those who bestow harm, those who are deceitful cheats, those who bring about death, extermination, uprooting, hatred and fascination, those who commit breach of trust, the wicked men who hate their masters, the wicked ones who arm themselves with weapons, the sinners, who take away (treasures), those who burn, those who hit, those who administer poison, those who inflict wounds with weapons, those who torture others, those who take possession of fields, wealth etc. by force and those who imprison and terrify in many ways, the various sorts, of ītis (disasters), the evil beings, those things that desire to find a weak point for an attack—May all these perish from distance. May they be shattered by the thousand cakras of Kārttavīrya. May their strength and adventurous spirit be destroyed.

96-101. At the behest of Kārttavīrya who is the lord of Yogins of unmeasured splendour, may all these be gentle and pleasing at all times viz. the clouds, the lightening, the thunderbolts, the bright and terrible whirlwinds, the falling meteors, the terrible weapons of Mahendra (i.e. thunderbolts), Sun, Moon, Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Rāhu and Ketu, the terrible stars and signs of zodiac, tithis, transits, months, years, leading Yugas, the leaders of Manvantaras, Siddhas, sages, yogic powers and achievements, the treasures, the Ṛk, Yajus, Sāman, Atharvan, the sacred fire, the seasons, the guardian deities, the Pitṛs, the bands of deities, the sixty-four lores in three worlds—those that have been recounted here and those that have not been recounted—may all these be gentle unto us. May they be pleasing to us always and at all times.

102-114. (The hundred and eight names) Kārttavīryārjuna, Dhanvin (having a bow), Rājendra (leading king) Haihayeśvara (Lord Haihaya), Daśāsyadarpahā (The dispeller of the arrogance of the ten-headed Rāvaṇa) Revābaladṛpta (one who is proud of his sports in the Revā) Sudurjaya (who is very difficult to be conquered), Duḥkhahā (the destroyer of miseries), cauradamana (one who suppresses thieves) Rājarāje-śvaraprabhuḥ (Lord and ruler of the kings of kings), Sarvajña (omniscient), Sarvada (one who bestows everything), Srīmān (glorious one) Sarvaśiṣṭeṣṭada (one who bestows everything desired by (the disciplined one), Rājacūḍāmaṇi (crest-jewel of kings) yogin, Saptadvīpādhināyaka (the overlord of the seven continents, Vijayin (the victorious), Viśvajit (one who conquers the universe), Vāgmin (fluent in speech), Mahāgatic (one whose gait is large), Alolupa (one who is not greedy or covetous) Yajvan (performer of yajñas) Viprapriya (one who is fond of brahmins), Vidvān (scholarly), Brahmajñeya (one who is comprehensive only to Brahmā) Sanātana (the eternal one) Māhiṣmatipati (the lord of Māhiṣmatī), Yodhā (Fighter), Mahākīrti (one of great fame) Mahābhuja (one of great arms), Sukumāra (very gentle and tender), Mahāvīra (Great hero), Mārīghna (destroyer of pestilence), Madirekṣaṇa (one of fascinating eyes), Śatrughna (slayer of foes), Śāśvata (permanent), Śūra (heroic), Śaṅkhabhrt (one who holds the conch), Yogivallabha (A lover of Yogin's) Mahābhāgavata (great devotee of the lord), Dhīmān (Intelligent), Mahābhaya-vināśana (destroyer of great fear), Asādhyavigraha (one whose body cannot be achieved (by others), Divya (Divine) Bhāvavyāptajagattraya (who has emotionally pervaded the three worlds), Jitendriya (one who has conquered the sense organs), Jitārāti (one who has conquered the enemies), Svac-chanda (one who goes as he pleases), Anantavikrama (one of endless exploits), Cakrabhṛt, (one who holds the discus), Paracakraghna (destroyer of the armies of the enemies) Saṁgrāmavidhipūjita (one who is worshipped in accordance with the procedure of battles), Sarvaśāstrakalādhārī (one who Possesses all lores and arts), Virajas (one devoid of Rajas guṇa,), lokavandita (one who is saluted by the whole world), Vīra (Heroic), Vimalasattvāḍhya one who possesses the sattva guṇa devoid of impurities), Mahābalaparākrama (one of great strength and exploit), Vijayaśrīmahāmānya (one who is highly honoured by the glory of conquest), Jitārin (one who has conquered the enemies), Mantranāyaka (leader of the mantras), Khaḍgabhṛt (one who holds swords), Kāmada (one who bestows desires), Kānta (shining one). Kālaghna (destroyer of kāla), Kamalekṣaṇa (the lotus-eyed), Bhadravādapriya (one who is fond of gentle reasoning), Vaidya (Physician), Vibudha (great scholar), Varada (granter of the boon), Vaśī (one who controls all), Mahādhana (one of vast great wealth), Nidhipati (Lord of treasures), Mahāyogī (great Yogin), Gurupriya (fond of the preceptor), Yogāḍhya (one possessing yogic power), Sarvarogaghna (remover of all ailments), Vijitākhilabhūtala (one who makes the whole world conquered), Divyāstrabhṛt (one who holds divine weapons), Ameyātmā (one whose soul cannot be measured), Sarvagoptā (Protector of all), Mahojjvala (excessively shining one), Sarvāyudhadhara (one who holds all weapons), Abhiṣṭaprada (one who grants the desired object), Parapurañjaya (one who conquers enemies' cities), Yogasiddha (one who has realised yogic powers), Mahākāya (one with a huge body), Mahāvṛndaśatādhipa (Lord of hundeals of great hosts), Sarvajñānanidhi (Storehouse of all knowledge), Sarvasiddhidānakṛtodyama (one who attempts to gift away all siddhis).

115. By mentioning these one hundred and eight names (the devotee shall complete the pūjā). May the ten mūrtis spreading over ten directions protect me.

116-121. May all the sense-organs be normal and healthy, may I always have peace. May the remaining light mūrtis shine with their valour and exploit. May the deities stationed in the southeast, southwest, northwest and northeast corners always protect me. May I have happiness without impediment, health and absence of defeat. Let me have loss of misery, absence of obstacles, flourishing progeny, rise of happiness, acquisition of desire, excess of welfare, absence of contrariety, absence of ailment, absence of laziness, fulfilment of desire, loss of death, rise in strength, loss of fear, attainment of renown, splendour, learning, prosperity and great glory. No article of mine shall be destroyed or lost. Let there be the regain of the lost possessions. I must have longevity, delight in the mind, tenderness and gentleness and everything desirable. I shall possess great efficiency and the ability to withstand any one and the status of being invincible. May all these things befall me by glorifying Kārttavīrya, the lord of Haihaya.

122-124. He who reads or learns this kavaca of Kārttavīrya shall attain his desires. It increases merits. It subdues sins. It destroys injuries. It yields peace unto all. It is a secret. It is destructive of fear. It grants success to men. It is auspicious and it accords all riches. The devotee shall see again the wealth of cattle etc. taken away by thieves.

125. (If the devotee sees that his cattle and other wealth has been taken away by the thieves) he shall then repeat the mantra seven times at night in this that within seven days he regains all the articles lost.

126. If the man faces the east and repeats the Mantra twentyseven times he shall be able to withstand the hosts of enemies resembling Devas and Asuras.

127. During arguments and quarrels of terrible nature, he who reads this five times, shall surely be victorious. He will never court failure.

128. In the course of affliction due to any sickness the devotee shall read this (kavaca) three or five times. He is then not afflicted by sickness, death, vampires, goblins or ghosts.

129. For the purpose of liberation from bondage one shall recite this twelve times during the night. There is no doubt about this that the man in bondage is liberated within three days.

130. By means of the same procedure in the activity of achieving anything even the inaccessible can be achieved by the most excellent of the knowers of the mantras within seven days.

131. At the time of setting out on a journey a man shall read this Kavaca, then he will not have anything to fear from wicked thieves, tigers etc. or from enemies.

132. A man shall sprinkle handfuls of water over his body even as he recites this kavaca. He is not then harassed due to kṛtyās (evil influence of a mantra), poisons, ailments or swellings.

133-137. The following twelve names of Kārttavīrya must be repeated always. viz. Kārttavīrya khaladveṣī (beater of the wicked) Kṛtavīryasuta (son of kṛtavīrya), Balī (the strong), Sahasrabāhu (one with a thousand arms), śatrughna (slayer of enemies), Raktavāsas (Red-garmented), Dhanurdhara (one who holds the bow), Raktagandha (one having the smell of blood), Raktamālya (Red-garlanded), Rājā (king), Smartuḥ Abhīṣṭada (one who grants the desired benefit unto one who remembers). He who recites these twelve names becomes wealthy. People will always be subservient to him. O brahmin, the discus of the noblesouled Viṣṇu shall always protect the person who always serves the incarnation of the glorious discus. O brahmin, this kavaca has been heard by me from the leading sage, Dattātreya. It is now recounted to you. It is the bestower of everything desirable. Hold and retain this.

CHAPTER SEVENTYEIGHT

Hanumat Kavaca Nirūpaṇam

(The Kavaca of Hanumān)

Sanat Kumāra said :

1. O leading sage, the kavaca of Kārttavīrya has been recounted to you. Now listen to the kavaca of Māruti (Hanumān) that destroys delusion and brings about victory.

2. By wearing it, all harassments perish instantaneously. There is no doubt about this that every misery originating from goblins and ghosts perishes.

3. Once, I had been to Ānandavanikā forest to see Rāma, the formost among those who delight others and meditating on his pure self.

4. After bowing down to Rāma who is the lord of Ramā (Sītā) and having worshipped the lord of heaven, I occupied the seat pointed out by him, in front of him.

5. There, on being asked by me the leading king Śrī Rāma himself told me eagerly everything that happened ending with Rāvaṇa's death.

6. Thereafter at the end of the narration of the story, the lord gave me the kavaca of Hanumān. I shall recount it to you. It should not be disclosed to anybody.

7. In view of his considering Hanumān as a child of his, Śrī Rāma pointed out this Kavaca that will surely be the bestower of worldly pleasures and salvation, this kavaca of the son of Añjanā.

8. May Hanumān protect me from the east, Pavanātmaja (son of wind-god) from the south. May the slayer of Akṣa protect me in the west and may Sāgaratāraka (one who has crossed the ocean) protect me in the north.

9. Let the beloved son of Kesarī, the leader of monkeys protect the upper region, let the devotee of Viṣṇu protect me below and may Pāvanī the son of the wind-god protect me in the middle.

10. May Laṅkādāhaka (one who burnt Laṅkā) protect me continuously from all mishaps. May the minister as Sugrīva protect my head. Let the son of Vāyu protect my forehead.

11. May Mahāvīra continuously protect me in the middle of the eyebrows. May the lord of monkeys the remover of chāyā (shadow of Sītā) protect the two eyes.

12. May the servant of Śrīrāma protect the cheeks and the roots of the ears. May the son of Añjanā protect the tip of the nose, may Harīśvara (lord of the monkeys protect the mouth.

13. May the enemy of Daityas protect the neck, may the conqueror of the enemies of Devas protect the shoulders, may Mahātejas (one of excessive refulgence) protect the arms, Caraṇāyudha (one having the feet as weapons) protect the hands.

14. May Nakhāyudha (one who has his nail as his weapons) protect my nails, may the lord of monkeys protect the belly, may Mudrāpahārī (who carried Rāma's signet ring) protect the chest, may Bhujāyudha (one with his arms as weapons) protect the sides.

15. May Laṅkānirbhañjana (the demolisher of Laṅkā) continuously protect at the back. May Śrī Rāma Bhakta (devotee of Śrī Rāma) protect the umbilicus and may Anilātmaja (son of wind-god) protect the hips.

16. May Mahāprajña (the highly intelligent one) protect the private parts, may Atithipriya (one fond of guests) protect the buttocks, may Laṅkāprāsādabhañjana (one who breaks the palaces in Laṅkā) protect the thighs and knees.

17. May the excellent monkey protect the calves, may Mahābala (one of excessive strength) protect the heels, may Acaloddhāraka (the uplifter of the mountain) and Bhāskarasannibha (one who resembles the sun) protect my feet.

18. May Sattvādhya (one possessing stamina) protect the limbs, let him protect the toes always. May Mahāśūra (the great hero) protect the parts of the face. May Ātmavān (self-possessed one) protect the hands.

19. May the monkey, son of the wind-god protect us day and night in the three worlds whether we are standing, going, seated, drinking or eating.

20-23. May the glorious son of the three-eyed lord, may he of the most excellent quality, protect me. Whether I am erring or not erring or lying in the thick forest or in water, whether I am in the dry land or in the atmosphere, whether on the mountain or in the ocean, whether on fire or on a tree, during war or in a terrible danger, may Virāṭrūpadhara (one who assumes the huge cosmic form) protect us. May the lord protect us from the witches, Dākinī, Śākinī etc, pestilence, Kālarātrī (Black Night) and Marīcikā (mirage), may the Vibhu (all pervading lord) protect me from Piśācas (ghosts and ogresses when I lie down. May the intelligent Divyadehadhara (one who has assumed divine lobies, Sarvasattvabhayaṅkara (one who is terrific of of all animals), Sādhakendrāvana (one who protects a leading aspirant) protect me always in everything.

24. May Sarvarūpa (the omniformed), Sarvajña (the omniscient) Sṛṣṭisthitikara (the cause of creation and sustenance) protect me. On seeing his terrible form all terrible fellows run away.

25. He is Brahmā himself. He is Viṣṇu himself. He is lord Maheśvara himself. He is stationed in the solar disc. He is the bestower of glory. May he protect me in the three units of time.

26-27. He is devoted to Rāma. May he always protect the leading Sādhaka. On hearing his voice the Daityas, Dānavas and Rākṣasas, the non human beings and animals, the mobile and the immobile beings become terrified or free from fear as befitting their own actions. In every Kalpa many holy stories about him are heard circulated.

28-30. Whatever is seen as the outcome of the creation of vidhātṛ (Brahmā) or Dhātṛ (creator) himself, you shall know that to be pervaded by the form of the monkey; the unsullied supreme spirit. I am he who is the lord. I am my own (?). I myself am aṇu (the minute of being) and bṛhat (the largest being). I am of the form of Ṛk Yajus and Sāma. I am the threefold praṇava. I am the sacrifice. By means of Ātmasamādhi (ecstatic trance) I bow down to it, to myself, to every thing.

31. I bow down to him who holds many and infinite cosmic eggs, whose form is that of Brahman who is of the nature of samīraṇa (the wind god) and whose form is that of the Ātman.

32. Obeisance unto Hanumān, obeisance to the son of the wind god; obeisance to the devotee of Śrī Rāma, obeisance to the great Śyāma (dark-complexioned lord.)

33. Obeisance to the heroic monkey, who brought about the alliance with Sugrīva, who crossed the great ocean and who burned the whole of Laṅkā.

34. Obeisance unto him who dispelled the sorrow of Sītā, who carried Rāma's signet ring, and who is the cause of Rāvaṇa's end. Obeisance unto Sarvottarātman (one who is of the form that is greater than everything).

35. Obeisance, obeisance unto the cause of destruction of the sacrifice of Meghanāda. Obeisance unto the destroyer of the Aśoka grove; unto the bestower of victory.

36. Obeisance unto the heroic son of the wind god, unto him who passes the sky, unto him who cut off the head of the chief watchman of the grove, unto him who smashed down the palaces in Laṅkā.

37. Obeisance unto you, the messenger of Rāma unto him whose complexion is like that of shining gold, unto him who has a long tail and unto him who had contributed to the success of Saumitri (Lakṣmaṇa).

38. Obeisance, unto the slayer of Akṣa, unto him who warded off the miraculous weapon of Brahmā, unto him who removed the wound 'caused' by the great 'Śakti' in the body of Lakṣmaṇa.

39. Obeisance, obeisance unto the slayer of the Rākṣasas, the enemies and evil spirits. Obeisance, obeisance unto the delighter of the groups of heroic bears and monkeys.

40. Obeisance unto you the destroyer of the soldiers in the enemy army, unto the destroyer of weapons and missiles. Obeisance, obeisance unto the destroyer of poison, enemies and fear.

41. Obeisance unto the destroyer of fear from great enemies, unto the sole cause of protection to the devotees, unto him who benumbs (i.e. nullifies) the mantras urged by others as well as those who chant the mantras.

42. Obeisance, obeisance, unto him who causes rocks to float on water, unto him who swallows the disc of the rising sun, unto the remover of misery.

43. Obeisance unto the terrible one turning nails for weapons, unto one who uses his teeth as weapons, unto the traveller in the sky, unto Sarva (Śiva i.e. Hanumān who is an incarnation of Śiva), obeisance unto you of adamantine body.

44. Obeisance unto one who is stationed in every village, unto one who seeks the death of goblins and ghosts, obeisance unto one who has the weapon of the mountain placed in his hand, upto one who is the weapon of Rāma.

45. Obeisance unto you with the lion cloth as the sole garment, unto one who is devoted to Rāma (engrossed in devotion to Rāma) unto one who is the sun in the southern region, unto one who appears as the rising moon unto the good.

46. Obeisance unto the destroyer of the pain due to the wounds from Kṛtyās (evil influence of mantra), unto the remover of all pain, unto one who offered alliance and caused the victory of Pārtha (i.e. Arjuna) in the battle at the behest of his Master.

47. Obeisance unto one who contributes to the success of devotees, in the divine arguments and in battle, unto one who produces the Kilakilārava (a sound expressive of joy) and unto one who produces terrible sounds.

48. Obeisance unto one who causes the saṁstambhaja (steady and stunned state) of all fevers and ailments; unto the remover of terror; unto one who is particularly satisfied with the diet of the fruits in the forest.

49-52. Obeisance unto you who caused the construction of the bund in the great ocean by means of rocks.

Thus, O brahmin, the auspicious kavaca of Māruti has been recounted. This should not be imparted to anyone and every one. It must be strenuously guarded. This must be written by means of the eight fragrant things. He who wears this kavaca round his neck or on the right arm becomes victorious at every step. Of what avail is much talk if it is practised a hundred thousand times reverentially and repeated ? He will achieve even the impossible and the unachievable.

CHAPTER SEVENTYNINE

Hanumaccaritram

(The Story of the life of Hanumān)

Sanatkumāra said :—

1. Henceforth, I shall mention another thing that destroys sins viz. the life story of the son of Vāyu. It is the story that has been recounted to his own people by Rāma, the resident of Ānandavana.

2. Let my devotion, the devotion of Śrī Rāmacandra be a lasting one to Hanumān who possessed of a huge body as soon as he was born and who was well reputed for his prowess.

3. O Kumāraka (i.e. Sanatkumāra) even as I recount the story of Kumāra (the son i.e. Hanumān), listen to it attentively. It is the story that dispels the sins of those who listen to it and those who read it.

4. O Brahmin, I wish for the constant contact with my companion, in the form of a monkey. It is a secret in my abode in the excellent grove called Ānandavana.

5. Many male and female friends of mine surround me here. They are devoid of ailments. They sport about here always, manifestly and secretly.

6. I shall reveal unto you with great delight of my mind the secret incident that befell me in the course of a certain incarnation of mine.

7. Formerly, in the abode of King Daśaratha I had manifested myself. O sage, I manifested in the form of Caturvyūha (group of four) in his three wives.

8. Thereafter, within a few years Viśvāmitra the leading brahmin, came there and requested my father the king.

9. The righteous-souled king sent me to the Siddhāśrama in the forest along with Lakṣmaṇa in order to destroy the Yakṣas and Rākṣasas.

10. After going to the Āśrama (hermitage) we destroyed Subāhu and Mārīca who were defiling the hermitage. The sage became delighted then.

11-16. He gave me a set of weapons. He permitted me to stay there, for a month. Then the intelligent son of Gādhi, knowing the future affairs took us eagerly to Mithilā. There he showed us the bow belonging to Rudra. By breaking the bow I won his (King of Mithilā's) daughter Sītā who was held as the prize and was comparable to celestial women. On the way I dispelled smilingly the arrogance of the scion of the family of Bhṛgu. Afterwards, I came back to Ayodhyā, the city of my father. Then realising that I have a place in the mind of the subjects, the king wanted to crown me as the heir-apparent with great delight. O sage, on hearing it, his beloved wife Kaikeyī whose mind was defiled for the purpose of completing the task of devas, said thus : May my son named Bharata be crowned as the hair-apparent. May Rāma be exiled to the Daṇḍaka forest for fourteen years.

17-20. On hearing it, I became ready to go to the forest accompanied by my younger brother and my wife though not told so expressly by the king. I went to Citrakūṭa. There I sustained myself permanently with the fruits of the forest and by means of flesh. Living there, I happened to know about the death of the king.

Bharata and Śatrughna, my honourable brothers came there and informed me. They were sad. They had been accompanied by our mother, preceptors, ministers and the citizens.

Thereafter, I went to Pañcavatī and built my hermitage there, I stayed there for three years accompanied by my wife and my brother.

21-23. Then in the thirteenth year the demon named Rāvaṇa abducted my beloved wife Sītā by means of deception and unseen by me. Thereafter, with distress evident in my face, I went in search of my wife and reached the mountain Ṛṣyamūka. I entered into alliance with the Lord of monkeys. After killing Vālī, Sugrīva was installed in his place.

24-27. With herds of monkeys he rendered help into me. After quarrelling with Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa, my devotee, came unto me. He was crowned as the native king of Laṅkā. After killing Rāvaṇa in the battle along with his sons, ministers and kinsmen and taking Sītā who was rendered pure (in the fire) I came back to Ayodhyā. After sometime, O brahmin, Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa were invited at the Śrāddha of my father. The excellent brāhmins of the (famous) six families were also invited. All those who had been invited came to Ayodhyā.

28. Except Vibhīṣaṇa all those had come. The excellent scion of the family of Raghu began to be worried over this. Śambhu (Śiva) came there in the guise of a brāhmaṇa along with those of the six families.

29-30. After the contact with Vibhīṣaṇa Śambhu was asked by me. (He said) taking me to the Dravidian country "release me from the bondage of the brahmins." Agastya and other leading sages were invited by me to the Śrāddha. After being fed they went to their respective hermitage regions.

31-32. Then after some time the brahmins, devas, daityas and rulers of men were invited by Gautama. All of them were honoured in the Yajña. The crystal Liṅga was installed on the mountain of Trayambaka (three-eyed lord). Devas, Daityas, kings and brahmins worshipped it and stayed there.

33. When the assembly spread further and when the Liṅga was worshipped by everyone Gautama too worshipped Śaṅkara at midday.

34-35. All of them were clad in white dress. They dusted their limbs with ashes of Bhasma. At every spot they made marks of Tripuṇḍraka with white Bhasma.

36. After bowing to Bhārgava all of them performed the rite of Bhūtaśuddhi[1] (the consecration of the Bhūtaśuddhi elements). One shall meditate on the cavity in the middle of the lotus of the heart. The five elements too (are meditated upon) are also there.

In the midst of them there is a great void and in the centre of that void one should meditate upon Mahāsana who is free from defilement and who is ever free from impurities. He is brilliant and auspicious.

37. The elements (of the body) are impure and defiled because of its contact with Karman (deeds). This body should

---

1. (Bhūta Śuddhi). The purification of the elements, the constituents of the physical body, is to be done by means of prāṇāyāma. First of all one should think of the pārthiva maṇḍala as having the shape of a square, stretched from the feet to the tip of the head with la as its seed, the overlord being Sadyojāta, the superintending deity is Brahmā and which is made of nivṛttikalā. Conceiving thus one should urge the vital air pass through suṣumnā as to reach the dvādaśānta by five upgoing stress in order to get the earth free from its association of gandha, rasa, rūpa, sparśa and śabda and thus make it a pure earth. Tnis procedure continues upto ākāśa and makes them pure elements free from the touch of other elements. The seed letter differs as regards the element and so is the stress for the each. The pṛthvi needs five, water four, fire three, air two and the void (ākāśa) one. Thus when ākāśa has become purified one should flood the whole body with the mūlamantra.

The procedure of Bhūtaśuddhi is given differently in another text which says that the aspirant will conceive himself as one with the deity and raise Kuṇḍalinī from mūlādhāra and take the jīvātman from the heart and unite both and strive in such a way as the both should pass through different cakras. Then finally both should be united with Paramaśiva in sahasrāra where all the tattvas from Pṛthvī to ahaṅkāra are conceived to have been dissolved. Then thinking the seed mantra of Vāyu in the left nostril one should perform a praṇāma, while doing this he should dry up both the body and the pāpapuruṣa lying in his left belly. Then he should do another prāṇāyāma beginning with the right nostril. While doing so he should make the japa of Vahni bīja and thus burn the body along with the pāpapuruṣa. Then he should conceive the candrabīja in the left nostril and taking the moon in the forehead, he should make a Kumbhaka with the seed mantra vam and then exhale the air with the right one repeating lam and at the same time think of his body as having been built again.

be burnt with the help of the void of lamp by means of the fire of knowledge.

38-39. After burning aham (ego) the covering, he shall burn the void also. After burning the void and then Vāyu (the wind) he shall burn the element of fire. Thereafter he shall burn the element of water, the element of earth and the Guṇas (Sattva etc) depending thereon. Thereafter, he shall burn the body itself.

40-42. After thus burning the elements etc. by means of the fire of knowledge, the embodied one shall meditate on Viṣṇu stationed in the middle of the flame full of the tasty juice of bliss. Auspicious rays resembling the rays of the moon come out of the limbs of Śiva. With those rays mixed with nectarine liquid, the flame becomes subdued and very cool like the rays of the moon. The flood becomes solidified by the spreading nectar and its lustre. He shall think that all the luring beings are swept off by the flood.

43. After performing the rite of purification of the elements thus, the man instantaneously becomes pure. He then becomes worthy of the holy rite. In the rite of repetition of the mantra thereafter, he becomes worthy of performing the worship. In order to purify the sins of slaughter of a brahmin he shall meditate thus afterwards.

44. After meditating thus and imposing the brilliant light of the moon on the Liṅga of Śiva by means of meditation, (the devotee) shall think of Sadāśiva, the unchanging one, in the middle of the lamp. He shall perform worship by means of the five-syllabled mantra.

45. He shall perform all upacāras (rendering of services) such as invocation etc. and then perform the ablution of Śaṅkara as before, The pedestal may be made of Udumbara (Fig tree) or it may be made of silver or gold. The entire pedestal must be covered with a piece of cloth etc.

46. After making the creation by means of bubbles he shall make a Nāga (serpent) on every pedestal. On the topmost pedestal he shall make two Nāgas to the right and left of the Lord and very near him.

47. He shall place a japā flower (China rose) in the middle of the two serpents over a cloth folded twelve times and white in colour. In the middle thereof Maheśa in the form of the Liṅga placed in the pedestal shall be worshipped.

48-49. All those devotees, after performing thus, offered duly five and eight fragrant substances. They worshipped with flowers, leaves, śrīphalas (bilva fruits) as well as ricegrains, with or without gingelly seeds. They then offered incense and the lamp according to the proper procedure. After completing the rites of presenting various offerings they completed the rituals and sang and danced there.

50-54. At the time of the holy rites, a disciple of Gautama named Śaṅkarātman, came there. He was dressed like a mad man. He was naked. He used to assume various guises. In some places he was an excellent brahman, while in some he resembled a Śūdra; in some other places he was a Yogin or an ascetic. He used to shout, jump, dance, eulogise and sing. In some places he wept, tried to hear repeatedly, fell and sprang up. He was endowed with the perfect knowledge of Śiva and was full of great bliss. He reached there at the time of meal and went near Gautama. He took his meal with his teacher and sometime partook his leavings of the food.

55. Sometimes he used to lick the vessels. From some places he fled silently. Sometimes he took the hand of his teacher but partook of the food himself.

56-57. Sometimes he used to pass urine inside the house, at some places he used to smear his body with mud. On all occasions, when the teacher saw him, he used to catch hold of his hands, take him inside the temple and make him sit on his own seat and feed him. The sage Gautama took his meal from the same vessel.

58-62. Once his beautiful wife Ahalyā desired to test his mind. She called the disciple and asked him joyfully, "Take your food. Without any hesitation". He ate everything whatever he was asked to eat by the wife of the teacher.

O brahmin, he drank the beverage and the fire in the same manner as water. He chewed thorn as though it were cooked rice. After chewing it he remained as before. Seeing him in front he was invited by the daughters of the sages for taking his meal. He drank and ate the articles handed over by them viz. lump of clay, dung, water etc, mud as well as pieces of wood. He was delighted to eat and drink them.

Such was the sage who had the form resembling a caṇḍāla. Taking a pair of torn old shoes in his hands he approached Vṛṣaparvan. He was chatting and laughing then. He was clad in a dress as one befitting a Śūdra.

63. He stood naked between Īśa and Vṛṣaparvan, without knowing him, Vṛṣaparvan inflicted tortures on him and cut off his head.

64. When the excellent brahmin was killed the whole universe consisting of mobile and immobile beings became extremely wrathful. So also the sages standing there.

65. Gautama, the great and noble soul, became excessively sad. Tears gushed out of his eyes evincing his inner sorrows.

66-67. In the presence of all daityas Gautama spoke these words. "What sin has he committed, wherefore his head has been cut off? The Śivayogin was always superior even to my life. Truly, my death also shall take place, for the teacher is the very soul of the disciple.

68. Certainly our death will take place there where the death of Śaivas (the devotees of Śiva) who possess piety and virtue and who always dwell on Śiva, has been witnessed.

69. On hearing it, Śukra, the preceptor of Asuras, the most excellent of the wise people said thus : I shall resucitate Bhārgava, the favourite of Śaṅkara.

70. "O brahmin, why then, do you die? See the power of my penance." Even, as the leading brahmin was saying this Gautama too died.

71-72. When he died Śukra too abandoned his life by means of his yogic power. On realising his death thus, Prahlāda and other leading Daityas, Devas, kings, brahmins —nay all of them were dead. It was surprising. Then the army of the intelligent Bāṇa died.

73-75. Distressed much on account of sorrow Ahalyā began to cry loudly. She lamented now and then. Lord Vīrabhadra, the great yogin, who was worshipped by Gautama along with Maheśa, saw everything and became angry. (He said) Alas ! a great number of the devotees of Śiva have been killed. I shall intimate Śiva and shall do whatever he says. Deciding thus he went to the great mountain Mandara.

76. After bowing down to Virūpākṣa (Śiva) he gave an account of everything to him. Śiva then spoke these words to Hari and Brahmā who were present there.

77. Knowing me the granter of boons my devotees had committed such a deed of this risk. O Viṣṇu, I shall go and see the deeds of hazard that had been done by them.

78-81. After saying this and mounting his bull (Śiva started). The cāmaras (chowries) were held by the wind-god. The highly splendid umbrellas were held by the well-dressed Nandika. The excessively white golden staffs, or which the others are not worthy to hold, were also held for the Lord. After securing the permission of Maheśa, Hari stood near the serpent. He was characterised by Kaustubha and shone by means of slightly red and blue umbrellas. With the permission of Śiva, Brahmā too rode in his swan. The creator shone by means of two umbrellas resembling the lustre of Indragopa (glow-worm). Indra and other Devas were on their respective vehicles.

82. All of them set-off and were applauded by means of different musical instruments. In the company of crores of Gaṇas (attendants) they arrived at the hermitage of Gautama.

83-84. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara saw that wonderful sight. Śaṅkara resuscitated his devotee back to life by glancing at him with the corner of his left eye. He spoke to Gautama, "I am delighted with you. Choose the boon." On hearing his words, Gautama said eagerly.

85. "O lord of Devas, if you are pleased, if a boon is to be granted to me, O Īśvara may I ever have the ability to worship your liṅga.

86-89. O three-eyed lord, this has been chosen by me. Hear about another one. This is my highly blessed disciple. This fortunate person had nothing to be discarded nor to be accepted. He never looked at a thing worthy to be seen with a feeling of myness. He does not have the same sort of attachment to things worthy of being smelt or fit to be drunk or any other similar thing—since he does everything with this knowledge, he is a yogin of great renown. He is a person taking up the appearance of a changed madman. There is no one who hates him, nor any one who may violently injure him. O lord, this boon be given to me that these dead people may become alive."

90-94. On hearing it, the lord of Umā, the unchanging one was delighted and looked at Hari. The lord of the universe entered partially alongwith Vāyu. Śaṅkarātmā hence became the son of wind-god assuming the form of Hari (monkey). He is the most excellent of monkeys. These are synonymous viz. the overlord, Viṣṇu, Śiva, the great one etc. He will survive till the end of the Kalpa (cycle of time). He assumes every form as he pleases. He carries out my behests. He is a devotee of Rāma and his body is worshipped. Īśāna, Hanumān will remain alive for endless Kalpas with a joyful mood. You have made this abode spacious and well-built. Every day, for a moment we shall stay here willingly accepting your invitation in all our different forms. After being worshipped we shall go to our respective places.

95. The Gautama, the leading sage, spoke to the lord of the universe—"O Lord, I am requesting for something unbecoming. A suppliant does not look unto defects.

96-98. O Lord of Devas, this is something inaccessible even to Brahmā and others. May it be given if it appeals to you."

Thereafter, looking at Viṣṇu and holding him by the hands, Sadāśiva laughingly told the lotus-eyed deity as follows : "O Govinda, your belly is emaciated (depressed). Is food to be given into you? Enter the house in the same manner as it is your own house and take your meal. Go to the abode of Pārvatī who will give food to you to your fill."

99. After saying this and holding him by the hand the lord went to a lonely place after instructing Nandin to be the gatekeeper in the manner mentioned before.

100. Going over to Gautama he said to him about the utterance of Viṣṇu. "O sage, we, the lords of Devas, are desirous of taking food. Get the cooked rice ready."

101. After saying this, Śaṅkara went to lonely spot along with Vāsudeva. The two excellent deities got into a soft bed and lay down.

102. They conversed with each other and got up, desirous of taking a bath. The two excellent deities went to a vast and majestic lake.

103. The sages and the Rākṣasas too performed aquatic sports throwing water (splashing one another) mutually. They sported separately on either side.

104-105. Then Viṣṇu and Maheśa splashed the water in quick succession with a handful of water alongwith filaments of the lotus. Śaṅkara splashed it on Hari's face with lotus-like eyes. Since the filaments of the flower fell on them Keśava closed his eyes.

106. In the meantime Maheśvara got on to the shoulders of Hari. He caught hold of Hari's head and immersed it (under water).

107. Coming up and getting afflicted again and again Hari subtly toppled Śaṅkara.

108. He then caught hold of his legs and pulled him and whirled him. He (Śiva) hit Hari's chest and felled Acyuta down.

109. Hari then got up. Taking handful of water he showered it on the head of Śambhu. Then Śambhu (did likewise), then Hari (did so).

110. Thus the aquatic sport went on. Among the groups of sages, in the course of the hustle and bustle their matted hair became united and dishevelled.

111. Thus being agitated their matted hair got entangled into one another. The leading sages tugged at one another's matted hair.

112. The stronger ones among them dragged the weaker ones inflicting pain on them. They made them fall down, shout and weep.

113. While this tumultuous activity in water was going on, the lord of monkeys (Hanumān) danced and shouted in the sky.

114. He played on Vipañcī (lute) and other musical instruments. He sang a Lalita (lightmusic) song. He sang the light song in all its ten modes.

115. In a worldly way Śaṅkara listened to the sweet music. He then himself began to sing slowly.

116-117. While the lord of Devas himself was singing the reposing note of the Dhruva (the introductory verse of a song) after taking a galaka (a musical instrument) Vāsudeva began to beat the drum by means of his own hands. His note was endowed with all characteristics. It had taken up the burden of the song. The continuous flow was nectarine. The beating of the drum defied the sound of the song.

118. The lotus-born fourfaced deity Tumburu was very vociferous. Gautama and others beat the time and the musician was the son of the wind god.

119. Then Hanumān, the lord of the monkeys, sang sweetly. What was fading and gloomy became revived in spirit and lustre. The weak and lean ones became well-nourished.

120. Hence everyone decided his own song (i.e. mode of singing) and sang. Devas, the groups of sages and Dānavas became silent.

121. Hanumān alone was the songster and all others were the listeners when the midday advanced and Hanumān went on singing. Devas mounted on their respective vehicles and started.

122. Maheśa who was fond of music caught hold of the lord of monkeys (and said) "O monkey you are being commanded by me unhesitatingly, get on to the bull.

123. Face me and sing me a song". Then the leading monkey spoke to lord Maheśvara.

124. You alone have the ability to ride on the bull. None else. O lord, by riding on your vehicle I would be a sinner.

125. O lord of Devas, ride on me. I shall traverse the sky lifting up Śiva. Facing you I shall sing too, see."

126-128. Then the lord rode on Hanumān like his bull. When lord Śaṅkara mounted the neck of Hanumān, he peeled off his skin, turned back his face and began to sing as joyously as before. Listening to the nectarine music Śambhu came to the house of Gautama. All the groups of Devas, sages and Dānavas came there. At the time of lunch they were all worshipped by Gautama.

129. Everything was made of wood such as the dry furniture etc. In the house they began to develop sports when Hanumān sang.

130. It was surprising that every one's vision remained still around that song.

131-135. Hanumān had only two arms. He worshipped at the feet of Īśa. He had ornaments on all his limbs. He was a young person of delighful physical form. In the middle of his head he kept his joined palms in reverence. Śaṅkara caught hold of the head of Hanuman with his two hands and turned the face towards the east. Hanumān was seated in the lotus posture. Śaṅkara set one of his feet on the joined palms of Hanumān and the other on his face. With two of his toes the lord lovingly caught hold of Hanumān's nose. The other leg he slowly passed over his shoulders, face, neck, chest, middle of the breasts, heart, belly and the umbilical region. Śaṅkara then grasped his head and bent it a little. On the way he touched his back with his chin. Śiva put a pearl necklace round the neck of Hanumān.

136. Then Viṣṇu said these words to Maheśāna. In the entire sphere of the cosmos there is none equal to Hanumān.

137. Your state wherein the monkey is stationed is beyond the scope of Vedas and the comprehension of Devas. Your state which the monkey has attained is unmanifest even to all Upaniṣads.

138. Your state is not steadily maintained by means of Yama etc. and Practice in the lotus like heart of great Yogins. But it remains steady firmly in Hanumān.

139. Īśa, you have been devoutly worshipped every day for a thousand years, nay, crores of years. Still your state has not been shown by you.

140. It is said in the world, it is a very popular saying in the world, that Śambhu is fond of Nārāyaṇa and Hari is fond of Śambhu. But I have no such good fortune.

141. On hearing these words of Viṣṇu Śambhu said joyously . " O Hari, nowhere is any one so much loved by me as you.

142-143. Or Pārvatī may be equal to you; she is not different."

Then Gautama bowed down to the great lord and submitted thus "Ameyātman (one whose soul is non-comprehensible) unto Devas, storehouse of mercy, mid-day, is past. Thus is the time for food unto all.

144. Then after performing the ācamana rite, lord Mahādeva entered the house of Gautama along with Viṣṇu and started taking his food.

145-147. Śiva was bedecked in all these ornaments viz. gemset rings, anklets, excellent girdle resembling the lightening (in splendour), many necklaces, gold coin necklaces round the neck, jewelled dangling ear-rings, bracelets, bangles and many other ornaments, silken garments. sacred thread, upper garments, flowers in the excellent tresses of hair and unguents prepared out of five fragrant substances.

Thus bedecked Śiva seated himself in the excellent seat. He made Hari sit on an excellent seat facing him.

148. The two excellent deities Hari and Īśa were seated facing each other, with great devotion. Gautama offered them cooked rice in gold vessel.

149-153. There were thirty different types of edibles, four types of milk pudding, well cooked and well served food-stuffs. He offered two types (of other edibles) uncooked and partially cooked. In this there were thirty varieties. There were hundreds of good bulbous roots and vegetables. There were twentyfive varieties of side dishes cooked and soaked in ghee. There was candied sugar and also mango, banana, dates and pomegranate fruits in sugar syrup and other sweet and ripe fruits were supplied.

There were priyālaka fruit (Chironjia sapida), Sambu (rose apple) and Vikantaka fruits also. After offering these and other similar substances unto the lords the brahmin offered them water for the ācamana rite and said "Pray, eat."

154. When all of them started taking food Gautama himself took up a delicate and large fan and fanned Śiva and Viṣṇu.

155. Parameśvara wished to play a practical joke. He told Hari "O Viṣṇu, look at Hanumān, how that monkey eats."

156. When Hari was looking at the monkey, Mahesvara dropped the liquid flow in Viṣṇu's vessel even while the groups of sages were looking on.

157-161. He gave the leavings of his food, the milk pudding etc. to Hanumān. (Hanumān said :) "O Lord, your ucchiṣṭa (leavings of food) cannot be eaten according to your own utterance". Then Śiva said "Unworthy (of being taken by men) in my naivedya the leaf, the flower, the fruit etc. After offering all these to me the devotee shall consign them to a well" (Hanumān said) "If it is not eaten amounts to paying heed to) your words. If it is eaten (what we expect) is your mercy. If the Naivedya is offered unto a Bāṇa-liṅga or to a self-born liṅga, or to one made of lunar stone or to one stationed in the heart, the partaking thereof should be known as on a par with the Cāndrāyaṇa rite" (Then Śiva said) "Thus is the time for meal now. Discussing other things is uninteresting. I shall mention afterwards unhesitatingly." Then the sage Gautama consecrated the water.

162. He filled the water pot with the water of the lake. The body of the water pots was slightly red. They were glossy and very delicate. Since they had been washed many times they shone well. The water of the lake was purified by means of the nut of the clearing nut plant (before filling up the pots).[1]

163. The fresh sand bank of the river must be covered with fine white new cloths. The water pots filled with water should be placed over them. He shall then smear it and put inside the cavity nalaka (lotus stalk), jāti (jasmine flower) mustā

1. For the purification of water Suśruta prescribes seven methods. They are clearing nut (kataka), a gem called gomeda, the root of the lotus plant, the root of moss, cloth, pearl and jewel.

Suśruta also gives some ways of cooling the water. They are also seven. To keep the jar of water in the strong blowing wind, to put cold water inside, to stir the water with some sticks, fanning, filtering with cloth, putting the jar in the sand, or placing it in a swing.

The mantras beginning with Iśāna etc. are to be recited thus:

(a) Om Iśānaḥ sarvavidyānām Iśvaraḥ sarvabhūtānām brahmādipati brahmaṇodhipatir brahmā śivo me'stu sadāśiva Om.

(b) Om Tatpuruṣāya vidmahe mahādevāya dhīmahi tanno rudraḥ pracodayāt.

(c) Om Vāmadevāya namo jyeṣṭhāya namaḥ śreṣṭhāya namo rudrāya namaḥ kālāya namaḥ Kālavikaraṇāya namo Balavikaraṇāya namo Balapramathanāya namo manonmanāya namaḥ.

(d) Om sadyojātam prapadyāmi sadyojātāya vai namaḥ bhave' bhave' nādibhave bhajasva mām bhavodbhavāya namaḥ.

(e) Om aghorebhyo'tha ghorebhyo ghorāghoratarebhyaḥ sarvataḥ sarva sarvebhyo namaste'stu rudra rūpebhyaḥ.

a plant), puṭaka (lotus) or any plant belonging to their species and powdered sand. A garland as white as sandal and the rays of the moon be put into the folded cup (made of leaf). After a yāma (3 hours) the water is filtered with cloth. The root of lotus stalk is applied. Bakula and Pāṭala flowers are then put therein.

164. The bunch of Śephālikā flowers is kept therein and the water is sprinkled. After performing the primary function of the cleaning of water he shall cover the Śreṇi (Sekapātra—a vessel for sprinkling water) with a piece of soft and delicate cloth containing minute camphor.

165. He shall then place the water vessels in a shady place free from the sun with gentle breeze blowing and fanning them with delicate fans.

166-169. He shall sprinkle them with cool water rendered fragrant as well as the sprinkling vessel. Only, thoroughly undefiled, shall, kings and their daughters have the approach of them. (Before approaching) they must wash their feet and limbs and be clad with good garments. They must apply to their armpits and necks the exudation of Aguru, tawny like honey but not so thick. They shall place Jāvaka ? Jālaka (net) or unblown flower over their heads alongwith unguents of five fragrant substances and decorate their pretty tresses with flowers. They are auspicious-looking and pure. The ladies, thus, honoured, are considered to have attained the form made of saffron.

170-172. The young ladies shall be charming in all their limbs by putting on ornaments. The water should be made to serve by the ladies or men of this kind. At the time of offering the water the covering of it which has been covered, slightly with delicate cloth, be removed. They shall then place the water pot on the left hand. They shall untie the rope tied round it and pour water. Gautama, the holy sage and lord, did everything in this manner.

173-181. When Maheśa and all other noble-souled ones had taken their meal, when they had washed their hands and feet, when they had smeared themselves with unguents, when Maheśvara, the lord of Devas, had occupied a high seat, Devas and the groups of sages occupied lower seats. Pieces of nuts, circular in shape, without corners were put in jewelled vessels. (The nuts were round not so thick nor very minute Śvetapatras (betel leaves) were washed and placed therein. Pieces of camphor were ground and Gautama offered it to Śaṅkara. When the sage said these words "O lord, take the tāmbūla" (betel leaf), Śiva said, "O monkey, take the tāmbūla and give me the candied sugar." The monkey then said, "O Maheśvara, I am not pure enough. How can a monkey be pure since he eats different kinds of fruits ?"

'On hearing it Virūpākṣa said to the excellent monkey, "At my words everything becomes pure. At my words the poison becomes nectar. The Vedas stand by my utterance. Devas and others stand by my utterance. Dharma is realised at my words. Mokṣa (liberation) is realised, it is said, at my words. The Purāṇas, the Āgamas and the Smṛtis all stand by my utterance. Hence take the tāmbūla and give me the candied sugar.

182. Hari (the monkey) accepted tāmbūla with his left hand alongwith the arecanut piece (and candied sugar). Then he collected and handed over the candied sugar.

183-184. Taking the camphor which was offered first, Śiva ate the same. When the lord had finished taking the betel leaves Pārvati came to the abode of the sage from the Mandāra mountain taking the hands of Jayā and Vijayā. After bowing to the feet of the lord she stood there with her head bent down.

185-187. Raising up her face the three-eyed lord spoke thus : "O goddess, the chief of Devas, an offence has been committed by me for your sake, since I took my meal without you. O beautiful lady, listen to another thing. I have committed a great sin by leaving you in our own abode. O goddess of Devas, you ought to forgive me. Glance at me eschewing your anger." Although addressed thus she did not speak any word. She said, "No, I shall not speak," saying this she went away with Arundhatī.

188. On realizing that she was about to go out, the sage bowed down and prostrated like a staff. Then Śiva said, "O Gautama, what do you wish ?"

189. On seeing the goddess Pārvatī smiling, Gautama said, "I shall be obliged if you take food in my house."

190. Then Śiva said to the brahmin Gautama who kept his palms joined in reverence, "O brahmin, I shall take food in your house with the permission of Śaṅkara."

191. Then Gautama went to Śaṅkara and within a twentieth part of an hour obtained his permission. He hastened to the house and fed the goddess Girijā and Arundhatī.

192. After taking her food, Pārvatī, bedecked in all scented flowers etc. went to Hara accompanied by thousands of her girl attendants.

193. Then Śaṅkara said to the goddess, "Go to the abode of Gautama. I shall perform my Sandhyā prayers and then come to you."

194. The goddess, thus being addressed, went to Gautama's abode. All those who were desirous of saying their sandhyā prayers came out.

195. Maheśa and all others performed their sandhyā in the lake. Śambhu sat there facing the north. He performed the nyāsa rite and the repetition of the mantra.

196-197. Then Viṣṇu, the highly brilliant one, spoke thus to Maheśa, "You are the one bowed to by all, worshipped by all and invoked in all the Yajñas. How will you then, perform the Japa ? Joining their palms in reverence all worship you alone.

198. O Maheśvara, you are the bestower of fruits of pious deeds like obeisance etc. You are the eminent one of all Devas. To whom have you joined your palms in reverence ?

199. Who is the bestower of fruits unto you ? Who is superior to you ? Who is worthy of being saluted by you ? Tell me.

On hearing it, Śaṅkara said to Janārdana, the lord of Devas.

200-201. "O Govinda, I do not meditate on anything. I do not bow to anybody. But in order to inspire the unbelieving animal beings, (Paśu) etc. this is shown to them. O Hari, otherwise, they will remain sinners. Hence, it was to render help to the world that all these activities have been performed by me."

202-203. 'Om' (well), said Hari and stood by after bowing unto him. Then Devas and sages came to the abode of Gautama. They offered worship unto the trident-bearing lord of Devas. O leading sage, the lord went on singing along with Hanumān and was steadily seated there.

204-206. All of them repeated the five-syllabled mantra then. Supporting himself by the hands of Hanumān, Hara stood up and joined the two deities. The divine couple (Śiva and Pārvatī) were both seated in the same couch. Hanumān went on singing. So did Tumburu and others. Parameśvara sported about in diverse ways. Calling Pārvati, Īśa spoke these words.

207. "O auspicious lady, come and sit in front of me. I shall arrange your plaited tresses."

The Goddess said, "It is not proper for the husband to serve his wife."

208. In the activity of bedecking the hair a slip and a mishap is likely to occur. O lord, in arranging the plaits all the principles are to be observed but usually they are not followed.

209. After the tresses have been properly tied up, the extremities of the shoulders have to be wiped off. Thereafter, one should wipe off and remove the last traces of hair or bits of flowers.

210. Moreover, O lord who are worshipped by Devas and others what should the reply be given by you. Should noble-souled ones come when this activity is going on ?

211-212. "O lord, if they do not come, my fear shall be removed."

Even as she was speaking this, Śaṅkara dragged her by his hand and made her sit on his thigh. He untied her tresses. By his hands he parted the tresses into two and spread the hair with his nails.

213-215. He placed the Pārijāta garland fitted into the tresses and tied them up. Then he took the jasmine garland and tied it round the tuft. Maheśvara thrust the garland, made of flowers from Kalpa trees presented by Brahmā into the folds of the garments of Pārvatī, that had a mysterious fragrance. Then the lord wiped off the bits of hair etc. sticking to the back of the shoulders.

216. Observing that the knot of the garment worn by the goddess was getting loosened (he took his hand) beneath the folds of her dress. Saying, "O gentle lady what is this ?" he tied the knot of the underwear.

217. "See here is your nose screw. I say I am telling you the truth." Then Śivā, the daughter of the mountain, smiled and spoke to Śambhu.

218. "Ha ! I already know that at your abode every object is in a flourishing state.

219. It is from your ornaments that your being endowed with all riches is to be known. O lord, your head is bedecked with the garland made of the skulls of Brahmā.

220. The garland of hellish things is your ornament for the chest. The poisonous serpents viz. Vāsuki and Śeṣa are your bangles.

221. Your garments are the quarters (i.e. you are naked); the matted hair is what you have by way of your tresses. The white ash constitutes your unguent, the great bull is your vehicle. Your Gotra (spiritual lineage) and the family are not known.

222. Your parents are unknown, your body is rendered ugly with hideous eyes." Even as the daughter of the mountain was saying this, Viṣṇu spoke to her angrily.

223-225. "O goddess, why do you censure our lord of the universe, the lord of Devas. O gentle lady, due to your nature of not controlling yourself you were not his beloved. You are like the evil vital breaths. O gentle lady, it is my vow that I shall die where Īśa is censured."

After saying this, Hari attempted to cut off his head. Maheśa caught hold of his hand and said, "Do not indulge in a risky venture. Everything that Pārvatī said is pleasing to me, not displeasing."

226. "O Hṛṣīkeśa, you are desiring to perform the deed which is unpleasant to me." saying 'Om' (well) lord Hari was silent.

227-228. Thereafter, Hanumān intimated to the lord, "I pray without having any desire to perform a ritual. I am going for the ritual. It behoves you to permit me," on hearing it lord Śaṅkara smiled and said to the lord of monkeys.

229. "Whose pūjā is it ? What is the pūjā ? What is its flower ? What is the petal ? Tell me who are Guru (teacher) to us all ? What is mantra and what is the nature of your worship ?"

230. When the lord of Devas said thus, Hanumān, endowed with judiciousness, began to eulogise thus, while all his limbs quaked.

231. Obeisance unto the great Deva, unto Śaṅkara of unmeasured soul, unto Yogin, unto the dispenser of Yoga. Obeisance unto the preceptor of Yogins.

232. Obeisance unto the lord, comprehensible through Yoga. Obeisance to the lord of wise ones. Obeisance to the lord of Vedas. Obeisance unto the lord of Devas.

233. Obeisance to meditation, unto one comprehensible through meditation. Obeisance to the preceptor of meditators. O Aṣṭamūrti (one having eight forms) obeisance, unto you, obeisance unto the lord of the paśus (jīvas).

234. Obeisance to Ambaka (eye of Śiva), to the three-eyed lord, to the lord who has the moon, the sun and the fire as eyes; unto the one who is fond of flowers of bhṛṅgarāja (Eclipta prostrata), dhattūra (thorn-apple) and droṇa flower.

235. Obeisance unto one who is fond of bṛhatī pūga (arecanut), punnāga and campaka flowers. Obeisance to you again and again, obeisance unto you, obeisance unto you.

236. Śiva spoke to Hanumān, "Do not be afraid. Tell me everything." Then eschewing all fear, Hanumān, clever in the use of words spoke.

237. "The worship of Śivaliṅga should be performed by the one who has smeared his body, with water etc. and with the flowers of similar nature."

238. O lord, I shall intimate to you the auspicious mode of worshipping Śiva. when the evening sets in, one shall perform the rite of ablution excluding the head.

239. After putting on a washed and dried cloth he shall perform the sipping of water thrice and remain concentrated in the mind. Thereafter, taking the bhasma he shall perform the āgneya (fiery) bath.

240-241. He shall take Bhasma and charge it eight times with praṇava, or seven times with the five-syllabled mantra or by repeating any name (of Śiva). He must have darbha (Kuśa grass) in the hand. He shall put it over his head saying the mantra Īśānaḥ sarvavidyānām (He is the lord of all lores).[1]

242. After saying (Tatpuruṣāya vidmahe (we know of that Puruṣa) he shall apply Bhasma on the face. (After saying), Aghorebhyaḥ atha ghorebhyaḥ (unto the nonfierce and the fierce one), he shall apply Bhasma on the chest.

243. After saying "obeisance unto Vāsuadeva he shall apply Bhasma in the private parts. After saying, 'I resort unto Sadyojāta' he shall apply Bhasma over the feet.

244. The clever devotee shall dust all the limbs by means of the praṇava. The excellent method of the rite of ablution etc. in regard to the three higher castes has been mentioned.

245. I shall now mention the procedure in regard to the Śūdras etc. as recounted by the teacher. The intelligent devotee shall utter the word 'Śiva' and charge the Bhasma.

246. He shall take Bhasma seven times separately and apply on the head saying Śivāya (unto Śiva). He shall apply it over the face saying Śaṅkarāya (unto Śaṅkara). After saying sarvajñāya, over the heart.

247-248. After saying obeisance to Sthāṇu he shall apply Bhasma to the face. He shall apply pure Bhasma over the feet, after saying, "Obeisance to the self-born." He shall dust his limbs by uttering 'namaḥ Śivāya' (obeisance to Śiva). He shall then wash his hands and perform ācamana (sipping of water) rite with great concentration with darbha in the hand.

249. In the absence of Darbha a gold ring is to be used. If that is not available gavāluka (the hair from the tail of a cow) is to be used. If that is not available Dūrvā grass can be used. In case that is not available silver ring can be used.

250. After performing Sandhyā worship and the japa (repetition) of the mantra of the goddess, he shall go to the abode of the lord. The rites, then, are to be performed in the altar or on the spot of ground made for it.

251. It may be made of clay and be pure. The mystic diagram of the lotus be drawn in four colours or only in white colour.

1. For details of mantras, see under f.n. 1, p. 1120.

252-255. Lotuses of various colours, the Svastika symbol, lilies, iron clubs, conch, trident, ḍamaru (a kind of drum) the five-storied palace erected by means of arrows, Śiva-liṅga, the tree bestowing all desires, Kulaka and Kolaka (trees), hexagon, triangle, nineangled figure, in the twelve corners swings, sandals and fans, the cāmara (chowries), two umbrellas, Viṣṇu Brahmā etc. shall be drawn by means of powdered colours etc. The intelligent devotee shall draw these figures on the altar or in the temple.

256-257. Whenever the worship of the lord is conducted the sensible man shall draw these figures. If the figure is drawn by one's own hand it is the foremost one; if it is bought it is conducive of average result; if it is begged for it is the third rate one; it is the basest one when obtained by force, if force is applied from the deserving one it is futile.

258-259. The mystic diagram of the lotus can be drawn by means of the red sāli, the japā flower (China rose), the flax, the Kalama black and red rice grains (with or without husks) and the bits of grains. Thus they may be of four types, the excellent, the middling; of the third grade and the basest one. Then the devotee shall perform the ritual.

260. He shall face either the north-east or the east. I shall (now) recount the Āsana (seat) which I have seen and heard.

261-263. It shall be made of Kuśa grass or hide or cloth or bed, or a wooden one or the leaf of the palm tree, or woollen blanket or gold, silver or copper plate. It can be made with dried cow-dung or the arka plant. The seat made of hide is of four types that of a tiger, or a hariṇa or a mṛga (different kinds of deer). Then that is the posture used in seat. One shall be seated in one of these according to the possibility.

264. The devotee shall sit in the posture of Padmāsana (Lotus pose) or Svastika. He shall apply Bhasma and hold the Darbha grass in the hand. He shall restrain his breath and be silent.

265-266. He shall meditate on the form of the deity within. He shall meditate on Śiva of having sub body stationed at the tip of the tuft which is known to be dvādaśānta. He should meditate on Śiva who moves about beings, who is stationed in the cavity of the heart facing all sides, who is bedecked with all ornaments and who is possessed of aṇimā (minuteness) etc.

267. After meditating on the form one should retain it in the mind. He shall then fill the body with the lustre thereof and with that lustre the sin of the body has perished.

268-269. (The Pāpa-puruṣa[1] should be conceived) without any contact with golden feet and then it should be meditated upon as turning red, then white. There should be twelve petals, eight, five or three. After assigning a holy pedestal he shall instal the liṅga. He shall then meditate on Maheśāna stationed in the cavity of the heart the lord of liṅgas.

270. In a purified jar he shall take purified water rendered fragrant with sweet scents. He shall then put a fragrant flower charged with praṇava.

271. The prāṇāyāma and the use of praṇava are not ordained in the case of Śūdras. They must have meditation in lieu of prāṇāyāma and the mantra Śiva instead of omkāra.

272. Such materials of worship as the scented flowers and rice-grains shall be placed nearby. He shall then perform the Saṁkalpa rite (statement of the intended undertaking).

273. He shall think thus : "I shall perform Śivapūjā (the worship of Śiva) for Śiva's propitiation. After stating saṁkalpa (statement of intention) he shall perform invocation etc.

274. After performing the rites upto bathing (of the deity), he shall perform the rite of ablution in accordance with the injunctions in the Śatarudra texts with the mantra beginning with namaste (obeisance unto you).

275-279. The continuous pouring of the water is called muktidhārā. He who does this for a month repeating the mantra beginning with Rudra etc. shall attain liberation. The pouring of water may be done once, thrice, five times, seven times, nine times or eleven times a day. The pouring of water eleven times a day for a month is known to be the bestower of liberation and is called muktisnāna (bathing that causes liberation). The bathing rite may be performed with Śaiva mantra or with praṇava alone. This is done by an earthen ladle, pieces of coconut shell, rings, bell metal spoons, oyster shell, or the filament of flowers. He shall bathe the lord of Devas in any manner mentioned and according to the feasibility. I shall now mention the use of the method of the horn inasmuch as it becomes befitting the ablution.

1. Pāpapuruṣa is to be conceived as having the form of a person whose head is that of the assassinator of a brāhmaṇa; his hands have been defiled because of stealth of gold; his heart is made of his indulgence in spirit drinking; his hips are defiled with the adultery with preceptor's wife and his feet are so because of their contact with them. His hairs on limbs are nothing but minor sins. His beard and eyes are red and he is to be conceived as highly enraged holding the sword and the shield and is lying in the left belly of the aspirant.

280. The horn shall be purified within beforehand, then it shall be purified both externally and internally. It must be made light and smooth but no part of it should be cut off.

281. Through a groove fitted somewhere at the bottom, the water shall pass continuously in a thin stream and the lord should be bathed in that way.

282-283. Similarly, the procedure of filling with water in the horn of a Gavaya (a kind of ox) is being mentioned. The hole shall be half covered with a metal plate. One shall fix up a nāgadaṇḍa (serpentine staff) in the form of a nāga (serpent). It is (called) yogavaktra. In the place of the plank a cup is placed, the holes of which are of the same nature like the staff.

284. The devotee shall pour down water only through it which is lying at the top of the mechanical jar set up above it. He can pour water with the left hand or with the right one.

285-292. Thus the muktidhārā has been offered by him. It is holy and destructive of sins. After bathing the lord of Devas thus, he shall bathe thereafter with pañcagavya and pañcāmṛta (sugar, milk, honey, ghee and curd) or with three sweet things. He shall then bedeck the lord with ornaments. Then he shall bathe Maheśvara once again and perform the rite of Śītopacāra (cool offerings). The ācamana rite is then performed. Cloth, sacred thread, scented articles, camphor, aguru, sandal etc. are offered. He shall worship Śivaliṅga with the mixture of both. The entire pedestal may be filled with sweet smelling substances or he shall do according to his affluence. There is a silent service rendered with Kâtîya flower. Śrīpatra (bilva leaf) is to be eschewed if it is not fresh (?). The incense is offered with many other articles or guggulu alone. The incense along with the ghee of the tawny cow is praised. After presenting the incense according to one's ability, lamps with the ghee of the tawny cow shall be offered or the mere worship is supplemented with the offering of lamps and other presents. A befitting naivedya (food offering) shall be given alongwith flowers. Tāmbūla is offered after the purification of the mouth. Then the deity is circumambulated and prostrated to and thus the pūjā is completed.

293-296. The five forms of music etc. are being recounted afterwards. They are song, instrumental music, recitation of Purāṇa, dance, humorous speeches. Waving of lamps, offering of handful of flowers, dedication of everything, asking of mercy, ritualistic dismissal are the five services. Ornaments, umbrella, chowries, fans, the sacred thread and the acceptance of servanthood are the sixteen upacāras (services). If any one propitiates Śiva with thirtytwo upacāras, all his sins will be eliminated within a single day.

297. On hearing the words of Hanumān, Śaṅkara said, "O excellent monkey, the mode of worshipping me which you have recounted, is so.

298. I shall teach you the essential things now just as you have mentioned in detail the rituals for the propitiation of liṅga.

299. Attain the benefit of pūjā by worshipping the pair of my feet. Then the excellent monkey spoke to the lord of Devas, the Lord of Umā.

300. "It is only the pūjā of the Liṅga that has been precisely laid down by the preceptor. O lord, I shall do that first, then I shall perform the worship of your feet."

301-303. After saying and bowing down to Īśa, Hanumān, went to the bank of a lake, for performing the worship of liṅga of Śiva. He made an altar with the sand there and a seat with the leaves of the palm tree. With mindfulness he washed his hands and feet and did the sipping of water. He performed the ācamana once again silently and performed ablution with bhasma. Then he made a charming lotus design in the altar.

304. Thereafter the monkey seated himself in the lotus posture on the palm leaf. He performed the prāṇāyāma rite. Then after performing nyāsa (fixation of letters) he became engaged in the meditation of the pure white being.

305. After bowing down to Śiva the preceptor, he remained there performing japa. Thereafter the monkey exerted himself to perform the worship of the lord.

306-308. He brought water in two leaf cups of palāśa and put that pure water into the water jar. After uttering Śikhā (svāha) and inviting agni for performing invocation etc. upto the ablution he took the lord in his hand to bathe him. On observing that there was no pedestal of the lord and seeing only the liṅga in his hand he was afraid.

309. The great Yogin said this, "O what a sin has been committed by me, that the Śivaliṅga is lying in my hand without the pedestal.

310. If the pedestal does not come today, my death is certain. Or I shall perform the japa of Rudra, then alone will Maheśvara come.

311-312. After deciding this in his mind he performed the japa of Śatarudrīya hymn. When Maheśa did not come even after that, the lord of the monkeys fell down on the ground crying. Vīrabhadra came there and said, "O gentle, Sir, why do you cry? Tell me the reason for your lamentation."

313. Hearing this Hanumān said to Vīrabhadra what it was that worried his mind. "This liṅga is devoid of pedestal. See what a lot of sin I have committed."

314. On hearing the words of the monkey Vīrabhadra said, "If the pedestal of your liṅga does not come back so soon, do not take hasty step.

315. If the pedestal does not come back I shall myself burn the worlds. You will show me the liṅga and see whether the pedestal has come back or not."

316-317. Then on seeing the pedestal did not come back to the liṅga, Vīrabhadra, the valorous one, became desirous of burning the worlds. He cast fire down on the ground. Within an instant the earth was burnt. After burning the seven layers, the fire still blazed upwards.

318-319. The fire burned the five upper worlds and the residents of the Janaloka. The lord took out, with his nail, the fire issuing from the eye in the forehead and made it resemble a citrus fruit in his palm. O leading sage, he then attempted to burn the Tapa and Satya Lokas.

320. On seeing that Vīrabhadra was desirous of burning others, the sages who resided in the Tapa Loka came to the hermitage of Gautama.

321. Not seeing Śaṅkara, the lord of Devas, there, they eulogised Śaṅkara who is residing in the self with devotion by reciting hymns from the vedas.

322-323. Obeisance unto you who are comprehensible through the Vedas. Obeisance unto that lord of pure lustre and unthinkable form, unto the overlord of Brahmā etc. unto the cause of creation etc., unto one who is beloved of Viṣṇu, unto the remover of distress, unto the annihilator. Obeisance unto you that pervade the mobile and immobile beings. Obeisance unto one hidden in the vedas. Obeisance unto the beloved of devotees. Obeisance unto you, the partaker of the cooked food and the lord of Yajñas.

324. Obeisance unto you, Śiva, the primordial deity. We make obeisance to one who wears sacred threads with serpents. Obeisance unto you the showerer of drops of nectar. O lord, obeisance unto you whose form is the set of three Vedas and unto the death of death.

325. Obeisance unto you who have eightfold mūrtis viz. earth, wind, firmament, water, moon, fire, sun, and ātman. Obeisance to Śiva, the destroyer of inauspiciousness, the heroic one. May he who is worthy of being worshipped by the lords of the universe Viṣṇu and Brahmā be always pleased with us.

326. Obeisance unto one who has the moon for his forehead. May the Ātman, the great Ātman, who goes ahead of the mind, who cannot be comprehended by the words, who is the destroyer of the inertia of the universe, the bestower of worldly enjoyments and salvation, who is of undefiled fame, be always pleased.

327. May the one who is of the very nature of the three divisions of time be delighted with us, the Īśa from whom the universe has sprung up, by whom it is conceived and maintained, he who is far beyond the scope of words, and in whom the universe gets merged finally (may he be delighted).

328. No one, even the well informed ones do not comprehend the beginning, the middle and the end. They (depend on) inference. May that Sarvamūrti (omniform) be always delighted with us for our prosperity : what more duty should we remind you with.

329. On hearing this eulogy, Śiva the bestower of vision to Bhaga said to Viṣṇu, "Bring those sages near me."

330. Then Viṣṇu came there and consoled the sages, the residents of Tapoloka. He showed Śaṅkara, the lord of the universe, unto them.

331. Śaṅkara spoke these words to them, "O sages, you are free from sins, why have you come to the earth from the Tapoloka ?"

332. Hearing the words of the tridentbearing lord the excellent sages said, "O lord, heaps of the ashes of the twelve worlds are seen.

333. Only this forest remains (unaffecting). See this destruction of the worlds." On hearing, Girīśa spoke to those sages whose semen flows upwards.

334-335. "O sages, there is, no doubt, a combustion of the Bhūloka and the nether worlds. But we have doubts about the combustion of the upper worlds because of our resort in this secret spot. How is it then, that there is no shower of ashes nor there is any loud sound ?

336. On hearing those words of lord Śaṅkara the leading sages spoke to the lord accompanied by Brahmā and other gods. They kept their palms joined in reverence.

337. "It is Vīrabhadra that we are afraid of, now. O lord, it was he who, thirsty that he was, consumed the shower of ashes."

338. The lord then called Vīra and spoke these words; "O Vīra, what is this?" Vīra replied, "This has been committed by me because of the lack of the pedestal in the Liṅga belonging to the monkey."

339. On hearing it, lord Śiva spoke to the terror-stricken sages, "O brahmins, this has been done by me in order to know the mind of the monkey.

340-341. Do not be afraid. I shall always get you happiness."

After saying this, the lord of Devas, the store-house of mercy rebuilt the burnt worlds as before, nay, even more beautiful than before. The lord, the soul of the universe spoke to Vīrabhadra.

342. O dear one, well done since you desire the good of devotees, therefore the great renown of yours will last perpetually in the world.

343. Having spoken thus, Maheśvara embraced him and sniffed at his head. Being pleased at heart he gave tāmbūla (betel) to Vīrabhadra.

344. Then Hanumān performed the worship of the Lord. When his ritual was finished Hanumān was delighted in his mind.

345. He saw a Gandharva (celestial singer) wandering in the wood with a lute. He said to him, "Give the lute to me."

346. The Gandharva said, "This dear lute of mine cannot be given away to anybody by me. The chief of the monkeys said, O Gandharva, I too like this lute."

347. When the Gandharva did not hand over his favourite lute to the monkey he was knocked down on the ground by the monkey with the blow of his fist.

348. After picking up the great lute well-fitted with musical chords and strings Hanumān, the most excellent of the monkeys went near Śiva singing on the way.

349. Then delighting the lord of the universe with his enchanting song he worshipped the feet of the lord with the fresh flowers of bṛhatī.

350-351. Then the delighted lord, the soul of the universe granted him boons in the presence of the sages, gods, demons and kings. Śaṅkara granted him the life span to the end of the Kalpa, the ability of crossing the ocean, perfect mastery of the scriptures and great strength.

352. O leading brahmin, after securing this boon directly from the noble-souled Maheśa, Hanumān was highly pleased. This has been seen directly by me.

353. ·Hanumān is well bedecked in all ornaments. He has made the lustre of gods dim by his excellent lustre. He has a delighted form. He is young. He is part of Śiva. He honoured all the gods.

354. O leading sage, Hanumān was commanded by Maheśa to serve me. It is thus that I know the moon-crested lord.

355. O brahmanical sage, Of what avail this talk ? Nowhere is there any one who is like the lord of monkeys in regard to intelligence, justice and courage.

356. O brahmins, thus the story has been entirely recounted to you. It is destructive of sins of those who read it or listen to it. You may go happily."

357. On hearing these words of Rāmabhadra, the intelligent leader among the descendants of Raghu, I circumambulated him, bowed him and went away in the same manner as I had come.

358. O brahmin, thus the story of Hanumān has been mentioned to you. It is the essence. It bestows happiness and Salvation : What else do you wish to hear ?

CHAPTER EIGHTY

Kṛṣṇa Mantra Nirūpaṇam
Review of the mantras of Kṛṣṇa

Sūta Said :

1. O brahmin, on hearing the words of Kumāra (Sanatkumāra) I shall tell you what Nārada, the sage, had asked me before.

2. Hearing the Kavaca of Kārttavīrya and Hanumān as well as the holy story of Hanumān, he spoke these words again.

Nārada said :

3. O excellent sage, well done, well done. The holy story of Śiva and Hanumān has been recounted by you who are highly compassionate.

4. O highly blessed one, expatiate on what should be mentioned by you, the turn of which has just arrived. O most excellent of the knowers of truth why should somethimg else be asked ?

Sanatkumāra said:

5. I shall recount the mantras of Kṛṣṇa. They are the bestowers of worldly enjoyment and liberation. Brahmā and others became capable of the function of creation etc.

6-8. Kāma (Klīm) followed by Kṛṣṇa in the dative and Govinda with the same (i.e. dative), then the term Gopījana followed by Vallabhāya and Svāhā (Svāhā unto Kṛṣṇa Govinda, the lover of cowherd lasses). This mantra consists of eighteen syllables, has Durgā as its presiding deity. The sage is Nārada, Gayatrī is the metre and the deity is Śrīkṛṣṇa the great soul. Kāma is glorified as the bīja, svāhā is the śakti and its utility is the achievement of the four aims of life.

9. One shall fix the sage on the head, the metre on the face, the deity on the heart, the bīja in the private parts and the śakti in the feet. In this way the excellent aspirant shall fix them.

10. After fixing the five aṅgas by means of the letters of the mantra grouped into four, four four, and two letters, he shall perform the tattvanyāsa (the fixation of categories).

11. The letters beginning with a and ending with ka are to be fixed with parāya etc and ātmane along with hṛt (namaḥ) This is to be done with the categories beginning with jīva and ending with mati.

12-13. (The categories are as follows) : jīva (the individual soul) the vital breath, the intellect, the ego, the mind, sound, touch, colour, taste, smell, ear, skin, eye, tongue, nose, speech, hand, foot, rectum, penis, firmament, wind, fire, water and earth.

14. He shall fix the soul and the vital breath in his limbs, the three beginning with mati (intellect) in the heart,

1. Om ām namaḥ parāya Jīvātmane namaḥ.

2. Om ām namaḥ parāya prāṇātmane etc. In this way the twenty five tattvas are to be fixed in different limbs of the body.

the sound etc. are to be fixed in the head, face, heart, private parts and feet.

15-17. He shall fix his sense organs i.e. ear etc. in their respective locations and similarly fix the organs of action, speech etc. in their respective spots. Then he shall fix the sky etc. in the crown, mouth, heart, anus and feet. The lotus of the heart, the spheres of the sun, the moon and the fire in due order pervaded by two six (i.e. twelve), two eight (i.e. sixteen) and ten Kalās. As before he shall fix in the heart by means of the syllables of the padas (i.e., mantra) in groups of five, eight and two.

18-24. He shall fix Vāsudeva and others in the locations of the void etc. (They are) Vāsudeva, Saṁkarṣṇa, pradyumna, Aniruddha and Nārāyaṇa. They arc to be attached with parameṣṭhi, Pumān, Śauri, Viśva and nivṛtti. As before he shall fix the syllables of Śveta (ākāśa), air, fire, water and earth and Kopatattva preceded by his own bīja Nṛsiṁha (Kṛaum) by means of pervasive one. This shall be fixed all over the limbs as before. Thus the tattvanyāsa has been mentioned. The first letter beginning with ā shall be joined with the moon (m). Vāsudeva and others are to be known as ending in the dative case.

Prāṇāyāma is then performed, by the knower of the mantra inhaling with four, retaining with six and exhaling with two by means of the mūlamantra. Some teachers say that after the prāṇāyāma one should perform pīṭhanyāsa and then do other nyāsas.[1]

After performing the nyāsa of ten tattvas etc. according to the following method one should perform the mūrtipañjara nyāsa as mentioned before.

1. The nyāsa rite is to be done in the following manner : saṁ namaḥ parāya parameṣṭhitattvāya Vāsudevāya namaḥ. It should be done on the top of the head. Yaṁ namaḥ parāya puṁ tattvāya Saṁkarṣaṇāya namaḥ in the mouth, Laṁ namaḥ parāya viśvatattvāya Pradyumnāya namaḥ in the heart. Vasu namaḥ parāya nivṛtti tattvāya Aniruddhāya namaḥ in the penis. Lam namaḥ parāya sarvatattvāya Nārāyaṇāya namaḥ in the feet, Kṣraum namaḥ parāya kopatattvāya Nṛsiṁhāya namaḥ all over the limbs.

25-26. With the Kirīṭa mantra[1] the intelligent devotee shall perform the pervasive nyāsa. Then he shall make the mantra encased within two tāras (om) i.e. one 'om' will precede the mantra and another 'om' will follow; then he shall overspread it in each finger thrice (i.e. on the front, rear and the side). He shall then fix the five aṅgas in the fingers of the hands.

27. Then he shall overspread the mūlamantra thrice over the body from head to foot. Then overspreading the entire body with 'om' once he shall perform the mantra-nyāsa.

28-30. Thereafter, he shall fix the syllables of the mantra ending with hṛt (namaḥ) in due order on the head, on the forehead, between the eyebrows, in the ears, in the eyes, in the nostrils, in the mouth, in the throat, in the heart, in the umbilical region, in the hips, in the penis, in the knees, and in the end fix 'om' on the crown. Thereafter, he shall fix the five words of the mantra (two syllables for each) ending with hṛt (namaḥ), in the eyes, in the mouth, in the heart, in the private part and in the feet.

31-32. After fixing the sage etc., again he shall fix the five aṅgas as before.

Henceforth, I shall mention the great secret, the most excellent of all nyāsas. By the mere knowledge of this a man shall become liberated while living. There is no doubt in this that he will be the lord of eight siddhis.

33. By practising it, the repeater of the mantras shall attain the nearness of Kṛṣṇa. He shall fix the mantra encased with tāra (om) and other vyāhṛtis (Bhuḥ, Bhuvaḥ etc).

34-35. He shall then fix praṇava etc. encased by the mantra. He shall encase the mantra by Gāyatrī and fix the mantra in the locations of mātṛkās. Then, he shall encase Gāyatrī with the mantra and fix it in due order.

36. In due order he shall fix the mātṛkās encased by the mūlamantra. The intelligent devotee shall then fix the tṛc (mantra) and the mātṛkā syllables in their respective locations.

1. Kirīṭamantra runs thus :

Oṁ kirīṭa-keyūra-hāra-makara-kuṇḍala-śaṅkha-cakra-gadāmbuje hastapīṭāmbaradhara-śrīvatsāṅkitavakṣaḥsthala-śribhūmisahita-svātmajyotirmaya-dīptakarāya sahasrādityatejase namaḥ.

37-38. Thus, he shall perform the six forms of nyāsas. The six forms of nyāsas have been recounted. By means of this excellent nyāsa one becomes similar to Kṛṣṇa directly. On seeing him encased with the nyāsa, the Siddhas, the Gandharvas the Kinnaras and even Devas bow down to him. What more to say about human beings in the earth ?

39. Then, he shall perform the rite of digbandhana (arresting the quarters) by means of the mantra of Sudarśana. (While doing this) he shall meditate upon the Lord, the bestower of all desires, in his heart.

40-41. With great concentration the repeater of mantra shall call in mind Vṛndāvana that is rendered cool by the excellent trees, the branches of which bend down on account of the burden of clusters of flowers in full bloom, by the trees entwined by creepers with smiling bunches of flowers and which is rendered fragrant by the trees shedding down pollen dust particles.

42-46. (He should meditate on the grove of Vṛndāvana) that is made splendid by the swarms of humming bees that are eagerly desirous of the store of honey that oozes out of the fresh blown lotuses. The grove has become resonant by the flocks of doves, pigeons, cuckoos and swans and it has been made charming by the dancing peacocks. The grove heightens the amorous mood of the cowherd lasses, thanks to the gently wafted sprays of the morning waves of the Kālindī and due to the auspicious grey pollen dust from the blossoming lotuses. The grove is always served by the gentle breezes shaking the soft garments of the damsels of the cowherds.

Then, he shall call to mind the beautiful divine tree. Beneath that tree he must conceive an excellently jewelled pedestal on the gold platform.

47. He shall then call to mind a pink lotus on the jewelled floor. The lotus has eight petals and then, he shall meditate on Mukunda seated in the centre of it.

48. Mukunda is as splendid and brilliant as the full blown blue lotus. He has decorated himself with the feathers of the peacock. His face resembles the moon and the eyes resemble lotuses. He is clad in yellow garment.

49. His limbs are illuminated by the Kaustubha jewel. His chest has the scar called Śrīvatsa. He is well bedecked. He is surrounded by the herds of cows. He is worshipped by the lotus-eyed ladies of Vraja.

50. The intelligent devotee shall mentally conceive Mukunda as accompanied by the groups of cowherds and he is playing on the flute. After meditating thus, the learned one shall at first perform the repetition of the mantra for twenty thousand times.

51. To the extent of a tenth of it, he shall with great concentration perform homa with red lotuses. Afterwards, for the purpose of realising the full efficacy of the mantra, he shall repeat it with concentration for five hundred thousand times.

52-53. He will become the lord of all Siddhis (powers) by performing homa with red lotuses. Then, conceiving the form of the lord by means of the mūlamantra in the pedestal belonging to Viṣṇu, which has been mentioned before, he shall invoke the lord who is charming unto the lasses of the cowherds and worship him. He shall worship the flute in his mouth, the garland of sylvan flowers, Kaustubha and Śrīvatsa in the chest. Then, he shall perform worship with a handful of flowers.

54-55. Meditating on the lord of Devas the intelligent devotee shall offer white tulasī soaked in white sandal paste on the right hand side of the deity and the red tulasī smeared with red sandal paste on the left hand side.

56. He shall offer hayamāra (oleander) flowers on the chest and on the head. Thereafter, he shall duly offer two lotuses on the head.

57. Two tulasī leaves,[1] two lotuses and Aśvāri (oleander) flowers and then he shall offer flowers over all the limbs.

---

1. Regarding the offering of flowers, tulasī leaves etc. it is mentioned in the Gautamīya tantra that the pair of tulasī leaves soaked in two kinds of sandal paste, one white and the other red, should be offered at the feet of the deity, and two oleander flowers should be offered, similarly, first to the right foot with white sandal paste and second to the left foot with red sandal paste. The lotus should be offered on the head. See Tantrasāra of Āgamavāgīśa, p. 155.

58. He shall worship on the right hand side the pure, unchanging caitanya (consciousness) named Vāsudeva. Similarly, on the left hand side he shall worship Rukmiṇī who is red and endowed with the attribute of rajas and is eternal one.

59-60. After worshipping Gopāla thus, he shall worship the attending deities. He shall worship Dāma, Sudāma, Vāsudāma and Kiṅkiṇī in the quarters beginning with the east. The words Dāma etc, must be used in the dative case and prefixed with om, ending with namaḥ. He shall worship hṛdaya etc. in the corners of south-east, south-west, north-west and north-east. After worshipping the astras (weapons) in the quarters he shall worship the queens in the petals.

61-62. (The queens are) Rukmiṇī, Satyabhāmā, then again (the queen) named Nagnajitī, Suyindā, Mitravindā, Lakṣmaṇā, Ṛkṣajā and Suśīlā. All of them had ornaments and clothes that shine beautifully and are of diverse colours.

63-65. Then, he shall worship, at the tips of the petals, Vāsudeva, Devakī, Nandagopa, Yaśodā, Balabhadra and Subhadrikā as well as Gopas (cowherds) and Gopīs (cowherd lasses). Their minds and eyes are merged in Govinda. The fathers i.e. Vâsudeva and Nandagopa) are yellow and grey and they have the gestures of knowledge and fearlessness.

The mothers (i.e. Devakī and Yaśodā) have divine garlands, garments, unguents and ornaments. They hold (in their hands) milk-pudding and vessels full of it.

66-69. They are of pink and dark complexion. They are bedecked in necklaces and gemset earrings. Bala is as white as conch-shell and the moon. He holds the threshing rod and the ploughshare. He is covetous of liquors. He is clad in blue cloths. He holds the ploughshare and has only earring. Kalā is dark-complexioned. Subhadrā is a gentle lady. She has good ornaments. She holds the gestures of blessing and assurance. She is in her prime of youth. The cowherd lads have in their hands the flute, lute, golden staff, conch, horn etc. 'The cowherd lasses have different kinds of gifts and cooked rice in their lotus-like hands. Outside, the devotee shall worship the Kalpa trees, Mandāra flowers etc.

70. They are Mandāra, Santānaka, Pārijāta, Kalpadruma and Haricandana.

71. After worshipping them in the middle and in the quarters he shall worship Indra and others outside. After worshipping their weapons also one shall worship the eight names of Kṛṣṇa.

72-73. He shall then worship Kṛṣṇa, Vāsudeva, Devakīnandana (son of Devakī), Nārāyaṇa Yaduśreṣṭha (the most excellent of the Yadus), Vārṣṇeya (the descendant of Vṛṣṇi), Dharmapālaka (the protector of righteousness) and the one who removes the burden of the earth when attacked by demons. Thus the worship of the enemy of asuras has to be performed by the worship of attending deities.

74. The worship has to be performed by the learned men in order to cross the ocean of worldly existence and to attain all cherished desires. One who has achieved success by means of worshipping etc. shall become comparable to Vaiśravaṇa (Yama).

75-80. I shall now recount worship that is performed three times a day. It is the bestower of all desired objects. (The lord is to be meditated upon as follows) : He is of the form of an infant child resembling emerald and sapphire. His forelocks are as smooth and glossy as jaggery. He is seated on a lotuslike gemset pedestal beneath the splendid Kalpa tree, over a platform gold-set with gems inside a glorious garden. His beautiful cheeks are made more beautiful by the moving gold earings. He has a fine nose. His charming lotus-like face wears a wonderful smile. He has tied round his waist a girdle made of gold shining with pure gems. In fact, he is fully bedecked in gold to the tip of his nail. His chest is smeared with dust raised by the cows. He has well-nourished limbs. His limbs are shining like gold. He has worn a girdle round the cavity of his loins. Tinkling bells hanging down up to the calf, are tied to that girdle. He is laughing with the elegant lustre of his hands and feet resembling that of the Bandhujīva (a kind of China rose). He holds milk-pudding in the right hand and fresh butter in the left. He is stationed in the midst of cows, cowherds, and cowherdesses. His feet is worshipped by Vāsava and other gods. He is engaged in slaying the groups of demons who are a burden unto the earth, such as Pūtanā and others.

81-82. Being steady in mind as before, one shall meditate on the lord thus and worship him. He shall offer food offering, curds and jaggery. He shall then perform the japa a thousand times. At noon he shall worship the lord as has assumed a special form and who is worshipped by the groups of sages like Nārada and others as well as by gods.

83. He is standing in the midst of the shining cows, cowherds and cowherdesses. He has the lustre of the dense cloud. He has charming limbs. His coronet is bedecked in peacock feathers. His eyes are large as the petals of lotus. He has a shining necklace and has the face resembling the full moon.

84. He is filled with the glorious lustre of cheeks made brilliant by the moving ear-rings. He is full of beauty and looks charming by his mild smile. He has a fine nose. His clothes are gold-coloured. He has divine ornaments. His tinkling anklets sound sweetly.

85. He is playing on a flute. He holds a conch shell and an elegant staff. He is beautifully dressed. In his right hand he holds the gesture of giving the desired objects, in which (matter) he is clever.

After meditating thus, he shall worship the son of Nanda for the attainment of good fortune.

86. One shall meditate thus and worship Kṛṣṇa as before. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu shall offer food offering of baked pie, milk-pudding, cooked rice etc.

87. After performing homa for hundred and eight times with milk and cooked rice soaked in ghee he shall offer oblation in the fire and offer bali to the respective directions. Then he shall give water for the ācamana rite.

88-89. He shall repeat the mantra a thousand and eight times. If an excellent devotee of Viṣṇu worships Kṛṣṇa thus at noon, the gods will bow down to him. The person will become beloved of all worlds. He will be endowed with intelligence, longevity, lustre, splendour and glory. He will flourish with sons and grandsons.

90. Regarding the third pūjā there are alternative timings. Some scholars say that it may be either in the evening or at night.

91. If the rite is performed with the ten-syllabled mantra, it is done at night, if with eighteen-syllabled mantra the pūjā is done in the evening. Others say that both these rites can be performed on both occasions.

92-100. In the evening at Dvārāvatī is an excellent mansion that is rendered splendid by means of a garden of blossoms of diverse colour, that is surrounded by thousand and eight mansions, and that is encircled by lakes of pure water abounding in swans, cranes as well as lotuses and lilies. Kṛṣṇa is seated in a golden lotus seat on a gemset altar the lustre of which resembles that of the sun. He is the enchanter of the three worlds. He is encircled by groups of sages engaged in the discussion of ascertaining the true nature of the soul. He is showing his own abode of immutable nature unto those sages. He is dark in complexion like the blooming blue lotus. His crown and his garland of sylvan flowers get mingled with his glossy tresses of hair. His face is beautiful and pleasant. His Makara-shaped earrings shine. The scar Śrīvatsa shines in chest. So also the beautiful Kaustubha jewel. His chest is tawny-coloured with saffron. He wears yellow garments. He is bedecked in bracelets, bangles and girdles.

He has taken away the excessive burden of the earth. He is delighted in his mind. His four arms shine with conch, discus, iron-club and the lotus.

After meditating thus, the repeater of the mantras shall worship. The first āvṛti (the encircling deities) is to be performed with aṅgas, the second āvṛti with the queens. He shall then worship the third āvṛti.

101-102. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu shall worship Nārada, Parvata, Jiṣṇu, Niśaṭha, Uddhava, Dāruka, Viśvaksena, Śaineya and the son of Vinatā at the tip (of the lotus) in the quarters, alongwith the guardians of quarters and the weapons, thunderbolt etc. After duly worshipping thus he shall offer milk-pudding as a food offering.

103. The repeater of the mantra shall think of water as milk with candied sugar and perform tarpaṇa rite. Conceiving Puruṣottama mentally he shall repeat the mantra hundred and eight times.

104. At midday the intelligent devotee shall perform homa in all rituals or after performing the rites beginning with āsana (offering of seat) to the ending of arghya he should eulogise and then bow down.

105. After the ritualistic dismissal and placing the efficient soul in one's own lotus-like heart, he shall identify himself with it and worship the ātman again.

106. He who worships Vāsudeva thus everyday shall attain all desires and in the end shall reach the ultimate goal.

107-108. If it is at night, the devotee shall meditate on and worship the son of Nanda who is overpowered by the cupid, who is in the midst of cowherdesses and who is exhausted due to Rāsa sport, in a spot that is rendered cool by gentle breeze dusty in colour (as it were) through the pollen dust issuing from the flowers of Kunda, Kalhāra and Mallikā that bloom then.

109-111. One shall think and worship Mukunda who is enthusiastically interested in the Rāsa sport on the sandy banks of the Yamunā river where the intoxicated bees hover around singing sweetly amidst the exudations of honey from the full blown white lotuses, where the excellent mallikā (jasmine) flowers diffuse their fragrance, where the quarters have been brightened up by the rays of the moon and where the whole atmosphere excites love. His face always wears a gentle smile. He frequently plays on the flute. His lustre is such as comes into clash with fresh assemblage of clouds that have plenty of the lotus. He is beautiful with his lips resembling the bimba fruit (a kind of a red berry). Peacock feathers are tied on to his tresses bedecked in garlands. His two cheeks shine, thanks to the brilliant beams from the jewels in his dangling and shining ear rings. He possesses various ornaments such as the girdle, anklets, necklaces, bangles and shining bracelets. He appears elegant in between the pairs of cowherdesses. His garland is wreathed of sylvan flowers. He is mutually embraced by the beloved lady of the cowherdess who has bound him with her creeper-like hands. One should worship Mukunda who is excessively desirous of the sport of Rāsa and who is overpowered by the cupid.

112-113. (The repeater of the mantra shall meditate upon the lord thus). He is moving about with them while sweet songs with its minute divisions of the octavo, the seven notes the mūrcchanās (the regulated rise and fall of sounds) and tānas (protracted tones) are going on. The various ornaments and jewels in his handsome body shine elegantly. The young maidens have caught hold of one another's hands (and have made a circle thereby). While the Rāsa sport is thus being conducted the lord has assumed many forms of his divine body although he is stationed near a gemset pillar.

114-115. After meditating thus the repeater of the mantras shall worship alongwith the aṅgas. This shall be the first āvṛti (the circle). The most excellent devotee of Viṣṇu, who is desirous of prosperity shall worship alongwith sixteen vowels the pairs of Keśava and Kīrti etc. beginning with Śrīm Klīm. Thereafter, he shall worship Indra and others as well as Vajra (thunderbolt).

116. A thick cylindrical smooth peg with the length of the span of the thumb and the little finger in height, is fixed on the ground. The players (of Rāsa sport) keep their feet pressed against it and hold the hands of one another. They then whirl about. This is called Rāsagoṣṭhī (the Rāsa sport).

117-118. After worshipping thus with milk, white sugar and ghee as naivedya the repeater of the mantras shall offer to the couples one after the other milk pudding and sugar in ten ladles. After performing the remaining rites as before he shall repeat the mantra a thousand times.

119. After eulogising, bowing down and praying he shall conclude the remaining portion of worship. One who worships Kṛṣṇa thus shall attain prosperity.

120. There is no doubt that he will be the lord of eight Siddhis viz aṇimā etc. (to become minute). After enjoying various pleasures here he shall go to the region of Viṣṇu in the end.

121. When the mantra will be fruitful by means of worship etc., the devotee shall achieve his desires. The intelligent devotee shall perform worship three times of the day of twentyeight times.

122. He shall propitiate the attending deities (of the lord) by apportioning time unto them, in the morning with curds and jaggery dissolved therein and in the midday with milk.

123 In the evening the excellent devotee of Viṣṇu shall propitiate the lord with milk, butter and sugar cubes.

124. At the end of the mantras and names used in the accusative case he shall use the word Tarpayāmi (I propitiate). Then he shall conclude the remaining portion of the ritual.

125. After sprinkling oneself with the sacred waters of the deity he shall drink the same. After the ritualistic dismissal of the deity when he has been propitiated, the devotee shall identify himself with him and repeat the mantra.

126. Now the materials of worship for Kāmya (occasional) rites and tarpaṇa rites are mentioned. One shall resort to them after adopting one of the methods mentioned.

127-128. Sixteen materials of worship have been mentioned by the lotus-born deity and others viz. milk pudding, curd, rice, ghee, cooked rice with jaggery, mixed rice and peas, milk, curds,plantain, banana, the tasty tamarind fruit, baked pie, sweet meats, fried grains, fried and beaten rice, fresh butter.

129-131. At the end of the worship he shall offer lājās (fried rice), and offer beaten rice in the beginning with white sugar.

If the repeater of the mantra on the feet of Kṛṣṇa propitiates thus in the morning for seventyfour times, he shall attain whatever is desired from maṇḍala (the circle of kings ?).

One shall worship with the following nine materials, viz., fresh boiled milk, butter, curds, mango soaked in milk, ghee, coarse sugar, honey, sweet beverage. Each of these materials shall be offered twelve times.

132. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu who performs the rite of tarpaṇa (offering of water) for hundred and eight times thus shall get the benefit mentioned before.

133-134. Of what avail much talk ? This tarpaṇa is the bestower of all desires. The aspirant who performs the Tarpaṇa rite with water thinking it to be the fresh milk flowing (from the udder of the cow) mixed with white sugar and thus propitiates Kṛṣṇa will attain riches, clothes and food-stuff alongwith his attendants and kinsmen while he passes through a village.

135-136. I shall henceforth mention the Kāmya homa (occasional rites done with a special object in view) for the benefit of aspirants. The knower of the mantra desirous of uncensurable glory and prosperity shall perform homa with a white lotus.

137-138. One shall perform homa with cooked rice and ghee, for the increase in ghee and rice for winning over brahmins; with wild flowers, for winning over kings; with jasmine flowers, with non-white flowers, for winning over vaiśyas; with blue lotuses for winning over śūdras, with salt for winning over all people; with lotuses for young women.

139. By homa performed in cowpens with milk pudding and ghee, Gopāla, the lord of the herds of cows brings peace among cows.

140-146. The repeater ofmantras shall meditate on Kṛṣṇa who has assumed the form of a child and who is replendent on account of clusters of kiṅkiṇīs (bell shaped ornaments attached to his anklets). He shall then perform the tarpaṇa with pure water thinking it to be milk. Being pleased he will grant him wealth, grain, sons, renown etc.

The repeater of mantras shall perform homas with twigs of Brahmavṛkṣa (i.e. palāśa or udumbara tree, a kind of fig tree) or kusa grass, or gingelly seeds and raw rice grains. They must be soaked in trimadhu (sugar, honey and ghee) and consigned into the fire. Ten thousand homas shall be performed. Then he shall have control over brahmins. If the homa is done with the flowers of aloe wood he shall have control over kṣatriyas. He shall control vaiśyas by Kuraṇḍa flowers. The intelligent one shall control the ultimate ones (śūdras) by pāṭalā flowers. By performing ten thousand homas with the following flowers viz. white lotus, red lotus, campaka and pāṭalā flowers soaked in trimadhu, one shall be able to control ladies. The intelligent devotee shall perform homa at midnight everyday with Oleander flowers soaked in trimadhu. Continuing this for eight days one shall be able to control excellent women.

One shall perform thirtythousand homas every night with white mustard soaked in trimadhu. Continuing this for a month one can make even Indra subservient.

147. The intelligent devotee shall recollect Kṛṣṇa who has climbed on the nīpa tree after gathering together the garments of the cowherd lasses. He shall perform thousand japas at night. He shall do so for ten days.

148. The aspirant may be able to attract even Urvaśī forcibly. Of what avail is much talk ? .This mantra makes everyone subservient.

149. I shall, henceforth, reveal a great secret. This is the bestower of salvation unto all people. One shall meditate on the lord, the son of Devakī, in one's own lotus-like heart.

150. (Verse for meditation) I solute the yellow-robed Murāri, whose complexion is as white as the glorious Kunda (jasmine) flower or the moon, whose eyes resemble the lotus, who bears in his lotus-like hands the conch, the discus, the iron club and the lotus, who is refulgent due to the elegant garland of wild lily flowers, who is comprehensible only to the leading sages, who is charming with divine ornaments, who is refulgent due to the garland, who is comprehensible to eminent sages, who is shining with the drops of ear-rings, who has divine unguents and lustre and who dispels all fears.

151. After meditating thus on Puruṣa, the primordial deity, who is manifestly seated in the lotuslike heart, who resembles the thick magnanimous colour of cloud, and who resembles molten gold, he shall repeat the mantra one million two hundred thousand times. One of the two mantras should be placed between the two 'om'. With that he shall perform twelve thousand homas with the twigs from milk-exuding trees as mentioned before alongwith honey, ghee and sugar or milk-pudding.

152. Meditating on Kṛṣṇa who is worthy to be propitiated by the lords of the worlds in one's lotus-like heart, thus, every-day, the repeater of the mantras shall perform three thousand japas.

153. After worshipping in accordance with the injunctions mentioned in the case of the rite in the evening and after performing homa in the aforesaid manner, the repeater of the mantras shall concentrate his mind on him alone.

154. He who worships the son of a cowherd continuously gains perfect knowledge. He crosses the ocean of worldly existence and attains the supreme abode.

155. (One shall draw a diagram) two interlaced triangles (analapurapuṭa) and write Klīm in the pericarp (i.e. inside the eight-petalled lotus), in corners and outside of it alongwith the name of the person (for whose benefit it is intended). The six syllables are written twice, in the filaments in the gaps of which śrīm and hrīm are written, then the mantra consists of eighteen syllables. Or in the alternative the ten letters of the mantra are written separately in the petals of the lotus.

156. Thus the Gopāla yantra which bestows all riches has been recounted. With a gold needle it is written on a tablet made of gold and made into a roll. It is written with yellow pigment obtained from cows.

157. It is sprinkled into a mould (saṁyata) and charged with the mantra. It is the only competent thing to make the three worlds subservient. It must be worn by great men desirous of obtaining protection, fame, sons, plots of lands, wealth, grain, good fortune and blessedness. Its power is immeasurable.

158. Smara (Klīm), Cakrī (k) attached with trivikrama (ṛ) then ṣṇāya and ends with hṛt (namaḥ) (the combination gives the mantra—klīṁ Kṛṣṇāya namaḥ). The mantra consisting of six syllables[1] is the bestower of all siddhis.

159. Ugraḥ (ha), Śānti (ī), indu (.) adorned with vahni (ra) gives the māyābīja (hrīm), similarly, Govinda (sa) adorned with vahni and candra is said to be the Śrībīja (Śrīm).

160-161. With these two the eighteen-syllabled mantra becomes twenty-syllabled one.

The pūjā of Hari should always be performed in a Śālagrāma, or in a jewel, in an amulet, or in a mystic diagram or in images (idols), but never on the bare ground. He who worships Kṛṣṇa thus, attains the greatest goal.

---

1. The six syllabled mantra of Kṛṣṇa runs thus : Klīm Kṛṣṇāya svāhā. The eighteen and ten-syllabled mantras are as follows:

(a) Śrīṁ hrīṁ Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya Gopījanavallabhāya svāhā.

(b) Klīṁ Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya svāhā.

162-163a. It is said by the learned people that the sage of the twenty-syllabled mantra is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Kṛṣṇa, Klīm is the bīja and Svāhā constitutes the śakti. The aṅgas are to be conceived by means of the syllables of the mantra grouped into three, three, four, four, four and two letters.

Sṛṣṭinyāsa

163b-167. After making a pervasive nyāsa with the mūlamantra, one shall fix the mātṛkās placing them between the mantra, into their respective locations. With great concentration he shall fix the ten categories and make it pervasive.

Thereafter, he shall perform the rite of nyāsa of the mantra for the acquisition of the mood of the deity. He shall fix the mantra on the head, on the forehead, between the eyebrows, in the eyes, in the nostrils, in the mouth, in the chin, in the throat, at the root of the arm, in the belly, in the navel, in the penis, in the original lotus, in the buttocks, in the knees, in the calves, in the heels and in the feet. This is said to be the fixation of mantras, in the creative (i. e. descending order). The letters shall end with namaḥ.

Sthitinyāsa

168-169. He shall fix in the heart, in the belly, in the navel, in the penis, in the original lotus (in the mūlādhāra region) in the buttocks, in the knees, in the calves, in the heels, in the feet, on the head, in the cheek, between the eyebrows, in the eyes, in the ears, in the nostrils, in the mouth, in the chin, in the throat, and at the root of the arms. He shall fix the syllables of the mantra ending with namaḥ in proper sequence. It is called Sthitinyāsa, the fixation of maintenance.

170-172. He shall fix in the feet, in the heels, in the calves, in the knees, in the hips, in the mūlādhāra, in the penis, in the navel, in the belly, in the heart, at the root of the hands, in the throat, in the chin, in the mouth, in the nostrils, in the ears, in the eyes, in the middle of the eyebrows, in the forehead, and on the head. He shall thus fix the syllables of the mantra. This is called Saṁhāranyāsa (nyāsa in the order of dissolution).

173-174a. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu after performing the nyāsas of creative nature and of the nature of maintenance should perform the nyāsa named Mūrtipañjara.

174b-186a. After performing the six ancillary rites he shall meditate upon Kṛṣṇa in the lotus-like heart.

Acyuta resembling the molten gold should be meditated upon as seated in a lotus-like throne set in jewels. His throne is situated in a jewelled canopy in the city of Dvārāvatī. It is surrounded by a number of Kalpa trees and excellent mansions as refulgent as a thousand suns. The pillars at the entrance, the arched doorway and the floors are made of jewels. Pearls hang down from the canopy with diverse decorations of blooming and full blown flowers. In the middle of the cluster of jewels inlaid with rubies, beneath the celestial tree that sheds continuously a stream of jewels in the spot where quarters are brightly illuminated by a series of gemset lamps he is seated on a gemset throne resembling the rising sun.

He has lustre similar to that of a crore moons, suns and lightnings rising up simultaneously. He is handsome in every limb, is gentle and is bedecked in all ornaments.

He is clad in yellow robes. His hands shine with conch, discus, iron club and the lotus in them. With the tip of his lotus-like left foot he is touching a jar from which streams of jewels gush out without any obstruction and thus it has assumed the beauty of a sprout. Rukmiṇī and Satyabhāmā are standing to his right and left and shower over his head a stream of jewels gushing out of jars kept in their hands. Nagnajitī and Sunandā are handing over the jars. Mitravindā and Sulakṣaṇā are standing to the right and left of them are, giving the jars to them after filling them with jewels from the flowing stream of jewels. Jāmbavatī and Susīlā are giving them orders to the right and left.[1]

Outside of them the sixteen thousand beloved ladies are standing all round him. They should be meditated upon as shining by the jars from which streams of gold and jewels come out steadily. Outside of them the eight nidhis (treasures) must be meditated upon as filling the earth with wealth.

1. The Gautamīya Tantra reads Ratnanadyośca madhyataḥ i.e. placed between the two flowing streams of jewel; our text reads here ratnasughnaiśca madhyataḥ.

Exterior to this, the Vṛṣṇis and gods are to be meditated upon.

186b-187a. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra five hundred thousand times. To the extent of a tenth of it he shall perform homa with pink lotuses. He shall worship in the altar as mentioned before.

187b-191. After smearing the earth with fragrant paste he shall draw the outline of an eight petalled lotus. The hexagon shall be drawn within the pericarp and there Klīm is written along with the name of the person intended. He shall then encircle the Svara (Klīm) with the remaining syllables of the mantra (i.e. Vāsudevāya Govindāya Gopījanavallabhāya svāhā). He shall write Śrīm inside the square (bhūgṛha). To the East, West, South and North, and in the remaining corners he should write Saṁvid (hrīm). He shall write in the six points the six-syllabled mantra (i. e. Klīm Kṛṣṇāya namaḥ). He shall write in the filaments the Gāyatrī of Kāma by three, for each. He shall write the mūlamantra[1] in the eight petals. He should write it in the groups of six for each and then encircle it with the letter of the alphabets. To the exterior inscribe bhūgṛha and write Śrī and Māyā bīja in four quarters and their interstices. The Bhūgṛha shall be square in shape with eight vajras.

192. He who causes this diagram to be inscribed in a tablet of gold or some other metal, has it consecrated and wears it, is worshipped even by the gods.

193. This is the Gāyatrī. Kāmadeva and Puṣpabāṇa are in the dative case (unto Lord Kāma with arrows of flowers) we know and meditate on the bodyless one. May he urge us.[2]

194-196. At the beginning of the japa of the mantras of Gopāla which delight the people, one should say : Namaḥ,

1. The mūlamantra runs thus : Namaḥ Kāmadevāya sarvajanapriyāya sarvajanasammohanāya jvala jvala prajvala sarvajanasya hṛdayaṁ mama vaśaṁ kuru svāhā.

2. The Kāmagāyatrī runs thus : Kāmadevāya vidmahe Puṣpabāṇāya dhīmahi, tanno'naṅgaḥ pracodayāt.

then obeisance to Kāmadeva, beloved of the people, O enchanter of all people, blaze, blaze fiercely, make the heart of all people subservient to mine. It ends in Svāhā. This is said to be Madana Mantra. It consists of fortyeight syllables.

197-198. Smarabīja (klīm) at the beginning of japa captivates the three worlds. After worshipping the altar as before and conceiving the mūrti (form) by means of the mūlamantra he invokes Acyuta therein devoutly. He shall worship (the lord) after Sakalīkaraṇa (a kind of nyāsa). Thereafter, he shall worship everything by offering the seat and end with the offering of ornaments. Again, he should. worship him in the sequence of nyāsa.

199-201. With sandal paste and flowers he worships Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti and six ancillaries, the crown, the pair of ear-rings, the conch, the discus, the iron club, the lotus, the garland, the Śrīvatsa and Kaustubha. The excellent devotee shall worship the six aṅgas in six corners, and on the petals going towards four quarters he shall worship Vāsudeva and others in due sequence and then in the corners Śānti etc. are to be worshipped. He shall then worship the eight queens stationed at the tip of petals.

202-203. He shall worship the sixteen thousand beloved wives once. He shall then in due sequence worship the eight treasures viz. Indra, Nīla, Mukunda, Karāla, Ānanda, Kacchapa, Śaṅkha and Padma. Exterior to that, he shall worship the guardians of the quarters as well as Vajra etc.

204. After worshipping Kṛṣṇa who is covered with seven coverings[1] with reverence, he shall please him with the offerings of milk, cooked rice mixed with curds, sugar candy and ghee.

205. Then making an offerings of divine nature he shall eulogise and bow down to Keśava and thereafter, ritualistically, dismiss him alongwith his attending deities in his heart.

206. After offering one's own self to him and worshipping one's own self, the intelligent devotee shall identify himself with him and sport about. Thus the mode of ablution with jewels, the meditation and the worship based on the twenty-syllabled mantra has been recounted.

1. The seven coverings i.e. deities who encircle the principal one are seven in number. They are called āvaraṇas. They are here (1) Saḍaṅga. (2) Vasudeva, Saṁkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha, (3) Śānti, Śrī, Sarasvatī, Rati (4) Rukmiṇī etc. (5) Sixteen thousand beloved ladies of the lord, (6) The treasures (nidhi) and (7) Eight Lokapālas.

207-210. He who worships him with the mantra thus, shall become the object of flourishing prosperity. If any one repeats the mantra everyday alongwith the requisite homa, arcana (worship) and meditation, his house will be filled with jewels, gold and grain continuously. The vast earth full of all sorts of vegetation will be within his hands. He shall be richly endowed with sons and friends. In the end, he will attain the great goal. After worshipping Govinda with white flowers, and after performing ten thousand homas by means of red lotuses soaked in ghee with rice, he shall apply the ash on the head. He will have abundance of cooked rice etc. All women shall be under his control.

211. With great concentration one shall perform a hundred thousand homa with red lotuses smeared with trimadhu. When compared with his glory and prosperity the lordship of Indra certainly becomes insignificant as a small blade of grass.

212-213a. He who performs a thousand and eight homas every day with white flowers smeared with trimadhu shall within a month become the priest of a king. With this mantra one shall achieve all these practical applications.

Mantra Rāja

213b. Henceforth, the king of mantras of ten syllables[1] shall be recounted by me. It is the bestower of all siddhis.

214. Smṛti (g) associated with sadya (o), lohita (p) with akṣi (ī), janavallabhā (beloved of the people), Vāyu (ya), agnipriyā (svāhā). This is said to be the ten-syllabled mantra.

215. It is said by the learned men that its sage is Nārada, the metre is virāṭ the deity is Kṛṣṇa, Klīm is the bīja, Svāhā is the śakti.

1. The mantra runs thus : Gopījanavallabhāya svāhā.

216. There are five cakras: ā cakra, vi cakra then su cakra, trailokyarakṣaṇacakra and the asurāntakacacakra (the cakra that destroys demons).[1]

217-224. The five ancillaries are done by means of cakras in the dative case ending with Svāhā. The mantra is then encased in tāra (om) in the beginning and ends with namaḥ.

It is spread over the hands three times. He shall then perform the nyāsa rite with the syllables interspersed with om and bindu (.). They will end with namaḥ. It is to begin in the joints of fingers beginning with the right thumb and ending with the left thumb.

This is called Sṛṣṭinyāsa.[2] Now the Sthitinyāsa[3] is being told. The intelligent devotee shall perform nyāsa beginning from the little finger of the left hand and ending with the little finger of the right hand.

In the Saṁhṛti nyāsa he shall fix from the left thumb and end with the right thumb. This Saṁhṛti is known to be the remover of a lot of defects. The nyāsa that ends in Sṛṣṭi is the bestower of learning to the pure-minded celibates (varṇin). That ending with Sthiti befits the householder and is the best-ower of fruits according to their desires. That which ends with

1. The Cakranyāsa is to be performed in the following manner :
   (a) Om Ācakrāya svāhā aṅguṣṭhābhyāṁ namaḥ
   (b) ,, Vicakrāya svāhā tarjanībhyāṁ svāhā
   (c) ,, Sucakrāya svāhā madhyamābhyāṁ vaṣaṭ
   (d) ,, Trailokyarakṣaṇacakrāya svāhā anāmikābhyāṁ hum
   (e) ,, Asurāntakacakrāya svāhā kaniṣṭhābhyāṁ phaṭ.

2. The procedure of the nyāsa rite is to be performed in the following way : At first the devotee should fix the mantra prefixed and suffixed with om at the front, back, and the side of both the hands thrice. Then, he should take each syllable of the mantra (i.e. Gopījanavallabhāya svāhā) and place om before each and add a bindu to it, then place another om and lastly namaḥ i.e. om gom om namaḥ, om pīm om namaḥ etc.

3. The text differs from the Gautamīya Tantra which defines Sthiti as dakṣiṇā aṅguṣṭhapūrvā vāmā kaniṣṭhāntā sthitiḥ. i.e. it begins with the thumb of the right hand and ends with the little finger of the left.

Saṁhāra is for the worthy sages who are totally unattached to the world.

Then again he shall fix the syllables of the mantra following the procedure of Sthiti in the fingers. Then he shall fix with the aforesaid cakras and perform five ancillaries in the fingers. Then, the learned devotee with devotion shall fix the letters of the alphabets with bindu (.) encased within the mūla-mantra in the locations of the mātṛkās. Thereafter, encasing the mūlamantra within om (in the beginning and at the end) he shall make a pervasive nyāsa.[1]

225. He shall fix the ten categories according to Saṁhāra and Sṛṣṭi (ascending and descending orders). The syllables of the mantra shall end with namaḥ and join with parāya to the character of the tattva.[2]

226-228. He shall fix the categories beginning with the earth and ending with the mind in their due sequence. He shall fix earth, water, fire, wind, void, ego, Mahat, Prakṛti, Puruṣa and the supreme one on the head in the eyes, ears, nostrils, mouth, heart, navel, penis, knees and the feet. He shall fix the syllables of the mantra interspersed with om and end with namaḥ.

229-233. This is called Sṛṣṭinyāsa. O brahmin, now listen to the Sthitinyāsa. He shall with proper sequence fix in the heart, navel, penis, knees, feet, head, eyes, ears, nose and mouth.

Then, he shall fix in the feet, knees, penis, navel, heart, mouth, nostrils, ears, eyes and head. This is called Saṁhāra nyāsa. The nyāsa ending with Sṛṣṭi is that of celibate students, that ending with Sthiti is that of householders, that ending with Saṁhāra is the nyāsa of ascetics without attachment.

1. The nyāsa rite is performed thrice which is technically known as Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti and Saṁhāra To indicate this the text states of the nyāsa ending in ṣṛṣṭi, ending in sthiti and so on.

2. The nyāsa rite is to be performed in the following manner. This is at first to be performed in the ascending order : Om namaḥ parāya pṛthivī-tattvātmane namaḥ and so on. It should be fixed at the feet. In this way, the syllables of the mantra are to be fixed on different limbs of the body.

For the celibate students four (Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti, Saṁhāra and Sṛṣṭi again) are prescribed, five for the householders; the nyāsa for the ascetics is said to be of three kinds. This sequence of nyāsa is good for them. Some learned men recommend the nyāsa ending with Saṁhāra in the case of detached householder.

Vibhūti Pañjara Nyāsa[1]

234. The nyāsa named Vibhūti Pañjara shall be performed for attaining the desired object. If the mantra is repeated ten times it is conducive to the nearness of Kṛṣṇa.

235-240. He shall perform nyāsa in the mūlādhāra (in the anus), in the penis, in the navel, in the heart, in the throat, in the mouth, in the shoulders, in the thighs, in the neck, in the navel, in the belly, in the heart, in the breasts, in the two sides, in the buttocks, on the head, in the mouth, in the eyes, in the ears, in the nostrils, in the cheeks, similarly at the root of the arm of the right hand, at its joint in the middle (elbow) wrist, at the root of fingers and at the tips of fingers, thereafter on the head, in different directions of the head beginning with the east (west, south and north) and in all (the quarters), in the two hands, in the two hips, on the head, in the eyes, in the mouth, in the throat, in the heart, on the stomach, in the anus, in the penis, in the knees, in the feet, in the ears, in the checks, in the shoulders, on the chest, on the sides and in the penis. He shall fix with due sequence in the two thighs, in the knees, in the calves, and in the feet. This nyāsa is called Vibhūti Pañjara. It is the bestower of all siddhis. By dint of this excellent nyāsa one can directly attain proximity of Kṛṣṇa.

1. This nyāsa is to be performed in the different locations of the limbs with the syllables or the mūlamantra ten times. The first syllable of the mantra is fixed in the ādhāra and the last syllable ends in Śroṇī. This is the first fixation. The second begins with the head (verse 236) and ends in Kapāla and so on.

The text seems to be defective, for it does not mention about the fixation in the left hand and in its different locations. The text deviates from the current tradition and fails to follow the nyāsa rite of the ten-syllabled mantra in the group of ten different limbs of the body.

241. He shall then performs nyāsa of Mūrti Pañjara mentioned before. He shall, then, fix the excellent nyāsa of daśāṅga and pañcāṅga (the ten-limbed and five-limbed) in their proper sequence.

242. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu shall fix on the heart, on the head, on the tuft, in every limb, in the quarters, on the sides, in the hips, on the back and on the head. (This is ten-limbed one).

243. He shall again perform the nyāsa of five limbs by means of the cakras as before with full care. The other sets of nyāsas mentioned under the eighteen syllabled mantra shall also be performed.

244-245a. The intelligent devotee shall make a pervasive nyāsa with the kirīṭa mantra. The excellent aspirant shall show the gestures of Veṇu and Vilva mudrās etc. He shall then arrest the quarters with the Sudarśana. ('Om Sudarśanāya Astrāya Phaṭ').

245b-246. The mudrās : If the fingers other than the thumbs are kept straight it is called Hṛnmudrā (the gesture of the heart). Similar is also the Śiromudrā. If the first is kept with the thumb pointing downwards it is called Śikhāmudrā (the gesture of the tuft).

If two fingers of each of the hands are spread it is called Varmamudrā.

247. Both the arms are held together as though an arrow is held in the fist. If the sound produced by the snapping of the thumb and the index finger is spread all round it is called Astramudrā. The eyes are fixed to the forefinger and the middle finger.

248-249. The thumb of the left hand is in contact with the hips. Its little finger is in contact with the thumb of the right hand. The little finger of the right hand is spread. The index finger, the middle finger and the ring finger are bent a little and moved. This is called Veṇumudrā. It is a well protected secret. It is the beloved mudrā of Hari. The mālā, Śrīvatsa and Kaustubha are not mentioned separately because they are already described.

250. The thumb of the left hand will be kept straight upward and is tied with the thumb of the other hand. With the fingers of the right and the left hand the tips are pressed tightly and then placing it on the lotus of heart he should utter (Kāmabīja) Klīm. This is called Vilvamudrā by the leading sages. It is to be kept as secret. It is a mudrā that causes happiness unto all.

251. By the mere knowledge of mudrās the sins committed by the body, mind and speech are destroyed.

252. Meditation, Japa and the worship during the three units of time are to be performed as mentioned before in regard to this mantra. In all these the same sequence is maintained regarding the ten-syllabled as well as the eighteen-syllabled mantras.

253-254. When the mantra is realised thus, the repeater of the mantra deserves to make practical application of the same. The intelligent devotee shall meditate on Kṛṣṇa who has lifted up the mountain Govardhana with his fierce and browny arms. He shall then repeat the mantra. He can go out without an umbrella.

255. He has nothing to fear from rain storm or thunderbolt. The devotee shall think of the lord who defeated Indra by making his clouds and storm futile and then perform homa.

256-257. If ten thousand homas are performed with salt, undoubtedly there will be a drought. The devotee shall meditate upon the lord sporting about on the banks of Yamunā. He takes his bath therein and plunges there. He is being sprinkled with the sprays and waters from the river by his beloved damsels. After meditating thus, he shall perform homa with milk. Or he shall perform Tarpaṇa rite with water. There is no doubt that a great shower will fall even untimely. Repeater of the mantra shall then, perform homa for seven days with mustard well-soaked in oil. Certainly the Kṛtyā (evil spirit) itself will become angry and destroy its own maker.

258-260. If any one is distressed with swelling fever etc. attending with burning sensations and fainting fits, this mantra shall be repeated after recalling the same. The mantra is to be repeated near the head of the patient. He shall have instantaneous relief. Or the devotee shall meditate on Acyuta who is seated on Garuḍa, who is accompanied by Pradyumna and Balarāma and who is eulogised by the Jvara (fever) suppressed and attacked by his own jvara (spirit to counter the effect). After meditating on the lord, he shall repeat mantra near the head of the patient. The patient shall be free from fever.

261. For the suppression of fever the devotee shall meditate on the lord and worship him. He shall perform ten thousand homas with pieces of amṛta twigs each four aṅgulas long.

262. After meditating on Hari who dispelled the distress of Bhīṣma when he had been pierced by a number of arrows the devotee should repeat mantra and touch the patient with his hands. This is conducive to the suppression of fever.

263. In order to make premature death recede, the devotee shall meditate on the lord handing over to the sage Sāndīpani, his son and then perform homa ten thousand times with the pieces of amṛta twigs as mentioned before.

264. For the purpose of increasing number of sons and grandsons, the devotee shall recall the deity accompanied by Pārtha (Arjuna) and present his son to the brahmin whose son had been dead. After meditating on the lord he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times.

265. The devotee shall perform ten thousand homas with putrajīva fruits soaked in honey juice in the fire kindled by its twigs. He shall attain longlived sons.

266-268. The devotee shall worship at night, a jar filled with the boiling decoction of (the pieces of twigs) of a milk-exuding tree and on the next day in the morning he shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. For twelve days the woman should be bathed with that water. If this is performed, even a barren woman shall beget sons of longevity in life. The woman who is desirous of a son shall silently drink in the morning the water charged with the mantra in a leaf of the holy fig tree. The mantra should be repeated hundred and eight times. The procedure should be continued for a month. Even a barren woman will beget a son with all good marks.

269-270. The devotee should meditate on Hari who burnt down with his splendour the city of king of Kāśī who was his enemy after conquering the Kṛtyā urged by him.

271-272. The devotee shall meditate on the lord stationed in the divine and auspicious hermitage dotted with Badarī trees. The lord is further conceived as stroking the body of Ghaṇṭākarṇa with his lotus-like hands. After meditating thus, he shall perform homa a hundred thousand times with gingelly seeds soaked in trimadhura. Even though he may be defiled with great sins he becomes sanctified instantaneously.

273-275. The devotee shall meditate on Hari causing split between Rukmin and Balarâma who are both engaged in gambling. In order to bring about hatred between two friends he shall perform homa with cowdung balls to the extent of a thousand times a day. Within seven days he will be able to make them enemies hating one another.

The devotee shall meditate on Acyuta who is seated on Garuḍa, who showers arrows with blazing points and who chases the running hosts of enemies. After meditating on the lord the devotee shall repeat the mantra with his mind not turning on anything else.

276-278. Within seven days, the enemies will be routed and destroyed.

Meditating on the lord who has overthrown the calf (as asura) and who takes away the kapittha (the wood apple) fruit, the devotee shall repeat the mantra ten thousand times. He routs and exterminates the enemy instantaneously.

The devotee shall meditate on himself as the lord, the slayer of Kaṁsa. He is conceived as dragging Kaṁsa dead down from the dias. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra. He shall perform homa at night for ten thousand times with the twigs of the tree belonging to the birth constellation of the enemy. Thus, even a fierce enemy attains death.

279-284. Or he shall perform homa with Akṣa twigs soaked in mergosa oil ten thousand at night. Ere long, he will be killing his enemies. In order to suppress and pacify enemies the devotee shall perform homa at night. He shall perform homa with turmeric, eight-petalled lotuses (?), Vyoṣa (i.e. dried ginger, pepper and pippala) or the seed of cotton soaked in castor oil. The homa shall be performed in the cremation ground. If one does not prefer the rite causing death, he shall perform thousand homas with milk puddings. He shall become peaceful in his mind. By meditating on Kṛṣṇa the remover of Pārijāta tree and repeating the mantra a hundred thousand times, one shall have success everywhere. Never shall he be faced with failure.

He should meditate on Kṛṣṇa seated on a Chariot with the Mudrā (posture) of hands giving lessons to Arjuna and teaching unto him the meaning of the Gītā. The goodman should repeat the mantra in order to increase his piety.

In order to acquire learning he shall perform homa with palāśa flowers smeared with honey for a hundred thousand times.

285-287. In order to protect his kingdom, city, village, or one's own property or the physical body the devotee shall meditate on Kṛṣṇa who has assumed the cosmic body, who has the lustre similar to the crores of rising suns, who is identical with agni (fire) and Soma, who has the refulgence of molten gold, whose lotus-like face and feet are illuminated by the sun and fire, whose ornaments are divine, who holds diverse kinds of weapons and who has attained his space in the cosmic firmament. After meditating thus, he shall with great concentration repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times for the purpose of protection.

288-290. The man who worships Hari at the beginning of the day with red wild flowers shall perform japa a hundred and eight times in accordance with the injunctions mentioned for the rite of the mid-day. Within a thousand maṇḍalas the repeater of the mantra shall captivate fluent brahmins. With the jāti (jasmine) flowers he shall win over Kṣatriyas, by remembering the lord who is in the guise of a cowherd, meditating on Kṛṣṇa engaged in the sport and by performing homa with red oleander flowers, he shall captivate people of the Vaiśya community and he shall captivate Śūdras by performing the rite with blue lotuses.

291-293. Remembering the lord engaged in singing and dancing, one should perform homa for seven days with white flowers alongwith ghee and rice grains; the devotee shall apply the ashes on the head and the forehead.

He shall thus be able to captivate and control his beloved. She too shall certainly captivate her husband.

If a woman charges the betel leaf, flower, clothes, collyrium or sandal paste with the mantra repeated for a thousand times and hands it over to any man he will ere long be under her control along with sons, kinsmen and pet animals.

294. Meditating on Hari stationed in Vṛndāvana and accompanied by the cowherd lasses the devotee shall perform homa with apāmārga twigs. He shall captivate and control the universe.

295. The excellent devotee of Viṣṇu who takes initiation from his preceptor and performs the worship of Kṛṣṇa in accordance with this procedure shall become the master of his eight siddhis.

296-297. By his mere vision all those who enter into argument with him turn pale. The Goddess of speech resides in his tongue and enters his person when he is sitting in the assembly.

After enjoying different sorts of worldly pleasures he attains the region of Viṣṇu in the end.

CHAPTER EIGHTYONE

The review of the mantras of Kṛṣṇa and others

1. Henceforth, O leading sage, I shall recount different kinds of mantras of Kṛṣṇa, on propitiating which, people realise their desired objects.

2. There are three mantras consisting of three syllables each : one with śakti (hrīm) śrī (śrīm) māra (klīm) in the beginning, the second śrī, śakti and ramā in the beginning.

3. The sage is Nārada, Gāyatrī is the metre and the deity is Kṛṣṇa named govinda who is the bestower of all desires unto men.

4. As before, the aṅgas of all the three shall be conceived by means of the mantra (ācakrāya svāhā). Thereafter, he shall make the nyāsa (fixation) of the pervasive one with the kirīṭa mantra.

5. He shall perform the rite of digbandhana (arresting the quarters) by means of the mantra of Sudarśana. In the first one he shall perform the rites of meditation, worship etc. as mentioned in the case of ten-syllabled mantra.

6. In the second one too he shall perform the rites of meditation, worship etc. as mentioned in the case of ten-syllabled mantra. In the third one, the intelligent devotee shall meditate on Hari with intense concentration of the mind.

7-8. The intelligent devotee shall meditate on Kṛṣṇa inside the sun, who is pink (aruṇa) bearing the conch, discus, bow, arrows, noose, goad and who plays on the flute held with both hands. After meditating thus, he shall repeat mantras five hundred thousand times severally. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with milk pudding along with ghee.

9-10. When the mantra is achieved thus, the repeater of the mantra shall perform kāmya rites as before, śrīm, hrīm klīm Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya Svāhā—this is the twelve-syllabled mantra. Brahmā is the sage. Gāyatrī is the mantra and Kṛṣṇa is the deity. He shall conceive the six aṅgas with the bījas, ramā (śrīm) and four and four and four letters (of the mantra).

11. The repetition, meditation, homa, worship etc. are the same as mentioned in the twenty-syllabled mantra. Of what avail is much talk ? This mantra is the bestower of all desires.

12-15. The first one consists of śrīm, hrīm and klīm in the beginning and hrīm and klīm in the end. This is ten-syllabled mantra. It is this alone that was mentioned in the beginning as having Śakti and Ramā.

The mantras are sixteen-syllabled and twelve-syllabled. The aṅgas are to be conceived by means of cakras. The devotee shall meditate upon the Lord who embraces his two beloveds having the lotus and the lily in their hands. He is embracing his beloveds by means of his hands that bestow boons and fearlessness. He is embraced by those two also. He is refulgent. Thanks to Cakra and Śaṅkha. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra one million times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with ghee. Then the two leading mantras become fruitful. They are bestowers of all desires. They grant unto men all riches and good fortune.

16-17. The mantra ending with Kāma consists of eighteen syllables. It is the bestower of sons and riches. The sage is Nārada, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Kṛṣṇa, the bīja is Kāma, Svāhā is the śakti. He shall conceive the six aṅgas by means of bīja having long vowels.

18. May that son of the cowherdess of divine nature and brilliant garments and holding in his right hand the cooked milkpudding and fresh butter in the left, protect us.

19. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra three hundred and twenty thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa in the fire with milk and cooked rice along with sugar.

20. He shall worship the lord in the Vaiṣṇava pedestal mentioned before, as in the case of the eighteen-syllabled mantra. After performing the worship of Kṛṣṇa stationed in the mystic diagram he shall perform tarpaṇa in his lotus-like face.

21. Those who seek sons shall perform tarpaṇa with milk, ripe bananas, curds and butter. Within a year he begets a son.

He gets all his desires fulfilled by tarpaṇas.

22-25. He who desires mastery over speech shall use the twentytwo-syllabled mantra. Vāgbhavam (aim), Kṛṣṇāya, māyā (hrīm), Govindāya, Ramā (śrīm), Gopījanavallabhāya svāhā. Bhṛgu (sa) is attached with the fourteenth letter of the vowel ending with Visarga and follows the mantra.

The twenty-two syllabled mantra is the bestower of the mastery of speech. The sage is Nārada, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is Gopāla, the bestower of learning. Klīm glorified is the bīja, aim is Śakti. Its utility is the acquisition of learning.

26-29. The devotee shall meditate on the Lord of the universe as follows :

In the left upper hand he holds the excellent book of learning. In the right upper hand he holds the crystal rosary of the nature of Mātṛkā. In the pair of lower hands he holds the flute of the nature of Śabda Brahman and Gāyatrī. His garment is yellow. His complexion is dark and the refulgent tender peacook feathers adorn him. He is omniscient and served by leading sages. He is dressed elegantly as a young woman. After meditating on him thus he shall repeat one Mantra four hundred thousand times. To the extent of tenth of it he shall perform homa with Kiṁśuka flowers (Buteafrondosa). The repeater of the Mantras shall worship in accordance with the injunctions in regard to the twenty-syllabled mantra. He who resorts to the mantra thus, shall be a master of speech. Even unseen spiritual literatures (flow unto him) like the waves of Gaṅgā.

30-32. Tāra (om), then two Kṛṣṇas, then utter Mahākṛṣṇa, then after Sarvajña (Omniscient) tvam (thou), prasīda me (be pleased with me) agni (ra) mā, ramaṇa (lover of Ramā) Vidyeśa (lord of lores) Vidyām āśu prayaccha me (Grant me wisdom immediately). This is the thirtythree-syllabled mantra, the great bestower of learning.

33. Its sage is Nārada, anuṣṭup is the metre, the deity is Kṛṣṇa. The five aṅgas are conceived by means of several Pādas (quarters) and the entire. He shall then meditate on Hari.

34-35. (Meditation is as follows) : In the celestial garden the dias is studded with gems as refulgent as the solar stone. On the Yogic pedestal Mukunda is seated in the middle of the divine Kalpa tree identical with the vedānta doctrines. He is surrounded by the four veda forms of Kalpa trees and the Kośas (Dictionaries) hung down from hundreds of branches. He is surrounded by Nyāyas, Tarkas, Purāṇas and Smṛtis, and others of such a nature.

May the lover of Vallavis (cowherd lasses) grant us glory and good fortune. With the tips of his hands he holds the conch, flute, flowery arrows, the sugarcane, bow and two full jars touching the ākṣas (?). His body is as elegant as that of Smara. He has divine ornaments and unguents. To the mother of the universe he is explaining the meaning with clear and beautiful words by the flute originating from Śabdabrahman. He has pink lustre.

36. After meditating thus, the knower of the mantras shall repeat it hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with milk-puddings. The mode of worship is the same as in the case of eighteen-syllabled mantra.

37-39. Tāra (Om), namo bhagavate Nandaputrāya ānandavapuṣe (of bliss as physical body). To this the ten-syllabled Mantra is added. Thus the mantra of twentyeight syllables (is evolved). It is the bestower of all desires. "Unto Kṛṣṇa Govinda, the son of Nanda, of dark complexion, having the child's body". To this the ten-syllabled mantra is added. Hence, the mantra having thirtytwo syllables is evolved.

40. The sage of the two mantras is Nārada, the metres are Usṇik and anuṣṭup. The deity is Nandaputra. Its utility for the acquisition of everything.

41-42. The five aṅgas are conceived by means of the five cakras. The worship is alongwith the aṅgas, the guardians of the quarters and their weapons.

The devote shall think about the lord as follows : He holds the jewelled cup in the right hand and the gold ladle in the left hand. He is embraced by the two goddesses.

The mantra has to be repeated a hundred thousand times. To the extent ofone tenth of it he shall perform the homa with milk-pudding. When these two mantras have been achieved well, the repeater of the mantra can do as he pleases with them.

43-45. Praṇava (Om) Kamalā (Śrīm) Māyā (Hrīm) namo Bhagavate Nandaputrāya Bālavapuṣe (Om obeisance unto the lord of the body of Child). This mantra is of nineteen syllables. Brahmā is the sage. The metre is anuṣṭup and the deity is Kṛṣṇa himself with the body of a child. The mantra is resorted to by the learned men for the achievement of riches.

46. Tāra (Om), namaḥ Bhagavate Rukmiṇīvallabhāya svāhā. This is the mantra of sixteen syllables.

47. Its sage is Nārada, the metre is anuṣṭup, the deity of the mantras the lover of Rukmiṇī. The syllables of the mantra are grouped into one, two, four, six and two letters each and the five aṅgas are conceived. Then, he shall meditate on the lord of devas.

48. May the yellow-robed Hari of diverse kinds of ornaments protect us. His lustre is like that of Tipiccha (Yanthocymus epictorious). His beloved is seated on his lap. She has a golden refulgence. Her arms are long and tender like the lotus stalk. With his left arm he is embracing her. She too is willingly embracing him. In the other hand, he is holding a gold staff. His garment is pure and yellow in colour. May such Hari protect us.

49-50. After meditating thus the devotee shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with a red lotus soaked in trimadhu. He shall worship Hari in the pedestal mentioned before along with the aṅgas, the sages, the chief of whom is Nārada, the guardians of the worlds and their respective weapons.

51-54. The mantra, thus being propitiated fulfils all desires of the repeater of the Mantra.

After the word līlādaṇḍadhara (one who holds the sportive staff) add gopījana to doḥ daṇḍa, then vā and dhārā (la) ambu (va) and lohita (p) is adorned with arghīśa (u), the meghaśyāma (black like the cloud), then bhagavan (O Lord), salila (v) attached with (i) then after saying (ṣṇo) there should be svāhā. Thus the mantra will consist ,of twenty-nine syllables. Nārada is its sage, the metre is anuṣṭup. The deity of the mantra is Hari, the one holding the sportive staff. The five aṅgas are conceived by means of the letter of the mantra grouped into fourteen, four, three and four letters each in due order.

55. May that lord confer upon us glory. With the sportive staff held in his left hand he fascinates the young cowherd maidens and other beautiful ladies. His right hand is kept on the shoulders of his friends and playmates. He is the lord who had killed Kaṁsa and whose strides are very large.

56. The repetition of the mantra is to be performed a hundred thousand times; to the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with gingelly seeds and raw rice grains soaked in trimadhu. Then, he should worship aṅgas along with the guardians of quarters with their weapons.

57. He who continuously worships daily Hari holding the sportive staff is honoured and revered by the people. The goddess of fortune will steadily stay in his house.

58. When g is attached with o (go), toya (v) keśava (a) and the pair of dharā (lla) and bhāya and svāhā; this is the seven-syllabled mantra the bestower of all siddhis. (The combination will be 'govallabhāya svāhā').

59. Its sage is Nārada, the metre is uṣṇik, the deity is Govallabha (lover of cows). As before, the five aṅgas shall be conceived by means of cakras.

60. Hari is to be meditated upon as standing amidst tawny cows and calling them. He holds in his right hand a flute and in the other a noose and a staff. He is blue in complexion like the cloud. He wears a yellow garment and has decorated himself with peacock feathers.

61. The mantra should be recited seven hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he should perform homa with cow's milk. He should worship in the altar. This would be the first āvṛti.

62-64. After completing the worship of the group of eight kinds of cows viz. the golden, tawny, grey tawny, reddish brown, tawny like jaggery, deep brown, tawny in four places, yellowish tawny, excellently tawny in colour, he should worship the lords of the quarters along with their weapons. When the mantra becomes fruitful thus, he, the knower of the mantra, should perform the rites known as kāmya. He who performs a thousand and eight homas with milk everyday, will be liberated within a fortnight along with the herd of cows. The same method is followed in regard to the ten-syllabled mantra.

65-66. "Oṁ namaḥ bhagavate ŚrīGovindāya". This is a twelve-syllabled mantra. Its sage is Nārada. Gāyatrī is the metre and ŚrīGovinda is the deity. The five aṅgas are conceived by one, two, four and five letters of the mantra as well as by the whole.

67-70. He shall meditate on the lord as follows : He is seated on a divine gem-set throne placed at the root of the Kalpa tree. He is dark-complexioned like the cloud. His silken garment is yellow in colour. He is very handsome. He holds in his hands the conch shell and a cane staff. He is surrounded by thousands of cows. He is bathed in the continuous stream like the flow of nectar exuding from the single pot by the mature hands of the lord of immortals. His eyes have the lustre of petals of the fresh and full-blown lotus.

The devotee shall repeat the mantra one million two hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he shall perform homa with the milk. As before, he shall worship the lord stationed in the cow-pen or in the idols. The Mūrti (form) should be conceived in the altar of Viṣṇu as mentioned before by means of the mūlamantra. Kṛṣṇa should be invoked therein and worshipped, preceded by the worship of teachers.

71. Rukmiṇī and Satyabhāmā are to be worshipped at the sides, Indra in front and the divine cow behind. This being performed, one should worship the aṅgas in the filaments.

72-76. The eight queens Kālindī and others stationed in the eight petals, and the things tied in the corners of the petals by the lord, viz, the tinkling bells etc. (are to be worshipped), in the same way; then the Śrīvatsa and Kaustubha in front, the garland of sylvan flowers etc. also in front. Pāñcajanya, the iron club, the discus, Vāsudeva, Devakī, Nandagopa, Yaśodā, the cowherd and cowherd lasses along with their cows are to be worshipped in eight quarters. Indra and others who are stationed outside, beyond them thunderbolts etc. are also to be worshipped. The following are to be worshipped thereafter, viz Kumuda, Kumudākṣa, Puṇḍarīka, Vāmana, Śaṅkukarṇa, Sarvanetra, Sumukha, Supratiṣṭhita and Viṣvaksena, then one's own ātman.

77. The man who worships Govinda once or thrice a day will be long-lived and free from agony. He shall be the lord of wealth and grain.

78. Smṛti (g) accompanied by sadya (o), cakri (k) along with right ear (u) then dharā (la) (i.e. Gokula), then nāthāya which ends in hṛt (namaḥ). This great mantra consists of eight syllables.

79. Its sage is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Kṛṣṇa. The five aṅgas are to be conceived with two letters for each and with the entire one.

80. (Meditation) : Bow, Ye, down to the cowherd boy, who is aged five, who is unsteady and moving about, who runs about in the courtyard, whose eyes are tremulous and who is bedecked in tinkling bells, bangles, necklaces, and anklets.

81. After meditating thus, the repeater of the mantra should repeat it eight hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with Brahmavṛkṣa (palāśa and udumbara trees or milk pudding).

82. In the aforesaid altar of Viṣṇu he should conceive the form by means of mūlamantra. He should invoke Kṛṣṇa therein and worship him with the steadiness of mind.

83-84. In the filaments, in the four quarters and in the interstices he should worship the aṅgas and in the quarters he should worship Vāsudeva, Bala, Pradyumna and Aniruddha; he should worship Rukmiṇī, Satyabhāmā, Lakṣmaṇā, Ṛkṣajā (Jāmbavatī) in the interstices of the quarters. He should worship the lords of the quarters along with their weapons outside of it. Thus the mantra becomes effective.

85-87. Tāra (Om) Śrī bhuvana (śrīṁ hrīm) Kāma (klīm) Śrīṁ Śrī Kṛṣṇāya, Śrīṁ Govindāya Gopījanavallabhāya hrīṁ śrīm. This is the mantra of twentyfour syllables. Its sage etc. are as mentioned before. One should meditate on Siddhagopāla. He shall remember Rāma and Kṛṣṇa seated in the Mādhavī creeper protected by Garuḍa and engaged in the divine sports. Then, he should repeat the mantra.

88 Its mode of worship is to be carried out in the manner as mentioned before by the excellent devotee of Viṣṇu.

The single-syllabled mantra is Carī (ka) attached with the seventh vowel (ṛ) ending in Visarga (:) i.e. (kṛḥ).

89-90. The word Kṛṣṇa is two-syllabled one, but when it is preceded by Kāma (klīm) it becomes three-syllabled one. The same (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) when used in the dative case becomes four-syllabled mantra.

Kṛṣṇāya namaḥ is a five-syllabled mantra, but not a five-syllabled one when it is preceded and followed by Kāma (klīm). Gopālāya Svāhā is a six-syllabled mantra.

91. Another six-syllabled one is Klīṁ Kṛṣṇāya Svāhā. The seven-syllabled mantra Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya is the bestower of all yogic powers.

92. Another seven-syllabled mantra is śrīṁ hrīṁ klīṁ Kṛṣṇāya klīm. Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya namaḥ is a nine-syllabled mantra.[1]

93-95. Another nine-syllabled mantra is Kṛṣṇa and

---

1. These verses give the nine-syllabled mantra thus : Klīm Kṛṣṇāya Govindāya klīm.

Govinda in the dative preceded and followed by Kāma (klīm). The ten-syllabled mantra is the bestower of all siddhis. Kāma (klīm) Śārṅgī (ga) is stationed on dharā (la) (i.e glā) which is again joined with the fourteenth vowel and bindu (glaum), thus 'Klīm glaum śyāmalāṅgāya namaḥ'. This ten-syllabled mantra is the bestower of all siddhis. Another ten-syllabled mantra is Bālavapuṣe Kṛṣṇāya svāhā. After uttering Svāhā and Bālavapuṣe he should add klīm Kṛṣṇāya.

Then he shall meditate on the deity charming unto the womenfolk of cowherds as follows :

96. I bow down to Nandakiśora (the child of Nanda) who is the very life of Rādhā, whose face resembles the moon, who imitates the glossy cloud and who plays on the banks of Kālindī that is served by the fragrant wind. The wind is fragrant because it comes into violent clash with the clusters of creepers laden with full-blown flowers amidst the main paths in the holy Vṛndāvana.

97-99. O sage, the worship of these, should be known along the aforesaid lines. O son of Devakī, Govinda, Vāsudeva, Jagatpate, O Lord of the Universe, give a son unto me. O Kṛṣṇa I have sought refuge in you. This mantra consists of thirtytwo syllables. Nārada is its sage, Gāyatrī and Anuṣṭup are its metres, the deity is Kṛṣṇa the bestower of sons. The aṅgas are to be conceived through the pādas severally and then collectively.

100. The son of Vasudeva should be meditated upon as follows : he is seated in the chariot with Vijayā. He is handing over the sons to the brahmin after bringing them back from the middle of the ocean.

101. The mantra is to be repeated a hundred thousand times and homa to be performed with gingelly seeds soaked in honey juice. The worship is to be performed on the aforesaid altar along with the aṅgas, the guardians of the world and their weapons.

102-104. When the mantra is thus propitiated, the repeater of the mantra shall beget sons even of a barren woman.

Oṁ Hrīṁ sānta (i.e ha) with bindu (.), then sānta, that is, the letter sa with Visarga (:)then so'ham. This mantra ends with svāhā and is an excellent mantra consisting of eight syllables.[1] The excellent sage of this mantra of Pañcabrahma is Brahmā, the excellent Gāyatrī is its metre. Excellently luminous Supreme Brahmā is its deity.

105-106. Praṇava is mentioned as the bīja, svāhā is cited as śakti, hṛdaya is also svāhā, so'ham (that I am) is considered to be the śiraḥ (head). Haṁsa is said to be śikhā (tuft of hair), hrīm is the kavaca, praṇava is the netra and astram is Hari-hara.

107. O brahmin, he is Brahmā. He is Śiva. He is Hari. He alone is the ruler of gods. He is Omniformed. He has all names, he is imperishable, the self-ruler.

108. After meditating thus, one should repeat the mantra eight hundred times, the homa should be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it. In the altar, the worship of praṇava is to be performed along with the ancillaries and the attending deities called āvaraṇas.[2]

109. When the mantra is thus propitiated, O Nārada, the leading aspirant attains indeterminate knowledge originating from such statements like 'thou art that' etc.

110-111. 'Klīm Hṛṣikeśāya namaḥ.' This is an eight-syllabled mantra, the sage of which is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī and Gāyatram, its deity is Hṛṣīkeśa. Its application is for the attainment of everything. Klīm is the bīja and va is cited as its śakti.

112. With the bīja itself the six aṅgas must be conceived. then one should do meditation. Whatever is mentioned as regards to Puruṣottama mantra is also to be pursued in regard to this.

113. The Japa as prescribed is a hundred thousand times and ten thousand homas are to be performed with ghee.

1. The eight-syllabled mantra given in the verse runs as follows : Oṁ, Hrīṁ haṁsaḥ so'haṁ svāhā.

2. Some deities are considered to be the encircling deities stationed in accordance with their hierarchical distinctions. They are worshipped either in the ascending or discending order. Some are placed near or some in distance from the principal deity and are considered to veil the glimpse of the main deity as long as they are not propitiated properly, for this reason they serve as a veil or āvaraṇa.

Then follows the rite of tarpaṇa for the acquisition of all desires by means of palāśa flowers.

114. Śrī is bīja. 'Śrīdharāya trailokyamohanāya namaḥ' (obeisance unto Śrīdhara, the enchanter of the three worlds).

115. Its sage is Brahmā, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is Śrīdhara, the bīja is Śrī, āpa (vam) is the śakti, the six aṅgas are to be conceived by means of the bīja alone.

116. Meditation, worship etc are to be performed in the same manner as for Puruṣottama. The mantra is to be repeated a hundred thousand times and to the extent of one-tenth of it the homas are performed with ghee.

117. (The devotee) should perform worship, homa etc. with white fragrant flowers. When this is performed, O leading brahmin, the devotee becomes Śrīdhara himself directly.

118. Acyuta, Ananta, Govinda are in the dative and end in namaḥ (Acyutāya namaḥ etc). The sage of these mantras is Śaunaka, the metre is Virāṭ.

119-123. The Sages (of the mantras) are Parāśara, Vyāsa and Nārada, the metre is Virāṭ. Hari, the Supreme Brahman is the deity. The bīja and Śakti are as mentioned before and are considered so by the devotee. He should proceed thus with meditation. The Lord holds a conch and a discus, he possesses four arms and wears a crown. He is endowed with all weapons and he is seated on Garuḍa. He is worshipped by Sanaka and other sages as well as by all gods. He is accompanied by Śrī and Bhūmi. He is the lord resembling the rising sun, he has ear-rings that can be compared to the discus of the thousand-rayed sun that rises up in the morning. In order to protect all the worlds he grants endless gifts of fearlessness; he is endowed with joy.

124-126. After meditating thus, the devotee shall worship in the altar belonging to Viṣṇu with great concentration. The first āvaraṇa (the encircling veil) shall be with aṅgas viz the discus, conch, iron club and sword, the second āvaraṇa is said to be with the goad, noose, bow and the iron club, the third āvaraṇa is by means of Sanaka and others, Śākteya (i.e. Parāśara) Vyāsa. Nārada and Śaunaka and the fourth āvaraṇa is by means of the guardians of the worlds. The mantra is to be repeated a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it the homa is to be performed with ghee.

127-128. When the mantra is propitiated thus, the one practised in mantra shall strive for the practical application. Meditating on the lord of gods at the root of Śrīvikṣa and recalling the patient in the mind and touching him, he should repeat the mantra ten thousand times, thinking of him, as the sādhya mentally, O brahmin, he shall cure him within forty days.

129. He who seeks a maiden shall perform homa with fried grains; for the acquisition of wealth he shall perform homa with bilva; he who seeks garments shall perform homas with fragrant flowers, for recoupment of health he shall perform homa with gingelly seeds.

130. He who stands in the navel-deep water and repeats the mantra a thousand and eight times shall certainly be free from fever.

131. For marriage the devotee shall meditate on Kṛṣṇa stationed in the centre of the moon's disc and repeat the mantra for a month. O Nārada, he will be able to get a girl desired by him.

132. After uttering Vāsudeva and nigaḍaccheda then 'Vāsudevāya hum phaṭ phaṭ svāhā' is said to be a mantra.

133. Its sage is Nārada. Gāyatrī is the metre and Śrī-Kṛṣṇa is the deity. Hūm is the bīja, svāhā is the śakti. Everything else is as in the case of ten-syllabled mantra.

134. Bala (va), pavana (ya) with dīrgha (ā) and indu (.) jalam (va) joined with jhiṇṭīśa (e) atri (da), then vyāsāya namaḥ. This mantra (vyāṁ Vedavyāsāya namaḥ) consisting of eight syllables may protect us.

135. The sage is Brahmā and Gāyatrī is the metre, the deity is the son of Satyavatī, the first one is the bīja, the aṅgas are to be conceived by means of Vyā etc. with long vowels.

136. He shall meditate on Vyāsa for the acquisition of Siddhi. He has a shining palm of the right hand. He has assumed the posture of explanation. He is seated on the Yoga-pīṭha (the altar of Yoga). On the left knee he has kept his other hand. He is the storehouse of good learning. He is surrounded by groups of brahmins devoted to learning. He is in a delighted mood. His luminous body is like that of a lotus. He is the son of Parāśara and is highly meritorious in his conduct.

137. The mantra is to be repeated eight thousand times. He should perform homa with milk puddings. In the altar of Vyāsa mentioned before, he should worship the aṅgas in the beginning.

138-140(a). In the east and other quarters he should worship Paila, Vaiśampāyana, Jaimini and Sumantu. In the corners he should worship Śrīśuka, Romaharṣaṇa Ugraśravas and other sages along with Indra and others as well as their weapons. The repeater of the mantra who has propitiated the mantra attains poetic genius, splendid progeny, ability to comment upon, fame and a great store of riches.

140(b)-146. Mādhava (i) preceded by Nṛsiṁha (kṣ) and followed by lohita (pa) preceded by the first syllable of Nigama (om) and followed by svāhā. This five-syllabled mantra[1] is an excellent remover of poison. Its sage is Ananta, the metre is Paṅkti, the king of birds is the deity. Om and Svāhā are the glorified bīja and Śakti of the mantra respectively.

Jvala, jvala (blaze, blaze) mahāmati (Great intelligent one) svāhā is said to be the mantra for the hṛdaya. After the word Garuḍa, cūḍānana and svāhā is the mantra for the head. The mantra for the tuft is Garutmataḥ śikhe svāhā, break, break, pierce, pierce, terrify, terrify, suppress, suppress and svāhā is the mantra for the (kavaca) coat of mail. You who assumes terrible forms, the remover of all poisons, terrify, terrify, burn, burn all, reduce to ashes and svāhā. This is said to be the mantra for the eyes.

147. 'Unto one whose strength is unimpeded, unto one whose sway is unhampered hum phaṭ svāhā, is prescribed to be the mantra for astra.

148-140. He should perform the fixation of the syllables in the feet, hips, mouth and head.

(Then he should meditate):[2] I worship the glorious king of birds who resembles molten gold, who has taken up leading

1. The mantra is as follows :
   Oṁ kṣipa svāhā.
2. In Padārthādarśa, the commentary on Śāradā Tilaka, pp. 87s, we find the verse occurring here.

serpents as his ornaments; who entirely subdues terrible poisons instantaneously when a person meditates on him. (He should further think of him) as holding by the tip of his beak a trembling serpent. He assumes with his two hands the postures of fearlessness and the offering of boons. His wings sing the song of the Sāman by means of their fluttering wings which are free from all impurities.

151-152. The devotee should repeat the mantra for five hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with gingelly seeds. He should worship at the altar made of mātṛkās, garuḍa, the form of the Veda.

'Pakṣirājāya Svāhā' is prescribed to be the mantra for the altar. Worshipping the aṅgas in the middle of the pericarp, he should worship serpents in the diagram and outside of it, the guardians of the worlds whose hands shine by their weapons of thunderbolt, etc. The repeater of the mantra who has thus propitiated garuḍa dispels all sorts of poisons. After the fall of body he attains the Supreme abode of Śrī Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER EIGHTYTWO

Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa Sahasra-nāma-kathanam

A thousand names of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa[1]

Sanatkumāra said :

1-3. O Nārada, don't you know that from the trident-bearing lord you acquired in the previous birth of yours the twin-natured secret of Kṛṣṇa's mantra. Recollect, if it has been forgotten.

---

1. The entire chapter promises to give five hundred names of Kṛṣṇa first, but we find only four hundred and ninetyseven names in the first section. Afterwards in section two, from verse 128, we find four hundred ninetyfour names of Rādhā. The number makes a total of nine hundred ninetyone names. In

Sūta Said :

O brahmins, on being addressed thus by the intelligent Kumāra, Nārada meditated and quickly realised the early story of his previous birth. Then Nārada, the beloved of the lord, went on meditating for a long time. On recollecting all good accounts he became delighted with a beaming face.

4-5. He said, "O holy sir, all the happenings that had occurred in the previous kalpa are remembered by me except the twin-natured acquisition.

On hearing the words of Nārada of great soul, the holy sage Sanatkumāra spoke precisely.

Sanatkumāra said :

6-7. O brahmin, listen. I shall tell you how in that previous birth Kṛṣṇa's secret had been acquired by you. Listen attentively. Before this Sārasvata Kalpa, in the twentyfifth kalpa you were born in the family of Kaśyapa under the name Nārada.

8-10a. Once you went to Kailāsa to ask lord Śiva the truth regarding Kṛṣṇa, the great Yogin. You asked Śiva the resident of Kailāsa. The great lord whom you had asked, recounted precisely the secret which was self-revealed and in consonance with Hari's perpetual sportive nature (nitya līlā). At the end of the story Hara was asked by you to show the eternal sports of Hari.

10b-13. Then Sadāśiva said 'Gopījanavallabhacaraṇaṁ Śaraṇam prapadye' is the mantra (I seek refuge in the feet of the lover of the womenfolk of the cowherds). The sage of the mantra in Surabhi, the metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is the lordly lover of the cowherd lasses. The utility is cited in his devotion as expressed. 'I have sought refuge'.

14. O brahmin, there is no need of its being siddha (and sādhya) etc. nor of its purification, and the requirement of nyāsa.

Nārada Pañcarātra we find one thousand names of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā separately. In Chap. IV/VIII of the text one thousand names of Kṛṣṇa occur and in Chap. V/V we find a thousand names of Rādhā. Many of the names tally with the names of the present text. The names of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are connected with the exploits of Kṛṣṇa in Vṛndāvana, Mathurā and Dvārakā and may be traced in the Mahābhārata, Bhāgavata and Brahmavaivarta purāṇa also.

Only meditation is the way for the revelation of the perpetual sport.

15-16. I shall recount means for the internal piety now. The devotee must be endowed with devotion to the preceptor. After receiving the mantra from him he should think all sorts of his teacher's desire. Remaining steady in one's own spiritual attitude and meditating on his soul, he should think of his mercifulness and propitiate the preceptor.

17. He shall learn the virtues of good people, those virtues which dispel the fear of those who seek refuge, which are devoid of anxieties over worldly or other-worldly affairs and which bestow siddhis.

18. He should always propitiate the devotees of Viṣṇu considering them to be his desired deity. He should never think of reproaching them.

19. All the objects of worldly pleasures and those belonging to the other world will be presented by Kṛṣṇa himself in accordance with one's previous deeds.

20. He shall always meditate on lord Kṛṣṇa engaged in eternal sports. He shall always serve Kṛṣṇa as incarnated in the idols worshipped by him.

21. He should be exclusively thought of by those intelligent devotees who have taken refuge into him and the suppliants while remaining indifferent to their persons and abodes.

22-24. O dear one, keep away from these terrible defects viz. disrespect to the perceptor, hatred towards good people, differentiating between Hara and Hari, disrespect of the Vedas, zealously committing sins in the name of Hari explaining away the names of Hari as a concocted story, teaching of Hari's names unto an atheist or an idle man, forgetting of names and lack of respect to the names.

25. One shall continuously think: I have sought refuge in Hari stationed in the heart. It is he who will protect me always.

26. O lord of Rādhā, I belong to you physically, mentally and verbally. I always resort to Kṛṣṇa and his beloved Rāḍhā. You two alone are my goal.

27. O excellent sage, all the servants, friends, fathers and beloved wives of Hari are eternal. They must be thought of by the noble-souled one.

28. He makes frequent travels to and fro along the forests and the cowherd's colony. He tends cows along with his friends except the slaying of demons.

29. Hari's comrades are mentioned to be twelve. They are Śrīdāma and others. Rādhā's girl friends are mentioned to be thirtytwo. They are Suśīlā and others.

30-31. O dear one, you must consider yourself as one of those ladies among them endowed with beauty and youth, a virgin well-bedecked in ornaments, conversant with different kinds of arts and crafts befitting the enjoyment of Kṛṣṇa highly delighted and pleased. Thanks to the happiness in serving him thus.

32. The devotee shall serve them by means of timely attendance, beginning from the early morning within an hour before sunrise and ending with midnight.

33. With great concentration he should recite their thousand names every day. O leading sage, this is the way for those who seek refuge unto them.

34-36. The truth which has been revealed by me to you should not be told to anybody.

Sanatkumāra said :

Thereafter, O Nārada, you asked Sadāśiva for the thousand names. He recounted them to you, Listen. After meditating on the lord who stands accompanied by Rādhā resorting to the Kalpa tree by the Yamunā in the forest of Vṛndāvana, O great sage, one should recite the thousand names called Yugala (the twins) both of lord Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā.

The Names of the Lord :

37-40. (1) The son of Devakī (2) the great hero, (3) the son of Vasudeva, (4) younger brother of Balarāma, (5) holder of the club, (6) one who deludes Kaṁsa (7) one who fascinates Kaṁsa's attendants, (8) one who broke the bolt, (9) one who broke steel plates, (10) one who was carried by his father, (11) one who was praised by his father, (12) eulogised by his mother, (13) worthy of being meditated upon by Śiva,

(14) one who has partitioned the water of the Yamunā, (15) resident of Vraja, (16) one who delights the people of Vraja, (17) the boy of Nanda, (18) the storehouse of mercy, (19) a child by his playful mood, (20) lotus-eyed, (21) cause of festivities in Gokula, (22) Lord, (23) delighter of the women-folk of the cowherds, (24) Kṛṣṇa, (25) delighter of the cowherds, (26) the goal of the good, (27) the slayer of the demon Baka, (28) Viṣṇu, (29) one who bestows liberation on Baka, (30) Hari.

41-50. (31) One who lies down in the swing of Bala, (32) dark-complexioned, (33) the most beautiful of all, (34) lotus-navelled, (35) Hṛṣīkeśa, (36) one who assumed the form of a human child sportively, (37) one who destroyed the cart sportively, (38) one who is bathed with the chanting of vedic hymns, (39) delighter of Yaśodā, (40) shining one, (41) resorted to by crores of sages, (42) one who stays always in the Madhu forest, (43) Vaikuṇṭha, (44) origin of all, (45) the sacrifice itself, (46) Lord of Ramā, (47) lord of the descendants of Yadu, (48) the enemy of Mura, (49) slayer of Madhu, (50) Mādhava, (51) remover of arrogance and false prestige, (52) Lord of Śrī, (53) one who holds the earth, (54) Prabhu (55) one who is engaged in great sports in the big forest, (56) son of Nanda, (57) of great seat, (58) one who took away the life of Tṛṇāvarta, (59) one who causes wonder to Yaśodā, (60) one in whose mouth the three worlds were seen. (61) Lotus-eyed, (62) Lotus-handed, (63) one who pleases, (64) one who is favourable to brahmins, (65) one who protects virtues, (66) lord of the earth, (67) Śrīdhara, (68) self-ruler, (69) chieftain of Brahmā, (70) chieftain of Śiva, (71) presiding deity of piety, (72) great lord, (73) comprehensible only through the Vedas, (74) stationed in Brahmā, (75) lord of the subjects, (76) one whose vision is never failing, (77) one who holds the hand of a cowherdess, (78) great favourite of the cowherd boys, (79) one who follows the boys, (80) strong, (81) favourite of Śrīdāma, (82) selfpossessed, (83) one who likes to be in the courtyard of cowherd lasses, (84) gentle, (85) of good fame and auspiciousness, (86) remover of butter, (87) boy, (88) one whose favourite diet is butter, (89) one surrounded by herd of boys, (90) one surrounded by the herd of monkeys, (91) one whose eyes show bewilderness, (92) one who fled away, (93) threatened by Yaśodā, (94) trembling one, (95) one who appears pretty in his pretended weeping, (96) one whose waist was tied with a rope, (97) one whose nature is immeasurable, (98) compassionate, (99) one who is favourably disposed to his devotees.

51-60 (100) One who is well bound to the mortar, (101) one who bends down the head, (102) one who is harassed by the cowherdesses, (103) one who broke down the trees, (104) one who shatters sorrow, (105) one who liberates the sons of Dhanada, (106) one who praised the words of the celestial sage, (107) ocean of fondness for devotees, (108) one who causes commotion in the colony of cowherds, (109) one who increases delight in Braja, (110) the soul of cowherds, (111) the inducer, (112) witness, (113) one who resides in Vṛndāvana, (114) protector of calves, (115) lord of calves, (116) one who adorns the cowherd boys, (117) one who indulges in childish play, (118) one who is interested in boys, (119) boy, (120) one who has gold bracelets, (121) yellow-robed, (122) one who has gold necklace, (123) one who has jewels and pearls as ornaments, (124) one who has tinkling bells and bangles, (125) one who has threads, (126) one who has anklets, (127) one who has rings, (128) one who kills the demon Vatsa, (129) destroyer of the demon Baka, (130) one who slays the demon Agha, (131) one who removed the sleep of boys, (132) the primordial one, (133) one who bestows the realisation of self, (134) one who keeps company, (135) one who took the food on the bank of the Yamunā, (136) one who is stationed in the middle of the assembly of the cowherd boys, (137) one who is an ornament unto all cowherds, (138) one who has taken the morsel of food in his palm, (139) one who has taken the support of the tree for side dishes, (140) one who is armed with a horn and a stick, (141) one who has decorated his neck with Guñjā (berries), (142) one who has a coronet bedecked with peacock feathers, (143) one who is bedecked with garlands of sylvan flowers, (144) one who has painted his body with red chalk, (145) one who resembles the newly-formed cloud, (146) cupid, (147) one who has the beauty of a crore of Kandarpas, (148) one whose shark-shaped earrings shine, (149) one whose arms extend upto the knees, (150) lord, (151) one whose eyes have no sleep, (152) one whose majesty is like that of a crore of oceans, (153) death unto death, (154) Sadāśiva.

61-70 (155) One whose body fascinates Brahmā, (156) one who has assumed the body of a cowherd boy, (157) one who is the origin of crores of Brahmāṇḍas, (158) one who removed the delusion of Brahmā, (159) Brahmā, (160) worshipped by Brahmā, (161) the master, (162) one who has removed the arrogance of Indra etc., (163) one who advised the worship of mountains, (164) one who held the mountain Govardhana, (165) worshipped by Indra, (166) one who is worthy of being worshipped, (167) one who is worshipped by Kāmadhenu, (168) one who has taken ablutions in all holy centres, (169) Govinda, (170) one who protects cowherds, (171) one who causes distress unto Kāliya, (172) ruthless, (173) one who is worshipped by the wives of serpent, (174) huge-bodied, (175) enemy of the demon Dhenuka, (176) Enemy of Pralamba, (177) one who thrashes the demon who came in the guise of a bull, (178) one who has torn off the throat of Keśī, (179) one who kills the son of demon Māyā, (180) the protector of cowherds, (181) the protector of cows, (182) one who quenched the wild fire, (183) one who removes the garments of the cowherd lasses, (184) one who grants boons unto the cowherd lasses, (185) one who partakes of the food of the masters of sacrifices, (186) one who dispelled the false prestige of the lord of waters, (187) one who is the very life of Nanda, the cowherd, (188) one who liberated Gandharva from the curse, (189) one who cut off the head of Śaṅkha, (190) one who holds the flute, (191) one who stood by the baṭa tree, (192) one who plays on the flute, (193) one who removes the anxieties of cowherd lasses, (194) one who protects all, (195) one who called all together, (196) one the object of desire of all cowherd lasses, (197) one who propounded the virtues of the crippled, (198) one who fascinates the assemblage of cowherd lasses, (199) one who enjoys the Rāsa sport and (200) one who appreciates and (201) enjoys, (202) husband of Rādhā, (203) the loving husband of Kiśorī, (204) the lover of the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, (205) one who delights the womenfolk of cowherds, (206) one who fascinates the womenfolk of the cowherds.

71-80. (207) One whose conduct has been sung by the cowherd lasses, (208), one who is eager to watch the dance of cowherd lasses, (209) one who has placed his hands over the shoulders of the cowherd lasses, (210) one who is fond of kissing the cowherd lasses, (211) one whose face is wiped off by the cowherd lasses, (212) one who is fanned by the cowherdlass, (213) one who embellishes the tresses of the cowherd lasses (214) one who lies down in the flower beds of the cowherd lasses, (215) one who supports the hearts of the cowherd lasses, (216) one who is interested in bearing up the cowherd lasses. (217) one who removes the arrogance of the cowherd lasses (218) ultimately won over by the cowherd lasses, (219) one who has had excellent dalliance with the cowherd lasses (220) one who is remembered as the lover of the cowherd lasses, (221) one whose feet had been duly saluted by the cowherd lasses, (222) one who stays subservient under the cowherd lasses, (223) one who is defeated by Rādhā, (224) glorious, (225) one who has excellent sport and dalliance in the bower, (226) one who is fond of the arbour, (227) one who stays in the arbour, (228) one who develops Vṛndāvana further, (229) one whose limbs had been sprinkled with the water of Yamunā, (230) one who gives happiness unto Yamunā, (231) one who makes the moon stunned, (232) heroic, (233) loving, (234) one who fascinates even Kāma, (235) one who is at the beginning of Kāma, (236) lord of love, (237) one who pierces the mind of Kāma, (238) the giver of love, (239) one who assumes forms according to the desire (of the devotee), (240) one who engenders the affluency of love in women, (241) eternally sportive, (242) one whose sports are great, (243) all-in-all, (244) one who is present in all, (245) the great Ātman, (246) the great overlord, (247) the cause of all causes (248) one who has accepted the words of Nārada, (249) one who is worriedly thought over by Akrūra, (250) one who causes the satisfaction of the cowherd lasses, (251) one who has collected the words of Akrūra, (252) the cause of the residence of Mathurā, (253) one who subdued the distress of Akrūra, (254) one who destroyed the life of the washerman.

81-90. (255) the bestower of happiness unto Mathurā, (256) the plunderer of Kaṁsa's garments, (257) one who wears the garments of Kaṁsa, (258) one who gives garments unto cowherds, (259) one who goes to the house of Sudāmā, (260) one who is worshipped by Sudāmā, (261) one who is delighted with the weaver, (262) one whom the hunchback lady smeared with unguents and (263) sandal paste, (264) Mukunda, (265) sharp-eared, (266) omniscient (267) one who surveys Mathurā, (268) one who is congratulated by the people, (269) one who bestows benign glance, (270) the enemy of daityas, (271) protector of Devas, (272) one who suppresses all sorrows, (273) the breaker of bows, (274) one who celebrates great festivals, (275) the slayer of Kuvalayāpīḍa, (276) foremost among those who are strong in their teeth and (277) shoulders, (278) one who assumes forms according to his desire, (279) one who has divine garments and unguents, (280) one who assumed the form of a wrestler, (281) Mahākāla, (282) one who assumes any form with mere wish, (283) accompanied by Balarāma, (284) one who causes terror in Kaṁsa, (285) terrible, (286) one who slays Muṣṭika, (287) the slayer of Kaṁsa, (288) slayer of Cāṇūra, (289) slayer of Śiśupāla (290) remover of fear, (291) enemy of Śala, (292) the slayer of Tośala, (293) resident of Vaikuṇṭha, (294) enemy of Kaṁsa, (295) one who slays all wicked ones, (296) for whom the gods sounded the drum, (297) one who removed the sorrow of his father, (298) chief of the Yadus, (299) lord of the good, (300) suppressor of the enemies of Yādavas, (301) the destroyer of the sorrow of Śauri, (302) the destroyer of the distress of Devakī, (303) the saviour of Ugrasena, (304) one who is merciful to Ugrasena, (305) the witness unto all living beings, (306) approved of and (307) rejoiced in by the Yadus.

91-100. (308) Worthy of being served by the residents of Mathurā, (309) sympathetic, (310) kinsman of his devotees, (311) distributor of wealth among all cowherds, (312) eager to move with cowherds (313) and cowherd lasses, (314) to whom the sacred thread was offered by Śauri, (315) merciful to Ugrasena, (316) devotee unto the preceptor, (317) religious student,

(318) engrossed in the study of the Vedas, (319) one who studies along with Saṁkarṣaṇa, (320) friend of Sudāmā, (321) storehouse of learning, (322) treasury of arts, (323) wielder of the discus, (324) holder of the conch Pāñcajanya, (325) releaser of all beings in the hell, (326) worshipped by Yama, (327) the great lord, (328) Acyuta in view of the utterance of name, (329) indulging in dalliance with Kubjā, (330) gentle and (331) elegant, (332) friend unto the indigent, (333) incomparable, (334) the protector of the house of Akrūra, (335) one who keeps his vow, (336) auspicious, (337) the conquerer of Jarāsandha, (338) scholar, (339) the destroyer of Yavana, (340) support of the brahmins, (341) one who does what is pleasing to Mucukunda, (342) one who has fled away from Jarāsandha, (343) founder of Dvārakā, (344) lying hidden, (345) favourable to the Brahmins, (346) faithful to agreement, (347) assuming divine sports, (348) one who does pleasing things, (349) performer of universal rites, (350) bestower of fame, (351) one who sends a pleasing message to Rukmiṇī, (352) one who increases the sorrow of Rukmin, (353) the abode of grief to Caidya, (354) excellent one, (355) destroyer of wicked kings, (356) one who displeased Rukmin, (357) one who abides by the words of Rukmiṇī, (358) one who pays heed to the words of Balabhadra, (359) one who released Rukmin, (360) Janārdana, (361) the beloved husband of Rukmiṇī, (362) the husband of Satyabhāmā, (363) one who favours his devotees, (364) amenable to devotion, (365) one who gives jewel to Akrūra.

101-110. (366) The slayer of Śatadhanvā, (367) the lover of the daughter of the king of bears, (368) the husband of the daughter of Satrājit, (369) the abductor of Mitravindā, (370) the husband of Satyā, (371) one who won Lakṣmaṇā as a prize, (372) worthy of being worshipped, (373) one who does what is pleasing to Bhadra, (374) the slayer of the demon Naraka, (375) the remover of the girls kept as prisoners of Naraka playfully, (376) victorious, (377) the enemy of Mura, (378) lord of Madana, (379) the remover of the sorrow of the earth, (380) possessing Vainateya (i.e. Garuḍa), (381) one who goes to the heaven, (382) the giver of ear rings unto Aditi, (383) worshipped by Indra, (384) the lover of Ramā, (385) one who is worshipped by Vajrī's (i.e. Indra's) wife, (386) one who removed Pārijāta tree, (387) one who dispelled the false prestige of Indra, (388) father of Pradyumna, (389) father of Sāmba, (390) one who has many sons, (391), lord (392) one who accepted Garga as his preceptor, (393) of truthful gait, (394) support of dharma, (395) one who holds the earth, (396) one who decorates Dvārakā, (397) storehouse of the Vedas, (398) the slayer of Pauṇḍraka, (399) one who cut off the head of Kāśirāja, (400) one who burnt the brahmin who was not a devotee of Viṣṇu, (401) one who is terrible unto Sudakṣiṇā, (402) one who caused Jarāsandha to be torn up, (403) one who performed Yajña for the son of Dharma (i.e. Yudhiṣṭhira), (404) one who cut off the head of Śiśupāla, (405) the destroyer of Dantavaktra, (406) the slayer of Vidūratha, (407) lord of Śrī, (408) bestower of glory, (409) the slayer of Divivida, (410) one who upheld the respectability of Rukmiṇī (411) the remover of the curse of celestial sage, (412) one who keeps up the word of Draupadī, (413) the remover of the fear from Durvāsas, (414) one who arrived immediately after being remembered by Pāñcālī, (415) the messenger of the sons of Kuntī, (416) counsellor of Pārthas, (417) the destroyer of the miseries of the sons of Kuntī.

111-120 (418) The remover of the false prestige of Arjuna, (419) one who granted life to Pārtha, (420) one who supplied garment to Pāñcālī, (421) the protector of the protectors of the world, (422) the charioteer of Arjuna, (423) truthful, (424) one who is achieved through truth, (425) remover of fear, (426) veracious, (427) taking interest in truth, (428) one who is fond of truth, (429) liberal-minded, (430) conquerer of Mahāsena, (431) destroyer of the army of Śiva, (432) one who cut off the arms of the demon Bāṇa, (433) the bestower of the boon of arms unto Bāṇa, (434) one who removed the false prestige of Garuḍa, (435) one who increased the valour and (436) splendour of Garuḍa, (437) one who assumed the form of Rāma, (438) one who caused joy to Satyabhāmā, (439) one who plays about in the ocean, (440) one who shows divine sports in Vraja, (441) one who broke his vow, (442) the protector of Bhīṣma's behest, (443) the remover of the weapons of heroes, (444) time, (445) lord of Kālikā, (446) of great strength, (447) the remover of the head of Varvarīśa, (448) one who bestows the head upon Varvarīśa, (449) the conquerer of Dharmaputra, (450) the destroyer of the arrogance of the valorous Duryodhana, (451) one who indulges in dalliance everyday due to the loving importunity of the cowherd lasses, (452) the lord of Vraja, (453) one having unimpeded amorous enjoyment with Rādhā, (454) blessed, (455) one who resorts to swings always, (456) one who delights always in the Madhuvana, (457) one who is always fond of Vṛndāvana, (458) one who is always associated with Aśoka forest, (459) one who bears the marks of tilaka on the forehead, (460) one who is always fond of Govardhana mountain, (461) one who is always dear to Gokula, (462) one who regularly frequents the Bhāṇḍīra Vaṭa (i.e. a fig tree), (463) one who always stays on the Vaṭa with the flute, (464) one who resides in the village of Nanda, (465) one who is fond of the house of Vṛṣabhānu.

121-127 (466) One who has assumed the form of his beloved, (467) one who always indulges in Rāsa sport, (468) protector of the womenfolk in the cowherd colony, (469) the lover of womenfolk of the colony of cowherds, (470) one who is sympathetic to Devāśrama, (471) one who stays under the Kalpa tree, (472) one residing in Śilānugandha (?) (473) walking on foot, (474) one who has the lustre of the cloud, (475) one who resembles the linseed flower, (476) one who is always merciful unto Lakṣmī (477) one who does what is pleasing to Tripurāri (i.e. Śiva), (478) one whose bow is terrible, (479) invincible, (480) one who causes the destruction of Ṣaḍdhura, (481) one who takes away the life of Nikumbha, (482) one who destroys the city of Vajranābha, (483) one who removes the life of Pauṇḍraka, (484) one who does what is pleasing to Bahulāśva, (485) one who does what is pleasant to the excellent brahmin, (486) the remover of the difficulty of Śiva, (487) destroyer of the demon Vṛka, (488) one who welcomes and greets Bhṛgu, (489) one who bestows Sāttvika quality on Śiva, (490) one who worships Gokarṇa, (491) the cause of the removal of leprosy of Sāmba, (492) Eulogised by the Vedas, (493) knower of the Vedas, (494) one who was born in the family of Yadu, (495) one who destroys the family of Yadu, (496) one who destroys Yadus (497) one who rescued Uddhava.

The Names of Rādhā

128-140. (1) Rādhā, (2) Rādhikā, (3) Bliss, (4) daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, (5) the goddess of Vṛndāvana, (6) meritorious, (7) the captivator of the mind of Kṛṣṇa, (8) bold, (9) clever, (10) loveable, (11) beloved, (12) enchantress of Hari, (13) delicate, (14) sweet, (15) honey, (16) maiden, (17) having the lustre of gold, (18) one who has conquered the moon, (19) one who has conquered the deer, (20) one who has conquered a lion, (21) one who has conquered an elephant, (22) one who has conquered the banana stem, (23) one who has conquered the Cuckoo, (24) born of Govinda's heart, (25) one who has conquered the bimba fruit, (26) one who has conquered the parrot, (27) one who has conquered the lotus, (28) virgin, (29) attracting Śrīkṛṣṇa, (30) Goddess, (31) one who is always in twin-form, (32) one who always sports, (33) beloved, (34) (one who has aesthetic sense, (35) beloved of Kṛṣṇa, (36) one who rejoices, (37) joyous, (38) bedecked by Nanda's son, (39) of celestial garment, (40) having divine necklace, (41) bedecked in pearls and jewels, (42) one fond of arbours, (43) one who resides in bowers, (44) heroine of the hero of the arbour, (45) having a beautiful form, (46) having a beautiful face, (47) having gold shoulderlet, (48) auspicious, (49) sung with the flute of Śrīkṛṣṇa, (50) one who is captivated through the flute, (51) auspicious, (52) gentle, (53) goddess, (54) free from passions, (55) giving joy unto the world, (56) beautiful, (57) beloved, (58) playing with Kṛṣṇa, (59) interested in Kṛṣṇa, (60) going together with Śrīkṛṣṇa, (61) having the Vaṁśīvaṭa as the favourite haunt, (62) having twin and non-twin forms, (63) one who resides in the Bhāṇḍīra forest, (64) white and pure, (65) beloved of Gopīnātha, (66) friend, (67) born of the Vedas, (68) divine, (69) one who gives pleasure to Govinda, (70) one who seeks Kṛṣṇa, (71) goddess, (72) one who gives great bliss, (73) one who is worthy of being served by the dwellers of Vaikuṇṭha, (74) as much conducive to happiness as a crore of Lakṣmīs, (75) one who has the beauty of a crore of Kāmas, (76) one who gives as much enjoyment as a crore of Ratis, (77) one who can be conceived only through devotion, (78) having the form of devotion, (79) the lake of gracefulness, (80) Umā, (81) one who is worthy of being worshipped by Brahmā, Rudra and others, (82) one who is always endowed with enthusiasm, (83) sporting continuously, (84) having perpetual love, (85) bedecked in perpetual elegancy, (86) having perpetual enjoyment in Vṛndāvana, (87) united with the son of Nanda.

141-150 (88) One associated with the assembly of cowherd lasses, (89) always united with Gopāla (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), (90) one who throws milk product freely, (91) heroic, (92) blissful, (93) the giver of bliss, (94) one with great sports, (95) the superior one, (96) a woman of urban nature, (97) wandering amountains, (98) whirling continuously, (99) full, (100) one endowed with the mark on the forehead with musk, (101) like Lakṣmī, (102) dark-complexioned, (103) deer-eyed, (104) having the form of Siddhi, (105) causing delight and enjoyment, (106) one whose face resembles a crore of moons, (107) white-complexioned, (108) one who has the sweetness of voice of a crore of cuckoos, (109) the abode of good conduct and beauty, (110) one who is fondled by the son of Nanda, (111) one who resides in the Aśoka grove, (112) one who is in contact with the forest called Bhāṇḍīravana, (113) one who has entered the bottom of the Kalpa tree, (114) dark-complexioned (115) of universal nature, (116) beloved of Hari, (117) unapproachable by Brahmā, (118) unapproachable by Śiva, (119) one who has taken her abode in the mountain of Govardhana, (120) one whose abode is on the banks of Yamunā, (121) one who continuously repeats the word Govinda, (122) one who is always esteemed, (123) affectionate, (124) saluted by Śrīkṛṣṇa, (125) eulogised by Kṛṣṇa, (126) wooed by Kṛṣṇa (127) one whose abode is in the heart of Śrīkṛṣṇa, (128) one who is the very fruit of the divine tree, (129) one worthy of being served, (130) one who has the abode of enjoyment in Vṛndāvana, (131) one who is the very nature of a crore of holy centres, (132) truthful, (133) one who bestows the fruit of a crore of holy centres, (134) one who cannot be attained even by a crore of yogic practices, (135) one whose abode is difficult of access by means of a crore of Yajñas, (136) of mental ability, (137) the digit of the moon, (138) one who is as elegant and splendid as a crore of Śrī, (139) sinless, (140) one who has the happiness of a crore of liberated souls, (141) gentle, (142) one who has the elegance of a crore of Lakṣmīs, (143) like the celestial damsel Tilottamā, (144) one who is present in all the three units of time, (145) one who knows the three units of time, (146) goddess, (147) one who knows the three vedas, (148) one who knows the three worlds, (149) one who stays at the end of the fourth state.

151-160. (150) One worthy of being propitiated by Durgā, (151) one worthy of being propitiated by Rāma, (152) one worthy of being propitiated by the universe, (153) one of the nature of cit (consciousness), (154) one worthy of being propitiated by the gods, (155) one worthy of being propitiated by the Supreme, (156) one worthy of being propitiated by Brahmā, (157) one of the nature of the Supreme, (158) one worthy of being worshipped by Śiva, (159) one who can be achieved through love, (160) one worthy of being propitiated by devotees, (161) one of the nature of rasa, (162) one who is the vital breath of Kṛṣṇa, (163) the shining one, (164) one who is dallying in love with Kṛṣṇa, (165) one worthy of being propitiated by Kṛṣṇa, (166) one who can be achieved through devotion, (167) one who is served by groups of devotees, (168) one who is the support of the universe, (169) the support of mercy, (170) the support of beings, (171) the highest heroine, (172) one made of pure love, (173) bashfulness, (174) one who is eternally perfect, (175) crest-jewel, (176) of divine form, (177) of divine pleasure, (178) of divine dress, (179) endowed with joy, (180) one who is the essence of the bevy of celestial damsels, (181) one who has perpetual freshness of youth, (182) enveloped by the greatest Brahman, (183) one who is worthy of being meditated upon, (184) of great form, (185) extremely shining, (186) one who has the brilliance of a crore of suns, (187) one whose complexion is superior to that of a crore of lunar discs, (188) tender, (189) the primordial speech of immortal nature (190) the beginning of the Vedas, (191) unattainble by the Vedas, (192) one who is attached to Kṛṣṇa, (193) a devotee of Kṛṣṇa, (194) one who is served by Candrāvalī, (195) one who is full of sixteen Kalās, (196) one who shares half the body of Kṛṣṇa, (197) one whose intellect is directed to Kṛṣṇa. (198) one whose essence is Kṛṣṇa, (199) one who supports about in Kṛṣṇa's form, (200) the beloved of Kṛṣṇa, (201) one whose sole wealth is Kṛṣṇa, (202) one who fascinates Kṛṣṇa, (203) one who has fixed her vision on Kṛṣṇa, (204) having same spiritual lineage as Kṛṣṇa,

(205) Goddess unto Kṛṣṇa, (206) Uplifter of the family, (207) one who remains in all beings, (208) one who has ātman as protector, (209) one who is bowed to by the worlds, (210) one who gives Kṛṣṇa, (211) nurse of love, (212) having golden body, (213) one who is charming, (214) the nurse of the mountain, (215) the giver of fame, (216) great goddess, (217) one who causes auspiciousness.

161-170. (218) The mother of glorious lord Śeṣa, (219) the mother of series of incarnations, (220) one marked by lily, (221) one marked by lotus, (222) one marked by pleasure, (223) the second lady, (224) one marked by the chariot, (225) one marked by the elephants, (226) stationed in a region marked by ear-rings, (227) marked by umbrella, (228) marked by lightning, (229) marked by flower-garlands, (230) marked by the staff, (231) marked by the crown, (232) having the full moon, (233) marked by the parrot, (234) one who cooks Kṛṣṇa's rice and (235) other items of diet, (236) one who enlightens Kṛṣṇa, (237) one who partakes the leavings of the food of Kṛṣṇa, (238) one who stays in the middle of the filaments of the lotus, (239) one who knows the lore of music, (240) one who brings about the end of the Kalpa by the knitting of her eye-brows, (241) one who has not reached the Pralaya, (242) unswerving, (243) storehouse of all, (244) one who is served by the treasures of Padma, Śaṅkha etc., (245) one who has the powers of aṇimā (minuteness) etc., (246) one who fascinates the groups of gods, (247) one who bestows bliss in all, (248) all-in-all, (249) one whose features are those of golden creepers, (250) one who has fixed a rendezvous with Kṛṣṇa with a love tryst, (251) one having garlands, (252) adept in dance, (253) one who has a name near the cowherdesses and rivers (?) (254) one who appears splendid in dais of the cowherds, (255) one who affords pleasure to Śrīkṛṣṇa, (256) terrified, (257) one who has horripilation in every limb, (258) one who is engaged in embracing Śrīkṛṣṇa, (259) one who is unable to bear separation from Govinda, (260) one who is endowed with endless qualities, (261) one who is very fond of glorifying Kṛṣṇa, (262) one whose form is made of three bījas, (263) one who desires the blessing of Kṛṣṇa, (264) one worthy of being served by Vimalā and others, (265) one who is worshipped by Lalitā and others, (266) chaste lady, (267) one who is stationed in the clusters of lotuses, (268) delighted, (269) one who is served by Tripurā, (270) one who is worshipped by Vṛndāvatī, (271) faith, (272) difficult to be comprehended, (273) beloved of the devotee, (274) very difficult to be achieved, (275) the nature of whom is dense bliss, (276) cause of welfare, (277) the bestower of enjoyment, (278) one who goes deep into the essence, (279) the goddess of speech, (280) enlightenment, (281) one who moves about in Vṛndāvana, (282) one who is the bliss of Brahman, (283) one having the bliss of consciousness, (284) one who is the bliss of meditation, (285) one who is ardhamātrā, (286) Gandharva, (287) one who knows amorous sport well, (288) one who is in union with the vital breath of Govinda, (289) one who is the ornament unto the limbs of Kṛṣṇa, (290) one who has jewel ornaments, (291) bedecked in gold, (292) one who is like the pearl-set golden tube set up in the heart of Śrīkṛṣṇa, (293) one who is endowed with bangles set in good jewels, (294) one who is stationed in the glorious blue mountain, (295) one who is richly endowed with gold anklets, (296) one who is bedecked in girdle etc. fitted with tinkling bells, (297) one who is fully enthusiastic in the Rāsa sport, (298) having thighs like plantain stems, (299) slender in the middle, (300) of the highest features, (301) of great bliss, (302) one who plays about in the highest heaven, (303) one who has bedecked her braid of hair with flowers of diverse colours, (304) one who is of great beauty with saffron mark, (305) a girl yet in the age of childhood, (306) crest-jewel of the bevy of young maidens, (307) one who has tasted the nectar from the lips of Kṛṣṇa, (308) one whose diversion is love with Śyāma (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), (309) one, (310) one who is bedecked with gold-coloured campaka flowers, (311) one who is bedecked with saffron, lac juice and musk, (312) the unvanquished, (313) one who is endowed with gold necklaces, (314) one who possesses flower garlands, (315) one who has good relish, (316) one who is sweeter than the sweetest things, (317) goddess Lakṣmī, (318) one who has lotus in her hand, (319) well-known, (320) one whose knit eye-brow is her unbreakable bow in which she fits in the arrows of side glances, (321) one who is the head of all the gods, (322) one who sports about in the permanent abode.

171-200. (323) One who is in the water of mercy, (324) who is always intoxicated, (325) ever rising, (326) one who knows eight languages, (327) one who is endowed with the eight characteristics of a heroine, (328) one who is conversant with good policy, (329) one who is conversant with the Vedas, (330) omniscient, (331) one who removes misery, (332) one who is the goddess of Rajas, (333) one whose face resembles the autumnal moon, (334) one who shines like the Ketakī flower, (335) one who is stationed in union, (336) one whose hands excel the gold-flower, (337) one who is endowed with five śaktis, (338) beneficial, (339) one whose breasts are like pots, (340) having men as attendants, (341) one whose demerits have dwindled down, (342) famous, (343) Mother of Vairājasūya ? (344) Goddess Śrī, (345) the enchantress of the worlds, (346) greatly resplendent, (347) great Māyā, (348) one whose grace is great, (349) one whose memory is great, (350) one whose fascination is great, (351) one whose learning is great, (352) one whose fame is great, (353) one whose pleasure is great, (354) one whose courage is great, (355) one whose virility is great, (356) one whose prowess is great, (357) of great splendour, (358) one who is excellently fair, (359) one whose wealth is great, (360) one who is sportful in enjoying great pleasures, (361) one who bestows devotion when the time comes, (362) one devoid of grief, (363) one who bestows sentiment of affection upon a child, (364) one who bestows love towards friends, (365) very transparent, (366) one who showers the sentiment of mādhurya, (367) one who bestows Bhāva and devotion, (368) one who bestows pure love and devotion, (369) one who is the most beautiful among cowherd lasses, (370) one who finds rest in sports, (371) the supreme goddess, (372) one who has perpetual rest, (373) one who takes rest in Ātman, (374) one who finds rest in Kṛṣṇa, (375) one who is born in the family of Viṣṇu, (376) eulogised in the family or Viṣṇu, (377) the sole agent, (378) one who always protects the family of Viṣṇu, (379) one stationed in the park, (380) one who resides in the forest, (381) one who bathes in the water of Yamunā, the daughter of Sūrya, (382) one who rests in pleasure, (383) one who stays perpetually in the mystic diagram, (384) one who resides in Goloka, (385) bestower of prosperity, (386) one who resides in her own experience, (387) manifest, (388) one who resides in all the worlds, (389) immortal, (390) wonderful, (391) one who is worshipped by the glorious Nārāyaṇa, (392) immutable, (393) one who keeps the highest position, (394) born of a greatman, (395) achievable through liberal-mindedness, (396) one who transcends the gross and the subtle, (397) one who is soft like Śirīṣa flower, (398) one who has the lustre of golden mirror, (399) one whose eyes have conquered blue lotuses, (400) one having excellent good jewel, (401) one whose abode is her lover's bedstead, (402) one who remains in the centre of the mass of splendour, (403) one who hides in the limbs of Kṛṣṇa, (404) Non-different (405) heroine under the cover of Līlā (sport), (406) one who shines in the ocean of nectar, (407) one who causes the flower of nectar, (408) one whose thought is directed to Kṛṣṇa, (409) one whose mind is in Rāsa sport, (410) one whose mind is in love, (411) beloved of Hari, (412) one who has incomprehensible good qualities, (413) sporting with Kṛṣṇa, (414) one who removes impurities, (415) one who is as it were the moon originating from the ocean of Rāsa sports, (416) one who adorns the assembly of Rāsa sports, (417) one who regularly observes the rite of obeisance, (418) Simharīcchā (?) (419) of good form, (420) crest-jewel of cowherd lasses, (421) the foremost among the cowherd lasses, (422) excessively free from rajas, (423) extremely loved by cowherds, (424) daughter of cowherds. (425) woman of cowherds, (426) excellent cowherdess, (427) one whose abode is that of cowherds, (428) having good ribbons, (429) mother, (430) cowherdess, (431) enchantress of cowherds, (432) ornament unto the cowherds, (433) ornament unto Kṛṣṇa, (434) one who is as it were, moonlight in Vṛndāvana.

201-210. (435). Engaged in the sounds of lute etc. (436) one who enhances the festivities of Rāsa sports, (437) one who is conversant with the activities of Kṛṣṇa, (438) enchantress of even a crore of Kandarpas, (439) one who regularly sings of the good qualities of Śrīkṛṣṇa, (440) enchantress of the beautiful women of gods, (441) one who appears as the moon unto Kṛṣṇa, (442) sister of Kṛṣṇadeva, (443) one who desires for Kṛṣṇa, (444)

one by whom Kṛṣṇa's love and blessing have been desired, (445) welfare, (446) sweet in speech, (447) Bhruvomāyā, (448) great welfare, (449) Prakṛti, (450) greatest bliss, (451) one who has the abode at the root of nīpa tree, (452) one of benign vision, (453) one whose lips are like a bimba fruit, (454) one whose buttocks resemble like those of Rambhā, (455) a repository of Smara's sports, (456) one who has embellished her cheeks by means of earring, (457) one who is graceful like that of the golden mountain, (458) one who is foremost in love, (459) slow in gait due to intoxication, (460) one who thinks about Kṛṣṇa, (461) one who thinks of love, (462) one who thinks about sexual enjoyment, (463) giver of Kṛṣṇa, (464) one who thinks of Rāsa sports, (465) one who thinks of emotion, (466) of pure thought, (467) one of great relish, (468) one whose vision is Kṛṣṇa, (469) one who doubts about Kṛṣṇa, (470) having two things black (i.e. hair and eyes),(471) one who censures by means of vision, (472) one who censures by means of eyelashes, (473) mother of Kandarpa, (474) the chief, (475) one who gives salvation unto Vaikuṇṭha, (476) one whose passion is for the mood of Rāsa, (477) one who is embraced by the lover, (478) most loveable, (479) first heroine, (480) pure, (481) one whose body is nectarine, (482) a glorious lady, (483) flower bunch of rāsa, (484) of good influence, (485) of good and splendid conduct, (486) celestial river, (487) river of that name, (488) goddess mother, (489) Gomatī, (490) one who is worthy of being worshipped by Candrabhāgā, (491) the mother of Sarayū and Tāmraparṇi, (492) one whose conduct is devoid of stigma, (493) devoid of guṇa, (494) the unsullied.

O Nārada, these one thousand names (497 names of Kṛṣṇa and 494 names of Rādhā make the number 991) of the couple must be carefully read. They are conducive to the delight of Vṛndāvana.

211-212. This hymn is destructive of great sins. It makes impotency recede. It subdues poverty, dispels ailments and fulfils desires. It removes sins and enemies. It bestows devotion upon Rādhā and Mādhava.

213. Obeisance to that Lord Kṛṣṇa of unimpeded intellect, obeisance to one who perpetually sports about in the ocean of nectar with the association of Rādhā

214. Goddess Rādhā is the maker of the universe. She is interested in the protection of the universe. She causes dissolution of the world. She is the goddess of all. She is the mother of all.

215. O leading sage, her thousand names have been mentioned by me. They bestow worldly pleasure and salvation. What else do you wish to hear ?

CHAPTER EIGHTYTHREE

Pañca Prakṛti Mantra Nirūpaṇam
(The mantra called Pañcaprakṛti)

Śri Śaunaka said :

1-3. O highly blessed Sūta, well done. The great procedure of the Tantric cult as mentioned by Sanatkumāra and which rescues the world, has been mentioned by you to us. O bestower of honour, what has been mentioned here to us by you of great mercy is inaccessible in other sacred cults and Purāṇas. What else did the holy sage Nārada, engaged in rescuing the worlds, ask Sanatkumāra the foremost among scholars ? O good Sir, (please tell us.)

Sūta said :

4. O brahmin, after listening to the thousand names of the twin deities, Nārada bowed down to Sanatkumāra, the most excellent among wise men, and said.

Nārada said :

5. O brahmin, the procedures laid down in the Tantra texts have been mentioned to me. The great efficacy of Kṛṣṇa's mantra has been recounted there.

6-8. Goddess Rādhā has been mentioned therein to be the foremost and the first. O omniscient one, please tell us the story of her partial incarnations along with the mantras as mentioned in the Tantras, as I have taken refuge unto you. O leading sage, the Tantras of Śakti as mentioned by Śiva are many. Kindly extract their essence entirely and tell them to us. On hearing these words of the noble-souled Nārada, Sanatkumāra brought in mind the lotus feet of Rādhā and said :

Sanatkumāra said :

9-11. O Nārada listen, I shall tell you how the partia incarnations of Rādhā of whom they are the Śaktis, originated. It is wonderful. I shall mention it along with the mantras to be practised. The deity whom I called Rādhā was born of the half of the body of Kṛṣṇa. She is permanently residing in Goloka and is ever accompanied by Kṛṣṇa. She is stationed in the middle of the mass of splendour and is of the nature of the visible and invisible worlds.

12. O leading sage, once while Kṛṣṇa was staying near her, Nārāyaṇa himself was born of Kṛṣṇa's left side.

13-15. Mahālakṣmī was born of the left side of Rādhā. Then Kṛṣṇa handed Mahālakṣmī over to Nārāyaṇa and established him in Vaikuṇṭha entrusting him with the task of perpetual sustenance.

Thereafter, O sage, from the pores of the hairs of the lord of Goloka were born innumerable cowherds of the same splendour and age. All of them became the favourite attendants of the lord, as if they were his very vital breath.

16. From the process of the hairs in the body of Rādhā were born the cowherd lasses. In every respect they were similar to Rādhā. They were the sweet-speeched attendants of Rādhā.

17. In the meantime, O brahmin, Durgā, the eternal Māyā of Viṣṇu suddenly manifested herself from the body of Kṛṣṇa.

18. She was in the form of the seed of all goddesses, the Mūla Prakṛti (original sources), Īśvarī perfect in every detail, refulgent in form and features and consisting of three guṇas.

19. She was endowed with a thousand arms. She had different kinds of weapons. She had three eyes. She was as though the seed of the world as the tree.

20-21. The lord of Rādhā offered her a jewelset throne. In the meantime the four-faced deity was born there along with his wife. He was the most excellent among the wise. The glorious person was uttering Omkāra and was holding a water pot. He was a sage and was born of the navel of Hari.

22. Accompanied by his wife Sāvitrī he eulogised the lord of all, O sage, at the behest of the lord, he sat on a beautiful seat.

23. Then, O blessed one, Kṛṣṇa split himself into two. The left half was Mahādeva and the right half was the lord of the cowherd lasses.

24. The five-faced, three-eyed, and the one born of the left half who was eminent among the sages, eulogised Kṛṣṇa. On being commanded he sat in front of Hari.

25. Then Kṛṣṇa said to the four-faced lord. O lord, carry on the function of creation ever remaining in Satyaloka. Go, remember me always.

26. Thus urged by Hari, he bowed down to the lord of the universe and went away accompanied by his wife. It is he who really carried on creation.

27. O excellent sage, he is our father and we, his mental creations, have obtained this body lasting for a Kalpa. Thereafter, highly intelligent one, Kṛṣṇa spoke to the five-faced lord.

28. O lord of the universe, take Durgā unto you. As long as the creation goes on, perform penance in Śivaloka. At the end of it annihilate the entire worlds.

29-30. After bowing to Kṛṣṇa he went to Śivaloka. Thereafter, on another occasion, O brahmin, Sarasvatī was born of the mouth of Kṛṣṇa, the highest lord. She held a lute and a book. The lord commanded her, "O honourable lady, repair to Vaikuṇṭha.

31. You stay near Lakṣmī. You can have the benefit of four arms." She bowed down to Kṛṣṇa and went over to Nārāyaṇa.

32-33a. Thus, Rādhā turned herself into five forms as the cause of creation. O leading brahmin, listen. I shall mention the mantras, the mode of meditation and the worship of the one having perfect nature. He is the bestower of siddhis unto the worlds.

33b-35. Kriyā (ra) pratiṣṭhā (a), bindyāḍhyā adorned with bindu (.) (the combination gives the bīja as rāṁ) then the text drops some letters) then again jñānāmṛtā (ai) and kṣudhā (ya) which ends with svāhā.[1] Its sage is Sutapas, the metre is Gāyatrī, Rādhā is the deity, om is the bīja and svāhā is the Śakti. The aṅga rites are to be performed with the six syllables of the mantras adding bindu to them.

36-39. Thereafter, he shall meditate upon Rādhā, the wife of Kṛṣṇa in his heart as follows : She has the complexion and the lustre of the white jasmine flower; she is as refulgent as a crore of moons; her face resembles the autumnal full moon. Her eyes are like the blue lotuses. Her buttocks and hips are excellent. She is charming with her lips like the ripe, bimba fruit. Her teeth shine like pearls and Kunda flowers. She is clad in a Silken garment sanctified in the fire. She appears splendid in the jewel-set shoulderlets, bangles and ear-rings. She is served by her beloved friends, the cowherd lasses with white chowries. She is stationed in the centre of the circle of Rāsa. She is seated on a jewelled throne.

40-43. After meditation, a handful of flowers is offered and the deity is worshipped along with the requisite service. He shall repeat the mantra six hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with gingelly seeds soaked in ghee.

He shall worship āvaraṇa deities in the altar made of mātṛkās. He shall worship aṅgas in six corners and outside of them in the eight petals he shall worship these viz Mālāvatī, Mādhavī, Ratnamālā, Suśīlā, Śaśilā, Pārijātā, Padmāvatī and Sundarī. They are to be worshipped in the due order from the east. Then further outside he should worship Indra along with their weapons in the interstices. After the worship the Viniyoga rite is performed.

---

1. In Nārada Pāñcarātra chap. V/IX we find the mantra of Rādhā. Her own bīja (rām) then hrīm followed by klīm, then Rādhāyai Svāhā. In our text we find the mantra to contain six syllables: Rām Rādhāyai Svāhā.

44-45. May Rādhā, the beloved of Kṛṣṇa, the goddess of Rāsa-sports, the mistress of the cowherd lasses, the one without guṇas (attributes), the beloved of Kṛṣṇa, the primordial prakṛti, the goddess of all, worshipped by all and the mother of Vairāja (vṛndāvana), protect and save me from all, from the east onward.

46-47. O goddess, you are the mother of worlds. You are the eternal Māyā of Viṣṇu and the primordial deity, the Māyā of Kṛṣṇa, O auspicious lady, you who are more than the vital breath unto Kṛṣṇa; O, Rādhā, a bestower of devotion unto Kṛṣṇa, obeisance unto you, the bestower of auspiciousness.

After praying the goddess of all and eulogising duly he shall ritualistically dismiss her in the heart.

48. He who worships Rādhā, the foremost of all, enjoys all pleasures here and in the end attains Goloka.

49. O Nārada, henceforth, I shall mention the procedure of worship of Mahālakṣmī to you. By propitiating her, one shall have worldly pleasures and salvation.

50. Śrīm, hrīm, klīm, Kamalavāsinī in the dative and ending with svāhā is the greatest mantra[1] like the wish-yielding kalpa tree.

51. The sage is Nārāyaṇa and the metre is Jagatī. The deity is Mahālakṣmī. The six aṅgas are conceived by means of pairs of syllables.

52-54. Meditation : The goddess has the lustre and colour of the white Campaka flower. She is bedecked in jewelled ornaments, her face is slightly smiling and pleasant; she is impatient to bless the devotees; she wears the jewelled necklace; she is refulgent as a crore of moons.

After meditating thus, the devotee shall perform japa one million two hundred times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with the twigs of Śrī (bilva) tree. He should worship her along with the aṅgas and āvaraṇas in the altar with nine Śaktis.

55. The nine śaktis are as follows: vibhūti, unnati, kānti, sṛṣṭi, kīrti, sannati, puṣṭi, ṛddhi, and siddhi; these are the nine śaktis.

---

1. The mantra of Mahālakṣmī is : Śrīṁ hrīṁ Kamalavāsinyai svāhā.

56-58. After invoking them by means of the mūlamantra and after conceiving the form therein the aspirant shall perform the worship of six aṅgas in the six corners. On the right hand side, he shall worship the elephant-faced god. To the left, he shall worship kāma. He shall then worship in the eight petals in sequence viz Umā, Śrī, Bhāratī, Durgā, Dhāraṇī, Vedamātā. They shall be worshipped in the quarters and in the interstices. The daughters of Jahnu and the sun (i.e. Gaṅgā and Yamunā) should be worshipped as attempting to wash her feet.

59. The treasures Śaṅkha and Padma are to be worshipped as holding the chowries at the sides. Thereafter, he shall worship Varuṇa in the west holding up the umbrella.

60. After worshipping the signs of Zodiac all round and the nine planets in their respective places he shall worship the four-tusked Airāvata and others in the quarters and the interstices.

61. Outside of it, he shall worship the guardians of the worlds and still outside of it, their weapons.

For the purpose of longevity, a man shall perform homa with dūrvā soaked in ghee.

62. The person who performs a thousand and eight homas with guḍūcī soaked in ghee and continues this for seven days lives for a hundred years.

63-66. One shall attain long life by performing homa with gingelly seeds smeared with ghee.

For the purpose of regaining health of the body, the devotee shall begin to repeat mantras on a Sunday and continue it for ten days. He shall perform homas with twigs of arka plant soaked in ghee. If one perpetually performs homa for a thousand and eight times with Śāli rice, ere long, great fortune will certainly come about. The devotee shall perform a hundred and eight homas with Uṣā (?), ajāji (comimum seed) and coconut kernel mixed with ghee. Everyday his diet is to be restricted to milk pudding. Within a maṇḍala (forty days) the man becomes a person like Kuvera.

67-68. By performing homa with ghee mixed with jaggery, one shall become rich in rice. The devotee shall perform a thousand and eight homas with japā (China rose) flowers mixed with the juice of betel leaves. He shall apply the resultant bhasma on his forehead. The excellent brahmin thus becomes competent to fascinate persons of all castes.

69-70a O leading sage, the excellent Sādhaka who worships Lakṣmī thus, attains vast wealth. Mahālakṣmī becomes pleased with him. There is no doubt about this that at the end of his life he reaches the abode of Viṣṇu.

70b-72. O excellent brahmin, the deity called Durgā after going to Śivaloka, secured the permission of Śiva, and created the divine world which is famous as Devīloka. It is different from other worlds. Stationed there, the mother of the universe performed austerities and observances. She pursues her different activities in the three units of time.

73-74a. Māyā (hrīm), atri (da) is associated with indhikā (u) and then adorned with bindu (.) (i.e. dum), then again sargiṇī (ra) is associated with it (i.e. dur) and pratiṣṭhā (ā) is joined with smṛti (ga), then it is joined with Kṣudhā (ya) and jñānāmṛtā (ai). The mantra begins with tāra (om) and ends with svāhā.[1]

74b-76a. The sage of it is Vāmadeva, its metre is Gāyatrī, the deity is the primordial cause of the world. She is the dispeller of all misfortunes. With the three syllables beginning with om etc. separately the nyāsa rite in hṛdaya etc. is to be performed and with the three the varma is done and netra with the two and astra to be performed with all the syllables.

76b-78. The devotee should meditate on the goddess Durgā as follows : She is as refulgent as a big emarald. She is decorated with thousand arms. She holds various kinds of weapons; she has three eyes. The moon forms her coronet. She has bangles, shoulderlets, and necklaces. She is bedecked in tinkling anklets. She wears a crown and earrings.

79. The devotee shall repeat it eight hundred thousand times and perform homa with gingelly seeds along with sweet things or with milk pudding thousand times. In the lotus, on the altar with nine petals he should worship the śaktis.

80. The nine śaktis of the altar are prabhā, māyā, gayā, sūkṣmā, viśuddhā, nandinī, suprabhā, vijayā, and sarvasiddhidā.

1. It gives the mantra of Durgā thus: Om hrīṁ dum Durgāyai svāhā.

81a. They should be worshipped with vowels excluding short ones (a, i, u) and four neuter syllables (ṝ,ḹ.lṛ.lṝ).

81b-84. O sage, the mantra of siṁha is om vajranakha-daṁṣṭrāyudhāya, then after the word mahā add siṁhāya, varma (hum) astra (phaṭ) and hṛt (namaḥ).

He should offer the seat with this mantra and conceive the form of the deity with the mūlamantra. After worshipping the aṅgas and the āvaraṇas he should worship śaktis in the petals. They are jayā, vijayā, kīrti, prīti, prabhā, śraddhā, medhā, śruti. They are to be worshipped with their initial syllables. He shall worship the eight weapons at the tips of petals.

85-86. The weapons are conch, discus, iron club, sword, noose, goad, arrows and bow. Then outside of it, he should worship the guardians of the worlds. Thereafter, he shall worship their weapons. When the mantra is realized thus through japa, the repeater of the mantra who knows the procedure, shall make practical application of the same in accordance with his desires.

87-90. The devotee shall, in accordance with the injunctions, instal nine splendid pots. Within them jewels, golds etc. shall be put. The devotee shall worship the goddess in the pot placed in the middle. He shall worship jayā and others in other pots. After worshipping them with sandal pastes and flowers he shall sprinkle the king with the water. The king then conquers his enemies. He excels others and attains the glory of victory. He becomes free from ailments. He will not be affected by any disease and he attains longevity. A barren lady bathed therewith in accordance with injunction attains an excellent son. The ghee charged with this mantra dispels evil and adverse planets of minor nature. Especially, the bhasma etc. charged with this mantra are very efficacious in regard to a pregnant woman.

91-92. When the yawning breath of Kṛṣṇa entered the mouth of Rādhā, the goddess holding the lute and the book was born. O leading brahmin, listen to its procedure that renders help unto the world.

1. These verses give the mantra of Mahāsiṁha thus: Oṁ Vajranakhadaṁṣṭrāyudhāya Mahāsiṁhāya hum phaṭ namaḥ.

93. Worshipping of Sarasvatī.

Om, aim, hrīm, śrīm, klīm, hrīm, Sarasvatyai svāhā. This mantra consists of twelve syllables.

94. The sage of the mantra is Nārāyaṇa, the metre is Virāṭ, Mahāsarasvatī is the deity.

95-96a. After performing six aṅgas with aim, the aspiring sādhaka shall fix the syllables. He shall fix oṅkāra in the cerebral orifice. He shall fix hrīm in between the eyebrows. He shall fix syllables beginning with śrī in the mouth, nostrils, ears and rectum.

96b-97. Thereafter, he shall meditate on the goddess of speech as holding the lute and the book. She is as white in complexion as camphor and the kunda flower. Her face is so beaming as the full moon. She is riding on the swan. She is splendid on account of the divine ornament of the moon on her forehead.

98. The excellent sādhaka shall repeat the mantra one million two hundred thousand times with white lotuses, nāga flowers or campaka flowers.

99. He shall worship in the aforesaid altar of mātṛkās in accordance with the injunction to be laid down later on. He shall make the seat with letters in the form of a lotus and conceive the form of the deity with the mūlamantra.

100. To the right side of the deity the splendid Sanskrit must be worshipped. The Prākṛta mode of words, the bestower of all siddhis must be worshipped to the left side.

101-104. At first he shall worship aṅgas in the six corners, then worship prajñā and others outside. They are prajñā, medhā, śruti, śakti, smṛti, vāgīśvarī, mati and svasti. Thereafter, Brahmā and others, and the guardians of the worlds are to be worshipped along with their weapons further outside.

By worshipping the goddess of speech thus, one becomes the lover of speech. He should be a devout celibate, be pure with clean teeth and nail etc. He should always think of all women as goddesses. Within twelve months, the intelligent devotee will certainly attain poetic talent.

105. O sage, after drinking water charged with the mantra he should repeat it a thousand times every day, thus the repeater of the mantra becomes a great poet within a year undoubtedly.

106. The devotee shall stand in chest-deep water meditating on the goddess stationed in the disc of the sun. Everyday he shall repeat the mantra three thousand times.

107-109a. He shall attain siddhi within forty days and unequalled fluency of speech. He shall perform homas with the flowers of palāśa or bilva sprinkled with some sweet substance or from twigs of those plants. He shall then attain glory and renown of vākpati (Jupiter). If one performs homas with the flowers of rājavṛkṣa (aloewood, soaked in sugar juice, or its twigs) he shall obtain unequalled poetic talent.

109b. Worship of Sāvitrī

O leading brahmin, henceforth, I shall recount Sāvitrī, the beloved of Brahmā.

110-112. It is by propitiating her that Brahmā created the worlds consisting of the mobile and immobile beings. Srīm, hrīm, klīm in the beginning and Sāvitrī is used in the dative case. The mantra ends with svāhā.[1] Sāvitrī mantra consists of eight syllables. Its sage is Brahmā. Gāyatrī is its metre. Sāvitrī, the mother of all gods, is the deity. The aṅgas are to be conceived by the following mantra : Obeisance unto Brahmā, obeisance unto Viṣṇu, obeisance unto Rudra, obeisance unto Īśvara, obeisance unto Sadāśiva, obeisance unto the Ātman of all.

113-115. The deity should be meditated upon as follows: She has the lustre and colour of molten gold and she shines in divine glory of sacred knowledge, her form is similar to a thousand suns at the midday in summer, her face is bright with a little smile, she is bedecked in jewelled ornaments, she is clad in silken garments sanctified in fire. She is eager to show mercy to her devotees. She is the bestower of happiness, the giver of release and the giver of riches to everyone and she is auspicious. She is of the nature of the seed of the Vedas. One shall meditate upon this chaste deity as the mother of the Vedas.

---

[1] These verses give the mantra of Sāvitrī thus: Srīṁ hrīṁ klīṁ Sāvitryai Svāhā.

116-117. After thus meditating in the mystic diagram with three corners and shining pericarp, the scholar shall worship the goddess in the altar of the sun along with the nine śaktis viz Dīptā etc. He shall worship the deity in the image conceived by the müla mantra.

118. In the three corners Brāhmī and other Śaktis are to be worshipped in the three corners and outside of it Ādityas are to be worshipped along with Uṣā in due sequence.

119-122. Thereafter, he shall duly worship the six aṅgas in the filaments.

Then, he shall worship prahlādinī, prabhā, nityā, viśvambharā, vilāsinī, prabhāvatī, jayā and śāntā.

Thereafter, he shall worship kānti, Durgā, Sarasvatī and vidyārūpā. He shall then worship the deities Viśālā, Īśā, Vyāpinī and Vimalā. He shall worship Tamopahāriṇī (one who dispels darkness), sūkṣmā (subtle), viśvayoni (source of the universe jayāvahā (one who causes victory), padmālayā (one whose abode is the lotus), parā (the transcendent one), śobhā (one of lustre) and Brahmarūpā (one who is of the form of Brahman. He should worship Brāhmī etc. with red complexion and having the above-mentioned features at the outside of it.

123. Then, he shall worship planets and Indra and others outside of it along with their weapons. Thus, the devotee shall worship the goddess with her ten āvaraṇa deities.

124. He shall repeat mantra eight hundred thousand times and perform homas eight thousand times with gingelly seeds. He will liberate himself from all sins and attain longevity.

125. He shall perform ten thousand homas with red lotuses soaked in trimadhu. There is no doubt that Mahālakṣmī will favour him within six months.

126-127a. In order to attain divine splendour the devotee shall perform homas with the flowers of palāśa or udumbara. Of what avail is much talk ? This vidyā duly practised and achieved shall be, O sage, a veritable wish-yielding cow unto the aspirant.

127b-138. Sāvitrī Pañjara.

Henceforth, I shall mention a very mysterious and wonderful secret to you. It is named Sāvitrī Pañjara. It accords all-round protection unto men. The deity is to be meditated as follows : The firmament constitutes her tresses of hair to which the shining gold crown is attached; the clouds form her eye-brows; Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva form her faces, Jupiter and Venus are the tips of her ears; the moon, the fire and the sun are her eyes. She has the nostrils, the subtle Iḍā and Piṅgalā constitute the nostrils for the wind to pass; the two sandhyās (morning and evening twilights) constitute her closed lips; the elegant speech is her palate; the sun at the dusk is her jewelled neck; she is possessed of the wind as her arms; parjanya is her heart with which she is endowed. What are called Vasus constitute her sphere; the circular firmament is her belly; the planetary sphere is her navel; Prajāpati constitutes her front loins; Indrāṇī is her hips. Malaya and Meru constitute her thighs from which excellent river flows; Jahnu and Kuśikā are her knees; the Viśvedevas constitute her names; the earth, the serpents and the trees constitute her feet, toe, nails and hair. The planets, the signs of the zodiac, the constellations, the yoga etc are her bodily limbs; the tithis, months, seasons and fortnights indicate but a moment in regard to her. She is enveloped in a covering called sandhyā (dusk) the diversity of which is caused by Māyā. She is like the blazing fire of great dissolution. She has the brilliance of a crore of lightning. She is like a crore of suns, and she is cool as a crore of moons. She is stationed in the middle of the mass of nectar. She is of the nature of dense bliss and nectar. She transcends speech; un-approachable through mind, she is the bestower of boons; the mother of the Vedas, she is one with the mobile and immobile worlds and is eternal. She is in union with the immutable Brahman.

After meditating thus, the devotee shall perform nyāsa rite of Sāvitrī Pañjara.

139-140. The sage of the Pañjara is So'ham, the metre is vikṛti. The great Haṁsa is the deity and the great Brahman etc. are the deities, its utility and application is for the attainment of virtue, wealth, desire and salvation. He shall perform nyāsa rite of the six aṅgas by means of the mantras with the mantras for the six aṅgas.

141. The intelligent devotee shall perform the pervasive nyāsa by means of the mūla mantra thrice. He shall meditate on the deity as mentioned before with forms and attributes.

142. May the deity with three feet who is born of Hari, having her face towards the east named Brahmāstra and possessing twentyfour tattvas (principles) protect my eastern quarter.

143. May the fourfooted deity Brahmāṇī, having the staff of Brahmā, having the face towards the south, and possessing twentysix tattvas protect my southern quarter.

144. May the deity marked by Brahmā's head having the face towards the west, the one with five feet and with the form of fifty tattvas protect my western quarter.

145. May the six-footed deity possessing Brahman, as the fourth, gentle, in face of the nature of Atharvāṅgirasa and of the nature of sixty tattvas and kalās protect my northern quarter.

146. May the ninefooted deity, constituted of fifty letters and hundred syllables, Vyoma stationed in the Vedānta protect my upper region.

147. May Brahmasandhyā resembling the lightening, having four arms, seated on the deer, holding bow and arrows, leather-shield and sword protect my south-eastern direction.

148. May virgin Brāhmī, Gāyatrī of red limbs having swan as the vehicle and holding water pot, rosary and the sacrificial ladles, sruk and sruva protect my south-western direction.

149. May the white-complexioned youthful Sāvitrī, having bull for her vehicle and holding skull, trident, rosary and garland protect my north-western direction.

150. May the aged Sarasvatī of dark complexion belonging to Viṣṇu, seated on Garuḍa and holding the conch, the discus and the gesture of fearlessness protect my north-eastern direction.

151. May the four-armed white-complexioned mother of the gods having lion for her vehicle and holding gestures of boon and fearlessness and the sword and the leather shield in the arms protect my lower direction.

152. May their respective weapons and ornaments stationed in their respective sides and quarters and the śaktis associated with the limbs of planets protect me.

153. The deities presiding over mudrās as the presiding deities of mantras, protect us spreading over the body from head to foot.

154-155a. Thus, the Sāvitrī Pañjara has been mentioned truly by me to you. Every day during two sandhyās it must be recited with devotion especially at the time of japa. It must be read strenuously for worldly pleasures and liberation.

155b-185. The hundred eight names of Sāvitrī :

(1) One who grants prosperity, (2) the world, (3) speech, (4) one having great wealth, (5) Earth, (6) mother of gold, (7) delightful, (8) having creative nature, (9) ascetic, (10) having fame, (11) chaste lady, (12) truthful, (13) knowing the Vedas, (14) of the form of cit, (15) auspicious, (16) the universe, (17) the fourth state, (18) excellent, (19) the great goad, (20) Yamunā, (21) earth, (22) joy, (23) goddess, (24) the most excellent, (25) intellect, (26) peace, (27) wisdom, (28) Earth, (29) intelligence, (30) yoginī, (31) united, (32) river, (33) Prajñā, (34) one who urges, (35) night, (36) lotus, (37) Rohiṇī, (38) woman, (39) victorious, (40) one at the head of the army, (41) of the nature of Sāman, (42) Bagalā, (43) devoid of defects, (44) Māyā, (45) intelligence, (46) transcendent, (47) milking, (48) proud, (49) nourisher, (50) activity, (51) moonlight (52) of the nature of tīrtha (53) beautiful, (54) gentle, (55) full of nectar, (56) Brāhmī, (57) Haimī (golden), (58) as the form of a serpent, (59) one to whom others are subservient, (60) beautiful lady, (61) of the forest, (62) the swan of Oṁkāra, (63) all, (64) nectar, (65) having the six attributes, (66) Māyā, (67) pure, (68) Lakṣmī, (69) woman of slender body, (70) destroyer of enemies, (71) protectress, (72) chaste, (73) golden, (74) star, (75) the goal of the moon, (76) destroyer of poison, (77) one whose face is splendid, (78) immortal, (79) the bestower of tīrtha, (80) initiation, (81) incapable of being thwarted, (82) the remover of illness, (83) destroyer of many sinful and cruel poisons, (84) six-footed, (85) having thunderbold, (86) lover of battle,

(87) yoginī, (88) free from impurities, (89) truthful, (90) weaker sex, (91) bestower of strength, (92) victorious, (93) possessing speech, (94) daughter of Jahnu, (95) Rajvī, (96) blazing, (97) fire, (98) not staying long, (99) giver of rain, (100) of truthful scriptural utterance, (101) of the nature of Ṛta, (102) yielding all desires, (103) gentle, (104) devoid of temporal arrogance, (105) two-or-four-footed, (106) three-or-six-footed, (107) eight or nine-footed, (108) one who is of the nature of thousand-eyed one.

186. He who reads this hymn of Sāvitrī containing one hundred and eight names shall be long-lived, happy, humble and successful. He will have sons. Thus, O brahmin, the characteristics of five Prakṛtis have been mentioned by you along with their mantras and mode of propitiation. It (the hymn) fulfils all desires.

CHAPTER EIGHTYFOUR

Devi Mantra Nirūpaṇam
The mantra of the goddess

Sanatkumāra said :

1-3. In another Kalpa of the Kali age, O brahmin when Brahmā, born of the unmanifest being, was performing penance in the world of lotus, for the purpose of creation, two demons Madhu and Kaiṭabha were born of Viṣṇu's ear dirt. As soon as they were born they stood in the knee-deep water of that vast expanse at the time of great dissolution. They saw Brahmā seated on the lotus and attempted to devour him. Brahmā, on seeing them, eulogised the mother of the universe.

4. Then the goddess, the creator of the universe and who is the excellent Śakti of Śiva, staying as the slumber in the eyes of Nārāyaṇa, became pleased.

5. I shall recount mantra etc. Listen to it. Aruṇa (ha), Krodhanī (ra), Śānti (ī) and the one whose head is adorned with Candra (.).[1]

6. The one-syllabled mantra is the bīja, Śakti is the sage, Gāyatrī is the metre and the deity is Bhuvaneśvarī.

7-10. With the bīja accompanied by six long vowels he should perform six aṅgas in their sequence in the ascending and descending order (i. e. the ascending first and the descending afterwards).

Then he should perform fixation called mātṛkānyāsa for getting oneself identical with the mood of the deity.

Hṛllekhā is fixed on the head, Gagana on the face, Rakta in the heart of lotus, Karālikā in the anus and Mahocchuṣmā in the two feet and on the upper, eastern, southern, northern and western faces as well.

The short vowels beginning with Sadya[2] etc. (o. e. u, i, a) having colours of the elements are to be fixed. Then the fixation of aṅgas are to be performed with their jātis (namaḥ, svāhā, vaṣaṭ, vauṣaṭ, hum and phaṭ) in their due order.

11-16. He shall fix Brahmā associated with Gāyatrī in the forehead. In the right cheek he shall fix Viṣṇu with Sāvitrī. In the left cheek he shall fix Maheśvara united with Vāgīśvarī. He shall fix in the tip of the left ear Dhanapati along with Śrī, after fixing Smara along with Rati in the face, he shall fix Gaṇapati along with Puṣṭi in the right ear. Padma Nidhi and Śaṅkha nidhi are to be fixed between the ears and the cheeks. Then the mūla mantra is to be fixed again on the face. Thereafter, he shall fix them (Brahmā[3] etc.) at the root of the throat, in the pair of breasts, on the left shoulder,

---

1. The mantra of Bhuvaneśvarī is Hrīm.

2. The short vowels beginning with Sadya are known as o, e, u, i, a. These are to be added to the bīja and then the nyāsa rite should be performed. For example, it may be stated thus: hrom, hrem, hrum, hrīm, hrām.

Bhūta saprabha means that their colours are those of five elements. They are yellow, transparent, red, dark, green respectively.

3. The bījas of Gāyatrī etc. are ham, hīm, hum, thus for the nyāsa rite the mantra should be used in the following manner: Om ham Gāyatrī sahita Brahmaṇe namaḥ, Om hīm Sāvitrī sahita Viṣṇave namaḥ.

in the lotus of the heart, on the right shoulder at the sides, in the region of the navel, on the forehead, at the side of the belly, at both sides of the shoulder, at the hump of the shoulder and in the heart. After duly fixing in the body, Brahmāṇī and others whose characteristics have been mentioned before with their proper procedure and after performing a pervasive nyāsa with the mūlamantra he shall meditate on the goddess.

17. She resembles the rising sun with lofty breasts and three eyes. Her face is smiling. The moon forms her crest. She bears boons, noose and fearlessness.

18. He shall repeat the mantra three million two hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homas with eight articles soaked in trimadhu or with the excellent twigs of brahmavṛkṣa.

19. O brahmin, eight articles are as follows: grape, dates, castor seeds, sugar, coconut, raw rice grains, ghee and gingelly seeds.

20-21. He should offer arghya unto the lord of the day (i. e. sun) thinking about Pārvatī therein.

He shall draw a lotus of eight petals. Outside of it, he should describe a circle with sixteen petals and in the pericarp he shall draw a very beautiful hexagon. Then he shall worship the pīṭha along with nine Śaktis.

22. The nine Śaktis are : Jayā, Vijayā, Ajitā, Aparājitā, Nityā, Vilāsinī, Dogdhrī, Aghorā, and Maṅgalā.

23. After offering the seat with the bīja, placed in the beginning he shall conceive the form of the deity with the bīja alone. After invoking the āvaraṇa deities he should worship her in the proper sequence.

24. He shall worship the deities of the aṅgas in the middle, the east, the south and the north-east. Afterwards the repeater of the mantra shall worship the couple of the deities in the six corners.

25. In the eastern corner, the repeater of the mantra shall worship Gāyatrī holding the shining staff, water pot, rosary, rope and the gesture of fearlessness in her hands. He shall worship Brahmā also of the same form.

1. The āsanamantra runs thus: Hrīṁ sarvaśaktikamalāsanāya namaḥ.

26. In the south-west corner he shall worship the yellow-robed Sāvitrī holding conch, discus, iron club and the lotus. He shall worship Viṣṇu as similar to her.

27. In the north-west corner he shall worship Sarasvatī, the while-complexioned deity with the axe, rosary, fearlessness and boon in the hands. He shall worship Rudra of the similar nature.

28-29. In the south-east corner he shall worship Mahālakṣmī who holds in her hands a jewelled pot and a jewelled casket. She is embracing the potbellied Dhanadāyaka the (bestower of wealth) with her right hand. In her left hand she is holding the lotus. She is yellow-complexioned and is seated in the lap of Dhanadā.

30-31. In the western corner he shall worship Madana holding arrows, noose, goad and the bow. He is as red as the China rose flower. He wears red ornaments. He shall duly worship Rati who embraces her husband with the right hand and holds a lotus with the left hand. She is seated in the lap of her husband.

32-33. In the north-eastern corner he shall duly worship Vighnarāja accompanied by his beloved. He is shining with goad and noose in his hands. His fingers are engaged in touching the beloved's private part. He is naked and holds a skull filled with wine. With the tusk he is holding a bowl that shines and from which jewels roll down.

34-35. He shall worship Puṣṭi who is also naked. Her features resemble saffron. She is unfettered in her intoxicated gestures and movements. With one hand, she holds a red lotus and with the other she touches penis. She is pink in colour. She has embraced her lover.

The two treasures are to be worshipped. At the sides of the hexagon, he shall worship the aṅgas in the filaments and of its different directions. Afterwards he shall worship the following in the petals.

36-38. The eight śaktis are : Anaṅgakusumā, Anaṅgamekhalā, Anaṅgamadanā, Anaṅgamadanāturā, Bhuvanapālā, Gaganavegā, Śaśilekhā and Gaganalekhā. The mothers who are dark-complexioned holding swords and clubs, are to be worshipped.

39-40. Outside the lotus, the attending Śaktis should be worshipped. The first one is Anaṅgarūpā, the next one is Anaṅgamadanā, the others are Madanāturā, Bhuvanavegā, Bhuvanapālikā, Sarvaśiśirā, Anaṅgavedanā and Anaṅgamekhalā.

41. They hold in their lotus-like hands, a bowl, a fan, a betel, a shining umbrella, chowries, silken garment and flowers.

42. He shall worship the guardians of the world as shining with ornaments, then further outside, he shall worship thunderbolt etc. Thus he shall worship the goddess.

43. By performing homa with the excellent twigs of the fig tree soaked in three sweet things, the repeater of the mantra can fascinate brahmins very soon and by the homa with the lotuś he can captivate kings.

44-45. If the homas are performed with palāśa flowers he shall fascinate his womenfolk. By the lilies he shall control ministers. He shall perform daily ablutions with the water charged with the mantra repeated twentyfive times. He who spinkles it over his body shall have good fortune. A man should drink water so charged twentyfive times in the morning. He will attain good intellect and become the foremost among poets.

46-48. Saffron shall be charged with the mantra along with the camphor and aloe. The devotee shall mark his forehead with it. He can keep the king under control. The devotee shall make a doll with ground and pasted Śāli rice. He shall mix sweets with it, charge it with the mantra and instil life into it. Then he shall eat it on Sunday. Thus he will be able to captivate any man or woman, even the king.

49. The devotee shall stand in the neck-deep water. Looking at the sun reflected in the water he shall repeat the mantra three thousand times. He will obtain the girl desired for.

50-53. In order to achieve glory the repeater of the mantra shall eat the cooked rice charged with the mantra. Hrīm should be written in ashes along with the sādhya (for whom the deed is desired) on a plank or other similar thing. The mystic diagram shall be shown to the pregnant woman about to give birth to a child. She will have easy delivery.

The deity called Bhuvaneśī was born of the thousand armed one. O excellent brahmin, she is the bestower of worldly pleasures and salvation unto men who remember her. Once, O brahmin, in the course of another Kalpa the demon Mahiṣa, conquered the guardians of the world and enjoyed the three worlds. Then the gods afflicted by him sought refuge in Vaikuṇṭha.

Worship of Lakṣmī (goddess of wealth).

54. O excellent sage, thereafter, goddess Lakṣmī became Śrī out of the splendour arising from the body of discus. She became embodied and pervaded the three worlds.

55. After killing Mahiṣa and others herself the goddess of the universe went to the forest called Aravinda. She is the bestower of all objects of desire to those who worship her.

56-57. O brahmin, I shall briefly recount the mode of her worship. Listen to it.

Mṛtyu (śa) attached with krodha (ra) and guru (ī) and then adorned with bindu on the head is the seed mantra of the goddess of wealth.[1] It is the bestower of all desired objects to those who are devoted to it. The sage is Bhṛgu, the metre is Nivṛt and Śrī is the deity.

58. The devotee shall conceive six aṅgas with the bīja after joining with it six long vowels in their due order. Thereafter he shall meditate on Śrī, the bestower of riches. He shall meditate the universally revered Śrī, the bestower of riches.

59-60. She has the lustre of gold. She is being sprinkled over by golden nectar vessels raised by their own trunks by four white elephants. She is seated in the lotus. She has in her hands the boon and fearlessness, the lotus and a garland. She is clad in silk garments. She has a crown. The devotee shall repeat mantra twelve hundred thousand times and perform homas twelve thousand times.

61. After worshipping her with fragrant flowers and lotuses soaked in sweets he shall conceive the form of the deity

---

1. The mantra of Lakṣmī is śrīṁ.

by the mūla mantra in the altar as mentioned for worshipping Mahālakṣmī.

62-63. He shall, as before, worship the aṅgas and then worship the following deities in the petals of the quarters viz, Vāsudeva, Saṁkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha with the complexion of snow, yellow, the colour of the tamāla tree (black) and the colour of Indranīla jewel and putting on yellow garments. They have four arms holding conch, discus, iron club and lotus.

64. In the interstices of the quarters he shall worship Damaka and other elephants. They are Damaka, Puṇḍarīka, Guggula and Kuraṇṭaka.

65-66. He shall worship the treasure and conch along with his wife to the right of the goddess. The two resemble the pearl and the ruby, their lotus-like face has a slight smile. They are engaged in embracing each other. They hold conch and lotus. They are marked on the head with the signs of two conches from which jewels are rolling down.

67. He shall worship potbellied Kambuka nidhi (i.e. Śaṅkha) and Vasudhārā with a thick bosom. He shall worship to the left (of Śrī) Paṅkaja nidhi, along with his wife.

68. They have the lustre of saffron. They are linked to each other with their hands. They hold with their hands the red lotus and the red lily. They are marked on the head with the signs of two lotuses from which jewels roll down.

69. He shall worship the pot-bellied Paṅkaja nidhi and slim-limbed Vasumatī. They should be worshipped at the tips of the lotus. He shall worship Balāki and others all round the lotus.

70-71. They are Balākī, Vimalā, Kamalā, Vanamālā, Mālikā, Śāṅkarī and Vasumālā. They have the lustre similar to that of a pearl necklace and they hold two lotuses each. In the end he shall worship the lords of the worlds and the thunder-bolt and other weapons outside of it.

72. The excellent devotee who worships the goddess thus in accordance with the proper method shall become affluent with riches and grain and uncensurable glory.

73. The devotee should stand in chest-deep water and repeat this mantra three hundred thousand times while meditating on the deity present in the sun. Thus he will become the abode of the goddess of fortune.

74. The aspirant who repeats this mantra three hundred thousand times at the root of the bilva tree by the temple of Viṣṇu obtains the desired lot of wealth.

75-77. If the homa is performed in the fire of Aśoka twigs with rice grains smeared with ghee he shall have control over the world. If the homa is performed in the fire kindled with Khadira twigs by means of rice grains sprinkled with sweet solution, the king will soon come under his control and his good fortune will also increase. The devotee shall stay under the shade of the bilva tree for two years and his diet must be rice soaked in ghee mixed with bilva fruit. He should perform homa with bilva fruits or lotuses. The leading aspirant will certainly see Mahālakṣmī with his eyes.

78 O brahmin, in the course of another Kalpa, Śumbha and Niśumbha, the two demons who overran the kingdom of gods, were born. They harassed the worlds.

The Worship of Mahā Sarasvati

79-80. O sage, eulogised by Indra and others who had lost their power of authority, goddess Mahā Sarasvatī descended on the Himālayas of great merit, in the highly splendid mountain region. Thereafter, she killed Śumbha and others and was duly worshipped by the gods.

81. After granting boons the goddess entered the Mānasa lake. O sage, I shall recount her mantra. Listen to it attentively.

82. Jñānāmṛtā (ai) is decorated on the forehead with the moon (i.e. bindu).[1] This is the bīja of Vāk (speech). The excellent aspirant shall conceive the aṅgas thereby.

83. Its sage is Sadāśiva, anuṣṭup is the metre, vāk is the deity. She bestows desired objects unto those who worship her.

84. He shall always meditate on the goddess of speech as clad on white clothes, white in complexion like the lotus stalk holding the lute and the book. She is adorned with divine ornaments.

[1] The bīja of Sarasvatī is aim.

85. He shall, by means of the mūla mantra conceive the form in the altar of Mahāsarasvatī. Therein, he shall worship the goddess along with the ancillaries and the attending deities.

86-88.[1] The first āvṛti (the covering) shall be the ancillaries. Ambikā and others constitute the second stage of covering. The third stage of covering is that of the Mātṛkās. The fourth one is that of the sixteen śaktis. The fifth stage of covering is that of the thirtytwo śaktis. The sixth stage of covering is that of the sixtyfour śaktis. The seventh stage of covering is that of the leaders of the world and the eighth is that of their weapons. Thus, the mother of the universe, the glorious deity Vāgbhavā is to be worshipped.

89-91. The aspirant shall conceive aṅgas in the places mentioned before. The Ambikā, Vāgbhavā, Durgā and Śrīśakti with characteristics as mentioned before (are to be worshipped). Thereafter, Brāhmī etc. are to be worshipped. The sixteen śaktis are Karālī, Vikarālī, Umā, Sarasvatī, Śrī, Durgā, Uṣā, Lakṣmī, Śruti, Dhṛti, Smṛti, Śraddhā, Medhā, Rati, Kānti and Āryā. They hold swords and clubs and are black-complexioned. These well decorated śaktis are worthy of being propitiated.

92-95. The thirty-two śaktis are : Vīryā, Hrī, Puṣṭi, Prajñā, Sinīvālī, Kuhū, Rūdra vīryā, Prabhā, Nandā, Poṣaṇā, the auspicious Ṛddhidā, Kālarātri, Mahārātri, Bhadrakālī, Kapardinī, Vikṛti, Daṇḍinī, Muṇḍinī, Indukhaṇḍā, Śikhaṇḍinī, Niśumbha-Śumbhamathanī, Caṇḍa-muṇḍavināśinī, Indrāṇī, Rudrāṇī, Śaṅkarārdhaśarīriṇī, Nārī, Nārāyaṇī,

---

1. These verses give the procedure for the worship of surrounding deities one after the other. The first begins with Ambikā and others, the second with Brāhmī etc., the third with eight Śaktis, the fourth and fifth with thirty-two Śaktis, the sixth with the lords of quarters, the eighth with the weapons. These rituals are performed on the mystic diagram of the deity.

The procedure of drawing the diagram is as follows: First draw an eight-petalled lotus, then outside of it draw a circle to which draw sixteen petals, in the pericarp of the inner circle draw a hexagon. Then draw a square outside of all of them and adorn it with four doorways.

Triśūlinī, Pālinī, Ambikā and Hlādinī. All these thirtytwo are known as śaktis. They hold discus in their hands and their faces are like those of goblins. They have beautiful ornaments. They are to be worshipped.

96-104. The sixtyfour śaktis are : Piṅgalākṣī Viśālākṣī, Samṛddhi, Vṛddhi, Śraddhā, Svāhā, the name possessing Svadhā, the śakti named Māyā, Vasundharā, Trilokadhātrī, Gāyatrī, Sāvitrī, Tridaśeśvarī, Surūpā, Bahurūpā, Skanadamātā, Acyutapriyā, Vimalā, Kamalā, Āruṇī, Aruṇī, Prakṛti, Vikṛti, Sṛṣṭi, Sthiti, Saṁhṛti, Sandhyā, Mātā, Satī, Haṁsī, Mardikā, Rāñjikā, Parā, Devamātā, Bhagavatī, Devakī, Kamalāsanā Trimukhī, Saptamukhī, Surā, Asuravimardinī, Lamboṣṭhī, Ūrdhvakeśī, Bahuśīrṣā, Vṛkodarī, Ratharekhā, Śaśirekhā, Aparā, Gaṅgāvegā, Pavanavegā, Bhuvanapālā, Madanāturā, Anagā, Anaṅgamadanā, Anaṅgamekhalā, Anaṅgakusumā, Viśvarūpā, Asurabhayaṁkarī, Akṣobhyā, Satyavādinī, Vajrarūpā, Śucivratā, Varadā and Vāgīśā.

105. All of them hold bows and arrows. They are of brilliant lustre and emit flames from their tongues. They have curved fangs and hairs standing upright and their minds are inclined towards battle.

106. They are shining in their ornaments. They should be worshipped carefully. The guardians of quarters are to be worshipped thereafter, so also the weapons viz. thunderbolts etc.

107. The intelligent devotee shall repeat the mantra one million six hundred thousand times and to the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with ghee in the fire kindled with khadira wood. Thus the mantra becomes fruitful.

108. By performing homa with lotuses for ten thousand times one will be able to captivate and fascinate the king. If one performs homa with lilies good fortune will come about.

109. By Performing homa with the flowers of palāśa for a year, the devotee becomes a poet. If one performs homa with white mustard and salt one can enchant women.

110. There need not be any hesitation or doubt in this that one who is devoted to the japa of vāṇībīja (the seed mantra of Śarasvatī) shall enjoy all worldly pleasures and in the end shall attain the region of Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER EIGHTYFIVE

Yakṣiṇimantra nirūpaṇam
The mantras of Yakṣiṇi :

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Another incarnation of the deity of speech is Kālikā. I shall recount her mantra which yields pleasures and salvation unto men.

2-3. Sṛṣṭi (ka) attached with kriyā (ra) and śānti (i) and then endowed with bindu (.), then again repeated thrice, then aruṇā (ham) is attached with dīpikā (u), it is then repeated twice, then māyā (hrīm) is repeated twice, then dakṣiṇe kalpe, then seven bījas (stated before) thereafter. This excellent mantra ends with svāhā.

4. O lord of sages, its sage is Bhairava, the metre is uṣṇik, the deity is Kāli, hrīm is the bīja and the long varma hūm is śakti.

5-7. The aṅga is to be worshipped with the bīja of vidyā, having six long (syllables). He shall then fix the syllables of the mātṛkā in the heart, arms and feet, ten in each. The aspirant shall make a pervasive nyāsa by means of the mūla mantra. He shall remember Kālikā who holds a severed head, sword, the gesture of fearlessness, and boon in her hands. A garland of skulls is tied round her head. Her hairs are dishevelled. She is stationed in a cremation ground. She is dark-complexioned and bedecked in all ornaments.

8. After meditating thus, he should repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. Thereafter, he shall perform homa ten thousand times with oleander flowers. The pūjā yantra (the mystic diagram) is being mentioned now.

9-17.[1] At the outset he shall draw a hexagon, then three triangles. Thereafter, externally he shall draw the eight-petalled lotus and the bhūpura.

---

1. It gives the procedure for drawing the Yantra of Kālī which differs from the traditional one. It states that one should draw a hexagon, then outside of it draw eight petals of the lotus and further outside adorn it with the square and four entrances. But the traditional one is that where it is stated

He shall worship śaktis of the altar as follows : Jayā, vijayā, ajitā, aparājitā, nityā, vilāsinī, dogdhrī, aghorā and Maṅgalā. They are to be worshipped with the mantra beginning with hrīm and Kālikāyogapīṭhātmane and ending with namaḥ. Then he should meditate on Kālī as follows :

She is seated on a corpse in the form of Śiva. She is surrounded on all sides by vixens. She is engrossed in sexual intercourse with Mahākāla.

After duly meditating thus, he shall worship six aṅgas in the six corners. They are Kālī, Kapālinī, Kullā, Kurukullā, Virodhinī and Vipracittā. In the nine corners of the three triangles he shall worship : Ugrā, Ugraprabhā, Dīptā, Nīlā, Ghanā, Balākikā, Mātrā, Mudā and Mitā. He shall worship carefully the matṛkās in the petals of the lotus. They are : Brāhmī, Nārāyaṇī, Māheśvarī, Cāmuṇḍā, Kaumārī, Aparājitā, Vārāhī and Nārasiṁhī. The following are to be worshipped in the Bhūpura (the square) viz. Bhairavī, Mahābhairavī, Siṁhabhairavī, Dhūmrabhairavī, Bhīmabhairavī, unmattabhairavī, Vaśīkaraṇabhairavī and Mohanabhairavī. After worshipping them and Indra and others as well as their weapons, Kālī should be duly propitiated. Thus, she is achieved by the repeater of the mantra.

18. Thereafter, he shall make the practical applications as stated by Mahābhairava which yields quick results either to oneself or to others.

19. A devotee of Kāla who seeks his own well being shall avoid beating of women and their censure, crookedness and unpalatable words.

20. He who repeats mantra ten thousand times seeing the sexual organ of a woman with beautiful eyes shall attain equality with the lord of speech ere long.

21. In the midnight the devotee shall sit naked with dishevelled hair in the cremation ground[1] and repeat the mantra ten thousand times. He will have all siddhis.

---

that one should draw a triangle first and outside of it draw another triangle, and draw three other triangles outside each of them, then encircle all of them and adorn it with eight petals of the lotus and draw the entrances. The Tantrasāra of Kṛṣṇānanda Āgamavāgīśa supports both the views.

1. The cremation ground that is referred to here is Parabrahman in which during the great dissolution (Mahāpralaya) all beings are dissolved.

22-23. In the cremation ground the devotee shall sit naked on the chest of a corpse. Repeating the mantra he shall offer a thousand flowers of the arka plant smearing them with his own semen. With these flowers he shall devotedly worship the goddess. Ere long, he shall become the lord of the earth.

24. He who meditates on the vaginal passage[1] of a woman splashed with the menstrual blood and repeats the mantra ten thousand times, shall certainly fascinate and captivate the people by means of sweet poesy.

25-26. The devotee shall meditate on Kālī as follows: She is stationed on the chest of Śiva who is on the Yantra with fifteen corners. She is engaged in amorous battle with lord Mahākāla and is smiling sweetly. The devotee himself shall perform sexual intercourse. Even as he does so he shall repeat the mantra a thousand times.

27-28. At midnight, on Bhūtāṣṭamī (the eighth day in the dark fortnight of Kārttika month) the devotee shall offer unto the goddess the flesh of cats and rams along with bones, hair and hide or the oblation of a camel or a buffalo. All the creatures will become subservient to him. He shall enjoy happiness for a long time with sons, fame, fortune and learning.

29. While during the day, the devotee should take sacrificial meals and during the night while engaged in sexual intercourse he should repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. He shall thereby become a king.

Therefore, one who is devoted to Parabrahman, and is free from Māyā should meditate on pure consciousness and then offer different moods and sentiments like compassion, forgiveness etc. as flowers and other essential articles of offerings. Then charging them with the nectar that flows from the Sahasrāra one offers them to the deity.

1. The inner meaning of the verse is that the devotee should meditate on the Yonimaṇḍalas in the Mūlādhāra. The triangle is said to be the abode of Kāma, the Liṅga is Maheśvara, which is compared to a flower. See Karpūrādi hymns, pp. 21-25.

The inner meaning is that the devotee should meditate on the deity at midnight or early dawn. The deity is not different from his own ātman and the body itself is the Yantra. The yantra is encompassed by a circle which is Avidyā, the eight-fold Prakṛti consisting of earth and so forth is the eight petalled lotus, the five jñānendriyas, the five karmendriyas and five prāṇas are the five triangles and the bindu which is consciousness reflected in Māyā composed of pure sattvaguṇa is the adorning bīja.

30. The repeater of the mantra shall perform homa with red lotuses. He shall conquer even Kuvera by his riches. If the homa is performed with leaves of bilva he shall gain a kingdom, if it is performed with red lotuses he shall attain the power of attracting and captivating people.

31. Ere long, all siddhis will be within the grasp of that person who propitiates Kālikā with the blood of buffalo and other animals.

32. The knower of the mantra who repeats it a hundred thousand times after sitting on the corpse shall make the mantra effective instantaneously. The mantra will yield instantaneous result.

33. Indeed, it would be as it were the man of noble birth has performed sacrifices like Aśvamedha etc. If he worships Kālikā, gifts have been granted by him and austerities have been performed by him.

34. The man who always worships Kālī has actually worshipped gods like Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Gaurī, Lakṣmī Gaṇapati and Ravi.

35. Henceforth, another incarnation of Sarasvatī is being recounted. Undoubtedly people become blessed and satisfied by serving her.

36-37. Āpyāyinī (0) is attached with candra (.) and then māyā (hrīm), then sa with Kāmikā, (ta), Krodha (ra), Śānti (i) bedecked on head with the moon (.). Then sānta (the letter comes that after sa is ha) is attached with dīpikā (u) and lastly astra (phaṭ). Thus the mantra is mentioned.

The deity is Tārā; the second and the fourth syllables are its śakti. The aṅgas are to be done with the six long vowels by means of the second bīja.

38-40. Ṣoḍhā nyāsa[1] of Tārā mantra is to be performed then, which is the giver of all siddhis.

He shall fix Śrīkaṇṭha, the Rudras preceded by mātṛkās (a to kṣa) in the respective places of the locations of mātṛkās as mentioned before and they also are to be preceded by māyā (hrīm) the third one (strīm) and krodha (hum). The fourth (i.e. Śrīkaṇṭha and others) are to be in the dative case and followed by namaḥ (hrīṁ strīṁ hūm aṁ śrīkaṇṭhāya namaḥ is the combination). Thus the first nyāsa has been mentioned.

1. The nyāsa of six sorts are (1) Rudra-nyāsa, (2) Grahanyāsa, (3) Lokapālanyāsa, (4) Śivaśaktinyāsa, (5) Tārādinyāsa, (6) Piṭhanyāsa. The number of Rudras coincide with the letters of Sanskrit alphabets. Place the three bījas of Tārā hrīm, strīm, hum, am Śrīkaṇṭheśāya namaḥ in the forehead.

41. He shall perform the first nyāsa rite after thinking of the deity seated on the altar of the corpse. Her lustre is bluish. She has three eyes. The crescent moon forms the crest. She has a variety of ornaments.

42-46.[1] The second nyāsa is that of the planets. The devotee shall perform it by remembering the deity. The mantra is preceded by the vowels and the three (bījas (hrīm, strīm, hum). Then fix the red sun in the heart (as hrīm, strīm, hūm, am to āḥ raktavarṇaṁ sūryaṁ hṛdi). Similarly, along with the letters of yavarga preceding, the white moon is to be fixed on the eyebrows. The letters of kavarga preceding, the Maṅgala of red lustre he should fix on the three eyes. He shall fix the dark-coloured Budha preceded by cavarga in the chest. He shall fix with the letters the yellow-coloured Bṛhaspati along with ṭavarga in the cavity of the throat; he shall fix the white-coloured Bhārgava along with the letters of tavarga, in the ankle. He shall fix the blue coloured Śanaiścara along with the letters of pavarga in the umbilical region. After meditating on Rāhu as a smoke-coloured planet he shall fix it along with the letters of Śavarga, in the mouth. Thus the Grahanyāsa is mentioned along with the three bījas (The smoke-coloured Ketu adorned with la and kṣa is to be fixed again in the navel).

---

1. These verses give the procedure of Grahanyāsa which is to be performed by uttering the three bījas of Tārā and the letters of the vowels adding bindu with each and then say Raktavarṇa sūrya in the heart. All the grahas are to be fixed in different limbs of the body with different letters of the alphabets.

The text here drops a line which we find in the Mantra Mahodadhi. It runs as follows:

Lakṣādhyaṁ dhūmravarṇābhaṁ Keturṁ nābhau punarnyaset, p. 105 New Edition.

47. He shall then perform the third nyāsa, that of the guardians of the worlds,[1] carefully along with the three bījas (hrīm etc.) for attaining siddhis.

48. He shall fix them on the head, forehead etc., in the eight quarters of them, above and below. He shall fix the guardians of the quarters along with the letters short or long (as hrīm, strīm, hum, am, im, um, ṛm, lṛṃ, em, om, am lalāṭa-pūrve Indrāya namaḥ etc.).

49-55. The devotee shall perform the fourth nyāsa viz. Śiva-sakti nyāsa.[2] He shall fix six Śivas along with their śaktis beginning with the three bījas. They shall be fixed in the centres (cakras) mūlādhāra and others along with the syllables of their respective cakras. He shall fix Brahmā accompanied by Dākinī along with the letters beginning with va and ending with sa in the Mūlādhāra with four petals.

He shall fix Viṣṇu accompanied by Rākiṇī along with the letters beginning with ba and ending with la in the cakra called Svādhiṣṭhāna stationed in the liṅga having six petals.

He shall fix Rudra, accompanied by Lākinī along with the letters beginning with da and ending with pha in a ten-petalled lotus that is stationed in the umbilical region called Maṇipūra.

He shall fix Īśvara accompanied by Kākiṇī along with the letters ka and ending with tha in the cakra of twelve petals stationed in the heart called Anāhata.

1. It gives the procedure of nyāsa of Lokapālas who are Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirṛta, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Soma, Iśāna, Brahmā, Ananta. The vowels (short ones) are added with Indra and the long ones with Agni preceded by the three bījas of Tārā and followed by namaḥ. Kavarga goes with Yama, cavarga with Nirṛti, ṭavarga with varuṇa, tavarga with vāyu, pavarga with soma, yavarga with Iśāna, śavarga with Brahman and ha and kṣa with Ananta.

2. Śivaśaktinyāsa is done with the bīja of Tārā preceding and followed by the letters of the alphabets with bindu and ending with namaḥ. Brahmā and Dākinī are associated with the letters va, śa, ṣa, sa, the location being mūlādhāra, the letters ba, bha, ma, ya, ra, la are associated with Rākinī and Viṣṇu and the location is Svādhiṣṭhāna, the letters ḍa dha, ṇa, ta, tha, da, dha, na, pa, pha associated with Lākinī and Rudra the location being Maṇipūra, letters ka, kha, ga, gha ṅa, ca, cha, ja, jha, ña, ṭa, ṭha associated with kākiṇī and Īśvara, the location being Anāhata, all the letters of the vowels are associated with Śākinī and Sadāśiva and the location is viśuddha. ham (lam) and kṣa are associated with Hākinī and Paramaśiva and the location is Ājñā.

He shall fix Sadāsīva and Śākinī along with sixteen vowels in the sixteen-petalled lotus stationed in the throat called Viśuddha.

He shall fix Paraśiva accompanied by Hākinī along with the letters ha and kṣa in the Ājñācakra which is very charming and is stationed between the eyebrows.

56-59. For the purpose of achieving all Siddhis the devotee shall perform the fifth nyāsa called Tārādi.[1] He shall fix eight vargas (i.e. one varga for each) along with the pair of vowels accompanied by the bīja syllables. Tārā along with śaktis are to be applied for the nyāsa rite.

They are Tārā, Ugrā, Mahogrā, Vajrā, Kālī, Sarasvatī, Kāmeśvarī and Cāmuṇḍā. They are to be fixed in the cerebral orifices, forehead, between the eyebrows, in the throat, in the heart in the novel, at the root of penis and in the Mūlādhāra.

60. Thereafter, he shall perform aṅganyāsa. This is called Pīṭhanyāsa.[2] It is the bestower of all Siddhis. In the Mūlādhāra called Kāmarūpa the bīja (hrīm, strīm, hum and the short vowels a,i,u,ṛ,ḷ,e,o along with bindu) is to be fixed.

61. He shall fix in the jālandhara pīṭha located in the heart with the bīja along with long vowels. The intelligent devotee shall fix in the forehead the pīṭha Pūrṇagiri with the bīja along with the letters of kavarga.

62-63a. He shall fix in the Uḍḍiyāna in the junction of hair along with bīja and the letters of cavarga.[3]

1. Tārādī nyāsa are performed beginning from the cerebral orifice to Mūlādhāra with pairs of two vowels preceded by the bīja of Tārā and the letters of Kavarga etc. ending with namaḥ. For example, for Tārā aṃ and āṃ are taken, for ugrā iṃ, īṃ, for Mahogrā uṃ, ūṃ and so on.

2. The Pīṭhas are known to be fiftyone, our text takes only nine piṭhas. These nine are fixed along with the three bījas of Tārā along with the letters of alphabets and ending with namaḥ. The vowels have been divided into short and long ones in order to classify the alphabets into nine groups.

3. The text drops a few lines here. They are as follows:

Bhruvorvārāṇasīpīṭhaṁ ṭavargādyaṁ samāhitaḥ/ Tavargapūrvikāṁ nyasyedAvantīṁ nayanadvaye/Pavargapūrvakammāyāpurīpīṭhaṁ mukhe nyaset/kaṇṭhe tu Mathurāpīṭhaṁ yavargādyaṁ pravinyaset / Ayodhyāpīṭhakaṁ nābhau śavargādikamuttamaṁ / kaṭyoḥ Kāñcīpurīpīṭhaṁ daśamaṁ tu pravinyaset.

The sixfold nyāsa of Tārā has thus been mentioned. It is the bestower of the desired fruit.

63b-65. He shall fix Ekajaṭā in the heart (namaḥ), fix Tāriṇī in the head, svāhā vajrodakā in the tuft of hair (vaṣaṭ), ugratārā in the Kavaca (hum), Mahāpratisara in the eye (vauṣaṭ), Piṅgograikajaṭā in the palm (phaṭ). These eight nyāsas are to be performed with hrīm along with six long vowels (hrām, hrīm etc.). But before doing this he should fix carefully this nyāsa in the fingers beginning with the thumb of the fingers.

66-67. Then, he shall make three claps by means of the index finger and the middle finger. Then recollecting the deity in mind he should arrest quarters by means of snapping the fingers. Then, he shall do the pervasive nyāsa by the vidyā strīm encased in om seven times. Thereafter, he shall meditate upon ugratārā that yields superior siddhis in the debate.

68-70a. He shall meditate on the deity thus : In the ocean of dissolution she is stationed in a lotus. She has blue lustre. She has divine ornaments. In her hands, she holds the conch, the sword, the skull and the blue lotus. Her body is embellished by an excellent serpent. She has three red eyes. The devotee shall repeat mantra four hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with red lotuses mixed with milk and ghee. He shall instal a conch and begin japa.

70b-72. Seeing,, touching and enjoying a woman in the dead of night (after 11-30 p.m. onward) he shall perform the rite of japa (repetition of the mantra).

In the cremation ground or in a vacant house, or in a temple, or in a lonely place, in a mountain, in a forest, the knower of the mantra shall climb on to a dead body that has been killed in the battle-field or on a child of six months, should make an effort for the propitiation of vidyā (of Tāriṇī), thus he would soon be able to make it fruitful.

1. The devotee with concentration should fix in the joint of the eyebrows Pīṭha called Vārāṇasī with the letters of Ṭavarga. In the two eyes he should fix Avantipīṭha with the letters of Tavarga. In the mouth he should fix Māyāpurī with the letters of Pavarga. In the throat he should fix Mathurāpīṭha along with the letters of yavarga. In the navel he should fix Ayodhyāpīṭha the excellent letters of Śavarga. In the hips he should fix Kāñcipurī with the tenth class (ha and kṣa).

73-74. The Śaktis of altar are said to be nine. They are : Medhā, Prajñā, Prabhā, Vidyā, Dhī, Vṛtti, Smṛti, Buddhi and Viśveśvarī.

Bhṛgu (sa) united with Manu (au) and bindu (.), then meghavarṇā (blue like the cloud) nīlaSarasvatīyogapīṭhātmane namaḥ. The mantra[1] of the altar is thus mentioned.

75. After offering the seat with this the form of the deity is to be conceived by means of the mūla-mantra. Then he should worship the deity according to the procedure given below.

76-77. Tāra (om), māyā(hrīm), bhaga (e), Brahma (ka) then jaṭe, sūrya (ma), then kha (hā) is joined with the long vowel (i.e. ā) then add Mahāyakṣādhipataye, tandrī(me) added to yopanītam, balin (offering) then the pair of gṛhāṇa, Śivā (hrīm) svāhā.[2] This is the mantra[3] for the offering of bali. One should offer bali every day at midnight on the crossroad.

78-84. He shall perform the rite of offering of waters etc. by means of ten mantras. For taking up the water the seven-syllabled mantra runs thus: Dhruva (om) vajrodaka hum phaṭ Tāra (om) with māyā (hrīm) is for washing the feet. Tāra (om) hrīm, bhṛgu (sa) with Karṇa (u) then viśuddha dharma (pure virtue), followed by sarva (all) pāpāni (demerits), śāmaya (pacify) all (aśeṣa), (va), joined with netra (i) kalpānapanaya svāhā remove all vikalpas. This mantra is meant for ācamana(sipping).[4]

Dhruva (om) Maṇidhāri followed by vajriṇī mṛti (sa) joined with (i), then khari nati (na) joined with (i), then to

---

1. The Pīṭha mantra reads thus :
Saum nīlasarasvatīyogapīṭhātmane namaḥ.
2. The mantra for offering runs thus : om hrīm ekajaṭe mahāyakṣādhipataye mayopnitam balim gṛhāṇa gṛhāṇa hrīm svāhā.
3. This gives the mantra for touching water : om vajrodake hum phaṭ.
4. It gives the mantra for sipping the water : om hrīm suviśuddha dharma sarva pāpāni śamayāśeṣavikalpānapanaya svāhā.

sarva and va is added vaka (sa), joined with indu (.) followed by Kariṇi, dīrghavarma (hum) astra (phaṭ) and svāhā. This mantra consists of twentythree syllables and is used for tying the tuft of hair.[1]

Om, the pair of rakṣa, hum phaṭ. With this nine-syllabled mantra the repeater of the mantra shall perform the cleaning of the ground.[2]

At the end of tāra (om) utter the words sarvavighnān utsāraya (remove all obstacles). Then hum phaṭ svāhā. This thirteen-syllabled mantra is for the warding off of obstacles.[3]

85. He shall think about the bīja hrīm resembling the Japā flower (China rose) in the navel. With the fire originating from it he shall burn the body along with his sin.

86. The knower of the mantras shall think about the bīja of Tārā (strīm) in his heart as having the lustre of gold. With the wind arising therefrom, he shall cast off the ashes of sin on the ground.

87. On meditating in the forehead, the fourth bīja (hūm) having the lustre of the moon or Kunda flower he shall make the body resemble the deity by means of the nectar following therefrom.

88-89. By dint of this purification of the elements he attains resemblance with the goddess.

He shall make the auspicious diagram (maṇḍalam)[4] by the following twelve-syllabled mantra : Tāra (om) ananta (a) bhṛgu (sa) with karṇa (u), (bali) then ra attached with padmanābha (e), then (khe) followed by vajrarekhe, the bīja named krodha (hum) and pāvakavallabhā (svāhā).

1. It gives the mantra for tying the sacred hair. Om maṇidhāri Vajriṇi śikhariṇi sarvavaśaṃkāriṇi hum phaṭ svāhā.

2. It gives the mantra for the purification of the ground.

Om rakṣa rakṣa hūm phaṭ svāhā.

3. It gives the mantra for allaying obstacles. Om sarvavighnānutsāraya hūm phaṭ svāhā.

4. It gives the mantra for drawing the mystic diagram.

Om asurekhe vajrarekhe hūm phaṭ svāhā.

90-91. For the purpose of purifying flowers[1] the mantra runs thus: Tāra (om) followed by yathāgatā nidrā (bha) attached with dṛk (i) followed by Ṣeka, then bhṛgu (sa) followed by viṣa (ma) joined with dīrgha (ā), then smṛti (ga) and (n) joined with (i) (i.e. gni), then mahākāla (ma) attached with bhaga (e), then krodha (hum) astra (phaṭ). For the purpose of purifying the heart[2] the five-syllabled mantra is : Tāra (om), pāśa (ām), parā (hrīm) svāhā.

92-94. Ten mantras have thus been mentioned. Now the procedure of installing arghya is being recounted.

With the syllables māṁsa and toya adorned with bindu (lam and vam) one should cleanse the ground and then prepare a diagram on the ground with bhūgṛha (square), a circle and a triangle with the mantra for the diagram. Then he should worship the ādhāraśakti stationed in the middle of the circle of fire. Then after worshipping, vahnimaṇḍala one should place the mahāśaṁkha therein. It should be washed with the mantra :[3] vihāyas (ha) is attached with vāmakarṇa (u) and bindu (.) (i.e. hum) and ending with (phaṭ). Then read the mantra : bhṛgu (sa), daṇḍī (tha) trimūrti (i) attached with indu (.) (i.e. sthim).

95-96. Thereafter, he shall worship the great conch while repeating the four mantras. Māyā (hrīm) is attached with three long vowels (i.e. hrām, hrīm, hrūm), Kālī followed by Sṛṣṭi (ka) and long pa (i.e. pā) pratiṣṭhā (ā) is joined with māṁsa (la), pavana (ya) followed by hṛdaya (namaḥ). This eleven-syllabled mantra is the first for worshipping the Mahāśaṅkha.

97-98. Haṁsa (sa), hari (ta), bhujaṅgeśī (ra) added with three long vowels and indu (.) followed by tāriṇī which

1. They give the mantra for the purification of flowers : om yathāgatā-bhiṣekasamāgni me hum phaṭ svāhā.

2. For the purification of citta the mantra is :

Oṁ āṁ hrīṁ svāhā

3. The mantra for worshipping Mahāśaṅkha runs thus ; (i) hrāṁ hrīṁ Kālikapālāya namaḥ. (ii) Strām strīm strūm tāriṇi kapālāya namaḥ, (iii) Hām hīm hum lilā kapālāya namaḥ, (iv) Hrim strīm hūm svargakapālāya sarvādhārāya sarvāya sarvodbhavāya sarvaśuddhimayāya sarvāsurarudhirāruṇāya śubhrāya surābhājanāya Devikapālāya namaḥ.

again ends with kapālāya namaḥ. This is the twelve-syllabled mantra.

Kha (ha) adorned with three long vowels and bindu (.), then meṣa (na) attached with vāmadṛg (i) followed by la kapālāya hṛdayam (namaḥ). This is the third one consisting of eleven syllables.

99-101. Māyā (hrīm), strībīja (strīm), kha (ha) attached with arghīndu (u and bindu (.), followed by svarga which again is followed by Khādima (i.e. the letter that precedes kha (ka) then sarvādhārāya, sarva and sarvodbhava in the dative (i.e. sarvāya sarvodbhavāya) sarvaśuddhimayāya sarvāsurarudhirāya) then rati (ṇa) added with dīrgha (i.e. ṇā) then vāyu (ya), then followed by śubhra anila (ya) surābhājanāya, bhagī (dā) and satya (e) (i.e. de) vikapālāya hrt (namaḥ). It contains fiftysix syllables for the worship of Mahāśaṁkha.

102. After worshipping the disc of the sun there he shall fill it with water considering it to be nectar. Sandal pastes and flowers as well as rice grains are also placed therein.

103-104. After showing trikhaṇḍa mudrā he should worship the disc of the moon. Vāk (aim), sūkti (hrīm), padmā (śrīm), gagana (ha) along with refa (ra) anugraha (au) and bindu (.) (i.e. hraum) followed by mūlamantra, viyat (ha) joined with anusarga (aum) i.e. (haum). With this mantra the sādhaka should charge the water[1] eight times carefully.

105. By means of hrīm he should pour wine into it and then show śaṅkha and yoni mudrās in it. Then he should conceive in it a circle, an octagon and hexagon therein, he should meditate on the goddess.

106-108. He should worship the deity as mentioned before, then he should perform tarpaṇa[2] rite of the great goddess by means of the index finger, middle finger and the little finger in the water kept in the mahāśaṅkha with mūlamantra four times. He shall perform tarpaṇa of Ānanda

1. Mantra for charging the water aim hrīm strīm om hraum hrīm strīm phaṭ hsauḥ (hum). The last syllable has been dropped but Mantra Mahodadhi adds varāhadīpikendrāḍhyo manurekādaśākṣaraḥ.

2. Mantra for Tarpaṇa: Om hraum hsauḥ namaḥ.

Bhairava with the mantra beginning with om and ending with namaḥ, the syllables that come between them are kha (ha), refa (ra), manu (au) and bindu (.) (i.e. hraum); then again ha with bhṛgu (sa), manu (au), bindu (.) (i.e. hsaum).

Thereafter, with that water of arghya, he shall sprinkle the materials of worship.

109-110. After showing the gesture of yoni he shall bow down to Bhavatāriṇī. The procedure of the offering of arghya has been recounted. It is the bestower of all siddhis.

He should worship in the aforesaid altar made of the lotus, the hexagon and the pericarp and the square called the house of the earth with nice offerings.

111-115a. All around the square Bhugṛha in different directions he should worship Gaṇeśa and others. He should first worship Gaṇeśa holding in his hand the noose, the goad, the skull and the trident and bedecked in various ornaments and situated in the east.

In the south, he shall worship the charming Baṭuka who has serpents for ornaments, who holds the skull and the trident in his pair of hands and who is encircled by his own herd.

In the west, he shall worship Kṣetrapāla who is naked, dark-complexioned and ruthless and who holds in his hands a sword, a trident, a skull and the drum ḍamaru.

In the north, he shall worship the yoginīs wearing red garments and holding in their arms the skull, drum, noose and the liṅga.

115b-117. Over the head, he shall worship Akṣobhya, the auspicious sage of the mantra of the goddess. The mantra for the worshipping of Akṣobhya is as follows : Akṣobhya vajra-puṣpam pratīccha svāhā. The six aṅgas are to be worshipped in six corners. He shall worship in the petals of the quarters the following deities :

Vairocana, Amitābha, Padmanābha and Śaṅkhapāṇḍura.

118. In order to achieve the desired objects he shall worship Lāmakā, Māmakā, Pāṇḍurā and Tārakā in the spaces between the quarters.

119-122. The following are the mantras mentioned for the worship of Vairocana etc., om and the first letter of the names attached with a bindu (.) and the name in the vocative case followed by 'vajrapuṣpam pratīccha svāhā' (i.e. Om vaiṁ Vairocana vajrapuṣpam pratīccha svāhā).

At the four doors of the bhūgṛha he should worship Padmāntaka, Yamāntaka, Vighnāntaka and Narāntaka. Thereafter, he shall worship Indra and others as well as thunderbolt and other weapons.

One who worships the goddess thus attains wonderful scholarship, wealth, sons, grandsons, splendid glory and control over the people.

123-125. Tāra (om), Māyā (hrīm) Śrīmadekajaṭe Nīla Sarasvati mahogratāre de, bala with netra i.e. va with i (i.e. devi) followed by the pair of gadā (kha and kha) and sarvabhūtapiśāca dīrgha (long vowel) added to agni (ra i e. rā), meru (kṣa) then sān grasa, then gra added to bhṛgu (sa) (i.e. grasa) followed by mama jāḍyaṁ ca and the pair of chedaya twice, then ramā (śrīm), māyā (hrīm), astra (phaṭ) and svāhā. The mantra[1] consists of fiftytwo syllables. With this, one shall offer oblations unto the goddess at the end of rituals every day.

126-128. When the mantra becomes mature, the adept in mantras performs the application of it for the practical purpose.

The devotee shall write the mantra on the tongue of the new-born boy within three days. He shall write the mantra with a gold needle soaked in honey and ghee. Or the adept will write it with a white dūrvā grass.

When the boy attains the age of eight he will become a wonderful poet, will also remain unvanquished by others and will be honoured by kings with gifts.

129-132. During an eclipse he shall take a piece of wood floating in the lake water and make a wedge out of it. Soaking it in oil and honey he should write the mantra on the petal of lotus. He shall envelop it with mātṛkā syllables. After putting this inside a kuṇḍa which is square having mekhalā

1. The balimantra after the ritual :

Oṁ hrīm Śrīmadekajaṭe Nīlasarasvati mahogratāre devi kha kha sarvabhūtapiśācarākṣasān grasa grasa mama jāḍyam chedaya chedaya śrīm hrīm phaṭ svāhā.

(girdle) in it, he shall place fire in it. He shall perform homas with red lotuses soaked in water and cow's milk. At the end of the homa he shall offer bali.

133-134. Tāra (om) followed by padme padme, then tandrī (ma) viyaddīrghe (hā), lohita (pa), atri (da), viṣa (ma) bhagārūḍha placed over bhaga (e) (i.e. padme), then say padmāvati adorned with jhiṇṭīśa (e) and anila (ya) (i.e. ye) svāhā. This sixteen-syllabled mantra[1] is used for the bali. Thereafter, at midnight, he shall offer oblations with the aforesaid mantra.

135. When this is performed he shall have victory over the poets and become the king of poets. He will be the abode of the goddess of learning and wealth. He will be competent to please people.

136. The adept in the mantra shall apply on his head the yellow pigment charged with the mantra repeating it for a hundred times. Whomsoever he espies becomes as it were, his servant immediately.

137-138. On Tuesday, the devotee shall gather charcoal from the cremation-ground at night. Encasing it with that mantra he should bind it with red threads. Then he should charge it with the repetition of the mūla mantra a hundred times and deposit the amulet in the house of the enemy. This exterminates the enemies along with their families within seven days.

139-140. The devotee shall write the mantra by means of turmeric and salt, on human bones at midnight on Sunday and charge it with the repetition of the mantra a thousand times.

If this is thrown into the house of the enemy, he will have demotion from the higher position and if thrown into the field, it brings about the destruction of plants and if thrown inside the stable it will be the remover of speed (of horses).

141-144. On the birch bark one shall write the mantra by means of red lac juice. The mūla mantra shall be written within the hexagon. The name of the Sādhya should be written in the filament along with the vowels. Externally, it shall have eight petals of the lotus containing eight vargas of syllables and encircled by bhūgṛha. It should be covered with yellow piece of cloth and tied with a silken cord round the neck of the child. It then removes fear from goblins. If it is tied round the left arm of a woman it bestows sons. If it is tied round the right arm of a man it bestows wealth on the indigent. If the man longs for perfect knowledge the amulet bestows perfect knowledge on him. It bestows victory on kings.

1. Another balimantra follows :
Om padme padme mahāpadme padmāvatīye svāhā.

CHAPTER EIGHTYSIX

Incarnations of Lakṣmi

Sanatkumāra said :

1. The incarnations of Sarasvatī that bestows siddhis on the people have been mentioned to you. Henceforth, I shall recount the incarnations of Lakṣmī, the bestower of all siddhis.

The mantras of Bālā :

2. Aim, klīm and hrīm are mentioned as the three seed mantras, the sage being Dakṣiṇāmūrti and Paṅkti the metre.

3-5. The deity Tripurā bālā, the middle one (i.e. klim) and the last (i.e. hrīm) are the śakti and the bīja. The first nyāsa is done from the navel to the foot, the second one from the chest and the third one from the head to the chest. The first one is done on the left hand, the second one on the right hand, the third one on both. The three bījas are fixed on the head, in the private parts and on the chest. The nyāsa is called navayoni and the devotee shall fix the mantra nine times.

6-11. He shall fix in the ears and the chin. He shall then fix on the cheeks, on the lotus-like face, in the eyes, in the nose, in the shoulders and in the belly. He shall then fix in two elbows, in the navel, in the knees, in the penis, in the rectum, at the sides, in the heart, in the breasts, in the region of the neck. He should fix them beginning from the left limbs onward. He shall fix Rati in the rectum preceded by vāgbhava; prīti in the heart preceded by the last bīja; between the eyebrows he should fix Manobhava preceded by klīm. Again he shall fix the three bījas placing vāgbhava in the end and Kāma in the beginning (in the locations mentioned before). The śaktis are Amṛteśī, Yogeśī and Viśvayoni.

On the head, in the mouth, in the heart, in the rectum and in the feet he should fix the five bījas of Kāmeśī followed by five smaras beginning with Manobhava in their due order.

The five bījas are hrīm, klīm, aim, śrīm, strīm.

12. The five smaras, the bestowers of all siddhis, are Manobhava, Makaradhvaja, Kandarpa, Manmatha and Kāmadeva.

13-15. The deities of the five arrows named Drāviṇī etc. are to be fixed on the head, in the feet, in the face, in the rectum, and in the heart along with Bāṇeśī bījas. The five bījas of Bāṇeśī are : drām, drīm, klīm, blūm, saḥ. The five deities of the arrows are Drāviṇī, Kṣobhiṇī, Vaśīkaraṇī, Ākarṣaṇī and Sammohanī.

The six aṅgas are to be fixed putting kāma (klīm) in the middle between the third in the beginning and vāg (aim) in the end.

16-18. Thereafter, he shall meditate on the goddess as having the six long vowels thus : She is stationed in a red lotus. She is clad in red garments. She resembles the rising sun. She holds in her hands the gesture of vidyā, garlands and the gestures of fearlessness and the boon. The devotee shall repeat the mantra three hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homa with the flowers of kiṁśuka (butea frondosa) or oleander mixed with sweet things. The nine-triangled diagram is drawn in which outside of it there should be an eight-petalled lotus.

19-21. In the filaments he shall inscribe vowels and in the petals he shall write the eight vargas (groups) of syllables. At the tip of petals there should be tridents and the lotus be covered with letters of alphabet. The devotee shall worship pīṭhaśaktis in the diagram thus drawn. They are : Icchā. jñāna, kriyā, kāminī kāmadāyinī, Rati, Ratipriyā, Nandā, Manonmanī. After worshipping these pīṭhaśaktis he should conceive the altar with the following mantra.

22-23. In the beginning there should be vyoma (ha) and the third bīja followed by Sadāśiva and Pretapadmāsana in the dative case ending with namaḥ.

This is the mantra[1] of the Pīṭha.

It contains sixteen syllables. After the form of the deity has been conceived by the mūla mantra, he shall invoke the goddess and pray to her along with the different kinds of service.

24-27. After worshipping the goddess in the central triangle, Rati etc. are to be worshipped in the triangle left to it, to the right Prīti and Manobhava in the front. Beginning from the South-east within the triangle he should worship the aṅgas and outside the central triangle beginning from the east and in the front he should worship Smara and the deities of the arrows in the same manner. In the eight triangles he should worship eight śaktis. They are named Subhagā, Bhagā, Bhagasarpiṇī, Bhagamālā, Anaṅgā, Anaṅgakusumā, Anaṅgamekhalā and Anaṅgamadanā.

28. Brāhmī etc. are worshipped in the filaments, and the Bhairavas in the petals. The mothers are worshipped with long vowels in the beginning and Bhairavas with short vowels in the beginning.

29-33. At the tips of the petals the eight pīṭhas are to be worshipped. They are Kāmarūpa, Malaya, Kollagiri, Cauhāna, Kulāntaka, Jālandhara, Oddyāṇa and Koṭṭapīṭha.

In the bhūgṛha in its ten quarters the following ten shall be worshipped viz. Heruka, Tripurāntaka, Vaitāla, Agnijihva, Kālāntaka, Kapālin, Ekapāda, Bhīmarūpa, Vimala and Hāṭakeśvara.

He shall worship Indra and others in their respective quarters along with their weapons. Outside of it, he shall worship Baṭuka, Yoginī, Kṣetranāyaka and Gaṇeśa. In the interstices of quarters he shall worship Vasus and Sūryas, Śivas and Bhūtas. One who worships Bālā Tripura Sundarī shall be the master of wealth and learning.

---

1. The Pīṭha mantra of Bālā runs thus :
Oṁ hsauḥ Sadāśivāya Pretapadmāsanāya namaḥ.

34-37. If red lotuses are offered in homas, women will be under one's control, kings can be captivated by performing homa with mustard. Goddess of fortune shall stay permanently if homas are performed with the flowers of nandāvarta, rāja-vṛkṣa, kunda, pāṭala, campaka and bilva fruits. The adept in mantras conquers premature death by performing homa with guḍūcī dipped in milk. By performing homas with dūrvā grass in the aforesaid manner one becomes free from ailments and attains longevity. If the homa is performed with cardamom, agallochum or devadāru the devotee attains perfect knowledge and poetic talents. Fluency of speech is attained by palāśa flowers and rice is attained by the homa performed with cooked rice. By performing homa with food grains soaked in cow's milk or curds one shall conquer ailments.

38-40. Red sandal, camphor, cucurma reclinata, agallchum, rocanā pigment, sandal, saffron and Indian spikenard are taken in parts in the ratio of one, nine, four, eight, seven and four in order. He shall take them to the cremation ground on a night in the dark half of the month and paste them with snow water and big cardemom. In the meantime he shall charge it with the mantra. He shall then apply the paste as a mark on the forehead. By his very vision he will be able to control people and even elephants, lions and other animals as well as Rākṣaṣas and Śākinīs.

41-44. For the fulfilment of ambitions the curse of the goddess should be removed. After performing the utkīlana (opening of the bar) rite he shall repeat the mantra.

In the first bīja he shall add varāha (ha) bhṛgu (sa) and pāvaka (ra). In the middle one should add nabha (ha), haṁsa (sa) and at the end add pāvaka (ra) and in the third bīja add in the beginning kha (ha) and at the end dhūmaketana (ra). The mantra thus repeated one hundred times becomes free from the curse and bears fruits [1]

Or in the first and in the last bījas ra is not included.[2]

1. These verses give direction how the Bālā mantra becomes free of curse : hsraim hsklrīm hsrauḥ.

2. It gives an alternative to remove the curse without adding ra in the first and the third. Thus the mantra becomes hsaim, hsklrīm hsauḥ.

45-46. There is another method of dispelling the curse as prescribed by scholars. The first (aim), aim, sauḥ, klīm, klīm aim, sauḥ, and klīm. This is the nine-syllabled mantra. If this mantra is repeated a hundred times it shall make the curse of Bālā recede.

47-48. The two mantras viz cetanya and āhlādinī[1] when repeated are conducive to dispel the bar. The three vowels are the cetanī mantra viz. ādhāra (aim), śānti (ī) and anugraha (au) and when Kāma (klīm) remains between tāra (om) in the beginning and hṛdaya (namaḥ) at the end, the mantra is named āhlādinī.

Before the repetition of the mantra one should make the three bījas illumine with the help of following mantra.[2] After brightening the three bījas one should repeat them for the purpose achieving the desired object.

49-52. Vada Vada, ambu (va) along with long vowel (i.e. vā) and smṛti (ga) are lying on ananta (ā) and bāla (va) (i.e. vāgvā), then satya (da) with netra (i) (that is di) and na is like that, (that is ni) are the dīpanī of the first syllable of the nine-syllabled mantra.

Klinne Kledini, then vaikuṇṭha (ma), long kha (hā), antima the last syllable (i.e. kṣa) joined with sadya (o) (that is kṣo), then nidrā (bha) with candra (.) followed by Kuru at the end. This eleven-syllabled mantra is the dīpanī of the middle bīja. Om mokṣaṁ kuru are the dīpanī of the five-syllabled mantra. Without dīpanī Bālā though worshipped does not become effective.

53. For bringing about loss of peace among the enemies the mantra should be repeated in the order as follows : vāg aim, the last vīja, and klīm. For the captivation of the three worlds one should repeat in the order as kāma, vāg and the last bīja and for liberation kāma, the last bīja and bīja vāṇi should be repeated continuously.

1. (a) Cetanī mantra : aim i au (b) āhlādinī mantra : om klīm namaḥ.

2. Dīpani mantra runs as follows. They are three, one for vāgbhava, the second for kāma and the third for Mokṣadā.

(i) Vada vada vāgvādini aim, (ii) klinne kledini mahākṣobhaṁ kuru, (iii) om mokṣaṁ kuru.

54. At the beginning of the ritual of Bālā one should worship three types of Gurus[1] viz. belonging to the divine order, those belonging to Siddha order and those belonging to human beings.

55-57. In the divya line there are seven gurus viz Paraprakāśānandanātha, Parameśānanda, Paraśivānanda, Kāmeśvarānanda, Mokṣānanda, Kāmānanda and Amṛtānanda.

O sage, the five siddhaughas are the following : Īśāna, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva and Sadyojāta.

The Mānavaughas are known by the tradition of one's own preceptor.

58. In the diagram named Navayoni the excellent devotee should write the bījas three times round the central tringle clock-wise.

59-60. In the eight petals of the lotus he shall write the syllables of Gāyatrī, three in each. He should encircle them with the letters of the alphabet outside and then draw two bhūpuras (squares) intersecting each other having the corners shining with the bīja of kāma (klīm). The yantra (amulet) called traīpura has been recounted. It should be made effective by means of repetition of mantras and be drawn by means of the ghee left after the homas. When the yantra is worn in the arm, it yields wealth, fame, happiness and sons.

61-63.[2] Klim, tripuradevi vidmahe (we know goddess Tripura) kā followed by visam and bhagi (me), khaḍgīśa and

---

1. In Āgamas three kinds of Gurus are mentioned. The divine beings come under the first categories known as Divyaughas. The second kinds are known as Siddhaughas and the third are Mānavaughas. The third kinds are powerful yogis but they are human beings. These verses give ten names of the Divya line. Their names must end with ānanda.

(a) The following are the seven names belonging to divya line :

(i) Paraprakāśānanda, (ii) Parameśānanda, (iii) Paraśivānanda (iv) Kāmeśvarānanda, (v) Mokṣānanda (vi) Kāmānanda, (vii) Amṛtānanda.

(b) The following belong to Siddha line :

(i) Īśāna, (ii) Tatpuruṣa, (iii) Vāmadeva, (iv) Aghora, (v) Sadyojāta.

(c) The mānava gurus are those from whom a particular disciple has taken his initiation. They are the teacher, the grand teacher, the great grand teacher and the great grand grand teacher.

2. Klīṁ Tripuradevi vidmahe Kāmeśvari dhīmahi tannaḥ Klinne pracodayāt.

baka (śva) sanetrāgni (ri) then dhīmahi (we meditate), then followed by tannaḥ Klinne pracodayāt. This is called Tripurā Gāyatrī which bestows all achievements and is resorted to even by the gods.

The worship of Annapūrṇā

63. Henceforth, another incarnation of Lakṣmī is being recounted which is the bestower of siddhi unto people.

64-65. Vedādi (om), girijā (hrīm), padmā (śrīm), manmatha (klīm) hṛdaya (namaḥ) followed by bhagavatī Māheśvarī, Annapūrṇā in the dative which ends with svāhā. This vidyā is one of twenty syllables.[1] The sage is Dakṣiṇa, the metre is Dhṛti, Annapūrṇeśī is the deity.

66-67. The six aṅgas should be conceived by means of hṛllekhā bīja (hrīm) possessed of six long vowels. He shall fix the nine words in the nine limbs viz. mouth, nose, two eyes, two ears, two shoulders and the anus. The number of the syllables in each is being told viz one, one, one, one, two, four, four, four and two. They should be fixed with syllables of letters. Thereafter, he shall meditate on the goddess of gods.

68-72a. He shall meditate on the three-eyed goddess whose limbs have the lustre of gold, who appears splendid in her garments and ornaments who is accompanied by Bhū and Ramā the goddess of earth and the goddess of beauty and glory and in whose lotus-like hand there is a gold vessel.

The mantra is to be repeated a hundred thousand times and the homas are to be performed ten thousand times with milk pudding soaked in ghee.

It is prescribed that the worship of the deity is done in the altar along with the nine śaktis viz jayā etc.

(The yantra) has the triangle, with four petals, eight petals and sixteen petals of the lotus and a bhūpura (the square) in which the mantra should be offered with māyā (hrīm). He shall worship Śiva, Varāha and Mādhava in the three corners beginning with the south-east with their respective mantras.

1. It gives the mantra of Annapūrṇā thus : Om hrīṁ śrīṁ klīṁ namaḥ bhagavatyai, Māheśvaryai Annapurṇāyai svāhā.

72b-74. Om, gagana (ha) with manu and candra (aum) then hṛdayam (namaḥ) followed by Śiva and Marut (ya, i.e. Śivāya). This is the seven-syllabled mantra of Śiva.[1] He should utter the mantras of Varāha and Nārāyaṇa in the beginning.

Thereafter, he shall worship the six aṅgas. He should worship Dharā in the left and Ramā in the right with their respective mantras. O leading sage, those two mantras are being mentioned.

75-78. "Annam mahyannam me dehi annādhipa", after saying these syllables add taye and mama annam then after the letter pra add dāpaya and svāhā. This mantra[2] consists of twenty-two syllables. O brahmin, for the ritual of Bhūmi it should be encased in bhūmi mantra (glaum) and at the ritual of Śrī it should be encased in Śrī (Śrīm). The seed mantra of bhūmi is smṛti ga la attached with bindu. This is the seed mantra of bhūmi; the seed mantra of Śrī has been mentioned previously.

He shall worship the four śaktis in the four petals with four bījas that have come in the beginning of the mantra. They are Parā, Bhuvaneśvarī, Kamalā and Subhagā. Brāhmī and others are stationed in the eight petals.

79-80. In the sixteen petals he shall worship Smṛti, Mānadā, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Prīti, Rati, Hṛī, Śrī Svāhā, Svāhā, Jyotsnā, Haimavatī Chāyā, Pūrṇimā along with Nityā and Amāvasyā. They are to be worshipped by the remaining syllables of the mantra.

81-82. The guardians of the worlds shall be worshipped in the bhūpura and their weapons in front of them.

Thus, when the mantra becomes perfect by means of japa, the adept in the mantra becomes equal to Kubera in hoarding the riches and he will be respected by the people.

O excellent sage, henceforth, another incarnation of Lakṣmī is being glorified.

83-85. Praṇava(om) śānti (ī), aruṇā (ha) and kriyā (ra) that is ha is adorned with ra, i and bindu (hrīm), then Bagalā-

1. The verse gives the Śivamantra thus : Oṁ haum namaḥ Sivāya.

2. The second mantra of Annapūrṇā is as follows : annam mahyannam me dehyannādhipataye mamānnam pradāpaya svāhā.

mukhī sarva and hrādinī, da is joined with indhikā (u)(i.e. du), then pīta (ṣa) is associated with jarā (ṭa) which is joined with pratiṣṭhā (ā) which again is joined with long na, utter vācam mukhaṁ stambhaya (arrest speech and mouth) then kīlaya and buddhim vināśaya and its own bīja (hrīm) then om and svāhā. This is the mantra of Bagalā.[1]

86-89. Its sage is Nārada, the metre Bṛhatī, the deity is Bagalāmukhī. He shall conceive the aṅgas by means of two, five, five, nine, five and eight letters each. Thereafter he shall meditate on the deity who is clad in yellow garments, who is of golden lustre, who makes others stunned, who has the moon for her crest and who holds in her hands the iron club, the noose, the thunderbolt and the tongue of the enemy. After meditating thus he shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. He shall perform homa ten thousand times with campaka flowers. He shall worship her in the altar of Bālā. With sandal pastes, agglochum, camphor etc. he shall draw the diagram for the ritual.

90-92. He shall worship her in a triangle or a hexagon or in an eight-petalled diagram. The sixteen deities to be worshipped are : Maṅgalā, Stambhinī, Jṛmbhiṇī, Mohinī, Vaśyā, calā, Valākā, Bhūdharā, Kalmāṣā, Dhātrī, Kalanā, Kālakarṣiṇī, Bhramikā, Mandagā, Bhogasthā and Bhavikā.

He should worship in all sides of the Bhūgṛha, beginning with east the following :

93-95. Gaṇeśa, Baṭuka, Yoginī and Kṣetra-pālaka. He shall worship outside Indra and others who are endowed with their respective weapons.

When the mantra is achieved thus, the repeater of it can make even gods arrested. The devotee shall wear yellow garments. He shall have yellow seats. He shall wear yellow flower garlands, apply yellow unguents and worship the goddess with yellow flowers. He shall perform the repetition of the mantra with a rosary of turmeric (pieces). He shall meditate on the goddess as yellow-complexioned. Standing in the water he shall

1. This verse gives the mantra of Bagalāmukhī, which is as follows :
Om hrīṁ sarvaduṣṭānāṁ vācaṁ mukhaṁ stambhaya kīlaya buddhiṁ vināśaya hrīm oṁ svāhā.

repeat the mantra ten thousand times and go on meditating on the goddess.

96. The homa with gingelly seeds soaked in trimadhu and ghee is conducive to the subjugation of people. With salt smeared in three sweet things, he shall certainly attract people.

97. The homa with margosa leaves anointed with oil causes hatred. The homa with palm, salt and turmeric causes the stunning of the enemy.

98. By performing homa at night in the fire at the cremation ground with domestic charcoal, white mustard, buffalo's milk and guggulu (aromatic resin) all the enemies are destroyed.

99. The feathers of vultures and crows, the astringent oil, terminalia Belerica and domestic charcoal are used in performing homa in the funeral pyre to exterminate the enemy.

100. He who performs homa with dūrvā grass, guḍūcī and fried grains along with the three sweet things shall suppress all ailments merely by looking at them.

101. The devotee shall repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times on the top of the mountain, in a great forest, at the confluence of rivers or in Śiva's temple; while doing this he should remain celibate.

102. The milk of a cow of a single colour, mixed with sugar and honey shall be charged with the mantra repeated three hundred times. If this is drunk it dispels all poisonous attacks.

103-105. Two nice sandals should be made of white palāśa wood and then coloured with red lac juice; then he should charge them with this mantra repeated a hundred thousand times. If a man steps unto them he can go a hundred yojanas within a moment.

Mercury, red arsenic and orpiment shall be ground together and pasted with honey. He shall then charge it with the mantra a hundred thousand times. If this is then applied over the body entirely he will be invisible to all men. This is something mysterious unto those who watch.

106-108. In a hexagon draw the bīja of the mantra with the name of the person desired with powdered orpiment and turmeric mixed with the juice of unmatta (dhattūra). The remaining syllables shall be written around it and it should be adorned with bhūgṛha. Then he should charge it with life and cover it up with a piece of yellow cloth. He should then take some clay from the whirling wheel of the potter and make a nice bull with it. The amulet is then put inside it.

109. Smearing the bull with yellow orpiment the devotee shall worship it everyday. He will be then competent to benumb and stun the words and movements of the enemies, in fact, all their activities.

110-112. The devotee shall take a piece of broken pot lying in the cremation ground with his left hand. With a charcoal taken from the funeral pyre he shall draw yantra therein Charging it with the mantra and kept hidden under the ground it will be able to stun the movement of the enemies. With the charcoal he shall write the yantra in the cloth of the dead body and insert it in the mouth of a frog. He shall then cover it up with a yellow thread and worship it with yellow flowers. By means of this, the speech of the enemy will be arrested.

113. The devotee shall write yantra and keep it under the ground where the oath-taking and solemn ordeal of the enemy is to take place. If it is wiped off by the persons of the enemy the whole ordeal will be stunned.

114. The root of Indravāruṇī shall be charged with the mantra seven times and put into water. The ordeal of the oath with water will be suspended.

115. Of what avail is much talk ? The mantra well practised by the sādhaka makes the movements and thoughts etc. of the enemy stunned and checked. There is no doubt about this.

CHAPTER EIGHTYSEVEN

Durgā Mantra Nirūpaṇam

Description of the mantras of Durgā.

Sanatkumāra said :

1. O excellent ones three incarnations of Lakṣmī have been recounted to you. I shall now mention the incarnations of Durgā that are helpful to the world.

2-6. Om Śrīṁ hrīṁ hrīm aim, the word vajra followed by vairocanī, kṣudhitā (ya) sūkṣmā (e) mṛtā (?) khāgni indusaṁyutā (ha is attached with ra and bindu, that is hrīm) or pratiṣṭhā (u) hum, then śivā (hrīm) and phaṭ. The mantra ends with svāhā. It has seventeen syllables. Its sage is Bhairava, the metre is samrāṭ, the deity is Chinnamastā, Ramā is the bija, Svāhā is śakti. Ām Khaḍgāya namaḥ, Im Khaḍgāya is for the head, ūm vajrāya for the tuft, aim unto the noose for the coat of mail, aum aṅkuśāya is for the eye, āḥ vasurakṣāya is for the palm of hand.

In the beginning the two māyās (hrīm, hrīm) and the astrabīja (phaṭ) are to be attached with the mantra beginning with om and ending with svāhā. Thus after the nyāsa rite of the limbs one should meditate on the great mother.

7-8. He shall meditate on the Goddess thus : She has her abode in the sphere of the sun. She has cut off her head, the forelocks of which are dishevelled. The mouth thereupon is wide open. It is drinking the pouring blood. She is seated above Rati and Manmatha who are engaged in sexual intercourse. She is extremely glad on seeing her own friends Dākinī and Varṇinī.

9-11. After meditating thus, he shall repeat the mantra four hundred thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he shall perform homas with flowers or fruits of palāśa or bilva.

After performing the ritual beginning with Ādhāraśakti to Paratattva, the nine śaktis are to be worshipped in quarters and in the middle. They are Jayā, Vijayā, Ajitā, Aparājitā, Nityā, Vilāsinī, Dogdhrī, Aghorā and Maṅgalā.

12-13. The mantra for the pīṭha begins with om followed by sarvabuddhiprade (the bestower of intellect to all), then sarva, bhṛgu (sa) with eye (i) then ddhiprade dākinīye, then tāra (om) followed by vajra and sabhautika khaḍgīśa (vai) and recanīye. After the end of it utter bhaga (e) hyehi (come) then it ends with namaḥ.[1] It consists of thirtyfour syllables.

14. After offering the seat with this he shall worship the goddess in the centre of the triangle and inside the hexagon, the lotus around which there is the square called the bhūpura.

15. He should begin the ritual with the surrounding deities lying outside and go on worshipping in the ascending order. In the exterior of the bhūpura he should worship the thunderbolt etc.

16. Then inside (the bhūpura) he should worship the king of gods (Indra) and the lords of the quarters. Thereafter he shall worship the doorkeepers at the four entrances of the Bhūpura.

17. (The four keepers are) Karāla. Vikarāla, Atikāla and Mahākāla. Eight śaktis are then worshipped in the lotus.

18-21. (They are) Ekaliṅgā, Yoginī, Dākinī, Bhairavī Mahābhairavī, Kendrākṣī, Asitāṅgī and Saṁhāriṇī. The six aṅgamūrtis are worshipped in six corners.

The goddess Chinnamastā is stationed in the centre of the triangle. At both sides of her the two friends Ḍākinī and Varṇinī shall be worshipped with the mantra târa(om) and aim.

When the mantra attains maturity by means of rituals etc, the one competent in mantras shall quickly attain all desires, thanks to her favour, though they may be difficult of access. By performing homa with Śrī flowers he attains good fortune and with its fruits everything desired is attained.

22-24. Through mālatī flowers he attains fluency of speech, through campaka flowers happiness. If one performs hundred homas everyday with the flesh of a goat smeared with ghee, and continues it for a month, all kings will be subservient to him. He who performs a hundred thousand hundred thousand homas with oleander flowers, dispels all kinds of ailments and lives happily for a hundred years. If he performs homa so many times with red flowers he shall captivate even the ministers and kings.

---

1. The Pīṭhamantra of the deity is as follows : Oṁ sarvabuddhiprade sarvasiddhiprade dākinīye oṁ sarva vajra Vairocaniye ehyehi namaḥ.

25. By performing homa with the fruits of udumbara and palāśa trees he attains good fortune. With the flesh of a jackal also he attains the same. With milk pudding and cooked rice he attains poetic talents.

26. He attains good luck through the flowers of bandhūka and the desired things through karṇikāra flowers. By the homa with gingelly seeds and raw rice grains he shall captivate all people.

27. He can captivate people by performing homa with the menstrual flow of women; the desire is fulfilled by means of the flesh of a deer. The stunning is achieved through the flesh of a buffalo. The same is attained through lotuses mixed with ghee.

28. For the death of an enemy one shall perform homa in the funeral pyre with the feathers of the cuckoo, or in the fire kindled with the twigs of dhattūra or the homa is performed with the feathers of a crow.

29. By meditating on the goddess and repeating the mantra, the repeater attains victory in the game of dice, in the forest, at the palace door, in the battle and during the emergency brought about by the enemies.

30. For enjoyment and liberation one shall meditate on the white-complexioned deity for the rite of exorcising; one shall meditate on one of blue lustre for the rite of fascination, one should meditate on her to be red-complexioned for causing death, one should meditate on her to be smoke-coloured and for stunning, one should meditate on her to be gold-complexioned.

31. For the achievement of siddhis one should offer her at night spirituous liquor, etc. The application is to be kept secret, yet it is being mentioned. It yields all siddhis.

32-35. On the fourteenth day of the dark fortnight, during the pitch dark midnight, the devotee shall take bath and wear red garments, garlands and unguents. He must bring a woman of youthful charms to represent the deity Chinnamastā and worship her. She must be beautiful and capable of having intercourse with five men, be of smiling look and have her hair dishevelled. She should be made satisfied by offering her ornaments. She must be made naked and worshipped and then he must repeat the mantra ten thousand times. After giving her offering and spending the night she should be sent away fully contented with gifts of wealth. He shall then feed the brahmins with different kinds of food.

36. In this manner, he shall attain good fortune, sons, grandsons, wealth, fame, good wife, longevity, happiness, virtue and desired things.

37. He should observe ritualistic vow at that night if the repeater of the mantra is desirous of learning. In regard to other desires he should remain in union with her while repeating the mantra.

38. Getting up early in the morning and seated on the bed, the devotee should repeat the mantra a hundred times. Within six months the repeater of the mantra can conquer other poets in the art of poetry.

39-40. This mantra has been barred by Śiva. Hence, the bar should be removed, the method of which is being recounted. The one versed in mantra should repeat hrīm in the beginning and tāra (om) at the end of the mantra. Then it will be the bestower of siddhis. The Chinnamastā is said to be a quick bestower of desired objects in the Kali age.

41-43. Tripurā Bhairavi. O excellent sage, I shall recount another incarnation of the goddess.

Jñānāmṛtā (ai), aruṇā (ha), śvetā (sa) accompanied by Krodhinī (ra) and bindu (.) (that is hsraim); śānti (ka) is also associated with the same and nīca (la) (that is hsklrīm) and sarga (sa) with aum (that is hsraum). Vāgbhava (aim), kāmarāja (klīm) and śakti (saum)—with these three seeds Tripurā Bhairavī is of five kūṭas. Its sage is Dakṣiṇāmūrti, Paṅkti is its metre.

44-45. Goddess Tripurā Bhairavī is mentioned as the deity by the teachers. After fixing aim from the navel to the foot, the knower of the mantras should fix klim from the heart to the navel. He should then fix hrīm from the head to the region of heart.

46-47. He should fix the first and the second in each of the hands and the third in both the hands. Again the three bījas are duly fixed in the mūlādhāra and the heart. With the three bījas he should perform the nyāsa rite called Navayoni. He should then perform the mūrtinyāsa in the manner as mentioned in the worship of Bālā.

48-51. The devotee should perform the nyāsa rite beginning with the respective seed syllables of each. He should fix Īśāna and Manobhava on the head (i.e. hsrām Īśānāya strīm Manobhavāya namaḥ). The knower of the self should fix Tatpuruṣa and Makaradhvaja in the mouth. In the heart he should fix Aghora and Kumāra Kandarpa, he should fix Vāmadeva and Manmatha in the anus, and he should fix Sadyojāta and Kāmadeva in the pair of feet. Then, he should perform the placement of the syllables in the faces lying above, in the east, in the south, in the north and in the west.

Bhṛgu (sa) should be lying in Vyoma (ha) and agni (ra) and then the five short vowels beginning with sadya (o) (i.e. o, e, u, i, and a). The bīja of them are to be placed between them (that is hsroḥ hasakala hrāṁ hrīṁ hsrauṁ namaḥ, hsreḥ hasakala hrāṁ hrīṁ hsrauṁ śirase svāhā etc.).

52-54. The nyāsa rite of the limbs is prescribed with the six long vowels preceded by the former bīja. Then he should fix the five arrows named Trailokya-mohana etc. beginning with 'drām Drāviṇyai namaḥ' in the head, 'drīm kṣobhiṇyai namaḥ' in the feet, 'klīm vaśīkaraṇyai namaḥ' in the mouth, 'blūm ākarṣiṇyai namaḥ' in the anus, 'saḥ sammohanyai namaḥ' in the heart again. This is stated as the fixation of arrows.

55-59. With the five bījas beginning with tāra etc. he should fix the deities Subhagā etc on the forehead, between the eyebrows, in the mouth, in the palate, in the throat, in the heart, in the navel and at the root of the penis. The person versed in the use of mantras should fix them according to the method. The deities to be fixed are : Subhagā, Bhagā, Bhagasarpiṇī, then Bhagamālinī, Anaṅgā, Anaṅgakusumā, Anaṅgamekhalā and Anaṅgamadanā. All of them are intoxicated for which they are slow-moving. The chief deities are decorated with multicoloured dresses and ornaments. They hold in their hands the rosary, the book and the gesture of fearlessness, and granting of the boon. Aim, Klīm, Blūm, Strīm and sa with tāra (i.e. saḥ) are the five (bījas).

O sage, thereafter the excellent devotee should perform nyāsa called Bhūṣaṇa (ornament) in the said direction.

60-61. Thus the nyāsa rite being performed in the body, he should meditate on Tripurabhairavī thus : She resembles the thousand-rayed sun. She is clad in pink silken garments. A garland of skulls is worn by her. Her breasts are smeared with blood. In her hands she holds the rosary, the vidyā mudrā, fearlessness and boon. She has three eyes in her face.

62-65. After receiving initiation one should repeat the mantra two million five hundred thousand times keeping his senses in control. He should perform homas with the flowers of brahmavṛkṣa or oleander flowers soaked in trimadhu. The yantra consists of a lotus with eight petals, nine triangles and eight pericarps.

He shall worship the pīṭha of Bhairavī along with the śaktis viz. Icchā, Jñāna, Kriyā, Kāminī, Kāmadāyinī, Rati, Ratipriyā, Nandā and the ninth Manonmanī. The nine śaktis holding the gestures of granting boon and fearlessness are hereby mentioned.

66-69. Aim, followed by lohita (pa) and rāyai, then śrikaṇṭha (a) lohita (pa) anala (ra) with long vowel (that is aparā followed by yai, then hsauḥ, then sadāśivamahāpreta, followed by padmāsana in the dative case, then namaḥ.[1]

With this mantra he should offer seat unto the Gurus in their order. In between the eastern and the central triangle they are to be worshipped.

Then he should conceive the form of the deity by means of five praṇavas and worship the deity duly invoking her therein. He should worship with great concentration and in accordance with the procedure given by the Āgamas. (The mantra is as follows) : Tāra (om), Vāk (aim), Śakti (hrīm), Kamalā (Śrīm), hskhphrem hsauḥ.

---

1. The āsana mantra of Bhairavī is : Aim parāyai aparāyai hsauḥ sadāśiva mahāpretapadmāsanāyai namaḥ.

70. In the corner to the left of the goddess he should worship Rati having the lustre of the moon, who holds the goad and the noose, who is gentle and who is perturbed due to the intoxicated grace and charm.

71. He should worship prīti as stationed in the right corner. She is refulgent as the molten gold and she holds in both of her hands a goad and the posture of salutation.

72. In front of her (he should worship) Manobhavā who is red-complexioned, bedecked in red flowers etc., who holds a sugarcane bow and the arrows of flowers and whose face is beaming with smile.

73. Thereafter, the knower of the procedure should worship the aṅgas as before. In front and in the quarters he should worship the deities of the arrows with their respective mantras.

74. In eight triangles, he should worship Subhagā and others, the eight śaktis who hold in their hands flower arrows and salutation and who have the lustre of the elements.

75. The mothers who are seated on the lap of the Bhairavas and who are perturbed and excited due to grace and charm, are to be worshipped in the eight petals in the proper manner with flowers etc.

76-77. Thereafter, he should worship the guardians of the worlds in the quarters and their weapons outside of it.

By dint of the merits of the previous births, one comes to know the great deity. He who worships her in the manner as mentioned before attains a lot of riches. The knower of the mantra after it has become mature, can do with it whatever he desires.

78. He should perform a hundred thousand or fifty thousand homas with lotuses having no defect in them and soaked in sweet juice. Every day he should feed brahmins.

79. He should propitiate youthful and beautiful women considering them to be deity. At the end of homa he should satisfy his teacher with money and food grains.

80-81. When this has been performed he will have the universe under his control. He will be the abode of the goddess of riches.

By performing homa with red lotuses soaked in trimadhu, or red flowers of oleander or with cooked rice along with milk and ghee one will be able to control the whole universe. The one versed in mantras attains fluency of speech by performing homa with palāśa flowers.

82. The intelligent one should perform homa with aromatic gum resin mixed with camphor and agellechum. He would thereby attain divine knowledge and by means of that become a poet.

83. The homa by means of pieces of twigs of the amṛta plant, soaked in milk conquers all sorts of premature death. For longevity, one should perform homa with dūrvā grass for three days. It should be soaked in milk.

84. By performing homa with the flowers clitoria termatea he can captivate and control kings and with Karṇikāra flowers he can control their womenfolk.

85. By performing homa with jasmine flowers one can control princes, with Koraṇṭa flowers one can control Vaiśyas, and Śūdras by means of Pāṭala flowers.

86-87. The one versed in the mantra should utter it from the beginning to the end and then from the end to the beginning placing the name of the person intended in between them and then should perform homa with mustard seeds mixed with honey. Thereby, he can captivate kings soon. By the same procedure he can captivate their wives and their sons as well.

88. By performing homa with the flowers of jāti and bilva, mixed with the three sweet things one will be able to control men, women and kings respectively.

89. The one versed in mantras should perform homa with the flowers of mālatī and bakula dipped in sandal paste. Within a year he attains poetic talents.

90. If one performs homa with the bilva fruit mixed with three sweets one can fascinate the whole world and attain desired glory and fortune.

91-92. If one performs homa with cooked rice and ghee he will have flourishing food and food grains. The devotee with self control should perform homa with camphor along with musk and saffron. He will attain beauty that surpasses that of kandarpa. The repeater of the mantra should perform homa with fried grains soaked in curds, milk and honey. He can thereby conquer all ailments and live for hundred years.

93-94. Two quarters of sandal, one quarter of saffron and one quarter of gorocanā (pigment taken from the cow) — these three articles should be ground into paste with dew. He should then apply a mark on the forehead with it. The person whom he touches or sees or the person who touches and sees him, shall become subservient to him ere long.

95-99. Take equal portions of camphor and kapicora (dolioos pruriens). So also the quarter of caturbhuja and jaṭāmāṁsī and rocanā and saffron. Take a fourth part of agallochum. Mix all these and get everything ground into paste with dew by a virgin. If the devotee applies this as a mark on the forehead he can control men, kings, proud and arrogant women, mad elephants in utter intoxicated excitement, lions, tigers, great serpents, goblins, vampires and demons by merely looking at them.

100-104. Thus the vidyā of Bhairavī has been recounted. Listen to another incarnation.

Worship of Mātaṅgi

Aim, hrīm, śrīm oṁ namaḥ followed by Bhagavati Mātaṅgeśvarī, they say sarvajanamanohari sarvasukharāji, sarvasukharañjini, sarvarājavaśaṁkari sarvastrīvaśa followed by sṛṣṭi (ka) and krodhinī (ra) is joined with vidyā (i) (that is ri) then followed again by sarvaduṣṭamṛgavaśaṁkari, then sarvasattvavaśaṁkari, then sarvalokam amukam (the person intended) ānaya svāhā. This mantra[1] consists of eighty-eight letters. Its sage etc. is the same as in the case of Bhairavī.

---

1. These verses give the mantra of Mātaṅgī : aiṁ hrīṁ śrīm oṁ namaḥ bhagavati Śrī Mātaṅgeśvari Sarvajanamanohari sarvasukharāji sarvasukharañjani sarvarājavaśaṁkari sarvastrīpuruṣavaśaṁkari sarvaduṣṭamṛgavaśamkari sarvasattvavaśaṁkari sarvalokoṁ me vaśamānaya svāhā.

105-108. The person versed in the mantra should perform nyāsas on the body as mentioned below in due order viz on the head, on the forehead, between the eyebrows, in the palate, in the throat, in the neck, in the chest, in the heart, in the pair of arms, in the belly, in the navel, above the genital, in the private part, in the right foot, in the left foot, below the genital and in the anus. He shall fix in these eighteen places in their sequence. The syllables are grouped into three, one, two, four, six, eight, six, seven, eight, ten, ten, eight, four, three, one, two, three, two. This arrangement of words is thus stated.

109. The clever devotee shall fix the letters of the mantra in proper sequence in mūlādhāra, in the heart and in the space between the eyebrows beginning with aim, hrīm, śrīm followed by Rati and ending with Mātaṅgī.

110-111. The person versed in mantras should fix Hṛllekhā, Gaganā, Raktā, Karālikā and Mahocchuṣmā on the head, in the mouth, in the heart, in the private parts and in the feet placing the first letters of their respective names as bījas in the beginning and ending with Mātaṅgī.

112-113. With twentyfour letters the nyāsa is prescribed for hṛt (namaḥ). Svāhā in the head with thirteen, in the tuft of hair uttering vaṣaṭ with eighteen, and with the same number of letters hum is uttered for the coat of mail, with thirteen vaṣaṭ for the eye, and two letters (of the mantra) are prescribed for astra (phaṭ) on the palm. Then he should perform the bāṇanyāsa in the manner as prescribed for Bhairavī.

114-116. He should fix Manmatha etc. ending with Mātaṅgī in the mouth and two shoulders at the sides of hips, in the navel region and against the sides of hips and shoulders with three bījas preceding them. Then the person using the mantra should fix Manmatha, Makaradhvaja, Madana, Puṣpadhanvā, the fifth one Kusumāyudha and the sixth named Kandarpa, then Manobhava, Ratipriya. Thereafter, the knower of the mantra should fix the following deities in the limbs with the mantra ending with Mātaṅgī.

117-118. They are : Anaṅgā Kusumā, Anaṅgamekhalā, Anaṅgamadanā, Anaṅgamadanāturā, Anaṅgamadanavegā, Anaṅgasambhavā, Anaṅgabhuvanapālā, Anaṅgarekhikā. They are to be worshipped ending with Mātaṅgī. They are to be fixed on the limbs of Mūlādhāra, Svādhiṣṭhānā (at the root of the genital), Maṇipūraka (in the navel), in the heart, in the throat, in the mouth, between the eyebrows and on the head by the person versed in the use of mantra.

119-127. The former two are Lakṣmī and Sarasvatī, then follow Rati, Prīti, Kṛttikā, Śānti, Puṣṭi, and Puṣṭi crowned with the word Mātaṅgī. The person versed in the mantra should fix the mūlamantra separately on the head.

He should fix the mantra in mūlādhāra, above the genital, in the navel, in the heart, in the throat, between the eyebrows, in the bindu, in the region of Kalā (ardhacandra), in nirodhikā, in nāda, in nādānta, in unmanī, in Viṣṇuvaktra, and in the disk of Dhruva.

Thereafter, he shall fix ending with Mātaṅgī the following, Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā as well as Raudrī, Praśāntā, Śraddhā, Maheśvarī, Krīyāśakti, Sulakṣmī, Sṛṣṭi, Mohinī, Pramathā, Śvāsinī, Viddyullatā, Cicchakti, Sundaranandā, Nandabuddhi in their sequence. The excellent teacher should duly fix Mātaṅgī preceded by three bījas and Mahā and similarly Mātaṅgī preceded by Mahālakṣmī, and the same preceded by Siddha Lakṣmī and the mūla mantra in the sphere of ādhāra. Then he should perform the pervasive nyāsa with that (that is the mūla mantra).

128-131. He who thus performed the nyāsa rite in the limbs should meditate on the deity of the mantra. She is dark-complexioned, who listens to the words of the parrot, whose one foot rests on the lotus, who bears the crescent moon, who plays on the lute, who is perturbed due to wine, who is clad in red silken garments, whose hair appears splendid thanks to the Kalhāra garland, for her hair crown. Her forehead shines on account of the mark on the forehead.

He should repeat the mantra ten thousand times. To the extent of one tenth of it he should perform homa with madhūka flowers mixed with three sweet things for the maturity of the mantra. He should draw a diagram of the mystic lotus with eight petals and a triangle for its pericarp.

132. Then outside of it there should be eight-petalled lotus, a circle surrounded by sixteen petals, then further outside these should be square and rendered graceful and pleasing to the eyes.

133. In this altar he should worship in sequence the nine śaktis beginning with vibhūti as mentioned before and Mātaṅgī in the end.

134. The mantra runs thus : in the end (say) Śakti Kamalāsanāya namaḥ preceded by vāk aim hrīm śrīm. This is the mantra for the worship of the pīṭha.

135. Conceiving the form of the deity by means of mūlamantra the one versed in the use of mantra should invoke the deity therein and worship her in the manner mentioned below.

136. The intelligent devotee should worship Rati and others as before in the three corners. The five beginning with Hṛllekhā are worshipped in the centre and at four quarters by the person versed in the mantra.

137. They hold noose, goad, fearlessness and boons and are of the complexion of elements. Then the one who is versed in the procedure should worship the sages as before.

138-139. He should worship the four arrows in the quarters and the fifth in the front. Thereafter, Anaṅga Kusumā and others are to be in the middle of the petals. They hold the noose, the goad, fearlessness and the desired boon. They have pink-complexioned body. At the tips of the leaves are to be worshipped Lakṣmī and others with lutes in their hands.

140. Outside, in the eight petals Manmatha and others are to be worshipped. They are haughty. At the hind they are equipped with quivers, flowery arrows and the bow made of sugar canes.

141. The mothers Brāhmī etc. having the characteristics mentioned before, are worshipped in the leaves. Then further on the tips, the scholarly devotee, should worship the Bhairvas named Asitāṅga and others.

142. Again, in the sixteen petals are to be worshipped the sixteen Śaktis named vāmā and others, who are dark-complexioned and who are engaged insinging in the accompaniment of lutes.

143. In the four squares on their four quarters, he should worship the four deities placing Mātaṅgī in the beginning. They are haughty and mad and in their hands shine lutes.

144. He should worship vighneśa in the south-east corner, Durgā in south-west corner, the Baṭukas in the north-west and Kṣetrapa afterwards in the north-east.

145. The guardians of the worlds are to be worshipped outside along with their thunderbolt and other weapons. When this mantra is mature the one versed in the mantra can achieve desired objects.

146-147. By performing homas with mallikā, jāti and punnāga flowers one becomes the abode of good fortune. If the fruits or leaves of bilva tree are offered in homa the prince shall regain kingdom once lost. One attains glory through lotuses, through lilies one can fascinate the whole universe and through acids mixed with honey one attains pretty women.

148. The homa performed with the twigs of vañjula causes rain ere long. By performing homa with pieces of amṛta plant smeared with milk one dispels fever.

149. One attains longevity by means of dūrvā grass, through rice grains one becomes rich, through kadamba flowers one attains the power to fascinate. They are to be soaked in three sweet things.

150. The homa performed with the flowers of nandyāvarta is the bestower of fluency of speech. For the purpose of flourishing glory desired by the person, one should perform homa with the flowers of margosa.

151-152. By performing homa with palāśa flowers a man becomes refulgent and brilliant. Sandal paste, agallochaum, musk, camphor, saffron and the pigment from the cow when offered in homa or applied as the mark in the forehead are conducive to the ability of fascinating others and gaining friendship and affection. Through homa with the root of nirguṇḍi a man becomes liberated from fetters.

153. The homa with salt accompanied by the oil of margosa is destructive of enemies. Through salt mixed with powdered turmeric one shall be able to stun the entire universe.

154. O excellent brahmin, this siddhavidyā of Mātaṅgī has been mentioned to you. Listen, I shall recount to you another incarnation.

155. Worship of Dhūmāvati :

Prīti (dh) is adorned with dīpikā (ū) and Candra (.) ; i repeated twice dhūm dhūm, then, again the syllables dhūmā is added with vatī and svāhā, the mantra[1] will be of Dhūmāvatī containing eight letters.

156. Its sage is Pippalāda, Nivṛt is the metre and the deity is Dhūmāvatī. The aṅgas should be conceived with the bīja adding with it six long vowels.

157-160. Thereafter, he should meditate on Dhūmāvatī. She is the cause of misery to the enemy. She is pale, restless, evil-minded, tall and shabbily dressed. Her tresses are loose. She is subtle and a widow. She has only a few teeth. She is seated in a chariot the flag of which is marked with the emblem of a heron. Her breast hang loose and suspended. She has a winnowing basket in her hands. Her eyes are stern. In her other hand, she offers boon. Her hair are grown enormously. Her eyes are crooked partly and partly straight. She is ever distressed with hunger and thirst. She is terrifying and is very fond of quarrels.

161. After meditating on the goddess thus he should utter namaḥ, svāhā and phaṭ and fix the bīja on the sādhya (the person intended) and placing a Śiva over it the devotee should perform japa. Then placing the name of the enemy between the mantra and Śiva one should repeat mantra.

162-163. The scholarly devotee should wear a turban and a coat; when it is dark fortnight day and night he should observe fast. He should sit in an empty temple in a forest or a cremation ground. For the purpose of achieving and realising the effectiveness of the mantra he should observe restraint in speech and continuously meditate on the goddess. If the japa goes beyond a thousand, the enemy is attacked by fever.

164-166. Through five products of the cow or through milk the fever is subdued. He should write the first syllable of the mantra and then the name of the enemy. He shall then write the second syllable of the mantra and then the name of the enemy. He shall then write the whole mantra. If the mantra is then repeated eight thousand times the enemy will die. The devotee shall take a heron and burn it in the funeral pyre. The person knowing the mantra shall then take its bhasma (ashes) and charge it with the mantra hundred and eight times along with the name of the enemy. This exorcises the enemy.

---

1. The mantra of Dhūmāvatī is : dhūṁ dhūṁ Dhūmāvatyai svāhā.

167-169. With the bhasma of the cremation ground he should make a Śiva and repeat the name of the enemy along-with the mantra over it during the fortnight. In this ritual he should offer the incense of milk of she-buffalo. This causes mishap to the enemy.

170. Thus the four incarnations of Durgā, the mother of the universe have been mentioned, in brief. What else do you wish to ask ?

CHAPTER EIGHTY EIGHT

Rādhādimantra -Nirūpaṇam
Mantras of Rādhā and others)

Sūta said :

1-2. O brahmins, after hearing thus of the mode of worship of all incarnations along with their mantra and procedure of meditation, Nārada of divine vision, humbly asked him of the names of incarnations of Śrī Rādhā, the primordial mother of the universe.

Nārada said :

3. O sage, I am blessed and contented thanks to your grace, since I have heard the greatness of the mantras of the mothers of the universe.

4-5. Just as the incarnations of Lakṣmī and others have been glorified, so also, (please recount) the greatness of the incarnations of Rādhā. I wish to hear it. O foremost among the knowers (of greatness) what is their number ? What are their features and powers of the incarnations of Rādhā ? Please recount them truly as all of them are the bestowers of all attainments.

6. On hearing these words of Nārada, Sanat kumāra, the son of Brahmā, meditated on the lotus-like feet of Rādhā and said.

Sanatkumāra said :

7. Listen, O brahmin, I shall mention the secret of secrets, the story of the incarnations of Rādhā. It is the bestower of desired achievements to those who are devoted to her.

8-11. Candrāvalī and Lalitā are the two everlasting beloved friends. Candrāvalī is the chief among the group of eight beginning with Mālāvatī. Lalitā is the mistress of the eight beginning with Kalāvatī. In the worship of Rādhā's feet, Mālāvatī and others are mentioned. Now listen to the names of those of whom Lalitā is the chief. They are Kalāvatī, Madhumatī, Viśākhā, Śyāmalā, Śaivyā, Vṛndā and Śrīdharā. They are possessed of the form similar to hers. There are other friends also mentioned to be thirtytwo among whom Suśīlā is their chief.

12-15. O highly blessed one, listen to them. I shall mention their names. They are : Suśīlā, Śaśilekhā, Yamunā, Mādhavī, Ratī, Kadambamālā, Kuntī, Jāhnavī, Svayamprabhā, Candrānanā, Padmamukhī, Śāvitrī, Sudhāmukhī, Śubhā, Padmā, Pārijātā, Gauriṇī, Sarvamaṅgalā, Kālikā, Kamalā, Durgā, Virajā, Bhāratī, Surā, Gaṅgā, Madhumatī, Sundarī, Candanā, Satī, Aparṇā, Manasā, Ānandā, these are the thirtytwo friends of Rādhikā.

16. Once, gentle lady Lalitā assumed the male form of Kṛṣṇa. She created sixteen Kalās (parts) having the same lustre like her.

17. O excellent sage, I shall describe their mantra, meditation and their mystic diagram and their mode of worship. It is a great secret in all Tantras.

18-21.[1] The following Śaktis are vowels: Vāta (a) marut (ā), agni (i), vahni (ī), dharā (u), Jalam (ū), vibhu (l) svaḥ (l), cara (e), śuci (ai), bhūḥ (o), vanam (au), kham (am).

---

1. These verses give the code of alphabets as followed by Tantrarāja. These modes are quite different from those which we have followed so far.

Prāṇa (ka), tejas (kha), Sthirā (ga), vāḥ (gha), dyuḥ (ṅa), vāyu (ca), prabhā (cha), jyā (ja), kam (jha), abhram (ña), nāda (ṭa), dāvaḥ (ṭha), kuḥ (ḍa), pātha (ḍha), vyoma (ṇa), rayaḥ (ta), śikhi (tha), gotrā (da), toyam (dha), śūnyam (na), javī (pa), dyuti (pha), bhūmi (ba), rasa (bha), nabhaḥ (ma), vyāpta (ya), dāha (ra), rasā (la), ambu (va), viyat (śa), sparśa (ṣa), hṛt (sa), haṁsa (ha) ilā (la), grāsa (kṣa) are of the nature of hal (consonants),

22. Rādhā herself is lying in grāsa (kṣa) and she is of the nature of śakti. the remaining sixteen are her kalās and the thirtytwo are known to be their kalās.

23-25. The entire sphere of Vāk, O lord of sages, is permeated by these śaktis. Śrī Radhā[1] has assumed the form of Ṣoḍaśī (the sixteenth) among those led by Lalitā. She is called the goddess Sundarī by the Tāntrikas. How Kurukullā Vārāhī and both Candrāvalī and Lalitā came into being and the number of mantras also will be recounted by me to you in the proper way.

Hṛt (sa), prāṇa (ka), ilā (la), haṁsa (ha) with dāha (ra), vahni (ī) and sva (.) is cited as Lalitā.[2]

26-27. With the difference of arrangement of haṁsa (ha) she is of three forms, listen to it according to its sequence. The first one is preceded by haṁsa, the intermediate one in which ha is lying in the middle and the third is the basic one. The fourth one is she herself with them (that is three groups of syllables) by the last hrīm. Among the bījas the fourth one is conducive to liberation and the three others are conducive to possession.

From the above account we do not find Visarga, but on the perusal of the text we find that śakti to represent Visarga.

1. In order to colour the text with the Vaiṣṇava tradition Rādhā is stated to be the Supreme Śakti and all things are her emanations. From the aspect of mātṛkā she represents kṣa, the last of the consonants, candrāvali and Lalitā, stand for haṁsa (ha) and ilā (la) respectively. The sixteen vowels are their kalās and consonants are the kalās of those vowels. Hence the entire creation of words is thus permeated with these Śaktis.

2. This gives the vidyā of Lalitā which is as follows : Sakala hrīm.

28-30. Thus the Vidyā of Tripurasundarī has been recounted.

The bīja of Vaśinī[1] is mentioned by dāha (ra), bhūmi (va), rasā (la), kṣmā (ū) and sva (.) (that is vlūm). The great Kāmeśvarī bīja is mentioned by prāṇa (k), rasā (la) joined with śakti (hrīm) (that is klhrīm). The mantra of Mohinī is formed by the combination of śūnya (na), ambu (va), rasā (la), vahni (ī) and sva (.) (nvlīm). The bīja of Vimalā is mentioned by the combination of vyāpta (ya), rasā (la), kṣmā (ū) and sva(.) (that is ylūm). By the combination of jya (ja), nabha (ma), dāha (ra), vahni (ī) and sva (.) the mantra of aruṇa is formed.

31-32. The mantra of Jayinī[2] is cited as the bestower of victory everywhere. The mantra consists of kam (jha), nabha (ma), dāha (ra) vyāpta (ya), kṣmā (ū) and sva (ṁ) (that is jhmryūm).

The mantra of Sarveśvarī is the bestower of victory everywhere.

The mantra of Kaulinī consists of grāsa (kṣa), nabhaḥ (ma), dāha (ra), vahni (ī), sva (.) (that is kṣmrīm).

---

1. These verses give the mantras of Vaśinī, Kāmeśvarī, Modinī, Vimalā, Aruṇā, Jayinī, Sarvasiddhikarī, Kaulinī.

In Nityaṣoḍaśikārṇava we have these deities mentioned along with their bījas. The deities are connected with the letters of alphabets. These groups of eight are the presiding deities of the eight groups of alphabets respectively. Vāmakeśvara Tantra adds that the deities being propitiated properly, a person who worships them can have control over the entire world. See Nityā Soḍhā, p. 90.

2. The text does not give the mantra of Jayinī. It may be restored from Tantrarāja Tantra, Chap IV. p. 68 thus Haṁsaḥ Sahṛdrasāmbuḥ syād vyāpta kṣmā svair yuto manuḥ.

The combination of the mantra is as follows : haṁsaḥ (ha) with hṛt (sa) rasā (la), ambu (va), vyāpta (ya), kṣmā (u) and sva (.) that is hslvyūm.

The commentator of T. R. takes kam as la, then the mantra will read lsryum.

The nyāsa rite makes the devotee one with the deity. His identification with the deity makes him worthy to worship her, for it is stated in the Tantra that after having attained Devthood in oneself one should worship Devī.

The commentator of T. R. does not give the inner meaning of the word Yantrita. He only states that it is to be known from the teacher.

33. The nyāsa rite is to be performed with these eight mantras of śaktis (vaśinī etc.) along with vargas (that is placing a k c ṭ t p y ś) in the beginning and ending with vāgdevatā (vāgdevatāyai namaḥ), by dint of which one should become one with the goddess.

34. He should fix in the cerebral orifice, on the forehead, in the joint of the eyebrow, on the throat, in the heart, in the navel, in mūlādhāra, in two feet from the root upto the end of them.

35-37. He should perform the ṣaḍaṅga rite with the bīja adding with six long vowels.

He should meditate on Lalitā, the red-complexioned one who is holding in her hands the arrows, the bow, the noose and the goad. She is joyous and kept in restraint on the lap of Kāmarāja. The goddess stationed in the middle is only one but she assumes sixteen forms. Hence, one should worship the other fifteen in her limbs. Śiva is the sage, the metre is ukta, Lalitā and others are the deities.

38. Later on, I shall explain in detail the surrounding deities of Nityās and application of mantras in the chapter called Nāmasañcaya (the collection of names).

39. Kāmeśvari

Among the sixteen Nityā deities[1] Kāmeśvarī is mentioned to be the second and is the bestower of all desires. Listen, O Nārada.

40-42. Śuci (e) is joined with sva (.) Lalitā shall be the second. Śūnya, agni, raya and vyāpta (i.e. nityā), prāṇa, rasā, agni, the pair of śūnya, cara, nabho gotrā, (i.e. Klinnamadā) gotrā (da) again is attached with dāha (ra), ambu (va) is joined with cara (e) (i.e. drave), hṛt (sa) is joined with śakti

---

1. The deities called Nityās are sixteen. The central one is described as aṅginityā and the other Nityās are aṅgas, the one is the body and the others are limbs. Lalitā is Kāmeśvarī seated in the lap of Kāmeśvara. Her seat is in the centre of Śrīyantra and her mantra according to our text is sakala hrīm, ha is placed in the beginning, middle and end and by changing its positions other mantras are obtained. The fifteen Nityās are but the emanations and the surrounding deities of the Ādyā Nityā and serve as veils (āvṛti).

(:) and vana (au) (i.e. sauḥ). This Kāmeśvarī Nityā consists of eleven letters. It is the bestower of desires.

43-46. He should conceive the six aṅgas with the mūla-vidyā in the proper sequence. With one, the heart is conceived, the head is also conceived with that much, the advayam the tuft with the third and the fourth, with the fifth and sixth kavaca, with seventh. eighth, ninth and tenth the eye, and with the one viz the last one astra is to be done. He should fix the syllables of vidyā in the pair of eyes, ears and nostrils, in the tongue, in the heart, in the navel, in the anus. Then he should perform the nyāsa[1] spreading it all over the limbs beginning with the head and ending with the forefoot. Then again, he should perform the nyāsa of the syllables of vidyā in these locations. Thereafter, with the entire thing he should perform the vyāpaka rite in the aforesaid manner.

Henceforth, I shall mention meditation which is prescribed for the daily ritual and whereby the deity being highly pleased grants the desired objects without any strain.

47-51. Meditation : She resembles a crore of rising suns, who is shining splendidly with ruby-set crown. She is bedecked in necklaces, garlands, girdles, rings, anklets and other ornaments. She has six arms and three eyes, the digit of the moon has adorned her crest. She is present in a lotus of five[2] petals, eight petals, sixteen petals, two circles, a hexagon and a square. Her gentle smile heightens the beauty of her face, she has slow benign look of mercy. She holds in her hands, noose,[3]

---

1. The nyâsa on the limbs and fingers are performed with the letters of the mantra. The procedure is given in the verse. It should be remembered that each syllable should be attached with the jāti (i.e. namaḥ, svâhā, vaṣaṭ etc).

The vyâpaka nyâsa is prescribed to be performed after all the nyāsas. See Commentary of T. R , p. 126.

2. The diagram is to be drawn in the following method. At first draw a square, inside which draw a hexagon, two circles apart from each other by one digit, then draw a third circle apart from the second by four digits. Then draw five petals round the inmost circle, then draw eight petals round the second, and sixteen petals round the third circle.

3. The weapons are to be conceived as placed in the left upper hand and then in the lower hand and then in the third lower hand. In the same way the three other weapons are conceived to be held by the deity first by the upper hand and then by the second and by the lower, and then the last one by the lowest hand.

goad, sugarcane bow, the flower arrows, a jewelled vessel full of nectar and a boon. Thereafter, the devotee should apply the mantra for practical purposes when the mantra has become mature.

52-73. Bhagamālini

I shall say about the third named Bhagamālinī. The first syllable of Kāmeśvarī is the first (that is aim), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga) rasa (bha) attached v. 'th dharā (u), then sthirā (ga) with cara (e) (that is bhuge), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga) and śūnya (na) joined with agni (ī) (that is gni), then rasa (bha) sthirā (ga) with (o) (that is bhago) gotra (da) with dāha (ra) and agni (i) (that is bhagodari), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga), nabha (ma) joined with marut (ā), rasa (la) attached with cara (e) (i.e. bhagamāle), then rasa (bha) sthirā (ga) joined with marut (ā), ambu (va), haṁsa (ha) attached with cara (e) (i.e. bhagāvahe) then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga) then sthirā (ga) joined with dharā (u) (gu), haṁsa (ha) is attached with vyāpta (ya) and cara (e) (bhagaguhye), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga), vyāpta (ya) attached with bhu (o) śūnyam (na) joined with agni (i) (bhagayoni), rasa (bha), sthirā (ga), śūnya (na) with agni (i) marut (a) with javī (pa), raya (ta) agni (i), śūnya with agni (i) (bhaganipātini), then hṛt (sa), dāha (ra) with ambu (va), (that is sarva), rasa (bha), sthirā (ga) (bhaga), ambu (va), viyat (śa) with bindu (.), prāṇa (ka) dāha (ra) with agni (i) (that is sarvabhagavaśaṁkari), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga), kṣmā (u) is attached with dāha (ra) (i.e. ru), this again is joined with cara (e) and javī (pa) (that is bhagarūpe), then from the former vidyā (that is Kāmeśvarī) the letters from the third onward i.e. the four consecutive letters are to be taken (they are nityaklinne) then rasa (bha) then sthirā (ga) then hṛt (sa) is joined with ambu (va), then dāha (ra) is attached with kṣmā (u) (i. e. rū), javī (pa), is joined with cara (e) that is bhagasvarūpe), hṛt (sa) is joined with dāha, ambu and marut (va, ā and ra) (= sarva), vyoma (nā) is joined with agni (i) (sarvāṇi) then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga) joined with marut (ā) śūnyam (na) with agni (i), then nabha and cara (ma and e), then haṁsa (ha) joined with vyāpta and marut (ya and ā), śūnyam (na) vyāpta (ya), then ambu (va), dāha (ra) with cara (e)(varade). dāha (ra) is similarly so (i.e. re) and raya ta is also like that (i.e. te), then hṛt (sā) with dhara (u)¯(i.e. su) is joined with dāha and raya along with (e) (i.e. rete), rasa (bha) sthirā (ga) then prāṇa (ka) with rasa (la), agni (i) (kli), then the pair of śūnyā (nna) along with cara (e) (i.e. bhagaklinne), then the two letters of the former are the first two that follows, that is, kli then the pair of śūnya (na), (klinna), then gotra (da) with dāha (ra) (dra) then cara (e) with ambu (va) (drave) then prāṇa (ka) along with cara (e) and rasa (la) (kle), gotrā (da) vyāpta (ya) gotra (da) with dāha (ra) and marut (ā) ambu (va) vyāpta (ya) (drāvaya). Vāta (a), nabha (ma) joined with bhu (o), vaḥ (gha) (amogha) then cara (e) (amoghe), rasa (bha) sthirā (ga) ambu (va) with agni (i) and the pair of vāyu (ca and ca) with cara (e) (bhaga vicce), then grasa (kṣa) with dharā (u), rasa (bha) with śakti (:), then again grasa (kṣa) with bhuḥ (o) rasa and vyāpta (bhaya) (that is kṣobhaya), then hṛt (sa) dāha (ra) with ambu (va), hṛt (sa), raya (ta) with ambu (va) and marut (ā) then śūnya (na) without the vowel sound (that is sarvasattvān), then rasā (bha) and sthirā (ga) is joined with cara (e), viyat (śa) is joined with ambu (va), dāha (ra) is joined with agni (i) (ahageśvari). Then śuci (ai) is joined with sva (.) (aim), Bhūmi (ba) is attached with rasa and kṣmā and sva (bhum), this composite seed lies in five places after the other. The five seed mantras are adorned with bindu. They are as follows : jyā (ja) with cara (e) (jem), rasa (bha) (bhem) and bhuḥ (o) is joined with nabha (ma) (mom), haṁsa (ha) with cara (e) (hem), it comes twice (hem), then prāṇa (ka) is joined with rasa (la), agni (i) (kli), then the pair of śūnya (nn) joined with cara (e) (klinne), then hṛt (sa) dāha (ra) ambu (va) with marut (ā) (sarvā) vyoma (na) with agni (i) rasa (bha) sthirā (ga) is joined with marut (ā) then śūnya (na) with agni (i) (sarvāṇi bhagāni), nabha with cara (me) ambu (va) viyat (śa), nabha (ma) joined with marut (ā) śūnya (na) vyāpta (ya) (me vaśamānaya) then hṛt (sa) is associated with raya, dāha, sva and vahni (strīm), then haṁsa (ha) with dāha (ra) ambu (va) rasa (la) cara (e) svam (.) (hrvlem), then the last one is haṁsa (ha) is joined with dāha,

(r) vahni (ī) and sva (.) (hrīm). This nityā called Bhagamālinī is made of one hundred and thirtyfive letters.

74-78. The aṅgas are to be conceived with the first syllable of the mantra. With the first letter the nyāsa on the head (is performed) then with the four the head is cited, with the three the tuft is prescribed, then with three groups of four[1] the remaining limbs are prescribed (i.e. kavaca, netra and astra to be fixed in sequence).

He should then meditate on the goddess who is pink-red in colour. She is a beautiful lady with pink embellishment. She has a smiling face with three eyes and six arms. She is seated on a lotus. She holds in her left hand the kalhāra flower, the noose, the bow of Puṇḍra variety of sugarcane. In her right hands she holds a lotus, the goad and the flower arrow. She is surrounded on all sides with the groups of Śaktis similar in form and who are eulogised by the other deities emanated from the letters. They are of the nature of intoxicating love and rapturous in excitement. Thus, the third deity has been mentioned who is the enchantress of the mind of women.

79-83. O great sage, listen to the fourth vidyā called Nityaklinnā. Haṁsa (ha) is joined with dāha (ra), vahni (ī) and sva (.) (i. e. hrīm) and the eight letters beginning from the three belonging to Kāmeśvarī (i.e. Nityaklinne madadrave), then hṛt (sa), ambu (va) and marut (ā) and haṁsa (ha) is joined with marut (ā) svāhā. It contains eleven letters. The aṅgas are to be conceived with the letters of vidyā. The hṛdaya is to be conceived with the first (bīja) and with two each of the remaining limbs are to be conceived. He shall perform the nyāsa rite beginning with the root of the thumb and ending with the tip of the little finger and then going up. Then fixing the remaining letters in two palms he should fix the syllables in the heart, in the eyes, in the ears, in the two nostrils, in the skin, in the penis, in the anus, and in the feet.

---

1. Guṇavedākṣaraiḥ means the four syllables for kavaca, netra and astra for each. These three are guṇas and veda means four. For performing the nyāsa rite four syllables are taken separately from the mantra and fixed in the above-mentioned locations.

84-86. He should meditate thus : She is red and pink in embellishment. She is clad in pink garments. Her garlands and unguents are pink-coloured. Her lotus-like face wears a charming smile. Her face appears splendid with the three eyes. She shines with pearl-like drops of sweat on her forehead. The crescent moon adorns the crest of her crown. In her four hands she holds the noose, the goad, the drinking vessel and fearlessness. She occupies a lotus as her seat. She is slow and lazy due to intoxication.

87. After meditating thus he should worship Nityā called Nityaklinnā along with her śaktis. O sage, the meritorious fourth deity has been recounted, who is called Nityaklinnā.

88-92. By the repetition of the mantra, women, delicate like fresh butter, melt as butter melts in contact with fire.

Bhuḥ (o) joined with sva (.) (om), then prāṇa (ka) joined with dāha (ra) and with the former letter (that is krom), similarly, rasa (bha) joined with dāha(ra) and the former(om) (bhrom), again prāṇa (ka) joined with dāha (ra) and with vana (o) and sva (.) (krom), then kam (jha) joined with dāha (ra) and with that (i. e. om) (jhrom), then prabhā (cha) joined with dāha (ra) and that (i.e. om) (chrom), then jya (ja) joined with dāha (ra) and with that (om) and the last two letters of Nityaklinnā i.e. svāhā. This nine-syllabled mantra of Bheruṇḍa is the bestower of all attainments. He should fix the six aṅgas with six syllables lying in the middle excluding om and svāhā.

Then he should perform the rite of varṇanyāsa (nyāsa with letters). He should fix in the cerebral orifice, in the middle of the eye-brow, in the mouth, in the throat, in the heart, in the navel, in the cāra, and on the pair of feet. After performing the mātṛkānyāsa he should fix nine syllables. Henceforth, I shall mention meditation of the goddess. It is the bestower of all attainments.

93-95. Meditation

Her body resembles molten gold. She has three eyes. She has a charming smile beautifying her face. She is bedecked in divine ornaments. She is embellished with ear-rings, necklace, shoulderlets and cluster of jewels. She is exceedingly beautiful with ornaments like girdle, anklet, ring etc. She is holding in her hands the noose, the goad, the shield, the sword, the iron club, thunderbolt, bow and arrows. She is seated during the worship but differently at the time of practical application.

96-97. The śaktis have the same form and features who are adorned with shining weapons. They are surrounding her and have smiling faces. The devotee should worship vijaya etc. O leading sage, thus the fifth deity has been recounted. She is called Bheruṇḍā. Merely by remembering her, three kinds of poisons are destroyed instantaneously.

98. O excellent brahmin, the sixth deity is Nityā called vahnivāsinī. Listen to the procedure of her worship. It is the bestower of excellent attainments on the aspirant.

99-100. The first syllable of Bheruṇḍā is the first syllable of her and the second syllable of her is the first syllable of Nitya-klinnā (i.e. oṁ hrīm) then ambu (va), śūnya (na) along with haṁsa (ha) and agni (i) (that is vahni), then ambu (va) joined with marut (ā) then hṛt (sa) joined with marut (i) (si), then śūnya (na) joined with vyāpta (ya) and śuci (ai) (nyai) then again śūnya (na) joined with nabha (ma) with śakti (:) (i.e. namaḥ). Thus the nine-syllabled mantra is mentioned.

101. One should add long vowels with the second bīja of vidyā. After the syllable māyā (hrīm) and the six vowels at its end he should conceive aṅgas into the limbs and the hands.

102-103a. One should fix nine syllables of vidyā in the nine holes of the body. He shall perform nyāsa spreading over the limbs with the entire mantra for the realisation of self.

103b-109a. Meditation : She resembles the molten gold. She is a beautiful lady in the fresh bloom of youth. Her lotus-like face wears a charming smile. Her three eyes shine splendidly. She possesses eight arms. Ornaments set in ruby make her shine well. Her garments are made to appear red due to the combination of rays from the ruby on her crown. She is clad in yellow silk garments. Her anklets and girdle are bejewelled. She looks splendid with the bunches of flowers and ornaments mingling with pearls forming red hue. With her left hand she holds a jewelled lotus, the couch, the bow of Puṇḍra variety of sugarcane and the disc of full moon. In her right hands she holds Kalhāra, a golden horn, the flower arrow and mātuluṅga (pomegranate), on all sides she is surrounded by Śaktis having the same form and features. After meditating thus he should worship vahnivāsinī (of fiery form). By remembering her the three worlds become subservient.

109b-110a. O sage, then there is the seventh deity. She is Mahāvajreśvarī Nityā. I shall mention her vidyā which yields excellent siddhis unto the aspirant.

110b-113. Mahāvajreśvarī Nityā Vidyā

The second syllable of Vahnivāsinī (hrīm), then the fourth (and fifth) syllable of Nityaklinnā (klinne), the first syllable of Bhagamālā (aim), the second syllable of Bheruṇḍa (krom), then the second, third, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth syllables (nitya mada) and the first syllable of her becomes the last (hrīm).

He shall make them into groups of two, one, one, two, two, and two syllables. After making them encased in hrīm, he should conceive the six aṅgas. He should perform the nyāsa with all the syllables separately encased in hrīm each and do it in six limbs with the ten syllables of the mantra one after the other.

114-119. He should fix them in the eyes, ears, nose, speech, heart, navel, and the private parts.

Meditation

She is red-complexioned and clad in red garments. She has red fragrant garlands and ornaments. She has four arms and three eyes. She is highly brilliant with the ruby-set crown. In her hands she holds the noose, goad, sugarcane bow, and arrows made of pomegranate flowers. With her merciful, subduing and cool eyes she glances at the devotee. She is comfortably seated in the cakra diagram with the triangle, a hexagon, lotus and the square. Her lotus-like face is charming with a smile. She is surrounded by Śaktis of similar features like her. She is staying in the middle of a raft. She is surrounded by the Śaktis seated in rafts that swing all round her throne. She is in the middle of a pink sea in which the rafts move to and fro. She is chatting jokingly with those śaktis. Thus one should meditate on the mistress of mantras placed in the red sea. This is said to be the seventh deity. Now listen to the eighth Dūtī.

120-121. Dūtī : The last syllable of vajreśvarī is the first syllable (hrīm), then viyat (sa) joined with agni (i), then ambu (va) joined with marut (ā), gotra (da) joined with kṣmā (u), then raya (ta) joined with vyāpta (ya) and śuci (ai) and the last two syllables of vahnivāsinī (namaḥ). Thus the Dūtī Nityā is mentioned.

122-126. The nyāsa on six limbs is performed with the first syllable of the vidyā after having joined it with six long vowels. Then encasing the mantra within he should do the nyāsa in five limbs beginning with the ear and fix the sixth in the mind. Then he should perform the pervasive nyāsa with the vidyā.

Meditation on the deity

She has the lustre of the midday sun of the summer season. Her crown has all the nine gems set in it. She has three eyes. Her garments are pink-coloured. She has the refulgence of ornaments. She has pure smiles. She has eight arms and is being eulogised by great sages. In her left arms she holds the noose, iron club, mace and the jewelled bowl. In her right arms she holds the goad, sword, dagger and the lotus. She is always engaged in granting boons to her devotees.

127. After meditating thus, one should worship the goddess Dūti, the destroyer of immoral conduct. Thus, the remover of all mishaps has been recounted unto you.

128-131a. O Nārada, I shall tell you about Tvaritā Nityā, the ninth one, who causes glory, the giver of Śivahood and the bestower of all siddhis. She grants fame, learning, wealth, health and happiness.

The first syllable of vahnivāsinī (om) and the first syllable of Dūtī (hrīm), haṁsa (ha), dharā (u) joined with sva (.) (hum), teja (kha) with cara (e) (khe), vāyu (ca), prabhā (cha) joined with cara (e) (cche), grasa (kṣa) is joined with śakti (:) (kṣaḥ) vahni (i) is associated with hṛt (sa), raya (ta) dāha (ra) and agni (ī) (strī) which is the eighth bīja. Then haṁsa (ha) is joined with kṣmā (u) and sva (.) (hum), then grāsa (kṣa) is joined with cara (e) (kṣe) then the second syllable of her again (hrīm), then dyuti (pha) is joined with nāda (ṭa). Thus Tvaritā Nityā consists of twelve syllables.

132b-135. He shall conceive the aṅgas with seven letters of the vidyā beginning with the fourth and then taking two for each he should perform the nyāsa of fingers and six limbs.

By placing the second in the first, then the first in the second and then again the second and the ten mantras in the middle, he should fix the mantras on the head, forehead, throat, heart, navel, mūlādhāra, the pair of thumbs, knees, calves and the pair of feet. The mantra begins with om. Now listen to the mode of meditation which brings about all siddhis.

136-140. Meditation

She is dark-coloured. She has auspicious features. She is splendid in the freshness of youth. Eight serpents in four pairs constitute her shining ornaments such as ear-rings, shoulder-lets, girdle and anklets. They are of four castes of brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras. Their bodies are huge and terrible. She is clad in shoots of leaves as her clothes. Her arms are bedecked in bangles which are adorned with pretty looking peacock feathers. She is resplendent on account of the ruby-set crown. Her crown, her umbrella and her emblem too are adorned with peacock feathers. The string of berries shines over her breasts where saffron is scattered over. She has a charming face of three eyes. Her lotus-like face wears a sweet smile. Her four hands shine holding a noose, a goad, fearlessness and the granting of boon.

141-143a. After meditating on goddess Totalā (Tvaritā) thus, one should worship her surrounded by the Śaktis. Goddess Sphaṭkārī is staying before her shining with arrows and bow and is hurrying in, being pleased and granting boons to the devotee. O lord of sages, thus the ninth vidyā called Tvaritā has been recounted.

143b-145a. Kulasundarī Nityā :

The first is śuci (ai) joined with sva (.), then the second is prāṇa (ka) joined with rasa (la) and Vahni (ī) (Klīm), the third is vana (au) hṛt (sa) and Śakti (:) (sauḥ). Thus the Kulasundarī Nityā consisting of three syllables has been recounted. A mere remembrance of her yields omniscience.

145b-150a. The devotee shall perform nyāsa properly in the fingers, on the limbs and in the mouth with the three bījas, joining them with long vowels. He should do it in the beginning of the ritual, before the japa, in the middle of the japa and after the japa. Then he should perform the Vaktra-nyāsa in due sequence in the upper, the east, the south, the north and the lower faces putting aim in the beginning and nati (namaḥ) at the end, placing the vaktra name in the middle, He shall fix the mantra in the ādhāra, in the cerebral orifice and in the heart first, then secondly in three eyes. Thirdly in the ears and the chin, fourthly in the nostrils and the palate, fifthly in the shoulders and the navel, and lastly in the hands and the pair of feet. He should perform nyāsa nine times at the root, middle and the tip.

150b-156. Meditation

She is red-complexioned. She is served by the group of Śaktis with red features. She has red garments, ornaments, garlands and unguents. She has six lotus-like faces. She shines resplendently in her ruby-set crown studded with costly jewels and gems. Her chest is refulgent with the cluster of lustre of a bunch of jewels. She is auspicious. She is highly blissful in showing grace and is seated in a red lotus seat. She is adorned with twelve arms. In her right hands she holds the literary heritage of all, the coral rosary garland, a lotus, a jewelled water-bowl, a bowl full of jewels, a citron and the gesture of explanation. In her left hand she holds the book, a red lotus, a gold stylus, a jewel garland, a conch and the boon. On all sides she is being eulogised by gods, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Daityas, Sages, Siddhas, Vidyādharas and others.

After meditating thus, he should worship the Nityā for achieving fluency of speech, good fortune and splendour.

157-158. In order to attain the fluency of speech the white-complexioned goddess is to be worshipped; the gold-complexioned one for attaining good fortune, for mitigating the enmity of foes, for their death and restraint; the blue one shall be remembered for causing dumbness. Thus for different purposes different aspects of the goddess are to be remembered.

Thus the tenth Kulasundarī has been recounted to you.

159-161. Now, I shall tell you of the tenth Nityā having three composite mantras. It is the combination of haṁsa (ha), hṛt (sa), prāṇa (ka) dāha (ra), kuḥ (ḍa). It is joined with the vidyā of Kulasundarī according to the tradition. This Nityā consists of three syllables after being joined with the six composite letters then after being joined in the opposite order and multiplied in seventytwo[1] different ways. By worshipping her man shall become a siddha and happy, able to become a Khecara.

162. He will be able to exercise punishment and show grace to the three worlds. The six nyāsas are to be performed by means of ha and sa along with long vowels.

163. He should fix the syllables of vidyā in due order between the eyebrows, in the throat, in the heart, in the navel, in the private parts and in the mūlādhāra. The letters of the vidyā should be fixed in due order joining bindu to each of them.

164. After performing the pervasive nyāsa with the entire mantra in the proper procedure, he should meditate on the goddess Śivā who is identical with everything for the purpose of obtaining all riches.

165-168. She is resplendent as the disc of the rising sun, she shines with ruby-set crown, she is embellished with ruby stones, she is clad in red silken garment, she is brilliant with six lotus-like faces shining with charming smiles. She has three eyes in every face, has twelve arms in the left of which she holds the noose, the rosary, the rope, the bow of Puṇḍara variety of sugarcane, the iron club and the trident. In her right hands she holds the goad, the book, the flower arrow, the lotus, the human skull and the gesture of fearlessness. He should meditate on the goddess with the mind not turning to anything else.

---

1. In Kulasundari Vidyā there are six syllables. By permutation and combination the vidyā becomes seventytwo in number.

169-172. Nīlapatākā

Thus the eleventh deity has been recounted O Nārada, listen to the twelfth one. The first syllable shall be the penultimate one of Tvaritā (hrīm), then dyuti (pha) is joined with dāha (ra), cara (e) and bindu (.) (phrem), then hrt (sa) is attached with dāha (ra), kṣmā (ū) and bindu (.) (srūm), the fifth of vajreśī (om) is the fourth, then marut (ā) with bindu (.) (ām), the middle and the first bīja of the tenth vidyā (i.e. kulasundarī) (klīm, aim), then bhūmi (va), rasa (la), kṣmā (ū) attached with bindu (.) (i.e. blūm), then the letters from the sixth onward belonging to vajreśī (nityamadadrave), then the third belonging to Tvaritā (hum), then dyuti (pha) dāha (ra) cara (e) and bindu (.) (phrem), then the first letter belonging to her (hrīm). Thus the Nityā called Nīlapatākā consisting of seventeen syllables has been recounted.

173-175a. The aṅgas are conceived by means of the syllables of the mantra grouped into two, two, five, two and six syllables in each. He shall fix all the seventeen syllables of the mantra in the ears, in the nostrils, in the vāk (speech), in the throat, in the heart, in the navel, in the ādhāra and in the joints of the feet, in the proper order. He shall duly perform the pervasive nyāsa rite with the entire mantra.

175b-180a. Meditation of the deity

She resembles sapphire and shines with a crown set with brilliant jewels. She has five faces and three eyes. She is clad in red silk garments. She has ten hands and is bedecked in refulgent ornaments of pearls and jewels. Her body is richly decorated with clusters of gems and jewels, her faces beam with charming smiles. In her left hands embellished with all ornaments she holds the noose, the flag, the shield, the śārṅga bow and boon. In her right hands she holds the goad, the śakti (javelin), the sword, the arrow, and the gesture of fearlessness. She is seated on a lotus seat and is surrounded by a group of śaktis resembling the same feature, complexion, dress, facial look, ornaments and weapons in the hands. She should be worshipped as surrounded by the śaktis in the ritual of the Nityā deity.

180b-184. After drawing mystic diagram of a lotus containing eight petals inside a triangle within a hexagon and an eight-petalled lotus, outside surrounded by two bhūpuras. These two puras must have four doorways in the four quarters. The figure must have subways. Thus the deity should be surrounded by the group of śaktis and then worshipped. This twelfth Nityā called Nīlapatākinī has been recounted to you. She is the bestower of powers like pādukā, añjana, khaḍga and victory in the battles. She is the giver of powers over vetāla, yakṣiṇī, ceṭas piśācas etc. She enables one to discover treasure trove, ready cooked food, urged by the devotee's desire.

O Nārada, henceforth, I shall describe the thirteenth Nityā, listen to it.

185-87. Vijayā Nityā

Rasa (bha), nabha (ma), dāha (ra), vyāpta (a), kṣmā (ū) joined with vana (au) and bindu (.) (bhmyaraum). Thus O sage, the vidyā Vijayā consists of a single combined bīja. The four letters of consonants combined with long vowels are to be used for conceiving the aṅgas. Then with the remaining two one should perform the nyāsa rite of the six limbs in the fingers and in the limbs of the body. He should perform nyāsa on all the organs of senses beginning with the ears and ending in the citta. He should fix syllables in the proper order adding bindu to them.

188-192. Meditation on the deity

She has five faces and ten hands. She has three eyes in each of the faces. She is resplendent with a shining crown adorned with the crescent moon. She has all ornaments and is brilliant in her yellow garments. The lustre of her body is like the disc of the rising sun. She has pure smiles. In her left hands she holds the conch, the noose, the iron club, the bow and the kalhāra flower. In her right hands she holds the discus, the goad, the sword, the arrow and the pomegranate. For the practical purpose she is thought of as terrible-looking, but during the devotional worship she is very gentle and seated on a lion. On all sides she is surrounded by Śaktis riding on tigers. She is seated comfortably during the battle, at the time of worship and during other rituals of practical utility she is to be thought of so seated.

193. The śaktis too are comfortably seated in the course of worship. All the deities have similar facial features and weapons in their hands.

194. After drawing two squares with four nice doors and eight pathways he should worship therein as before.

195-196. Inside of it, there must be two circles, within it one should draw an octagon. Inside of it is the mystic lotus of sixteen petals. He should make another lotus of eight petals and invoke the deity therein. He should then worship her with the requisite services. She must be surrounded by the respective Śaktis.

197. This is mentioned to be the thirteenth deity. She is the bestower of victory in argument and in the battle.

Henceforth, I shall mention the Nityā called Sarvamaṅgalā.

198-204. Sarvamaṅgalā

Hṛt (sa), ambu (va), vana (au), are joined with sva (.) is the nityā sarvamaṅgalā (svaum). It is a single-syllabled mantra. One who has achieved siddhi in this vidyā becomes the wanderer in the void instantaneously. He should fix the mūla-vidyā along with long vowels in six limbs of the body.

He should meditate on that Nityā of golden lustre with ornaments set in pearls and rules. She has a ruby-set crown and has two benign looks of her eyes. She has two arms. She is seated in her seat of lotus with thirtytwo petals. The seat has four doorways and two bhūpuras. In her lotus-like right hand she holds a pomegranate. With her left hand she grants riches to her devotees. On all sides, she is surrounded by Śaktis similar to herself. She is accompanied by another group of seventysix Śaktis emanated from the letters. During prayogas (practical application) she is different, but during the daily rituals she is associated with those aforesaid Śaktis. This is mentioned as the fourteenth deity. Now listen to the fifteenth.

205-213. Jvālāmālini

Bhū (o), two śūnyas (na na) then bhū along with nabha (mo) (onnamo), then rasa (bha), sthirā (ga), ambu (va), raya (ta) joined with agni (i) (bhagavati), then jyā (ja) along with ambu (va) marut (ā) (jyā), then rasa (la) with marut (a), then nabha (ma) with marut (ā), then rasa and śūnya (la and na) are joined with agni (i) each, gotra (da) joined with cara (e), then ambu (vā), then the previous letter (i.e. de) and ambu (va) is joined with agni (i) (devi), then hṛt (sa) dāha (r) ambu (ra and va) (sarva), then rasa (bha) and kṣmā (ū) raya (ta) hṛt (sa) joined with sva (.), then haṁsa (ha) is associated with marut (ā) then added to dāha (ra) (i.e. sarvabhūtasamhāra) then prāṇa is joined with marut (ka with ā) (kā), then dāha (ra) with agni (i) (i. e. kari), then prāṇa (ka with raya (e) (ke), then jyā (ja) joined with marut (ā), raya (ṭa), ambu (va) with cara (e) (ve), then gotrā (da) hṛt (sa) with agni (i) (i.e. jaṭa-vedasi, then jyā (ja) with ambu (va) (jva) rasa (la), (i.e. jvala) it should be repeated (i.e jvala jvala), then jvala (pa) joined with dāha (ra) and associated with the former two letters (i.e. prajvala). It should also be uttered twice. Then haṁsa (ha) joined with dāha (ra) and vahni (i) and sva (.) (hrīm), then haṁsa (ha) kṣmā (u) and sva (.) (hum), then dāha (ra) should be uttered seven times, then the words from the eighth to the twelfth letter of the vidyā should be uttered, then the penulti-mate letter of the Nīlapatākā vidyā (hum), the ultimate letters of Tvaritā (phaṭ) and the eighth and the ninth letters of Bheruṇḍā are to be uttered (svāhā).

The Nityā Jvālāmālinī is cited. It consists of sixtythree syllables.

The six aṅgas should be conceived by one, two, four, five, four and ten letters of the mūlamantra from the beginning. He should perform nyāsa in fingers and limbs of the body. Then with the remaining letters of the mantra one should perform the pervasive nyāsa. Then he should meditate on the eternal deity.

214-216. She is as resplendent as the blazing fire. She shines with ruby-set crown. She has six faces and twelve arms. She is bedecked with all ornaments. In the pairs of lotus-like hands she holds the noose and the goad, the sword and the iron club, the bow and the arrows, the mace and the conch, the trident and the fire, the boon and fearlessness. On all sides, she is surrounded by Śaktis of her own stature. Her lotus-like face shines with charming smiles. She has three eyes.

217-218. After drawing two squares equipped with four doors and branches in the middle he shall draw an eight-petalled lotus. Thereafter, he shall make a triangle and a hexagon inside. After making a triangle within a hexagon he shall worship Śiva therein.

The fifteenth deity is thus mentioned to you. O Nārada, listen to the sixteenth one.

219-220. Citrā

Vāyu (ca), prāṇa (ka), vana (au) and sva (.) (cakaum) is citrā which consists of two syllables which when achieved is conducive to the acquisition of wealth, food, grain, the realisation of self and of treasure. He should conceive the six aṅgas with (ca) the first of the vidyā, joining it with long vowels and do the nyāsa in the proper sequence. He should perform the mātṛkā nyāsa along with vidyā in the aforesaid manner.

221-224. Meditation :

She resembles the shining disc of the rising sun and is adorned with nine kinds of precious gems. Her crown is studded with nine precious jewels and is highly resplendent with the silk garments. She has four arms, three eyes, pure smiling and bright face. She is of the form of bliss of every kind, a Nityā who is the bestower of all desires. In her four hands she holds the noose, the goad, the gestures of boon and fearlessness. She is stationed in the pericarp of the lotus, which (the pericarp) is made of nine triangles like that of Sarvamaṅgalā. In the cakra (diagram) she should be worshipped along with the Śaktis like those of Sarvamaṅgalā.

225-229. Prāṇa and dāha attached each with dharā (i.e. kuru), then again the first (ka) joined with (u) and the pair of rasa (la) along with marut (ā) (kullā)[1], then vyāpta (ya) with marut and śakti (yāḥ) then bhuḥ joined with sva (om), then again the three syllables (kuruku) and the pair of rasa (lla) along with cara (e), then haṁsa (ha) joined with dāha (ra), vahni

---

1. Kurukullā Vidyā consists of twentyfive syllables. It has three divisions. The deity is known as the balidevatā (receiver of offerings) belonging to the Nityās and is non-different from them. She is considered as a part or limb of Lalitā.

(ī) and śakti (:) (hrīḥ), then nabha (ma) uttered twice (mama), then hṛt (sa) with dāha (r) joined with ambu (va) (sarva), then jyā (ja) along with śūnya (na) attached with sva (.) followed by ambu (va) viyat (śa) and nabha (ma) attached with marut (ā), then again followed by śūnya (na) and vyāpta (ya), then bhū is attached with haṁsa (ha ha) and the pair of two syllables of the fifth deity (svāhā). It takes three forms of mantra.

From the sixth onward upto the tenth and the pair of the last when uttered is mentioned as of the first kind. The second is cited as when it is uttered from the eleventh and the last two syllables. The third is mentioned as consisted of twentyfive syllables. Thus the mantras are mentioned in their order.

By means of the three bījas of Bālā or with the two or three mantras the six aṅgas are to be conceived.

230-232. He shall meditate as follows : She is naked. Her tresses are dishevelled. She is red-complexioned. She is of the form of bliss. She holds the bow, arrows, noose and goad. The deities outside have the same complexion, features and weapons. They have taken their bath after the menstrual flow.

Their vaginal passages throb. Their eyes are always red and delighted. Thus, at the end of Kurukullā, Candrabālā herself told this.

233-249. Vārāhi :

Śuci with sva (aim), then śūnya and bhu (namo), then rasa, sthirā, ambu, rayā with agni (bhagavati), then ambu with marut (vā), the pair of raya (tta), attached with marut (ā) and agni (i) joined with ilā (la) (vāttālī), these three are repeated once again, then ambu (va) is attached with marut (ā) and dāha with marut (rā) and haṁsa with agni (hi), then these three are repeated once again, then ambu is attached with dāha and marut, then haṁsa (vārāha). Then nabha (ma) is joined with dharā (u) (mu) and teja (kha) joined with agni (i) mukhi), then these five syllables are repeated once again. Then vāta (a) is joined with sva (m), then toya (dha) is joined with cara (e) (andhe), then again the previous letter (am), toya (dha) is joined with agni (i) (dhi), then śūnya (na) is joined with vyāpta and śuci (nyai), then again śūnya (na) is joined with nabha (ma) with śakti (namaḥ). Then dāha, dharā joined with sva (rum), then toya (dha) with cara (e) (dhe), these are to be attached with the former four syllables (i.e. dhinyai namaḥ) then jyā (ja) with bindu (jam) is joined with rasa (bha) and cara (e) (jambhe), then the previous jam is joined with rasa (bha) associated with agni (i) and the aforesaid (nyai namaḥ), then again nabha is joined with bhu (mo) and haṁsa with cara (mohe), then the syllable preceded by he is now joined with haṁsa and agni (i) and the former nyai namaḥ these three are attached, then hṛdayam (sa) joined with sva stam, rasa, and cara (bha), then again the previous one of this stam and rasa with agni (bhi) and then the former three (nyai namaḥ). Then vāta (a), dharā with nabha (mu) prāṇa with sva (kam), then hṛdaya with sva (stam) rasa (bha) and vyāpta (ya) (stambhaya), this is repeated once again. Then hṛt (sa) along with daha (r) and ambu (va) (sarva) followed by gotrā (da) joined with dharā (u) and sparṣa (ṣa) with nāda (ṭa), then it is again joined with javī and dāha (pradusṭa) which is further joined with marut (ā), śūnya (na) marut (ā) sva (ṁ) (nāṁ), then again hṛt (sa) is joined with dāha (ra) ambu (v) and cara (e) (sarve) which is again joined with sparśa (ṣa) and marut and sva (ṣām) then jyā with agni (ji) along with haṁsa ambu and marut (hvā) and hṛdaya with sva (stam) which again is joined with rasa along with sva (bham), then prāṇa and dāha are attached with dharā (kuru), it is repeated, then vahni with viyat (śī) and vāh (gha) along with dāha (ra), joined with sva (ṁ), then ambu (va) attached with viyat, vyāpta and sva (śyam), then the aforesaid kuru, then śuci attached with sva (aiṁ), then sthirā (ga) rasa (la), vana (au) along with sva (.), then two ṭhas (ṭha ṭha) and haṁsa (h) is attached with dharā and sva (hum) then again dyuti with nāda (phaṭ), then hṛt, ambu along with marut (svā) and haṁsa along with marut (hā). This is the vidyā with hundred and ten syllables. She is Vārāhī, Pañcamī, Vārttālī, Viśvavijayā and is also known as Bhadra-Kaumudī. She is the bestower of all desires such as arresting of enemies etc. The aṅgas are to be conceived with the syllables of the mantra in groups of seven, six, ten, seven and seven letters adorned with the jātis namaḥ, svāhā etc.

250-255. The devotee should make a diagram having a triangle, a circle, a hexagon and two circles. He should write his name there and worship her. He should meditate on her as follows: She has the face of a boar; she is refulgent as gold, up to the neck; she has the feminine form. She is like a tawny lotus that blazes. She has three eyes and eight hands. She holds in her hands a discus, conch, goad, noose, iron club, plough, fearlessness, boon. The devotee should think of her as seated comfortably on the shoulder of Garuḍa. O sage, in the case of daily rituals the devotee should remember her Śaktis similar to her. In the application he should think of her as seated on a lion or a tiger, or an elephant or a horse or Garuḍa along with Śaktis. Though she is dark in complexion, she is red, yellow and also has the body like the blue lotus.

256-258. In different practical applications one should meditate on her according to the acquisition of different objects. Pañcamī (i.e. Vārāhī) is to be thought of red complexion in the rites for attraction, yellowish for arresting, in the impassable path she should be meditated upon as dark-complexioned, in order to attain destruction of the enemy in the battle he should think of her as white-complexioned. The excellent brahmin aspirant shall meditate on her as smoke-coloured in the rites for exorcising.

Thus these sixteen Nityā deities have been succinctly recounted to you. They are the bestowers of desired things on those who worship her. They cause instantaneous destruction of all sins.

CHAPTER EIGHTYNINE

Lalitā-Sahasranāma
One Thousand Names of Goddess Lalitā

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Hence, after the meditation of the teacher I shall mention one thousand names of Śaktis along with their attending deities and the religious obligations thereto.

2. The Nāthas[1] (the teachers), enumerated as nine beginning with Prakāśa and ending with Subhagā, O Nārada, know the principles as commencing from the earth and ending with Śiva as tattvas.

3. There are seven holy days beginning with the birth-day of the teacher and ending with the new moon day. At the outset the sincere aspirant must meditate on this in his mind.

4. He shall repeat the hymns eulogising the teacher[2] with his mind concentrated on him. O Lord, obeisance unto you, who are Śiva in the form of the teacher.

5. O holy Sir, you have assumed many bodies for the descent and establishment of knowledge. Obeisance unto you, the fresh one with nine forms, yet you have the form of the singleness of the ultimate truth.

6 Obeisance unto you who act like the sun in dispelling the darkness of ignorance, unto the mass of consciousness. Obeisance unto the free, unto one who has assumed the form out of his mercifulness, unto one of the form of Śiva.

7. Obeisanee unto him who is subservient to the devotees, unto one of blessed form in regard to the blessed ones, obeisancce unto the discriminative knowledge of the discreet, unto the sense of reflection of those who reflect.

8. Obeisance unto the light of all lights, obeisance unto the knowledge of the knowers. I bow to thee in front, at sides, at the back, above and below.

9. Keep thy perpetual seat in the abode of my heart.

After eulogising the teacher devotedly in this manner the devotee shall meditate on the Supreme Goddess.

---

1. The number of Nāthas is nine. The names begin with Prakāśānanda-nātha and end with Subhagānandanātha.

The three classes include Divyaugha, Siddhaugha and Mānavaugha : The first includes Prakāśānanda, Vimarśānanda and Ānandānanda. The second includes Śri Jñānānanda, Śri Satyānanda and Śrī Pūrṇānanda. The third includes Svabhāvānanda, Pratibhānanda and Subhagānanda.

The number of categories according to the Śaiva system are thirtysix. They begin with Pṛthvi and end with Śiva.

2. The hymns to the Guru have been cited from Tantrarāja, p. 18.

10. I bow to the goddess[1] who is made of mantra, who constitutes the letters of alphabet and whose forms are planets, who is Gaṇeśa, the constellations, the Yoginīs, the signs of the zodiac and the Pīṭhas.

11. I bow to the great goddess, the mother, the Supreme Lady who stills the tossed and agitated pulsations of time.

12. Even by the maturity of a single letter (by practice) man vies with the Sun, Tārkṣya, the moon, Kāma, Śaṅkara, Fire and Viṣṇu.

13. I bow to the mistress of all and Goddess, who is the sacred alphabet of great splendour, (and I bow to her) the moonlight of whose syllables has adorned the three worlds.

14. I bow to her who is an ever perfect Mother (Mātṛkā). In the great string of her sacred syllables these three worlds from Brahmā's sphere to Cauldron (Kaṭāha) are threaded.

15. Even now the world from Brahmā's sphere to the Cauldron may be observed as arisen from that triangle of the nature of support of the eleventh seed letter.

16-17. I bow to her, the great Goddess who constitutes the classes (vargas) of letters a, ka, ca, ṭa, ta, pa, ya, śa, who abides in the head, arms, back, hips and feet, whose form is supreme bliss, who is both absolute, relative and excellent by means of extracting the letter I.

18. Even now, the gods do not know a little about her corporate and incorporate nature; who she is, from whom she comes, from where and how.

19. I bow to her whose nature is aham and who is of the form of imperishable Kṣa. I bow to the Goddess who shines in the vast wave of Kula's Kalā and yet shines as Supreme Śiva.

20. I bow to the Supreme Mistress from whom there arise the eight Siddhis and in whom there abide the eight mothers with the sequence of their classes.

21. I bow to Śrī Tripurā who is the Supreme presiding deity of the four currents and who abides in the core of four pīṭhas beginning with the letters Kāma, Pūrṇa, Jakāra and Śrīpīṭha.

---

1. The hymns to Śakti are found in Tantrarāja, (pp. 39-49) and Nityaṣoḍaśikārṇava, (pp. 1-25).

22. To one who recites this hymn of eternal deities with full concentration in the beginning of the ritual, the deities confer boons.

23. Henceforth, I shall recount to you the Kavaca (the hymn of protection) of the goddess abiding in the nine triangles. Thereby, the aspirant shall become the conquerer of Gods, demons and men.

24-25. May Lalitā, the bestower of everything who permeates everything, protect myself. May Kāmeśī protect me in front, may Bhugamālī protect thereafter the quarters, behind, as also on the right hand side. May Nityaklinnā and Bheruṇḍā protect the South west direction.

26. May Vahnivāsinī protect the western direction. May Nityā Mahāvajreśvarī protect me in the North-west direction.

27. May Śivadūtī protect me in the left hand side. May Tvaritā, the bestower of Siddhis protect me in the North-east direction.

28. May Kulasundarī protect me always from above. May Nīlapatākā protect me from below and Vijayā from all round.

29-30. May Sarvamaṅgalā always cause me good. May the form of Jvālāmālinī always protect my body, sense-organs, mind and vital breath. May Citrā always protect my mind from lust, anger, covetousness, delusion, false prestige and arrogance.

31-34. May the sixteen Nityā deities save me from all sins, may they save me from grief, decay all the time. May they protect me from untruth, from cruel thoughts, violence, stealth and placidity. May they urge me to perform good deeds. May Nityā deities riding on elephants along with their Śaktis protect me. May the deities riding on horses protect me. May those riding on the lions protect me. May those seated on bears protect me. May those riding on chariots protect me in the battle, all round. May those who ride on Garuḍa protect me. May those who traverse the sky, abide in the elements, who are all permeating protect me. May the goddess always protect me.

35. May goblins, ghosts and spirits be routed, may the ailment that arises by the application of destructive spirits urged by my enemies be destroyed by the ornaments and weapons of their Śaktis.

36. May the innumerable Śaktis and goddesses riding on elephants, horses, tigers, lions, and Garuḍas wielding weapons protect me from everywhere.

37. One who repeats this Kavaca mantra of the Nityās which protects all, both in the morning and evening never sees any inauspiciousness. He always remains delighted and blissful.

38. Thus the auspicious Kavaca of Lalitā has been mentioned. By wearing it man becomes fearless, victorious and happy.

39. Henceforth, I shall mention, O sage, one thousand names of the sixteen deities according to their respective order along with the worship of their attending deities.

One thousand names of Lalitā[1]

40-50. (1) Lalitā, (2) Kāmeśvarī, (3) Bhagamālinī (4) Nitya-klinnā, (5) Bheruṇḍā (6) Vahnivāsinī (7) Vijayeśvarī (8) Tvaritā, (9) Dūtī, (10) Kulasundarī, (11) Nitya-Saṁvit, (12) Nīlapatākā (13) Vijayā, (14) Sarvamaṅgalā (15) Jvālā-mālinī, (16) Citrā (one who has sixteen forms of the deity), (17) Kurukullā, (18) Vārāhī (19) Vaśinī, (20) Kāmeśī (21) Mohinī, (22) Vimalā, (23) Aruṇā, (24) Jayinī, (25) Sarveśvarī, (26) Kaulinī, (27) the form of mudrās,[2] (28) the

---

1. The verses give one thousand names of Lalitā, but the list is not complete. The text takes most of the names from Tantrarāja.

2. mudrās are defined in various texts. See Paraśurāma Kalpa Sūtra (New ED), pp. 608-656.

The Nityāṣoḍaśikārṇava defines the following mudrās; Trikhaṇḍā, Sarvasaṁkṣobhakāriṇī, Trailokyākarṣakariṇī, Sarvavaśaṅkari, unmādinī, Mahāṁkuśā, khecarī, Saṁharā, Bījā and Yonī. Tantrarāja mentions twenty mudrās.

Mudrās are of three kinds: gross, subtle and transcendent. They are formed with the hands or body, thought of in mantras, and understood as they really are. The idea is alluded to in the verse.

Generally siddhis are eight but here they are mentioned as ten. To the traditional number eight two are added bhukti siddhi and icchāsiddhi.

syllables of the arrows, (29) form of the syllables abiding in the bow. (30) the syllables of the noose, (31) the form of syllables of the goad, (32) Trikhaṇḍā, (33) Sthāpanī (34) Sannirodhinī, (35) Avaguṇṭhanī, (36) an arrow in the vicinity (?), (37) one who bears the names of noose and goad, (38) one who is bowed to, (39) one who causes agitation, (40) one who causes enemies to run, (41) one who attracts, (42) one who causes the entry, (43) one who causes madness (44) one who is a great goad, (45) one who wanders in the void, (46) one who is the seed, (47) one who is of the nature of awakening Śaktis, (48) one who is gross, (49) one who is subtle, (50) transcendent, (51) minute, (52) lightness, (56) greatness, (57) weightiness, (58) ability to reach, (59) irresistible will, (60) lordship, (61) ability to control, (62) enjoyment, (63) achievement of enjoyment, (64) achievement of will, (65) Brāhmī (66) Māheśvarī, (67) Kaumārī, (68) Vaiṣṇavī, (69) Vārāhī, (70) Indrāṇī, (71) Cāmuṇḍā, (72) Mahālakṣmī.

51-60. (73) One who draws love, (74) intellect, (75) ego, (76) sound, (77) touch, (78) form, (79) flavour (80) smell, (81) citta, (82) forbearance, (83) name, (84) seed, (85) nectar, (86) body (87) ātman; (88) who is (Anaṅga) kusumā, (89) (Anaṅga) mekhalā (90) (Anaṅga) madanā, (91) Madanāturā, (92) (Anaṅga) rekhā (93) (Anaṅga) veginī, (95) (Anaṅga) aṅkuśā, (96) (Anaṅga) mālinī, (97) one who agitates, (98) one who has the form of one who routs, (99) one who has the form of attraction, (100) one who delights, (101) one who fascinates, (102) one who makes others stunned, (103) one who causes yawning, (104) one who makes others subservient to her, (105) one who causes delight, (106) one who causes madness, (107) one who causes to achieve aims, (108) one who fills one with riches, (109) one who abides in mantras, (110) one who dispels the pair of opposites, (111) the bestower of riches of accomplishment, (112) one who causes favourable auspiciousness, (113) the bestower of the fulfilment of desires, (114) one who dispels sorrow, (115) one who removes death, (116) one who wards off obstacles, (117) one who is beautiful in every limb, (118) one who bestows good fortune, (119) one who grants riches of knowledge, (120) one who is knowledge itself, (121) (Pāñcamī) the fifth, (122) one who removes illness, (123) one whose form is the support, (124) one who removes sins, (125) one who is bliss itself, (126) one who is protection itself, (127) one who bestows the desired fruit, (128) Jayinī, (129) Vimalā (free from impurities), (130) Kāmeśī, (131) Vajriṇī, (132) Bhagā, (133) one who fascinates the three worlds, (134) one who resides in Trailokyamohanā, (135) one who abidcs in Sarvaśāpāripūraṇī, (136) one abiding in Sarvasaṁkṣobhaṇā, (137) one abiding in Saubhāgya-pradā.

61-70. (138) One whose abode is in Sarvārthasādhaka, (139) one whose abode is in Sarvarogahara, (140) one who abides in Sarvarakṣākara, (141) one who abides in Sarvasiddhipradā, (142) one who is the support of Sarvānandamaya (cakra)[1] and one who is of the nature of bindu the characteristic of which is Śiva, (143) one who is the most excellent, (144) one who is known as hidden, (145) one who is highly secret, (146) one who is of the nature of the mystic tradition, (147) one who abides in Kula Kaula nigarbha (i.e. the meaning indicated by them) (148) one who is the mystic meaning, (149) one who is the mystic significance of parā and aparā, (150) one who is the highest truth, (151) Tripurā, (152) Tripureśī, (153) one who abides in puras, (154) Śrīmālinī, (155) one who is Siddhāmbā, (156) Mahā Tripurasundarī, (157) one who shines splendidly in the nine islands made of nine jewels,[2] (158) one who is stationed in the Kalpa Garden, (159) one who is worshipped by the seasons in the form of senses, (160) one for whom Time is mudrā, (161) one who is mātṛkā (mother), (162) one who instructs the land of jewels (?) (163) one who constitutes the

---

1. The verses give the names of nine Cakras of Śrīyantra thus: Trailokyamohanā, Sarvāśāparipūriṇī, Sarvasaṁkṣobhanā, Sarvasaubhāgyadāyakā, Sarvārtha sādhakā, Sarvarakṣākarī, Sarvarogaharī, Sarvasiddhipradā, Sarvānandamayā, which represent the bhūpura, the sixteen-petalled lotus, eight-petalled lotus, fourteen-triangles, the second set of ten triangles, the first set of ten triangles, eight triangles, the central triangle and the central bindu.

2. Navaratnas are nine; ruby, pearl, coral, cat's eye, topaz, diamond, sapphire, gomeda and emarald. These represent the nine component parts of human body, namely bile, flesh, skin, blood, semen, marrow, bone, and fat.

principles in the forms of planets, (164) one who controls the elephants of worldly affairs, (165) one who is the form of space, (166) one who is of the form of time (167) one who is of the form of shape, (168) one who is of the form of sound, (169) one who abides in music, (170) one who is attached with the circle of hidden and revealed yoginīs,[1] (171) one who is fire, (172) one who is the sun, (173) one who is the moon, (174) one who is the elements, (175) one who is of the name of eight syllables (i.e. mahātripurasundarī, (176) one who is of the form of fivefold rituals, (177) one who is named by different holy rituals, (178) one who is devoid of forbidden cult, (179) one who is marked by the symbol of siddhas, (180) one who is stationed in the tortoise in four ways, (181) one who is the nature of worship of the Nityā deities, (182) one who is worshipped by means of Damana.

(183) One who grants fruits through six kinds of obligatory duties, (184) one who causes auspiciousness through her worship by means of different materials in different days of the moon and in different days of the week.

71-80 (185) Vāmeśī, (186) Anaṅga-Kusumā,[2] (187) Anaṅgamekhalā (188) Anaṅgamadanā, (189) Anaṅgamadanāturā, (190) Madaveginikā, (191) the protectress of the worlds (192) the digit of the moon, (193) one named as Gatilekhā (194) faith, (195) pleasure, (196) enjoyment, (197) fortitude, (198) splendour, (199) Delightful unto the mind, (200) one who captivates the mind, (201) Desire, (202) one who causes the madness of love, (203) one who makes people rejoice, (604) one who illuminates, (205) one who dries up, (206) one who controls, (207) one who makes jingling sound, (208) of good fortune, (209) Pūśā, (210) one who causes possession, (211) of good mind, (212) enjoyment, (213) pleasure, (214) fortitude, (215) prosperity, (216) gentle (217) ray, (218) one who has the garland of rays, (219) one who is possesed of the moon, (220) Aṅgirā, (221) shadow, (222) one who has full sphere, (223) satisfaction, (224) one who is called nectar, (225) Dākinī

1. The yoginis are Prakaṭā, Guptā, Guptatarā Sampradāyasvarūpā, Kulasvarūpā, Kaulasvarūpā, Nigarbharahasyā, Atirahasyā, Parāpararahasyā etc.

(226) the guardian of the world, (327) Baṭuka, (228) the protectress of Gaṇas, (229) Durgā, (230) one who is the mistress of holy places, (231) one who is of the form of Kāmarāja, (232) one who is of the form of Manmatha (233) one who is Kandarpa, (234) one who is Makaraketana, (235) one who is Manobhava,[1] (236) Goddess of speech, (237) one who is of the form of letters, (238) one who is Madana, (239) one who fascinates, (240) sport, (241) one who causes yawning, (242) one who is zeal, (243) auspicious one, (244) one who causes delight, (245) one who causes things to melt, (246) one who is attached, (247-250) one who delights the eye, mind, heart and head, (251) one who causes madness to everyone (252) one who causes happiness unto all, (243) one who is without the body, (254) one who has immeasurable zeal, (255) one who is not little, (256) one whose prosperity is evident, (257) one who is of diverse forms, (258) one whose forms are born out of disturbance.

81-91. (259) One who has the power of passion, (260) one who has the power of hatred, (261) one who has the form of sound, (262) eternal, (263) unsullied, (264) Klinnā, (265) Kledinī, (266) one who is over-welcomed with love, (267) one who has the ichor due to rut, (268) Drāviṇī, one who causes to melt (269) one who herself melts, (270) one who is vitiated by intoxication, (271) auspicious, (272) one who is sick due to sexual urge, (273) wise, (274) one who causes delusion, (275) one who is full of delight, (276) one who is full of feeling for wounded prestige, (277) illusion, (278) slow, (279) one who is possessed of mindfulness, (280) Vijayā, (281) Vimalā, (282) Śubhā, (283) the universal being, (284) prosperity, (285) humble (286) of diverse, nature (287) one who has bowed down, (288) Kamalā, (289) Kāminī, (290) a woman of wild tribe, (291) one who has the form of fame, (292) Kuṭṭinī, (293) Kulasundarī, (294) one who causes welfare, (295) Kālakolā, (296) Dākinī, (297) Śākinī, (298), Lākinī, (299) Kākinī, (300) Rākinī, (301) Mahā-Rākini, (302), Yākṣiṇī,[2] (303) will, (304) knowledge, (305) activity, (306) one who bears eight kinds of

---

1. The five kāmas include Kāmarāja, Manmatha, Kandarpa, Makaraketana and Manobhava.

2. The verses give thirtysix names of Yakṣiṇīs.

weapons, (307) one who has matted hair, (308) Kulasundarī, (309) one who has flaming form, (310) one who has sparks, (311) one who is auspicious, (312) one who is very charming, (313) gold, (314) deceitful, (315) universe, (316) of diverse forms, (317) Aries,[1] (318) Taurus, (319) Cancer, (320) Leo, (321) Virgo, (322) Gemini, (323) Libra, (324) Scorpio, (325) Sagittarius, (326) Capricorn, (327) Aquarius, (328) Pisces, (329) Essence, (330) one who eats everything, (331) faith (332) of diverse forms (333) of strange forms, (334) one without prosperity, (335) one who is devoid of agony, (336) pure, (337) one whose greatness cannot be thought of.

92-100. (338) One who is attached, (339) one whose form is learning, (340) one whose form is acquisition, (341) Hṛllekhā, (342) Kledinī, (343) Klinnā, (344) one who causes agitation, (345) one who is sick with love, (346) unsullied, (347) one who is passionate, (348) one who is possessed of Madana, (349) Mekhalā (350) one who causes others to melt, (351) one who is velocity, (352) Kamalā, (353) Kāminī, (354) Kalpā (355) Kalā, (356) Kalitā, (357) Kautukā, (358) Kirātā, (359) Kālā, (360) Kadanā, (361) Pertaining to Kuśa, (362) Kambuvāhanikā, (363) cowardly, (364) deceitful, (365) renown, (366) virgin, (367) having saffron mark, (368) one who breaks, (369) one having velocity, (370) one with names, (371) frivolous, (371) delicate, (372) chaste, (373) enjoyment, (374) faith, (375) enthusiastic in the enjoyment of pleasures, (376) intoxicated, (377) mentally alert, (378) agitated, (379) one who drags, (380) vacillating (381) Madanamālinī, (382) having pastime, (383) Eager, (384) holy, (385) ancient, (386) goddess of speech, (387) one who grants boon, (388) universal, (389) one who is prosperity, (390) one who causes obstacles, (391) valorous, (392) one who removees obstacles, (393) learning, (394) one who has good countenance, (395) beautiful, (396) essence, (397) one beloved of war (398) Sarasvatī (399) one who is the traditional procedure, (400) one who goes everywhere, (401) Siddhā, (402) Śivā, (403) Vāṇī, (404) one who is achieved from far, (405) one who has forms, (406) Nādā

1. These verses give the Rātiśaktis beginning with Meṣa.

(407) one who is beyónd mind, (408) one who is installed in the Prāṇas (vital air,) (409) one who is red, (410) prosperity, (411) Prāṇā, (412) Apānā, (413) Samānā, (414) Vyānā, (415) Udānā, (416) Nāgā, (417) Kūrmā, (418) chameleon, (518a) Devadattā, (419) Dhanañjayā.

101-110. (420) Phaṭkārī, (421) one worthy of being propitiated by the servants, (422) Jayā, (423) Vijayā, (424), Huṁkārī, (425) Khecarī, (426) fierce, (427) one who chops off, (428) one who casts off, (429) Strīkārī, (430) Huṁkārī, (431) one who causes welfare (432) one of the forms of four syllables (433) one who has taken the syllabic from of Śrīvidyā, (434) Kālī, (435) Yāmyā, (436) one having fifty syllables (?) (437) Language, (438) Sarasvatī, (439) Vāṇī, (440) Sanskrit, (441) Prākṛta, (442) the greater one, (443) one who has many forms, (444) of the form of riches, (445) one who is beautiful, (446) one who is bliss, (447) eagerness, (448) having the name of three, (449) one who has the name of Paramātman, (450) one whose wealth is immensurable (451) one whose form is Vāk, (452) one who is of the form of Bindu and Visarga (453) one who is of the form of the universe, (454) one who is named as Traipurakandā, (455) one who is identical with the three beginning with the subjects etc. (456) one who is bestower of longevity, prosperity fame, enjoyment, beauty and good health, (457) one who is the knower of worldly and other-worldly knowledge, (458) one is named Jīvā (459) one who is named Vijayā, (460) one who is universal consciousness (461) one who is vidyā beginning with sa, (462) one who is of the form of the universe when preceded by the letter ha, (463) one who fascinates the universe, (464) one who is named Tripurāmṛtā, (465) one who makes everything full, (466) Kledinī, (467-469) Mahodayā, Mahāmāyā, Maharddhi (470) one who brings about affluence, (471) one who is of the nature of the letters of ha, la, and kṣa, (472) Sīmā (?) (473) of the form of mothers, (474), enjoyment, (475) pleasure, (476) Manobhavā, (477) the mistress of the quarters, (478) of the form of three composite syllables, (479) of the form of six composite syllables (480) of the form of five composite syllables, (481) abiding in Viśuddha, (482) abiding in Anāhata, (483) abiding in Maṇipūra.

111-120 (484) One who is stationed in Svādhiṣṭhāna,

(485) one who abides in the Mūlādhāra, (486) one who is in Ājñā, (487) one who is the composite of thirtysix syllables, (488) one who is of the nature of fifty pairs, (489) one who is the mistress of the Pādukāsiddhi, (490) one who bestows victory, (491) one who grants the fulfilment of the desired form, (492) one who is of the form of Vetāla, (493) one who is of the form of Piśāca, (494) Vicitrā i.e. of wonderful nature, (495) Vibhramā, (496) Haṁsī (497) terrible, (498) one who delights people, (499) vast, (500) cupid, (501) arresting, (502) one whose throat is black, (503) greatly terrifying, (504) belonging to Mahendra (505) one who holds the conch, (506) belonging to Indra, (507) auspicious, (508) one who stays in the holy fig tree, (509) one with the girdle, (510) one with Kalās,[1] (511) Lakṣmī, (512) one who wears garlands, (513) the heroine of the universe, (514) one with good eyes, (515) one with beauty, (516) one who grants desires (517) one who has delicate charms, (518) Kāmeśvarī, (519) Nandinī (520) Svarṇarekhā, (521) one who captivates the mind, (522) one who has joy, (523) passionate, (524) Siddhā (525) Padminī, (526) fond of sexual intercourse, (527) one who bestows welfare, (528) an adept in arts, (529) celestial beauty, (530) capricious, (531) one who carries others, (532) Heroic, (533) Vikarṣa, (534) Krokara, (535) Kavi (536) having roaring sound like the lion, (537) one who has loud voice, (538) of good neck, (539) monkey, (540) rougish, (541) one having cat's eye, (542) one having cat's face, (543) virgin, (544) traversing the void, (545) Bhava, (546) Mayūra, (547) auspicious, (548) terrible (549) elephant-faced, (550) six-faced, (551) Mātaṅgī, (552) moving about in the night, (553) one who grasps poison, (554) having the wolf's belly, (555) having the face of the buffalo, (556) elephant-faced, (557) having the animal face, (558) elephant-faced, (559) one who causes excitement, (560) Maṇibhadra, (561) sportive, (562) lion-faced, (563) having a big belly, (564) having fat veins, (565) having deformed face (566) having an excellent face.

---

1. The sixteen kalās of the moon, the twelve of the sun and ten of the fire.

121-130. (567) Restless, (568) having the face of a cock, (569) causing illusion, (570) lethargic due to love, (571) charming, (572) one whose calf is long, (573) one whose teeth are short, (574) ten-faced, (575) pretty-faced, (576) one who is in misery, (577) angry, (578) boar-faced, (579) having manes round the face, (580) deceitful (581) Eager, (582) black, (583) servant (584) fraudulent (585) Roguish, (586) one who eats, (587) frightening, (588) Siddhā, (589) going everywhere, (590) Jayā, (591) Vijayā (592) Durgā (593) Bhadrā, (594) Bhadrakarī, (595) Ambikā (596) Vāmadevī, (597) one who has the form of Mahāmāyā (598) one who tears, (599) one who abides in the universe, (600) one who destroys the universe, (601) heroic, (602) one who causes disturbance, (603) learning, (604) one who of the form of joy, (605) one who is devoid of grief, (607) one who has poison in the neck (608) large, (609) one who bestows victory, (610) Viprā, (611) charming, (612) auspicious (613) very arrogant and proud, (614) wise, (615) proud of prestige, (616) sweet, (617) Māyā, (618) charming (619) gentle, (620), Bhavānī, (621) wholesome, (622) large-eyed, (623) having pure smiles, (624) gracious, (625) Kamalā, (626) Kalpā, (626) Kalā, (628) one who replenishes, (629) Eternal, (630) undying, (631) life, (632) love (633) devoid of grief (634) pure, (635) full, (636) holy, (637) good fortune, (638) ever intent (639) discriminating, (640) one with prosperity, (641) of the from of the universe, (642) pervasive, (643) Kāminī, (644) Khecarī, (645) All, (646) ancient, (647) the great lady, (648) Gaurī, (649) immeasurable (650) Vimalā, (651) Vijayā, (652) Transcendent.

131-140. (653) Holy, (654) Padminī, (655) the mistress of the universe, (656) learning, (657) the consort of Śiva (658) having the form of everything, (659) blissful, (660) lotus-eyed, (661) non-censured, 662) granting boons, (663) one who gives sentences, (664) Vāṇī, (665) of divers nature, (666)of the form of the Vedas, (667) Vidyā, (668) Vāgīśvarī, (669) Andhyā (670) Saṁyatā (671) Sarasvatī, (672) pure, (673) the form of gift, (674) Amṛtā, (675) Mānadā, (676) Pūṣā (667) Puṣṭi, (678) Tuṣṭi, (679) Rati, (680) Dhṛti, (681) Śaśinī, (682) moon-light, (683) gracefulness, (684) jyotsnā, (685) Śrī, (686) Prīti, (687) Aṅgadā, (688) Pūrṇā, (689) full of nectar, (690) Kāmadāyinī.

(691) the digit of the moon, (692) Tapinī, (693) Tāpinī, (694) Dhūmrā, (695) Marīcī, (696) Jvālinī, (697) Ruci, (698) Suṣumnā, (699) Bhogadā, (700) Viśvā (701) Bodhanī, (702) Dhāraṇī, (703) Ṛṣamā, (704) Dhūmrā, (705) Arci, (706) Ūṣmā, (707) Jvalinī, (708) Jvālinī, (709) Viṣphuliṅginī, (710) Suśrī, (711) Surūpā, (712) Kapilā, (713) Havyavāhā, (714) Kavyavāhā, (715), Ghasmarā, (716) one who makes everything of the universe as her food, (717) one whose eyes are tremulous, (718) one whose tongue is tremulous (719) one who eats all, (720) thousand-eyed, (721), having no companion, (722) one who has inclination to destruction, (723) one who cannot be thought of, (724) one who cannot be comprehended (725) one who has the full form, (726) difficult of access, (727) all, (728) one who is of the form of achievement, (729) one who sanctifies, (730) single-formed, (731) one who is called Yāmalavedha,[1] (732) one who is of the form of Śāktavedha, (733) one who is of the form of Śāmbhavavedha, (734) one who indicates the achievement of contemplation, (735) one whose form is fire, (736) Umā, (737) obstacle, (738) serpentine, (739) six-faced, (740) having the form of the sun, (741) mother, (742) Durgā, (743) quarter.

141-150. (744) One who grants wealth, (745) Keśava, (746) Yamī, (747) Hara, (748) Moon,[2] (749) Aśvinī, (750) Yamī (751) one having the form of fire, (752) Earth, (753) Moon, (754) Śivā, (755) Aditi, (756) Jiva, (757) Serpent, (758) of the form of fathers, (759) Aryaman, (760) Bhaga, (761) Sūrya, (762) Tvāṣṭrī, (763) Māruti, (764) of the form of Indra, (765) of the form of fire, (766) Mitra, (767) Indrāṇī, (768) Nirṛti, (769) water, (770) Vaiśvadevī, (771) Hari, (772) Vāsava, (773) Aja Ekapād, (774) Ahirbudhna, (775) Pūṣaṇī.[3]

---

1. This verse refers to vedhadīkṣā which is of three kinds, namely Yāmalavedha, Śāktavedha and Śāmbhavavedha. For details vide Tantrarāja, pp. 364-365.

2. The presiding deities of the lunar days begin with Vahni and end with Śaśī.

3. Similarly, the lords of the constellation begin with Aśvini and end with Pūṣaṇī.

(776) Kāraskara[1] (a kind of tree), (777) Emblic Myrobalan (778) Arjuna (tree) (779) Udumbara, (780) jejube, (781) catechu (781)Kṛṣṇarūpiṇī, (782) bamboo, (783) Pippala, (784) Nāga, (785) Rohiṇī, (786) Palāśaka, (787) Plakṣaka, (788) Ambaṣṭha,(789) Bilva, (790) Arjuna, (791) Vikaṅkatā, (792) Vakulā, (793) Saralā, (794) Sarjikā, (795) Vañjulā, (796) Panasā, (797) Arkā, (798) Śamī, (799) Haripriyā, (800) Mango tree, (801) Margosa, (802) Madhūka, (803) Horse, (804) Elephant,[2] (805) serpent, (806) cobra, (807) bitch, (808) cat, (809) Eve, (810) cat, (811) Mouse, (812) Bull, (813) Buffalo, (814) Tigress, (815) wild Buffalo (816) Lioness, (817) Panther, (818) Dear, (819) Hind, (820) having ears like the cow, (821) female howk, (822) female bear, (823) female monkey, (824) human mare, (825) female Nāga, (826) Cow, (827) female elephant.

(828) One abiding in the six centres of the body, (829) one with three portions, (830) one who is named as the protectress of shores, (831) whirling, (832) melting, (833) Moon, (834) Sun, (835) lunar days, (836) days of the week, (837) constellation, (838) a form of constellation, (839) Karaṇa (a kind of time).

151-160. (840) Yakṣiṇī, (841) one who enables others to cross, (842) Vyomaśabdādya, (843) of the form of vital air, (844) Intellect, (845) one who is angry, (846) one who arrests, (847) fierce, (848) very fierce, (849) of the form of Brāhmī etc., (850) one who is stationed on a lion, (851) one who rides on a tiger (852) one stationed on an elephant, (853) stationed on a horse, (854), one who is stationed on Garuḍa, (855) one of earthly form, (856) one of watery form, (857) one of fiery form, (858) one of the form of wind, (859) of the form of sky, (860) one having one face, (861) having four faces, (862) having nine faces, (863) having sixteen faces, (864) having twenty-five faces, (865) having twenty-six faces, (866) having forty-nine faces, (867) having sixty-four faces, (868) having eighty-one faces, (869) one having one hundred faces, (870) gross-formed, (871) of subtle form, (872) one with

---

1. From Kāraskara to Madhūka are the twentyseven names of trees named as Nakṣatra trees.

2. Some animals represent constellations. For instance, the nakṣatra Aśvinī is the elephant.

resplendent form, (873) one surrounded by syllables, (874) one surrounded by Nāthas, (875) one surrounded by the principles, (876) one surrounded by Nityās, (877) one surrounded by aṅgas, (878) one surrounded by the forms of weapons, (879) one whose form is the rows of Gurus, (880) one surrounded by Brahmā etc., (881) Parā, (882) Paśyantī (883) Madhyamā, (814) Vaikharī, (885) one abiding in the head, (886) one abiding in the throat, (887) one abiding in the palate, (888) one abiding in the lips, (889) one abiding in the tooth, (890-891) one abiding in the pair of nostril, (892) one who is at the region of the chest, (893) of the form of the word, (894) of the form of the sentence, (895) of the form of the vedas, (896) one whose form is the language, (897) one who is called śeka, (898) one who is called viewing, (899) one who is called instruction, (900) one who is indicated by disordered letters, (901) Gāyatrī, (902) Praṇava.

161-163. (903) One whose form is the repetition of mantra, (904) one whose form is homa, (905) one whose form is worship, (906) one whose form is meditation, (907) one whose form is yantra, (908) one whose form is the offering of water, (909) Siddhasārasvata, (910) Mṛtyuñjayā, (911) Tripurā, (912) Garuḍa, (913) Annapūrṇā, (914) seated on a horse, (915) one with nine aspects, (916) Devī, (917) Hṛdayā, (918) Gaurī, (919) one who grants lakhs, (920) Mātaṅginī, (921) one who has three gold coins at her feet, (922) one who speaks in accordance with the activities, (923) Rājalakṣmī, (924) one who has the face of cow.

164. Thus the divine thousand names of Goddess Lalitā have been narrated. They afford the achievement of all objects. They yield the benefit of four-fold aims of life.

165. He who repeats these names every day at dawn with pure mind, becomes a Yogin, a knower of Brahman, a Śiva Yogin and a knower of the self.

166-167. He who repeats this twice every day gains longevity, health and riches. Certainly, the Sādhaka invariably attains popularity among the people and the power of attracting women and kings. By repeating it thrice every day man keeps the entire universe subservient.

168. By repeating it four times his wish becomes always fruitful. It can be applied to practical use. It shall protect the worlds.

169. By its repetition for five times a day men, women, kings, animals and gods with all their heart round the goddess resort to the Sādhaka.

170. By repeating this six times the Sādhaka shall be identical with the goddess. By the grace of the goddess all Siddhis occur to him.

171. Through the repetition for seven times a day he destroys enemies, ailments, evil spirits and epileptic fits. Repeating this eight times a day man becomes capable of restraining kings and blessing them.

172. By repeating this nine times a day he becomes as resplendent as Manmatha (the god of love). He makes the earth agitated. In order to achieve fluency of speech, good fortune and splendour one should recite this ten times a day.

173. Repeating this eleven times a day one shall attain all prosperities. The whole universe will be subservient to him.

Repeating this twelve times a day, man becomes comparable to Śiva by means of his siddhis.

174. By repeating this thirteen times a day man shall become successful all round and happy. By repeating this fourteen times a day all desired things are obtained. There will be all round auspiciousness.

175. By repeating this fifteen times a day, man shall without the least effort attain his desires.

By repeating this sixteen times a day, man becomes Maheśvara directly.

176-178. He will be competent to create, sustain and annihilate the universe. He who repeats the hymn for forty days or at least a month, shall truly attain whatever he desires. This is in accordance with Śiva's words.

179. O brahmin, thus the hymn of a thousand names based on the worship of the Nityā deities, for repeated recitations has been recounted. It is capable of achieving all the desires of the mind.

CHAPTER NINETY

Nityā-Kathānakam
The Narrative of Nityā deities

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Henceforth, O brahmin, I shall recount to you the worship of Nityā deities along with the application of Mantras.

2. The entire object is implied by three syllables contained in Lalitā. By the rest, the form of the Goddess is spoken of.

3. The universe is of the nature of 'hrīm.'[1] But the meaning of it is kept secret in all Tantras.

4. By the letter 'ha' the nature of illumination and by 'ra' the nature of absorption are indicated. The letter indicates the reflection (Vimarśa) of both and by the bindu is meant the total identification.

5. The mantras are named Piṇḍa, Kartarī, Bīja and Mālā in their sequence. Some contain one syllable, two syllables, three syllables, ten syllables and four syllables.

6. The mantras are to be written in accordance with the metre as regulated by its number arranged in their proper order.

The entirety is of the nature of the Goddess and the last resort is of the nature of Śiva. The nature of the self is of the characteristic of both. One should meditate upon them by reciting the same.

7-9. In course of time, duality, misery, mental worry and the sense of desire will be destroyed. The Supreme I-ness, the nature of totality and the form of one's self which is Being and Pulsation, free from all attributes and of the form of supreme light, the highest one, will flash one's own self.

10. This being so, there is not a single letter which is not of the nature of a mantra. That is why it is always called vidyā in every way.

11. This Vidyā is exhilirating as the intoxicating liquor. It is the means of crossing over distress. I shall now tell you the precise preparation of it.

---

1. According to the verse the entire world is of the nature of the mantra hrīm. It is Māyā bīja also called nāda, prāṇa, jīva, ghoṣa and hṛllekhā. It is composed of four components from which originate vowels and consonants.

12-15. The liquor[1] they classify into three types: Gauḍī, Paiṣṭī and Mādhvī. Put jaggery in hot water and stir it well. The pollen powder of the flower dhātakī (grislea tomentosa) shall be put into it and the whole solution is kept in a glass jar. It is stored under ground but at dawn and at dusk the solution is stirred well with thc hands. After a month is over when the sediments go to the bottom, it is filtered. This can be used for worship. This is called Gauḍī because it is prepared from Guḍa. Similarly, that which is got by adding honey is called Mādhvī. O dear one, listen to the Paiṣṭī variety. Rice should be boiled slowly and cooked in two and a half times more water (than the rice).

16-17. It should be left over for three days. Then the powdered sprout of the embylic Myrobalan is put into it. Keep this in an airy place for a day where there is not much of wind. Water is then poured into it and stirred well. This is then filtered. It is then called Paiṣṭika Madhu. Artificial liquor is prepared in two ways extracting from trees or squeezing from fruits.

18-22. Listen to the mode of its preparation. By its taste the mind gets repose. Bunches of grapes, or date fruits or the flowers of Bassia latifolia are put into water and boiled to half the original quantity. To this add a small quantity of distilled spirit and keep it undisturbed for two days. After filtering the same it becomes tasty and auspicious, worthy of being offered for worship. It causes full repose of the mind.

As to the second variety it is prepared from the coconut, Hintāla or palm trees. The milk that exudes from thc stalk of the fruit must be taken fresh from thc tree. It is tasty.

Take the water out of the coconut fruit. Put a little camphor therein. Take the juice of Arecanut half the quantity of the former. Mix both and keep it in the sunlight. This immediately becomes liquor which the gods are very fond of.

---

1. The verses mention three kinds of wines and state how they are prepared. In the Kulārṇava Tantra we read eleven varieties of Āsavas. They bestow enjoyment of worldly pleasures and liberation. The twelfth of them is called surā which is the best of all, for it is most dear to gods. It is taken for Brahmajñāna, not for worldly pleasure.

23. Or the devotee shall offer for the arghya to the goddess the liquor which has been mentioned here. It must be offered immediately which will be fruitful.

24. The aspirant while remaining in trance should drink it always restricting his diet. Never should a siddha drink it unless it has been first offered to the goddess.

25. It should be drunk until the mind is wholly absorbed in the Goddess. If he drinks more than that he shall become a sinner immediately.

26. He who drinks wine with wilful desire without serving it to the god becomes a sinner. He should be punished by the king for he is the worshipper of avidyā.

27. This is highly desirable both for the sādhya the goddess, and the sādhaka the worshipper. For the person who has become a Siddha it is prescribed in order to become identical with you.

28. The devotee with the previously-mentioned form should worship the deities of the above-mentioned forms. He should worship them in the proper sequence with the offering of wine, fish and meat duly consecrated.

29. O Nārada, I shall now mention the worship for desirable ends and the practical application, by practising which the aspirant certainly achieves Siddhi.

30. The devotee shall celebrate the festivity of love on the full moon day with damana[1] (artemisia indica) flowers in the month of Caitra. On the full moon day in the month of Vaiśākha he should worship the deity with golden flowers.

31. On the full moon day in the month of Jyaiṣṭha he should worship the goddess with the fruits of plantain, mango and jack tree. On the full moon day in the month of Aṣāḍha he should worship with sandals, cardamom, saffron and the flowers of jāti and Kāṁkola.

---

1. In the month of Caitra the deity is worshipped with damana, a kind of plant. This plant is to be uprooted, root and branch by the worshipper himself or it is bought from some one. The plant should be placed on the Sarvatobhadra diagram at the left of the deity. The vessel for the plant should be placed on an eight-petalled lotus. It is remarkable that the worshipper worships Rati, Kāma, Anaṅga, Manmatha, Vasantasakhā, Smara etc. Then taking hold of it with both of his hands he prays to Tripurasundarī.

32. On the full moon day in the month of Śrāvaṇa he should worship with holy flowers in the manner prescribed in the Āgamas. On the full moon day in the month of Bhādrapada he should worship with Ketakī flowers or any sweet-smelling flower.

33. On the full moon day in the month of Āśvina, virgins[1] should be worshipped and propitiated with ornaments, clothes and cash presents. On the full moon day in the month of Kārttika he should worship the virgins[1] with saffron and with rows of lamps during the night.

34. On the full moon day in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa he should worship with coconut baked pies and camphor. On the full moon day in the month of Pauṣa he should worship with cow's milk along with sugar and jaggery.

35. On the full moon day in the month of Māgha he should worship with golden and silver-coloured lotuses after making them fragrant. On the full moon day in the month of Phālguna he should worship with diverse materials of worship, fruits and fragrant flowers.

36. On the top of the mountain he should worship the goddess at night with the flowers of palāśa and with materials called siddhadravya he would be able to meet heavenly damsels within seven days.

37. In the forest or arbour of kings or at the root of the banyan tree he should worship Śiva with Kadamba, Jātī and the materials known to Siddhas.[2]

38-39. The Yakṣiṇīs being propitiated thus within a month become visible and bestow the desired objects. On the sea-shore; the Ceṭakas[3] are to be worshipped with Ketakī flowers.

---

1. Kanyakārcā—the worship of the virgins. Rudrayāmala Tantra mentions sixteen kinds of virgins from one to sixteen years. They are classified differently according to their age group. They are Saṁdhyā, Sarasvatī, Tridhāmūrti, Kulikā, Subhagā, Umā, Mālinī, Kubjikā, Kālasundarabhā, Aparājitā, Bhairavī, Mahālakṣmī, Pīṭhanāyikā, Kṣetrajñā and Ambikā. One should worship them with offerings and thinking them as the symbols of the deity herself. They may come from any class, Naṭa, Nāpita etc.

2. Siddhadravya is a secret material like Svayambhu Kusuma, Kuṇḍa-gola, etc.

3. The ceṭakas are sixtyfour and of male form. They can assume any form. When they are propitiated they give to the worshipper whetever he desires.

They carry out our desired behest and bestow power of creating wonderful illusions in the battle. If the devotee so wishes they always grant him riches, garlands and ornaments.

40. The devotee shall make the pedestal with the Rudrākṣa tree and worship the goddess therein fearlessly at night for a month with the flower of silkcotton alongwith materials known to Siddhas.

41. O leading brahmin, Piśācas[1] can be propitiated by him in the cremation ground. He shall conquer the enemies by getting them pelted and struck with stones by them.

42-43. In a lonely forest and during the night the devotee should worship the goddess present in the mystic diagram alongwith siddha materials, flowers of mālati, jāti, punnāga, ketakī and maru in due order. He should worship fearlessly for a month. Thereby Vetālas[2] come under his control. He can ride on them and move about at his own sweet will.

44. In the cremation ground, in the temple of Caṇḍikā or in a lonely forest, the devotee should worship the goddess at midnight putting on black clothes and ornaments.

45-46. With mind in furious mood he should worship the extremely dark-complexioned deity in the black diagram. He should put the offering representing the person born on a certain constellation of the star. He should offer the same to the goddess together with materials known to siddhas. Within a month Kṛtyās are born from her eye in the forehead. To them he should present an offering.

47. These Kṛtyās become delighted after causing destruction of the universe. They return to the eye of the devotee and disappear into the eye on the forehead of the goddess by his prayer.

48-50. In a lonely garden the devotee putting on red ornaments, clothes, unguents and garlands should meditate on

---

1. The Piśācas are of thin and abnormal forms. They are mean-minded, easily provoked and huge in number. When propitiated they become slaves to the worshipper.

2. Vetālas are of many kinds. Some are of deformed limbs and faces. Making them subservient one can go round the world riding on them.

3. Kṛtyas are of many kinds and of diverse forms. When propitiated, they give to the worshipper his desired things and wealth.

the goddess and worship her in the mystic diagram with the flowers of Kalhāra, Campaka, Aśoka, Pāṭala and lotus along with the materials known to Siddhas. Within a month the Spirits become realised and achieved. By their grace man can assume any form as he pleases. The devotee can conquer, traverse and enjoy the universe.

51-52. He should meditate on the cakra located in the six centres of the lotus and then worship her. Thereby, he shall become the knower of the three units of time. When his conception becomes perfect, well-being comes about. If the conception is defective, the welfare will be absent.

53-59. The man possessing devotion shall remember the goddess along with the cakra. He shall remember the following names of the goddess. Vivekā, Vibhavā, Viśvā, Vitatā, Kāminī, Khecarī, Garvā, Purāṇā, Parameśvarī, Gaurī, Śivā, Ameyā, Vimalā, Vijayā, Pavitrā, Pīḍaṇī, Vidyā, Viśveśī, Śivavallabhā, Ambujākṣī, Aninditā, Varadā, Vākyadā, Vāṇī, Vividhā, Vedavigrahā, Vidyā, Vāgīśvarī, Satyā, Saṁyatā, Sarasvatī, Nirmalā, Ānandarūpā, Amṛtā, Mānadā, Pūṣā, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Rati, Dhṛti, Śaśinī, Candrikā, Kāntī, Jyotsnā, Śrī, Prīti, Aṅgadā. Taking the holy water in the palm of the hand, he should remember the above names of the goddess with syllables and the vidyā and together repeat it thrice. He can thus turn water into nectar and the Sarasvatī vein to represent the tongue and then sip it.

60-62. Fourfold scholarship is attainable within a year by the person who does this with the mind kept pure every day, early in the morning. He will be a yogin, the knower of Brahman, a Śivayogin and the knower of the self.

He should remember the goddess stationed in the Anugraha cakra surrounded by Ḍākinīs. He shall worship her with campaka and blue lotuses. Within a month he will regain health. This will dispel fever, evil spirits, influence of grahas, madness, chillness and jaundice.

63-67. Fever, pain in the teeth, ears and head, enlargement of the spleen, pain in the belly, wounds, diabetes, vomiting, piles, and ailments due to the derangement of humours are suppressed by the worship of the great goddess. The material necessary for the preparation of the mystic diagram is said to be the saffron obtainable from Kashmir, Vermillion, red ochre, lac, red lead, sandal both red and white. At the entrance of the hole he shall draw a triangle along with sixteen petals with red lead.

He shall then worship the Great Goddess in the middle along with the Śaktis. He shall worship with the materials known to Siddhas or fragrant flowers. Within a month the Nāga maidens will appear to him and he will be able to sport with them in the nether and other worlds for a long time.

68-71. The Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Vidyādharas, Piśācas, Guhyakas, Vīras, Kinnaras and serpents become subservient by means of worship therein and that too within the period mentioned above. For the acquisition of ornaments he shall worship with Kiṁśuka flowers. He shall worship with Pāṭala flowers for the achievement of elephants. In order to achieve horses he shall worship with red lotuses. For the acquisition of asses with lilies.

72-76. He shall worship with Bakula flowers for the achievement of women; with Kalhāra flowers for the achievement of sons; with lotuses for the achievement of victory and with Ketaka flowers for the attainment of vehicles. He shall worship with fragrant flowers for the achievement of good fortune. He shall continue to worship for the period of a month, twice of it or even thrice of that period. As long as he expects any benefit, he shall worship with sugar, ghee and milk pudding the goddess along with the attendants in the mystic diagram stationed in the middle of water. In order to calm down and quieten all harassments he shall propitiate her with flowers along with arghyas. For the achievement of full life he shall worship with ghee. For the achievement of good fortune he shall worship with honey. For the purpose of attaining good health he shall worship with milk. He shall worship with these three for the achievement of overlordship. He shall perform ablution of the Great Goddess with coconut water for her delight, with snow-cold water for the attainment of kingship and with water for achieving all objects.

77. The devotee shall stay in the areca garden and worship the goddess with its flower and Siddha materials day and night. He becomes comparable to the God of Love.

78. During the full moon day the devotee should regularly worship the goddess in the form of a virgin. He shall thus be able to drive off evil spirits urged by the enemy. The mantras devour them.

79. The person who worships the Goddess abiding in three liṅgas (Svayambhu, Bāṇa and Itara, along with Śaktis stationed in the centres. (Mūlādhāra, heart and Brahmarandhra) attains everything here and hereafter.

80. One who worships with golden flowers rendered fragrant in multiples of hundred for the period of a month becomes free from all sins of previous births.

81. If he worships with nine kinds of precious gems for a month he shall be liberated from all sins. He sees her with his own eyes.

82. One shall worship the goddess for a month with fragrant silken garments. He shall be liberated from all miseries due to sinful activities and others as well.

83. The devotee shall think of his own form as identical with the goddess and the Śaktis all round the diagram (Śrīcakra). He shall conceive the objects to be identical with flowers. Worshipping thus, he will be one with Her.

84. The sixteen Nityā deities have separate lunar days. They should be worshipped separately in their proper order. Hence, the devotee should perform the repetition of mantras, homas, etc in those lunar days.

85-87. To all the Śaktis beginning with Kāmeśvarī etc. the following articles are offered as naivedya, viz ghee, sugar, milk, baked pie, plantain, jaggery, coconut, beaten rice, Bengal gram and green gram and milk pudding. To the first deity Lalitā, these articles shall be offered. They can be used for homa into the fire and be given to men.

88. He should take the medicine mentioned as connected with the syllables of the individual vidyā and in accordance with the measure and grind it well and make it into pills. He shall achieve everything by means of these pills.

89-90. He should worship the Goddess with red lotuses on Sunday, lilies on Monday, with red lilies on Tuesday, with tagara flowers on Wednesday, with good Kalhāra flowers on Thursday, with white lotuses on Friday and with blue lilies on Saturday, with great respect.

91-92. On Sundays and other days he should offer as naivedya the following in their order viz. milk pudding, milk, plantain, butter, sugar, and ghee. After propitiating the desired deity thus, he should worship the Goddess with sandal paste etc. He will overcome the affliction of planets immediately and attain happiness.

93-96. At mid-night he should recall the woman to be desired in his mind thus. She is being scorched by the fire of love. Her mind has been taken away. She has placed her joined palms on the head as a token of reverence. Her hair is dishevelled, eyes are very red and tremulous. She wanders like the waving of flag in the wind. Her body has become white like a white cloth. She is mad and has lost her sense of discrimination. She has lost the awareness of honour, shame and fear. Thinking thus, he should worship the naked deity inside the cakra. He shall worship her with China rose, pomegranate flowers, midday flowers and Kimśuka etc. or other sweet smelling flowers such as Śephāli.

97. Within twentyone nights the women with the above description and excited due to intoxication shall come there and live with him. She will follow him like a shadow and will not leave him.[1]

98. By performing homa with red lotuses smeared with trimadhu one shall attain good fortune. Similarly, homa with red lilies shall keep women under his control.

99-102. If the homa is performed with mallikā, mālati, jāti and lotus soaked in the milk on a white cow which has a calf of the same colour, one shall attain fame, learning, wealth, health, good fortune and lordship over riches. If the homa is performed with cassia fistula flowers soaked in honey one shall be able to find gold, captivity of the enemy and the fury of kings. If the red flowers of oleander are soaked in ghee and the homa is performed therewith, he will attain red garments,

---

1. Kulacūḍāmaṇi Tantra (Chap. III) gives the method of subjugating women. A Yantra is drawn with the name of the woman inscribed therein. The worshipper repeats Kulākulamantra. Then the lady is attracted.

maidens and control over kings and ministers. He shall also achieve all desired objects such as ornaments, vehicles, success in his desire.

103. By performing homa with salt, white mustard, other things soaked in oil, in the midnight one shall be able to bring a bride of his desire.

104. One shall perform with flowers of Kṛṣṇa (black) sugarcane soaked in gingelly oil at night. Within a month his enemy becomes distressed by fever.

105. If homa is performed at night with the seed of red Khadira soaked in ghee, the enemy will have burning sensation and sores causing pain incurable by a doctor.

106-107. If homa is performed at night with the seed of ankola soaked in its oil, or, pepper or mustard soaked in ghee one shall immediately be competent to bring the women of his desire by oneself. She will be distressed by the fever of love. If one performs homa with sali rice grains soaked in ghee one shall attain sali rice grains.

108-111. If homa is performed with green gram one shall prepare an effigy with the same constellation as of the person intended, with the dust of his feet mixed with white mustard, pepper, salt and ground flour. This shall be offered in homa at night after severing at first the pair of feet, the pair of calves, the pair of knees, the pair of thighs, the portion below the navel, the region of the heart, the neck and the head. A sharp weapon shall be used to cut off limbs, By this twelve-fold homa, men, women and kings become subservient within seven days and are afflicted with fever according to his wish.

112-114. An effigy[1] is made with ground flour mixed with jaggery, pepper and cummin seeds. The name of the sādhya is written in the heart. It is fried in the ghee of the homa. The devotee shall touch effigy with the tip of his hand and repeat mantra a thousand times. After worshipping the effigy he shall eat the same, thinking that it is the sādhya him-

---

1. The effigy should be made strictly according to the direction. It is measured by fourteen aṅgulis and in its different parts the signs of Zodiac and constellations are located.

self. He shall continue repeating the mantra. Men, women and kings shall be under his control till their death.

115. The eight fragrant substances are pounded by a virgin and pasted in cold water. If the devotee applies a mark on the forehead with this paste he shall control the entire universe.

116-118. Put a prastha measure of śāli rice grain in a new pot. Pour into the vessel the two prasthas of the milk of a red cow that has a calf of the same colour. The whole thing is boiled over the consecrated fire. Lumps of this boiled rice are taken in hand and sprinkled with ghee. Sugar is added. The Mantra is repeated hundred and eight times. Homa is performed hundred and eight times. This homa is to be performed on the first day in the lunar fortnight. It shall bring about good fortune.

119-120. The same homa can be performed on Friday. By performing this homa for a year, the devotee shall be equal to a king. On the fifth day of the lunar fortnight, the homa is performed as before with a special care. On that day he shall perform homa with white flowers of Mallikā soaked in trimadhu. By performing homa with cooked rice and ghee the man invariably becomes the possessor of cooked rice.

121-122. By means of the homa with ghee as also with the gingelly seeds and rice grains one will obtain whatever is desired by him. One who performs homa with pink-coloured lotuses soaked in trimadhura, obtains within forty days the great Lakṣmī (good fortune) of praiseworthy physical from.

123-124. Beginning with the Full Moon day and ending with the same, the devotee shall perform homa every day with a thousand auspicious and full-blown Kalhāra flowers soaked in honey. He shall perform homa with devotion. There is no doubt in this that he will attain fame, wealth and sons. O Nārada, by performing a thousand homas with campaka flowers sprinkled with honey he shall certainly attain a hundred gold coins within a month.

125-127. Beginning with the New Moon day ending with it, one shall perform three thousand homas with flowers sprinkled with ghee. Within a month he obtains clothes of variegated colours. If he performs homa on the seventh day for hundred times with other loveable articles used for enjoyment of pleasures and with śāli rice grains sprinkled with milk he shall attain within a month many articles of sweet fragrance such as camphor, sandal etc. Within six months he shall undoubtedly attain flourishing increase in the śāli rice.

128-130. If gingelly seeds are offered in homa every day, he shall attain good health within a year. A man shall perform homa with Dūrvā grass in the three days connected with his birth daystar (i.e. previous day, the present day and subsequent day). He shall be free from agony. He shall enjoy great pleasures and live for a hundred years. Or he shall perform homa with guḍūcī, gingelly seeds and dūrvā grass in the three days around his birthday. Thereby, he shall attain longevity, glory, fame, enjoyment of pleasures, merit and treasure trove.

131. If homa is performed with ghee, milk pudding and milk in those three days in due order, he shall become the minister of a king with longevity, health and riches.

132-134. By performing homa with plantain fruits on the seventh day one shall attain good fortune every day. If one is afflicted by a terrible fever (caused by the derangement of humour one shall perform homa with a digit length of three dūrvā grass blades, and sprinkled with trimadhura. He shall perform homa every day. During those days he shall repeat Mantra every day touching water in the meantime. He shall repeat Mantra a thousand times. The patient shall use it for the healing purpose and the sādhaka for liberation from ailments.

135-136. The following articles shall be pasted together viz—the powder of the tree belonging to the constellation of the person intended, mustard, gingelly seeds, ground flour and the dust from the foot of the sādhya. These shall be pasted together and made into an effigy with the name in the heart. As before, this effigy shall be cut off with sharp steel weapons and offered for homa. Thus the person shall come under his control certainly within seven days.

137-139. The devotee shall instal such an effigy in the middle of the sacrificial pit and set it to fire. By this vidyā he shall perform homa every day during the night for three thousand times with mustard seeds soaked in its own juice. He shall bring the woman forcibly even from a distance of a hundred yojanas. By performing homa with Kauśika (Bdelluim) mixed with honey he shall attract a woman.

140-141. One shall attain riches and good fortune through jaggery mixed with coconut fruits. If homa is performed with Kalhāras sprinkled with ghee or red lilies smeared with milk or the flowers of Campaka, Bakula and Madhūka soaked in trimadhura one attains a virgin.

142-145. One shall attain clothes by performing homa with punnāga flowers. One shall attain the objects of his desire through ghee. If he performs homa with buffalo's ghee he shall attain buffaloes; if with goat's ghee he shall attain goats and if with cow's ghee he shall attain cows.

The aspirant obtains jewels by performing homa with jewels. With the ground flour of śāli rice grains along with sugar an effigy should be made. The letters forming the name are written in the heart. This should be fried in oil or ghee at night. By day and night he shall concentrate his mind thereon and repeat the Mantra. He shall then eat it. If this rite is performed for seven nights whether the person is a man or a woman or a king he shall be subservient like a slave. He will dedicate his mind, nay his very vital breath etc.

146. The woman who performs homa with red or white flowers of hayāri (oleander) attains a great glory and prosperity within twentyfive nights.

147. By performing homa with the meat of ram smeared with trimadhra one shall attain gold. If the meat of ram is smeared with milk and homa is performed, one shall attain a very fertile land abounding in plants within forty days.

148. By performing homa with the seeds of lotus one attains good fortune within three days. When the Japa is performed with mantra one shall perform homa with bilva to the extent of one-tenth of it.

149. A person who has realised and achieved the mantra thus, shall be able to enliven people who are dead, due to serpent-bite by hitting their faces with a handful of water charged with the Mantra.

150. He can enliven the dead man by whispering the mantra into his ears or by hitting with a stick charged with the repetition of mantra in his head suddenly.

151-154. The source of origin is made in the middle of the sacrificial pit. The devotee shall duly perform homa therein. He shall perform homa with gingelly seeds, mustard, wheat, śāli rice and barley grains soaked in trimadhura. In order to attain flourishing prosperity he shall perform homa severally with the grains or with a few grains of them collectively. In order to attain good fortune he shall perform homa with bakula, campaka, lotus, Kalhāra, red lilies, white lilies and the flowers of mallikā, kunda and madhūka. By performing homa with aśoka, pāṭalā, bilva, jāti, white vikantaka, fresh blue lilies, hayāri flowers and karṇikāra, he shall attain good fortune, treasure trove, longevity and fame.

155. By performing homa with dūrvā, guḍūcī, aśvattha, vaṭa, āragvadha, white arka, and plakṣa, one is liberated from sickness ere long.

156-158. Death is the result of homa with mustard seed and ghee. Hence, for the death of the enemy one shall perform homa in the fire kindled by full pieces of wood, each four aṅgulas long. Thereby, there shall be sickness, misery and agony undoubtedly among the four types of troops of the enemy within seven days. One shall perform the worship of the eternal deities everyday and also homa with ghee.

159-160. In order to attain learning one shall drink water charged with the Mantra early in the morning. In order to get all objects, one shall worship Śiva with the fragrant substances viz. sandel, uśīra, camphor, musk, (pigment) saffron, black agallochum and sweat of deer as mada.

161. Early in the morning, one shall perform repetition of the mantras of Nityā deities along with the meditation of the mātṛkā yantra there for three times and then drink the auspicious water for the purpose of attaining eloquence.

162. As before, the devotee, strictly adheres to the diet of milk alone. He shall make a hundred thousand homas with red lotuses sprinkled with three sorts of sweet things.

163-164. A man who has achieved control over the Mantra by means of japa, tarpaṇa, homa, worship and sprinkling rites shall apply it to practical purpose. Otherwise, the deities of that Mantra catch hold of his vital breath by getting furious instantaneously. O sage, there is nothing anywhere in this world that cannot be achieved with this mantra.

165-168. At the root of the banyan tree in the forest, in the caves, on the top of mountains, in the park, in the middle of the forest, at the root of the Mother tree and on the shores of the ocean in the forest, the man shall try to realize Yakṣiṇīs. By performing homas all the seven days of the week with lotuses, red or white scented lilies and the sweet smelling śephālikā duly soaked in through sweet things, one attains success within forty days in battle duels, in wrestling bouts, in fulfledged war, in game of dice and in verbal arguments.

169. It is certain that he will attain success in all dealings. By performing homa with the flowers of āragvadha one makes the enemies stunned and benumbed.

170-171. According to the former procedure one should perform homa at the door with the seven flowers viz—karṇikāra, punnāga, nameru, campaka, ketaka, rājavṛkṣa and māgadha. The enemy shall either be stunned or broken down certainly.

172-174. In the fire kindled by the wood of the tree belonging to the enemy's constellation, one shall perform homa with the twigs of the same tree soaked in mustard seed and ghee. The enemy will bow down at his feet.

In the fire kindled by the firewood taken from the funeral ground one shall perform homa with the leaves, flowers and fruits of the same tree along with the worship of the lord of the day of the week. The fourfold troops of the enemy will be afflicted by ailments. Thereby, or due to their subsequent death he shall be victorious again.

175. On Sundays, in the fire kindled by the fire-wood of the arka plants, one shall perform homa in order with the leaves, flowers, fruits, stems and roots of the same arka plant.

176-177. The materials mentioned above must be soaked in ghee of a red cow having a red calf. He shall face the direction of the enemies' whereabouts and perform homa duly in the three-cornered sacrificial pit. The enemy runs away, or becomes afflicted by sickness, or bows down with fear.

Or for the same benefit one shall perform homa on Mondays in the fire kindled by palāśa tree wood with the five parts of the same Palāśa tree (i.e. leaves, flowers fruits, stems and roots) soaked in ghee. There is no doubt in this that the previous results will be achieved.

178-182. On Tuesdays one shall perform homa in the fire kindled by Khadira wood with its five parts soaked in ghee. Thereby, he attains the same benefit certainly. The same procedure is to be followed with apāmārga on Wednesdays, peepal on Tuesdays, udumbara on Fridays and śamī on Saturdays and with ghee from cow's milk. The colour of the calf of the cow shall be white, yellow, grey or dark black. He shall attain that fruit by homa in the fire kindled by the twigs of that tree.

Beginning with the first day in the lunar fortnight and ending with the fifth day, the devotee shall perform homa with śāli rice, Bengal gram, green barley and black gram. Those materials shall be soaked in the ghee produced from buffaloe's milk. He shall attain the same benefit.

183. Beginning with the sixth and ending with the seventh day one shall perform homa with the material mentioned before, devoid of their husks. The ghee must be the product of goat's milk. He shall attain the benefit mentioned before.

184-189. Thereafter, in the course of five days, the devotee shall perform homa with the material mentioned before and also the two types of gingelly seeds (white aad black), cooked rice with sugar and milk puddings soaked in the ghee, the product of sheep's milk. Through this homa he attains the benefit mentioned before. Similarly, in the fire kindled by the wood of the tree belonging to the constellation one shall perform homa with those materials soaked in honey. There is no doubt about this that he will attain the same benefit. The intelligent devotee shall at the outset achieve vidyā and afterwards realize the practical application of the same, by the grace of Maṅgalā. O brahmin, he shall worship the deity and then instal a virgin girl whose limbs are non-defective, who is immature, who has taken her bath, who is clad in washed white garments and who is auspicious for the purpose of worship. A young boy also of the same description can be installed likewise. He shall then worship the virgin with the vidyā. Touching his head he shall repeat Mantra a hundred times and then offer worship with red or white fragrant flowers.

190-192. Till the conclusion of the holy rite, he shall fumigate with gugula (Aromatic resin). The goddess will penetrate the virgin whom he shall worship devotedly. He shall render holy services unto her as mentioned before. Repeating the mantras he shall request her to grant him the desired benefit. On being duly worshipped she will disclose his past, present and future, what he has thought of in his mind and all the previous incidents in his former birth.

193. The devotee shall worship her as before and ritualistically dismiss her in his own self. He shall then repeat the Mantra a thousand times. With steadied intellect and the self full he shall move about happily.

194. By performing homa for forty days with red lotuses sprinkled with the three sweet things one attains glory and prosperity. With white lotuses one attains great fame.

195. By performing homa with red lilies one shall obtain gold, treasure trove or land within the stipulated time.

196. By performing homa with lilies soaked in milk one shall attain the desired object mentioned, as well as different kinds of food-grains. That man shall quickly be very fortunate.

197. By performing homa with lilies soaked in ghee one shall attain the described benefit. By performing homa with Kalhāra flowers soaked in ghee one shall become a favourite of the king.

198. One shall indeed attain four types of scholarship by performing homa with palāśa flowers mixed with three sorts of sweets at the very same time.

199. By performing the instantaneous homa with fried grain accompanied by three sorts of sweets one shall obtain a virgin endowed with all good qualities, for his wife.

200. One shall perform homa with scraped coconut kernel in soaked sugar, jaggery and honey. Without any effort he will be comparable to Kubera.

201-202. One shall attain eloquency by performing homa with cooked rice and ghee together with rice grains, gingelly seeds and the red or white flowers of Bandhūka. If he performs Homa with the red and white flowers mixed together he shall attain longevity and good health.

203-204. By performing homa with the three dūrvā grass soaked in three sweets one conquers the enemy. By performing homa with guḍūcī, milk pudding, gingelly seed, and lotuses mixed with sandal paste and camphor one attains glory and everlasting fortune.

205-206. Saffron shall be pasted with snow water together with camphor. Full blown flowers of kalhāra shall be soaked in the above solution and offered in homa. The devotee equates a king with his glory. He shall live on the Earth for a hundred years, without an enemy. He shall be free from agony. He shall be devoid of mutually clashing opposites. His mind shall be free from impurity.

207. By performing homa with pieces of sugarcane one shall obtain garments. So also through the red and white flowers of oleander.

208. By performing homa with pāṭalā flowers soaked in honey one can keep ladies subservient. Similarly, by performing homa with lotuses one shall attract and control a courtesan.

209. By performing homa with sugar soaked in the milk of a white cow that has a white calf, even a sinful person attains incomparable wealth.

210. By performing an instantaneous homa with cotton seeds smeared with Sauvīra (antimony) in crescent-shaped sacrificial pit, O sage, enemies become subservient invariably.

211. By performing homa with ariṣṭā (soap-berry) leaves and seeds in the fire kindled with its wood and through the homa of mṛtyu seeds sprinkled with the margosa oil, one kills the enemies.

212. Similarly, by performing homa with five materials of the cow or the seeds of Rudrākṣa smeared with oil the horses afflicted by the ailments are cured.

213. By performing homa with Karañja seeds sprinkled with its own exudation the enemy is haunted by ghosts. So also by performing Homa with the five parts of the akṣa tree, the same result is achieved.

214. By performing homa with the seeds of akṣa tree (Terminalia Belerica) mixed with margosa oil, the enemy shall be afflicted by epileptic fits.

215. By performing homa with the flesh of the animal pertaining to the constellation of the enemy in the fire kindled with the wood of the tree pertaining to the same constellation, the death of the enemy can be brought about.

216. By performing homa with the seeds of lotus smeared with mustard oil the enemy becomes afflicted with leprosy that may cause destruction of his body.

217. If in the middle of the night a homa is performed with pepper and mustard seeds smeared with oil, the enemy shall be afflicted by fever attended with burning sensation, the very same day.

218. For the sake of self-protection in the course of all these homas of restraining nature, one shall cause japa, homa etc to be performed through friendly persons who have acquired vidyās.

219. One shall quickly destroy the efficacy of the mantra of the enemy through Mṛtyuñjaya Mantra or through other vidyās applicable to the particular case.

220. In the Kṛtayuga the mantra is to be repeated three hundred thousand times, in the Tretāyuga twice that number (six hundred thousand times), in the Dvāpara it is to be repeated nine hundred thousand times and in the Kaliyuga it must be four times i.e. one million two hundred thousand times.

221. Homa is to be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it, the rite of offering water to the extent of one tenth of it, further, the mārjana rite is to be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it and to the extent of one-tenth of it brahmins are to be fed.

222. In this order, one shall adhere to the number of japas in accordance with the vidyā and perform japa accordingly for the achievement of the vidyā. Only then should he venture to put it to practical application.

223. O leading sage, the japa of Kāmeśvarī should be performed by twice the number. After the mantra has been achieved he shall put it to practical application.

224. O leading sage, it is mentioned that the japa of Bhagamālā is for a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it, the homa should be performed for achieving the vidyā.

225. The japa of Nityaklinnā is for a hundred thousand times. The homa should be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it for achieving the vidyā. Thereafter, he shall put it to practical use.

226. The devotee shall maintain silence and restrict his diet to milk alone. He shall perform japa of the mantra of Bheruṇḍā nine hundred thousand times. The remaining things he shall do as mentioned.

227. The japa of Vahnivāsinī is prescribed to be three hundred thousand times. Other things shall be performed by the excellent worshipper, as mentioned above.

228. The japa of the mantra of Mahāvajreśvarī is prescribed to be for three hundred thousand times. Homa, etc. should be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it, in the manner mentioned before.

229. O sage, without any lethargy the devotee shall repeat Dūtī mantra for a hundred thousand times. Homa etc are to be performed to the extent of one-tenth of it, in the prescribed manner.

230. Tvaritā mantra shall be repeated a hundred thousand times. O leading sage, for achieving the mantra, homa etc. are performed to the extent of one-tenth of it.

231. O excellent brahmin, japa of the mantra of Kulasundarī[1] is to be a hundred thousand times; Homa etc. to the extent of one-tenth of it.

232. O brahmin, the japa of Nityā extends to three hundred thousand times; homa etc. are mentioned to be extending to one-tenth of it in the stipulated manner.

233. O leading sage, the japa of Nīlapatākā extends to five million three hundred thousand times invariably; homa etc. extend to one-tenth of it.

234. O Nārada, the japa of Vijayā is for a hundred thousand times. The other means to achieve vidyā is mentioned as before.

1. Refer to note 1 on p. 1311.

235. One shall repeat the mantra of Sarvamaṅgalikā three million two hundred thousand times; homa etc. are to the tune of one-tenth of it.

236. The devotee shall restrict himself to vegetable diet soaked in ghee and repeat mantra or Jvālāmālinī eight hundred thousand times; homa etc with the articles mentioned extend to one-tenth of it.

237. O leading sage, the japa of Citrā is for five million two hundred thousand times. For realizing the mantra, homa etc should be performed in the manner laid down.

238. Thus, in brief, it has been mentioned in the Nityā paṭala. All things should be understood with reference to yantra.

CHAPTER NINETYONE

Maheśa-Mantra-Kathanam

(The narrative of the Mantra of Maheśa)

Sanatkumāra said :

1. Henceforth, I shall mention the Mantra of Maheśa that achieves every object. By propitiating it, man obtains worldly pleasures as well as liberation.

2. Hṛdaya (namaḥ), the letter following va (śa) Sūkṣma (i) (śi), lānta (va) attached with ananta (ā) followed by marut (ya). The mantra contains five syllables.[1] With tāra (om) in the beginning it is of six syllables.

3. Its sage is Vāmadeva, metre Paṅkti and its deity is Iśa. The preceptor shall perform nyāsa in six limbs with the six syllables of the mantra.

---

1. The five-syllabled, mantra of Śiva is namaḥ Śivāya. When om is prefixed to it, the mantra contains six syllables.

4-6. He shall fix the letters of the mantra and the mūrtis (the forms of the deity) in due order in the index finger, in the middle finger, in the last finger, in the ring finger and in the thumb.

They are Tatpurusa, Aghora, Sadyojāta, Vāmadeva, Īśāna. He shall fix them in the mouth, in the foot, in the private parts and on one's own head. He shall fix the aṅgas of the mantra adding jāti (namaḥ) in their sequence.

7-11. Thereafter, for protection, he shall perform Goloka nyāsa.[1] He shall fix in the heart, mouth, shoulders, thighs, throat, navel, sides, back, heart, head, mouth, eyes, nostrils, joints of the hands and feet together with the tips.

Thereafter, he shall fix on the head, mouth, heart, belly, thighs, feet, heart, lotus-like face, axe, gesture of deer, gesture of fearlessness, and the boons. He shall fix in sequence in the mouth, shoulders, heart, feet, thighs and belly. Thus the excellent worshipper shall fix the six syllables of the mūla mantra. Then again, he shall fix them on the head, forehead, belly, shoulders and the heart. Afterwards, the intelligent devotee shall perform the pervasive nyāsa with the mantra.

12. Obeisance to Śambhu, the deity whose form is immovable, who is a column of light and of the nature of nectar, and who manifests himself in four forms and whose body has received the splendour of their limbs.

13-16. The devotee who has fixed thus in his body shall meditate on the lord of Pārvatī. One shall meditate continuously on Maheśa who resembles the silver mountain, who is having the moon as his beautiful ornament, whose body is brilliant on account of jewelled embellishment, who holds in his hands the axe, the boon, fearlessness and the deer, whose face is inauspicious, who is seated in the lotus posture, who is eulogised by the group of gods, who is clad in the hide of a tiger, who is of the form of the universe, who is three-eyed, five-faced auspicious deity Śiva, the remover of all fears. A person who is initiated in the Śaiva tradition shall repeat this mantra two million five hundred thousand times.

1. It gives the procedure of Golokanyāsa. According to Rāghavabhaṭṭa the commentator of Śāradā Tilaka it should be done ten times.

17. He shall perform twentyfour thousand homas with good milk pudding. Then the mantra becomes mature and the bestower of achievement to the aspirant.

18-22. He shall worship the lord in the altar abiding by the nine Śaktis : Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, Raudrī, Kālī, Kalavikaraṇī, Balavikaraṇī, Balapramathanī, Sarvabhūtadamanī and Manomanī. They are the Śaktis belonging to Śiva's altar.

Namo bhagavate (obeisance unto the lord),unto one who is associated with the primordial Śaktis, then anantāya (unto the infinite one), then unto the nature of Yogapīṭha.[1] The mantra begins with om and ends with namaḥ.

With this mantra one shall offer the seat to the lord of Girijā. After conceiving the form of the deity by means of the mūlamantra one shall invoke Śiva therein and worship him.

23. In the pericarp he shall worship the image. Īśāna abides in the north-east, who resembles the colour of pure crystal. In the quarters he should worship Tatpuruṣa[2] and others.

24. They are of yellow, black, white aud red in complexion. They bear weapons of their chief. They have four faces each and should be worshipped in due order properly.

25. In the corners he should worship Kalās beginning with nivṛtti etc. which are of brilliant forms. The aṅgas are abiding in the filaments and he should worship the lord of obstacles abiding in the petals.

26-28. The eight attending deities are Ananta, Sūkṣma, Śivottama, Ekanetra, Ekarudra, Trimūrti, Śrīkaṇṭha, Śikhaṇḍin, Their complexions are red, yellow, white, reddish, black, red, of collyrium and dark colour. On their coronets are the new moons. They are stationed in the lotus and bedecked in ornaments. They have three eyes. In their hands they hold tridents, thunderbolt, missiles, the bow and the arrows.

---

1. The pīṭha mantra of Śiva runs thus : om namo bhagavate sakalaguṇātma śaktiyuktāya anantāya yogapīṭhātmane namaḥ

2. Tatpuruṣa and others are to be worshipped with the mantra of Śiva with om prefixed, adding the name of the deity.

29-30. Beginning from the north he should worship Rudra, Caṇḍeśvara, Nandin, Mahākāla, Gaṇeśa, Vṛṣabha, Bhṛṅgarīṭi and Skanda. They are seated in lotus seats. They have the complexion as follows : golden, crystalline, pink, dark-coloured, white as pearl, moon-coloured, white and tawny-coloured.

31. Thereafter, Indra and others equipped with thunderbolt and other weapons should be worshipped. He should worship the lord repeating the mantra a thousand times.

32. He will be liberated from sins and attain the desired prosperity and glory. If he repeats the mantra two thousand times he will be free from all calamities.

33. He who repeats mantra three thousand times attains longevity. If he increases the number of japa by a thousand he will attain the object of his desire.

34. One shall perform homa with white gingelly seeds alongwith ghee for a hundred thousand times. He will destroy all distresses arising from evil portents.

35. By repeating mantra ten million times he directly becomes Śiva. The six-syllabled mantra enclosed with hrīm becomes the eight-syllabled one.[1]

36. Its sage and metre are as mentioned before. Its deity is the lord of Umā. The ancillaries[2] have already been mentioned. One should meditate on Śiva along with his consort Umā.

37-38. Within his heart the devotee should meditate on the three-eyed lord as follows : He resembles the Bandhūka flower. He bears the crescent moon on his forehead with a smiling face. He holds in his hands the trident, skull, boon and fearlessness. He is embellished in beautiful ornaments. His body is embraced by the daughter of the mountain and she is seated on his left thigh. She embraces him with her arm. Thus the devotee should think of him.

---

1. A mantra of Śiva with hrīm prefixed and suffixed. Śiva is meditated upon as associated with Umā.

2. The aṅgas are hrāṁ oṁ namaḥ, hrīṁ namaḥ śiraḥ, hrūṁ namaḥ śikhā, hraiṁ śiṁ varma, hraum vāṁ netram, hraḥ yam astram.

39. He should repeat the mantra one million four hundred thousand times. He should perform homa in accordance with the right procedure with the excellent twigs of cassia fistula mixed with sweet solution fourteen thousand times.

40. He should worship the lord of Umā with sweet smelling flowers in the altar mentioned before. He should worship the attending deities as representing limbs outside beginning with Hṛllekhā.

41. They are to be worshipped in accordance with the injunction in the middle, in the east, in the south, in the north and in the west. He shall worship the bull and others in due order in the petals of the east onward.

42. Thereafter, he shall worship Caṇḍeśa whose hands shine with trident, axe, rosary and the water pot. His features are red and he has three eyes.

43. He shall worship Durgā who holds in her hands the discus, conch, fearlessness and the desired boon, who has the lustre of emerald, who is gentle, who has three eyes and who is bedecked in charming ornaments.

44. Thereafter, he should worship the six-faced deity with twelve eyes and holding the branch of the Kalpa tree and and jewelled bell. He has a brilliant form of a body and possesses the lustre of the rising sun.

45. He should worship Nandin too who is gentle, who is bedecked in jewelled ornaments, whose body is dark-coloured and who holds axe, boon, fearlessness and the battle axe.

46. Then, he should worship Vighnanāyaka whose lustre is like that of saffron, who holds noose, goad, boon and fearlessness and whose crest is adorned with the crescent moon.

47. Thereafter, he should worship the commander-in-chief of the army who is dark-complexioned, who holds a red lily in his hand, who has kept his left hand on the left lap, who has two eyes and who is clad in red clothes.

48. Thereafter, the eight mothers Brāhmī and others whose characteristics have been mentioned before, should be worshipped. He should worship Indra and others, the guardians of the quarters in their respective zones.

49-51. Then on one side of it, he should worship, in the due order, thunderbolt etc which are their weapons. The knower of the mantra who thus worships Śambhu, the lord of Umā, shall be the bestower of all good fortune and welfare of all the worlds.

The following is the mantra called Prasāda[1] viz sānta (ha) associated with sadyānta (au) the head of which is adorned with bindu (.). It is the bestower of all siddhis on the worshipper. The procedure of conceiving the six aṅgas is mentioned through the bījas along with six long vowels.

52. O Nārada, the sage etc. of this mantra are the same as six-syllabled mantra. The teacher should fix Īśāna and other forms in the thumb and other limbs.

53. The bījas are to be known in their order connected with Īśāna, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva and Sadyojāta.

54-55. Taking the five short vowels (o,e,u,i,a)[2] in the reverse order attached with ha, one should fix them in fingers, then again he should fix them on the head, in the mouth, in the heart, in the private parts and in the feet, in the due order. He should fix them in the faces above and in the east, in the south, in the north and in the west.

56-57. Thereafter, the intelligent devotee should fix thirtyeight Kalās in the body. The excellent teacher should fix rightly the Ṛk[3] verses of Īśāna in due order in the fingers beginning with the thumb and ending with the little finger. After fixing them again on the head, in the face, in the lotus of the heart, in the private parts and in the feet, he should conceive the aṅgas in the mouth and on the head etc.

58-62. After uttering the group of five tāras[4] he should say obeisance (namaḥ) unto the omniscient one in the heart.

---

1. Prasāda mantra of Śiva : Haum. The aṅgas are to be done with the bīja adding ā, ī, ū, ai, au, aḥ to it.

2. Okārādyai means o, e, u, i, a.

3. The verse refers to some Ṛk mantras occurring in the commentary of Śāradā Tilaka, Chapter XVIII. They are connected with Iśāna, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva, Sadyojāta.

4. Tārapañcakas are: om aim hrīṁ śrīṁ hskhphrem hsauḥ.

namaḥ. Svāhā unto the head with the nectarine one with the garland of light. Vaṣaṭ unto the tuft of hair (śikhi śikhāyai). Hum unto the coat of mail, to the one who has thunderbolt in his hand and is free. Vauṣaṭ after uttering Saum, Vaum, Haum to the three eyed-one who is of undiminishing power. After uttering ślīm puśum hum phaṭ unto the one who is of immesaurable power. With great concentration he should perform the rite of ṣaḍaṅga in the east, south, north, west and the middle.

63-66a. He should then fix five Kalâs of Îśāna in his faces thus : Îśāna the lord of all vidyâs, namaḥ unto Śaśinī, the first Kalā-Îśvara the lord of all beings. namaḥ unto Maṅgalā. Then uttering the Brahmādhipati, then again Brahmaṇo'dhipati, then unto Brahmeṣṭadā namaḥ. Then namaḥ unto Marīcī after uttering 'let me be graced with auspiciousness.' Namaḥ, unto Aṁśumālinī after uttering Sadāśivom. All these are preceded by om and followed by namaḥ.

66b-69. Thereafter, the repeater of the mantra should fix the four Kalās of Tatpuruṣa in the faces in the east, west, south and north. The first Kalā is constituted of Tatpuruṣāya vidmahe (We know that it is for Tatpuruṣa). Then after the word Mahādevāya dhīmahi (we meditate upon Mahādeva), Vidyā is said to be the second kalā. Tanno Rudraḥ (May Rudra). The third Kalā is Pratiṣṭhā and pracodayāt (may urge) and the last Kalā is Nivṛtti. These Kalās are used with om in the beginning and accompanied by namaḥ.

70. Thereafter, the repeater of the mantra should duly fix the eight Kalās in the heart, in the pair of shoulders, in the navel, in the belly, in the back, in the chest and in the heart.

71-74. After saying Aghorebhyaḥ the first Kalā (Umā kalā) as mentioned before, then Ghorebhyaḥ (Unto the terrible one), Mohā shall be the second Kalā. Then after Ghorā, Kṣamā the glorified third Kalā, then Nidrā should be the one after the word Ghoratara. After sarvataḥ sarva the Kalā named Vyādhi. After Sarvebhyaḥ mṛtyu the sixth Kalā. After Namaste astu (obeisance unto you). Kṣudhā shall be the seventh Kalā. Tṛṣā is the eighth Kalā after Rudrarūpebhyaḥ. All of them are preceded by Om and followed by namaḥ.

75. Then, he should fix the thirteen Kalās of Vāmadeva in the two testicles, in the pair of thighs, in the knees, in the calves and in the loins, in the waist and in the two sides.

76. After uttering Vāmadevāya namaḥ comes the Rāja Kalā. The second Kalā is Rakṣā which should be uttered after saying Jyeṣṭhāya namaḥ.

77-80. Kāmā is the fifth Kalā. Obeisance unto Kalā. Saṁyamanī is the sixth which should be uttered with Kalāvikaraṇāya namaḥ. Kriyā is desired to be the seventh which is followed by Balavikaraṇāya namaḥ. Vṛddhi is the eighth, after bala there is the sthirā Kalā. Then uttering balapramathanāya namaḥ the Kalā is known as Rātri. Then uttering Sarvabhūtadamanāya namaḥ the Kalā is Bhrāmaṇī. After namaḥ, Mohinī is said to be the Kalā by the knowers of the mantra. After saying unmanāya namaḥ Jvarā is the thirteenth Kalā.

81-86. They are glorified and used with om in the beginning, in the dative case and with namaḥ at the end.

He shall fix the eight mantra Kalās (mantra particles) of Sadyojāta in their sequence with his first Kalā named Siddhi uttering Sadyojātam prapadyāmi (I resort to Sadyojāta) in the feet, in the hands, in the nostrils, in the head and in the pair of arms. Vṛddhi is the second after uttering Sadyojātāya vai namaḥ. Dyuti is the third after Bhave, Lakṣmī is the fourth after the word Abhave. Then the word Nātibhave is followed by Medhā the fifth. Then the Kalā which is Prajñā, the sixth after Bhavasva mām. After Bhava the Kalā is Prabhā. Then after udbhavāya namaḥ, sudhā is the eighth Kalā. All the Kalās have Om in the beginning and are in the dative case and are joined with namaḥ.

86-87. Thus the thirty-eight Kalās of the five Ṛks have been mentioned. The devotee who performs these nyāsas in his limbs will become lord Śiva himself. Then with great concentration he should meditate on Sadāśiva thus.

88-89. He has five faces : white, yellow, black, white and the colour of the China rose. He has rosaries. His coronet is the moon. He is as refulgent as ten million full moons. In his hands, he holds the trident, the battle axe, the dagger, the thunderbolt, fire and the lord of serpents as well as bell, noose, boons and fearlessness. He is highly brilliant with ornaments.

90. After meditating thus, he should repeat the mantra five hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with oleander flowers soaked in honey.

91. He should worship the deity in the altar as mentioned before. He should conceive the form of the deity by means of the mūla mantra. In the form he should invoke the deity and worship him along with the attending deities.

92. In the north eastern quarter he should worship Īśāna who is white-complexioned, with three eyes and who holds in his hands Śakti, drum, fearlessness and boon.

93. In the east he should worship the three-eyed four-faced Tatpuruṣa who is as refulgent as the lightning and who holds the axe, deer, boon and fearlessness.

94-95. The most excellent among the knowers of the mantra should worship the three-eyed Aghora in the south, Aghora who is terrible with terrifying teeth, who has four faces, who has the colour of the collyrium and who holds in his hands the rosary garland, Vedas, noose, hook, drum, iron club, the sharp-pointed trident and the skull.

96-98. In the west he should worship the three-eyed Vāmadeva who has four faces resembling afternoon in lustre, whose coronet shines brightly by virtue of the crescent moon at the crest, who holds in his hands the deer, rosary string, fearlessness and boon. In the north he should worship the three-eyed sportive Sadyojāta, who resembles the camphor and the moon, who is gentle, who has smiling faces and who holds in his hands the boon, fearlessness, rosary garland and dagger.

99. In the corners he should worship the fiery-formed Nivṛtti and other Kalās.[1] All round the petals he should worship Ananta and others and the lords of impediments.

100-102. Outside of it, he should worship Umā and others and also Indra and others along with their weapons. After worshipping the lord of gods thus, with great devotion the knower of the mantra shall propitiate the deity with charming dances, music etc. as well as hymns.

1. Kalās are the shining rays. They are Nivṛtti, Pratiṣṭhā Vidyā, Śānti and Śāntyatītā. They are the sources of Pṛthvī to Śiva and they pervade the firmament. They are without body and composed of the form of rays.

Tāra (om), māyā (hrīm), Viyat (ha), the fourteenth vowel (au) along with bindu is joined with five-syllabled mantra and thus consists of eight syllables.[1] The intelligent devotee should perform the rite of nyāsa in the same manner as in regard to the five-syllabled mantra.

103-104. One shall meditate on Śiva, the lord of all, who has the lustre of saffron, whose jewel-set crown shines exquisitely, who has the moon for his crest-jewel, whose ornaments and unguents are divine, who has serpents for his sacred thread, who has placed one of his hands on the breasts of his beloved, who is seated on his left thigh, who holds in his hands the Vedas, battle axe, boon and fearlessness.

105. He shall repeat the mantra eight hundred thousand times and perform eight thousand homas with milk-puddings together with ghee after conceiving the form of the deity in the altar by means of the mūla mantra.

106-108a. The first āvaraṇa (surrounding circle is to be done with aṅgas, the next one is constituted by Ananta and others, the third one is cited through Umā, the fourth one is through the lords of quarters and the fifth one is through their weapons. The excellent aspirant should worship the lord every day. Thus, he will be able to enjoy good fortune by acquiring it along with his sons and grandsons.

108b-109. Tāra (om), sthirā (ja) joined with karṇa (u) and indu (.), then bhṛgu (sa) along with visarga (:). The mantra[2] consists of three syllables and is of the nature of Mṛtyuñjaya. Its sage is Kahola, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity is Mṛtyuñjaya Mahādeva. He should perform nyāsa in six limbs with sa joining it with six long vowels.

110-112. One should meditate on the deity who fascinates the universe. He is seated on two lotuses. He has sun, moon and fire as his eyes and a smiling face. His hands shine with the gestures of the noose, deer and rosary string. He has the lustre of the moon. His limbs are flooded with the nectar oozing out of the moon in his forehead and he is bedecked in necklaces and other ornaments.

---

1. The eight-syllabled mantra of Śiva: Om hrīṁ haum namaḥ Śivāya.
2. The mantra of Mṛtyuñjaya : Om j ūṁ saḥ.

113. The intelligent devotee should repeat the mantra three hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with pieces of guḍūcī soaked in pure milk and ghee.

114. After conceiving the form of the deity by means of the mūla mantra he should worship the deity in the altar belonging to Śiva. After propitiating the attending deities of the limbs he should worship the lords of the worlds.

115-118. The excellent aspirant should worship their weapons when outside. O excellent sage, this mantra has been made mature through repetition and worship. He should perform the practical application of the same as given in the kalpa (texts on rituals) for realising the desired aims. By performing homa with pieces of guḍūcī sprinkled with milk every day he attains the longevity of thousand months as well as wealth and sons. He should perform a thousand homas every day in the week with these articles in due order viz. guḍūcī, banyan, gingelly seed, dūrvā grass, milk, ghee and milk puddings. He should perform a thousand homas with these seven articles in seven days. He should feed more than seven brahmins with sweet dishes.

119. He should give fees to Ṛtviks, a pink-coloured milch cow as their fee. Afterwards, he should propitiate the teacher by means of cash payment thinking him as the very deity itself.

120. By this procedure the sādhaka will be free from the malignant influence of Kṛtyā and fever etc. He will live for a long time to see hundred autumns.

121-123. This homa is the bestower of peace in the following cases : in the rites of black magic, in fever, in the benumbed state, in terrible madness, in headache, in all incurable ailments, in the agony due to poison, in delusion, in burning sensation and in great fear. It yields all fearlessness. One should perform homa with these articles in the proper manner for those born in the constellation of stars of the three, one, ten and nineteen.

He should feed brahmins well versed in the Vedas with sweet things. He attains a long life and the desired glory in this way.

124. The intelligent devotee should offer oblation into the fire everyday with dūrvā grass. He will be able to conquer premature death. It increases longevity and health.

125. If in the three days (just mentioned) he performs homa with the twigs of guḍūcī, saffron and Bakula it will remove his ailments and death.

126. Homa performed with white mustard destroys fever. Homa performed with apāmārga twigs is destructive of all ailments.

127-128. Dakṣiṇāmūrtaye should be uttered first, then homage unto you who reside at the root of the banyan tree, obeisance unto him who is deeply engrossed in meditation, then to Rudra and Śambhu. Tāra (om) and hrīm should enclose the mantra.[1]

129-132. The mantra consists of thirtysix syllables. It is the bestower of all desired gods. Śuka is the sage and Anuṣṭup is the metre. The deity is Śambhu Dakṣiṇāmūrti. The aṅgas, heart etc, are conceived by the syllables of the mantra. It is accompanied by Om and hrīm at the beginning and the end. They are divided into groups of six, six, eight, eight, five and three letters each. He should fix the syllables of mantra on the head, forehead, eyes, ears, cheeks, nose, mouth, joints of the hands, throat, breasts, heart, navel, hips, private parts and the joints of the feet. The pervasive should be performed in the body with Om and hrīm.

133-138. There is a lofty banyan tree on the ridge of the Himālayas frequented by Siddhas and Kinnaras. The tree has fruits shining like rubies. It has shadowed sunlight by its far-extending branches. The full-blown trees are embraced by the clusters of creepers in full bloom. The place has been rendered cool by the winds blowing over the mountain streams flowing out of the rock crevasses. Groups of celestial damels sing while the flocks of peacocks dance. Different quarters are resonant by the cooing of cuckoos. The region is frequented by the animals which have eschewed their mutual animosity. It is beautified by fragrant flowers of both aquatic and terrestrial origin. It is continuously and happily resorted to by the sages, Śuka and others. It is frequently supervised by the gods, the chief of whom is Indra and who are accompanied by their womenfolk and others.

1. It gives the mantra of Dakṣiṇāmūrti thus : Oṁ Dakṣiṇāmūrtaye tubhyaṁ vaṭapādanivāsine dhyānaikaniratāṅgāya namaḥ Rudrāya Śambhave hrīm.

139. The banyan tree is beautified by the thickly grown emerald-like leaves. It is embellished as though with hanging ornaments made of the nine precious gems.

140-143. It is a wonderful tree the shade of which is capable of dispelling worldly distress. Śiva is seated at its root in an auspicious throne set beautifully, studded with jewels. His embellishments are immeasurable. His face resembles the autumnal moon. He resembles the mountain Kailāsa, has three eyes and the crescent moon decorating his matted hair. He is seated in the heroic posture. He holds the posture of the hatchet, deer and has placed the delicate hand on the knee. He has kept a serpent firmly fixed under his arm-pit. He should meditate on Śiva in his pleasant mood.

He should repeat the mantra three hundred and twenty thousand times.

144. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with white gingelly seeds soaked in milk. He should worship the deity in the altar in the way as mentioned in regard to the five-syllabled mantra in accordance with the procedure given therein.

145. The devotee should restrict his diet to what is received by way of alms. He should continue to repeat this mantra for a month with his sense-organs perfectly under control. Every day he should repeat it four thousand times. He obtains great eloquency and glory of speech.

146. He should drink water after charging it with the utterance of the mantra thrice.

By the meditation of Dakṣiṇāmūrti the excellent aspirant becomes competent to acquire the ability of giving discourses on scriptural texts.

147-148. Om namo bhagavate Dakṣiṇāmūrtaye mahyam medhām prayaccha svāhā (Om obeisance unto lord Dakṣiṇāmūrti, grant intellect unto me). This is a mantra with twentytwo syllables. Its sage is the four-faced lord, the metre is Gāyatrī and the deity has already been mentioned.

149. He should conceive aṅgas by means of six long vowels enclosed with Om or with the syllables of the mantra in their sequence. The meditation is the same as before.

150-151. The Nīlakaṇṭha mantra[1] : Lohita (pa) is seated on agni (ra) followed by sadya (o) and bindu (.). This is the first syllable. Then dīrgha (na) is seated in vahnibīja (ra) and adorned with śānti and indu (i and·) The third is lāṅgalī (ṭha) and sarga (:). This mantra consisting of three bījas has the nature of Nīlakaṇṭha and is the remover of two sorts of poisons (moving and unmoving).

152-154. Two Haras and svāhā are the mantra for the heart, Kapardine svāhā is for the head, Nīlakaṇṭhāya svāhā is for the tuft. After the word kālakūṭa and viṣabhakṣaṇa in the dative (one who swallows the poison Kālakūṭa) and hīm phaṭ is the Kavaca mantra. Nīlakaṇṭhine svāhā is the mantra for astra (phaṭ). These are the five mantras for five limbs.

155-156. He should fix three bījas in their sequence on the head, throat and the lotus of the heart. He should meditate on the three-eyed Hara whose refulgence is like that of ten thousand rising suns, who is rendered splendid by the moon on the matted hair, whose ornaments are serpents and who holds in his hands the rosary string, trident, the skull of Brahmā and the club Khaṭvāṅga.

157. He should repeat mantra three hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with cooked rice soaked in ghee in a well-consecrated sacrificial fire.

158. He should worship lord Nīlakaṇṭha with deep concentration in the altar of Śiva, in accordance with the procedure laid down in regard to the worship of Mṛtyuñjaya. He is the destroyer of two sorts of poison.

159. Agni (ra), saṁvartaka (kṣa), āditya (ma), ra, anila (ya), then ṣaṣṭha (u) joined with bindu (.) (?) All these together constitute the bīja of Cintāmaṇi, the bestower of all prosperity.

---

1. The verse gives the Nīlakaṇṭha mantra : Prom hrīṁ

160. Kaśyapa is recounted as the sage, anuṣṭup is the metre. Ardhanārīśvara, the lord of the worlds, is the deity.

161-162. He should conceive six aṅgas by means of six consonants beginning with (ya, ra, la va, śa, ṣa,) in due sequence. He should meditate on Ardhanārīśvara who has three eyes, whose lustre is like that of the blue jewel. He holds in his lotus-like hands the trident, noose, skull and the red lily, whose ornaments are charming and who has the crescent moon over his tied-up matted hair.

163-164. He should repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times and perform three hundred homas with gingelly seeds soaked in sweet things. He should worship the deity in the altar of Śiva along with the attending deities such as the bull etc. Afterwards, the mothers and thereafter the guardians of the worlds along with their weapons are to be worshipped. For suppressing ailments, one should repeat the mantra beginning with Prasāda ten thousand times.

165. This bīja is encircled by the letters of vowels and nectar is flowing out of it. It is stationed in the disc of the moon. When meditated upon the head it dispels poison and ailment.

166-167. The bīja encircled by the vowels and stationed in the centre of the triangle with apex going upward and externally encircled by a hexagon shining with the letters ra etc. written in the reverse order. When meditated over the head of one afflicted by goblins, it will immediately destroy the goblin. If it is meditated on in afflicted limbs it certainly suppresses different afflictions.

168-175. Khaḍga Rāvaṇa Mantra

Om namaḥ Paśupataye, Om namaḥ Bhūtādhipataye (unto the overlord of individual souls, the overlord of elements), Oṁ namo Rudrāya (obeisance unto Rudra) Khaḍga Rāvaṇa, vihara vihara (sport, sport) sara, sara, nṛtya, nṛtya (dance, dance) śmaśānabhasmāñcitaśarīrāya (unto the deity whose body is worshipped with the ashes of the cremation ground) ghaṇṭākapālamālādidharāya (unto one who bears bells and skulls as if they were his necklace) after the word Vyāghracarma paridhānāya (unto one who wears the hide of the tiger), then say Śaśāṅkakṛtaśekharāya (unto one who has adorned his crest with the moon), Kṛṣṇasarpayajñopavītine (unto one who has black serpents for his sacred thread), then the pair of bala and the pair of cala, then anivartakapāline (unto one who holds the skull all the time), then the pair of hana (kill) bhūtān trāsaya trāsaya (terrify, terrify).. Thereafter again in the middle of the sphere kaṭa, kaṭa (shine shine) Rudrāṁkuśena śamaya śamaya (O Rudra, suppress it with goad). Praveśaya, praveśaya (make it enter), āveśaya āveśaya (possess it) caṇḍāsidharādhipataye Rudrāya jñāpaya svāha (make it known to the wielder of the terrible sword, the Rudra svāhā. This is Khadga Rāvaṇa mantra which contains one hundred and seventy syllables.

176. Bhūtādhipataye svāhā is the mantra for the worship. This is a mantra for the realised one. It can be realised perfectly by japa alone.

177-179. After twenty thousand japas it is capable of grasping goblins.

Hrīṁ sphura sphura (throb throb), prasphura prasphura (throb well), ghātaya, ghātaya (kill, kill) hum. The mantra ends with phaṭ. This great mantra consists of fifty one syllables. It is the weapon of Aghora. Aghora is its sage, the metre is trivṛt. Aghora Rudra, the leader of the mantra, is stipulated as the deity.

180-182. Heart consists of five letters, the head of six, tuft is recounted with ten, kavaca thread of the pair with twelve and astram (phaṭ) with ten. He should fix them with letters, split them into groups of eleven, five, six and two letters each on the head, in the eyes, in the mouth, in the throat, in the heart, in the navel, in the thighs in sequence as well as in the knee, in the calves and the pair of feet.

183. One should meditate upon the three-eyed Sadāśiva, the Aghora who is dark-complexioned and who possesses serpents, whose garments and the unguents are red and who wields many kinds of weapon.

184-185. The mantra is capable of restraining goblins and vampires.

(Another mantra) Om vānta (śa) is stationed in la which is adorned with (ī) and bindu (.) then pārśva (pa), vaka (śa) is joined with karṇa (u) and the mantra ends with varma (huṁ) and astra (phaṭ). This is called Pāśupatāstra mantra. It contains six syllables. It removes minor evil planets.

186-188. The six aṅgas are conceived by six letters ending with hum and phaṭ along with its jāti (naṁaḥ, svāhā). One should meditate on Paśupati whose refulgence is like that of the midday sun, who is terrible, who has three eyes, who has serpents for his ornaments, who has four faces and who holds various weapons. He should repeat the mantra six hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with cow, ghee in the fire consecrated by the mantra. He should worship the deity in the altar of Śiva along with the aṅgas, mothers, lords of the worlds and their weapons.

189. One should sprinkle water charged with this mantra on the face of one seized by goblins. As a result of the powerful influence of this great mantra, he will cry out loud sharp cry.

190. One who discharges the arrows charged with this mantra will instantaneously conquer the enemies like another Arjuna.

191-195. The final letter of the alphabet (kṣa) with bindu, obeisance unto Kṣetrapāla and namaḥ (is the mantra of Kṣetrapāla). After fixing the six aṅgas with the bīja having six long vowels, he should remember the three-eyed deity who has the lustre of the blue mountain. He is naked. His ornaments are serpents and he holds the skull, iron club and wears tawny-coloured matted hair which is tied up. He should repeat the mantra a hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with milk puddings sprinkled with ghee. Then he should worship the lord Kṣetrapāla in the altar conceived to be made of dharma etc. along with the attending deities. With the deep respect he should offer oblations unto him together with the attendants.

196-197. The following is the balimantra (the mantra for bali). Ehi ehi (come, come) vidviṣam (the name repeated twice) bhañjaya bhañjaya (break. break) nartaya nartaya (dance, dance) vighnān vināśaya (remove the impediments) Mahābhairava Kṣetrapāla balim, gṛhāṇa gṛhāṇa svāhā. (accept, accept the oblation of Kṣetrapāla. This is called the Balimantra which bestows the desired good.

198-199. The aspirant should make a large ball of rice together with the side dish. During nights he should call Kṣetrapāla in mind according to the way mentioned before and offer oblations in his hand. Delighted with this offering Kṣetrapāla grants splendour, intellect, strength, health, brilliance, nourishment, fame, and glory.

200-204. He should say Baṭuka in the dative and also āpaduddhāraṇa, then two kurus (kuru, kuru) and then Baṭuka in the dative. It ends with hrīm and is preceded by om. This mantra consists of twentytwo syllables. The aṅgas of the mantra are conceived by the syllables grouped into two, four, seven, four, four and one each. With great devotion he should meditate on the deity who is a boy resembling the crystal in complexion. His face shines with the tresses of hair, whose limbs are brightened by divine embellishments, who has three eyes, who holds a staff and a trident, who is delighted and who brings about fearlessness unto his devotees. He should repeat the mantra two million two hundred thousand times. He should restrict his diet to rice cooked in ghee and should have control over his senses. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with gingelly seeds accompanied by sweet things.

205-209. In the altar conceived by dharma in a lotus of great splendour, to which there will be the lotus of the ether that is abiding in a triangle within a hexagon, one should worship lord Baṭuka along with his aṅgas and attending deities in due order. "Devour everyday the flesh and blood of persons belonging to the side of the enemy. Devour it in the company of your gaṇas accompanied by your dogs." This is called the Balimantra. The name of the enemy is kept within. Delighted with the mantra Baṭuka will be chopping off the army of the enemy. Highly furious he will distribute their flesh among his attendants.

Caṇḍamantra :

Arghīśa (ū), dānta (dha) joined with ra at the tip of head and stationed on lānta (va) (ūrdhva). This Caṇḍa mantra consists of three syllables. The sage is Trika and the metre is anuṣṭup.

210-211. The mode of conceiving the aṅgas is being mentioned. Dīptā phaṭ is the heart. Jvālā phaṭ is the head. Jvālāmālinī phaṭ is the tuft. Phaṭ is the Kavaca. Hana phaṭ is the eye. Sarvajvālinī phaṭ is the next one.

212-214. After performing the rite of fixation of the six aṅgas he should meditate on lord Caṇḍeśa as follows : He has three eyes. His body is red. He is clad in red garments. He holds in his hands the trident, rosary, battle axe, and water-pot. He should repeat the mantra three hundred thousand times. To the extent of one-tenth of it he should perform homa with white gingelly seeds and rice grains mixed with the three sweet things. He should conceive the image by the mūlamantra in the altar mentioned in the case of five-syllabled mantra.

215. Ca along with bindu, then Caṇḍeśvarāya namaḥ is the mantra for the worship of Caṇḍeśvara.

216-218. The attending deities are the aṅgas, mothers, guardians of the quarters and the weapons, thunderbolts etc. One who is adept in the mantras pertaining to Śiva should particularly repeat the mantra of Caṇḍeśvara. He attains all desired objects. He rejoices both here and hereafter. Nārada, listen, I shall recount to you the divine hymn of Maheśvara. By reciting this at the time of worship, the mantras are realized and achieved.

219. Obeisance, obeisance to Śaṅkara who abides in all beings as their inner self and who is of the form of the earth, water, fire, wind, firmament, the lord of sacrifice, the moon and the sun.

220. Obeisance, obeisance to the eternal light that is beyond the senses, unto one who abides in the Vedāntas, to one who is identical with the Vedas and to one who is the origin of the Vedas.

221. Obeisance, obeisance to Bhava, to Śambhu who cannot be specifically distinguished in gross or subtle form and to one who is the remover of all miseries of worldly existence.

222. Obeisance, obeisance to one who is far away from the way of dialectics, who is the bestower of the fruit of austerities, who is the liberal bestower of fourfold aims of life and who is omniscient.

223. Obeisance, obeisance to one without attributes, to one who has neither the beginning nor the middle and nor the end, who has dispelled all fears, to the supreme lord who is meditated upon by yogins.

224. Obeisance, obeisance to the destroyer of time, unto the immanent one, to one who is difficult to be thought of, to one who shines with the moon, and to the destroyer of arrogance of Kandarpa (the god of Love).

225. Obeisance, obeisance to the swallower of poison, to one who moves about riding on the shoulder of the bull, to one who has tied the matted hair with the garland of the river Gaṅgā.

226. Obeisance, obeisance to the purest one, to one of pure mood and to one who is the inner soul of the pure, to the destroyer of Pura, to the perfect one of auspicious name.

227. Obeisance, obeisance to the one who is devoted to his devotees, to one who is the bestower of worldly enjoyment and liberation, to the lord of all worlds, to one who is without garments and to one who is the final resort.

228. Obeisance, obeisance to the origin of Trimūrtis (the three deities of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra) to one with three eyes, to the light of three lights (sun, moon and fire), to the remover of the cycle of births.

229. Obeisance, obeisance to one whose feet have been rendered pink in colour by the jewelset crowns of gods and demons, to the lovely one who has given over half of his limbs to his beloved wife.

230. O brahmin, this hymn to Maheśa is the destroyer of all sins. It accords nearness to Śiva and is the illuminator of all Tantras.

231. This great scripture has been recounted to you. It is enlightening to the gods. It is the means to fulfil the desires of all worlds.

232. O brahmin, the mantras that have been mentioned in a general way in this text are meant for the good of the people. They are the bestowers of fruitful achievement.

233. Especially, the mantras the best among all, follow the Vaiṣṇava tradition, they are to be aspired after for fulfilling the four aims of life.

234. The mantras of Rāma, the mantras of Kṛṣṇa and the mantra of the mistress of Rāsa (Rādhā), of the Śākta, Saura, of Gaṇeśa and of Śiva have been mentioned which are the bestower of grace.

235. Among them, one should prefer those which are useful for the enlightenment of the self and which bestow liberation.

236. O sage, I have told you about the worship of deities with devotion. Now tell me what more you desire to know.

THE NĀRADA-PURĀṆA

PART IV

CONTENTS

TRANSLATION AND NOTES

Chapters	Part IV	Pages
92.	The Brahmapurāṇa : Contents and merit accrued	1345
93.	The Padma Purāṇa : Contents	1352
94.	The Viṣṇu Purāṇa : Contents	1357
95.	The Vāyu Purāṇa : Contents	1360
96.	The Bhāgavata Purāṇa : Contents	1362
97.	The Nāradīya Purāṇa : Contents	1366
98.	The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa : Contents	1368
99.	The Agni Purāṇa : Contents	1371
100.	The Bhaviṣya Purāṇa : Contents	1374
101.	The Brahma-Vaivarta Purāṇa : Contents	1376
102.	The Liṅga Purāṇa : Contents	1379
103.	The Vārāha Purāṇa : Contents	1382
104.	The Skanda Purāṇa : Contents	1384
105.	The Vāmana Purāṇa : Contents	1405
106.	The Kūrma Purāṇa : Contents	1408
107.	The Matsya Purāṇa : Contents	1410
108.	The Garuḍa Purāṇa : Contents	1413
109.	The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa : Contents	1418
110.	The exposition of Vratas to be performed on Pratipad (the first day of the lunar fortnight)	1422
111.	Exposition of Vratas to be observed on Dvitīyās (the second day of the lunar fortnight)	1428

112.	Enumeration of Vratas to be observed on Tṛtīyās (the third day of the lunar fortnight)	1431
113.	The Exposition of the holy rites to be performed on Caturthīs (the fourth day of the lunar fortnight)	1440
114.	The Exposition of Holy Vratas to be performed on Pañcamī days (the fifth day of the lunar fortnight)	1449
115.	The Exposition of the holy vows to be observed on Ṣaṣṭhī (the sixth day in the lunar fortnight)	1456
116.	The Exposition of the rites to be observed on Saptamī (the seventh day)	1462
117.	The Review of the Vratas to be observed on Aṣṭamī (the eighth day of the lunar fortnight)	1469
118.	The Exposition of the Vratas to be observed on Navamī (the ninth day of the lunar fortnight)	1480
119.	The Holy rites to be observed on Daśamī (the tenth day of the lunar fortnight).	1483
120.	The Exposition of the Vratas to be observed on Ekādaśī (the eleventh day of the lunar fortnight)	1491
121.	The Holy rites to be observed on Dvādaśī (the twelfth day of the lunar fortnight)	1501
122.	The Vratas to be observed on Trayodaśī (the thirteenth day of the lunar fortnight)	1512
123.	The Vratas to be observed on Caturdaśī (The fourteenth day of the lunar fortnight)	1521
124.	The Exposition of Vratas to be observed on the Full Moon and the New Moon days	1529
125.	The greatness of the Purāṇa	1539

UTTARABHĀGA

Chapters

1.	The greatness of Ekādaśī day	1546
2.	Discussion on Tithis	1548

3.	Yama goes to the Region of Brahmā	1554
4.	An Appeal by Yama	1560
5.	The lamentation of Yama	1563
6.	God Brahmā's Reply	1565
7.	The Statement of Brahmā	1567
8.	The description of Mount Mandara	1574
9.	A dialogue between Rukmāṅgada and Dharmāṅgada	1577
10.	The dialogue between Rukmāṅgada and Harṣadeva	1582
11.	Rukmāṅgada meets Mohinī	1588
12.	Stipulation of the Conditions	1593
13.	The Fascination of Mohinī	1596
14.	The salvation of Godhā (the Lizard)	1599
15.	The dialogue between the father (Rukmāṅgada) and the son (Dharmāṅgada)	1605
16.	The Anecdote of a chaste lady	1610
17.	The Statement of Mohinī	1617
18.	Honouring the Mothers	1622
19.	The love-making of Mohinī	1627
20.	Dharmāṅgada's conquest of quarters	1631
21.	Dharmāṅgada's marriages and his order as a Ruler	1634
22.	The glory of the month of Kārttika	1638
23.	Mohinī's dialogue with Rukmāṅgada	1647
24.	Questions of Mohinī	1656
25.	The story of Mohinī	1662
26.	The story of Mohinī (continued)	1670
27.	The story of Kāṣṭhilā	1671
28.	Kāṣṭhila's story (continued)	1685
29.	The description of Kāśī	1693
3	The story of Kāṣṭhilā (continued)	1701
31.	The glory of the month of Māgha	1708
32.	The Narration by Sandhyāvalī	1713

SECTION IV[1]

CHAPTER NINETYTWO

The Brahmapurāna : Contents and merit accrued

Sūta said :

1. On hearing these words of Sanatkumāra joyously, the delighted Nārada who was desirous of knowing the excellent thing that is conducive to welfare, said again.

Nārada said :

2. Well done, O blessed one, Well done. The great sacred (Tantra) text, that is the most excellent among the (Tāntric) scriptural texts has been narrated by you. It renders great benefit to all the worlds.

3. Now I wish to hear the excellent narration of Purāṇas. O sage, tell me whatever (i.e. all legendary episodes) is narrated in each of the different Purāṇas, since you are considered to be omniscient.

Sūta said :

4. O Brāhmaṇa, on hearing those auspicious words of Nārada, his enquiry regarding the stories in the Purāṇas, Sanatkumāra replied.

1 This section is historically very important as it records the detailed contents of each Mahāpurāṇa as they stood before the final redaction of the present NP. As the notes below will show, the NP does not cover all the contents of all the Purāṇas and the information regarding interlocutors etc, is at variance with the published editions of these Purāṇas. But that does not mean that whatever is not recorded in the NP. is spurious. Critical editions based on all-India Mss. of the Purāṇas will be more reliable in this matter.

Sanatkumāra said :

5. O Brāhmaṇa, the stories extant in the Purāṇas are miraculous and very detailed. They have originated in the different Kalpas[1] and they include different stories and anecdotes.

6. This sage Sanātana is the most excellent among the knowers of many Kalpas. Ask him about this. No one else knows as much as he does.

7. On hearing these words of the noble-souled Sanatkumāra, Nārada bowed to Sanātana with great humility and submitted :

Nārada said :

8-9. O Brāhmaṇa, the most excellent one among the knowers of the Purāṇas, interested in the discussion of the perfect knowledge, kindly recount to me the classification of the Purāṇas in their entirety, on hearing which everything becomes heard, on knowing which everything is known. It is by following the injunctions therein that everything meritorious is done.

10-11. The duties of the different castes and stages of life are clearly understood from it. How many are the Purāṇas ? What is the magnitude (extent) of each ? What are the stories that they contain ? O holy Lord, tell me. So also recount to me the different stories based on the four castes of people, as well as the details of the different holy observances.

12. Please reveal clearly the stories of the different races and dynasties in the order of their creation. O Holy Lord, there is no one superior to you in the knowledge of the stories contained in the Purāṇas.

13a. Hence tell me the story (i.e. the content of the Purāṇas) that dispels all doubts.

Sūta said :

13b-14a. O Brāhmaṇas, on hearing the speech (request)

1. This is a convenient plea to reconcile different versions of the same story in different Purāṇas.

of Nārada, Sanātana, the most excellent one among the knowers, meditated on Nārāyaṇa for a short while and said :

Sanātana said :

14b-16a. Very well ! O excellent sage, very nice ! Since your steady inclination is diverted towards the knowledge of the stories in the Purāṇas. This is conducive to the help of all the worlds. I shall tell you what had been narrated by Brahmā formerly. Urged by filial affection, he narrated to Marīci and other sages.

16b-18. Brahmā's son named Marīci is well known as one richly endowed with Vedic learning. He is the master of the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas (lores ancillary to Vedas). Once he approached his father Brahmā, the creator of the worlds. O leading sage ! O bestower of honour ! He devoutly bowed to him and asked him the same question regarding the holy narrative of the Purāṇas as you do now.

Marici said :

19. O Lord, Lord of the chiefs of the Devas, the Creator and the annihilator of the worlds, O omniscient one, O presiding deity over all, obeisance be to you, who are gracious to all.

20. O father, I am desirous of hearing. Kindly tell me the core of the Purāṇas, their definition, their authority, the narrator and the inquirer.

Brahmā said :

21. Listen, O dear child, I shall tell you the collective account of the Purāṇas. On knowing it, all the extant literature among the mobile and the immobile beings becomes known

22. O bestower of honour, in all the Kalpas, there was only one Purāṇa[1] that was the very seed of the fourfold aims of life. It extended to a hundred crores of verses.

1. With due respect to P.V. Kane (H.D. V. ii.P. 829), I believe that originally there was a single text of literature called the Purāṇa, on account of the following reasons :

23-24. It was from the Purāṇa that all other sacred literature and sciences were evolved. As days passed by, people, could not grasp this Purāṇa properly. On realising it, Hari the highly intelligent deity, incarnated himself as Vyāsa in every age. In the course of every Dvāpara age, he reduced it to four hundred-thousand verses.

(1) Not only the NP here but various other Purāṇas record the tradition that originally there was one Purāṇa, vide Brahmāṇḍa (BdP) I.1. 40-41., LP I. 2.3., Mt. P 53. 3-11, Pd. P V. 145-52, Va. P. I. 60-61. And They have a number of common verses. For example compare, NP I.92.22-25 (our text) with the following from Mt. P. 53. 4-11. :

Purāṇam ekam evāsīt tadā Kalpāntare' nagha /
Trivarga-sādhanam puṇyaṁ śata-koṭi-pravistaram //
Pravṛttiḥ sarva-śāstrāṇām Purāṇasyā' bhavat tadā /
Kālenāgrahaṇaṁ dṛṣṭvā Purāṇasya tato nṛpa //
Vyāsa-rūpam ahaṁ kṛtvā saṁharāmi yuge yuge /
Catur-lakṣa-pramāṇena Dvāpare Dvāpare sadā //
Tad aṣṭādaśadhā kṛtvā bhūr-loke'smin prakāśyate /
Adyāpi deva-lokesmin śata-koṭi-pravistaram //

(2) All Purānas conform in general to a uniform structure known as Pañca-lakṣaṇa or claim to have the following five characteristic topics viz., the creation of the Universe (Sarga) after destruction or Pralaya (Pratisarga)

(3) Genealogy of Sages and Kings (Vaṁśa) (4) the great periods called Manvantaras, (5) history of dynasties both Solar and Lunar races. etc. (Vaṁśānucarita)

(4) Not only verses but long passages of verses are found common to a number of Purāṇas.

Thus each Purāṇa tries to follow the proto-type of that ancient text called the Purāṇa.

(5) The Atharva Veda (AV. XI. 7. 24 and XV. 6. 10-11) mentions Purāṇa which shows that there was no proliferation of Purāṇa upto the final redaction of the AV.

It was by the time of the Dharma-Sūtras of Āpastamba and Gautama that Purāṇas with different names came into existence "approaching in the contents to some extent at least of some of the extant Purāṇas" (HD. V. ii. 318). Writers from the 2nd to the eighth cent A.D. from Śabara to Śaṅkara show that the Purāṇa texts before those authors exhibit the same contents and characteristics as many of the extant Purāṇas.

The later proliferation does not disprove the existence of one single work called Purāṇa.

For details, vide section 1 of the Introduction.

25. He divides Purāṇa into eighteen books and hands it over to the people of the Earth. Even today, original in the region of the Devas, the Purāṇa extends to a hundred crores of verses.

26-28. Of course, there is a condensed version in which the essence is described briefly in four hundred thousand verses.[1] The following are the three times six (eighteen) books viz—Brāhma, Pādma, Vaiṣṇava, Vāyavīya, Bhāgavata, Nāradīya Mārkaṇḍeya, Āgneya, Bhaviṣya, Brahma Vaivarta, Liṅgaka, Vārāha, Skānda, Vāmana, Kūrma, Mātsya, Gāruḍa and Brahmāṇḍa.[2]

29. The single narrative is called the thread that binds the narrator and the listener. I shall recount briefly. Listen with great concentration.

30. It was the Brahma Purāṇa that was narrated at the outset[3] by the noble-souled Vyāsa, the Vedic scholar, for the benefit of the whole world.

31. Indeed, it is the foremost among all the Purāṇas. It bestows virtue, love, wealth and liberation from Saṁsāra. It is rich with various narratives and historical anecdotes. It consists of ten thousand verses.[4]

1. The total number of verses in the extant Purāṇas as enumerated in Mt. P. & Va.P. comes to 400600 which is approximately the same as "Four hundred thousand" as mentioned here and in other Purāṇas.

2. The list of Purāṇas given here is the same as in the Bh. P XII. 13. 4-8, VP III. 6.21.23, Mt. P. 53.11 ff Va. P. 104. 2-10, etc. But there is some difference in the serial order. For example, NP. records the Vāyu P as the 4th in the list, while a number of others substitute the Śaiva as the 4th instead of Vāyu. A.D. Pusalkar has however, convincingly shown that the Vāyu is entitled to be a Mahāpurāṇa and Not the Śiva Purāṇa (Studies in the Epics & Purāṇas of India (SEP. Ch. 2 pp. 31-41) that the VP contains this list shows that these Purāṇas existed in the Gupta Age.

3. Like the NP most Purāṇas give the Brahma the first place in their lists. But the Vāyu 104,3 and the Devībhāgavata (13.3) put the Matsya as the first in their list, while the Skanda-Prabhāsa Khaṇḍa 2. 8-9 gives that honour to the Brahmāṇḍa.

4. The Bh. P. XII. 13.4 agrees with the NP about the number of verses (viz 10000) in the Brahma P but AP. 272.1 credits it with 25000 verses while Mt. P. states 13000 as the total No. of verses therein. Actually

32. O leading sage, in it is described the origin of the Devas, *Suras and Dakṣa and other Prajāpatis.

33. Then, there is the holy narration of the race of the Sun, the Supreme Ātman, the lord of the worlds. The narrative is destructive of great sins.

34. In the course of that narrative, the incarnation of the glorious Rāmacandra[1] has been recounted, Rāmacandra of blissful form incarnating in four manifestations (vyūhas).[2]

35. Thereafter, the lunar race is described. There is the story of Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of the Universe, that is destructive of sins.

36. There is the description of all the continents and sub-continents without omitting anything. The description of the nether-worlds and the heavens is also seen (given therein).

37. There is the enumeration of the Narakas (hells). There is a hymn and a narrative of the Sun. Pārvatī's birth and marriage are described.

38. Then there is the narrative of Dakṣa. There is the description of the holy centre of 'Ekāmra'[3] (Bhuvaneśvara in Orissa). O Nārada, the first part of this Purāṇa has thus been narrated.

39. In its second part, there is the description of Puruṣottama.[4] It is explained in detail along with the injunctions as to how a pilgrimage (of Jagannātha Puri) is to be conducted.

the Ānandāśrama Edt. of this Purāṇa contains 13,761 verses. In the Brahma P, Gautamī-Māhātmya is given in 106 chapters but the NP. does not record it—a big omission.

*Probably a misprint. It should be cāsurāṇāṁ ca 'and of Asuras'.

1. This story of Rāma though included in the list of contents of the Brahma by the NP. is not found in the printed editions (both Ānandāśrama Poona and Gurumandal (GM) Calcutta.)

2. Obviously the Pañcarātra doctrine of "Four Manifestations" is implied here as Rāma is an incarnation of Viṣṇu (Vāsudeva.)

3. This is in Ch. 41 of the Bd. P. (GM. Edt). Ekāmra is Bhuvaneshvar on the river Gandhavatī in Orissa—De 59.

4. The description of Puruṣottama Kṣetra and how king Indradyumna of Avanti carved out three wooden images (of Jagannātha, Balarāma and Subhadrā) is found in Chs. 44-51 of the Bd. P. This Puruṣottama Kṣetra is Puri of Jagannātha Puri or Śrī Kṣetra in Orissa. Puri is the ancient Buddhist

40. It is here itself that the story of Kṛṣṇa[1] is explained in detail. There is the description of the region of Yama and the procedure of the Śrāddhas of the Pitṛs (manes).

41. The duties of the different castes and stages of life have been described in detail. There is the narration of Viṣṇu-Dharma and the Yugas as well as the Pralaya (dissolution of the world).

42. There is the narration of the Yogas and the Sāṅkhyas. There is the description of Brahmavāda (Philosophy of the Brahman) and the eulogy of the Purāṇa.

43. Thus the Brahma Purāṇa that consists of two parts has been described. It is destructive of all sins. It bestows all happiness.

44-46a. He who, after getting copied this Purāṇa consisting of the dialogue of Sūta and Śaunaka that yields worldly pleasure (here) and release from Saṁsāra (hereafter), donates devoutly that manuscript on the full moon day in the month of Vaiśākha, to a Brāhmaṇa well-versed in Purāṇas, alongwith gold, water and a cow, after propitiating him with garments, sweet dishes and ornaments,—(such a person) stays in the region of god Brahmā as long as the sun, the moon and the stars shine.

46b-47a. He who reads or listens to this index (table of contents) to the Brahma Purāṇa, O Brāhmaṇa, shall attain the benefit of the reciter and listener of the entire Purāṇa.

Dantapura which got its name from the shrine of Buddha's left canine tooth. The three images represent Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha and there were car festivals of these when Fa Hian and Hiuen Tsiang visited this place—De, pp 162-163.

1. VV 40-42 give some of the main items in the Bd. P. such as the story of Krsṇa (Chs. 180-211), description of the region of Yama (Chs. 214-216), Pitṛ-Śrāddha (219-220), Varṇāśramadharma (Ch. 222), discussion of Yoga (Chs. 234, 238), Sāṅkhya (Chs. 235, 239) and eulogy of Purānas (Ch. 235). But a number of chapters on sacred places and other important episodes which find a place in every Purāṇa and as such cannot be branded as 'spurious', are not mentioned in the contents of the Bd. P. as summarised in the NP.

47b-48a. He who restricts his diet to rice soaked in ghee and subdues his sense-organs through (religious) observances and listens to the whole of Brahmapurāṇa, shall attain the region of Brahmā.

48b-c. O dear one, What more needs be said ? By reciting this Purāṇa a man obtains whatever he desires.

CHAPTER NINETYTHREE

The Padma Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O son, listen. I shall tell you the story of Padma Purāṇa[1] It bestows great merit on those men who joyously read and listen to it.

2. Just as a man becomes complete with his five sense organs, so also is this Purāṇa with its five sections. It is destructive of sins.

1. This Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa is regarded as the heart of the Cosmic Hari (Pd. Svarga 62.22). There are variations in the nomenclatures of the different Sections (Khaṇḍas) and the total number of verses in this Purāṇa. The NP. gives Srsṭi, Bhumi, Svarga, Pātāla and Uttara as the names of its Khaṇḍas and this is borne out by the Bengal Mss of the Padma P—another evidence to show that the author of the NP was an East Indian. The No. of verses is 55,000 according to the NP., Bh. P., Mt. P., VaP. but the Brahma Vaivarta credits it with 59000 verses. The Ānandāśrama edition (Poona) mentions six Khaṇḍas viz. Ādi, Bhūmi, Brahma, Pātāla, Srṣṭi and Uttara & contains 48,425 verses. The Guru Mandal edition (Calcutta) of the Pd. P. has seven Khaṇḍas viz. Srṣṭi, Bhūmi, Svarga, Brahma, Pātāla, Uttara and Kriyā-yoga-sāra and they tally with the statement of the Pd. P. Svarga-Khaṇḍa 1.23-25 and the no. of verses is 55000. It is noteworthy that a number of topics in the published Padma Purāṇa such as the characteristic of heretics (Pākhaṇḍas), condemnation of the Māyā-Vāda, stories regarding wearing special Vaiṣṇava marks like ūrdhva-Puṇḍra, greatness of Dvaitism, etc. do not form a part of Pd. P. as describad in the NP:

3. O Brāhmaṇa, the details of religious duties are narrated in it alongwith the accounts of various incidents, anecdotes, etc. by Pulastya to Bhīṣma with the orderly account of creation of the universe, etc.

4. The greatness of Puṣkara[1] is glorified in detail. The procedure of the Yajña of Brahman and the characteristics of the study of the Vedas (are described).

5. Various kinds of (charitable and religious) gifts and holy observances are severally glorified. The marriage of Pārvatī is mentioned. There is the long narrative of Tāraka.

6. The greatness of cows etc. that bestows all merits has been mentioned. The killing of Kālakeyas and other Daityas has been described separately.

7. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the mode of worship of the planets and the rite of Dāna (religious gift) have been laid down. All these have been mentioned by the noble-souled Vyāsa in the first part of Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa (Section on creation).

8. In the context of the worthiness of mother, father and others of being worshipped, there is the story of Śivaśarman[2] at first and then that of Suvrata.[3] Vṛtra's[4] death is described afterwards.

The special feature of the Pd P is that it was used by Kālidāsa for the plot of the Śākuntala and the Raghuvaṁśa. There is one special Tīrtha Māhātmya in the Pd. P. which is not mentioned by the NP and is ignored by complacent editors of the Pd. P. at Bombay (The Veṅkaṭeśvara Press edition) and Poona (The Ānandāśrama Edt.) and that is the Karavīra Māhātmya of 7300 verses MSS evidence of which is unanimous in claiming it to be a part of the Pd. P. It is being edited by the present editor in the Sk-Pkt. series of the Shivaji University Kolhapur.

1. As in the case of the Br. P. in the case of the Pd. P, the NP mentions only a few topics practically as tokens in each Khaṇḍa and passes to the next Purāṇa (Viz. the Viṣṇu)

Thus the greatness of Puṣkara mentioned in this verse (No. 4) forms Chs. 111-117 and god Brahmā's sacrifice is in Chs. 124-131 and the Vrata topic mentioned in the next verse (No. 5) is found in Chs. 200-258 of the Pd. P.

Hence non-mention of a topic in the NP. is not a proof that the particular topic in the Pd. P is spurious.

2. vide PD P. (Guru Mandal Edition) Bhūmi Khaṇḍa (Ch. 1.4)
3. ibid Ch. 11, 21, 22
4. ibid Ch. 25

9. There are the stories of Pṛthu, son of Vena[1] of Sunīthā[2] and of Sukalā.[3] There is Dharmākhyāna (narration of Virtue) afterwards.

10. There is the narrative of service rendered to the parents. There is the story of Nahuṣa. Yayāti's[4] story is narrated. Gurutīrtha[5] (Holy centre) is reviewed.

11. There is the dialogue between the king and Jaimini in which there is a very wonderful story. The story of Aśoka-Sundarī[6] is mentioned alongwith the death of Daitya Huṇḍa.

12. The narrative of Kāmoda[7] alongwith the death of Vihuṇḍa and the dialogue of Kuñjala[8] with Cyavana. the noble-souled (sage).

13. Then there is the narration of the Siddhas.[9] The benefit of (listening and recounting) this section is narrated. Then there is the dialogue between Sūta and Śaunaka. This is remembered as Bhūmikhaṇḍa.

14. The origin of the Cosmic Egg is narrated by Sauti to the sages. The situation of all the worlds including the Earth is described. Thereafter, the holy centres are enumerated.

15. Then there is the narration of the origin of Narmadā. The stories of various holy centres in it are severally mentioned. The holy account of the holy centres like Kurukṣetra etc. has been described.

16. The narration of the merit of the Kālindī, the description of the greatness of Kāśi and Gayā, and the merit-giving glory of Prayāga.

---

1. PD Chs 27-29, Vena story is scattered upto the er of Bhūmi-Khaṇḍa.
2. ibid Chs 33-36.
3. ibid Chs 41-60.
4. ibid Chs 64, 72-83.
5. ibid Ch. 85.
6. ibid Chs 103-116
7. ibid Ch. 119.
8. ibid Chs 86,90,122
9. ibid. Ch 123.

The above correspondence of topics in NP. verses 8-13 in this chapter and the various chapters in the Bhūmi Khaṇḍa of the Pd. P, is enough to show the nature of the Anukramaṇikā Varṇaham (The description of the Index or table of contents) of the Pd. P. and NP.

17. The review of the path of activity (Karmayoga) in accordance with the castes and stages of life. The dialogue between Vyāsa and Jaimini is comprised of holy rites and stories.

18. The story of churning the ocean, thereafter, the enumeration of holy vows. The greatness of Ūrjapañcāha and the hymn that dispels all guilts.

O Brāhmaṇa, this is the section called Svarga Khaṇḍa. It is destructive of all sins.

19-21. The description of Rāma's horse sacrifice, Rāma's coronation at the outset, the arrival of Agastya and others, the narration of the family of Paulastya. The instruction regarding horse sacrifice. Then the description of rites regarding the sacrificial horse. The holy stories of many kings. The description of god Jagannātha (the Lord of the Universe) of Puri, the greatness of Vṛndāvana; it is destructive of all sins.

22. The narration of the perpetual sports of the incarnation of Kṛṣṇa, the greatness of the ablution in the month of Vaiśākha, the benefit of ablution, gifts and worship.

23. The dialogue between the Earth and Divine Boar (Viṣṇu-Varāha), the story of Yama and the Brāhmaṇa, the dialogue of the messengers of the king, review of the Hymn of Kṛṣṇa.

24. The meeting of Śiva and Śambhu (?), then the story of Dadhīca, the incomparable greatness of the Bhasma, the excellent greatness of Śiva.

25. The story of the son of Devarāta, the praise of the knower of the Purāṇas, the narrative of Gautama, then the Śiva-Gītā.

26-27a. The story of Rāma in another Kalpa, the stay in the hermitage of Bhāradvāja. This is the Pātālakhaṇḍa* (The section on Pātāla). It is destructive of all the sins of those who listen and recite. It bestows all desired benefits.

*Some topics mentioned in the NP are found in the extant Pd. Purāṇa e.g. greatness of Bhasma (chs 105-108), Praise of the knower of Purāṇas (chs 114-115), The story of Gautama (ch. 114)—Vide Pd. P. Pātāla (G. M. edition)

27b-28. The story of Parvata originally recounted to Gaurī by Śiva; then the story of Jālaṇdhara, the narration of Śrī-Śaila etc.; thereafter, the meritorious story of Sagara is narrated.

29. The merit of Gaṅgā, Prayāga, Kāśi and the special merit of Gayā, the greatness (in efficacy) of the gift of cooked rice etc, the holy rite of Mahādvādaśī (12th Tithi of Bhādrapada (Śuddha) with Śravaṇa Nakṣatra.)

30. The greatness of twentyfour Ekādaśīs (eleventh day) in each fortnight is described severally, the narration of Viṣṇu-dharma, the thousand names of Viṣṇu.

31. The greatness of Kārttikavrata, the benefit of ablution in the month of Māgha. The greatness of the holy centres of the continent Jambūdvīpa, which destroys sins.

32. The greatness of Sābhramatī, the description of the origin of Nṛsiṁha, the narration of the story of Devaśarmā and others, the description of the greatness of Gītā.*

33. The description of devotion and the greatness of Śrīmad Bhāgavata, the greatness of Indraprastha with the stories of many holy centres.

34. The mentioning of Mantraratna, the description of Tripādbhūti; thereafter, the holy stories of the incarnation of Matsya (fish) etc.

35-37. The hundred divine names of Rāma, O Brāhmaṇa; thereafter, its greatness is described; then the testing of the greatness of Śrī Viṣṇu by Bhṛgu. This is the holy fifth section called Uttarakhaṇḍa. The excellent man who listens to the Padma Purāṇa comprising of five Khaṇḍas attains the abode of Viṣṇu after enjoying all pleasures here that he desires. This Purāṇa contains fiftyfive thousand verses. It is called Padma Purāṇa.

38. This must be written in full and handed over to a Brāhmaṇa well versed in the Purāṇas after honouring him suitably on the full moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha along-with a gold lotus. He who does so is bowed to by all the Devas. He goes to the abode of Viṣṇu. He who reads this index to Padma Purāṇa or listens to it attains the merit of listening to the whole of Padmapurāṇa.

*Vide Pd. P. Uttara Khaṇḍa, chs. 175-192.
Vide ibid. chs. 193-198.

CHAPTER NINETYFOUR

The Viṣṇu Purāṇa : The Table of Contents

Śrī Brahmā said :

1. O dear child, listen. I shall narrate the great Purāṇa of Viṣṇu.[1] It contains twenty-three thousand verses.[2] It is destructive of all sins.

2. In the first section, six divisions have been made by the descendant of Śakti i.e. Parāśara. In the first division the introduction to the Purāṇa is made to Maitreya.

3. The primordial causal creation, the origin of the Devas and others, the narrative of the churning of the ocean, the family-race of Dakṣa and others.

4. The story of Dhruva, the anecdote of Pṛthu, the narrative of Pracetas, the story of Prahlāda.[3]

1. Probably this is the only Purāṇa which conforms to the Pañca-lakṣaṇa definition of a Purāṇa. May be due to its being Pro-pañcarātra. Rāmānuja regards it as an authoritative text. Though I have seen the Veṇkaṭeśvara Press edition and that of Gopal Narayan & Co. with the comm, Viṣṇucitti and Ratnagarbha's Vaiṣṇava-kūṭa-Candrikā, I use here the Gita Press edition (Gorakhpur Saṁvat 2026)

2. Though the NP. and some other Purāṇas such as the Vāyu, Matsya, Bhāgavata and Brahma-Vaivarta state that VP consists of 23000 verses, the printed editions give only 6000 verses.

The Gita Press edition has 6373 verses. It appears that the NP in in verses 17b-18, regards VP and Viṣṇudharmottara Purāṇa as one book while Śaṅkara (800 A.D.) regards them as two separate works (PJ VIII 94-96) showing thereby that the present NP. was settled before 800 A.D.

3. In this verse the NP. mentions topics discussed in VP I. 11-22

5-6. The narration of the separate rulership and administration. These are the topics in the first division.

(The second division.) The narration of the family of Priyavrata, the review of the continents and the sub-continents, the narration of the nether worlds and hells; the review of seven heavens; the narration of the day of the week like Sunday and others alongwith their separate characteristics.

7. Then the story of Bharata, which points out the path of salvation, the dialogue between Ṛbhu and Nidāgha—these are topics in the second division.[1]

8.[2] (The Third Division.[3]) The enumeration of the Manvantaras; the incarnation of Vedavyāsa; thereafter, the rite that lifts one up from hell is mentioned.

9. The review of all the religious duties (Dharmas) in the dialogue between Sagara and Aurva; then Śrāddha Kalpa (The rituals connected with Śrāddha) is recounted; the classification of the castes and stages of life.

10. The conduct of life of the good is described; then the story of delusion due to Māyā; thus the third division that destroys all sins has been explained.

11. (The Fourth Division.) The holy story of the solar race, the narration of the lunar race. Alongwith that there are stories of different kings. O excellent sage, these are the topics in the fourth division.

12-15. (The fifth division.) The query about the incarnation of Kṛṣṇa; then the story of the family of cowherds; the death of Pūtanā during his infancy; the slaying of Agha, etc. in the course of his boyhood days; killing of Kaṁsa during the youth; the story of his life in Mathurā; then in the course of his prime of youth his sports at Dvārakā, the killing of all Daityas, the different marriages, staying at Dvārakā, the Lord of the Universe, Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of Masters of Yoga removed (lightened)

1. This verse refers to topics contained in VP Aṁśa II chs. 1-7, 12-16.

2. VV 8-10 mention topics described in VP Aṁśa II chs. 1-3, 8-9, 13-16, 17-18.

3. It appears that the NP is unaware of the chs. 21-24 which describe the future kings, in the IV Aṁśa of the VP.

the burden of the Earth through killing etc. of the enemies; the narrative of Aṣṭāvakra. The fifth division is thus recounted.[1] 16-17a. The story of Kali is mentioned, the four tvpes of dissolution. The Knowledge of Brahman reviewed by Keśidhvaja (for the benefit) of Khāṇḍikya. So the sixth division is recounted.

17b-18. Hereafter, the perpetual virtues called Viṣṇudharmottaras are mentioned by Sūta on being respectfully asked by Śaunaka and others. Many holy stories, holy rites, observances, and restraints were also described by him.

19-20. Dharma-śāstra (Code of Laws), Arthaśāstra (Political economy) Vedānta (Metaphysics), Jyotisa (Astronomy and Astrology), the narration of the races, hymns according to the context; and dynasties, Manvantaras (or Manus); different vidyās (lores) that are beneficial to the worlds are described. This is verily the Viṣṇu Purāṇa which is a succinct collection of all the topics of sacred scriptures.

21-23. In this, the events of the Vārāha Kalpa[2] have been narrated by Vyāsa.[3] He who reads this with devotion and he who listens to it with respect goes to the world of Viṣṇu. Both of them enjoy all pleasures there. This Purāṇa must be written and given to a devotee of Viṣṇu who knows the meaning of the Purāṇa on the full moon day in the month of Āṣāḍha alongwith ghee and a cow. O Brāhmaṇa, he who does so goes to the abode of Viṣṇu through an aerial chariot as refulgent as the sun.

24. O Brāhmaṇa, he who hears the contents of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa shall attain the benefit of the Purāṇa itself.

1. VV 12-15 summarize the topics in Lord Kṛṣṇa's life and form the basis for the X Skandha of the Bh. P.

2. The device to explain different versions of the same story is to attribute it to a different Kalpa.

3. In VP., Vyāsa is not the interlocutor. It is a dialogue between Parāśara and Maitreya.

It appears that the major portion of the present day VP is known to the NP and hence it obviously precedes NP in date.

CHAPTER NINETYFIVE

The Vāyu Purāṇa : The table of contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, listen; I shall describe the Vāyavīya Purāṇa[1] on hearing which one attains the abode of Rudra,[2] the Supreme Soul

2. This Purāṇa is reputed to comprise of twentyfour thousand[3] verses. In the context of Śvetakalpa, holy rites (dharmas) have been described herein by the wind-god.

3-6. This Vāyavīya Purāṇa has two sections. (In the first section) the characteristics of creation etc. are mentioned in details. Kings and their dynasties in different Manvantaras have been recounted. The killing of the demon Gaya[4] is described in detail. The importance and glory of (different months and of) the month of Māgha in yielding (religious) merits is mentioned. The merit accruing from charitable gifts and the duties of the kings have been described in detail. The precise descrip-

1. This is called Vāyu as god Vāyu is the chief interlocutor. The Mt. P. (ch. 53) declares that herein Vāyu proclaimed dharmas pertaining to Śveta-Kalpa. This Purāṇa is published by Veṅkaṭeśvara Press Bombay, Asiatic Society Calcutta, Ānandāśram Poona and Guru Mandal Grathmālā Calcutta (to mention a few).

2. This Purāṇa belongs to the Śaiva group and is characterised by the glory of Rudra as Mt. P. puts it. The elucidation of Pāśupata Yoga and the emphasis on Śiva Māhātmya made NP declare the attainment of Rudra's abode as the fruit of listening to this Purāṇa.

3. Though Vāyu, Mt. P., Bh. P and NP declare 24000 as the total number of verses in the Vāyu, AP gives the 14000 as the number of verses, while according to the Devībhāgavata it is 24,600 verses.

Actually the Ānandāśrama edition contains 10,991 verses. It appears that sections like Revā Māhātmya and other Māhātmyas which were originally in the Vāyu P. when the NP wrote this chapter, later got separated as independent works (Pusalkar —Studies in Epics and Purāṇas (SEP).—P. 7a). Pusalkar opines that the Vāyu is a Mahāpurāṇa while the Śiva Purāṇa is an Upa-Purāṇa (ibid 77).

4. Kane (HD. vii p 906) and other scholars regard this Gayā Māhātmya as a later addition to counter-balance the Śaiva bias in such chapters as 20.31-35, 24.91-165 (Sarva Stotra), 101. 215. 33 etc.

tion of the beings wandering over the Earth, nether worlds, quarters and the firmament is made therein and all the holy vows and observances etc. are mentioned. Thus the first Section has been stated in brief.

7-9. In the latter section, there is the description of the holy river Narmadā.[1] O leading sage, Śiva's Saṁhitā (compendium) is mentioned in detail. The eternal Deity who is inscrutable to all the Devas stays perpetually on the banks of Narmadā wholeheartedly. The waters of Narmadā are identical with Brahmā, Hari, himself, the great Hara, the formless Brahman and the Kaivalya (salvation) itself.

10. Verily Revā, (this Narmadā) is a certain Śakti in the form of a river which has been brought forth from his own body by Śiva for the benefit of the worlds.

11. Those who live on its northern bank are the followers of Rudra. Those who reside on the Southern bank go to the world of Viṣṇu.

12. Beginning with Omkāreśvara and ending with the Western ocean, there are thirtyfive confluences with other rivers that destroy sins.

13. There are eleven confluences on the Northern bank (the northern side) and twentythree in the Southern bank (from the south) and the confluence of Revā with the ocean is the thirtyfifth.

14. Together on both the banks of Revā, there are four hundred famous holy centres inclusive of the confluences.

1. VV 7-15 : The Printed Texts (both Ānandāśrama and Guru Mandal (GM) editions) do not give the chapters pertaining to the Revā Māhātmya which might have been there when the NP was written. In stead of the division Pūrvārdha and Uttarārdha as given in the NP (of the Vāyu-Purāṇa) the Vāyu itself (in ch. 103.44) states that it has four sections (Pādas) viz. (1) Prakriyā (2) Anuṣaṅga (3) Upodghāta and (4) Upasaṁhāra and it calls the Purāṇa as 'Four-footed Purāṇa narrated by Vāyu' in the next verse (ibid 103.45)

The Ānandāśrama edition gives the following division of chapters : 1. Prakriyā (chs 1-6) (2) Anuṣaṅga (chs. 7-64) 3. Upodghāta (chs. 65-99) (Upasaṁhāra (chs. 100-112)

The contents given in the NP are to a great extent different from those in the Printed editions of the Vāyu P.

15. O leading sage, there are sixty crores and sixty thousand holy centres at every step on both the banks of the Revā.

16. This Saṁhitā (compendium) of Śiva, the great Ātman, is very meritorious. In this the story of the river Narmadā has been detailed by Vāyu.

17-18a. He who writes this Purāṇa and gives the manuscript with great devotion to a Brāhmaṇa householder on the full moon day in the month of Śrāvaṇa alongwith jaggery and a cow, lives in the world of Rudra as long as fourteen Indras rule over the Heaven.

18b-20. The man who narrates this Vāyavīya Purāṇa or listens to this, regularly, restricting his diet to cooked rice consecrated with ghee, is undoubtedly Rudra Himself. He who listens to or reads this index (or the contents of this Purāṇa) shall obtain the benefit of listening to the entire Purāṇa.

CHAPTER NINETYSIX

Śrīmad Bhāgavata : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O Marīci, listen. I shall tell you (the story of) the Purāṇa, Śrīmad Bhāgavata that has been composed by Veda-Vyāsa and which is on a par with the Vedas.

2. It consists of eighteen thousand[1] verses. It is glorified as destructive of sins. This is a veritable wish-yielding celestial tree with twelve branches (Skandhas—sections of the Bhāgavata).

3-4. O leading Brāhmaṇa therein in the first Skandha, when Sūta and the sages meet together, the Lord is mentioned as embodying the whole of the Universe. The holy life of Vyāsa as well as that of the Pāṇḍavas (is recounted). Then the episode of Parīkṣit. This is cited as the first Skandha.

1. According to the Va. P., A.P., N.P., Br. V. & Devībhāgavata and the Bh. P. itself, the Bh. P. consists of 18000 verses. But actually the Gita Press edition of the Bh. P. contains 14,579 verses.

5-6. In the course of dialogue between Parīkṣit and Śuka there is the review of the two types of creation. In the course of dialogue between Brahmā and Nārada there is a nectarlike story of the Devas, the characteristics of the Purāṇa and the cause and origin of the creation. This second Skandha is thus composed by the intelligent Vyāsa.

7-8a. The anecdote of Vidura, his meeting with Maitreya : The Prakaraṇa (section) of creation from Brahman, the Supreme Soul; the Sāṅkhya doctrine propounded by Kapila : Thus the third Skandha is summarised.

8b-9. The story of Satī at the outset and that of Dhruva thereafter : There the holy story of Pṛthu as well as that of Prācīnabarhis : Thus the excellent fourth Skandha is told, while narrating the gross creation (Visarga).[1]

10-11a. The meritorious story of Priyavrata and the anecdote of the members of his family; thereafter, the description of the worlds included in the Cosmic egg. The condition of hells. This is considered (as the summary of) the fifth Skandha which is technically called Saṁsthāna or Sthiti.[2]

11b-12. The story of Ajāmila and the review of the creation by Dakṣa. The narrative of Vṛtra and thereafter, the meri-

1. The NP. upholds the view advocated by the Bh. P. II.90.1 that instead of the traditional five characteristics of a Purāṇa, the Bh. P. redefines a Purāṇa as possessing the following ten characteristics.

(1) Subtle creation (Sarga); (2) Gross creation (Visarga) (3) law and order ensured by God (Sthāna); (4) Protection—welfare of all (Poṣaṇa);(5) material lust for Karmas (Ūti) (6) the periods of Manus and history of that epoch (Manvantara); (7) accounts of the deeds of the Lord (Īśānukathā) (8) physical annihilation (Nirodha) (9) Liberation (Mukti); (10) the last resort of the Universe or the Ultimate reality (Āśraya).

These characteristics occur with some variations in the Bh. P. XII.7.9-10 but as Śrīdhara points out the terms Vṛtti and Rakṣā stand for Sthāna and Poṣaṇa. Vaṁśānucarita is used for Īśānukathā, Saṁsthā includes Nirodha and Mukti; and hetu is substituted for Ūti, Apāśraya for Āśraya.

2. Despite the efforts of Bopadeva in Harilīlāmṛta (and his able commentator Madhusūdana Sarasvati) to show how the contents of Skandha V demonstrate the characteristics of Sthāna, a modern reader wonders how the torious nativity of the Maruts. This is the sixth Skandha composed by Vyāsa in the course of the section known as Paripoṣaṇa (or Protection and welfare of all by the Lord).

13. The holy story of Prahlāda, the review of the castes and stages of life. O dear one, thus the seventh Skandha is mentioned in the course of the narration of the desire for action as directed by past Karman. (It is technically called Ūti).

14-15a. In the course of the narration of the part known as Manvantara comes the narration of the elephant-king, the churning of the ocean and the check on the prosperity of Bali. The story of the incarnation as Fish. This is the eighth Skandha. (It comes under Manvantara).

15b. The narration of the Solar dynasty as well as the review of the lunar race. O highly intelligent one, the ninth Skandha is mentioned in the course of the narration of the dynasties.

16-17. The story of the childhood of Kṛṣṇa and his boyhood; his stay in the Vraja; his early youth and the stay in Mathurā; his later youth and stay in Dvārakā and the removal of the burden on the Earth. This is the tenth Skandha in the course of narrating the characteristic section called Nirodha or control.

18-19a. The dialogue between Nārada and Vasudeva, the meeting of Yadu with Dattātreya and that of Uddhava with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The mutual fight and the annihilation of the Yādavas. This is the eleventh Skandha which is designated as Mukti (liberation).

legends of Priyavrata to Bharata (chs I to 15) followed by the mythological geography, ancient (mythical) astronomy and description of hells form an organic whole to be included under the characteristic Sthiti, Saṁsthāna or Vṛtti. Such doubts naturally arise when the text of the Bh. P. is stretched on the Daśa Lakṣaṇa bed of Procrustes.

It appears that the NP. accepts the traditional Skandha-wise distribution of the topics or the ten Purāṇa lakṣaṇas of the Bh. P. as folows :

Name of the characteristic topic.	No. of Skandha illustrating it.
1. Sarga	III
2. Visarga	IV
3. Saṁsthāna or Sthiti	V
4. Poṣaṇa	VI

19b-21. The future Kali is prophesied; the liberation of Parīkṣit; the composition of the branches of the Vedas; the performance of penance by Mārkaṇḍeya. The Vibhūti (elegance, glory) of Sūra (Sun-god) and thereafter, that of the Sāttvatas. The narration of the number of verses in the Purāṇa. This is the twelfth Skandha which is also called Āśraya (support). Thus the whole of Śrīmad Bhāgavata has been narrated to you, O dear one.

22. It is the bestower of devotion, worldly pleasures and salvation on the narrator, listener, instructor, supporter and the person who renders assistance.

23. The manuscript of this book is to be given with pleasure to a Brāhmaṇa devotee of the Lord alongwith a replica of a lion in gold, on the full-moon day in the month of Bhādrapada.

24. If any one desires for the devotion of the Lord, (he must give it) after duly worshipping him (the Brāhmaṇa) with clothes, gold etc.

That person too who reads or who listens to this index, attains the excellent benefit of listening to the entire Purāṇa.

5.	Ūti	VII
6.	Manvantara	VIII
7.	Īśānucarita	IX
8.	Nirodha	X
9.	Mukti	XI
10.	Āśraya	XII

This distribution is supported by later eminent writers like Bopadeva in Harilīlāmṛta; Śrīdhara, Vīra-rāghava, Vijayadhvaja, Vallabha and others.

As I have presented this traditional scheme and criticised it in details in my Introduction to the Bh.P. pp, xxii-xxxiv (AITM series vol. VII), I may briefly state that the claim of the Bh. P. as a Mahāpurāṇa with ten characteristics is tolerably justifiable within the limits of the Bh. P. as an epic of growth.

This traditional presentation of the contents of the Bh. P in the NP. shows that the major portion of the BH.P. belongs to the pre-NP. era.

CHAPTER NINETYSEVEN

The Nāradiya Purāṇa : Contents

Śri Brahmā said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, listen, I shall recount to you the Nāradīya Purāṇa comprising the twentyfive thousand verses,[1] based on the story of Bṛhat Kalpa.

2-3a. In the first quarter of the earlier (first) division, there is a dialogue between Sūta and Śaunaka, then there is a succinct description of Creation. Many holy religious stories connected with Pravṛtti (activity) have been narrated in the first quarter of the first division by Sanaka, the great soul.

3b-4. In the second quarter called 'Mokṣa Dharma', there is the review of the means to salvation, the detailed narration of the ancillaries of the Vedas and the birth of Śuka. All these have been recounted to the noble-souled Nārada by Sanandana.

5-7a. In the third quarter, the following have been narrated to Nārada by sage Sanatkumāra : Paśu's (individual soul's) liberation from Pāśa (bondage of Saṁsāra) as explained in Mahā Tantra; the consecration of the Mantras, the initiation, the uplift of the Mantras, the mode of worship, practical application, Kavaca (recitation of mantras as protection or coat of mail), the thousand names, the hymns to Gaṇeśa, Sūrya, Viṣṇu, Śiva and Śakti in due order.

1. According to the Vāyu, Mt. P., Bh. P. A.P., Br. Vaivarta and the statement of the NP. here, this Purāna consists of 25000 verses. But actually the Veṅkaṭeśvar Press edition of the NP contains 18550 verses (13144 in the I part and 5406 in the II Part) PJ. VII 2, p 349 states that it consists of 17549 verses. According to Hazra, the Mt. P., AP and Sk. P. had a different—an earlier—version of the NP before them, as that NP (according to these Purāṇas) was declared by Nārada with reference to Bṛhat Kalpa which is merely mentioned here. In the present NP., Nārada is a listener. Hence the present NP is different. Moreover, a number of Nibandha-writers quote from the NP but the quotations are untraceable in this extant Purāṇa. For example, the 47 lines quoted from the NP by Jīmūtavāhana in Kālaviveka are not traced in this NP. It appears that an earlier edition of the NP was a bigger one when the mediaval Dharma-śāstra writers used it.

7b-9. The following topics have been recounted to Nārada by Sage Sanātana in the fourth quarter : The characteristics of the Purāṇa, the authorities and means of valid knowledge, charitable gifts, etc. have been mentioned separately alongwith the proper time for the gifts. The holy vows that destroy all sins and that have to be observed on the Pratipad (first day) and other (subsequent) Tithis in all the months such as of Caitra etc.

10. Thus the first division is summarised. It is called Bṛhadākhyāna. In the second division there is the enquiry about the vowed observance of Ekādaśī.

11-18. It is a dialogue between Vasiṣṭha and Māndhātā : It contains the meritorious story of Rukmāṅgada, the origin and activities of Mohinī, the curse on Mohinī by Vasu and then the way of extrication therefrom; the holiest story of the Gaṅgā, the narration of the pilgrimage to Gayā; the incomparable greatness of Kāśī; the description of Puruṣottama, the injunctions regarding the pilgrimage to the holy centres alongwith many incidental anecdotes; the greatness of Prayāga; thereafter, that of Kurukṣetra; the description of Haridvāra; the narration of Kāmoda; the greatness of the holy centre Badarī as well as that of Kāmākṣā; the greatness of Prabhāsa; then the description of Puskara; the story of Gautama afterwards and then the hymn called Vedapāda; the greatness of the holy centre of Gokarṇa; the narrative of Lakṣmaṇa; the narration of the greatness of Setu (the Bridge built by Rāma from Bhārata to Laṅkā) ; the description of the sacred river Narmadā; the greatness of Avanti; and that of Mathurā; the greatness of Vṛndāvana; the approach of the Paśu (individual soul) near Brahman, the story of Mohinī thereafter. These are the contents of the Nāradīya Purāṇa.[1]

1. Despite the difference noted above, the division of the NP in five parts and the contents of each mentioned therein, do tally with the contents of the extant Purāṇa.

19-21. The man who hears this with devotion or narrates it with great concentration goes to the abode of Brahmā; no hesitation or doubt need be entertained in this respect. He who gives (the manuscript of) this book to an excellent Brāhmaṇa on the Iṣupūrṇā* (on the full moon day of the 5th month viz. Śrāvaṇa) alongwith seven cows, attains salvation. He who describes this index of Nāradīya Purāṇa or listens to it with concentration attains Heaven.

CHAPTER NINETYEIGHT

The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa : Contents

Śri Brahmā said :

1. O sage, henceforth, I shall narrate the Purāṇa named Mārkaṇḍeya.[1] It is highly meritorious to those who read and listen to it.

2. All the Dharmas have been reviewed therein with reference to the wise birds (in the Vindhya mountains)[2]. Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa is said to contain nine thousand verses.[3]

*The correct reading should be Iṣā Pūrṇamā; it will mean "Full-moon day of Āśvina (September-October).

1. This Purāna is available in two editions—B.I. (Bibliotheca Indica series) and Veṅkaṭeśvar Press. Both the editions, however, differ in the total number of chapters (viz. 137 and 134) and number of verses in many chapters. This Purāna is noted for the Devī Māhātmya or the famous Saptaśatī which, though an interpolation, must have taken place long before 1000 A.D., as verses from the Saptaśatī are quoted in the Dadhimati Mata Inscription (in former Jodhpur state dated 289 of the Gupta era (608 A.D.) vide Epi. Ind. XI. 299-303. This Purāṇa is assigned a date between 400-600 A.D. (Kane HD. V : 11. 903)

2. VV 2-3. This refers to the introductory part (chs 1-7) of the Mk. P. in which Mārkaṇḍeya directs Jaimini to approach the wise birds in Vindhya mountain to get answers for his Mahābhārara problems (about the Mahābhārata story such as the reason of Nirguṇa Vāsudeva's assumption of human form, Balarāma's token expiation for a Brāhmaṇa-slaughter etc.) I wonder why Jaimini, a direct disciple of Vyāsa, the author of the Mbh., approached Mārkaṇḍeya for problems about the Mbh and not to Vyāsa himself. The wise birds called Dharmas explain his difficulties.

3. According to the NP., Vāyu, Matsya, Agni and Bh.P the Mārkaṇḍeya P. consists of 9000 verses but the Veṅkaṭeśvar edition gives only 6447 verses

3. At the outset, the question of sage Mārkaṇḍeya to Jaimini is mentioned. Thereafter, the nativity of birds designated Dharma is recounted.

4. The story of their previous birth; the aberration of Divaspati (Lord of Heaven); the pilgrimage of Bala, the narrative of the sons of Draupadī.

5. The holy story of Hariścandra; the battle named Āḍībaka;[1] the narrative of the father and son (viz. Mahāmati and Sumati), then the story of Dattātreya.[2]

6. Then the story of Haihaya alongwith the great narrative, (the story of Kuvalayāśva ?) then the story of Madālasā is mentioned alongwith the story of Alarka.

7. The holy glorification of the creation is made in nine ways; the end of the period of Kalpa is pointed out, the review of the creation of the Yakṣas.

8. The creation by Rudra and others is mentioned; the activities in the continents have been mentioned; the stories of the Manus, diverse and destructive of sins, have been mentioned.

9. Among those stories, the story of Durgā is exceedingly meritorious, in the eighth Manvantara. Thereafter, the origin of Praṇava hailing from the brilliance of the three Vedas.

10. The narration of the nativity of Mārtaṇḍa alongwith its greatness; the race of Vaivasvata; then the story of Vatsaprī.

11. Then the holy story of the noble-souled Khanitra is mentioned; the story of Avikṣit and the glorification of

(PJ. VIII.2. (349). It is possible that when NP. was finally redacted, the stories of Rāma, Purūravas, Nahusa, Krsna etc. must have been in the then MSS of Mk. P., but they came to be deleted later and the printed editions of the Mk.P. do not include them. Hence the deficiency in the number of verses.

1. The combat fought between Āḍi (an acquatic bird) and a crane into which Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra had been transformed respectively due to curses given by them to each other due to the harsh treatment given by Viśvāmitra to King Hariścandra. God Brahmā intervened and stopped this duel.

2. Cf. Bh. P. I.3,52 where Dattātreya, the 6th incarnation of Viṣṇu explained Ānvīkṣikī to Alarka and Prahlāda.

"Kimiccha" Vrata[1] (the vowed observance called "What do you wish ?")

12. The story of Nariṣyanta, then the story of Ikṣvāku, thereafter, the story of Nala, and then the excellent story of Rāmacandra.

13. The narration of the line of Kuśa; the description of the lunar race; the holy story of Purūravas and the wonderful story of Nahuṣa.

14. The holy story of Yayāti, the enumeration of the scions of the family of Yadu; the story of infant Kṛṣṇa and then the story of his life at Mathurā.

15. The story of his life at Dvārakā, the stories of all incarnations. Then the description of the Sāṅkhya philosophy, the glorification of Sattva quality in the world.

16-18. Then the story of Mārkaṇḍeya; the benefit of listening to the Purāṇa. The man who listens to this Purāṇa called Mārkaṇḍeya with great devotion and respect, O dear one, attains the greatest goal. He who writes a gloss on this, attains the region of Śiva; He who writes the whole Purāṇa and gives it to an excellent Brāhmaṇa on the full moon day in the month of Kārttika alongwith the replica of an elephant in gold, attains the region of Brahmā. He who narrates or listens to this index (of topics in this Purāṇa) shall attain the benefit desired as in the case of the whole Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa.

1. Kimiccha Vrata is given in the MkP. 122 8,17,20. Atithi is asked what he wants and it is supplied to him. Avikṣit, the son of Karandhama carried this vrata of his mother and proclaimed : "O beggars (arthinah), I have solemnly resolved to give you whatever you wish".

kimicchatha dadāmyeṣa kriyamāṇe Kimicchike —Mk. P, 122.20

CHAPTER NINETYNINE

The Agni Purāṇa : Contents

Śrī Brahmā said :

1. Henceforth, I shall describe to you the Agni Purāṇa. The Fire-god recounted the events of Īśāna Kalpa[1] to Vasiṣṭha.

2. It comprises fifteen thousand[2] verses of various wonderful stories. It dispels all the sins of men who listen to this.

3. At the outset is the enquiry about the Purāṇa, then the story of all incarnations, then the chapter on the Creation and then the (mode of) worship of Viṣṇu and other things.[3]

1. This Purāṇa is an encyclopaedia of the mediaeval India as stated by it : Āgneye hi purāṇe'smin sarvā vidyāḥ pradarśitāḥ

AP. 383.52

Although the NP is supported by the Mt P. and Sk.P. in connecting the events in the AP to Īśāna Kalpa, the extant AP does not mention that Kalpa or that the incidents therein belong to that Kalpa. This is quite natural, as Hazra points out that the genuine Āgneya Purāṇa was forced to travel to the south and came to be known as the Vahni Purāṇa and is awaiting publication. Hazra states that it is considerably free from the influence of Tantrism while the extant AP is a spurious Āgneya Purāna written under the influence of Tantrism in the 9th cent. A.D. He states that the extant Agni Purāṇa is different from the AP which was before the writer of the NP. The Sk. P. states that glorification of the Agni is the aim of the AP but that is not found in the present text of the AP. Moreover, a number of verses said to be quotations from the AP in Ballālasena's Dānasāgara are not traced in the present text of the AP.

Hence, it is held that the published text of the AP is different from the text available to the writer of the NP (vide Hazra : Present Agni Purāṇa" —IHO.XII 683-691, 'Our Heritage' Vol. I.u 209. 45).

2. The NP. is supported by the Bh. P, and Br. Vaivarta in claiming 15000 verses to the AP. The AP also calls itself to be Pañcadaśa-sāhasram (382.64). The statements that it contains 16000 verses (the Vāyu, Mt.P Sk.P) shows that those Purāṇas refer to a different version The Ānandāśrama edition has 11,457 verses. But Hazra has shown that the Ānandāśrama edition is not the original Purāna but a late compilation, the original Āgneya or Vahni Purāṇa is unpublished (Hazra—"Discovery of genuine Āgneya Purāṇa", Journal, Oriental Institute Baroda V. pp.411-416.

3. VV 3-22 give the list of various topics described in the AP. As the Vahni Purāṇa is not available in print, nothing can be said about the contents of that genuine AP. But a comparison of the topics mentioned in these

4. Then the rites of fire worship, thereafter, the characteristics of the Mantras and Mudrās (gestures), etc., the injunctions regarding all initiations; the review of the procedure of ablutions.

5. The characteristics of Maṇḍala (mystic diagram) etc., then the rite of Mārjana (wiping off) with the water from Kuśa grass; the injunction regarding the wearing of the Pavitra (Kuśa grass with a loop and a tail worn like a ring), and then the instructions regarding the temples.

6-7. Then the worship of Śālagrāma etc., the separate signs and symbols of the Mūrtis, the injunctions regarding the Nyāsa rites, the worship of Vināyaka etc. alongwith their Pratiṣṭhā (installation), thereafter the rules regarding initiation of diverse kinds; the installation of all deities and the review of the Cosmic egg.

8. The greatness of the Gaṅgā and other holy rivers, the description of the continents and the sub-continents, the arrangement of the upper and the lower worlds, the review of Jyotiścakra (the circle of the luminaries.)

9. Jyotiṣa (Astrology and Astronomy) is then described and then the scripture "Yuddhajayārṇava" (Ocean of the conquests in battles), then the six holy rites are narrated and also the collections of Mantras and medicinal herbs to be used with Mantras.

10. The rites of worshipping Kubjikā (an unmarried girl of eight years) etc., then the six types of Nyāsa rites, then the injunction regarding "koṭihoma" (a crore of Homas), the review of the Manvantaras.

11. The pious rites of Brahmacarya (vow of celibacy) etc., then the rules regarding the rituals of Śrāddha, then Graha-yajña (the sacrifice for the planets) is mentioned, then the various holy rites laid down in the Vedas and the Smṛtis.

12. The narration of expiatory rites, the Vratas etc. to be performed on the various Tithis, days of the week and the constellations.

verses with those in the extant AP (GM;-edition) shows in majority of the topics mentioned in the NP are found in the extant AP.

13. The guidance regarding monthly Vratas, the rules regarding the charitable gifts of lamps, the worship of the Navavyūhas (the nine manifestations) and the review of hells.

14. The review of Vratas (sacred vowed observances) and charitable gifts, the direction regarding Nāḍī Cakra (circle of nerves) and the excellent rules regarding the Sandhyā prayers.

15. The stipulation regarding the meaning of the Gāyatrī, then the hymn unto the Liṅga, the specification of the Mantras for the coronation of kings; the righteous duties (and activities) of kings.

16. Then the chapter on dreams is mentioned, the review of omens, etc., the specification regarding Maṇḍala (mystic diagram) etc., then the rules regarding 'Ratna Dīkṣā'

17. The guidance in polity mentioned by Rāma, then the characteristics of Ratnas (jewels), then the science of archery is described, then the method of dealing is revealed.

18. The narrative of the conflict between the Devas and the Asuras, the review of Āyurveda (Medical Science), the Veterinary science (e. g. the treatment of elephants etc., and their pacification).

19. The treatment of cows, diagnosis and treatment of men, etc., then the different kinds of Pūjās; different kinds of Śāntis (pacificatory rites); then the science of prosody.

20. Then literature (literary criticism) and the (lexicon of) single-syllabled norms, thereafter, the enumeration of the formation of words, then lexicon according to the different groups and formations.

21. The characteristics of dissolutions; the review of the Śārīraka (limbs of the body in AP. ch. 370), description of hells, then the Yoga system of Philosophy.

22. Thereafter, the knowledge of the Brahman, the benefit of listening to the Purāṇa, O Brāhmaṇa, this is mentioned as the Agni Purāṇa.

23-25. He who writes this and gives it to a person who knows the meanings of the Purāṇa, on the full moon day in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa in accordance with the injunctions, alongwith a gold lotus and a replica of a cow in gingelly seeds, is honoured in the heavenly world. This index of topics in the Agni Purāṇa narrated to you is the bestower of salvation unto the men who read and listen to this. It benefits them both here and hereafter.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED

The Bhaviṣya Purāṇa : Contents

Śri Brahmā said :

1. Henceforth, I shall recount to you the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa[1] which yields all Siddhis and which bestows the desired objects of all the worlds.

2. In it, I have come up as the primordial maker of all the Devas. For the purpose of creation, there was born the Svāyambhuva (son of the self-born) Manu formerly.

3. He bowed to me and asked me about Dharma (pious and religious duties) that is the means of achieving all objects.

1. This Bhaviṣya Purāṇa is not what is mentioned in the Āpastamba Dharma Sūtra (I.6.19.13) not the extant Veṅkaṭeśvara Edt. For the NP in the following verses (VV 4ff) mentions that Vyāsa divided this Purāṇa into five divisions viz. Brāhma, Vaiṣṇava, Śaiva, Saura and Pratisarga. But the published Bhaviṣya Purāṇa has only four Parvas viz. Brāhma, Madhyama, Pratisarga and Uttara. NP verse 5 states that the Bhaviṣya P. described the incidents of the Aghora Kalpa which is not mentioned in the Printed Edition. The NP in V 6. states that the 1st Parvan (Brāhma) is a dialogue between Sūta and Śaunaka which is not found in the printed edition. Pratisarga Parvan in the printed editions is a fabrication as it refers to the stories of Adam and Eve, Kabir, Nanak and Caitanya etc.

Thus the account regarding the extent and contents of the Bhaviṣya P as given in the NP., Mt. P. 53. 30-31, AP. 272. 12 does not tally with the printed editions. The number of verses in the Bhaviṣya P is 14500 according to Mt. P. and Vāyu. P. but 14000 according to NP. verse 13 and Agni (272. 12) but the Printed edition is much longer (25,936 verses). PJ—VII-2, p. 349. Thus the NP describes a different version of the Bhaviṣya P. than the published one.

Very much delighted I expounded to him the Dharmasaṁhitā (a compendium on Dharma.)

4. When the highly intelligent Vyāsa classified the Purāṇas, thesage divided that Saṁhitā(of the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa) into five divisions.

5. The incidents of Aghora Kalpa are mentioned alongwith many wonderful stories. There the first Parvan is Brāhma where the Upakrama (beginning) is mentioned.

6. In the course of the dialogue between Sūta and Śaunaka* there is the transmission of the enquiry regarding the Purāṇa. It is full of the stories of the sun and accompanied by all narratives.

7. The entire form of the scripture is endued with the characteristics of creation etc. Thereafter, the characteristics of the calligraphy of the writers of books are mentioned.

8. The characteristic features of all Saṁskāras (purificatory rites) are mentioned here. Seven rituals regarding the Tithis of the lunar fortnight are mentioned.

9-10. The Kalpas for the remaining Tithis beginning with Aṣṭamī (eighth day) are mentioned in the section called Vaiṣṇava Parvan. In the next Parvan called Śaiva Parvan those who are different in bodies are mentioned. (?) In the Saura Parvan the final stories are mentioned. The next Parvan is called Pratisarga. It contains different stories alongwith the conclusion of the Purāṇa. It is the fifth Parvan.

11-12. Among these five, in the first Parvan, the glory of Brahmā is very much greater than that of Viṣṇu or Śiva in regard to Dharma, Kāma (love) and Mokṣa (salvation). Thus the story mentioned in the second, third and the fourth section (Varga) called Saura and in the last one named Pratisarga has been recounted.

13. The Parvan alongwith the Bhaviṣya has been proclaimed by the intelligent Vyāsa. The Purāṇa consists of fourteen thousand verses.

14. The Bhaviṣya is that Parvan (Purāṇa) where the equality among all the deities is glorified. In the point of view of the comparison of the Guṇas, the Śruti says that "Brahman is equal."

*Not found in the published version of this Purāṇa

15-16. That a learned person who being free from jealousy writes or gets written this Purāṇa and on the full moon day of the month called 'Pauṣa' (December-January) worships duly both the reader (of this Purāṇa) and the book (the manuscript of this Purāṇa) alongwith the replica of a cow made of jaggery as well as gold, clothes, garlands and ornaments.

17. Or a person who has subdued his sense-organs, observes fasts or takes only one meal per day of sacred Haviṣya food (food worthy of being oblated in sacrificial fire), hears or glorifies (recounts) this with concentrated mind becomes absolved of terrible sins and attains to the supreme region of Brahmā.

18-19. He who reads or listens to this index to Bhaviṣya Purāṇa as mentioned here shall attain worldly pleasures and liberation.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND ONE

The Brahma-Vaivarta Purāṇa : Contents

Śri Brahmā said :

1. O dear child, I shall recount to you the tenth Purāṇa named Brahmavaivarta.[1] It points out the path of the Vedas.

1. This Purāṇa is Brahma-Vaivarta as the entire Brahman was manifested by Kṛṣṇa :

vivṛtaṁ Brahma kārtsnyena Kṛṣṇena yatra Śaunaka |
Brahma-Vaivartakaṁ tena pravadanti purā-vidaḥ ||

—Brahma-Vaivarta 1.1-10

It is obviously a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa—mainly devoted to the glorification of Rādhā and as such is very popular with Gauḍiya Vaiṣṇavas. According to Wilson this work does not deserve to be called a Purāṇa (Viṣṇupurāṇa, Intro. LXV—LXVII)

2. In it the Lord himself assumed the form of Sāvarṇa and narrated the subject matter of the Purāṇa to Nārada,[1] the divine sage. He mentioned the entire miraculous non-mundane subject matter to him.

3. The essence of virtue (dharma), wealth, love and liberation from bondage of saṁsāra is the pleasure in and love for Hari and Hara. In order to establish their non-difference is meant the excellent Brahmavaivarta (transformation of Brahman).

4. The events of Rathantara Kalpa narrated in details by me in the Purāṇa of hundred crores of verses were condensed and narrated by the knower of the Vedas (i.e. Vyāsa).

5. In the Purāṇa called Brahmavaivarta he condensed it into four parts. This Purāṇa is reputed to contain eighteen thousand verses.[2]

6. It consists of parts (sections) called Brahmā, Prakṛti, Gaṇeśa and Kṛṣṇa. There the Purāṇa starts with the dialogue between Sūta and Sages.

7. The first chapter (prakaraṇa) pertains to the creation; then there is a great verbal disputation between Nārada and Vedhas (god Brahmā) in which both of them met with a great defeat.

8-10a. Then the attainment of Śiva's world. The acquisition of perfect knowledge through the realisation of Śiva's Ātman through Śiva's exposition. Thereafter, O Marīci, Nārada

1. Although the NP. states that this Purāṇa is in the form of a dialogue between Lord Sāvarṇi and Nārada, in the printed edition (GM) Sauti and Śaunaka are the interlocutors in the 1st (Brahma) Khaṇḍa while Nārāyaṇa (and not Sāvarṇi) and Nārada are the interlocutors in the rest of the khaṇḍas.

2. This statement of NP regarding the extent of the Brahma Vaivarta (18000 verses) is supported by the Vāyu, MT. P. AP., BH.P., and Brahma Vaivarta itself.

Aṣṭādaśa-sahasraṁ ca Brahma-Vaivartam iṣyitam goes to the hermitage of Sāvarṇi[1] which was resorted to by Siddhas for the purpose of perfect knowledge. That is an exceedingly meritorious hermitage causing wonderment in the three worlds. This is well known as Brahma Khaṇḍa. It is destructive of sins.

Br. Vai. IV. 131. 16

But in the Ānandāśrama edt. there are 20,694 verses (PJ VII 2. p. 349) and GM edt. adds an additional (spurious) khaṇḍa—Kāśīrahasya.

10b-11. Then the dialogue between Sāvarṇi and Nārada is recounted. It contains the greatness of Kṛṣṇa and a number of various different anecdotes, the greatness of the Kalās (digits) that are parts of Prakṛti is described.

12. The mode of worship in the precise manner has been described in detail. This is the well known Prakṛti Khaṇḍa that brings about prosperity.

13. The word of enquiry about the nativity of Gaṇeśa : Pārvatī's great and meritorious Vrata (holy vow) ; the birth of Vighneśa along with Kārttikeya.

14-15a. The wonderful story of Kārttavīrya and Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma). A great dispute arises between Gaṇeśa and Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma). This is the Vighneśa Khaṇḍa that dispels all obstacles.

15b-16. The enquiry regarding the birth of Śrīkṛṣṇa : The narration of his birth in wonderful manner, his departure to Gokula (the cowherds' colony), the miracles of killing Pūtanā, etc.; his sports during infancy and boyhood of diverse kinds, are described.

17. The Rāsa sport in the autumn alongwith the cowherdesses is mentioned; his secret dalliance with Rādhā is described in detail.

18. Thereafter, Hari goes to Mathurā accompained by Akrūra. After the killing of Kaṁsa and others Kṛṣṇa is consecrated as a twice-born (i.e. investiture with the sacred thread.)

1. The Printed text of Br. Vaivarta Brahma Khaṇḍa Ch. 28 does not mention Sāvarṇi at all. God Śaṅkara sends Nārada to Nārāyaṇa in the Badarivana and the rest of the Purāṇa is a dialogue between Nārada and Nārāyaṇa (and not Sāvarṇi though Sāvarṇi in the NP. is regarded as identical with Viṣṇu).

A detailed comparison of the contents of the printed Br. Vaivarta Purāṇa and those given in the NP shows that the author of the NP had a different version of this Purāṇa before him.

19. The wonderful learning of all lores from Sāndīpani of Kāśi, the killing of Yavana, thereafter the departure of Hari to Dvārakā.

20. The killing of Naraka etc, was wonderfully carried out by Kṛṣṇa. O Brāhmaṇa, this is the Kṛṣṇa Khaṇḍa that cuts at the root of worldly existence of men.

21. This is read, heard, meditated upon, worshipped and saluted. Thus is the Supramundane Brahmavaivarta Purāṇa.

22. This is narrated at the outset by Vyāsa. One who reads it and listens to it is liberated from the terrible ocean of worldly existence through the acquisition of perfect knowledge and the suppression of ignorance.

23. He who writes this out and makes a gift of it on the full moon day in the month of Māgha alongwith a cow attains Brahmaloka. He is liberated from the bondage of ignorance.

24. He too, who reads or listens to this index (contents of this Purāṇa) attains the desired benefit, thanks to Kṛṣṇa's grace.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWO

The Liṅga Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O son, listen, I shall recount to you the Purāṇa called Liṅga.[1] It bestows worldly pleasures and salvation on those who read and listen to it.

2. It was while stationed in the huge fiery column that Hara narrated (the subject matter in the Purāṇa) named Liṅga to me in order that virtue etc, may be realised. The story refers to the incidents of the Agni Kalpa.[1]

1. The LP is published by the Veṅkaṭeśvara Press, G.M. Calcutta. and MLBD, Delhi. Its translation is published in the AITM, Motilal Banarsidass, Delhi. I have used the GM. edition for reference here.

3. The same thing was described by the holy Lord Vyāsa in two parts. The Liṅga Purāṇa is mentioned to be miraculous with many narratives.

4. It comprises of eleven thousand verses.[2] It indicates the greatness of Hara. It is greater than all the other Purāṇas. It is the essence of the three worlds.

5. There is the enquiry at the start of the Purāṇa. The former creation is succinctly described. Then the Yoga system is narrated; thereafter, the Kalpa is recounted.

6. The origin of the Liṅga; then Ambā is glorified; then the holy dialogue between Sanatkumāra and Śilāda's son i.e. Nandin.

7. Thereafter, the story of Dādhīca, the review of the Yugadharma (virtue peculiar to the different Yugas), then the narrative of the Bhuvana Kośa (The globe of the world), then the Solar and the Lunar races are described.

8. Then the creation is described in detail; then the story of the Tripuras; the installation of the Liṅga and then the liberation of the Paśu (individual soul) from Pāśa (bondage i.e. from saṁsāra)

9. The holy rites of Śiva, the survey of good conduct Expiatory rites; Ariṣṭas (evil portents, harassments etc.); then the description of Kāśi and Śrī Śaila.

10. The narration of Andhaka; then the story of Varāha (The Divine Boar), the story of Nṛsiṁha and then the slaying of Jalandhara.

1. The NP states that the Liṅga Purāṇa (LP) refers to incidents in the Agni Kalpa, but LP I 2.1 states that it describes the incidents in the Īśāna-Kalpa.

Īśāna-Kalpa-vṛttāntam adhikṛtya mahātmanā/
Brahmaṇā kalpitam pūrvam Purāṇam Laiṅgam uttamam//

It means that the NP used a different and older version of the LP than the extant published editions.

2. This statement of the NP regarding the extent of the LP (viz. 11,000 verses) has been endorsed by the Vāyu, Mt.P., Bh.P., A.P. etc. The LP also states that it consists of 11000 verses ;

Asyaikādaśa-sāhasraṁ granthamānam iha dvijāḥ/

But actually the Veṅkaṭa Edt. of the LP contains 9185 verses (PJ VII—2. p. 349)

11. The thousand epithets of Śiva, the destruction of Dakṣa's sacrifice. Kāma is burnt down, then the story of the marriage of Girijā.

12. Then the story of Vināyaka, that of the kings and that of Śiva; then the story of Upamanyu. This is the summary of the first section.[1]

13. The narration of the greatness of Viṣṇu, then the story of Ambarīṣa, O sage, again there is the dialogue between Sanatkumāra and Nandīśa.

14. The greatness of Śiva, the mode of ablution and sacrificial system (yāga) etc. the injunction regarding the worship of the sun-god. Then the worship of Śiva that confers liberation from saṁsāra.

15. Many types of charitable gifts are mentioned; then the chapter on Śrāddha, the Pratiṣṭhā Tantra (the ritualistic text of installation), then the glorification of Aghora.

16. The great Vidyā of Vajreśvarī, then the glory of Gāyatrī, the greatness of Tryambaka, (the three-eyed Lord) as well as that of listening to the Purāṇa.

17. Thus the latter half of the Liṅga Purāṇa as composed by Vyāsa has been recounted by me and the greatness of Rudra is indicated.[2]

18-19a. This Purāṇa must be written and gifted to a Brāhmaṇa with devotion on the full moonday in the month of Phālguna alongwith gingelly seeds and a cow. He who does so, attains Sāyujya with Śiva. He does not have to suffer from old age or death.

19b-20a. The man who reads or listens to the Liṅga Purāṇa that dispels sins, enjoys pleasures in this world and at the end attains to Śiva's city.

1. Though the NP refers to a few topics in the Pūrva Bhāga, most of them are found in the extant editions.

2. A comparison of topics given in the NP and those found in the printed (GM) edition shows that the published LP has many topics common with the LP that was before the author of the NP.

20b-21. The man who reads the index and the man who listens to this – both of them are the devotees of Śiva. They enjoy both the worlds through the Grace of the Lord of Girijā. There is no doubt about this.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND THREE

The Vārāha Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O dear one, listen. I shall recount the Vārāha Purāṇa[1]. It is comprised of two parts and it continuously indicates the greatness of Viṣṇu.

2-3. The context of the Mānasa Kalpa composed by me before, or description of the acts I did in the Mānava Kalpa before was compiled by Vyāsa, the most excellent one among scholars in this Purāṇa that comprises twenty-four thousand verses. Vyāsa is the incarnation of Viṣṇu himself on the earth. There at the outset is the auspicious dialogue between the Earth and Varāha. (Divine Boar-Viṣṇu).

1. The Purāṇa is extant in two recensions—The Northern and the Southern. The Northern recension published in the B I. (Bibliotheca Indica) series contains 217 chapters and 9654 verses (with some chapters e.g. 81-83 in prose) and Not 24,000 verses as stated in the NP below (verse 2) and endorsed by the Vāyu, MT. P., Bh. P. and while the Agni P (272. 16) credits it with 14000 verses. Though the NP states that the Vārāha P. has two parts, the published edition has one part only, though there are indications in ch. 217 that there must have been a second part as well.

This Purāṇa is supposed to have been narrated by Viṣṇu-Varāha to the earth-goddess. Kane observes that it is remarkable that Vyāsa does not appear in this Purāṇa though Sūta figures at the beginning of several chapters (HD V.ii, p. 904).

It is obvious that the author of the NP had a different and bigger version of the Vārāha Purāṇa before him.

4. In the course of the incidents of the earlier period, there is the story of Rambhā and then that of Durjaya, thereafter Śrāddha Kalpa (the rituals of the Śrāddha) is described.

5. The narration of the great penance (Mahātapas)-then the origin of Gaurī, Vināyaka, the Nāgas, the commander-in-chief (i.e. Kārttikeya) and Āditya (the sun).

6. Then there is the narrative of the Gaṇas of the goddess, of Kubera and that of Vṛṣa; then the narrative of Satyatāpasa alongwith the narration of vratas.

7. Thereafter, Agastyagītā and Rudragītā are narrated; then the glory of the destruction of demon Mahiṣa (Buffalo) brought about by the three Śaktis.

8. Then is the chapter on Parvans (religious festivals), the incidental narrative of Śveta and the charitable gift of cows. All these incidents had already been pointed out by me in the section on Bhagavad Dharma (virtuous pathway to the Lord).

9-12. Thereafter, the narration of Vratas and Tīrthas, the expiatory bodily rites for thirtytwo offences. The greatness of holy centres is mentioned separately and particularly of Mathurā, thereafter, the rules of procedure regarding Śrāddha etc., the description of the world of Yama, in the context of the son of the sage, the ultimate result of Karmans and the review of Viṣṇu's Vratas, the greatness of Gokarṇa that is destructive of sins, is mentioned. Thus the early part (i.e. the first part) of the Purāṇa is reviewed.

13-14. In the latter part, in the course of the dialogue between Pulastya and the king of Kurus, the greatness of all the holy centres is mentioned in detail, severally.

All the virtues too have been mentioned. The holy Parvan pertaining to Puṣkara is mentioned. Thus the Vārāha Purāṇa, that is destructive of sins is recounted to you.

15-17. This increases devotion to the Lord, of those who read and listen to this. He who writes out this Purāṇa and gives it to a Brāhmaṇa with devotion, along with a gold replica of Garuḍa and gingelly seeds and a cow, on the full moon day in the month of Caitra, attains the abode of Viṣṇu.

He is paid obeisance by the groups of Devas and sages. He who reads or listens to this index obtains devotion to Viṣṇu that is the cause of dissolution of worldly existence.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND FOUR

The Skanda Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O dear one, listen. I shall recount Skanda Purāṇa[1] wherein Lord Mahādeva is present in every word.

2. In the Purāṇa of a hundred crores of verses, I had described the story of Śiva. In a hundred thousand verses, the essence of those topics has been described by Vyāsa.

1. The NP states (verse 3) that the Sk. P (Skanda Purāṇa) consists of 81,000 verses—a view shared by the Sk.P. itself and by Mt. P. (53-41-42) Br. Vaivarta and Devī Bhāgavata. The Vāyu and the Bh. P. credit it with 81,000 verses while AP (272. 17) and Skanda (elsewhere) state that the Sk. P. has 84,000 verses.

Caturaśīti—Sāhasram Skāndam Skandenitam mahat/ /

But the Veṅkaṭeśvar edt. contains 94,343 verses (PJ VII 2.349). According to the NP. the Sk. P. is divided in the following Khaṇḍas—Māheśvara, Vaiṣnava, Brahma, Kāśi, Avanti, Nāgara and Prabhāsa. One more Khaṇḍa—The Sahyādri—is separately published. But in the Sūta Samhitā the Skanda consists of 6 Samhitās, fifty Khaṇḍas and a hundred thousand verses. The names of Samhitās being Sanatkumāra, Sūta, Śankari, Vaiṣṇavī, Brāhmī and Saura.

The published editions—Venkaṭeśvar, Bangavasi, Naval Kishor Press (Lucknow) and Gurumandal are not unanimous in contents. Thus in part I of Avantikhaṇḍa 84 chapters of the glory of 84 Liṅgas (Caturaśiti liṅga māhātmya) are not included in the Lucknow edition, while in the II Part of the Avantikhaṇḍa, the Lucknow edition gives 110 different chapters. In other words, the Lucknow and Bombay editions differ considerably in the Avanti Khaṇḍa. The GM includes the spurious Satya-nārāyaṇa Māhātmya in the Revā khaṇḍa (pp. 1122-2235)—and that too of 4 chapters while usually we find 5 chapters of the same.

3. He has named it Skānda. There are seven khaṇḍas (parts) in it. It comprises eighty one thousand verses. It is destructive of all sins.

4. He who listens to this or reads this becomes Śiva himself. Therein all the rites and rituals regarding Maheśvara have been revealed by Ṣaṇmukha (Skanda).

5-6. These incidents which bring about all Siddhis had happened in the Tatpuruṣa Kalpa. The Māheśvara Khaṇḍa-, the first Skandha of this (Purāṇa) destroys all sins. It consists of a little less than twelve thousand verses. It is highly meritotious and contains big stories. It contains hundreds of good stories. It indicates the greatness of Skanda.

7. The following are the topics dealt with[1] in the context of the greatness of Kedāra, the Purāṇa has its starting point; thereafter the story of Dakṣa's Yajña and then the benefit of worshipping Śiva Liṅga.

Although the Veṅkaṭeśvara Edt. contains more than 12,000 verses more than the extent recorded in the NP and other Purāṇas, the Veṅkaṭeśvare edition does not include the Mathurā and Māgha Māhātmyas in the Vaiṣṇavas khaṇḍa, though the NP mentions them as a part of that khaṇḍa. Needless to say that the author of the NP had a different edition than those before the modern editors of the Bombay, Lucknow and Calcutta editions.

As the SK. P. is a stupendously voluminous Purāṇa a detailed analysis of all its contents is not possible here for want of space.

1. VV 7-19 mention the main topics in the Māheśvara khaṇḍa. In the GM editions it covers the following subparts, the total no. of pages of this khaṇḍa being 799.

Sub part.		No. of chs.	pages.
I		35	1—254
II	Kaumārikā Khaṇḍa	66	255—683
III	Aruṇācala—Māhātmya—Pūrvārdha	13	684—742
IV	—do—	(Uttarārdha) 24	743—799

Out of the vastness of this volume, the NP. merely mentions the topics contained in the following chapters.

Section	Chapters
I	1-7, 9-13, 27-31, 34
II	3, 7, 8, 9, 15, 16-33, 37, 38, 39, 40, 53, 66.
III	10-11.

8. The narration of churning the ocean, then the story of Indra, the ruler of the Devas; the narrative of Pārvatī and her subsequent marriage.

9. The birth of Kumāra (Skanda) is narrated thereafter, then the battle with Tāraka, then the narration of Paśupati, alongwith that of Caṇḍa.

10. The narration of being engaged in the game of dice, the meeting with Nārada. Then in the context of the greatness of Kumāra, the story of five Tīrthas (holy centres).

11. The anecdote of king Dharmavarman; the enumeration of rivers and oceans; thereafter, the story of Indradyumna alongwith the story of Nāḍī-jaṅgha.

12. The appearance of the Earth, the story of Damanaka, the contact between the Earth and the ocean, then the story of Lord Kumāra.

13. Then the fight with Tāraka alongwith various anecdotes, the killing of Tāraka, the installation of five Liṅgas.

14. The holy narration of the continents, the orderly arrangement of the upper worlds, the situation and magnitude of the Cosmic Egg, the story of Varkareśa.

15. The origin of Mahākāla and his extremely miraculous story, the greatness of Vāsudeva, thereafter the Koṭi Tīrtha.

16. The narration of different holy centres, Gupta Kṣetra (near the confluence of the Mahī with the sea) the holy story of the Pāṇḍavas and the achievement of great Vidyā.

17. The wonderful conclusion of pilgrimage to holy centres by Kumāra; the greatness of Aruṇācala, the conversation between Sanaka and Brahmā.

18. The description of Gaurī's penance, the review of different holy centres, the narrative of demon Mahiṣa and his wonderful death.

Actually we find that the NP touches a fringe of this part of the SkP and a great number of topics are not even mentioned.

The same is the case with other Khaṇḍas. One wonders whether a shorter version of the Sk. P. was used by the NP or a casual mention of a few chapters was looked upon as a table of contents in those days. Many of the topics not mentioned by the NP are found in other Purāṇas also and as such one should think thrice before branding them spurious.

19. The permanent residence of Śiva in Droṇācala has ever been glorified. Thus the part of Maheśvara Khaṇḍa has been recounted.

20. The second part is called the Vaiṣṇava Khaṇḍa. Listen to the stories contained in it. At the outset, the narrative of the Earth and Varāha.

21. The greatness of the mountain Veṅkaṭa, destructive of sins is mentioned therein; the holy story of Kamalā, the residence of Śrīnivāsa therein.

22. The story of Kulāla (potter), the story of Suvarṇamukharī,[1] the wonderful tale of Bhāradvāja alongwith different narratives.

23. The dialogue between Mataṅga and Añjana that is destructive of sins, the greatness of Puruṣottama[2] (Jagannātha) in Orissa thereafter.

24. The story of Mārkeṇḍeya, the tale of king Ambarīṣa and the auspicious stories of Indradyumna and Vidyāpati.

25. O Brāhmaṇa, thereafter, there are the stories of Jāimini, Nārada and Nīlakaṇṭha, then the description of Narasiṁha.

26. The story of horse-sacrifice of the king and his attainment of Brahmaloka, the procedure regarding the Ratha Yātrā (chariot procession), the rules regarding the abode of birth.

*The NP. refers to the following chapters from Sk. P. II in VV 9 1-11 chs : 3-8; 9-15, 16-32, 33, 36-40, 53, 66 (from the GM edition)

The GM text of the Sk. P. devotes the whole of III—Uttarārdha to Aruṇācala.

1. VV 22-23 refer to incidents in the Veṅkaṭācala Māhātmya (sub-part I of this Khanda). The story of Suvarna Mukhari covers chs. 29-35 and the dialogue between Mataṅga and Añjana, chs. 39-40. Out of the 40 chapters of this Māhātmya, only the above topics are mentioned.

2. Puruṣottama Kṣetra is Jagannātha Puri in Orissa though originally a Buddhist shrine but before the time of the NP. it was completely Brahmanised. This Kṣetra-Māhātmya consists of 60 chapters which are briefly mentioned here in VV 24-28. Of special interest are Ratha-Yātrā (the procession of Jagannātha in a chariot) chs 33, 44. The Śayana-Utsava chs 43-44. NP mentions a few more stories e. g. that of Indradyumna and Vidyāpati, Guṇḍiva and Vratas like Akāmika Pūjā.

27. The anecdote of Dakṣiṇāmūrti, the tale of Guṇḍiva, the arrangement for the maintenance of the chariot, the glorification of the Śayana-Utsava (the festival of Deity's going to sleep).

28. The story of Śveta is mentioned here; then the review of Pṛthūtsava (the great Festival), the Dolotsava (Festival of the Swing) of the lord and the observance called annual Vrata, the Akāmika Pūjā (worship without entertaining any desire in return) of Viṣṇu. Different kinds of Yoga and means thereto according to the teaching of Uddālaka.

29. The ten incarnations are enumerated; the rite of ablution etc. is glorified; then the greatness of Badarikā[1] that is destructive of sins.

30-32. The greatness of Agni and other holy centres situated in the rock of Vainateya; the cause for the residence of the Lord; the holy centre named Pañcadhārā, the situation of Meru. In the context of Kārttika, the glory of Madālasā.

33. The narrative of Dhūmrakeśa, the daily rites and duties in the month of Kārttika,[2] the description of "Pañca-Bhīṣma" Vrata that bestows worldly pleasures and salvation.

34. Then in the context of the greatness of Mārgaśīrṣa,[3] the rules of procedure regarding the bath, the glorification of Puṇḍra (the mark on the forehead) etc., the meritorious nature of wearing garlands, etc.

---

1. VV 29-32 adequately deal with the III section called Badarikāśrama Māhātmya as most of the topics like holy centres of the rocks of Vainateya (ch. 4) Kapālamocana, Pañcadhārā (ch. 7)and Meru-Saṁsthāpana (ch. 8) are mentioned herein.

2. VV 32-33 deal with the topics in the "glory of the month of Kārttika" (Kārttika-māsa-māhātmya). In the original Sk. P., this section contains 36 chapters. Out of them chapters connected with the glory of religious rites in this month and the Bhīṣma pañcaka vrata (ch. 32) are mentioned and the story of Jalandhara ignored unless we identify "Dhūmrakeśa" (mentioned in the NP) with Jalandhara.

3. VV 34-38 deal with the section Mārgaśīrṣa Māhātmya which consists of 17 chapters in the original. It contains the various rites regarding bath (ch. 1), the Puṇḍra mark on the forehead (ch. 2), the details of worship (chs. 5, 7, 8, 9). The importance of Ekādaśī and rules of observing that fast (chs. 11-13, 15 & 16) and the glory of Mathurā (ch. 17).

35. The merit in the ablution with Pañcāmṛta, the benefit originating from ringing the bell etc.; the benefit of worshipping with different kinds of flowers, the benefit accruing from the Tulasī leaves.

36. The greatness of Naivedya (food offering) to God, the glorification of Harivāsara (Harī's day i.e. Ekādaśī) The Akhaṇḍaikādaśī (the unbroken Ekādaśī) as well as the merit of keeping awake during Ekādaśī.

37. The rules regarding the festival thereof, the narrative of illustrious names of God, recounting of the merit of meditation, the greatness of Mathurā, etc.

38. Thereafter, the greatness of the holy centre Mathurā is separately mentioned, then the greatness of twelve forests is mentioned.

39. In this context, the greatness of Srīmad Bhāgavata[1] is mentioned in the course of dialogue between Vajra and Śāṇḍilya, the inner sports are revealed.

40. Then the greatness of the months of Māgha[2] is reviewed in ten chapters in regard to bath, charitable gifts and Japas alongwith suitable anecdotes connected therewith.

41. Then in the context of the greatness of the devotees of Viṣṇu the benefit of Śayyādāna (charitable gift of beds) is mentioned; the rules regarding the gift of water are mentioned; then the story of Kāma.

42. The story of Śrutadeva, the wonderful anecdote of the Vyādha (hunter), the special glorification of Akṣaya Tṛtīyā[3] (the everlasting Tṛtīyā i.e. the third day of the bright half of Vaiśākha)

1. That the SkP has a Bhāgavata Māhātmya is less known as generally the Bhāgavata Māhatmya in the Padma P. is printed at the beginning of different editions of the Bh. P.

2. The GM edition of the Sk. P. does not give Māgha Māhātmya but gives Vaiśākha Māhātmya instead. The Māgha Māhātmya mentioned in the NP consisted of 10 chapters.

3. The Sk. P. gives a section of 25 chapters for Vaiśākha Māsa Māhātmya. But the NP mentions only one topic viz. the glorification of Akṣaya tṛtīyā (ch. 23 in the original Sk. P.) and ignores all other chapters.

43. In the context of the greatness of Ayodhyā[1] the two holy Tīrthas viz. Cakratīrtha and Brahmatīrtha are mentioned. These two bring about the liberation from the sin of drinking spirituous liquor; the heavenly door with a thousand supports.

44. The description of Candrahari and Dharmahari, the anecdote of Svarṇavṛṣṭi (shower of gold); the confluence of Tilodā and Sarayū.

45. The holy pool of Sītā, the lineage of Guptahari, the confluence of Sarayū and Ghargharā; the holy centres of Gopratāra, Dugdhoda and the set of five (Tīrthas) beginning with Gurukuṇḍa.

46. Thereafter, the description of thirteen Tīrthas such as Soma, Arka etc., the greatness of Gaya-kūpa (the well of Gaya) that causes all sins to recede.

47. Thereafter, the holy spots beginning with the hermitage of Māṇḍavya, that of Ajita etc., and Mānasa etc. are mentioned.

48. Thus the second Khaṇḍa called Vaiṣṇava is explained. Hereafter, O Marīci, listen to the Brahmakhaṇḍa that bestows merit.

(The summary of Brahma Khaṇḍa)

49. In the context of the greatness of Setu (Bridge built by Rāma over the sea), the benefit resulting from bath and mere sight; the penance of Gālava, the story of Rākṣasas.

50. The greatness of Cakratīrtha etc, the greatness of Vetālatīrtha which is in Devīpattana[2] (city of the Goddess), the

1. VV 43-46 mention topics described in the Ayodhyā Māhātmya, a section of 10 chapters in the Vaiṣṇava Khaṇḍa of the Sk. P. But one wonders why the whole section called Śrī Vāsudeva Māhātmya in this Khaṇḍa of Sk. P. is completely ignored in the NP.

The first two khaṇḍas viz. Māheśvara and Vaiṣṇava are compared in detail with the topics mentioned in the NP. The omissions of topics in the NP shows that the author of the NP had a different and a shorter edition of the Sk. P. when he enumerated the contents of the Sk. P. As sufficient evidence for this finding is presented above, the comparison with other khaṇḍas of the Sk. P. is not given here.

2. This is at a distance of 12 miles from Rāmnad (Ramnath Pur). It is also called Devipura (Sk. P. III 1. 7. 57. 63) and also Devipurī (ibid 60). Here Durgā killed the demon Mahiṣāsura.

glorification of the holy place called Pāpanāśa (the destruction of sins).

51. The greatness of Maṅgalā etc., the description of Brahmakuṇḍa etc, the greatness of Hanumatkuṇḍa, the benefit resulting from Agastyatīrtha.

52. The narrative of Rāmatīrtha etc, the review of Lakṣmītīrtha, the greatness of Śaṅkha and other Tīrthas. So also the benefit accruing from Sādhyāmṛta etc.

53-54. The greatness of Dhanuṣkoṭi etc. and that of Kṣīra-Kuṇḍa etc., the greatness of Gāyatrī and other Tīrthas is described here; the greatness of Rāmanātha; the instruction in the perfect knowledge of Reality, the recounting of rules regarding the pilgrimage to Setu which yields salvation to men.

55. Thereafter, the greatness of Dharmāraṇya[1] (forest of Dharma) is mentioned. It was here that Lord Sthāṇu instructed Skanda in Tattva (Philosophic principles).

56. The origin of Dharmāraṇya; the glorification of its merit, the narration of Karmasiddhi (achievements of the fruit of actions, the review of the family-lines of the sages.

57. The greatness of main Apsarastīrthas (Holy centres of the divine damsels) is mentioned; the review of the principles of Dharma (duties) of the castes and stages of life.

58-59. The division of heavenly spots, the auspicious story of Bakulārka, the goddesses Chatrānandā, Śāntā, Śrīmātā, Mātaṅginī and Puṇyadā are stationed herein, the greatness of Indreśvara etc., the review of Dvārakā etc.

60. The narrative of the demon Lohāsura, the review of Gaṅgākūpa, the story of Śrī Rāma, the description of Satya Mandira.

61. The narrative of the repair to the ruins; the acceptance of seats, the mentioning of different castes, the review of the holy rites in accordance with the Smṛtis.

1. De. gives four locations of Dharmāraṇya but none of them is in the South. It may appear to be a mythological forest near Rāmeśvara but the association of Brāhmaṇas of 24 gotras with it (Sk. P. III ii. 9-27) shows the need of its correct location.

62. Then the holy rites prescribed for Vaiṣṇavas are mentioned through different narratives, thereafter, the exposition of holy rites, observances etc., in regard to the holy Cāturmāsya (the four months of the rainy season when special Vratas are observed).

63. The eulogy of charitable gifts, thereafter the greatness of Vratas, the narration of loop-holes (causes of failures) in penance and worship.

64. The narration of making amends for them (loop-holes); the review of Śālagrāma; the means for the destruction of Bhāraka, the glory of the worship of trees.

65. The cause of Viṣṇu in regard to the state of being a tree, then Pārvatī's subsequent penance, the Tāṇḍava dance of Hara, the review of the name Rāma.

66. The fall of the Liṅga of Hara, the story of Baijavana, the story of the nativity of Pārvatī, the wonderful killing of Tāraka.

67. The narration of prosperity through the Praṇava, the activities of Tāraka, the conclusion of Dakṣa's Yajña, the mantra of Twelve syllables (viz. oṁ namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya) which is its embellishment.

68. The narration of the path of knowledge and the greatness of twelve-syllabled Mantra. The merit of Śravaṇa (the means of hearing), etc. that causes happiness to men.

69. Then in the latter half of the Brahmakhaṇḍa the wonderful greatness of Śiva is narrated, then the greatness of the five-syllabled Mantra : Namaḥ Śivāya and that of Gokarṇa.

70. The greatness of Śivarātri, the glorification of Pradoṣa Vrata,[1] the Vrata on Mondays, the anecdote of Sīmantinī.

1. This Vrata is to be commenced on an auspicious day in the bright half of Caitra or Mārgaśīrṣa. Its details are given in ch. 18 of the Brahmottara Khaṇḍa of the Sk. P., Kane in HD V. I. 277 gives 6 varieties of this Vrata.

71. The narration of the origin of Bhadrāyu, the review of good conduct, the guidance of Śivavarman (?) and the description of Bhadrāyu's marriage.

72. The greatness of Bhadrāyu, the glorification of the greatness of Bhasma (Sacred ashes), the story of Śabara (Hunter), the Vrata called Umā-Maheśvara.

73. The greatness of the Rudrākṣa bead, the merit of the 'Rudrādhyāya' Mantra, the merit of Śravaṇa (hearing), etc. Thus the Brahmakhaṇḍa has been recounted.

74. Henceforth, the fourth part, the excellent Kāśi Khaṇḍa[1] (is summarised). The dialogue between Vindhya and Nārada is described.

75. The greatness of Satyaloka, the arrival of the Devas in the residence of Agastya, the story of a chaste lady, the praising of the pilgrimage to holy centres.

76. Then the narration of the seven cities, the review of Saṁyaminī, the attainment of the worlds of Budha (Mercury), Indra and Agni by Śivaśarman.

77. The origin of fire, the origin of Varuṇa from fire (?) the origin of the two cities Gandhavatī and Alakā and the nativity of Īśvarī.

78. The description of these worlds, viz., the moon, the sun, the mercury, the Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, my world, Viṣṇu's world of Dhruva's world (?) and the Tapoloka.

79. The meritorious story of the world of Dhruva, the survey of Satyaloka, the conversation between Skanda and Agastya, the origin of Maṇikarṇī.

80. The prowess of the Gaṅgā, the thousand names of the Gaṅgā, the praise of Vārāṇasī, the appearance of Bhairava.

81. Thereafter, the origin of Daṇḍapāṇi and Jñānavāpī (the well of Knowledge), then the narration of Kalāvatī and the exposition of good conduct.

82. The narration of a celibate, then the characteristics of women, the stipulation of what should be done and what should not be done, the description of Avimukteśa.

1. VV 74-91 summarise the main topics in the fourth khaṇḍa called Kāśi khaṇḍa. It covers the main topics found in the extant Kāśikhaṇḍa.

83. The duties of householders and the Yogins, then the knowledge of Kāla (Time), the holy story of Divodāsa, the description of Kāśikā.

84. The appearance on the Earth of Māyā Gaṇapati, the Universe due to Viṣṇu's Māyā, then the liberation of Divodāsa.

85. Then the origin of Pañcanada and that of Bindu Mādhava; then the enumeration of holy centres belonging to Viṣṇu, the arrival at Kāśī of the trident-bearing Lord.

86. The dialogue between Jaigīṣavya and Maheśa, the name Jyeṣṭheśa of Maheśa, the enumeration of holy temples, the origin of Kandukeśa and Vyāghreśvara.

87. The origin of Śaileśa and Ratneśvara as well as that of Kṛttivāsas; the abode of the deities; Durgā's exploit over the Asuras.

88. Durgā's victory, the description of Oṁkāreśa, then the greatness of Oṁkāra, the origin of the three-eyed Lord Śiva.

89. The narration of Kedāra, the story of Dharmeśa born of Viṣṇu's arms (?), the narrative of Vīreśvara, the glorification of the greatness of Gaṅgā.

90. The greatness of Viśvakarmeśa, the origin of Dakṣa's Yajña as well as that of Satīśa, Amṛteśa and others, the benumbing of the arms of Parāśara.

91. The group of holy centres and shrines, the dialogue in the Mukti-Maṇḍapa (The pandal of salvation) the prosperity of Viśveśa and then the circumambulatory pilgrimage.

(Thus the fourth part is summarised)

92. Hereafter, listen to the description of the fifth part called Avanti Khaṇḍa.[1] The narration of the forest Mahākāla Vana; then the chopping off of the head of Brahmā.

1. VV 92-141. mention the important topics in the fifth khaṇḍa—the Avanti khaṇḍa. One fails to understand why so much importance has been attached to this khaṇḍa in the NP as it devotes 49 verses to this khaṇḍa as compared with the meagre 17 verses to Kāśi Khaṇḍa which is now so popular.

It may be further added that the geographical location of each Tīrtha mentioned here is expected in the annotations of the Skanda Purāṇa proper (translation or original text) and is thus beyond the scope of Nārada Purāṇa.

93. The rules regarding expiatory rites; the origin of Agni; the arrival of the Devas, the initiation of the Devas; Śiva's hymn that is destructive of different kinds of sins.

94. The narration of Kapālamocana, the situation of the forest Mahākālavana, the holy centre of the Lord Kanakhala that is destructive of all sins.

95. The pool called after the Apsaras (celestial damsels) and the lake of Rudra that is meritorious, the holy centres of the Lord of Kuḍava, Vidyādhara, and Markaṭeśvara.

96. The holy waters of Svargadvāracatussindhu (the four rivers that constitute the doorways to heaven), Śaṅkaravāpikā (The tank of Śaṅkara), Śaṅkarārka, Gandhavatī Tīrtha, that is destructive of sins.

97. Daśāśvamedhika and Anaṁśa Tīrtha that bestow all Siddhis, the procession of Piśācaka, etc, Hanumadīśvara, Kavaceśvara.

98. The procession of or pilgrimage to Mahākāleśa, the holy centre of Valmīkeśvara, the circumabulations of Kuśasthalī in the fifth Tīrtha called Śukra (?).

99. The centres of Akrūra, Ekapāda and Candrārkavaibhava; the holy shrine called Karabheśa and those of Lakuṭeśa and others.

100-101. Mārkaṇḍeśa, Yajña-vāpī-someśa, Naṛakāntaka, Kedāreśvara, Rāmeśa, Saubhāgyeśa, Narārkara shrines. Then Keśavārka, Śaktibheda, Svarṇasāra, and other shrines, the holy spots of Oṁkāreśa etc, the glorification of Andhakaśruti.

102. The number of Liṅgas in the Kālāraṇya, the shrine named Svargaśṛṅga (gold horn), the names of Kuśasthalī, Avanti and Ujjayinī.

103. The shrines named Padmāvatī, Kumudvatī, and Amarāvatī the names of Viśālā, and Pratikalpa and Amarāvatī, the subduing of fever.

104. The benefit of the names of Śiva etc., the eulogy of Śiva sung by the Nāgas (Serpents), the narrative of killing Hiraṇyākṣa, the holy centre of Sundarakuṇḍa.

105. The holy centres of Vindhyavāsin (residing in Vindhya) called Nīlagaṅgāpuṣkara, the holy centre destructive of sins, called Puruṣottama.

106. The Gomatī river, the holy pool of Vāmana, the thousand names of Viṣṇu, the lake of Vīreśvara, the shrine of Kālabhairava.

107. The greatness of Nāgapañcamī, the Jayantikā (birth anniversary) of Nṛsiṁha, the procession of Kuṭumbeśvara, the glorification of divine Sādhakas.

108. The holy shrine called Karkarāja, the bearing of Vighneśa and other Devas, the review of many holy centres in the Rudrakuṇḍa (the holy pit of Rudra) and others.

109. The holy pilgrimage of the eight holy centres, the greatness of Revā, the detachment of Dharmaputra, his meeting with Mārkaṇḍeya.

110. Narration of the most excellent experience,* the glorification of Amṛta; Different names of Narmadā in the different Kalpas.

111. The hymn of Narmadā composed by the sages, the story of Kālarātri; thereafter the prayer of Mahādeva, the wonderful stories of several Kalpas.

112. The story of Viśalyā, the story of Jāleśvara, the description of Gaurī Vrata, the burning of Tripuras.

113. The injunctions regarding the casting off of the body, then the confluence of Kāverī, the holy shrines of Dārutīrtha and Brahmāvarta, alongwith the story of Īśvara.

114-115. The following series of shrines are then described : Agni Tīrtha, Ravi Tīrtha, Meghanāda Tīrtha, Ādidāruka Tīrtha, Deva Tīrtha, Narmadeśa, Kapila Tīrtha, Karañja Tīrtha, Kuṇḍaleśa, Pippalāda, Vimaleśa and Śūlabhṛt, then the story of abduction of Śacī and killing of Abhraka. (v. l. Andhaka)

116. The Tīrtha called Śūlabhṛdudbhava where different types of charitable gifts are to be given; then the story of Dīrgha-tapas and that of Ṛṣyaśṛṅga.

*v.l.— prāg-laydnubhavākhyānam—The experience of the initial dissolution (deluged universe)

117. Then the holy story of Citrasena, the characteristic feature of the kingdom of Kāśi,* then the description of Devaśilā (The rock of the lord) alongwith the holy centre of Śabarī.

118-121. Then the holy narrative of Vyādha (the hunter); then the holy centre of Puṣkariṇyarka; then the following holy pools and shrines—Āpretyeśvara Tīrtha, Śakra Tīrtha, Karoṭika, Kumāreśa, Agastyeśa, Ānandeśa, Mātṛja, Lokeśa, Dhanadeśa, Maṅgaleśa, Kāmaja, Nāgeśa, Gopāra. Gautama, Śaṅkhacūḍaka, Nāradeśa, Nandikeśa, Varuṇeśvara Tīrtha, Dadhiskanda and other holy centres; then Hanūmateśvara, Rāmeśvara and other holy centres, Someśa, Piṅgaleśvara.

122-129. Ṛṇamokṣa, Kapileśa, Pūtikeśa, Jaleśaya, Caṇḍārka, Yama Tīrtha, Kālhoḍīśa, Vanādika, (v. l. Nāndīka) Nārāyaṇa, Koṭīśa, Vyāsa Tīrtha, Prabhāsaka, Nāgeśa, Saṅkarṣaṇaka, Praśrayeśvara Tīrtha, the holy confluence of Airaṇḍī, Suvarṇaśilā Tīrtha, Karañja, Kāmaha, Bhāṇḍīra, Rohiṇībhava, Cakra Tīrtha, Dhautapāpa, Skanda, the holy place named after Aṅgiras, Koṭi Tīrtha, Tīrtha called Ayonī, Aṅgāra Tīrtha, Trilocana Tirtha, Indreśa, Kambukeśa, Someśa, Kohaneśa, Nārmada, Ārka, Āgneya, the excellent Bhārgaveśvara Brāhma, Daiva, Mārgeśa, Ādivārāhakeśvara, Rāmeśa, Siddheśa Āhalya, Kaṅkaṭeśvara, Śākra, Saumya, Nādeśa, Toyeśa, Rukmiṇībhava, Yojaneśa, Varāheśa, Dvādaśī Śiva Tīrtha, Siddheśa, Maṅgaleśa, Liṅgatīrtha, Vārāha Tīrtha, Kuṇḍeśa, Śvetavārāha, Garbhāveśa, Ravīśvara.

130-135. The holy centres of Śukla etc., Huṅkārasvāmi Tīrtha, Saṅgameśa, Nahuṣeśa, Mokṣaṇa, Pañcagopa, Nāgaśāva, Siddheśa, Mārkaṇḍatīrtha, Akrūratīrtha, Kāmodatīrtha, Śūlāropatīrtha, Māṇḍavya, Gopakeśvara, Kapileśa, Piṅgaleśa, Bhūteśa, Gaṅgā Tīrtha, Gautama Tīrtha, Āśvamedha, Bhṛgukaccha Kedāreśa, the dispeller of sins, Kālakaleśa, Jāleśa, Śālagrāma, Varāhaka, Candraprabhāsa, Āditya, Śrīpati Tīrtha, Haṁsaka, Mūlyasthāna (the original abode), Śūleśa, the Tīrtha called Ugra, Citradaivaka, Śikhīśa, Koṭi Tīrtha, Daśakanya, Suvarṇaka, Ṛṇamokṣa, (that which liberates from indebtedness), Bhārabhūti, Puṅkha Muṇḍi, Ḍiṇḍima (a drum), Āmaleśa, Kapāleśa, Śṛṅga Eraṇḍī Bhava, Koṭi Tīrtha and Loṭaneśa. Thereafter, there is Phalaśruti (A remark like the Vedic passage indicating the benefit) (phalastuti[2]—praise of the benefit).

*v.l. Kāśi-rājasya mokṣaṇam—Salvation of Kāśirāja

136-140. In the context of the greatness of Dṛmijaṅgala,[1] there is the story of Rohitāśva, the narration of Dhundhumāra the strategem of destroying Dhundhu; the killing of Dhundhu and the birth of Citravaha, his greatness, the prowess of Caṇḍīśa, Ratīśvara, Kedāreśa, the Lakṣatīrtha, the holy water originating from Viṣṇupadī (Firmament), Mukhāra, Cyavana, Andhāsya and the lake of Brahmā, the Tīrthas of Cakra, Lalitā, the holy centres full of cows, Rudrāvarta and Mārkaṇḍa, the holy centres that dispel sins, Śravaṇeśa, Śuddhapaṭa, Devāndhupretatīrtha, the origin of holy centre Jihvoda, Śivodbheda and their eulogy in regard to their efficacy.

141. This is the summary of the part called Avanti Khaṇḍa;[3] it is destructive of sins of those who listen. Henceforth, the sixth part named Nāgarakhaṇḍa[4] is being narrated.

The Nāgarakhaṇḍa[4]

142. The narration of the origin of Liṅga, the auspicious story of Hariścandra, the greatness of Viśvāmitra, the attainment of heaven by Triśaṅku.

1. The topics from Dṛmijaṅgala upto Śivodbheda mentioned in VV 136-140 are not traced in any extant edition of Avanti Khaṇḍa indicating that the author of Nārada Purāṇa had a different version of Sk. P. than the present printed ones.

2. The Veṅkaṭeśvara, Bangabasi and the GM editions of the Sk. P. give a big section of 84 chapters called Caturaśīti-liṅga-māhātmya. But the NP does not mention this whole section.

3. It is surprising that the NP does not even mention the big Revākhaṇḍa the Uttarārdha of Avantikhaṇḍa—which consists of 232 chapters and skips to the Nāgara-khaṇḍa.

4. VV. 142-167 give us the main topics in the Nāgara-khaṇḍa, many of which are found in the extant Sk. P.

143. In the context of the greatness of Hāṭakeśvara, the killing of demon Vṛtra, the description of the holy centres Nāgabila, Śaṅkha Tīrtha and Acaleśvara.

144-145a. The narration of the city of Camatkāra, that is very interesting, then the description of these holy centres—Gayaśīrsa, Bālasākhya, Bālamaṇḍa, Mṛgāhvaya, Viṣṇupāda, Gokarṇa, Yugarūpa and Samāśraya (that is the support of the people).

145b-146. Siddheśvara, the holy pool of Nāgas, the holy centre of seven sages, of Agastya as well as that of Bhrūṇagarta, Naleśa, of Bhīṣma, Vaiḍuram, Arkaka (pertaining to the Sun-God), Śārmiṣṭha (related to Śarmiṣṭhā), Somanātha, Daurga, Ātarjakeśvara.

147-150. The story of killing of Jamadagni; the story of (Paraśurāma's vow of) making (the country) devoid of Kṣatriyas, the holy centres of Rāmahrada, Nāgapura, Ṣaḍliṅga, Yajñabhū, the three shrines of Trikārka beginning with Muṇḍīra, the marriage of Satī, the shrines of Rudraśīrṣa, Yāgeśa, Vālakhilya and Garuḍa. The curse of Lakṣmī, the twentyseven palaces of Soma; the shrine called Pāṇḍuka erected by Ambā, Āgneya (belonging to the fire God), Brahmakuṇḍa, Gomukha, the shrine called Lohayaṣṭi, the goddess Ajapāleśvarī, the shrine of Śaniścara, (Saturn), the Rājavāpī (Royal tank) Rameśa, Lakṣmaṇeśvara.

151-158. The excellentmost among the excellent Liṅgas—Kuśeśa and Laveśa. The story of Aṣṭaṣaṣṭi and that of Damayantī, the origin of the holy centre Bhaktikā Tīrtha, Kṣemaṁkarī, Kedāra, Śukla Tīrtha, Mukhārka, the narration of the shrine Satyasandheśvara, the story of Karṇotpalā, Aṭeśvara, the shrines of Yājñavalkya, Gaurī, and Gaṇeśa. Then the description of Vāstupāda, the narration of Ajāgṛha, Saubhāgyāndhu (the well of good fortune), the shrine Śūleśa, the story of Dharmarāja, the story of Lord the bestower of sweets, three shrines of Gaṇapati, the story of Jābāli and the story of Makareśa, the description of Kāleśvarī and Andhaka, the holy pool of Apsaras (celestial damsels), the shrines of Puṣyāditya and Rauhitāśva, the narrative of the origin of Nāgara, the stories of Bhṛgu Viśvāmitra, Sarasvatī, Pippalāda, Kaṁsārīśa and Peṇḍaka, the story of the Yajña of Brahmā alongwith the narration of Sāvitrī, Raivata, Bhārata Yajña and the survey of the important holy centres.

159. The three Kṣetras (holy shrines) of Kauṛava, (i. e. the descendants of Kuru) Hāṭakeśa and Prabhāsa, the three forests of Puṣkara, Naimiṣa, and Dharma.

160. The three cities viz. Vārāṇasī, Dvārakā and Avanti, the three Vanas (Parks) viz. Vṛndāvana, Khāṇḍavavana and Advaika (?) [ta ?] vana.

161. The three excellent villages, viz. Kalpagrāma, Śālagrāma and Nandigrāma, the three Tīrthas (holy centres) viz. Asi Tīrtha, Śukla Tīrtha and Pitṛ Tīrtha.

162-63a. The three excellent Parvatas (mountains) viz. Śrī Parvata, Arbuda Parvata (mount Abu) and Raivata Parvata; the three rivers Gaṅgā, Narmadā, and Sarasvatī, each of these is glorified as yielding one and a half crore of benefits.

163b-164a. The four holy centres of Kūpikā, Saṅkhatīrtha, Amaraka and Bālamaṇḍana are said to yield the same benefit as Hāṭakeśakṣetra.

164b-165. The Śrāddhakalpa (rituals regarding Śrāddha) according to Sāmba (alongwith Ambā and Āditya ?), that of Yudhiṣṭhira and Andhaka; the holy rite of Aśūnya Śayana in the four months (of the rainy season), lying down on water., the shrine of Maṅkaṇeśa, the festival of Śivarātri, Tulāpuruṣadāna rite.

166. The gift of lands, the shrines of Vānakeśa and Kapālamocaneśvara, Pāpapiṇḍa (the lump of sins), Māsalaiṅga (the worship of Liṅga for a month), the glorification of the extent and magnitude of Yugas.

167. The narration of Nimbeśa and Śākambharī deities, the description of Rudraikādaśa (the eleven Rudras), the narration of the greatness of charitable gifts and the glorification of twelve Ādityas.

The Prabhāsa khaṇḍa[1]

168a. Thus Nāgara khaṇḍa (has been summarised). Now the part called Prabhāsa khaṇḍa is being mentioned.

1. VV. 168 to 212 give the detailed contents of the last—Prabhāsa

168b-169. The shrines Someśa and Viśveśa, the great and meritorious holy centre called Arkasthala, the narration of Siddheśvara etc., is made here separately; the shrines of Agni-Tīrtha, Kapardīśa and Kedāreśa and the bestowers of goals (heavenly abodes).

170. The different forms of Hara—viz. Bhīma, Bhairava, Caṇḍīśa, etc., the planets viz. the Sun, Moon, Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Rāhu and Śikhin (Ketu).

171. Then five others Siddheśvara and the forms of Rudra, are stationed there. The goddesses of excellent beauty—Ajā, Pālā, Maṅgalā and Laliteśvarī.

172-74. Then the shrines of Lakṣmīśa, Yādaveśa, Urvīśa, Kāmeśvara, Gaurīśa, Varuṇeśa, Durvāseśa, Gaṇeśvara, Kumāreśa, Caṇḍakalpa and Śakulīśvara. Then the holy story of Koṭīśa, Bālabrahma, etc., then the stories of Narakeśa, Saṁvarteśa and Nidhīśvara, then that of Balabhadreśvara, Gaṅgā and Gaṇapa.

175. Then the good story of the river named Jāmbavatī and the well called Pāṇḍukūpa, the story of Śatamedha (hundred sacrifices), Lakṣamedha (hundred-thousand sacrifices) and Koṭimedha (a crore of sacrifices.)

176-177a. The prominent story of Durvāsas, Arka, Ghaṭasthāna (place of Water pot) and Hiraṇyasaṅgama (confluence of the Hiraṇya), the separate stories of Nagarārka, Kṛṣṇa, Saṅkarṣaṇa and Samudra (sea), Kumārī (Virgin), Rṣetrapāla (the guardian of the fields) and Brahmeśa.

177b-178. The glorification of Piṅgalā and Saṅgameśa, Śaṅkara, Arkeśa, Ghaṭeśa, the holy centre Ṛṣitīrtha, Nandārka-tritakūpa, the wonderful story of Parṇārka and Nyaṅkumatī with Sopāna.

179. The news (or the details) of Varāhasvāmin and that of Chāyāliṅga and Gulpha, the story of Kanakanandā as well as that of Kuntī and Gaṅgeśa.

180. Then the story of Camasa, Udbheda, Vidura and Trilokeśa (Lord of the three worlds), then the stories of Maṅkaṇeśa, Traipureśa and Ṣaṇḍa-Tīrtha.

Khaṇḍa which agrees with the extant published Sk. P., showing the degree of authenticity of the Khaṇḍa.

181. Then the stories of Sūryaprācī and Trīkṣaṇa (three-eyed) as well as that of Umānātha, the stories of Bhūddāra (the uplifter of the Earth), Śūlasthala (spot of Trident), that of Cyavana and Arkeśa.

182. The story of the holy spots of Ajapāleśa, Bālārka and Kuberasthala, the meritorious story of Ṛṣitoyā, the glorification of Saṅgaleśvara.

183. The narration of Nārada and Āditya, review of Nārāyaṇa, the greatness of Taptakuṇḍa, description of Mūlacaṇḍīśa.

184. The story of the four-faced presiding deity of the attendants and Kalambeśvara, the story of Gopālasvāmin and Vakulasvāmin, as well as the Maruts (Winds).

185. Then the stories of Kṣemārka, Unnata Vighneśa and Jalasvāmi, the stories of Kālamegha, Rukmiṇī, Durvāsā, ĪśvaraBhadra.

186. The stories of the shrines Śaṅkhāvarta, Mokṣatīrtha, Goṣpada and Acyutasadman ((Abode of Acyuta) and of the deities Jāleśvara, Huṁkāreśvara and Caṇḍīśa.

187. The wonderful story of Vighneśa stationed in Āśāpura and that of Kalākuṇḍa, the story of Kapileśa and of Jaradgavāśiva (Siva with an old cow).

188. The story of Nala and Karoṭeśvara and that of Hāṭakeśvara, the Yantra and the Bhūṣā (ornament) of Nāradeśa, Durgakūṭa and Gaṇeśa's story.

189. The story of Bhairavīs called Suparṇā, Elā and that of Bhallatīrtha, the glorification of Kardamāla and Gupta Someśvara.

190. The stories of Bahusvarṇeśa (Lord of much gold), Sṛṅgeśa and Koṭīśvara, the stories of Mārkaṇḍeśvara, Dāmodaragṛha and Koṭīśa.

191. Svarṇarekhā, Brahmakuṇḍa, the shrines of Kuntīśvara and Bhīmeśvara, the pit of Mṛgī (hind) is remembered in the temple of Sarvasva and Vastrāpatha.

192. The wonderful stories of Durgā, Bhileśa, Gaṅgeśa and Raivata, then the story of Arbudeśvara, the glorification of Acaleśvara.

193. The story of Nāgatīrtha, the description of Vasiṣṭha's hermitage, the great eminence of Bhadrakarṇa and that of Trinetra (the three-eyed) thereafter.

194. The greatness of Kedāra, the glorification of the arrival at the holy centre, the stories of the holy centre in the form of Koṭīśvara and that of Arṣīkeśa.

195. The glorification of Siddheśa, Śukreśvara and Maṇikarṇīśa, the description of Paṅgutīrtha, Yamatīrtha and Vārāhatīrtha.

196. The greatness of Candra Prabhāsa, Piṇḍoda, Śrīmātā, Śuklatīrtha and Kātyāyanī, then the greatness of Piṇḍāraka.

197. Then the glory of Kanakhala, Cakratīrtha and Mānuṣatīrtha, the story of Kapilāgnitīrtha and that of Raktānubhandha.

198. The pilgrimage to Gaṇeśa and Pārtheśvara shrines, the story of Ujjvala, Caṇḍīsthāna (abode of the Goddess), the greatness of Śivakuṇḍa originating from Nāga, the story of Maheśa.

199. The story of Rāmeśvara and the origin of Mārkaṇḍeya, the stories severally of Uddālakeśa, Siddheśa and Gatatīrtha.

200. The origin of Śrīdevakhāta and the shrines of Vyāsatīrtha and Gautama-tīrtha, the greatness of Kulasantāra and that of the Tīrthas of Rāma and Koṭi.

201. The wonderful origin of Candrodbheda, Īśānaśṛṅga, and Brahmasthāna, the auspicious stories of Tripuṣkara, Rudrahrada and Guheśvara.

202. The greatness of Avimukta and Umā-Maheśvara, the glory of Mahaujas, the description of Jambūtīrtha.

203. The story of Gaṅgādhara and Miśraka and the eulogy of the benefit (of reading this). In the context of the greatness of Dvārakā, the story of Candraśarman.

204. The holy rite of Ekādaśī and the narration of (the mode) of worship and keeping awake (on Ekādaśī night), the description of Mahādvādaśikā and the meeting of Prahlāda and the sage.

205. The anecdote of Durvâsas, the glorification of the beginning of Yātrā (pilgrimage), the narration of the origin of Gomatī and the benefit of ablution etc., therein.

206. The greatness of Cakratīrtha, the confluence of the river Gomatī (near Dvārakā) and the ocean (the Arabian sea), the narration of the Hrada (deep pool) of Sanaka and others, then the story of Nṛgatīrtha.

207. The holy story of Gopracāra, the arrival of cowherdesses at Dvārakā, the narration of Gopīsaras (the lake of the cowherdesses); the glorification of Brahmatīrtha.

208. The narration of the advent of five rivers, alongwith different stories and the glorification of Śivaliṅga, Gadātīrtha and the worship etc. of Kṛṣṇa.

209. The story of the Mūrti (the idol) of Trivikrama, the conversation between Durvāsas and Kṛṣṇa, the benefit of the recital of death of Kuśa daitya and the special worship thereof.

210. The glorification of the advent of all the Tīrthas in Gomatī and Dvārakā, the survey of Kṛṣṇa's temple and the coronation at Dvārāvatī.

211. There the story of the residence (of all Tīrthas) that holy centre; the glorification of the merit of Dvārakā. O Brāhmaṇa, this is the summary of the seventh part called Prabhāsikā Khaṇḍa.

212-213. In the course of description of the greatness of Śiva in the Skanda Purāṇa with all the gloriousmost stories, he who writes this out and gives it to a Brāhmaṇa on the full moon day in the month of Māgha, receiving him duly and with the charitable gift of a gold trident, rejoices in the region of Śiva.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND FIVE

The Vāmana Purāṇa[1] : Contents

Brahmā said :

1. O dear one, listen, I shall recount to you the Purāṇa named Vāmana. It contains stories of Trivikrama and comprises ten thousand verses.

2. It contains the narratives of events of the Kūrma Kalpa; it has stories descriptive of Vargatraya (the three aims of life viz. virtue, love and wealth). It is in two parts. It is auspicious to the narrator as well as to the listener.

3. At the outset, there is the enquiry about the Purāṇa; the cutting off of the head of Brahmā, the story of Kapālamocana, the destruction of Dakṣa's Yajña.

4. The description of (and narration about) Hara in the form of Kāla, then the burning of Kāma, the fight between Prahlāda and Nārāyaṇa, the war between the Devas and the Asuras.

5. The narration of the story of Sukeśī and Arka, then the Bhuvanakośa (description of the worlds), then the description of Kāmyavratas (Vratas performed with some desired object), then the story of Śrī Durgā.

1. According to the NP. Vāyu, Mt. P., Bh. P. the Vāmana P. consists of 10,000 verses. Further the NP states that the Vāmana consists of two parts Pūrvabhāga and Uttara bhāga (or Vṛddha Vāmana) the latter containing the following saṁhitās viz. the Māheśvarī, Bhāgavatī, Saurī and Gaṇeśvarī, each consisting of 1000 verses (VV. 13-14). But the whole of the Uttarabhāga is lost leaving the Pūrvārdha of 6000 verses. But actually in Veṅkaṭeśvara edit. there are 5451 verses (chs. 26, 44 and 93 being in prose).

There is a discrepancy in the total number of chapters in the MSS of this Purāṇa e. g. Devanāgarī MSS (94 chs.), Telugu MSS (89 chs.), Śāradā code (85 chs.), Adyar Mss (67 chs.). (A. S. Gupta—PJ. V. pp. 360-66). Although many of the topics mentioned in the NP are found in the printed edition, the absence of the Uttarārdha and the no. of verses in the extant Purāṇa show that the NP refers to a different version of the Vāmana Purāṇa.

By the way it may be noted that though this was originally a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, Śaivism has considerably influenced it as the episodes of Śiva are also described in details. This synthetic tendency—harmonizing Vaiṣṇavism, Śaivism etc. by regarding these deities as representatives of the Brahman—is found practically in all Purāṇas.

6. Then the story of Tapatī, description of Kurukṣetra, the incomparable greatness of Satya, the glorification of the nativity of Pārvatī.

7. Her penance, and then the marriage, thereafter, the story of Gaurī, thereafter, the subsidiary story of Kauśikī and then the story of Kumāra.

8. Then the story of killing Andhaka, then the narrative of Sādhyas, afterwards, the story of Jābāli, the wonderful story of Arajā.

9. The fight between Andhaka and Īśvara, Andhaka given the status of a Gaṇa (attendant of Śiva), the narration of the Maruts, then the story of Bali.

10. Then Lakṣmī's story, thereafter the story of Trivikrama, then auspicious stories are being narrated in the course of pilgrimage of Prahlāda.

11. Thereafter, the story of Dhundhu; then the story of the Preta (Ghosts), the story of Nakṣatrapuruṣa (The name of a Vrata), then the story of Śrīdāma.

12. At the end of the story of Trivikrama, there is an excellent hymn composed by Brahmā. In the course of conversation between Prahlāda and Bali in Sutala (Netherworlds), Hari is praised.

13. Thus the story of the first half of this Purāṇa is mentioned to you. Hereafter, listen to its latter half called Bṛhad Vāmana.

14. There are four Saṁhitās (compendiums) therein each consisting of a thousand verses. They are Māheśvarī, Bhāgavatī, Saurī and Gaṇeśvarī.[1]

1. According to the NP, the Kūrma Purāṇa consists of Brāhmī, Bhāgavatī, Saurī and Vaiṣṇavī Saṁhitās and has 17,000 verses in all (verse 3), a figure endorsed by the Bh. P. (XII. 13, I). But the Vāyu and Matsya credit it with 18,003 verses, while according to AP (272-10) it has 8000 verses only. The Kūrma B itself states that it consists of Brāhmī, Bhāgavatī, Saurī and Vaiṣṇavī Saṁhitās and the Brāhmī contains 6000 verses. But actually Venkaṭeśvara Press edit. gives 5925 verses. The NP. gives the topical analysis of each Saṁhitā and states the sub-sections of each Saṁhitā e. g. the Bhāgavatī Saṁhitā has five sections (Pañca-padī), the Saurī, six (ṣoḍhā), Vaiṣṇavī, four (catuṣpadī). The total No. of verses in each section is given as 6000, 4000, 2000 and 5000 verses respectively. Ch. 106.

15. In the compilation called Māheśvarī, there is the glorification of Kṛṣṇa and his devotees. In the compendium Bhāgavatī, there is the wonderful story of the incarnation of the Mother of the Universe.

16. In the compendium Saurī, the glory of the Sun is spoken (praised) which is destructive of sins. In the compendium Gaṇeśvarī there is the story of Gaṇeśa and Maheśa.

17. This is a wonderful Purāṇa named Vāmana. It is narrated by Pulastya to the noble-souled Nārada.

18. Then it was acquired from Nārada by Vyāsa, a very great Ātman. From Yyāsa his disciple Romaharṣaṇa acquired this.

19. He will narrate it to the Brāhmaṇas of Naimiṣa forest. Thus the auspicious Vāmana Purāṇa has been traditionally handed down and acquired.

20-22. Those who read this or listen to this, attain the greatest goal. He who writes this out and gives it to a Brāhmaṇa Vedic scholar at the time of autumnal equinox alongwith ghee and a cow, uplifts his Pitṛs (ancestors) from hells and leads them to heaven. After enjoying all worldly pleasures and dying thereafter, he attains the great region of Viṣṇu.

All this evidence shows that the author of the NP had positively a different and a larger version than the extant KP.

The extant (both Veṅkaṭeśvara and Kāśirāja) editions of KP tally to a great extent with the Brāhmī Saṁhitā and the other Saṁhitās seem to have been lost.

Hazra notes that originally the Kūrma was a Pāñcarātra Purāṇa which was subsequently Pāśupatised. (vide PR. pp. 57. ff.)

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND SIX

The Kūrma Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1-2. O dear child, O Marīci, listen to the Purāṇa called Kūrma. It covers the events of the Lakṣmī Kalpa. In the context of Indradyumna, the merciful Hari, assuming the form of a tortoise, proclaimed it to the sages the respective greatness of virtue, love, wealth and salvation.

3. It consists of seventeen thousand verses.[1] It is very auspicious with four Saṃhitās. O sage, many of the Brāhma dharmas (religious duties) mentioned formerly, have been explained in it.

4. They are dealt with in the context of different stories. They are the bestowers of good position (hereafter) unto men. In the first subdivision there is the usual beginning at the outset.

5. There is the dialogue between Lakṣmī and Indradyumna and the conversation between the Divine Tortoise and the groups of sages. Then is the account of the four castes (Varṇas) and stages in life (Āśramas, and their (prescribed) duties, the narration of the creation of the Universe.

6. There is a brief description about the calculation of Time (such as Yugas, Manvantaras), at the end of the dissolution, there is the eulogy of the Lord (by Siddhas), then a brief description of the creation (of the universe) and the story of Śaṅkara.

7. The thousand names of Pārvatī, the exposition of the Yoga philosophy, the description of the family of Bhṛgu, and then that of Svāyaṃbhuva (Manu).

1. According to the VP, Vāyu, Bh. P. (xii. 13. 4-9) and Mt. P, itself, this Purāṇa consists of 14,000 verses while AP credits it with 13000 (or 13,003 as per A. S. Gupta) the BVP with 18,000 verses. The Ānandāśrama Press edit. contains 14,062 verses and its contents agree in general with those given in the NP. This agreement is probably due to its being the best preserved and the earliest of the 18 Purāṇas (Kane—HD. vii. p. 899). Kane also notes that it has perhaps the largest number of Smṛti chapters among Purāṇas and assigns 200 A. D. to 400 A. D. as its probable date.

8. The origin of the Devas and others, then the destruction of Dakṣa's Yajña, the story of the creation by Dakṣa, then the narration of the lineage of Kaśyapa (containing the account of the Solar and Lunar dynasties).

9. The description of the family of Atri, the auspicious story of Kṛṣṇa, the dialogue between Kṛṣṇa and Mārtaṇḍa (The Sun-god) and the conversation between Vyāsa and the Pāṇḍavas.

10. The narration of the characteristic nature of different Yugas (Yugadharma), the glorification of Vyāsa and Jaimini, the greatness of Vārāṇasī and Prayāga.

11-12. The description of the three worlds, the review of the branches of Vedas. In the latter half of the Purāṇa there are the Īśvaragītā and the Vyāsagītā. These two illuminate the different kinds of Dharmas; the greatness of the different holy centres is mentioned separately.

13. Then there is the narration of Pratisarga (Dissolution of the Universe). This much is the summary of the first division named Brāhmī Saṁhitā. Henceforth, the compendium Bhāgavatī Saṁhitā is reviewed.

14. In this division, the separate activities of the different castes are narrated. In the first quarter of this Saṁhitā, the determination of duties etc. of the Brāhmaṇas has been narrated.

15. O dear one, it consists of good and disciplined life and it enhances their enjoyment and the happiness of worldly pleasures. In the second quarter, the functions of the profession of the Kṣatriyas are clearly enunciated.

16-19a. If a (Kṣatriya) abides by these, he shall eschew sins and go to heaven. In the third quarter, the fourfold activities of the Vaiśyas have been explained. If these are followed, one shall attain excellent salvation. In its fourth quarter, the activities of the Śūdras are explained. If these are followed, Lord Viṣṇu becomes pleased and increases the welfare of men. In the fifth quarter the duties and functions of the mixed castes are explained. If they are followed, one attains excellent state of future life.

19b. O sage, thus is narrated the second compendium (Saṁhitā) consisting of five sections (Pañcapadī).

20. The third compendium is called Saurī. It lays down the various duties of men. To men who desire (to obtain some objects), it instructs the six karmans and their Siddhis in six different ways.

21. The fourth compendium is called Vaiṣṇavī. It is glorified as the bestower of Liberation from Saṁsāra. It consists of four sections (Catuṣ-padī). It is veritable Brahma i.e. the Veda incarnate to the twice-borns.

22. The four Saṁhitās contain respectively six thousand, four thousand, two thousand and five thousand verses.

23. This Kūrma Purāṇa yields the benefit of four Vargas (the aims of life) viz. Dharma, Artha, Kāma, Mokṣa. It yields the best of all goals to the men who read and listen to it.

24. He who writes this (Purāṇa) with devotion and gives it to a Brāhmaṇa during the transit of the sun from the tropics, alongwith the replica of a tortoise in gold, attains the greatest goal.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND SEVEN

The Matsya Purāṇa : Contents

Lord Brahmā said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, I shall, henceforth, recount the Matsya Purāṇa to you. In it, all the events of the seven Kalpas in the world, have been condensed.

2. It has been composed by Vyāsa, a scholar in the Vedas, in about fourteen thousand verses.* He has begun by describing Narasiṁha.

*The Vāyu, the Matsya and the Bh. P. state this figure, but AP. gives 13000 and the Br. V. 18000 verses as the figure. Actually the Ānandāśrama edition contains 14,062 verses. The contents of that edition tally with those given by the NP. here.

3. The discussion between Manu and Matsya, then the narration (description) of the Cosmic Egg; the creation of the Devas, Asuras and the Marut (wind) from the Brahman.

4. Madana-Dvādaśī (the twelfth lunar day in honour of Madana) and the worship of the guardians of the worlds; the survey of the Manvantaras, the description of the government of the kingdom by the Vaiśyas.

5. The birth of Vaivasvata (Manu) from the sun, the contact with Budha (Mercury), the narration of the lineage of the Pitṛs; the opportune time for (performance of) Śrāddha).

6. The peregrination among the Pitṛ-Tīrthas, the origin of Soma (the moon), the glorification of the lunar race and the story of Yayāti.

7. The story of Kārttavīrya, the narration of the created race, Bhṛgu's curse to Viṣṇu to take ten births on the Earth.

8. Then the glorification of Puru's race, the race of Hutāśana (the fire), the path of activity. Thereafter, the narration of the Purāṇa.

9. The Vrata (holy rite) called Nakṣatra Puruṣa, Mārtaṇḍa-śayana, the Vrata of Kṛṣṇāṣṭamī (the eighth day of the dark half of Śrāvaṇa observance in honour of Kṛṣṇa's birth) and that of Rohiṇīcandra.

10. The greatness of constructing tanks; the gift of the trees, the Vrata called Saubhāgya and Śayana Agastya Vrata.

11. The Vrata of Anantatṛtīyā, that of Rasakalyāṇinī, that of Ānandakarī and then the Sārasvata (belonging to Sarasvatī) Vrata.

12. Uparāgābhiṣeka (Ablution at the time of eclipse Saptamī śayana, Bhīma Dvādaśī, Anaṅgaśayana rite.

13. Aśūnyaśayanavrata, Aṅgārakavrata (holy rite of Mars) Saptamī saptaka (seven Saptamīs i.e. seventh lunar day) Viśokadvādaśīvrata (holy rite on the twelfth lunar day for wiping off grief).

14. The gift of Meru, ten-fold specification of evil planets; the narration of the forms of planets, Śivacaturdaśī (the fourteenth day of Śiva).

15. The abandonment of all fruits, the holy observance of Sūryavāra (Sunday), the taking of bath at the time of Saṅkrānti (Solar Transit from one sign of Zodiac to another), the holy rite of Vibhūti Dvādaśī.

16. The greatness of Ṣaṣṭhīvratas (holy rites on the sixth Lunar day) (leading Ṣaṣṭivratas—sixty holy rites), then the rules of procedure regarding holy baths, the greatness of Prayâga, the description of continents and the worlds.

17. The movement in the firmament, the greatness of Dhruva (Pole Star), the abodes of the leading Devas, the illumination of the three cities.

18. The greatness of leading Pitṛs, the description of Manvantaras, the creation of the set of four Yugas and the review of Yugadharma (the characteristics peculiar to the different Yugas).

19. The birth of Vajrāṅga and the nativity of Tāraka, the greatness of the demon Tāraka, the glorification of God Brahmā.

20. The nativity of Pârvatī, the penance-grove of Śiva, the burning of the body of Anaṅga (Cupid) and the grief of Rati.

21. The penance-grove of Gaurī, soothing by Śiva, the conversation between Pārvatī and the sages, the auspicious celebration of Śiva's marriage.

22. The birth of Kumāra and the victory of Kumāra, the terrible killing of Tāraka, the description of Narasiṁha.

23. The creation of the lotus-born deity; the killing of Andhaka, the greatness of Vārāṇasī as well as that of Narmadā.

24. The description of Pitṛs according to the Gotras and Pravaras, the glorification of the Pitṛgāthā (song of Pitṛs) Ubhayamukhīdānam (gift of a cow while giving birth to a calf and hence two-faced) and the gift of Kṛṣṇājina (deerskin of a black antelope).

25. Then the story of Sāvitrī, the duties of a king, the narration of different kinds of evil portents ending with eclipses.

26. The narration of omens at the time of journey, the glorification of auspicious signs in dreams, the greatness of Vāmana and that of Varāha (Boar) thereafter.

27. The churning of the ocean, the suppression (nullification) of the poison Kālakūṭa, the clash between the Devas and the Demons; then the science of Engineering (planning the foundation and construction of a house).

28. The characteristic features of an image (idol); then (the construction) of the temple, the characteristic features of a mansion, the characteristics of a pavilion.

29. The indication of future kings, the glorification of great gifts, the narration of Kalpas—All these are narrated in this Purāṇa.

30. This Purāṇa is pure and conducive to welfare; it causes increase in longevity and fame. He who reads this or listens to it, goes to Hari's abode.

31. He who writes this and gifts it over to a Brāhmaṇa after worshipping him on the equinoctial transit, alongwith a gold fish and a cow attains the greatest region.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHT

The Garuḍa Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O Marīci, listen, I shall recount to you the auspicious Garuḍa Purāṇa.[1] On being asked, the Lord Viṣṇu, seated on Garuḍa, recounted this to Garuḍa.

1. The GP (Garuḍa Purāṇa) is an ancient encyclopaedia of Indian wisdom, though its Preta-kalpa section adds little to its glory. According to the NP. Bh. P. (xii. 13. 8) and BV. P., GP consists of 19,000 verses while according to the Vāyu and Mt. P the total no. of its verses is 18,000 (Kane HD. vii. 832) and according to AP 272, 21, 8000 verses. Kane's statements need revision as the Vāyu 104.8 (GM. edt.) clearly states, 19000 as its total No. of verses.

ekona-viṁśa-sāhasraṁ Vainateyam udāhṛtam/
But GP (I. 1. 35) states 8800 verses as its extent.
aṣṭau-śloka-sahasrāṇi tathā cāṣṭau śatāni ca/
Purāṇaṁ Gāruḍaṁ Vyāsaḥ purā'sau mā'bravīd idam //

2. It consists of nineteen thousand verses. The story deals with the events of the Tārkṣya Kalpa. There is the usual enquiry about the beginning of the Purāṇa, creation of the Universe is described svccinctly.

3. O Brāhmaṇa, there are rules of the procedure of the worship of the sun; thereafter, the rules regarding initiation ceremony; then there is the worship in connection with Śrāddhas, after this (injunctions regarding) the worship of nine Vyūhas (manifestations of the Lord).

4. Then the injunctions regarding the worship, the Pañjara (ritualistic cage) pertaining to Viṣṇu, the chapter on Yoga system and the glorification of Viṣṇu's thousand names.

5. The meditation on Viṣṇu, then the worship of the Sun, thereafter, the Arcanā (worship) of Mṛtyuñjaya, the Mālā-mantra (Garland mantra), the worship of Śiva and then the worship of his attendants.

6. The adoration of Gopāla, the worship of Śrīdhara, the fascinator of the three worlds, the worship of Viṣṇu of the five Tattvas, the discus and the worship of the Lord.

7. The rites of Nyāsa, etc., the Upāsti, performance of Sandhyā prayers, the worship of Durgā and then the worship of the Devas, the worship of Maheśvara, and then the rite of wearing the Pavitra (Darbha grass with a loop worn in the finger like a ring) and worshipping.

8. The meditation on the idol of the Lord, the measurements of the sites of the buildings; the characteristics of palaces, the mode of installation of all the Devas with the several modes of worship.

The confusion is due to difference in Mss. or versions of the GP. available to the writer of the Purāṇa, e. g. GP. I. ch. 107 (ref. to the Parāśara Smṛti) is not known to the NP. noted by Dr. Ramshankar Bhattacharya (GP. Intro, p. 14-15)., the table of contents given in the NP agrees more closely with the Jibanand edt. of the GP. (though Veṅkaṭeśvara edt. of GP also tallies with that of the NP).

The Pretakalpa in the NP. differs in some respects from all the printed editions of the GP as accretions went on increasing in the Pretakalpa (R. S. Bhattacharya—ibid, p. 16).

A few slips in the readings of the NP (Veṅkaṭeśvara) edt.

NP. Śrāddha (verse 3) for GP. I. 10 Śreyādi Pūjā.

NP. Vidhi Kriyā (verse 9 for GP. I. 53) Nidhi Kriyā.

9. The Yoga with its eight ancillaries, the Dharmas regarding the charitable gifts, the activity and the rules of procedure regarding the expiatory rites, the narration of different continents and their Lords, the description of hells, the solar system (planetary system around the sun) and Jyotiṣa (Science of Astrology and Astronomy.)

10. The science of Sāmudrika (Palmistry of prediction based on the characteristic marks on the body), the knowledge of the notes, scrutiny tests of the Navaratnas (the nine precious stones) the glory of the holy centres, the excellent greatness of Gayā.

11. Then the description of the Manvantaras severally alongwith their divisions, the enumeration of the Pitṛs, the duties of the different Varṇas (castes), the purification of the materials of worship, the dedication of benefit unto God.

12. Śrāddha, worship of vināyaka, Grahayajña (sacrifice for propitiating the planets), the Āśramas (stages of life), the impurity due to birth and death (in the family), Nītiśāstra (science of Polity and Ethics), statements about the holy rites.

13. The Solar race, the lunar race, the narration of the incarnations of Hari, the story of Rāma, (the Rāmāyaṇa), the genealogical line of Hari (the Harivaṁśa) and then the story of Bhārata.

14. The science of life, pathology at the outset and (then) the treatment, then materia-medica (Dravyajā Guṇāḥ), the Kavaca (Mantras as coat of mail) that dispels ailments and which pertains to Viṣṇu and Garuḍa, the mantra pertaining to Tripura.

15. Praśna-cūḍā-maṇi (a treatise on answering astrologically problems asked) at the end, the exposition of the veterinary science branch about Horses, the enumeration of the names of drugs and then discussion about grammar.

16. The science of prosody, good conduct and discipline, and then the rules regarding ablution, the rites of Tarpaṇa Vaiśvadeva, the twilight prayers and the holy rites (offering ablutions to Pitṛs during Parvans such as the full moon and the new moon days and such other special days.

17. Nityaśrāddha (the daily Śrāddha), the description of Sapiṇḍa rite, the essence of Dharma, the atonement of sins, the secondary creation, the dissolution and the particular characteristics of the Yugas are narrated, the benefit of religious rites.

18. The system of Yoga philosophy, the devotion to Viṣṇu, the benefit of obeisance to Hari, the greatness of Viṣṇu, the excellent hymn to Narasiṁha.

19. The nectar of perfect knowledge, the set of eight verses in praise of Guha (Kārttikeya), the eulogy of Viṣṇu, the principal tenets of Vedānta and Sāṁkhya, the knowledge of the Brahman and the Ātman.

20. The gist of the Bhagavadgītā, glorification of the fruit thereof—these are the topics mentioned in the first section. Then in the second section Pretakalpa (the rituals after the death) is narrated.

21. O Brāhmaṇa, on being asked by Tārkṣya (Garuḍa) the lord communicated all these things, the revelation of Dharmas, the cause of salvation of the Yogins.

22. The benefit of charitable gifts etc. is mentioned and then the Mantras for the rites of obsequies, then the description of the path leading to the world of Yama.

23. The details (regarding the performance) are stated alongwith the fruit of sixteen Śrāddhas. Expiatory rites in regard to the path of Yama, then the greatness of Dharmarāja.

24. Specific mention of the harassment of the Pretas (ghosts), review of the characteristic signs of the Pretas, the narration of the stories of the Pretas; the cause of ghosthood.

25. Consideration of religious rites for the ghosts; statements regarding Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa (the rite regarding the offerings of the balls of rice to the departed), the description of the release from ghost-hood, the charitable gifts for the purpose of salvation (of the ghosts).

26. The indispensable excellent charitable gift; the inference of things causing happiness to the ghosts; the description of the embodied soul, the description of Yama's world.

27. The narration of the uplift from ghosthood; the specification regarding the holy rites and the doer, the narration of the rites to be performed before death, the exposition of subsequent rites.

28. The 'middle' sixteen Śrāddhas, the stipulation of activities for the attainment of heaven, the reckoning of Sūtaka (period of impurity due to birth), the rite of Nārāyaṇa Bali (oblation unto Nārāyaṇa.)

29. The greatness of Vṛṣotsarga (the rite of setting a bull calf free), the avoidance of forbidden activities, statement of the rites when accidental and premature death takes place, the fruits of human action.

30. The consideration of Kṛtya and Akṛtya (what should be done and what should not be done), meditation on Viṣṇu for the purpose of Salvation, narration of the rites laid down for the attainment of heaven, the description of happiness in heaven.

31. The description of Bhūrloka, (the Earth,) the description of seven nether-worlds, the narration of five upper worlds, the description of the position of the Cosmic Egg.

32. Many stories concerning the cosmic egg, the exposition of the Brahman and the Jīva (the individual soul); the narration of the ultimate dissolution (of the Universe) and the narration of the eulogy of benefits.

33. Thus is the Purāṇa named after Garuḍa; it yields worldly pleasures and salvation; it is glorified as destructive of sins of those men who read and listen to it.

34. He who writes out this Purāṇa and gifts it to a Brāhmaṇa at the time of equinoctial transit, alongwith a pair of swans made of gold, goes to heaven.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND NINE

The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa : Contents

God Brahmā said :

1. O dear one, listen, I shall recount to you the ancient (Purāṇa) named Brahmāṇḍa.[1] It comprises twelve thousand verses. It deals with the events of the Ādikalpa.

2. It has four Pādas (quarters), the first one is called Prakriyāpāda, then is the Anuṣaṅgapāda, the third one is Upodghāta Pāda (quarter of Introductory matter) and the fourth one is Upasaṁhāra (conclusion).

3. The first two quarters constitute the first or earlier section, the third quarter forms the middle section and the fourth quarter, the final section.

4. At the beginning, there is the stipulation of duties, then the story of the Naimiṣa forest, the origin of Hiraṇyagarbha, the conception of the different worlds.

5. This is the (summary of the) first quarter. O bestower of honour, listen to the second. The narration of the Kalpas and the Manvantaras, the knowledge of the worlds, thereafter.

1. According to the NP., Bh. P. (xii. 13. 8), AP. (272. 23), the Brahmāṇḍa P. consists of 12,000 verses and 12,200 according to Mt. P. 53. 54. But the Veṅkaṭeśvara edt. gives 14,286 verses. Its contents are divided into three parts (the preliminary (Pūrva) part containing 2 sections: Prakriyā (Introduction in 5 Chs.) and Anuṣaṅga (various kalpas, manu-ages, etc. in 33 Chs.) Part II (Upodghāta) deals with the genealogies of kings or dynastic history. Part III (Upa-saṁhāra) is a recapitulation of the creation of the Universe, Manu-epochs, dissolution of the Universe). It is however, called a Purāṇa with four parts (catuṣpāda) v. 29.

Kirfel in his Purāṇa Pañcalakṣaṇa has noted the close similarity in hundreds of verses in the Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇas and proposed a theory that they formed one Purāṇa originally.

The Purāṇa traces the tradition of authorship as follows: God Brammā→ Vasiṣṭha→Parāśara→Jātūkarṇya→Vāyu or Prabhañjana→Vyāsa (vv. 33-34).

This table of contents in the NP tallies in general with those of the printed editions of the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa except the 40 chapters of the Lalitā episode.

(vide table of contents of the Purāṇa Edt. Jagadish Sastri MLBD, Delhi, pp ix-xi,)

6. The narration of the mental creation, the description of Rudra's offsprings, the elegance and prowess of Mahādeva and thereafter, the creation by the sages.

7. The conquest of fires, the description of the existence of Kāla (Time), the specification of the family of Priyavrata, the length and extent of the Earth.

8. The description of the (sub-continent) Bhārata and then the review of other sub-continents, the description of Jambūdvīpa and other continents, then the description of the nether-worlds.

9. The enumeration of the upper worlds, and thereafter, the movements of the planets, the narration of the Solar Array (Planetary system), the enumeration of the Divine planets.

10. The explanation of the name Nīlakaṇṭha, prowess of Mahādeva, description of the New moon day, the review of the principles of the different Yugas.

11. The institution of the Yajñas, the last two Yugas and their activity, the characteristic features of the human beings etc. in different Yugas, the description of the spiritual lineage of the sages.

12. The narration of the classification of the Vedas, the description of Svāyambhuva Manu and the enumeration of the remaining Manvantaras and then the milking of the Earth.

13. The first part, the second quarter ends with the current creation in the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara. Then in the Upodghāta quarter, the glorification of the seven sages.

14. The family of Prajāpati; the birth of the Devas and others therefrom; the desire for victory, the narration of the origin of the Maruts.

15. The narration of the descendants of Kaśyapa, the review of the families of the sages, the narration of the Pitṛ Kalpa, and thereafter, the Śrāddha Kalpa (the rituals regarding the Śrāddha).

16. The origin of Vaivasvata Manu and thereafter, the creation by him, and the family of Manu's sons, ultimately the review of the Gandharvas.

17. The narration of the family of Ikṣvāku, the family of the noble-souled Atri, the family of Amāvasu and the wonderful story of Raji.

18. The story of Yayāti, the review of the family of Yadu; the story of Kārttavīrya, thereafter, the story of Jamadagni and his son.

19. The description of the family of Vṛṣṇi, the birth of Sagara, the story of Bhārgava (Paraśu-Rāma) subsequent to the killing of his father.

20. The story of Sagara, the story of Bhārgava once again, the story of the battle between the Devas and Asuras, the description of the manifestation of Kṛṣṇa.

21. The meritorious hymn in praise of Indra glorified by Śukra, the narration of the greatness of Viṣṇu and the review of the family of Bali.

22. The story of the future kings after the advent of the Kali age. This is the quarter of Upodghāta in the middle section, the third quarter (in the Purāṇa).

23. I shall recount the fourth quarter viz. Upasaṁhāra (Conclusion) in the final section, the narration of Vaivasvata Manvantara precisely and in detail.

24. What has been mentioned before is mentioned here succinctly; thereafter; the story of the future Manus.

25. The specification of the Kalpas and the dissolution (then), thereafter the measurement of Time, then the fourteen worlds are mentioned along with their respective characteristics.

26. The description of hells (attained) by impious activities, the narration of Manomayapura (City of Mind) and thereafter, the Prākṛtika Laya (Dissolution within Prakṛti).

27. Thereafter, the description of Śiva's city. The threefold goal of creatures, thanks to the contact with the Guṇas, is described.

28. Thereafter, the description by means of positive and negative assertions (i. e. invariable concomitance and logical discontinuance) of the Brahman, the great Ātman, that is beyond specifications and argumentation.

29. Thus the quarter section on Upasaṁhāra has been summarised. Thus the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa comprising four quarters has been described to you.

30-33a. O Brāhmaṇa, this Purāṇa called Brahmāṇḍa is the eighteenth Purāṇa, the most essential of all chief (Purāṇas). What is originally composed of four hundred thousand verses has been narrated separately in eighteen books, O bestower of honour, by the sage Vyāsa the son of Parāśara who is the real instructor of all the sages of purified souls. Those sages who by nature practise religious virtues and bless the wretched ones, heard these Purāṇas from me and revealed them to the world.

33b-36a. Formerly, this Purāṇa has been narrated by me to Vasiṣṭha; it was passed on by him to his son Śakti, by him it was recounted to Jātūkarṇya. Then Vyāsa obtained it from the mouth of the Wind-God, making it authoritative in the world; he propagated this excellent Purāṇa in the Public (the world). O dear one, whoever glorifies this and listens to it with great concentration, dispels all sins and attains the world devoid of ailments.

36b-37. He who writes out this Purāṇa and gives it to a Brāhmaṇa after covering it with a cloth and placing it on a gold throne, attains the world of Brahman. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

38. O Marīci, these eighteen Purāṇas narrated briefly by me to you should be heard in full.

39. The excellent man who listens to the eighteen Purāṇas or narrates them in accordance with the injunctions, is not born here again.

40. The Sūtra (summarised form) of the Purāṇas which has been mentioned by me to you now, should be practised everyday by one who desires the benefit out of the Purāṇas.

41. This should not be narrated to any one who is arrogant, hypocrite, sinful, malicious to the Devas and preceptors, knavish or one who hates good men.

42. It must be imparted to one who is quiescent, of tranquil mind, interested in service, devoid of indecent rivalry, is pure and is a good devotee of Viṣṇu,

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TEN

The Exposition of Vratas to be performed on Pratipads, the first day of the Lunar fortnight

Nārada said :

1. O holy sir, I have heard the full gist of all the Purāṇas, conveyed by you directly and orally in the same manner as it was narrated to Marīci by Brahmā, the highest deity.

2. O highly blessed one, now recount to me, in due order, the story of the Tithis (i. e. the details of the different lunar days) whereby the holy rites and observances can be decided upon.

3. Now please narrate to me the particular holy Vrata (vow or rite) alongwith its detailed procedure of worship etc. and enlighten me on what (particular) holy lunar day (tithi) and in what (particular) month that Vrata is to be performed.[1]

Sanātana said :

4. O Nārada, listen I shall recount to you the holy rites (Vratas) of the Tithis separately. They bring about all the Siddhis (accomplishments of objects) in the order of the Tithis and their lords.

5-6. God Brahmā created the entire Universe on the first day in the bright half of Caitra, at the time of sunrise.[2] It was in the beginning of the year and that of the spring in the kingdom of Bali (?). The Pratipad is to be taken always

1. Vratas are of different types. Some are to be performed on particular tithis, some on days, some depend on the constellation of the particular day etc. (AP. 175.1) AP later gives some general rules for observing Vratas.). Here Nārada wants to know the details of Tithi-vratas.

2. The belief that the Universe was created by god Brahmā at the time of sun-rise on the 1st day of the bright half of Caitra, is common to other Purāṇas. CC on Vrata, pp. 360-65, Vrata-rāja (VRJ.) ch. I., p. 21 quotes Bm. P and prescribes Mahāśānti and the worship of god Brahmā as in the NP.

when it is in conjunction with the previous Tithi, by wise persons.[1]

7. At that time, the great rite of Śānti (the pacificatory rite) should be performed. It is destructive of all sins. It subdues all evil portents. It dispels the sins of Kali.

8. It bestows longevity, causes nourishment and enhances wealth and good fortune. It is auspicious and holy and is conducive to happiness in both the worlds.

9-10. On that day, at the outset, god Brahmā who had assumed the physical body of the fire-god, should be worshipped with respectful formalities such as washing the feet with water and other respectful offerings (Pādyas, Arghyas), flowers, incense, clothes, ornaments, meals, sacrificial oblations, presents and the propitiation of the Brāhmaṇas. Thereafter, the worship of deities should be performed separately of each god.

11-12. After paying obeisance to the Oṁkāra with (the offerings of) water from the Kuśa grass, gingelly-seeds and raw rice-grains, (the devotee) shall give religious fee or gift (Dakṣiṇā) to a Brāhmaṇa who is a Vedic Scholar, alongwith clothes and gold for the purpose of complete and perfect performance of the Vrata. This Vrata that has such a special Pūjā in it, is called Saurī Vrata[2] (Vrata pertaining to the Sun).

13-14a. O Brāhmaṇa, this holy rite yields good health to men. O sage, Vidyāvrata[3] is also to be performed on that day. O sage, on the same Tithi, the holy rite called Tilaka[4] was told by Kṛṣṇa to Ajātaśatru (Yudhiṣṭhira).

14b-16. In the month of Jyeṣṭha, in the bright half, on the first day at sunrise, one should worship the pleasing Karavīra

1. VRJ. quotes this as Vṛddha Vasiṣṭha Smṛti and states that even if the Pratipad is associated with amāvāsyā (pūrva-vṛddhā), it should be taken as the proper beginning of the year.

2. Probably the same as Ārogyapratipad vrata (VRJ. I p, 23).

3. NP gives no details of this Vrata, for which vide CC on Vrata I. 338 40, VRJ. p. 23.

4. After worshipping Saṁvatsara (the year), the performer has to apply on his forehead a Tilaka with white sandal-wood paste for one year (CC on Vrata I. 348-50.

tree that grows in the temple garden.[1] It must be tied with a red thread, scents, incense and unguents must be offered alongwith the germinating seven grains, oranges and pomegranates. It must be sprinkled with water mixed with unbroken rice grain. The following Mantra should be uttered for praying for forgiveness.

17-19a. "Obeisance to you O Karavīra, the residence of meritorious acts, beloved of the sun, always liked by (one who wields thunderbolt Dambholi) i.e. Indra, Mṛḍa, (Śiva), Durgā and other deities." He should then crave forgiveness through the Vedic Mantra[2] "Ā Kṛṣṇena" etc. (ṚV. I. 35.2). After worshipping thus with great devotion and after giving due Dakṣiṇā to a Brāhmaṇa, he should circumambulate and go to his house.

19b-20. On the first day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, there is a great Vrata[3] that yields good fortune and intellect. It is the cause of all the Puruṣārthas) viz. virtue, wealth, love and liberation.

O Brāhmaṇa, beginning on a Monday, this Vrata should be continued for three and a half months.

21-22. After observing fast on the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika, the devotee, earnest and interested in the Vrata, should worship Śiva on (the following) full moon day. On the Pratipad following it He should offer Vāyana (sweet-meats and other presents) alongwith a gold flute (?) to a Brāhmaṇa for the purpose of increase in the wealth. O leading sage, it is highly meritorious and it increases the pleasure of the deities.

23. On the first day in the bright half of Bhādrapada, the Vrata named 'Mahātmā' (the greatest one) should be performed. Some call this Vrata by the name of Mauna[1] (silence). Śiva is worshipped in this rite.

1. VV 14-19a. describe the Karavīra-pratipad-vrata It is observed on Vaiśākha Śuddha Pratipad in Tamil Nad. Cf. CC. I. 353.

2. V. 17 which is a prayer in Purāṇic SK is said to be the 'Mantra' ā Kṛṣṇena etc. is a Vedic Mantra in RV. I. 35. 2.

3. VV 19b-22 describe the Roṭaka Vrata, although NP does not disclose the name of this mahāvrata, Vrj., pp. 25-26 describe it as Roṭaka Vrata. It is also called Bilva-roṭaka vrata.

24-27a. The devotee shall, in silence, cook three times sixteen fruits alongwith ground flour. He shall give one set of sixteen to a Brāhmaṇa. He shall give another set of sixteen to the Deity. One set of sixteen, he himself eats. Over the water pot, the knower of the injunctions worships a gold image of Śiva and gives everything of it to the preceptor alongwith a cow. O Brāhmaṇa, after observing this Vrata of the trident-bearing Lord of the Devas for fourteen years, the devotee enjoys worldly pleasures, till his death (thereafter), he attains to Śiva.

27b-29. O Brāhmaṇa, a man who performs Aśokavrata[2] on the first day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina, (himself) becomes Aśoka (free from grief). He is endowed with riches and grains. The Aśoka tree must be worshipped by those who are exclusively devoted to these observances and rites. At the end of the Vrata in the twelfth year, he should offer the replica of an Aśoka tree with great devotion to the preceptor. He is thereby honoured in Śivaloka.

30. One shall begin Navarātra[3] (the festival of nine nights) on this very Pratipad. He should worship the goddess in the forenoon alongwith the rite of installing the water-pot.

31. He should sow to germinate barley grains mixed with wheat. He should take only one meal once a day. The food consumed should not be one that is requested for.

32-33. In accordance with his ability, he should observe fast. The worship of the goddess, repetition of the Mantras and recitation of the holy texts (the Saptaśatī) should also be done in accordance with one's capacity. O Brāhmaṇa, the three Caritas (stories) mentioned in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa should be read for all the nine days, by one who desires to get worldly

1. VV. 23-27a detail the Mauna Vrata. HD V. 383-384 gives a Vrata of a similar name but the details are somewhat different.

2. VV 27-29 describe Aśoka-vrata. This is different from that given in CC II. 279-283. HD V. i. 295 also differs.

3. VV. 30-34 describe the Navarātra or Durgā Pūjā which is observed all over India. It is described in details in HD V. i., pp. 154-187. The Carita in the Mk. P. mentioned in V. 32 is most probably Devī Māhātmya (chs. 78-90) or the Saptaśatī.

pleasures and salvation. The worship of virgins alongwith the rite of feeding, is praised.

34. O Brāhmaṇa, after performing the Vrata thus, the man becomes a receptacle of all Siddhis on the Earth, by the grace of Durgā.

35. On the first day in the bright half in the month of Urja (Kārttika), one should perform all the rites mentioned for Navarātra. Particularly, the rite called Annakūṭa[1] (a heap of cooked articles of food) causes the increase in the delight of Viṣṇu.

36. In the course of worship of Govardhana, Annakūṭa must be made with all cooked articles and with all milk products by everyone, for achieving all objects by the worshipper.

37. In the evening the devotee should worship Govardhana mountain alongwith the cows, and offer suitable Dakṣiṇā. He shall attain worldly pleasures and liberation.

38-40a. The excellent Dhanavrata[2] is to be performed on the first day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa. Viṣṇu is to be worshipped at night alongwith Homas. The observer of the Vrata should give a replica in gold of the fire-god to a Brāhmaṇa after covering it with two red clothes. By performing this vrata thus, one becomes flourishing in wealth and food-grains on the Earth. With his sins burned in fire, he is honoured in the Viṣṇuloka.

1. VV. 35-37 describe the Govardhana Pūjā (in the memory of Kṛṣṇa's triumph over Indra) or Annakūṭa. Though v. 35 instructs "to perform all the rites mentioned for Navarātra," the essential difference is that the Navarātra is pertaining to Devī (Śākta) while Govardhana Pūjā is a strictly vegetarian Vaiṣṇava Vrata. Vrj. p. 33 quotes Sanatkumāra Saṁhitā to describe the procedure of worship of Annakūṭa. There are minor regional differences in performing the Annakūṭapūjā.

2. VV. 38-40a describe Dhana-vrata which is otherwise called Dhanya-vrata (AP. 167. 5-6) or Dhanya pratipad Vrata. CC I. 355-56 bases its description on the Varāha Purāṇa 56. 1-16 which is somewhat different from what is given here. HD. V. i. 320 lists a Dhana-vrata which begins on Phālguna-Śuddha-Trayodaśī and is concerned with Kubera and as such is different from the Dhana-Vrata in the NP.

40b-41a. On the first day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, one should worship the Sun-god with devotion. The man must restrict his diet to one meal a day. Performing the Vrata thus, that mortal being shall attain the world of the Sun.

41b-42a. On the first day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, one shall worship the Fire god as Maheśvara himself, in accordance with the injunctions. He becomes rich and flourishing on the Earth.

42b-44a. On the first day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, one should, with water, sprinkle Digambara (the naked Lord Śiva), the Lord of the Devas, all of whose limbs have turned grey due to dust. He should sprinkle the water all over his body. Indeed, god Maheśvara is delighted even with such secular rites and activities. On being worshipped with devotion, he grants his own Sāyujya (Salvation wherein the devotee becomes one with the Deity).

44b-46.[1] On the first day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, one shall worship Viṣṇu who sports in the Universe. He should worship in accordance with the injunctions. The man who observes the Vrata should feed the Brāhmaṇas. Similarly, on the first day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha and Āṣāḍha, one shall worship Brahmā, the preceptor of the worlds. Thereat, accompanied by Viṣṇu, Brahmā the Lord of the chiefs of all worlds, grants identity with himself. The devotee shall then attain all the Siddhis.

47-48.[2] O excellent Brāhmaṇa, Vratas to be observed on the first day of the twelve months—Vratas bestowing worldly pleasures here and Liberation from Saṁsāra hereafter have been recounted to you. Brahmacarya (observance of celibacy) is laid down in all these Vratas. The diet during these Vratas is prescribed as Haviṣyānna (cooked rice soaked in ghee) as common to all.

---

1. The last redactor of the NP seems to have rectified the missing Vratas on Vaiśākha Śukla 1st, by adding vv. 44b-46.

2. VV. 47-48 prescribe the general rules about observance of Vratas mentioned (vide AP. 175).

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVEN

Exposition of Vratas to be observed on Dvitīyās (second Tithi in lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, listen. I shall recount to you the Vratas of Dvitīyās (to be observed on the second day of the lunar fortnight). On observing them with devotion, a man is honoured in the Brahmaloka.

2-3a. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the devotee should propitiate Brahmā alongwith his Śakti. He should eulogise the deity and propitiate him with Haviṣyānna (cooked rice soaked in ghee), scents and other things. He shall thus attain the benefit of all sacrifices. After realising all desires, he shall attain the region of the supreme spirit in the end.

3b-4a. O Brāhmaṇa, on this very day, others worship the rising crescent moon at the beginning of the night. They attain worldly pleasures and liberation.

4b-6. Or on this day, one shall devotedly worship the twin gods, Aśvins and offer gold and silver eyes to a Brāhmaṇa covering them with a pot filled with curd or ghee ? O leading Brāhmaṇa, by performing this Netravrata[1] for twelve years one becomes verily a king. He attains a comely form. He becomes valorous against the hosts of his enemies. He becomes interested in Dharma, and the chief of all kings.

7-8a. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Rādha (Vaiśākha), one shall worship Brahmā in the form of Viṣṇu in accordance with the injunction, over a pitcher containing seven kinds of grains. After enjoying all desirable worldly pleasures here one attains Viṣṇuloka thereby.

1. VV 4b-6 describe the Netra-vrata or Cakṣu-vrata. CC on Vrata I. 392-93 mentions that the Vratin (observer of the Vrata) is to subsist on curds and ghee on this tithi.

8b-9. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, one should worship the Sun-god, Lord of the worlds who has assumed the form of the four-faced Lord, in accordance with the injunctions. After feeding the Brāhmaṇas with devotion, he shall attain the world of Sun-God.

10-12. The second day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha is very meritorious. On that day, the observer of the Vrata takes Balarāma in procession alongwith Subhadrā. He goes round the various parts of the city, alongwith Brāhmaṇas and others. After going near a tank or a river, he should celebrate the great festival. At the end of it, he should re-instate them duly in the Lord's abode. He should feed Brāhmaṇas for completing the holy rite.

13. Prajāpati or the creator of the universe sleeps on the second day in the bright half of the month of Nabhas (Śrāvaṇa) That tithi is therefore very sacred. It is called Aśokaśayanā.[1]

14-16a. One should worship the four-faced deity lying in the bed alongwith his Śakti. After bowing down to the Lord of the worlds, one shall utter this Mantra : "O Śrīkānta (lover of Śrī) O Śrīvatsadhārin (one who bears the Śrīvatsa mark), Śrīvāsa (abode of good fortune), O Śrīpati (Lord of Śrī), O Dharmārtha-Kāmada (the bestower of virtue, wealth, and love) may not my wedded life perish." Here the charitable gift of a crescent made of gold is recommended. It brings about all Siddhis.

16b-17a. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapadā, one should worship the creator of the

1. VV. 13-15 describe the Aśoka-Śayana-Vrata, also called Aśūnya-Śayana-Vrata. It is meant for both men and women. NP prescribes the worship of the four-faced god Brahmā while he is lying in bed with his Śakti, in this Vrata. But in Viṣṇudharmottara. I. 145. 6-20 and AP. 177. 3-12 the worship of Viṣṇu and Lakṣmī is prescribed. Strangely enough after worshipping Brahmā the prayer is addressed to Viṣṇu in the NP (v. 15); the name of the Vrata is based on the prayer.

Lakṣmyā na śūnyaṁ varada yathā te śayanaṁ vibho|
Śayyā mamāpyaśūnyā' stu tathaiva madhusūdana||

—AP. 177. 7b-8a.

It is to be observed for four months from Śrāvaṇa, universe in the form of Indra in accordance with the prescribed injunctions. He shall obtain the fruit of the performance of all sacrifices.

17b-21.[1] The second day in the bright half of the month Āśvina is very holy. The charitable gift made on this day is said to yield endless benefits. Formerly, Yama was fed by Yamunā in her house on the second day in the bright half of Kārttika. Hence, this is called Yamadvitīyā.[1] If one takes food in the house of one's sister on this day, it is conducive to nourishment. He must give her clothes and ornaments. It is the tithi on which Lord Yamarāja was fed by Yamunā with her own hand, out of sisterly affection. Hence, he who takes his food from the hand of his sister on that day, attains excellent jewels, wealth and food-grains.

22. Pitṛs should be worshipped through Śrāddha on the second day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa. Then the devotee obtains good health alongwith his sons and grandsons.

23-24. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, the rite of sprinkling with the water a cow's horns, is the bestower of all desires unto men. The sight of the rising moon is also conducive to the attainment of all desires. For the purpose of achieving virtue, love and wealth, the devotee should restrict his diet to cooked rice soaked in ghee and subdue his sense-organs and worship the rising moon by offering Arghya and flowers alongwith ghee.

25-29a. On the second day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, one shall duly worship Prajāpati in the form of Sun, with red flowers and red unguents. He shall make an image of the deity in gold, according to his capacity. He should take a copper vessel full of wheat or rice grains. He should dedicate all these things to the Lord and offer the same to a Brāhmaṇa. If this Vrata is thus performed, the devotee shall be like the rising sun. The man will be unapproachable and unthwartable in the world. After enjoying all excellent worldly pleasures here, he attains Brahmā's region in the end. He will be seated in an excellent aerial chariot, eulogised frequently by the Devas.

1. VV. 18b-21 describe the Yama dvitīyā Vrata. It was on the 2nd day of the bright half of Kārttika that Yama, the god of Death, was fed by his sister Yamunā that people are advised to go to their sisters on this day and take meal and gift her with clothes and ornaments. The story is told in Bṛ.

29b-31. An excellent Brāhmaṇa should worship Śiva with white and fragrant flowers on the second day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna. He should make a canopy and decorate it with flowers and ornamental fittings. He should propitiate the Lord with Naivedyas of various kinds. He should offer incense and lights. He should perform Nīrājana rite (waving of lights). Prostrating on the ground with eight limbs touching it, he shall make obeisance to the Lord.

32. Worshipping the Lord of the Devas thus, the man becomes free from all sickness. With plenty of wealth and food-grains, he shall certainly live for a hundred years.

33. The injunctions regarding the Dvitīyās of the bright half of the month should be followed in the case of those of the dark half of the month also, by the people clever in the matter of procedures.

34. It is the fire-god alone that is worshipped separately in the different months. He assumes different forms and so is worshipped on the Dvitīyās. The vow of celibacy etc. are to be observed as before.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE

Enumeration of Vratas to be observed on Tṛtiyās (third day of a lunar fortnight

Sanātana said :

1. O Nārada, listen. I shall recount to you the Vratas pertaining to Tṛtīyā (third day in the lunar fort-night). On

P. Uttara 14. 18-23. It is also known as Bhrātṛ-dvitīyā (Bhaiyyā-dūja and people make it a point to go to their sister's place and offer her some gift. Vrj. quotes CC. wherein the Bṣ. P. mentioned above is quoted. Vrj. quotes from the Sanatkumāra Saṁhitā, LP & Pd. P. in support of this Vrata which is an act of fraternal affection.

observing these Vratas perfectly, a woman shall attain married bliss and good fortune.

2-5. An unmarried virgin desirous of a bridegroom, and one desirous of matrimonial bliss and good fortune for her sons and husband, should perform Gaurī Vrata.[1] The image of Gaurī is made of gold, silver, copper or clay along with that of her Lord (Śiva) on the third day in the bright half of the month of Caitra. O Brāhmaṇa, she then worships it with scents, fragrant flowers, clothes, auspicious ornaments, and bundles of Dūrvā grass. She observes fast. She propitiates Brāhmaṇa women whose husbands and sons are alive and girls with auspicious characteristics, by offering them saffron, collyrium, clothes and other things. Delighted in her mind, she should keep awake that night with the desire to fulfil the Vrata.

6. O Brāhmaṇa, she should give that image to the preceptor if it is metallic. If it is made of clay, she should immerse it in a tank or a river.

7. She should perform this auspicious Gaurī Vrata for twelve years. With the due formal resolve to donate, she should offer twelve cows also for the achievement of her desires.

8. What more needs be spoken ? There is no other bestower of good fortune and matrimonial bliss to women in all the three worlds like Gaurī.

9. A woman attains wealth, good husband, sons, learning, ability to command, fame and happiness—in fact all desired happiness, by worshipping Gaurī with devotion.

1. VV. 2-9 describe the Gaurī Vrata which if observed for twelve years, confers a good consort to the lady observer if unmarried, uninterrupted matrimonial bliss, if married, good fortune and all desired happiness. HD V. i. p. 296 gives five varieties of this Vrata some of which are to be observed in Āśvina (Kṛtyaratnākara 219), on the 4th day of Jyeṣṭha (Bd. p). It is similar to Gaurī-tṛtīyā-Vrata observed on the 3rd day of the bright half of Caitra, Bhādrapada, Māgha—(Samaya-mayūkha 36).

There is another Gaurī Vrata to be observed on the 4th day in the bright half of Māgha. It is also called Ḍhuṇḍhi Vrata, Kuṇḍa Vrata, Lalitā Vrata and Śānti Vrata, vide infra I. 113. 80.85.

10. The third day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha is glorified as Akṣaya Tṛtīyā.[1] That is the Tithi on which Tretāyuga began. Whatever holy rite is performed on this day is made everlasting (Akṣaya) by this Tṛtīyā.

11-12a. Wise men know that two inaugural days of Yugas (viz. that of Kṛta and Tretā) were in the bright half of the month, while those of the other two Yugas (viz. Dvāpara and Kali) were in the dark fortnight (of the lunar month). The two (inaugural) days in the bright fortnight are to be accepted (observed) in the earlier half of the day. Out of the Yugādi days in the dark fortnight, Dvāpara began in Māgha while the Kali Age commenced in Bhādrapada. Thus commenced the Yugas[2] on these days.

12b-13. The devotee should worship Nārāyaṇa, the preceptor of the universe accompanied by Śrī, with flowers, incense and unguents on the third day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha. Or if he takes his holy dip in the waters of the Gaṅgā, he is absolved of all sins.

14. He should worship Viṣṇu with unbroken rice-grains. He shall have his ablution with water mixed with unbroken

1. VV 10-15 describe the Akṣaya Tṛtiyā Vrata which falls on the 3rd day of the bright half of Vaiśākha. Any meritorious act performed on this day, becomes ever-lasting. Hence the epithet Akṣaya. The speciality of this day is that it marks the beginning of the Tretā Yuga. The rite pertains to the worship etc. of god Viṣṇu accompanied by Śrī. The performer devotee attains the region of Viṣṇu. Cf. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 90. 16-17: also Bhaviṣyottara P. 30. 2-3 & 19.

2. VV 11-12a. give the Yugādi tithis vide Supra I 56. 147-48 for the Yugādi Tithis—the tithi on which a particular Yuga began. According to the NP. the following are the Yugādi tithis for the following Yugas.

	Yuga		Tithi
1.	Kṛta		9th day Kārttika, Śu. (bright half) (Śuddha)
2.	Tretā	—	3rd day Vaiśākha, Śu.
3.	Dvāpara	—	15th day of Māgha (Vd—Vadya—dark half)
4.	Kali	—	13th day of Bhādrapada, Vd.

VP. III. 14. 12-13 supports this, though AP. 209. 14 differs about Kṛta-Yuga.

As Yugādi days are recommended for the performance of Śrāddha etc., the first half of the day is preferable for Yugādi day in the bright half of a month, while the latter half is recommended for the Yugādi days in the dark half of the month.

rice grains. He should feed Brāhmaṇas with the flour of barley first fried and then ground. He himself shall partake of it.

15. O Brāhmaṇa, the man who performs the rites thus and who is devoted to Viṣṇu attains Viṣṇu's world. He is bowed to by all the Devas.

16. The third day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha is well known by the name Rambhā.[1] On that day, one should duly worship and honour an excellent Brāhmaṇa accompanied by his wife.

17-18a. With the desire for conjugal blessedness a woman should perform this holy rite and worship the Brāhmaṇa couple with scents, fragrant flowers, silken garments, etc. O Brāhmaṇa, if this holy Rambhā rite is duly observed, it yields wealth, sons, and auspicious inclination towards Dharma (virtuous and religious rites).

18b-21a. The lady who desires conjugal bliss should wear white clothes in the third day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha and worship Keśava accompanied by Lakṣmī symbolised or represented in a Brāhmaṇa accompanied by his wife. She should propitiate them with meals, charitable gifts of cows, clothes and ornaments and pleasing words. By observing this Vrata, the lady shall be blessed with wealth and food-grains. By the grace of the Lord of the Devas, she shall attain Viṣṇu's world.

21b. Svarṇa-Gaurī Vrata[2] is to be performed on the third day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa.

1. VV 16-18 mention Rambhā Vrata which consists of worship of a Brāhmaṇa couple. It yields wealth, sons and inclination to Dharma. The Rambhā Vrata mentioned in the Bhaviṣyottara P. 18. 1-36 and CC on Vrata I. 426-430 is different, as it recommends that worship of Devī, and homa, etc. are to be performed therein.

2. VV 21b-29 describe the Svarṇa Gaurī Vrata to be performed by ladies, on the 3rd day of Śrāvaṇa Śu. for the propitiation of goddess Gauri or Bhavānī. In Karnāṭaka it is observed on the 3rd day of Bhādrapada (Vrj. p. 45). Herein the number 16 is very significant. Goddess Gauri is worshipped with 16 upacāras and prayed for conjugal blessedness, sons and wealth. The Vrata is to be observed for 16 years at the end of which a gold image of Gauri is to be worshipped, 16 wickerworks filled with 16 edibles are to be given to 16 couples of Brāhmaṇas and the gold image to be given to the 22a-23a. The lady devotee should worship goddess Bhavānī by means of the sixteen Upacāras (articles and modes of worship and service) with the Prayer—"O goddess of holy rites, obeisance be to you. Be pleased to grant me sons and wealth, grant me conjugal blessedness. Do bestow on me all other desired things."

23b-24a. After praying thus to Bhavānī the goddess of the Devas, accompanied by God Śiva, the lady devotee, desirous of completion of the holy rite should make the gift of sweet meats etc. to Brāhmaṇas.

24b-25a. After performing this auspicious Vrata for sixteen years, she should perform the concluding ceremony of the Vrata (Udyāpana) with great devotion. She should not exhibit stinginess in the matter of expenses.

25b-28. In a pandal in a pure Maṇḍala (mystic diagram) she should perform the worship of Gaṇeśa and other gods. She should then place a flat saucer-like copper-dish over the water pot and worship a gold-image of Bhavānī therein with scents and fragrant flowers. Thereafter, the Homa should be performed. Sixteen bamboo vessels (baskets) shall be filled with sweet dishes and cooked rice, offered to the Devī as Naivedya and distributed among Brāhmaṇas, kinsmen and relatives.

29. The woman interested in the observance of this Vrata shall attain the full benefit by giving the gold image to the preceptor and monetary gifts to the other Brāhmaṇas.

30. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada, the lady devotee should perform the Vrata of Haritālikā[1] with great devotion, in accordance with the in-preceptor. The Vrj. quotes a story from the Sk. P. about this Vrata. The Udyāpana (concluding ceremony) of this Vrata agrees with that in the Sk. P. as quoted by Vrj., pp 46-47.

1. VV 30-35 describe the Haritālikā Vrata. This is very popular in Maharashtra but not in Gujarat or Bengal. Only women are eligible for this and they observe a fast on this day and propitiate goddess Umā and Śiva. This Vrata is found in late mediaeval digests like the Nirṇaya Sindhu (p. 133). Vrj. pp. 48 quotes the story of Haritālikā from the Bhaviṣyottara Purāṇa. The Udyāpana-rite in the NP is similar to that in the junctions, alongwith the rites of Pādya (viz. offering water for washing the feet, hands, worship) Arghya and Arcana.

31-32. Then the cooked rice and the Dakṣiṇā should be placed in a gold, silver, copper, bamboo or a clay vessel alongwith fruits and clothes. The same shall then be given to a Brāhmaṇa. At the end of it, she should have the Pāraṇā (break the fast) alongwith the kinsmen.

33. The woman who observes this holy rite shall enjoy all desirable pleasures. She shall become a friend and attendant of Gaurī, thanks to the efficacy of this Vrata.

34. Sixteen bamboo-baskets filled with bliss-yielding articles and clothes should be enthusiastically given to a Brāhmaṇa in accordance with the injunctions.

35-36. She should then give generous monetary gifts to the other excellent Brāhmaṇas also for the satisfaction of the goddess. The woman who performs this holy rite of Saubhāgya Vardhana (that which increases conjugal blessedness) certainly attains it, thanks to the grace of the Goddess.

37-38. When the Tṛtīyā in the month of Bhādrapada coincides with the constellation Hasta, the Vrata taught by Śauri (Kṛṣṇa ?) is called Hastagaurīvrata[1]. The Vrata called Koṭīśvarī and Lakṣeśvarī[2] has been proclaimed by Śiva the Pināka-bearing Lord. Its rules of procedure are being mentioned:

V*RJ*, pp. 48-52. Sixteen wicker-baskets containing 'bliss-yielding articles (indicating Saubhāgya—conjugal happiness) and cloth are to be given to Brāhmaṇas. This Vrata increases conjugal blessedness. The term Saubhāgya Vardhana here does not imply a new Vrata of that name. Dr. Kane in HD. V. 1., p. 456 mentions three Saubhāgya Vratas but they are quite different.

1. VV 37-39 describe Hasta-Gaurī-Vrata which is to be observed when the constellation Hasta coincides with the 3rd day of Bhādrapada Śu. . Kṛṣṇa has told this Vrata. The Vratārka requires contemplation of Gauri, Hara and Gaṇeśa in this Vrata, for 13 years and the Udyāpana (conclusion) of this Vrata in the 14th year (HD. V. i. p. 462).

2. VV 38-45a describe the Koṭīśvarā alias Lakṣeśvarī Vrata to be observed on the 3rd day of Bhādrapada Śu. (Śuddha Pakṣa—The bright half). It is called Lakṣeśvarī as a paste of one hundred thousand grains of rice or Sesame seeds is used to form the image of Pārvati. Fast is to be observed on that day. CC on Vrata I. 459-461 quotes the Sk. P. for this Vrata. also vide HD. V-I. p. 290.

39. On this day, the Vrata has to be taken up for four years. O Nārada, every year it has to be performed alongwith the observance of fast.

40. Unbroken rice grains or gingelly seeds should be selected, O leading sage, to the extent of one hundred thousand. They should be cleaned and put in boiling water.

41. When the grains are cooked well, a splended image of the goddess should be made. It should be embellished with scented flowers and flower garlands.

42-44. Goddess Pārvatī should be installed therein and worshipped with great devotion, with scents, fragrant flowers, incense, lights and detailed Naivedya offerings and fruits. O Brāhmaṇa, she should bow to the goddess and crave forgiveness. Then she should immerse the image of the goddess in the middle of a water-tank. Dakṣiṇā is then offered to the Brāhmaṇas who are knowers of religious rites and procedures. She should then partake of her food the next day. Thus, O Brāhmaṇa, the Koṭi Lakṣeśvarī Vrata has been narrated to you.

45a. In the end she goes to the world of Gaurī, thanks to the power of this Vrata.

45b. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Iṣa (i.e. Āśvina), the lady devotee should perform BṛhadGaurī[1] Vrata.

46. O Nārada, this Vrata is to be performed for five years in accordance with the rules of procedure mentioned above. At the end, she should worship the main preceptor and other Brāhmaṇas with cash presents etc.

47-50. Five Suvāsinīs (married women whose husband are alive) should be worshipped as Haripriyās (beloveds of Hari) with clothes, ornaments, sandal paste, bodices, earrings and necklaces; five bamboo baskets are used and they are tied round with threads. The baskets are filled with saffron, cumin-seeds, and bliss-yielding articles. Vāyanas (presents of sweet-meats) comprising of ground wheat flour, fresh Apūpa (baked pies), fruits etc. These must be given to the Suvāsinīs who also be fed. After giving as worshipful gift half the materials gathered as Vāyanas, she shall silently take her food. For the increase of the desired objects, a fruit (out of the gift) should be worn round the neck.

1. VV. 45 b-53 describe the Bṛhad-Gaurī-Vrata to be observed on the 3rd day of Āśvina Śu. (Śuddha) according, to NP., but on Bhādrapada Kṛ. (Kṛṣṇa) Tṛtīyā as per VRJ. In southern Maharashtra and in Karnataka, a plant Dorlī or Riṅgaṇī (in Marathi) is brought along with its roots, fruits and branches for worship. A thread is wound round the neck in the name of Gaurī. VRJ. (pp. 53-54) narrates the story about this Vrata from the Bhaviṣyottara P.

51. Getting up early in the morning, bedecked in ornaments and accompanied by her friends, she should go to a river to the accompaniment of songs and instrumental music. There Gaurī image is ritualistically bidden farewell to (into the river) with the prayer :

52. "O gentle lady, you had been invoked by me and worshipped duly (as per procedure), you may be pleased to go away at will, for granting me conjugal bliss".

53. After observing the holy rite, thus, O Brāhmaṇa, and after enjoying all worldly pleasures, thanks to the grace of the goddess, she shall attain Gaurī's world after death.

54-55. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Ūrja (Kārttika), she (the lady) should perform Viṣṇugaurī-vrata.[1] After worshipping the goddess worthy of being saluted by the whole world, with different modes of worship and services and after feeding the suvāsinī (a married woman with husband alive) who has been honoured duly with auspicious articles, she should bid farewell to the goddess after bowing to her, for obtaining the grace of satisfaction of Viṣṇugaurī.

56. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, a woman should perform the auspicious HaraGaurī Vrata[2] in accordance with the injunctions laid down before, in the above-mentioned Vrata and should worship Jagadambikā (Mother of the Universe).

57. As a result of the prowess of this Vrata, she shall enjoy all charming worldly pleasures. Attaining the world of the goddess, she rejoices with her.

1. VV. 54-55 briefly describes the Vrata called Viṣṇu Gaurī.
2. VV. 56-57 deal with Hara-Gaurī Vrata.

58-59a. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, a woman should perform the Brahmagaurīvrata[1] in accordance with the injunctions laid down above. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, on being worshipped, BrahmaGaurī shall be delighted. Thanks to her grace, the lady devotee becomes associated with the goddess and rejoices herself.

59b-60. On the third day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, (goddess) Saubhāgya-Sundarī[2] should be worshipped in accordance with the rules of procedure mentioned before, by means of offering Arghya with coconuts. Delighted and rendered pleased by means of the Vrata, the goddess grants her own world.

61. The third day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, is the bestower of family happiness. If the goddess is worshipped with scents, fragrant flowers etc., she shall be the bestower of all auspiciousness.

62. O sage, in all these Tṛtīyās (vratas on the third days of the lunar fortnight) the rules regarding the Pūjā of the goddess, the honour to the Brāhmaṇa, the charitable gifts, Homa and the ritualistic dismissal of the goddess are the same.

63. Thus the Vratas to be performed on Tṛtīyās have been narrated to you here. If observed with great devotion, they shall bestow all desirable objects cherished in mind.

1. VV. 58-59a describe Brahma-Gaurī Vrata. It will thus be seen that the Gaurī Vratas are the same but are associated with each member of the Trinity of gods and are performed on the 3rd days of lunar fortnights.

2. VV. 59b-60 describe the Saubhāgya-Sundarī Vrata (to propitiate goddess Umā, though the NP. is silent about the name of the deity). VRJ. prescribes its performance on Mārgaśirṣa or Māgha (Kr.) Tṛtīyā, especially when it is conjoined with the next (4th) Tithi, and not with the previous one. VRJ (pp. 54-47) quotes a long story from the Bhaviṣyottara P. glorifying this Vrata.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN

The Exposition of the holy rites to be performed on Caturthīs (the fourth day in the Lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa listen, I shall recount to you the holy vows and rites to be observed on Caturthī days.[1] On observing them, men and women shall attain their cherished desires.

2-3a. On the fourth day in the Lunar fortnight in the month of Caitra,[2], one should duly worship Gaṇapa (i.e. Gaṇeśa) in the form of Vāsudeva and offer gold as Dakṣiṇā to a Brāhmaṇa. He will be bowed to by the Devas (thereby), and then go to Viṣṇuloka.

3b-4. On the Caturthī day in the month of Vaiśākha, the devotee should pray to the deity called Saṁkarṣaṇa. By giving a conch-shell to imporant Brāhmaṇa householders, the knower of religious injunctions shall attain the world of Saṁkarṣaṇa and rejoice there for many Kalpas.

5. On the Caturthī day in the month of Jyeṣṭha the person should worship the deity in the form of Pradyumna. By giving fruits and roots to the herds (of cattle or beasts), he shall attain heaven.

1. Just as all the third days in the lunar fortnights are sacred to the goddess (in any form of the Trinity), the fourth days of the lunar fortnights are sacred to god Gaṇeśa. The Vrata gives special merit or fruit, if the 4th Tithi falls on Sunday or Tuesday. (VV. 90-91 below).

2. VV. 2-6 synthesize the Catur-vyūha doctrine of the Pāñcarātrins with a Śaiva god like Gaṇeśa, by identifying him with Viṣṇu. This is Vaiṣṇavization, as the NP. is a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, while in the Kūrma P, we find Pāśupatization of an originally Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa

The Gaṇeśa Vyūha accepts the names of the Pāñcarātrins.

Thus we find :

God Gaṇeśa to be worshipped on the 4th Tithi of :	Name of the Vyūha
1. Caitra	Vāsudeva
2. Vaiśākha	Saṁkarṣaṇa
3. Jyeṣṭha	Pradyumna
4. Āṣāḍha	Aniruddha

This Vrata is to be observed for 12 years.

6. On the Caturthī day in the month of Āṣāḍha, a man should worship Aniruddha. By giving pot-gourd-vessels to ascetics, he attains the cherished desires.

7. After performing these holy rites of the four Mūrtis for twelve years, the Udyāpana rite should be performed in accordance with the injunctions, by the devotee who wishes for the benefit thereof.

8. On the Caturthī day in the month of Jyeṣṭha, there is another Vrata viz. the excellent Satīvrata. By performing it, the devotee rejoices in the world of the mother of Gaṇapati on a par with him.

9-10. There is another auspicious Vrata on the Caturthī day in the month of Āṣāḍha, since it is the day on which Kalpa called Rathantara began. The man should worship Gaṇeśa duly with his mind sanctified by faith. He shall attain the benefit inaccessible even to the Devas and others.

11-17a. On the Caturthī day in the month of Śrāvaṇa, O sage, when the moon has risen, the devotee, the most excellent among the knowers of the procedure, should offer Arghya unto Gaṇeśa. He shall meditate on Lambodara (God Gaṇeśa), the three-eyed, four-armed deity who is red-complexioned, whose face beams with pleasure, and who is bedecked in different kinds of jewels and ornaments. He should worship him with all modes of services such as invocation, etc. He should offer Modaka (sweet meat) as Naivedya which gives pleasure to Gaṇeśa. After performing the Vrata thus, he shall partake of the Modakas. During the night, after the worship, he should gladly sleep on the bare ground. Thanks to the power of this Vrata, he shall obtain all desires cherished in his mind in this world, and (after death) shall attain the region of Gaṇeśa. In all the three worlds, there is no other Vrata like this. Hence, it must be observed with all (possible) efforts by one who wishes to attain all cherished desires.

17b-18a. O celestial sage, some wish that the holy rite called Dūrvāgaṇapativrata[1] should be performed on this very

1. VV. 17b-23 describe the Dūrvā Gaṇapati Vrata. VRJ (pp. 60 ff) states that it commences on the 4th day of Śrāvaṇa Śu. 4 or Kārttika Śu. 4, and quotes stories from the Saura P. and the SK.P. to glorify this same day. I shall tell you the injunctions regarding its performance.

18b-23a. The devotee should make the image of Gaṇapati in gold and place it over a copper vessel after covering it with a red cloth. He should worship the (entire set) on the mystic diagram called Sarvatobhadra, with red flowers five kinds of leaves viz. Bilva, Apāmārga, Śamī, Dūrvā, and Haripriyā (i.e. Tulasī). With these leaves and other flowers he should perform worship. He shall offer fruits and sweetmeats as Naivedya. After that, O ascetic, with pleasure, he should offer the Arghya. Then, O sage, after praying to it, he should give the image of Vighneśa (gaṇeśa) alongwith the adjuncts to the preceptor who knows the rules of procedure. He should honour him befittingly and then give it to him. He should continue the Vrata for five years, after duly performing worship. After enjoying all pleasures here he will go to the world of Gaṇapati.

23b-27a. On the Caturthī day (in the dark half) of the month of Bhādrapada, is the holy rite called Bahulādhenuka. On this day, the deity cow is to be assiduously worshipped with scents, garlands, barley, and other things. After circumambulating the cow deity, he should offer charitable gifts, if he can afford. If he cannot afford it, he shall bow to it and set it free. He should continue the Vrata for five, ten or sixteen years. He shall then perform the Udyāpana rite and give a milch cow (as charitable gift). Thanks to the power of this Vrata, he shall enjoy all charming worldly pleasures, and duly honoured and greeted by groups of Devas, he shall attain Goloka (the world of cows).

27b-30. On the fourth day in the bright half (of the month of Bhādrapada) is the holy rite called Siddha-Vainayaka-[2]

Vrata. As per SK. P., the Vrata is to be observed from Śrāvaṇa Śu. 4 to Māgha Śu. 4. VRJ. gives two more varieties, one allowing its commencement on any Śukla Caturthī if it falls on a Sunday, and another prescribing 21 days duration from Śrāvaṇa Śu. 5 to Śrāvaṇa Kr. 10.

1. VV. 23b-27 describe Bahulā-dhenuka Vrata to be performed on Bhādrapada Kṛ. 4, the deity being the cow.

2. 27b-39 describe the Siddha-Vināyaka Vrata so popular as Gaṇeśa Caturthī in Maharashtra and other parts of India, though with some vrata (or 'Siddhi-Vināyāka vrata). Through invocation and all other modes of service, the worship should be performed. Concentrating the mind, he should meditate on Siddhivināyaka. He should meditate on Lord Gaṇeśa as Ekadanta (single-tusked) Śūrpakarṇa (one with winnow-like ears), Gajavaktra (elephant-faced), Caturbhuja (four-armed), Pāśāṅkuśa-Dhara (one holding in his hand, a noose and a goad), the Lord resembling molten gold (in complexion). He should offer twentyone leaves uttering the twentyone names (one by one) with devotion. Listen to those names.

31-37. Śamī-leaf should be offered to Sumukha (the good-faced Deity), the Bhṛṅga-leaf to Gaṇādhīśa, the Bilva-leaf to the son of Umā, Dūrvā-grass to the elephant-faced God, Badarī to Lambodara (the big-bellied deity), Dhattūra to the son of Hara (Śiva), Tulasī-leaf to Śūrpakarṇa (God with ears like winnowing baskets) Śami-leaf to Vakra-tuṇḍa (God with a curved trunk), Apāmārga leaf to Guhāgraja (Elder brother of Kārttikeya), Bārhata leaves (those of brinjals) to Ekadanta (Single-tusked god), Sindūra (saffron) to Heramba, leaf of the fragrant plant called Patra to Caturhotra, the leaf of the Agastya tree which is pleasing to Sarveśvara (Lord of all).

He should them take up a pair of the leaves of Dūrvā grass along with scents, fragrant flowers and unbroken rice-grains. With great devotion, he should offer worship and five Modakas as Naivedya. After the rite of Ācamana, obeisance and prayer, he should ritualistically bid farewell to the Deity.

O sage, he should give the image of Vināyaka, made of gold, to the preceptor along with adjuncts. He should then different procedure than that given in the NP. VRJ (pp. 68 ff) quotes SK. P. from Hemādri (CC-Vrata 1.525-29). A strange restriction is that one should not look at the moon on this night, lest one should be accused of theft. It was due to this that Lord Kṛṣṇa was accused of stealing away Syamantaka jewel. If, however, one happens to catch a glimpse of the moon, he should repeat Verse No. 39 given below in the NP. recounting the Syamantaka episode. This verse is quoted from VP. IV. 13.42 and is found in the Vāyu P. 96. 42 and the BR.P. 16.36 referring to the same story.

give Dakṣiṇā (religious gifts) to Brāhmaṇas. O Nārada, one who performs worship with devotion like this for five years, shall attain all cherished desires as a result of his Upāsanā (devotion and worship) here, as well as all splendid things hereafter.

38-39. Never shall one look at the moon on this Caturthī day (i.e. night). There is no doubt about this that, if one looks at the moon, he will be falsely accused. In order to mitigate the defect thereof (i.e. of looking at the moon this night), this (following) Mantra from the Purāṇa* should be recited :

"The lion killed Prasena, the lion was killed by Jāmbavān. O gentle boy, Do not cry. This Syamantaka jewel is offered to you."

40-43a. On the Caturthī day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina, one should worship Vināyaka (Kapardīśa—the god with cowrie-like knotted hair) by means of the Puruṣa Sūkta. He should render services without any reason (i.e. without any ulterior motive). He should offer the rice grains alongwith the shell-coins to a Brāhmaṇa religious student who is worshipped with scents and fragrant flowers with prayer : "The rice grains have Viśve Devas as their deity. They are mixed with the shell coins whose presiding deity is Hara. May the leader of the Gaṇas of Śiva (Kapardin) be pleased, when (the couries) are so dedicated."

43b-44a. The holy rite called Karakavrata[1] is to be performed on the Caturthī day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika. Only women are authorised to perform this Vrata. The rules of the procedure on it are being mentioned.

*Like other material, the NP. seems to have borrowed this verse from the VP. IV. 13.42. The verse appears in a similar context in the Vāyu P. 96. 42 and Br. P. 16.36

1. VV. 43b-51a describe the Karaka Vrata. Karaka is a water-vessel for ascetics, (some times made of coconut shell also). Only women are eligible to observe this. It is to be performed on Kārttika Kṛ. Caturthī (Āśvina by amānta reckoning followed in VRJ., pp. 81-82 which quotes the Vāmana P. for its details). VRJ. (pp. 79) narrates a Daśa-ratha Lalitā Vrata on the same day, but does not mix up the two as is done in Puruṣārtha Cintāmaṇi. The NP. does not mention the picture of Gaurī (and her family) as the main deity but treats it as a Gaṇeśa Vrata.

44b-45. The woman should take her bath and bedeck herself. She should then worship god Gaṇeśa. In front of the deity ten bowls filled with cooked rice shall be kept and be dedicated to the Lord of the Devas with devotion and purity of the mind.

46-47. She should utter (pray) :—"May the deity be gracious unto me." Saying this she should dedicate them to God Gaṇeśa. Presents shall be given respectfully to Suvāsinīs (married women) and the Brāhmaṇas according to desire. Then at night, when the moon rises, she should duly offer Arghya and partake of sweet-meats and cooked rice for the fulfilment of the Vrata.

48. Or O sage, the bowls may be filled with milk or water alongwith a rice, a betel nut, rice-grains and jewels and gifted over to a Brāhmaṇa.

49. The woman devotee should perform this holy rite for sixteen or twelve years. After making the due presents, she should ritualistically conclude this Vrata.

50-51a. Or the holy rite shall be observed by the woman throughout her life with a desire for conjugal blessedness. There is no other Vrata like this that yields conjugal blessedness to women. Hence it should be continuously performed.

51b-53. On the fourth day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika, the holy rite Nāgavrata[1] is to be celebrated. The devotee shall perform the Saṁkalpa rite in the morning, and drink pure water from a cow's horn. After the bath, he shall worship the serpents Śaṅkhapāla and others as well as Śeṣa by means of diverse services (in worship) beginning with invocation. He should make Āpyāyana (developing and nourishing) by means of milk. This is known as Nāgavrata.

54. O leading Brāhmaṇa, if this auspicious observance of Nāgavrata is performed thus by men, poisons perish ere long, and serpents do not bite them.

55-59. O leading sage, this Vrata is to be celebrated on the fourth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa.

1. VV. 51b-54 deal with the Nāgavrata. CC-Vrata I. 530 quotes this from the KP.

The full extent of the holy observance is for a period of four years, beginning with this Caturthī day. He must spend the first year, taking only a single meal per day. He must spend the second year by taking meal only at night every day. He shall spend the third year by taking in only the food obtained without solicitation. He shall spend the fourth year also similarly. If no food is offered, he observes a fast. After completing the vrata at the end of the fourth year, he should perform the rite of ablution. He is then a Mahāvratin (a man of great Vratas). He shall then make the replica of the 'mouse-chariot' of Vighneśvara (i.e. god Gaṇeśa) made of gold. If he cannot afford this, he should make the mystic diagram of a lotus with good petals, by means of colours. The jar is placed over it alongwith a copper vessel, that is filled with raw rice-grains. Image of Gaṇeśvara (i.e. Gaṇeśa) is placed over it covered with two clothes. The devotee should worship the deity with scents and other things.

60-61. Modaka is to be offered as Naivedya saying : "May Gaṇeśa be pleased." The night shall be spent by keeping awake through songs and instrumental music as well as in the narration of the Purāṇas. After the day has dawned, he should take bath and perform Homa in accordance with injunctions, with gingelly seeds, rice grains, barley grains and white mustard along with ghee and sugar-candy.

62-64. The following sixteen names of the deity should be uttered in the dative case. Om is prefixed to them and Namaḥ is added at the end. (For example, here the 1st name is Gaṇa. It should be uttered and addressed as : Om Gaṇāya namaḥ).

The names of the god are : Gaṇa, Gaṇādhipa, Kūṣmāṇḍa, Tripurāntaka, Lambodara, Ekadanta, Rukma-daṁṣṭra, Vighnahā, Brahmā, Yama, Varuṇa, Soma, Sūrya, Hutāśana, Gandhamādin and Parameṣṭhin.

With the utterance of each name, one oblation is offered into the fire. A hundred and eight Homas are performed with the utterance of 'Vakra-tuṇḍa' and 'Varman' in the dative case (i.e. Vakra-tuṇḍāya and Varmaṇe.

65-66. Thereafter, he performs Homas with Vyāhṛtis to the extent of his capacity and then the Pūrṇāhuti is performed. After worshipping the guardians of the quarters, he should feed Brāhmaṇas (twenty-four in number) with sweet-meats and milk-pudding. He should then give a cow along with its calf to the preceptor, along with monetary gifts.

67-69a. He shall give cash presents to others also, according to his capacity (the more the better). After obeisance and circumambulation (around the Brāhmaṇas), the excellent Brāhmaṇas should be bidden farewell to. He should, then, with great delight in his mind, take his food along with his kinsmen. By performing this vrata, a man enjoys excellent worldly pleasures here, and attains the Liberation called Sāyujya (absorption in the Deity) with Viṣṇu, thanks to the Grace of Gaṇeśa.

69b-70a. O Nārada, some call this by the name Varavrata.[1] Its rules of procedure and benefit are the same as in the case of the former.

70b-71. On the Caturthī day in the month of Pauṣa, the devotee should pray to Vighneśa with great devotion. He should feed a single Brāhmaṇa with sweet-meats and offer monetary gifts also. O sage, if this is performed, the Vratin (the performer of the holy vow) shall become the recepient of riches.

72-73a. The holy vow Saṅkaṣṭavrata[2] is to be observed on the fourth day in the dark half of the month of Māgha. The Vratin should decide on observance of fast upto the rise of the moon, with his mind controlled.

73b-74a. After the rise of the moon, the image of Gaṇeśa, made of clay, should be placed on the pedestal alongwith his weapons and the vehicle.

74b-75. It should be worshipped with the sixteen Upacāras (modes of service) in accordance with injunctions. Modaka and ground gingelly seeds alongwith jaggery shall be offered as Naivedya. Arghya is offered in a copper vessel mixed with red-sandal paste.

1. VV. 55-70 describe the Mahāvrata or Vara-Caturthī (in the SK.P., vide CC-Vrata, I. 530-31). The observer gets Sāyujya (identity) with Viṣṇu by observing this Gaṇeśa Vrata--a Vaiṣṇavite tilt.

2. VV. 72-79 prescribe the Saṅkaṣṭavrata on the 4th day in Māgha Kr., but it is observed every month on Kṛ. 4 in Maharashtra. VRJ. (pp. 82-88) calls it Saṅkaṣṭa-hara Gaṇapati Vrata (a Gaṇeśa Vrata destroying extreme calamities) and attributes the illustrative story to Nārada P.

76-78. Kuśa grass, Dūrvā grass, flowers, raw rice grains, Śamīpatra (leaves of the Śamī tree) and curds should be mixed together and offered to the Moon (with the prayer), "O moon, the ruby in the ocean of the firmament, O Lord of Dakṣa's daughters, O representative of Gaṇeśa, kindly accept the Arghya offered by me." Uttering this he should offer the divine Arghya, that is destructive of sins to Gaṇeśa. After feeding excellent Brāhmaṇas in accordance with his capacity, he should take food himself with their formal permission.

79. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing this auspicious Vrata called Saṁkaṣṭa, he shall become flourishing with wealth and foodgrains. He shall never attain difficulty or pain.

80-82. The excellent holy vow Gaurīvrata[1] is to be observed on the fourth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha. On that day, Gaurī is to be worshipped alongwith the groups of Yoginīs by men as well as by women in particular. The articles of worship are the following : Kunda flowers, Kumkuma, red threads, red flowers, Alaktaka (the juice of red lac), incense, lights, oblations, ginger with jaggery, milk and milk puddings, salt and the greens called Pālakas.

83. Married women who are not widows and splendid Brāhmaṇas are to be worshipped for the increase in conjugal bliss. Gifts must be made. One shall take food alongwith kinsmen.

84. O Brāhmaṇa, this Gaurīvrata is conducive to the increase of conjugal blesssedness. This must be performed every year both by men and women.

85. The same holy rite is called Dhuṇḍhivrata by others. By some it is called as Kuṇḍavrata. Others call it Lalitāvrata and still others call it Śāntivrata.

1. VV. 80-86 describe the Gaurī alias Ḍhuṇḍhi or Lalitā or Śānti Vrata. Though observed on Magha Śu. 4, it is essentially a Devī Vrata, not directly connected with Gaṇeśa, though the NP. attributes its fruits to the Grace of Gaṇeśa. In VRJ. (p. 82), it is called Gauri Caturthi Vrata and VRJ. quotes from Brahma P. from CC—Vrata I. 531.

86. Ablution, charitable gift, japa and homa, O sage, all these rites performed on this day shall become thousandfold, thanks to the Grace of Dantin (god Gaṇeśa).

87. On the fourth day in the month of Phālguna falls the auspicious Vrata of Dhuṇḍhirāja. Brāhmaṇas are fed with cakes of ground gingelly-seed flour. The vower should also partake of it himself.

88. One who is interested in the propitiation of Gaṇeśa shall attain Siddhi by offering religious gifts, Homa and Pūjā with gingelly seeds alone, thanks to His grace.

89. The image of the elephant-faced deity should be made of gold. After worshipping assiduously, it must be given to an excellent Brāhmaṇa, for the flourishing increase in all riches.

90. If a Caturthī day coincides with Sunday or Tuesday in any of the twelve months, O leading Brāhmaṇa, it yields special benefits.

91. In all the Caturthīs, whether of the dark half or of the bright half of the month, Vighneśa (God Gaṇeśa), the Lord of the Devas should be worshipped by those who are eagerly engaged in devotion."

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN

The Exposition of Holy Vratas to be performed on Pañcamī days (fifth days of Lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, I shall recount to you the Vratas to be performed on Pañcamīs[1] (fifth days in the halves of Lunar months). On observing these rites with devotion, one shall attain all cherished desires.

1. Just as Caturthī Vratas are mainly concerned with god Gaṇeśa, Vratas on the 5th days of lunar fortnights are auspicious for the worship of

2. The Pañcamī (fifth day) in the bright half of the month of Caitra is called Matsya jayantī. On this day, the worship of the incarnation of the Lord as (Divine) Fish is to be performed with great festivities, by devotees.

3-4a. This is called Śrīpañcamī[1] also. On this day, the worship of Śrī is to be performed by the articles of worship such as scents etc., and the Naivedyas of milk pudding etc., Lakṣmī never forsakes a person who worships Lakṣmī here (on this day).

4b-5a. Pṛthvīvrata, Cāndravrata and Hayagrīvavrata are also to be performed by those who wish to attain different Siddhis, in accordance with the respective injunctions.

5b-6a. On the Pañcamī day in the month of Vaiśākha, the man shall worship Śeṣa, endowed with the attributes of serpents. He shall attain the desired benefit.

6b-7a. The intelligent devottee shall worship the Pitṛs (Manes) on the Pañcamī day in the month of Jyeṣṭha. He shall have the acquisition of all desired benefits through feeding the Brāhmaṇas.

7b-11a. O sage, Vāyu who is present everywhere is to be worshipped on the Pañcamī day in the month of Āṣāḍha. He should go out of the village and climb up to the ridge of a mountain. To a bamboo pole he should tie a banner of five colours. It should be succintly high. He should fix the pole in the middle of the mystic diagram of a lotus. O Nārada, at its root in all the quarters, he should worship the guardians of the quarters and test the direction of the blow of the wind. Beginning with the first Yāma, (period of three hours), he shall duly worship the Lord of that quarter in which the wind blows.

serpents (NP. verse 61 below), though worship of Sages (Ṛsi-pañcamī) in VV. 34b-48, and of goddess Lalitā (Lalitā Pañcamī VV. 49-53) is also given importance in the NP.

1. There are a number of days (e.g. Mārgaśīrṣa Śu. 5, Māgha Śu. 5) on which a Śrī Pañcamī Vrata is prescribed. The Śrī Vrata described in the NP. is mentioned in the Smṛti Kaustubha 92. VRJ. is silent about it. On this day (Caitra Śu, 5) Vratas called Pṛthvī, Cāndra and Hayagrīva are also observed.

11b. He shall thus stay there for four Yāmas without taking food.

12. He should then return home in the evening. He should partake light food. With concentration of mind and after bowing down to the guardians of the world, he should lie down on bare yet clean ground and go to sleep.

13. The dream that comes to him in the fourth Yāma (quarter) on that night shall come true. So says Śiva.

14. If anything inauspicious happens in the dream, the devotee should be engaged in the worship of Śiva and observe fast for all the eight subsequent Yāmas (i.e. 24 hours) or for the day alone (i.e. 12 hours).

15-16a. He should then feed eight Brāhmaṇas. Thereby he shall attain auspicious benefits. This holy rite is called "Śubhāśubha-Nidarśana"[1] (The test for auspicious and inauspicious results). It causes blessedness to men in this world as well as in other world.

16b. The auspicious rite called Anna-samrddhi-da[2] (the bestower of plentitude of food) is to be observed on the Pañcamī day in the dark half of the month of Śrāvaṇa.

17-19. O Nārada, on the previous Caturthī day when there is yet some part of the day, the intelligent devotee shall put all cooked food in different vessels and pour water therein. Then he should put it in another vessel after draining off all water. The next day, after sunrise, he should worship the Pitṛs, the sages and the Devas after due ablution. He should then offer Naivedya to the Devas. With delighted mind, he shall give cooked food to beggars.

1. VV. 7b-16a describe a peculiar Vrata leading to veridical or prognosticating dreams or omens by worshipping the wind-god. No primitive Meteorology should be read in the prescription of setting up a flag on a hill-top and notice the direction of the wind per three-hour period and worship the wind-god according to its direction of blowing.

2. VV. 16b-26b deal with a Vrata giving abundance of food in every birth and aptly called Anna-samṛddhi-Vrata or briefly as Anna. The NP. prescribes this Śaiva Vrata as goddess Annapūrṇā is Pārvatī, the spouse of Śiva. Kane (HD.V. i) does not mention it. It is probably an original contribution of the NP. to Vratas.

20. He shall spend the whole of the day in this activity. At sunset he shall go to Śiva's temple and worship the Lord Īśvara in the form of Liṅga.

21. After duly worshipping Maheśvara with scents, fragrant flowers, etc he shall repeat the five-syllabled Mantra (Oṁ Śivāya Namaḥ) a hundred or thousand times.

22-23a. After dedicating the benefit of Japa to Lord Śiva, the embodiment of the universe, he should eulogise the Lord with all Vedic and Paurāṇic hymns. Without agitation or perturbation, he should pray to Lord Īśāna for the sake of perpetual acquisition of cooked food.

23b-24a. "In all my births may I be richly blessed with all those foodgrains whether harvested during the autumn or during the spring."

24b-26. After praying thus to the Lord of the Devas, he should come back to his own house. He should give cooked food to the Brāhmaṇas and eat it himself silently. O Brāhmaṇa, this Annavrata (Holy rite of cooked food), if observed duly by men, is conducive to the production of all food and wealth in this world, and yields salvation in the other world.

27-29. This rite (in propitiation of serpents) is performed on the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, by men firm in their belief in the Vedas. On either side of the door-way, figures of poisonous serpents should be drawn in cowdung. He should worship them with scents, etc. Thereafter he should worship Indrāṇī with gold, silver, etc, curds, raw rice-grains, water from Kuśa grass, scents, fragrant flowers, incense, lights and hoards of Naivedyas. After circumambulating and bowing down, he should pray with great devotion. He should give the articles of worship to leading Brāhmaṇas.

30. "In all my births, may these gold, silver, etc. that have been given to Brāhmaṇas be productive of endless benefit."

31. O Nārada, he who gifts away along with this utterance, the articles with great devotion, will delight Kubera, the presiding deity of wealth, who bestows affluence like gold, upon his devotees.

32. After observing the holy rite, the man should feed

Brāhmaṇas with devotion. Thereafter, he should partake of his food surrounded by his wife, children and friends.

33-34a. The devotee should propitiate serpents with milk on the fifth day in the dark half of the month of Bhādrapada, (thereby) the entire family upto the seventh generation shall be free from the fear of serpents.

34b. One should worship the excellent sages[1] on the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada.

35.37a. In the morning, he should take his bath in the river etc. and perform Nitya rites, Sandhyā prayers etc. He should then return home and make a platform with clay. He should smear and clean it with cowdung and decorate it with flowers. O Brāhmaṇa, he should then strew Kuśa grass thereon and worship the seven sages, by means of scents, different flowers, incense and splendid lights.

37b-39. The sages are Kaśyaḷ a, Atri, Bharadvāja, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni and Vasiṣṭha. Arghya should be duly offered to these. The intelligent devotee should cook

1. This is the well-known Ṛṣi-pañcamī Vrata. The NP. records an early stage when this Vrata was performed both by men and women. Later on it came to be regarded as efficacious in warding off sin in 'polluting' things with their touch by women in their menses, as monthly course or menstruation came to be regarded as part of the sin of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter (Brahmahatyā) committed by Indra in killing Vṛtra. Naturally women (especially in Maharashtra) begin to perform it after attaining puberty. VRJ. (pp. 91-96) records a story from the Bhaviṣyottara P. how the sin of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter perpetrated by Indra (in killing Vṛtra) came to be equally distributed in Fire, rivers, mountains and women (viz. the menstruation of women) to expiate which women should observe this Vrata.

VRJ-also quotes CC-Vrata I. 568-572 which records the account of this Vrata according to the Brahmāṇḍa P. There are some differences in the details of the worship as given in the NP. and other works (for example non-inclusion of Arundhati in seven sages in the NP.), prescription of this Vrata even to men. Vratārka and VRJ. specifically assert that this Vrata is to be observed by women only to ward off the sin of 'polluting' things by their touch during their monthly course.

The prescription to eat food that is naturally grown without ploughing the field in this Vrata shows that it belongs to the period of food-gathering economy. This explains why men and women were eligible for this Vrata in the older stage.

Śyāmāka and other grains that have not been cultivated, as Naivedya. After the food offerings, he should ritualistically bid farewell to them and eat the same cooked grains himself.

40-41. In this manner, he should perform this holy rite every year, for seven years. At the conclusion of the Vrata, he should choose seven Vedic scholars as his Ācāryas (preceptors). He should make seven images in gold, according to his capacity. They must have matted hair, rosary and water pot.

42. These images should be placed in copper vessels or clay pots and the rite of ablution is performed severally with Pañcāmṛta.

43-44. With sixteen types of services and articles of worship, they are worshipped with devotion. Arghya is offered then, and the homa is performed with gingelly seeds, grains, or barley grains etc. The Ṛk. 'Sahastomā' (ṚV X.130.7) should be used while performing homa or the names of the sages shall themselves be the Mantras. Or with other holy mantras also the homa can be performed. Then the Pūrṇāhuti is offered.

45-46. He should then give seven cows as gifts, fully bedecked in ornaments and clothes. He should worship his preceptor also with clothes, ornaments, etc. With the permission of the preceptor, he should thereafter dedicate the images unto the Brāhmaṇas. After feeding them with devotion, he should bow down to them and bid them farewell.

47. Thereafter, the food left over by the Brāhmaṇas consisting of articles of six different tastes should be taken by him along with kinsmen.

48. After performing this holy rite with its ancillaries he shall enjoy all desired worldly pleasures, thanks to the grace of seven sages. He shall go hence in an excellent aerial car.

49-52. On the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina, the holy rite of Upāṅga-Lalitā-Vrata[1] is to be observed.

1. VV. 49-52 briefly describe Upāṅga-Lalitā-Vrata popularly known in Maharashtra as Lalitā Pañcami. The detailed procedure of this Vrata as observed in the Deccan is given in VRJ. (pp. 97-103) and the story about

O Nārada, the image of the goddess should be made in gold in accordance with one's ability. The devotee should worship her in accordance with the injunctions, with all the sixteen types of services. In order to make the Vrata perfect and complete, cooked rice alongwith fruits, ghee and monetary gifts should be given to an excellent Brāhmaṇa— "The boon-granting deity accompanied by Śakti has been worshipped by me alongwith her vehicle. O Mother, you may be pleased to go to your own abode after blessing me" (The foregoing is the final prayer).

53. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the holy rite of the excellent Jayā vrata is to be observed on the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika with good faith, for the destruction of sins.

54-55. O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should, with great concentration, worship Jayā according to injunction. Clean (in body and mind) and bedecked in ornaments, he should worship her with sixteen types of services. He should feed a single Brāhmaṇa and give him monetary gifts. Then he should bid farewell to him and himself partake of his food silently.

56. If any one takes his holy dip on the day of Jayā, with great devotion, all his sins perish like dear attacked by a lion.

57. O Brāhmaṇa, the fruit that has been glorified as the result of the Avabhṛtha (concluding) bath in a horse sacrifice, is attained by bath on the day of Jayā.

58. One devoid of sons gets a son, a barren woman becomes pregnant, a sick man is freed from ailments and a prisoner is released from bondage.

59. By worshipping serpents duly on the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa one attains fearlessness from serpents and rejoices alongwith the kinsmen.

60. In the month of Pauṣa too, on the fifth day in the bright half, one attains all cherished desires by worshipping Madhusūdana. No doubt need be entertained in this matter.

its importance is quoted from the SK. P. It is probably a later development.

For Lalitā-Ṣaṣṭhī Vrata vide infra Ch. 115.8-29.

61. O Nārada, the worship of the Pitṛs and the serpents on the fifth day in the bright or dark half of any month is recommended in every respect.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEEN

The Exposition of the holy vows to be observed on Saṣṭhi (sixth) days (in lunar fortnights)

Sanātana said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, listen. I shall recount to you the holy rites to be observed on Ṣaṣṭhī days[1] (sixth day in the lunar fortnight). On observing them perfectly, one shall obtain all cherished desires.

2-3a. On the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the excellent holy rite of Kumāra Vrata is to be observed. By worshipping the six-faced Lord on that day in accordance with the different injunctions of worship, one shall attain a son who is endowed with all good qualities and who will live for a long time.

3b-4a. On the sixth day, in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, the devotee should worship Kārttika (Skanda). By doing so, one attains motherly affection and happiness. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

4b-5a. By duly worshipping Divākara (the Sun) on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, one attains all desired benefits, thanks to his Grace. There is no doubt about this.

1. It is noteworthy that most of the sixth days in lunar fortnights are sacred to god Skanda and most of the Vratas have Skanda as the presiding deity, the main exception being Lalita Ṣaṣṭhī and Kapilā Ṣaṣṭhī.

5b-6. The excellent holy rite of Skanda is to be observed on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha. The devotee should observe fast and then worship the beloved son of Śiva and Umā. He attains all cherished desires and the continuation of the line of sons and grandsons.

7-8a. On the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, the devotee, endowed with great devotion, should worship Śarajanman (i. e. Kārttikeya) with the sixteen Upacāras (types of services). Thanks to the grace of the six-faced Lord, he attains all desired objects.

8b-10. The holy vow that has to be observed on the sixth day in the month of Bhādrapada, the Lalitā Vrata[1] is being recounted. A woman devotee should take morning bath duly on that day. She should wear white cloth and white garlands. She should take the sand from the confluence of a river, in a bamboo basket. She should then make five lumps of the sandy soil and meditate on goddess Lalitā, the sportive lady of the forest.

11-12. She should then take one hundred and eight flowers of each of lotus, Karavīra Nepālī, Jasmine, blue lotus, Ketakī and Tagara and twentyeight unbroken buds. With these she should worship the goddess.

13-15. Sitting in front of the goddess, the beloved wife of Śiva, she should pray as follows : "By taking bath in Kanakhala, on the mountain Nīlaparvata, in the Kuśāvarta, in the Gaṅgādvāra and in the Bilvaka you obtained Hara as husband. O blessed goddess Lalitā, the bestower of happiness and conjugal blessedness, grant unto me endless blessedness. Obeisance, unto you again and again." Uttering this Mantra, she should worship the goddess with splendid Campaka flowers duly. She should then place the Naivedya in front of the goddess.

16-20. The Naivedya should consist of Trapuṣa (a kind of fruit) Kūṣmāṇḍa (gourd), coconut, excellent pomegranates, Tuṇḍīra, Kāravella (the gourd Momordica charantia), Cirbhaṭa

1. VV. 8b-29a describe the Lalitā Ṣaṣṭhī Vrata. VRJ. (pp. 103-104) quotes Bhaviṣyottara P. from CC. Vrata I. 617-620). It is popular in Gujarat according to VRJ.

(a sort of cucumber) and other seasonal fruits taken fresh. The surroundings of the image of the goddess should be beautified with rows of excellent lights and germinating food grains. There should be incense of Sargaṇaka (?) alongwith Sauhālakha and Karañjaka (?). Guḍapuṣpa (Bassia latifilia) should be placed as ornament of the cars. According to one's affluence, sweetmeats of large and small varieties of various kinds should be used as Naivedya. After worship, she should celebrate the festival of keeping awake with songs and instrumental music, as well as dances and other scenic items of various types. The chaste lady should spend the whole of that night with her female friends.

21-26a. The woman devotee shall not close her eyes throughout the four Yāmas (yâma—3 hours) (of the night). By closing her eyes, she will become sinful, barren and unhappy. After keeping awake thus, she should take (everything) to a river on the Saptamī day (i. e. seventh day) to the accompaniment of songs and instrumental music. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, she should give that Naivedya etc. to a leading Brāhmaṇa. After taking her bath, she should return home and get the Homa performed in the fire. The Devas, Pitṛs and human beings (i. e. guests) shall be worshipped. She should worship and feed married women, virgins and fifteen Brāhmaṇas with various kinds of foodstuffs and edibles. She should give them various charitable gifts as well. Saying "May Lalitā be pleased with me", she should bid farewell to them.

26b-29a. Listen to the merit of this Vrata that bestows conjugal blessedness whether performed by a man or a woman. O Nārada, of what avail is much talk ? That benefit which one desires by means of holy rites, austerities, charitable gifts and observances is attained by this holy rite. After death, the devotee attains the eternal Śivaloka and rejoices along with goddess Lalitā like her companion in the world of Śiva for a long time.

29b-30. The sixth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada is called Candana Ṣaṣṭhī. By worshipping the goddess on that day, the devotee attains the same world as that of the deity. If the Ṣaṣṭhī coincides with the constellation

Rohiṇī, the astronomical division called 'Vyatipāta' and Tuesday it is called Kapilāṣaṣṭhī.[1]

31. The observer of the Vrata devoted to the observance, should worship the Sun on that day. Thanks to the grace of Sun-God, he attains cherished desires.

32. O excellent celestial sage, the charitable gift of cooked food, Japa, Homa, the rites of Tarpaṇa to the Pitṛs, Devas and sages, when performed on this day, all these should be known as everlasting.

33. After worshipping a tawny coloured cow with clothes, garlands and unguents, it shall be given to a Vedic Scholar for propitiating the sun.

34. On the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina, O Brāhmaṇa, goddess Kātyāyanī should be worshipped with scents and other auspicious articles and also with various kinds of Naivedya.

35-36a The devotee should then crave forgiveness from the goddess of the Devas, bow to her, and bid farewell to her.

1. One wonders why such a rare and important occasion like Kapilā-Ṣaṣṭhī which comes but once in 60 years, is so casually treated here. "The bright half of Bhādrapada" given in the NP. is by amānta reckoning Bhādrapada Kṛṣṇa. The occurrence of Rohiṇi Constellation in combination with other five factors (Tuesday, Vyatipāta yoga etc) is possible in amānta reckoning. Hemādri states the following combination as Kapilā Ṣaṣṭhī : Bhādrapada Kṛ. 6th day, Tuesday, Vyatipāta Yoga and Rohiṇi Nakṣatra. VRJ. confirms these by quoting from another source. But the Karavīra Māhātmya a Sthala Purāṇa of Kolhapur (regarded as a part of the Pd. P.) allows even Sunday as an alternate to Tuesday for Kapilā Ṣaṣṭhī. IT states:

ṣaṣṭhī bhādre ca kṛṣṇā garaja-kṛti yutā rohiṇi-pātayuktā vāre Bhanau ca Bhaume' pyatha ca mṛga-śire deva-pūjyetha saṁsthe

The commentator-Dājibā Joshi Rao-quotes from Purāṇasamuccaya:

bhādra māsyasite pakṣe bhānau caiva kare sthite pāte kuje ca rauhiṇyāṁ sā ṣaṣṭhī kapilā bhavet

The Com. concludes: "As the text (Karavīra Māhātmya) states that this (Kapilā) Saṣṭhī can fall either on Sunday or Tuesday, even Sunday is important. (atra mūle bhānu-bhaumavārayoḥ kathanād bhānu-vāra-yogo'pi mukhyaḥ.)

As this Vrata is for the propitiation of the Sun-god, Sunday might have been allowed for Kapilā-ṣaṣṭhī in the Karavīra Māhātmya. I could not trace it to any other authority. The gift of a tawny cow, being an integral part of this Vrata, it probably came to be known as Kapilā Ṣaṣṭhī.

On this day, either the image made of Sandy soil or the chaste wife of a Brāhmaṇa should be joyfully worshipped by means of clothes and auspicious ornaments, for the satisfaction of Kātyāyanī.

36b-37a. No doubt need be entertained in this respect that, thanks to the grace of Kātyāyinī,* a virgin shall attain the desired bridegroom and a woman the desired son.

37b-39. The highly blessed army of the Devas was entrusted (dedicated) to him (Skanda) by the Devas and hence acquired by the nobleminded six-faced Lord on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika. Hence, on that day, the devotee should worship the army of the Devas consisting of excellent Devas as well as the six-faced Lord with all charming Upacāras. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, he shall achieve Siddhi mentally desired by him.

40. The worship of the fire-god is also prescribed for this day. The devotee should carry it out perfectly alongwith the worship of fire, and Homas, with different kinds of articles of worship.

41-42. The Asura Tāraka was killed on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa. The Satkṛti (honour and greetings) offered by Brahmā and other gods were received by Skanda. Hence on this day, the devotee should worship Skanda with scents, fragrant flowers, raw rice grains, fruits, clothes, ornaments and diverse kinds of Naivedya.

43. If the Ṣaṣṭhī coincides with Sunday or the constellation Śatabhiṣak or Śatatāra, O excellent sage, it is called Campāṣaṣṭhī.[1]

*The NP uses both forms—Kātyāyanī : Kātyâyinī

1. This delimitation of the term Campā Ṣaṣṭhī is supported by Hemādri (CC-Vrata I. 590-596 wherein he quotes the SK.P.) and by Smṛti Kaustubha 221-222. VRJ. (p. 108) requires Vaidhṛti Yoga, Tuesday and Viśākha Nakṣatra on this day to call it Campā Ṣaṣṭhī. But this combination is so rare that it occurs once in 30 years or so. It is strongly recommended that god Maheśvara should be seen on this day. But in Maharashtra, Mārgaśīrṣa Śu. Saṣṭhī is called Campā Ṣaṣṭhī irrespective of the day or Yoga.

44. On that day, Lord Viśveśvara, the destroyer of sins, should be seen, worshipped, known and remembered by one who wishes for happiness.

45a. Holy dip, charitable gift etc., performed on this day are proclaimed to be everlasting.

45b-47. O Brāhmaṇa, it was on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa that Dinapati (the Sun) manifested himself in the form of eternal Viṣṇu, the protector of the Universe. Hence, on this day, he is to be worshipped with scents and other articles of worship, Naivedyas, clothes and ornaments by those who desire for all kinds of happiness.

48-50a. The sixth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha is called Varuṇa[1] Ṣaṣṭhī. On that day, one should worship god Varuṇa who has the eternal form of Viṣṇu, with scents, red silken garments, flowers, Naivedyas, incense and lights. By worshipping thus in accordance with the injunctions, the man obtains whatever he desires. After attaining all the fruits he rejoices, thanks to his grace.

50b-51. On the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should make an image of Lord Paśupati duly in clay and worship it with Upacāras (sixteen articles and modes). He should bathe the image with water or Pañcāmṛta while uttering Śatarudra mantra.

52-53. While unguents shall be smeared over the image, the deity should be worshipped with raw rice-grains, white flowers and fruits. Different kinds of Naivedya should be offered. Nīrājana (waving of lights) is duly performed. After bowing to and craving forgiveness of the Lord, he should be ritualistically sent to Kailāsa.

54. O sage, whether he is a man or a woman, whoever performs the worship of Śiva thus, enjoys all worldly pleasures here and in the end attains the goal of Śiva

---

1. This seems to be a contribution of the NP. as Kane does not mention it in HD.V. i.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN

The Exposition of the rites to be observed on the Saptami (Seventh) day.

Sanātana said :

1. O Nārada, listen. I shall recount to you the holy rites to be observed on the Saptamī[1] days (seventh day of a lunar fortnight). On observing them with devotion, the man attains Sāyujya (entire identity) with the Sun-god.

2-7. One shall take external (i. e. outside the village or town in a river or well) bath on the Saptamī (seventh) day in the bright half of the month of Caitra. He should draw the mystic diagram of the eight-petalled lotus on an altar on the dry ground smeared with cowdung and strewn with white sand. Vibhāvasu (the sun-god must be placed in the pericarp. The two devas Kṛta, Dhātuka (?) should be placed in the eastern petal; the Gandharvas, Kṛta, Kāraka should be placed in the South-east petal; two Rākṣasas shall be placed in the Southern petal. O excellent sage, the two Ākṛtas (?) shall be placed in the South-west petal, the two great serpents, the sons of Kadrū, should be placed (as if they are) in motion in the Western petal, two Yātudhānas should be placed in the north-west petal, two sages shall be placed in the northern petal; O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should fix one planet in the north-east petal. Their worship is to be performed by means of scents, garlands, unguents, lights, incense, Naivedyas, petel leaves, areca nuts and other things.

8-9. After worshipping them thus, the devotee should perform Homa with ghee. He should give one hundred and eight oblations to the sun-god and offer as oblations eight Āhutis for each of the others, in due order, uttering their names as mantras. Thereafter, he should perform Pūrṇāhuti on the altar. O Brāhmaṇa, in accordance with one's capacity, monetary gifts should be given to Brāhmaṇas.

1. Just as the 4th day of a lunar fortnight was sacred to god Gaṇeśa or the 6th day to god Skanda, the 7th day in a lunar fortnight has the sun as the special presiding deity. Hence the observance of Saptamī Vratas are said to lead to sāyujyatā (identity) with the sun-god. Hence in V.72 below, people are exhorted to propitiate the sun-god on all Saptamī days.

10. After carrying out all these injunctions, the devotee shall attain all happiness. At the time of death, he penetrates his way through the disc of the Sun and goes to the greatest region.

11. It was on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha that Jāhnavī (the Gaṅgā) was angrily drunk up by Jahnu himself and subsequently let off through the right ear.

12. On that day, the devotee should worship Jāhnavī after taking bath in the pure water, early in the morning. He should worship with scents, fragrant flowers, unbroken rice grains and other things, with all requisite upacāras (articles of worship), etc.

13. Then, a thousand pots are to be given (as gifts) in the course of this Gaṅgāvrata. If devotedly performed, this Vrata[1] is competent to take seven generations in his family to heaven.

14-18a. The holy rite of Kamalavrata[2] is also recommended on this day.[3] Its procedure is being proclaimed. An auspicious lotus is made out of gold of the weight of a gingelly seed. It is then covered with two clothes. The devotee should then worship it with scents, incense and other things, and pray as follows : "Hail to you the lotus-handed god; obeisance to you the supporter of the universe. O Divākara, (Sun-god) salutations to you. O Prabhākara (Sun-god), homage to

1. Although the N.P. does not disclose the name of this Vrata, it is called Gaṅgā saptamī (VRJ, p. 110; Smṛti Kaustubha 112 where it quotes Br. P.). This is celebrated as Jahnu drank up the river Gaṅgā and on prayer from King Bhagīratha, let it flow through his right ear (VR. I. 35-38)

2. Although NP. prescribes this Solar Vrata on Vaiśākha Śu. Saptamī, the Mt. P. 78. 1-11 and Pd. P. V. 21. 281-290 & following them Hemādri on Vrata I. 640-41 prescribe them on Caitra Śu. Saptamī.

3. Mt. P. 77. 1-17 describe a Kamala Vrata to be performed on this (Vaiśākha Śu. 7 and not Caitra Śu 7 as Kane states in HDV. i. 422-23), but the procedure and details are different. Hemādri (CC-Vrata I. 642-43) quotes from Pd. P-V. 21. 263-279.

you." After praying thus to the Lord of the Devas, he should offer that lotus alongwith the water pot and a Kapilā (tawny coloured) cow to a Brāhmaṇa, after sunset. He should observe fast throughout that day and take food only on the next day. By feeding the Brāhmaṇas with devotion, he shall attain the entire benefit of the Vrata.

18b-21a. The holy rite Nimbavrata is also to be performed on this day. Listen to its injunction even as I recount it. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the worship of the sun is to be performed with the leaves of Nimba (Margosa), uttering the Mantra 'Khakholkāya' (TĀ 10. 59. 1, TĀĀ 10. 66) etc. beginning with the Praṇava; O Nārada, he should then eat the leaves of Nimba silently and lie down on the bare ground. After feeding the Brāhmaṇas the next day, he should himself take food alongwith his kinsmen. This Nimbapatravrata bestows all happiness on those who observe it.

21b-26a. The holy rite of Śarkarāsaptamī is also to be observed on this day. Listen to its procedure also from me. While the sun was drinking nectar by means of his hand, drops of Amṛta (nectar) fell on the ground, and they grew into the plants of Śāli rice, Mudga (green gram), Yava (barley) and Ikṣu (Sugarcane). Śarkarā (sugar) is therefore the essence of sugarcane and nectar-like and so is liked by the sun. It is holy and used in Havya and Kavya. Śarkarā Saptamī yields the same benefit as the horse-sacrifice. It pacifies all miseries. It increases the line of sons and daughters. On this day sugar must be given as gift and taken alongwith food. This holy rite must be assiduously performed, as it is liked by the Sun-god. He who observes this with great devotion, shall attain the goal of the good (i.e. Heaven).

26b-27. Indra himself was born as the sun on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha. He should be worshipped according to the injunction. The devotee observes fast and subdues his sense-organs. O Brāhmaṇa, thanks to the grace of Devendra, he attains heaven.

28-29a. On the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha, the sun god became Vivasvān

(the refulgent Sun). The devotee worships him separately with scents and fragrant flowers. O leading Brâhmaṇa, he (the observer of this Vrata) attains identity with the Sun.

29b-30. The auspicious holy rite called Avyaṅgavrata[1] is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Śrâvaṇa. At the end of the Pūjâ of Gopati (sun) in order to propitiate him, he must give a cotton cloth four and a half Hastas long. This Vrata is very auspicious.

31. If this Saptamī coincides with the Hasta constellation it will be destructive of sins. Charitable gifts, Japa, Homa,—everything performed on this day shall attain everlasting status.

32-33. The holy rite of Amuktâbharaṇa is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Bhâdrapada. The worship of Maheśa accompanied by Umâ is glorified on this day. He is worshipped alongwith Gaṅgâ and others with the sixteen Upacâras. After the prayer and (paying) obeisance, he should ritualistically bid farewell to the deity, for the flourishing increase of all desires.

34-39. The holy rite of Phalasaptamī[2] is also to be observed on this day. Its procedure is being described: The seven fruits are—a coconut, a brinjal, an orange, a pomegranate, a white gourd, Bṛhatī and areca nut. These are placed in front of Maheśa. A thread in which seven threads are turned and seven knots are made is also placed in front of Maheśa, O excellent Brâhmaṇa, after worshipping the Lord with great devotion, the woman-devotee shall wear the thread round her left hand and the man-devotee round his right hand.

1. As Kane notes (HD. V. i., pp. 264), this form of sun-worship was imported from Iran (from Magas or Śâkadvipiya Brâhmaṇas) or borrowed from Parsis. Sk. Avyaṅga here is hyper-Sanskritisation of Avestan Aivyaṅghana 'a girdle'. 'Aivyaṅga' is a hollow strip made of fine white cotton thread, resembling a serpent's slough, 122 fingers in length. The Brahmanisation of this Vrata becomes complete by Japa, Homa and Dakṣiṇâs.

2. This is a special variety of Phala-Saptamī. For other varieties vide HD. V. i, pp. 353-354. According to Pd. P. V. 21. 249-262 (quoted by Hemâdri also) the Sungod, and not Mahâdeva, is the chief deity as in the NP.

This shall be worn till the end of a year. He should feed seven Brāhmaṇas with milk puddings and bid farewell to them. The intelligent devotee shall partake of it himself. In order to make Vrata perfect and complete, those fruits are given to seven Brāhmaṇas. O Brāhmaṇa, the observer of the Vrata continues it for seven years with due observances of fast. Such an observer of this Vrata attains identity with Mahādeva.

40-45a. The holy rite Śubhaśaptamī[1] is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina. On that day, the devotee should begin the holy rite by taking his bath and worshipping the deity. He should make excellent Brāhmaṇas read the holy books. He should then worship a Kapilā cow and pray thus—"O gentle one, I am gifting you away. May Aryamā, the sun himself be pleased. Protect you, the entire Universe, since you are born of Dharma." After praying thus, he gives the cow to a Vedic Scholar, alongwith the monetary gift. O Brāhmaṇa, after, bowing down to him, he himself should set the cow free. He should take in only Pañcagavya. Thus, the Vrata is concluded. On the next day he should feed Brāhmaṇas. He should partake of that food that is left over by them. O Brāhmaṇa, this Vrata that is performed thus, is well praised. A person endowed with faith shall attain worldly pleasures and salvation, thanks to the grace of the Lord of the Devas.

45b-47. The holy rite called Śāka Saptamī[2] is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika. On that day, the devotee should give seven different vegetables to seven Brāhmaṇas alongwith gold lotuses. He himself shall take in only vegetable food. On the next day, he should feed the Brāhmaṇas and give them monetary gifts as well. After bidding farewell to them, he himself should partake of the food silently alongwith his kinsmen.

48-51. The holy rite of Mitravrata is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa.

1. Cf. Mt. P. 79. 1-14.

2. This is a different variety of Śāka Vrata. For others vide HD. V, 1. P. 423.

The sun was born of Aditi and Kaśyapa and was named Mitra and Viṣṇu made him his right eye. Hence on this day, O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee shall worship him duly and feed seven Brāhmaṇas with sweets and other things. He should then bid farewell to them and take food himself. After duly performing this, the devotee shall certainly attain the world of the Sun. A Brāhmaṇa devotee attains Brahma's world and a Śūdra devotee takes his rebirth in a good family.

52-54. The holy rite called Abhaya Saptamī is to be observed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa. The devotee observes fast and performs the holy rite standing on the bare ground (dharā-sthitaḥ). He worships the sun during the three Sandhyās (dawn, noon and dusk), then gifts to a Brāhmaṇa a Prastha-measure of sweet meats alongwith cooked rice soaked in milk. Thereafter, he feeds seven other Brāhmaṇas and gives Dakṣiṇā to all the eight, which may be in the form of a piece of land or gold. He then bids farewell to them and takes food himself. This is the holy rite called Abhaya. It bestows fearlessness (or Liberation from Saṁsāra) on all.

55. Other Brāhmaṇas call this by the name of Mārtaṇḍa Vrata. But learned men say that both are the same, the deity being one and the same.

56-60a. The holy Vrata called Sarvāpti[1] (Saptamī) is to be observed on the seventh day in the dark half of the month of Māgha. The devotee observes fast during the day and worships the disc of the Sun made of gold, with scents, fragrant flowers, etc. and keeps awake at night. The next day he should feed seven Brāhmaṇas with milk-puddings and give them coconuts as Dakṣiṇā. To the preceptor, he gives the gold replica of the Sun's disc alongwith other Dakṣiṇās. He should pray to him earnestly and bid farewell to him. Thereafter, he takes food himself. This is called the holy rite of Sarvāptidā. It yields all cherished desires. Thanks to the power of this Vrata, dualism (Dvaitaṁ) is achieved in every respect (? desires are fulfilled).

---

1. This is a special variety of this Vrata in the NP. For another variety vide HD. V. i. p. 444.

60b-62a. The holy rite of Acalāvrata is performed on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Māgha. This is also called Trilocana Jayantī (Birth anniversary of the three-eyed Lord). It is remembered as the destroyer of all sins.

62b-64. It is also Ratha Saptami[1] that grants (even) emperorship. The devotee should worship the image of Sun made of gold. The image is placed in a chariot yoked to golden horses. Alongwith elephants, he shall give this (as gift to a deserving person). He who performs this Vrata devoutly joyfully enjoys all the pleasures in this world and goes to the region of god Śiva. This Saptamī is Bhāskarī Saptamī and is comparable to a crore of shining planets. On this day, it is laid down that one shall take one's bath at the time of Aruṇodaya (day-break). He shall place on his head seven leaves each of Arka and Badarī and take his bath for absolving the sins of seven births.

65-68. Lord Sun has himself prescribed a Putraprada[2] Vrata (holy rite that grants sons) on this day. "I shall be born with a part of mine as the son of the person who duly worships me on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Māgha. I will be very much delighted." Hence, the devotee should conquer his sense-organs and observe fast for a day and a night. On the next day, he should perform Homa and feed the Brāhmaṇas with cooked rice mixed with curds or milk and puddings. He who performs the holy rite of Putra Saptamī according to these injunctions, shall get a good son who will be free from ailments and will live for a long time.

69-70. One should perform the rite of Arkaputa on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Tapasya (Phālguna). He should worship the sun with the leaves of the Arka (the sun) plant. He shall eat the leaves of the Arka plant. He

1. This is an important Vrata in the Deccan. VRj. pp. 115-116 gives a different Vrata in detail and quotes Bhaviṣyottara P. story how Kṛṣṇa's son was restored to health thereby, vide HD. V. i. pp. 388-389.

2. Kane records a number of Vratas to be observed on different days in different months, all granting a son as their fruit (vide HD. V. i. pp. 343-345) but this one in the NP is different from the Putra-Saptamī Vrata in HD. V. i. 345.

shall repeat the names of the sun continuously. Thus is the holy rite called Arkapuṭavrata. It bestows sons and wealth. It destroys all sins.

71. O Brāhmaṇa, some call this holy rite Trivargada-Vrata (a Vrata that bestows Dharma, Artha and Kāma the three aims of life), others call it Yajñavrata on account of the rite of Homa duly performed in it.[1] O excellent Brāhmaṇa, it is said that the sun is to be propitiated in all the Saptamīs in all the months. It shall enable one to realise all desires.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN

The review of the Vratas to be observed on Aṣṭami (eighth days of Lunar fortnights)

Sanātana said :

1. Bhavānī's birth is reported to have taken place on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra. The great festival of Yātrā (procession) must be performed by making a hundred circumambulations.

2. The vision of the mother of the Universe is the bestower of all joys and pleasures on men. On this very same day the holy rite of Aśoka-Kalikā-Prāśana (drinking of water mixed with the tender sprouts of the Aśoka tree) also has to be observed.

3. Those who drink (water mixed with) eight buds of the Aśoka tree on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, when the constellation of Punarvasu coincides with it, never experience any sorrow.[1]

1. With exception of Vratas like Kṛṣṇa-Janmāṣṭami, majority of the Aṣṭami Vratas are for the propitiation of some female deity—be it Jagadambā (Pārvati), Mahālakṣmi or Reṇukā. The Bhavānī Yātrā is given in the Kāśi Khaṇḍa of the SK.P.—VJr., P. 118.

4a. This is also called Mahāṣṭamī since the worship of goddess is ordained.

4b-7a. On the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, the devotee observes fast. He takes his bath (in cool) water and performs the rite of ablution to the goddess Aparājitā by means of the water from Māṁsī (Indian Spikenard) and Bālaka (a fragrant root of the Plant Andropogom Muricatus. After worshipping with scents etc., Naivedya comprising of sugar is offered. Before performing breakfast on the following Navamī day, he should feed some virgins. O Brāhmaṇa, thanks to the grace of the goddess, he will move about in the worlds (above) in a refulgent aerial chariot, himself brilliant like the sun.[2]

7b-9a. By worshipping the three-eyed Lord on the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the devotee shall remain in the Śiva Loka. He will be bowed to by all the Devas. The man who worships the goddess on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha moves about in an aerial chariot alongwith the groups of Gandharvas and Apsaras.

9b-12. On the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha, the devotee takes his bath in water, mixed with turmeric powder. With the same water, he shall perform the rite of ablution of the goddess in accordance with the injunctions. After bathing the deity in pure water, subsequently, he should smear the deity with camphor and sandal paste. After offering Naivedya consisting of sugar, water for Ācamana rite should be offered. He should then feed Brāhmaṇas and give them suitable gold and monetary gifts. After bidding them farewell, he should take food himself silently. By performing this holy rite, the man shall attain to the world of the goddess.

1. The NP has omitted the mantra at the time of worshipping Aśoka as the worship of the Aśoka tree is deleted. But this verse (and the mantra tvam aśoka harābhīṣṭa) are given in the GP. I. 133. 1-2, and in the LP quoted in Hemādri's Vrata I. 862-63.

2. This Vrata is not recorded in the VRJ and in Kane (HD. V. i).

13-14* On the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, the devotee should worship the goddess in accordance with the religious injunctions. After bathing the idol in milk, he should offer sweet cooked rice as Naivedya. He should feed Brāhmaṇas on the next day, take food himself and conclude the holy rite. This holy rite increases the progeny.

15. The holy rite called Daśāphala vrata[1] is on the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Śrāvaṇa. The devotee decides on fasting, takes his bath and performs the Nitya (usual, prescribed) rites.

16-17. With ten leaves of black-coloured Tulasī, he worships uttering (in the dative case) these ten names of the Lord—Kṛṣṇa (i.e. Kṛṣṇāya namaḥ) Viṣṇu, Ananta, Govinda, Garuḍadhvaja, Dāmodara, Hṛṣīkeśa, Padmanābha, Hari and Prabhu. One should always worship Lord Kṛṣṇa by means of these names.

18. He should then circumambulate the deity and prostrate himself before it. Thus he should perform the most excellent of all the Vratas for ten days.

19. In the beginning, in the middle and in the end, he should perform homa in accordance with the injunctions. Uttering the Mantra of (the names of) Kṛṣṇa, he should perform hundred and eight Homas with Caru (cooked rice soaked in ghee).

20-21. At the end of the Homa, the intelligent devotee should worship the preceptor duly. He should get a replica of the leaf of Tulasī exquisitely made in gold and place it in a vessel made of gold, copper, clay or bamboo. He should get an

*The text : nabhomāse sitāṣṭamyām need be emended as nabhomāse' sitāṣṭamyām. The avagraha (marked here as') before sita is necessary as this Vrata falls on Śravaṇa K. ṛ8th (HD. V.i. P. 311, also VRJ. p. 122 ff) If amānta reekoning is not taken, it will fall on Bhādrapada which is not recognised in the NP here.

1. VV. 15-26 describe the Daśā-phala Vrata in honour of Lord Kṛṣṇa. The Vrata is detailed in VRJ. P. 122 ff. and is briefiy described in HD. V. i. 312. The misprint site for asite is pointed out in a footnote to that verse.

image made in gold and worship it in accordance with the injunctions.

22. He should place the image in the vessel and offer it to the preceptor. A cow alongwith its calf, should be given fully bedecked in ornaments and clothes.

23. For ten days, he should offer ten Pūrikās (fried cakes of wheat flour) to the Lord Kṛṣṇa. The observer of the rite shall either offer these Pūrikās to a knower of the mode (of worship) or eat them himself.

24. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, a bed also should be given as gift in accordance with his capacity. On the tenth day he should give the image to the preceptor.

25-26. At the conclusion of the holy rite, ten Pūrikās should be given to each of the ten Brāhmaṇas. He should continue this rite for ten years. After performing this excellent Vrata for ten years and after duly observing the fast, the devotee shall realise all his cherished desires. There is no doubt in this that in the end, he will attain Sāyujya (One-ness) with Kṛṣṇa.

27-28a. This day remembered as (Kṛṣṇa-Janmāṣṭamī)[1] removes the sins of men. Merely by observing fast on this birth-

1. VV 27-40 describe the Kṛṣṇa-Janmāṣṭamī Vrata, popular all over India. Not merely the NP but other Purāṇas like Pd. P. III. Ch, 13, Mt. P. Ch. 56, AP Ch. 183 highly glorify this Vrata. In the Bhaviṣyottara P. 44. 1-60 Kṛṣṇa himself narrates this Vrata to Yudhiṣṭhira : Mediaeval writers on Dharma Śāstra relying on Purāṇas, other than the Bhāgavata, have discussed a great deal about the procedure etc. of performing this Vrata and brought in the Mimāṁsā and Astronomy in distinguishing between the Janmāṣṭamī and Jayanti-Vratas. But that is academic. The NP gives the main features of fast, worship, jāgara (remaining awake that night), though he does not mention the breaking of the fast. By the way, it may be noted that the Varāha Purāṇa (46.14) records that Kṛṣṇa was born on 12th day in the bright half of Āṣāḍha.

In passing, I may record a peculiar custom called Gopāla-Vāla or Dahī-handī in Maharashtra. It is based on the Bh. P. X. 5.15 where the cowherds expressed their delight (at the birth of Kṛṣṇa) by sprinkling curds, ghee etc. on each other. On this occasion, people in Maharashtra hang up earthen pots full of curds, butter milk etc. and celebrate with songs etc. the birth of Kṛṣṇa and some one breaks the pots and people vie with each other to get themselves drenched in the curds etc. falling from the holes in the pots.

day of Hari, one is undoubtedly liberated from the sins of seven births.

28b-31a. The devotee who observes fast shall take his bath with gingelly seeds mixed in the pure water of a river etc. The intelligent devotee shall make a mystic diagram on the platform erected in a good place. In its middle, a Kalaśa (vessel) made of copper or clay is placed. Over this vessel, another copper vessel is placed. Above this latter vessel, the auspicious golden image of Kṛṣṇa is placed and covered with two cloths. With a pure mind, he should then worship it with Pādya and other Upacāras.

31b-34. In the eight quarters he should worship Devakī, Vasudeva, Yaśodā, Nanda, Vraja (colony of the cowherds), cowherds, cowherdesses and cows. Ārārtika rite (waving of lights before the deity) is performed. Forgiveness is craved for, by bowing down with devotion. The devotee remains thus till midnight, when he bathes Hari with Pañcāmṛta and pure water. He should again worship the Lord with scents and other things. He should then offer the following things as Naivedya in a silver vessel : viz. Coriander, barley, ginger, sugarcandy, and ghee. O Nārada, these should be offered as Naivedya.

35. After performing the Ārārtika (waving of lights in front of the deity) rite once again, he should think of the Lord as assuming ten different forms. He should then offer Arghya to the rising moon.

36. After requesting the Lord of the Devas for forgiveness the observer of the holy rite should pass the rest of the night by reciting hymns from the Purāṇas and sing diverse songs in accompaniment of instrumental music.

37. After the daybreak, he should feed eminent Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice. Delighted in his mind, he should offer Dakṣiṇā and bid them farewell.

38. Thereafter, he should give that image of Viṣṇu to the preceptor alongwith gold, cow and plot of land as well as monetary gifts. After bidding farewell to him, the devotee should partake of his food.

39. After performing thus the holy rite, the man attains Goloka itself, in the company of his wife, children, friends and servants. He goes there, seated in an excellent aerial chariot.

40. In the whole of the three worlds, there is no other holy Vrata equal to this. By performing this, the benefit of a crore of Ekādaśī Vratas is acquired.

41-43. On the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Nabhasya (Bhādrapada) a person should perform the holy rite of Rādhāvrata.[1] As before, he should perform the worship of the gold image of Rādhā placed on the pot. At mid-day, after worshipping her, the devotee should take in a single meal. The devotee who is physically strong observes fast (for the complete day). On the next day, he feeds the Suvāsinīs in accordance with injunctions. He then offers the image to the preceptor. He shall partake of his food and formally conclude Vrata.

44. O Brāhmaṇa sage, if this holy rite is performed duly, the observer of Vrata obtains the esoteric secret of the Vraja (of Kṛṣṇa's time) and stays among the followers of Rādhā.

45-46. The holy rite of Dūrvāṣṭamī[2] too is to be observed on this day. Listen to it from me. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the Liṅga is to be placed on the Dūrvā-grass growing in a pure and clean spot. He should then worship it with flowers, incense, scents, lights and Naivedyas, viz. curds, raw rice grains and fruits. At the end of Pūjā, he should, with great concentration, offer Arghya uttering the two Mantras.

47-49a.[2] "O Dūrvā grass, bowed to by the Devas and the Asuras, your birth is from nectar. Grant blessedness and line of children to me. Be a bestower of achievements of

1. Pd. P. III. 7. 21-23. It is performed on the 8th day in both the fortnights of Bhādrapada (IID. V-1. 392).

2. VV. 25-52 describe the Dūrvāṣṭami Vrata associated with Śiva Liṅga. Women and men of all castes are eligible for this. The Smṛti Kaustubha 228-230 and the Bhaviṣyottara P. 56 give another variety in which the Dūrvā-grass itself (unassociated with any deity like Śiva or Gaṇeśa) is the deity—that tenacity of the Dūrvā grass for its spread and survival is prayed for the spread of one's own race. VV. 47-49a are repeated as the prayer to Dūrvā-grass, my works. Just as you are spread over the ground with your branches and branchlets, so also grant me growing progeny that shall be immortal and unageing."

49b-50. The devotee then circumambulates it, feeds Brāhmaṇas, gives Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas, takes food himself and returns home. Alongwith the monetary gifts, he should give Brāhmaṇas splendid, fragrant and sweet fruits.

51. Thus, O Brāhmaṇa, the holy rite of Dūrvāṣṭamī is sacred and destructive of the sins of men of all the four castes and particularly of the woman folk.

52. If any woman, out of delusion, does not worship Dūrvā duly, undoubtedly she becomes a widow for three births.

53. O Brāhmaṇa, if the Aṣṭamī coincides with the constellation Jyeṣṭhā, it should be known as Jyeṣṭhāṣṭamī.[1] If worshipped, it is destructive of sins.

54. The holy rite of Mahālakṣmī begins on this day and lasts for sixteen days. It brings about all riches.

55. "O Mahālakṣmī, I am devoted to you and I shall perform your Vrata. Hence, thanks to your grace, may it come to a conclusion (May it be completed) without any impediment."

56. After saying this, the devotee twists round sixteen threads to form a string. He ties sixteen knots therein and ties the string round his right hand.

57. The observer of the holy rite should worship Mahālakṣmī everyday, with scents and other things, upto the following Aṣṭamī in the dark half.

58a. On that day the intelligent devotee should perform the rite of Udyāpana (concluding rite).

58b. Under the canopy of cloth, the devotee makes the mystic diagram called Sarvatobhadra. The Kalaśa (vessel) is installed thereon and a lamp is lit.

1. VV. 53-74a describe Jyeṣṭhāṣṭamī Vrata which is in honour of goddess Lakṣmī. The wearing of threads with sixteen knots is still popularly practised by women in Maharashtra, but not other details of gold images, Homa etc. VRJ. (pp. 135-156) gives the details of this Vrata, Pūjā and Udyāpana (concluding rite) on the basis of the Bhaviṣyottara P. vide HD. V. 1 pp. 304 and 376.

59-62. He should take off strings from the arm and keep it below the water pot. Four images in the form of the deity are made in gold, and they are bathed in water and Pañcāmṛta. After worshipping them in accordance with the injunctions, with the sixteen types of Upacāras, the devotee keeps awake till midnight, to the accompaniment of songs and instrumental music. At midnight, when the nectar-rayed moon rises, Arghya is offered to Mahālakṣmī stationed in the middle of the moon's disc, in accordance with the injunctions, together with Śrīkhaṇḍa (sandal) and other material. The string is also offered.

[The following Mantras are utterred]

63. "O Moon, born of the ocean of milk, brother of Mahālakṣmī, O storehouse of nectar, accompanied by Rohiṇī, accept my Arghya."

64. "O Kamalā, born of the ocean of milk, a resident of the Lotus, resting on the chest of Viṣṇu, be the bestower of all the cherished desires on me."

65. "O gentle lady Reṇukā, O beloved wife of Jamadagni, O Mistress of the Universe, having only a single Lord, O unchanging one, O mother of Paraśurāma, do what is auspicious to me".

66-69. The devotee should pray to the goddess Mahālakṣmī with the above Mantras. He should worship Brāhmaṇa women duly with scents, lac juice and collyrium and feed them. He should perform Homa oblating in the fire Bilva, lotus and milk puddings. If they are not available O Brāhmaṇa, homa is performed with ghee. For acquiring houses, homa is performed with sacrificial twigs or gingelly seeds. For conquering (i. e. averting) death and for subduing ailments the following articles are offered as gifts viz.—sandal paste, palmyra leaf, flower-garland, raw unbroken rice grains, Dūrvā grass, thread with saffron applied, two coconuts and foodstuffs. The food-stuffs should be placed in a new winnowing basket. There must be sixteen of them in each item.

70-71. The observer of the holy rite shall cover it with another winnowing basket and present it uttering the following

Mantra : —"May Lakṣmī, born of the ocean of milk, sister of the moon and the beloved wife of Viṣṇu be pleased with this Vrata". He (the person performing this Vrata) should dedicate the four gold images to the Brâhmaṇas.

72. Thereafter, with sweet cooked rice he shall feed four Brâhmaṇas and sixteen Suvâsinīs (married women whose husbands are alive). He should bid farewell to them giving them their due Dakṣiṇās.

73-74. After concluding the observances, he should take food in the company of the affectionate ones. By performing this Vrata of Mahâlakṣmī, O Brâhmaṇa, in accordance, with the injunctions, one enjoys all worldly desirable pleasures and one shall live in the world of Lakṣmī for a long time. This is called Asokâṣṭamī also, and in it the holy rite of Ramā (Śrī) is complete.

75-76a. On this day, the Aśoka tree is worshipped and only a single meal is taken every day. By performing the Aśoka Vrata, the lady, wherever she is born in this world of sorrow, becomes free from sorrow. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

76b-78a. O Brâhmaṇa, Mahaṣṭamī[1] is to be observed in the bright half of the month of Âśvina.

On that day, Durgā is to be worshipped with all Upacâras. By observing fast or taking a single meal on the Mahâṣṭamī day, the devotee attains all round affluence and rejoices like a god for a long time.

78b-80. The holy rite of Karaka Vrata is to be observed in the dark half of the month of Kârttika. On that day, Śambhu accompanied by Umā is to be assiduously worshipped. Arghya is also to be always offered, at the time of the moon-rise, by the observers of the Vrata who wish for a son endowed with all good qualities or happiness of diverse kinds.

80b-81. Gopâṣṭamī rite is to be observed in the bright half of the month of Kârttika. On that day, one shall perform the worship of cows; fodder is offered to the cows, cows are circumambulated and followed. Cows are given as gifts by those who desire all riches.

1. VV. 76b-78a describe Mahâṣṭami, the 8th day of Navarâtra in Âśvina Śu.

82-85. A special holy rite is performed on the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa. The image of a couple is made out of Darbha grass. They are named Anagha and Anaghā. They are accompanied by many sons. (images are made of these as well). On a spot scrubbed and cleaned with cow dung and made auspicious, the couple are placed and worshipped with scents, fragrant flowers, and diverse kinds of Upacāras. The devotee feeds a Brāhmaṇa couple and bids farewell to them after giving them Dakṣiṇās. A man or a woman can perform this holy rite. By performing it in accordance with the injunctions, he or she gets a son endowed with good characteristics. There is no doubt about this.

86-87. On the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee observes fast in the presence of Kālabhairava. By doing so and keeping awake for that night, one is liberated from great sins. Whatever inauspicious sin has been committed by a person in his birth as a human being, is dissolved entirely by seeing Kālabhairava image;

88. The holy rite of Śrāddha called Aṣṭaka[1] is to be observed on the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Pauṣa. It makes the Pitṛs (manes) satisfied for a year. It increases the line of children in the family.

89. By worshipping Śiva devotedly on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, one attains worldly pleasures and liberation by acting in pursuance of his (unflinching) devotion.

90. On the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Māgha, one should, with great devotion, worship Bhadrakālī, the destroyer of the hosts of enemies, and the bestower of all cherished desires to her devotees.

1. Although the NP. limited the term Aṣṭaka to the 8th day in Pauṣa, the Āśvalāyana Gr. 5. II. 4. 1. states that the 8th tithis in the dark halves of Hemanta and Śiśira (i.e. the months of Mārgaśīrṣa, Pauṣa, Māgha and Phālguna) are Aṣṭakā days.

91. O Brāhmaṇa, one who wishes for an unbroken line of children and absence of defeat in battle, should propitiate Bhīṣma on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha.

92. O Brāhmaṇa, on the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Phālguna, one should worship goddess Bhīmā. For the achievement of all cherished desires, he should be devoted to the Vrata.

93. O Brāhmaṇa, by worshipping properly with scents and other things, Śiva and Śivā on the eighth day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, one shall become the Lord of all Siddhis (Super-natural Powers.)

94. One should worship goddess Śītalā[1] on the eighth day in the second fortnight of the month of Phālguna, with all kinds of cooked food prepared duly on the previous Saptamī (seventh) day.

95. "O Śītalā, you are the mother of the Universe. O Śītalā, you are the father of the Universe. O Śītalā, you are the support and base of the Universe. Obeisance, to you, salutations to you, O Śītalā.

96. I bow down to goddess Śītalā, who is seated on a donkey, is naked, holds the broom and the water pot and who destroys swellings.

97. Goddess Śītalā shall be the bestower of calmness and queller of swellings to those who stand in water and repeat the name "Śītalā, Śītalā".

98. O Brāhmaṇa, thanks to the grace of goddess Śītalā, he (the devotee) shall be tranquil for a year;—he who worships Śītalā by means of these Mantras of Śītalā.

99. By worshipping Śiva and Śivā on the eighth day in any of the halves and in any of the months, one attains the desired benefit.

1. Śītalā is the goddess of Small Pox. According to amānta reckoning the Śītalāṣṭamī is on Caitra Kṛ. 8.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN

The Exposition of the Vratas to be observed on Navamī (ninth) day (in the lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. O leading Brāhmaṇa, henceforth, I shall recount to you the Vratas to be observed on the Navamī day (i.e. ninth day in the lunar fortnight). On performing these rites, people in the world attain the desired fruit.

2. The holy rite of Śrī Rāma Navamī[1] is on the ninth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra. A devotee who is physically strong, should duly observe full fast on that day.

3. If he is incapable physically (to observe full fast), he should take a single meal on that day after the midday festival. He shall propitiate Rāma, by feeding the Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice.

4-5a. By means of (gifts of) cows, plots of lands, gingelly seeds, gold etc, and by means (of gifts of) clothes and ornaments, Brāhmaṇas should be propitiated. He who devoutly performs the holy rite of Śrī Rāmanavamī shall shake off all his sins in this world and attain the region of Viṣṇu.

5b-7. The holy rite of Mātṛvrata is also to be observed on this same day. The Yoginīs, sixtyfour in number, accompanied by Bhairava, are to be propitiated by means of garlands, scents, clothes and Naivedyas. O prominent Brāhmaṇa, it was on this day that Bhadrakālī was crowned in the chieftancy of all mothers. Hence, one should worship her by observing fast and controlling his sense-organs, on this day.

8. He who worships Caṇḍikā on the ninth day in either of the fortnights of the month of Vaiśākha, in accordance with the injunctions in the matter, rejoices alongwith the Devas.

1. VV. 2-5a briefly state the outline of Rāmanavamī Vrata. We find its detailed description in works like VRJ. (pp. 149-154) where the dialogue of Sage Agasti and Sutikṣṇa (regarding the observance of this Vrata) from SK. P. is quoted. Hemādri's mention of the Vrata (CC. Vrata I, pp. 951-46) shows that it was popular in Maharashtra before 12th Cent. A.D. at least. NP.'s cursory treatment shows that it was not attached much importance then, though Rāma-navamī is now a national festival.

9-11a. On the ninth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the excellent man who observes fast, should worship Umā duly and feed virgins and Brāhmaṇas in accordance with his ability. He should give them monetary gifts to the extent of his capacity. He should partake of only cooked Śāli rice alongwith milk. O Brāhmaṇa, the man who duly performs this Umā Vrata[1] enjoys great pleasures in this world. In the end, he attains the goal of heaven.

11b-12. (Defective) O chief of Brāhmaṇas, he who performs (the following) holy rite on the ninth day in either of the fortnights in the month of Āṣāḍha and worships the fair-complexioned goddess Aindrī riding the elephant Airāvata and and partakes food only at night, shall become the enjoyer of pleasures in the world of the Devas. He will move about in the vehicle of the Devas or he will proceed along the path called Devayāna.

13-15. In the month of Śrāvaṇa, O leading Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should take food only at night, or he shall observe fast for two fortnights and worship Kaumārī Caṇḍikā. He should worship the goddess, the remover of sins, by means of scents, fragrant flowers, incense, lights and different Naivedyas. He should feed virgins. He who performs the excellent Kaumārī Vrata[2] devotedly in this manner, shall go to the eternal world of the goddess by means of an aerial chariot.

16-17a. The ninth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada is glorified by the name of Nandā Navamī. He who worships Durgā duly with all Upacāras (articles of worship and other formalities) on that day, attains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice and is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

17b-20. The ninth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina is glorified by the name Mahānavamī.[3] On this day,

1. VV. 9-11a describe a special Umā Vrata not recorded by Kane in HD V. 1.

2. VV. 13-15 describe a special Kaumārī Vrata with Caṇḍikā as the main deity. This is not noted by Kane in HD. V. i.

3. VV. 176-22 describe the Mahā-navami in honour of Durgā. As a part of Nava-rātra or the Durgā pūjā festival, it is observed all over India. VRJ, p. 158 gives a detailed procedure on the basis of the Bhaviṣya, Devī,

O Brāhmaṇa, the worship of the Śamī tree should be performed in the afternoon in the eastern quarter. Then, at night, in the first watch (Yāma) = 3 hours), the following (pertaining to the goddess) should be worshipped viz— sword, bow, arrows, iron club, trident, javelin, axe, dagger, leathern shield, and umbrella, banner, elephant, horse, cow and bull, book, balance, baton, noose and discus and the conch. After worshipping a buffalo with scents and other articles of worship (Upacāra), it should be chopped off and dedicated to Bhadrakālī.

21. After offering oblations and after partaking of only cooked rice, the devotee should give the monetary gifts to the Brāhmaṇa and formally conclude the Vrata.

22. He who thus worships Durgā, the destroyer of miseries and sufferings of men, enjoys excellent worldly pleasures here and shall attain heavenly region in the end.

23. The ninth day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika is glorified as Aksaya Navamī (everlasting Navamī) On that day, the devotee should perform the rite of Tarpaṇa at the roots of Aśvattha (the holy fig tree).

24. O Nārada, with mantras special to his own branch of the Vedas, that Tarpaṇa rite of the Devas, sages and Pitṛs should be performed correctly. Then the devotee should offer Arghya to the sun.

25. Then he should feed Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice. After taking his food and giving Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas, he should rest and relax, O chief of sages.

26. It is the word (precept) of Vidhi (god Brahmā) that, if anyone performs Japa, Dāna, worship of the Brāhmaṇas, Homa thus, everything of such acts shall be entirely everlasting.

27-28a. The ninth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa is glorified as Nandinī (Navamī). He who Viṣṇu-dharma P. and Vārāht Tantra. Kane notes more varieties and records a grant by King Pulakesin (early Cālukya dynasty) on Mahā-navami in Kārttika (HD. V. i. pp. 373-74). In Maharashtra we worship the Śami tree and all our implements on this day.

observes fast on that day and worships elaborately goddess Jagadambā (the mother of the Universe) with scents and other things, attains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. There is no doubt in this respect.

28b-29a. The devotee should worship Mahāmāyā on the ninth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa. O Brāhmaṇa, that is conducive to the acquisition of the fruit of a Vājapeya-sacrifice provided he takes only a single meal every day.

29b-31a. The ninth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha is worshipped by the people. It is called Mahānandā as it always causes delight to men. No doubt need be entertained in this respect that the holy bath, charitable gift, Japa, Homa, observance of fast, everything performed on that day has an everlasting benefit.

31b. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the ninth day in the bright fortnight of the month of Phālguna is of a highly meritorious nature. It is called Ānandā.[1] It is remembered as the remover of all sins. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, he who observes fast on that day and worships goddess Ānandā attains all desired benefits. It is the Truth. It is the Truth that is spoken by me.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND NINETEEN

The Holy rites to be observed on Daśamī (i.e. tenth) days (in The Lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. Henceforth, I shall recount to you the holy rites to be observed on Daśamī (tenth) days (of lunar fortnights). On observing them devotedly, man becomes a favourite of Dharmarāja.

1. It appears that some navami Vratas are associated with ānandā vide Nandinī in Mārgaśīrṣa, mahānandā in Māgha and Ānandā in Phālguna. The last is recorded as Ānandā by Hemādri (Vrata I. 948-850). The procedure in the NP. is different from the one recorded by Kane (HD. V. i. P. 270).

2. On the tenth day, in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the devotee should worship Dharmarāja[1] by means of the seasonal flowers and fruits plucked for the nonce, and scents and other things

3. He should either observe fast or take a single meal per day. After feeding fourteen excellent Brāhmaṇas, he should give them monetary gifts according to his capacity.

4. O Brāhmaṇa, he who thus performs the worship of Dharmarāja, shall at the behest of Dharma, attain similarity with the Devas—a position from which he will not fall.

5-6. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, a man should worship god Viṣṇu with scents and other articles of worship and formalities) as well as with white fragrant flowers. He should make hundred circumambulations, (round Viṣṇu's shrine) and assiduously feed Brāhmaṇas. He (thereby) attains to the world of Viṣṇu (Viṣṇuloka). No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

7. It was on the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha that the Jāhnavī (the river Gaṅgā), the most excellent of all the rivers, came to the Earth from the heaven. Hence, the day is remembered as the bestower of merit.

8-9. The month of Jyeṣṭha,[2] the bright fortnight, the constellation of Hasta, Wednesday, Daśamī Tithi, the Gara (Karaṇa), Ānanda (Yoga) and Vyatīpāta, the moon in the Zodiac of Virgo and the sun in the Zodiac of Taurus—the combination of all these ten, O Brāhmaṇa, is regarded to be

1. This and the next Vrata is not recorded in the VRJ. or HD. V. 1.

2. This astronomical combination constituting Daśaharā is repeated in the Sk. P. as follows :

jyeṣṭhe māsi site pakṣe daśamyāmbudha-hastayor-garānande Vyatīpāte kanyā candre vṛṣe raviḥ /
daśayoge naraḥ snātvā sarva-papaiḥ pramucyate //

Kane says that the Varāha P. accepts Tuesday instead of Wednesday (HD. V. i. P. 91) but the actual quotation of Varāha P. in the VRJ. p. 165, states that it was on Wednesday on 10th Jyeṣṭha Śu. that the Gaṅgā highly meritorious. It removes ten kinds of sins.[1] Hence it is called Daśahara.

10. On this day if a delighted devotee takes his holy dip in the Jāhnavī in accordance with the injunctions, he goes to Hari's abode.

11. The tenth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha is remembered by Manu and others as highly meritorious. Holy dip, Japa, charitable gift, or Homa on that day is the bestower of heavenly goal.

12. The tenth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa is the bestower of the fulfilment of all hopes. The worship of Śiva, with scents and other articles of worship on this day, is praiseworthy.

13. Observance of fast, taking of food only at night, feeding of Brāhmaṇas, Japa, the charitable gift of gold, cow, etc. performed on this day—all these are destructive of all sins.

14-19. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada, O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the holy rite called Daśāvatāra[2] (the ten incarnations) is to be observed. After descended from heaven. The NP. limits the merit of this Vrata to bath in the Gangā but the Nirṇaya Sindhu (P. 98), on the authority of the SK.P., extends the merit of Daśaharā to both etc. in all big rivers. A festival of the Gaṅgā is celebrated in towns and villages in big rivers like the Krishnā and the Godāvarī in Maharashtra, though not on that big scale as found at Haradwar, Prayāga or Vārāṇasi.

1. The other derivation of Daśaharā is "that which washes off ten kinds of sins". The ten kinds of sins are given in Manu XII. 5-7 as follows :

(1) Mental Sins : Coveting another man's wealth, wishing evil to befall others, entertaining heretical ideas,

(2) Vocal Sins : harshness of speech, speaking the untruth, back-biting, irrelevent speech.

(3) Bodily Sins : misappropriation of another's wealth, injury to living beings, illicit intercourse with another's wife.

This efficacy of Daśaharā is endorsed in other Purāṇas also; vide Br. P. 63. 15, Nirṇayasindhu (p. 98) quotes the SK. P and Varāha P to the same effect. The VRJ. (pp. 166 ff) gives details of this Vrata.

2. VV. 14-19 describe the Vrata in honour of the currently believed ten incarnations of Viṣṇu. The inclusion of the Buddha and Kalki in the list is comparatively late when people forgot that the Buddha was the propagator of a non-Vedic faith.

taking his bath in a water-reservoir (i.e. a tank, a river etc.) and performing Sandhyā etc. and the rite of Ṭarpaṇa to the Devas, sages and Pitṛs, he should, with great concentration, worship ten incarnations (of Viṣṇu) viz. Matsya (the Divine Fish), Kūrma (the Divine Tortoise), Varāha (The boar), Narasiṁha (Man-lion), Trivikrama (the religious student Vāmana), Paraśu-Rāma, Śrī-Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, Buddha, and Kalki. O Nārada, he (the observer of the Vrata) should worship ten gold images (of these incarnations) in accordance with injunctions. He should then give them to ten excellent Brāhmaṇas after duly honouring them. After observing fast or taking one meal (on that day), he should feed the Brāhmaṇas. After bidding farewell to them, he should enjoy a meal with his friends and relatives. By performing this Vrata with devotion, he shall enjoy all excellent pleasures here. In the end he will go to the eternal Viṣṇuloka, in aerial chariot.

20-22. The tenth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina is glorified as Vijayā.[1] In the morning the devotee places four cow-dung balls in the courtyard of the house in the form of the horizon (i.e. semicircle). In their midst he should worship the four warriors Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata and Śatrughna. Four vessels with lids are taken and smeared with cow-dung. Grains and silver coins are put therein and closed. They are covered with white silken cloth.

Hemādri (Vrata I. 1158-61) instructs to begin this Vrata on 12th Mārgaśīrṣa Śu. VRJ (P. 168) on the authority of the Bhaviṣyottara P., gives a different procedure though the Vrata commences on Bhādrapada Śu, 10th and the Vrata is to be observed for 10 years.

1. VV. 20-25a describe one variety of Vijayā daśamī Vrata allied with Rāma but not connected with his victory over Rāvaṇa which forms the basis of the present Rāmalīlā festival. This variety is not recorded by Hemādri (Vrata I. 970-73), Nirṇaya sindhu (PP. 69-70), VRJ. pp. 169-170 or by Kane (HD. V. i. pp. 188-194).

The other variety in VV 25b-31a, which is to be observed by kings or noblemen for securing conquest on the enemies, has been current all over India in slightly different forms. The worship of the Śamī tree, royal procession of elephants, horses etc., waving of lights (Nīrājana) after return from Śamī-Pūjana etc. have been the common features. The NP. does not include the worship of the goddess Aparājitā (recorded in Dharma-sindhu, pp.

23. The devotee then worships them in accordance with the injunctions with scents, fragrant flowers, Naivedyas, etc. accompanied by father, mother, brothers, sons, wife and servants.

24-25a. After paying obeisance he feeds the Brāhmaṇas who are duly honoured. By performing this holy rite, the man remains happy throughout the year. O Brāhmaṇa, he shall decisively become flourishing in wealth and grains.

25b-31a. (Another holy rite) On the previous Navamī day the devotee goes to a Śamī tree and chants Mantras : On the afternoon of the Daśamī day, O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee goes again to the Śamī tree which is on the eastern side (of the village etc) and takes mud from the foot of tree. To the accompaniment of songs and instrumental music, he brings the mud to the house. He worships the clay in accordance with the injunctions and arranges his army. He goes out of the village by means of the eastern gate without any perturbation. He should get the image of the enemy prepared by means of leaves, etc. or mentally fancy the same. He should feel mentally delighted that the deity will hit the enemy with an arrow that has its tail of gold. He should then return home at night. Or after making all these arrangements he should proceed against the enemy to curb him. O Brāhmaṇa, this Daśamī rite, performed always in accordance with the injunctions, shall bestow wealth, victory, sons, cows, elephants, horses, goats and sheep in this world. O Nārada, at death he attains heavenly world.

31b-33. One should perform the holy rite of Sārvabhauma-Vrata[1] (Vrata for Sovereignty over the world) on the tenth day 96 ft) though some features in Hemādri (Vrata I. pp. 970-971) such as despatching an arrow at the effigy of the enemy or imagining him to be facing oneself, are common.

In Maharashtra probably due to scarcity of Śamī trees, they worship the Āptā tree or its branch on the eastern outskirts of the village. Going out of the boundary of the village is the technical Sīmollaṅghana (crossing the boundary for "invading" the enemy). People return home in the evening and lights are waved round the men. (Nīrājana) by women in the house. They distribute the leaves of the Āptā tree as "gold coins".

1. VV. 31-47 describe the Sārvabhauma Vrata primarily meant for kings. A similar Vrata is given in the Varāha P. 65.1-6 and Viṣṇudharma in the bright half of the month of Kārttika. The devotee either observes complete fast or takes only one meal a day. At midnight, outside the house or the city he offers oblations in all the ten directions with Apūpa (baked pie) etc. On a level spot of ground smeared with cowdung, he draws a mystic diagram of a lotus of eight petals. After worshipping Gaṇeśa and other deities he (wipes off sins) by means of these Mantras.

34. May God Indra, the king of the Devas, the granter of all desired things, destroy the sin that is to my east as a result of my own sinful actions.

35. May God Vahni (fire) the king of all splendours, the granter of all desired things quell the sin that is to my south-east as a result of my own sinful actions.

36. May Yama, the king of Pretas, ghosts, the bestower of all desired things annihilate the sin that is to my south as a result of my own actions.

37. May Nirṛti, the king of Rākṣasas, the bestower of all desired things, wipe off the sin that is to my southwest as a result of my own actions.

38. May Varuṇa, the Lord of aquatic animals, the bestower of all desired things, destroy the sin that is to my west as a result of my own actions.

39. May Vāyu, the king of Maruts (gusts of wind), the bestower of all desired things eradicate the sin that is to my north-west as a result of my own actions.

40. May Soma (Moon), the Lord of Ṛkṣas (constellations) and Yakṣas, the bestower of all desired things, quell the sin that is to my north as a result of my own actions.

41. May Īśāna, the lord of Bhūtas (goblins), the granter of all desired things, quell the sin that is to my north-east, as a result of my own actions.

42. May Brahmā (the Lord of the Prajāpatis), the granter of all desired things annihilate the sin that is above, as a result of (my own) actions.

P. III. 164. 1-7. The guardians of the quarters are at times identified with the protectors of the worlds. Manu V.96 mentions Sūrya (the Sun) as the protector of the South-West instead of Nirṛti in the NP.

43. May Ananta, the king of serpents, the granter of all desired things, quell the sin that is stationed below me as a result of my own actions.

44. After offering oblations in the ten directions thus, with great concentration, he should alertly offer oblations to Kṣetrapāla externally.

45. After having completed the rites thus the intelligent devotee should spend the remaining part of the night in mainly auspicious songs, recitation of hymns, Japas etc.

46. In the morning, he should take bath, worship guardians of the worlds (quarters), and honour and feed twelve Brāhmaṇas. He should give them Dakṣinā according to his ability.

47. O Brāhmaṇa, after performing the holy rite thus, the royal devotee shall enjoy all auspicious worldly pleasures. After enjoying heavenly pleasures thereafter, for the duration of a Yuga, he will become an Emperor.

48. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee should perform the holy rite of Ārogyaka Vrata[1] (health-giving Vrata). He should worship ten Brāhmaṇas with scents and other things and drink the water with which their feet have been washed.

49-50a. After giving Dakṣiṇā to them, he should bid them farewell. He should take only a single meal. O Brāhmaṇa, after performing this Vrata the devotee attains health in this world. Thanks to the grace of Dharma-Rāja, he rejoices like a Deva in the heaven.

50b-51. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, he should worship Viśve Devas.[2] They are Kratu,

1. This is a special variety of Vrata in the NP. Kane records a number of Ārogya Vratas on different Tithis, but none of them prescribes the Tirtha (water after washing the feet) of Brāhmaṇas. Even the Vrata on the Daśami day prescribes the worship of goddess Lakṣmi and Hari.

2. These gods are supposed to be the sons of Viśvā. The list of their names differs e.g. Apte's SK. Dict. p. 523 and MWP. 992 give the following list :

Vasu, Satya, Kratu, Dakṣa, Kāla, Kāma, Dhṛti, Kuru, Purūravas and Mādravas—the last four are not found in the NP.-list.

Dakṣa, Vasus, Satya, Kāla, Kāma, Muni, Guru, Vipra and Rām. Keśava has identified himself with these in ten different ways.

52-54. He should make effigies of Darbha grass to represent them as seated in their seats or lying down. O Nārada, he should worship them with scents, incense, lights and Naivedyas. After giving them Dakṣiṇā separately, he should ritualistically bid farewell to them. The gifts that had been offered to them should be given to excellent Brāhmaṇas or to the preceptor. O Brahminical sage, the observer of the Vrata who performs the rite thus, taking in only one meal a day, shall be the enjoyer of pleasures of both the worlds.

55-58a. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, the devotee should observe fast and conquer his sense-organs. He should properly and completely worship the ten Devas called Aṅgiras after making their images in gold. He shall worship them with scents and other Upacāras. They are— Ātmā, Āyus, Manas, Dakṣa, Mada, Prāṇa, Barhiṣmān, Gaviṣṭha, Datta and Satya. O Nārada, as their representatives ten Brāhmaṇas are to be fed with sweet cooked rice. For the purpose of acquiring heavenly world, the devotee should give those Brāhmaṇas the golden image.

58b-62. On the tenth day in the bright half of the last month, the devotee should worship the fourteen Yamas. They are : Yama, Dharmarāja, Mṛtyu, Antaka, Vaivasvata, Kāla, Sarvabhūtakṣaya, Audumbara, Dadhna, Nīla, Parameṣṭhin, Vṛkodara, Citra and Citragupta. He should properly and correctly worship them with scents and other Upacāras. He shall perform Tarpaṇa three times for each with handful of water mixed with gingelly seeds. O Nārada, thereafter, with a copper vessel he should give Arghya to the sun with the mixture of red sandal, gingelly seeds, raw rice-grains and barley in the waters with the following mantra.

63. "O sun of thousand rays, come O huge mass of splendour, O Lord of the Universe, accept the Arghya given by me with devotion. Take pity on me."

64-66. The devotee should offer Arghya by uttering the above Mantra. He should feed the fourteen Brāhmaṇas and give them silver coins as Dakṣiṇā. After bidding farewell to them, he should partake of his own food. O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee who performs the holy rite thus, enjoys all worldly pleasures, inaccessible to the Devas, such as sons and riches. At the death of his body, he occupies excellent aerial chariot and attains to Viṣṇu's Loka.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY

The exposition of the Vratas to be observed on Ekādaśi (eleventh) days[1] (of the lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1-4. On the eleventh day in either of the fortnights of (any month), O sage, the devotee must desist from taking food.

1. The NP. being a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa gives full details of Ekādaśi Vrata. It has devoted the whole of Uttarārdha in glorification of this Vrata.

The NP. follows Pūrṇimānta reckoning. Hence the Ekādaśi in the dark half is treated first. It is not known why Caitra Ekādaśis should be an exception and why Ekādaśi in Caitra Śu. and Kṛ are so much bifurcated (Caitra Śu in VV 5-8a and Caitra Kṛ in VV 80-82)

The following is the Tabular statement of Ekādaśis and the month and fortnight for their performance. The difference of name in the list in HDV. i P. 108 Note 278 is noted in the bracket.

	N. of the lunar Fortnight and month	N. of the Ekādaśi Vrata
1.	Caitra Śu.	Kāmadā
2.	,, Kṛ.	Pāpamocanī (Varūthinī)
3.	Vaiśākha Śu.	Mohinī
4.	,, Kṛ.	Varūthinī (Aparā)
5.	Jyeṣṭha Śu.	Nirjalā
6.	,, Kṛ	Aparā (Yoginī)
7.	Āṣāḍha Śu.	Śayanī
8.	,, Kṛ.	Yoginī (Kāmikā or Kāmadā)
9.	Śrāvaṇa Śu.	Putradā
10.	,, Kṛ.	Kāmikā (Ajā)

With great concentration, he must construct an auspicious pavilion decorated with flowers of various kinds exquisitely. After taking bath perfectly in accordance with the injunctions, he should observe fast and conquer his sense-organs. With faith and great concentration he should duly worship Viṣṇu with various Upacāras, Japas, Homas and circumambulations. He should also recite different hymns in prayer to the Lord, alongwith songs and instrumental music that captivate the mind. He should glorify the Lord with charming shouts of Jaya (Be victorious). He should prostrate on the ground like a long staff. He should keep awake during the night. (By carrying out all these instructions) he attains the great region of Viṣṇu.

5-8a. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the excellent man should observe fast and maintain these observances mentioned hereinafter for these days (the previous and the subsequent days included i.e. the 10th, 11th +12th Tithis). On the Dvādaśī (twelfth) day, he should devotedly worship the eternal Vāsudeva with all the sixteen Upacāras.

Then, he should feed his kinsmen.* After giving Dakṣiṇā

11.	Bhādrapada Śu.	Padmā (Parivartini)
12.	,, Kṛ.	Ajā (Indirā)
13.	Āśvina Śu.	Pāpāṅkuśā
14.	,, Kṛ.	Indirā (Ramā)
15.	Kārttika Śu.	Prabodhini
16.	,, Kṛ.	Ramā (Utpatti)
17.	Mārgaśirṣa Śu.	Mokṣā (Mokṣadā)
18.	,, Kṛ.	Utpannā (Saphalā)
19.	Pauṣa Śu.	Putradā
20.	,, Kṛ.	Saphalā (Ṣaṭ-tilā)
21.	Māgha Śu.	Jayā
22.	,, Kṛ.	Ṣaṭ-tilā (Vijayā)
23.	Phālguna Śu.	Āmalakī
24.	,, Kṛ.	Vijayā (Pāpa-mocani)

VV. 1-4 give general instructions on the common ritual in the Ekādaśī Vratas.

*The wording in the next line shows that here the reading should have been Brāhmaṇān instead of bāndhavān. If the reading be Vāḍavān it will do as Vāḍava = a Brāhmaṇa.

to them he should bid farewell to them and take food himself. This holy Ekādaśī Vrata is called Kāmadā (the granter of desires). It destroys all sins. O Brāhmaṇa, if observed properly and perfectly, it yields worldly pleasures and salvation.

8b-10. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Vaiṣākha, a person should observe, with all formalities (of this Vrata), fast on this Varūthinī (name of this Ekādaśī.) On the next day, he should worship Madhusūdana. The charitable gift of gold, cooked food, cow and virgin on this day is highly commendable. By performing the holy Vrata of Varūthinī (Ekādaśī), the man devoted to the regular requisite observances is liberated from all sins. He attains the region of Viṣṇu.

11-12a. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, the devotee observes fast on this Mohinī Ekādaśī. On the next day, he takes his bath and worships Puruṣottama with scents and other things. By feeding Brāhmaṇas, (thereafter), he shall undoubtedly be liberated from sins.

12b-14a. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Jyeṣṭha (which is called Aparā,[1] he should observe fast of the Aparā Ekādaśī, O king,[2] on the Dvādaśī day, he performs the daily prescribed (Nitya) rites and worships Trivikrama. Thereafter, feeding prominent Brāhmaṇas and giving them Dakṣiṇā, he becomes liberated from all sins and goes to Viṣṇu's Region (Vaikuṇṭha).

14b-16. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the holy rite of Nirjalā (Abstention from water) Ekādaśī is observed. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, from the sun-rise to sunrise (i. e. through-out the Ekādaśī day) (not even water is to be taken in). On the twelfth day in the morning, he performs the prescribed daily routine rites and worships Hṛṣīkeśa with all the Upacāras; (thereafter) he feeds

1. As Aparā is the name of Ekādaśī which follows Mohinī (HD VI. 1 p. 108 Ft. note 278), the reading in this verse should have been Samupoṣyāparām instead of Samupoṣya parām; Here parām is meaningless and syntactically unrelated to any substantive.

2. This is an obvious quotation, as the epithet Nṛpa is not applicable to Nārada Brāhmaṇas, with devotion. By observing this holy rite, the devotee attains the benefit of twentyfour (ordinary) Ekādaśīs.

17-18. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Āṣāḍha, the devotee observes the fast of Yoginī Ekādaśī. On the twelfth day, he performs his daily rites and worships Nārāyaṇa. Then, he feeds leading Brāhmaṇas and offers Dakṣiṇā to them. He attains the benefit of all charitable gifts and rejoices in the abode of Viṣṇu.

19-24. Listen to the injunctions regarding the holy rite on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha.[1] The devotee observes fast on that day in accordance with the injunctions. He should instal the image of Viṣṇu made of gold or silver, on an auspicious pavilion. The image should be of exquisite workmanship, with the four hands shining with conch, discus, iron club and the lotus. A yellow silk-cloth should be wound round the image. O Brāhmaṇa, the image should be placed on a couch neatly covered with (silk) cloth. Uttering the Mantras he should bathe the Lord with Pañcāmṛta and pure water. The hymn 'Puruṣa Sūkta' (RV. X. 90) is recited. The Upacāras (articles and modes or details of worship) begin with Pādya (offering of water to wash the feet of the Lord) and end with Nīrājana (waving of lights in front of the Lord's image). Then he prays to Hari as follows:[2] "O Lord of the Universe, if you are asleep, this Universe too shall be asleep. When you wake up, the entire Universe consisting

1. For the detailed discussion of the Vrata vide HD. V. 109-112. The details of this Vrata given in NP. (VV. 19-27) are rather different from these in HD (ibid).

I doubt the Indo-European origin of this Śayanī Vrata for lack of evidence in comparative mythology. Kane's other theory viz. the monsoons causing paralysis of activities, journey etc. is more plausible.

In Maharashtra, this is treated as a Mahā-ekādaśī and perhaps the biggest pilgrimage is held at Pandharpur on this occasion. One wonders why farmers who are normally very busy at this time of the year, leave aside their agricultural activities and gather at Pandharpur. Is it a continuation of such gathering since the days of food-gathering economy ?

2. This verse (No. 23) is probably a quotation as we find it quoted in the Dharma Sindhu (P. 53) and Nirṇaya Sindhu (P. 102) of the mobile and immobile being wakes up." After praying thus in the presence of the Lord, the devout man should adopt regulations (or Vratas) laid down for observance during the period of the Caturmāsya. He should adopt them to the extent of his capacity.

25-26. On the morning of the Dvādaśī day, he should worship Śeṣaśāyin (Lord Viṣṇu reposing on the couch of the body of Śeṣa) with all the sixteen types of Upacāras. He should then feed the Brāhmaṇas and propitiate them with Dakṣiṇās. After that he should take food silently. From that time onwards, O leading Brāhmaṇa, he should worship the Lord with scents and other things every day.

27. By performing this holy rite of "Śayanī-Vrata" of the Lord duly, O Brāhmaṇa, the man enjoys worldly pleasures and Salvations, thanks to the grace of Viṣṇu.

28-31a. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the excellent man performs the holy rite of 'Kāmikā' (also known as Kāmadā) on the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Śrāvaṇa alongwith due observances. On the twelfth day, after performing the daily routine rites, he worships Śrīdhara, Hari, with all the sixteen Upacāras.[1] He then feeds Brāhmaṇas, gives them Dakṣiṇā and bids them farewell. Thereafter, he takes his food alongwith the kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, he who thus performs the excellent Kāmikā (Ekādaśī) Vrata obtains

1. The NP. constantly refers to sixteen Upacāras. They are as follows : āvāhana (invitation), āsana (offering a seat), Pādya (water for washing feet), arghya (respectful offering of water with or without grains of rice, dūrvā grass, flowers mixed in it), ācamanīya (offering spoonfuls of water for sipping), snāna (bath), vastra (cloth), yajñopavīta (the sacred thread). anulepana or gandha (sandal paste or some fragrant paste), puṣpa (decoration with flowers) dhūpa (burning of incense), dīpa (waving of light), naivedya (offering of eatables, food) tāmbūla (offering betel-leaves, just after dinner or naivedya), dakṣiṇā (religious fee or monetary gift), pradakṣiṇā (clockwise circumambulation).

Many of these were current in Vedic times for receiving guests and pitṛs at the time of śrāddha and these were extended to images when idol-worship came in vogue. It is a superstition to attribute all these to Dravidians (For details vide HD. V. i PP. 33-39).

all the cherished desires in this world and attains the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

31b-33. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, the devotee performs the holy rite of "Pavitrā* (prob. an alternative name for Putradā) Ekādaśī" On the Dvādaśī day, he should worship Janārdana strictly adhering to the rules, with all the sixteen Upacāras. Thereafter, he feeds Brāhmaṇas and gives them Dakṣiṇās. He obtains a son endowed with good qualities and then attains Viṣṇu's region. He will be bowed to by all Devas.

34-36a. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Bhādrapada, the devotee observes fast of the holy rite named 'Ajā-Ekādaśī'. On the Dvādaśī day, he should worship Upendra with various Upacāras. He should feed Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice and bid farewell to them after giving them Dakṣiṇā. O Brāhmaṇa, he who observes the holy rite in this way with great concentration and devotion to Ajā, enjoys all worldly pleasures. In the end he attains the abode of Viṣṇu.

36b-41a. The devotee has to perform the holy rite of PadmāVrata* (Ekādaśī fast called Padmā) on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada. After finishing the daily worship, he should perform the rite of Koṭidāna (giving of a crore of things). O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the image installed before is worshipped with great festivities. The image is taken to the water-reservoir and is touched with water and is then worshipped in accordance with the injunctions. It is then brought to the platform and laid to rest on the left side. On the morning of the Dvādaśī day, he worships Vāmana with scents and other things. The Brāhmaṇas are fed, given Dakṣiṇās and bidden farewell to. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs the excellent holy rite of Padmāvrata thus, enjoys all worldly pleasures. In the end he attains release from Saṁsāra.

*It is also called Parivartinī as Lord Viṣṇu is supposed to have turned on one side during his sleep on this day. (Kane—HD V. I. 109). The NP. subscribes to this supposition as v. 39a instructs that the image of Viṣṇu should be laid to rest on the left side.

41b-44. The devotee performs the holy Ekādaśi rite called Indirā, on the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Āśvina. He observes fast and at midday, he performs Śrāddha rite in front of a Śāligrāma stone. O Brāhmaṇa, this is highly pleasing to Viṣṇu. On the next morning of Hari's day, the intelligent devotee worships Padmanābha and feeds Brāhmaṇas. After giving them Dakṣiṇā, he bids farewell to them and takes food himself. The man who performs the holy rite thus, enjoys all desired worldly pleasures and uplifts a crore of his ancestors. In the end he goes to Viṣṇu's abode.

45-47. O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee observes the holy rite called 'Pāśāṅkuśā', on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina. After observing fast on this day, he should worship Viṣṇu on the day of Viṣṇu (i.e. Dvādaśī day). He then feeds prominent Brāhmaṇas, gives them Dakṣiṇā and after bowing to them devotedly, he bids farewell to them. Thereafter, he takes food himself. The man who performs the holy rite of Pāśāṅkuśa Vrata thus with devotion, enjoys excellent worldly pleasures and attains the Sālokā Mukti i.e. residence in the same region as that of Viṣṇu.

48-50. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the devotee performs the holy rite of Ramā Ekādaśī on the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika. After duly observing fast on that day, he worships Keśava on the morning of Dvādaśī day. He worships Keśava, the eternal Lord of the Devas, the destroyer of Keśin. He should then feed Brāhmaṇas and bid farewell to them after Dakṣiṇā has been given. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs the holy rites thus, enjoys all desired pleasures here. He attains to the presence of Ramāpati (Viṣṇu) by means of an aerial chariot ! (This is known as samīpatā Mukti).

51-56a. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika, the devotee observes the fast of Prabodhinī Ekādaśī. At night, the devotee wakens up the sleeping Keśava (Viṣṇu) with auspicious songs, with Ṛk, Yajus and Sāman Mantras and with various kinds of instrumental music. He propitiates the Lord presenting him grapes, sugarcane, pomegranate and other fruits and the plants of banana and Śṛṅgāṭaka (Trapa Bispinosa etc). After the night is over, on the next day, he takes bath and performs his daily routine. He should then worship Gadādāmodara with all the sixteen Upacāras and with the recital of the Puruṣasūkta. After feeding Brāhmaṇas and giving them Dakṣiṇās to their satisfaction, he should bid farewell to them. He shall give that gold image to the preceptor alongwith a cow. He who respectfully performs this Bodhinī Vrata with devotion, enjoys all worldly pleasures and attains the region of Viṣṇu.

56b-59a. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee observes fast of Utpannā (or Utpatti) Ekādaśī. On the Dvādaśī day, he should worship Lord Kṛṣṇa with scents and other requisites of services or upacāras. He then feeds leading Brāhmaṇas and gives them Dakṣiṇas. After bidding them farewell, he should take food himself alongwith friends and kinsmen. He who performs the Utpannā (or Utpatti) Ekādaśī Vrata with devotion, rides an aerial chariot and attains the region of Viṣṇu.

59b-62a. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee observes the holy rite of Mokṣā (Mokṣadā) Ekādaśī by fasting. On the Dvādaśī day, in the morning, he worships Ananta who is the embodiment of the Universe, with all the Upacāras. The Brāhmaṇa devotee then feeds the Brāhmaṇas. He bids farewell to them after giving them Dakṣiṇā. He then takes food alongwith the kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing this Vrata, he enjoys all the desired worldly pleasures. He uplifts ten generations of his ancestors and ten generations of successors. He then attains Hari.

62b-64a. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Pauṣa, the devotee observes the holy Saphalā Ekādaśi rite. On the Dvādaśī day, he worships Acyuta with all Upacāras. After feeding Brāhmaṇas with sweet-meats and giving them Dakṣiṇās, he bids them farewell. O Brāhmaṇa, after performing the Saphalā Ekādaśī Vrata thus in accordance with the injunctions, he enjoys all worldly pleasures here (in this world). In the end, he goes to the region of Viṣṇu.

64b-67a. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, the devotee observes the holy rite of Putradā Ekādaśī. On the Dvādaśī day, he should worship the discus-armed Lord with Arghya and other Upacāras. Thereafter, he should feed leading Brāhmaṇas. After giving them Dakṣiṇā, he should bid farewell to them and eat the cooked rice left over, alongwith his loving kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs the holy rite thus, enjoys all desired pleasures, in the end; he rides in an aerial car and goes to Hari's abode (Vaikuṇṭha).

67b-70. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Māgha, the devotee observes the holy rite of Ṣaṭtilā Ekādaśī. He takes bath with gingelly seeds; he makes gift of them; he uses them in the Tarpaṇa rite; he performs Homa with them; he eats them and he worships with them on the morning of the Dvādaśī day. After perfectly worshipping Vaikuṇṭha (Viṣṇu) with all the Upacāras, he feeds the Brāhmaṇas. Then he bids farewell to them, after Dakṣiṇā has been duly paid, O Brāhmaṇa, by performing the holy rite, thus in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee, with great concentration, enjoys all desired pleasures here. In the end he attains Viṣṇu's region.

71-73. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, the devotee observes the holy rite of Jayā Ekādaśī. On the day of Hari, in the morning, O Brāhmaṇa, he should worship Puruṣa, the Lord of Śrī. After feeding, giving Dakṣiṇā and bidding farewell to the Brāhmaṇas, he should take in the food left over by them alongwith his kinsmen. He should be pure, in mind and body. O Brāhmaṇa, he who thus performs the holy rite that propitiates Keśava, enjoys excellent pleasures here. In the end, he shall attain the region of Viṣṇu.

74-76. On the eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Phálguna, the devotee observes the holy rite of Vijayā Ekādaśī. On the Dvādaśī day, in the morning, he worships Yogīśa (the Lord of Yogins) with scents and other things. He feeds Brāhmaṇas and gives them Dakṣiṇās to their satisfaction. After bidding them farewell he should himself silently take food in the company of his kinsmen. The man who performs the holy rite thus, enjoys the desired pleasures. After death, he goes to Viṣṇu's region. He is well honoured by the Devas.

77-79. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, the devotee observes the holy rite of Āmalakī Ekādaśī. On the Dvādaśī day, in the morning, he should worship Puṇḍarīkākṣa with all Upacāras. With excellent cooked food, he should feed the Brāhmaṇas and give them Dakṣiṇā. By performing worship etc. duly on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, that is called Āmalakī Ekādaśī, the devotee attains the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

80-82. The eleventh day in the dark half of the month of Caitra is called Pāpamocanikā (that which releases one from sins). Having observed fast on that day, the devotee worships Govinda in the morning on the Dvādaśī day, with all the sixteen Upacāras. He should feed the Brāhmaṇas, give them Dakṣiṇā and bid them farewell. Then he should take food alongwith his kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, he who thus performs the holy rite of Pāpamocanikā Vrata attains the world of Viṣṇu by means of a shining aerial chariot.

83. O Brāhmaṇa, thus the salvation-yielding holy rites on the Ekādaśī days in both bright and dark halves (of all the months) have been extolled to you. There is no doubt at all in this (that they are conducive to the attainment of salvation).

84. Since this Vrata is to be observed for three consecutive days, it is glorified as the most excellent of all the Vratas. Hence, it must be known as highly fruitful.

85. O Nārada, the devotee should miss four meals in the course of these three days. On the first day and the third (i.e. on Daśamī and Dvādaśī days) he shall miss one meal each (in the evening). On the day in the middle (i.e. Ekādaśī day) he should miss both the meals.

86-90. Now, I shall recount to you the restraints in regard to this Vrata in the course of these three days.[1] A true devotee

1. VV. 86-90 lay down the restraints and rules to be observed on the three days of Ekādaśī Vrata. It is noteworthy that the number of restraints to be observed is the same as the number of Tithi. Thirteen restraints are prescribed for the Daśamī day (The 10th Tithi), eleven ones for the Ekādaśī day, and twelve for the Dvādaśī day.

Viṣṇu should always avoid ten things on the Daśamī day :— Bell metal vessel, meat, cooked lentil, Bengal gram, Kodrava grains, greens, wine, food at others' houses, the second meal and sexual intercourse.

He should avoid these eleven things on the Ekādaśi day :- gambling, sleep, chewing the betal leaves, washing the teeth, slandering, backbiting, stealing, injury to others, sexual intercourse, anger and telling lies. He should eschew the following twelve on the Dvādasī day:— Bell metal vessel, meat, wine, honey, oil, conversation with outcaste people who remove ordure, physical exercises, journey, second meal, sexual intercourse, touching the untouchables and cooked lentil.

91-92. A Brāhmaṇa should observe fast with due observances of all the restraints, if he is physically competent. Otherwise, the intelligent devotee should take a single meal. He should not take food during the night, or he should perform the rite of Ayācitavrata (i.e. taking in what is not begged for). On no account should he miss such a Vrata as this.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY ONE

The holy rites to be observed on Dvādaśi (Twelfth) days (in a lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. Henceforth, O sinless one, I shall recount to you the holy rites to be observed on Dvādaśī (twelfth) days (in a lunar fortnight). On observing these Vratas, in this world a man becomes more beloved of Viṣṇu.

2-10a On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the devotee should perform the holy rite of Madanavrata.[1] A pot with no cracks, filled with white raw rice grains is placed. Different kinds of fruits are placed nearby with stumps ofsugarcane plants. White sandal paste is applied over the pot and it is covered with two white clothes. Various dishes of foodstuffs are also kept nearby and gold according to one's ability is also placed at its side. A copper vessel containing jaggery should be placed above the pot. It is there that Lord Acyuta in the form of Kāma is worshipped with scents and other Upacāras. The devotee observes fast. On the next day in the morning, he should honour a Brāhmaṇa and give all these things to him. He should feed and give Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas. After observing this Vrata thus for a year, the devotee should give the preceptor a bed accompanied by all the requisite adjuncts, together with ghee and a cow. A Brāhmaṇa couple should be worshipped, and presented with a gold image of Kāmadeva alongwith a white milch cow and garments. While giving the charitable gifts he should utter : "May Hari in the form of Kāma be pleased". He who observes Madana Dvādaśī Vrata thus, becomes liberated from all sins. He attains equality with Hari.

1. VV. 2-10 describe the Madana-dvādaśī Vrata. This is recorded by Hemādri (vrata I 1194-98) and VRJ. P. 230.

10b. It is on this very same day that Bhartṛ-Dvādaśika Vrata is also observed.

11-14. A bed is made with clean bed-sheets spread over it. A gold image of Hari accompanied by Śrī is placed over it. A pavilion is made of flowers over it. The observer of the Vrata worships the deity with scents and other things. He keeps awake at night by means of holy dances, songs, and instrumental music. On the next day, in the morning, he should gift away the gold image of Śrīhari alongwith the bed to a Prominent Brāhmaṇa. He should feed the Brāhmaṇas and give them Dakṣiṇās to their satisfaction. The married life of the person who performs the holy rite thus, becomes stable. He enjoys worldly pleasures in the course of seven births as well as the pleasures desired in both the worlds.

15-16. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, the devotee should observe fast and subdue his sense organs. With great devotion, he worships Mādhava with scents and other Upacāras. He should duly present sweet-cooked rice to a Brāhmaṇa till he is satisfied, along with a water-pot saying "May Mādhava be pleased".

17-19a. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the observer of the holy rite should worship Trivikrama with scents and other things. Then he should present Brāhmaṇa with a bowl containing sweet cooked rice. Thereafter, he should take in a single meal (i.e. once in a day). Trivikrama, the Lord of the Devas, becomes pleased with this Vrata. O Nārada, he will grant him extensive pleasures and salvation in the end.

19b-21a. The devotee should feed twelve Brāhmaṇas on he twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha with sweet cooked rice. He should worship them severally with scents and other things in due order. Saying "May Lord Viṣṇu be pleased with me", he should devoutly give them the following things as gifts—garments, staff, sacred thread, ridges, and vessels.

21b-23a On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa, the observer of holy rite should worship Śrīdhara with scents and other things. He should feed excellent Brāhmaṇas with cooked rice in curds, and give them silver coins for Dakṣiṇā. After bowing to them, he should bid them farewell saying, : "May Śrīdhara, the Lord of Devas, be pleased with this Vrata."

23b-24. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada, the observer of the holy rite should worship Vāmana and in his presence feed twelve Brāhmaṇas with milk puddings. By giving gold as Dakṣiṇā, he delights Viṣṇu.

25-27a. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina, the devotee should worship Padmanābha with scents and other Upacāras. After that in the presence of the Lord, he should feed the Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice. He should present Dakṣiṇā consisting of gold and (supplement it) with clothes. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, satisfied with this Vrata, Padmanābha grants him the boon of going to Śvetadvīpa and the desired bodily pleasures.

27b-35a. On the twelfth day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika the devotee performs the holy rite of Govatsā-Dvādaśī Vrata[1] (the holy rite of cow and its calf). With fragrant sandal

1. VV. 276-35a describe a variety of Vrata different from the one recorded in HD, V. i i.e. in the Bhaviṣya P. or Hemādri (Vrata I. 1083-84).

paste and other things, the devotee draws the figure of a cow alongwith her calf. He then worships it with flower garlands. With flowers, raw rice-grains and gingelly seeds he prepares the Arghya in a copper vessel in accordance with the injunctions, O Nārada, the devotee should offer the Arghya at the feet of the cow uttering the following Mantra : "O Mother, O Mother of cows, born of the milk-ocean, bowed to by Devas and Asuras, O Goddess identical with the Devas, decorated by all the Devas, kindly accept the Arghya. Obeisance be to you". Then he should offer Vaṭakas (pies) prepared from black gram and other pulses, as Naivedya. Their number may be five, ten or one in accordance with one's affluence. (The Mantra for Naivedya) "O Surabhi (divine cow), you are the mother of the Universe. You are always stationed at the feet of Viṣṇu (in the region of Viṣṇu). O Goddess identical with the Devas, please accept the mouthful of morsel given by me; O Goddess identical with the Devas, decorated by the Devas, O Mother Nandinī (Divine cow), make my desire fruitful."

O excellent Brāhmaṇa, on that day the devotee should avoid foodstuffs fried in oil or cooked in mudpots; he should avoid cow milk, ghee, curds and butter-milk also.

35b-38. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada, O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should worship Lord Dāmodara with scents and other Upacāras. With great concentration, he should feed the Brāhmaṇas twelve in number with cooked rice in His (the Lord's) presence. Then, with great pleasure, he should offer them water pots duly worshipped, filled with water and accompanied by areca nuts, sweet-meats and gold. If the rite is performed thus, the devotee becomes a favourite of Viṣṇu. He enjoys all worldly pleasures. There is no doubt in this that on death he obtains Sāyujya (identity) with Viṣṇu.

39-42. The rite of Nīrājana vrata[1] is also recommended, to be observed on this day. Understand it from me. The devotee

1. The NP. gives two types of Nīrājana Vrata. VV. 39-43 are for common people and VV. 44-50 for Kings and nobles. It is a Śānti Vrata. Kane records other varieties of this Vrata (HD. V. 1. 334-335).

adorns (with ornaments) the Lord of the Universe, who has thus got up from his slumber. At night-fall the devotee bedecks himself and kindles fresh fires. He worships the Lord by means of Mantras and performs Homa in the fire kindled by a silver lamp that is worshipped by the people, with scents, fragrant flowers etc. O sage, the devotee should perform the Nīrājana (waving of the lights) rite to Hari with that silver lamp. There itself he should perform the Nīrājana rite for all these in the following order viz : to Lakṣmī who follows him, to Brahmāṇī, Gaurī, to Yakṣa, to Gaṇapati, to planets, to Mothers, to manes, to mountains and to all the serpents.

43. To cows, he should perform the Nīrājana (waving of lights) rite and to buffaloes etc. other Maṅgala (auspicious) rites, with shouts like namaḥ (obeisance), Jaya (be victorious) etc. and with the sounds of bells, conchs etc.

44-50. In this great festival of waving of lights, there should be tumultuous noise of the cows with their horns smeared with saffron and their limbs painted with diverse kinds of colours. The king should be accompanied by the chief priest, ministers and servants. He should duly worship horses endowed with all auspicious characteristic signs, the elephants overwhelmed by ichor in their rut, and the royal paraphernalia such as the umbrella etc. The auspicious character of atmosphere shall be increased with the sounds of conchs, and musical instruments. The king, adorned properly should occupy a newly made throne studded with various jewels. Then a courtesan or a woman of a noble family endowed with all auspicious characteristics should, slowly, perform the Nīrājana rite above the head of the king. This rite is a great Śānti (that which subdues and pacifies evils). It should be performed every year by the king or any other rich man who wishes for good health throughout the year. O Brāhmaṇa, if the excellent Śānti rite named Nīrājana is performed in any country, city or village, the ailments of the people therein are quelled and cured.

51-54a. The excellent holy rite of the Sādhya Vrata[1] is to be observed on the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa. The Sādhyas are twelve in number. They are stated as follows : Manobhava, Prāṇa, Nara, Yāta (v.l. Apāna) Vīryavān, Citi, Haya, Nṛpa (v.l. Naya) Haṁsa, Nārāyaṇa, Vibhu and Prabhu. These shall be represented by raw rice grains and worshipped with scents, fragrant flowers etc. He should then feed twelve leading Brāhmaṇas. Good Dakṣiṇās are to be given to them. He should then bid farewell to them saying, 'May Nārāyaṇa be pleased.'

1. This Vrata of semi-divine beings called Sādhya is recorded by Hemādri (CC-Vrata I. 1173) on the authority of Viṣṇudharmottara (III. 181.1-3)

54b-61a. On the very same day, the holy rite of Dvādaśāditya Vrata[1] is known to be observed. The intelligent devotee should worship the twelve Ādityas viz : Dhātā, Mitra, Aryamā, Pūṣā, Śakra, Aṁśa, Varuṇa, Bhaga, Tvaṣṭṛ, Vivasvān, Savitṛ and Viṣṇu. Every month, on the twelfth day in the bright half, he should assiduously worship them and spend the year thus. At the conclusion of the holy rite, he should worship twelve gold images in accordance with the injunctions. He should feed twelve excellent Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice. The observer of the holy rite should honour them separately and offer the gold image to each. By performing the Vrata, called Dvādaśāditya Vrata thus, the devotee attains the world of the sun and enjoys the pleasures therein for a long time. Then, he is born on the Earth among human beings as a pious soul, devoid of ailments. Thereafter, thanks to the merit of the Vrata, he shall accomplish the Vrata again (i.e. he shall perform it successfully again) O excellent Brāhmaṇa, thanks to its merit, he pierces the orb of the sun and attains the Brahman which is unsullied, formless and free from mutually clashing pairs (e.g. pleasure, pain etc).

61b-67a. On this very same day is to be observed the Akhaṇḍa Dvādaśī Vrata.[2] The devotee gets the replica of

1. Also called Kāmadeva Vrata in HD. V. i., P. 318 on the authority of CC. Vrata I. 1173.

2. Hemādri on the authority of Viṣṇudharmottara extends this efficacy of removing the Vaikalya (deficiency) in performing penance or even sacrifices (Vrata I. 1117-1124). AP. Ch. 190 limits the efficacy to seven births only (VV. 3 & 6), a view endorsed by Garuḍa P. 118.

Hemādri recommends another Vrata of the same name for the same purpose, but it starts on Āśvina Śu 11. (Ibid. Vrata I. 1103-1105).

Janārdana made in gold. He should worship it with scents and fragrant flowers as well as other things. In his presence, he should feed Brāhmaṇas, twelve in number, every month. He should take food only at night and subdue his sense-organs. At the end of the year he worships that image in accordance with the injunctions and gives it to the preceptor alongwith a cow. He should pray thus: "O Lord, if, in the previous hundred births, any Vrata performed by me is broken, may it be rendered unbroken, thanks to your Grace." Then he should feed twelve leading Brāhmaṇas with milk puddings alongwith sugar-candies. He should give gold pieces as Dakṣiṇā and make obeisance to them. O Brāhmaṇa, after observing the Vrata thus and propitiating Janārdana, he shall go to Viṣṇu's great region by means of a golden aerial car.

67b-76a. On the twelfth day in the dark half of the month Pauṣa, the holy rite Rūpavrata[1] (vrata for beauty) is said (to be observed). On the previous Daśamī day, the observer of the holy rite should duly take his bath and collect cow-dung. O Brāhmaṇa, it should be of a white cow or that of a cow of a single breast. It should be gathered from the ether itself (i.e. before it reaches the ground after being evacuated by the cow). O Nārada, he should make one hundred and eight balls out of the dung, and dry them in the sun after keeping them in a copper vessel or a mud pot. On the Ekādaśī day he should observe fast and worship the image of Viṣṇu made of gold, in accordance with the injunctions. He should keep awake during the night by means of very auspicious songs, instrumental music, recitation of hymns, japas, etc. On the Dvādaśī day, in the morning, he should place the image on a vessal full of gingelly seeds. This latter vessel should be placed on a pot full of water. He should then worship it by means of all Upacāras. By means of attrition (or friction of wooden pieces) and other methods he should kindle a fresh fire. The intelligent devotee shall worship duly and perform Homas with the cow-dung balls one by one, alongwith gingelly seeds and ghee, after uttering the twelvesyllabled Mantra belonging to Viṣṇu viz. Oṁ namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya. When hundred and eight oblations are completed he should perform Pūrṇāhuti. With an affable mind and great pleasure, he should feed Brāhmaṇas with milk puddings. He should offer the image to the preceptor alongwith the water pot. In accordance with his ability, he should give Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas. He should bid them farewell after bowing to them. By performing the holy rite respectfully, the devotee, whether it is a man or a women, attains the blessedness of great beauty. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

1. A special Vrata in the NP not recorded by Kane.

76b-85. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, the holy rite of Sujanma-Dvādaśī Vrata,[1] (the holy rite for the attainment of good birth and pedigree) is to be observed. After taking the holy bath the devotee takes the vow of Vrata for the whole year. After drinking water from a cow's horn, at the outset, he should circumambulate the cow. Thereafter, every month, on the twelfth day in the bright half, he should offer charitable gifts (as follows) :— A Prastha measure of ghee, four Prasthas of grains and barley, two Ratikās (i.e. the weight of the seed of the Gunja plant (Abrus precatorious) of gold (1-16) grains, half an Āḍhaka of gingelly seeds, a potful of milk (or water) a Māṣa weight of silver, and sweet cooked-rice till satiety; umbrella and half a Māṣa of gold, a Prastha measure of excellent molasses; a Pola weight of Sandal, a fine thin cloth measuring five Hastas, these are the articles to be given as charitable gifts month by month. He should feed himself on the following :— cow's urine, water, ghee, four kinds of green vegetables well cooked, cooked barley grains mixed with curds, gingelly seeds with ghee and sugar, water from the Kuśa grass and milk. After performing this holy rite for a year, the devotee should get the image of the sun made in gold. He should place it on a flat copper vessel, worship it in accordance with the injunctions, and give it to the preceptor alongwith a cow. He should then bow down to him. Then twelve Brāhmaṇas should be fed and presented with the due Dakṣiṇās. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs the holy rite thus, takes his birth in a noble family. He shall be free from ailments. He shall be affluent in wealth and food-grains. His sense-organs shall be unimpaired (i.e. he shall be sound in body).

1. Hemādri recommends this vrata on the authority of Viṣṇu-dharmottara P. (CC-Vrata. 1174-75).

86-89a. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, O Brāhmaṇa, the devotee shall duly and devoutly worship the Śālagrāma stone and place a piece of gold in its mouth. It is then placed in a silver vessel and covered with two white cloths. The devotee should then give this to a Vedic Scholar and thereafter feed him with milk-pudding along with sugar-candy and ghee (in a quantity) that is beneficial. After observing this, he should take only a single morsel a day. He should be interested in meditating on Viṣṇu. After enjoying all desired pleasures here, he attains the abode of Viṣṇu.

89b-91a. On the twelfth day in the bright half of the final month (i.e. Phālguna), the devotee should worship the golden image of Hari with scents, fragrant flowers etc. He should then give it to a Brāhmaṇa, knower of the Vedas. After feeding Brāhmaṇas, twelve in number, and giving them Dakṣiṇā, he should bid them farewell; thereafter, he should take food alongwith his kinsmen.

91b-92. The following eight Dvādaśīs are days on which one should observe fast as they remove sins. The Dvādaśīs are Trispṛśā, Unmīlinī, Pakṣavardhinī, Vañjulī, Jayā, Vijayā, Jayantī and Aparājitā.

Śrī Nārada said :

93. O holy Brāhmaṇa, what is the characteristic feature of these Dvādaśīs ? What is the benefit thereof ? Kindly explain these things to me as well as other things that may also be equally meritorious.

Sūta said :

94. On being asked thus by Nārada, Sanātana, the excellent Brāhmaṇa sage praised his brother, a great devotee of the Lord and said :

Sanātana said :

95. O brother, the question has been pertinently put by you who clear the doubts of good men. I shall recount the characteristics and the benefit of the great Dvādaśīs separately.

(1) Tri-spṛśā :

96. If Ekādaśī ceases to be, before the sunrise, the Dvādaśī is called Trispṛśā (touching three[1].) It is highly benevolent.

97. O Nārada, he who observes fast on this day and worships Govinda, certainly attains the benefit of a thousand horse-sacrifices.

(ii) Un-milini :

98. If at the Aruṇodaya time (dawn), the Ekādaśī Tithi is over-lapped by Daśamī, that day is eschewed and fast is observed on the following Dvādaśī day (This is called Unmīlinī – that which opens).

99. If on the Unmīlinī day, the devotee worships Vāsudeva perfectly in accordance with the injunctions, he derives the benefit of a thousand Rājasūya-sacrifices.

(iii) Vañjulikā :

100-102. When at the time of sunrise, the night touches Ekādaśī, it shall be avoided and the subsequent Dvādaśī which is called Vañjulikā[2] shall be the day on which the devotee shall fast always. On this day, the devotee should worship Lord Saṁkarṣaṇa with scents and other Upacāras devoutly. He is the great Lord who bestows fearlessness or Mokṣa on all. This great Dvādaśī yields the benefit of all Kratus i.e. sacrifices. It is said to be the remover of all sins. It bestows all riches.

1. Three tithis are 'touched' on this day: Ekādaśi before sunrise, Dvādaśī all the day and Trayodaśī in the last part of that night. Hence the name Tri-spṛśā.

2. This (Vañjulikā) dvādaśī exists the whole of one civil day (from sunrise to sunset) and extends over the next day, so that one can fast and have pāraṇā on the same Tithi—vide Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 48, Smṛti Kaustubha 252-253.

103-104. O Brāhmaṇa, when Kuhu (new moon) and Rākā (full Moon) become increased (i.e are of a longer duration), the Dvādaśī is called Pakṣavardhanikā (that which increases the duration of fortnight) and it is highly beneficial. On that day the devotee should worship Lord Pradyumna, the Lord of the Universe, the bestower of all prosperity and the increaser of direct sons and grandsons.

105. If, in the bright half, Dvādaśī coincides with the constellation Maghā it is called Jayā.[1] It conquers all enemies.

106. On this day, the devotee should worship Lord Aniruddha, the husband of Ramā, the bestower of all cherished desires of men and the granter of all blessedness.

107-108. If, in the bright half, Dvādaśī coincides with the constellation Śravaṇa, it is called Vijayā. On that day the devotee should worship Gadādhara, the bestower of all happiness for ever, the greatest resort for all pleasures. O Brāhmaṇa, by observing fast on that day, a man shall attain the benefit of pilgrimage of all holy centres.

109. If, in the bright half, Dvādaśī coincides with the constellation of which Brahmā is the presiding deity [Rohiṇī ?] it is highly meritorious. It is remembered by the name 'Jayantī'.

110-111a. On this day the devotee should worship Lord Vāmana the bestower of Siddhis on men. O leading Brāhmaṇa, if fast is observed on this day, it yields the benefit of all Vratas.

If yields the benefit of all charitable gifts; it yields worldly pleasures and salvation.

111b-113. If, in the bright half, Dvādaśī coincides with the constellation Puṣya it is called Aparājitā. It is the

1. The NP associates the following Dvādaśīs in the bright halves of the month with the following Nakṣatras coinciding on that day :

N. of Dvādaśī	Nakṣatra
Jayā	Maghā
Vijayā	Śravaṇa
Jayantī	Rohiṇī
Aparājitā	Puṣya

Expert opinions differ. For example Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 48 associates the constellation Puṣya with Jayā, Punarvasū with Jayantī.

bestower of all knowledge. On this day the devotee should worship Lord Nārāyaṇa, devoid of ailments, the cause of liberation (severance) from the bondage of worldly existence, the ocean of perfect knowledge. O Brāhmaṇa, by the observance of fast alone on this day, people will be liberated.

114. If, Dvādaśī in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha coincides with the constellation Anurādhā, two Vratas must be observed. There is no fault since the presiding deity is the same.

115. Similarly, in the bright half of the month Bhādrapada, if Ekādaśī coincides with the constellation Śravaṇa and if Dvādaśī coincides with the constellation Revatī in the bright half of the month of Kārttika, two Vratas (viz. Ekādaśī and Dvādaśī are to be observed.

116-117. O leading Brāhmaṇa, in cases other than these, only one meal is taken on Dvādaśī day. This is the natural Vrata laid down and it is destructive of sins. Since the Vrata of Ekādaśī is always in conjunction with that of Dvādaśī no rite of Udyāpana is laid down. This Vrata has to be performed throughout one's life.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTYTWO

The Vratas to be observed on Trayodaśī (thirteenth day of the lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. Henceforth, therefore, I shall relate to you comprehensively the Vratas to be observed on Trayodaśī days (i.e. thirteenth day of lunar fortnights). On observing these Vratas with devotion, the man becomes elegant and highly blessed in the world.

2-3a. On the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, an image of Madana is made with sandal paste. After worshipping it assiduously, the devotee should waft it with a fan. Kāma excited thereby causes the multiplication of sons and grandsons.

3b-4. The worship of Anaṅga too is to be celebrated on this day. O leading sage, understand it. The devotee should draw the figure of Anaṅgas on a wooden plank with saffron, turmeric and red powder. He should be depicted as endowed with the love of Rati, smart and elegant and holding the flowery arrows and bow.

5. At midday, he should worship Kāmadeva, Vasanta (presiding deity of the spring), Vājivaktra (the horse-faced Lord Viṣṇu) and the bull-bannered Lord Śiva with devotion, by means of scents, garlands, ornaments and silken garments.

6-8. He should propitiate them with various kinds of foodstuffs. O Nārada, in the meantime he repeats this Mantra "Obeisance to Māra, Kāma, the deity of Kāmadeva, the exciter of the minds of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and Indra." Then in front of him, he should worship Aṅganāpatī (the husband of a woman) with devotion, garments, garlands, ornaments and other things. He should regard that he (the Brāhmaṇa so worshipped) is Kāma himself. He should then worship a Brāhmaṇa couple with scents, garments and ornaments.

9. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs the great festival thus, every year, becomes always delighted and well-nourished at the advent of the spring.

10-12a. Or he should worship the following (twelve forms of Kāma month by month till the year comes to a close : Madana, Hṛdbhava, Kāma, Manmatha, Ratipriya, Anaṅga, Kandarpa, (the god with the epithet) Makaradhvaja, Kusumāyudha, Manobhava, Viṣameṣu and Mālatīpriya. O Brāhmaṇa he should worship these twelve forms of Kāmadeva.

12b-13. The charitable gift of a she-goat is also recommended. After taking a holy dip in the river in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee should give milch goat to an indigent householder. Thanks to this charitable gift, he is not reborn in this world.

14. If this Trayodaśī coincides with Saturday, it is remembered as Mahāvāruṇī. If the devotee is able to get an opportunity to take bath in the Gaṅgā, it is more efficacious than a crore such baths at the juncture of solar eclipses.

15. This is an auspicious combination in regard to the worship of Kāma, viz : the constellation of Śatabhiṣak, Saturday and the bright half of the month of Caitra. It is famous by the name of Mahāmahā.[1] It yields salvation to a crore of the members of his family.

16-18a. On the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha, the holy rite of Kāmadevavrata is to be observed. The devotee should observe fast and worship Kāma with scents etc. Thereafter, every month, on the thirteenth day in the bright halves, he should perform the holy rite in the same manner. At the end of the year, in order to achieve the Sāṅgatva (the status of having the complete fulfilment of the Vrata) of the holy rite, he should give a cow bedecked with ornaments to a Brāhmaṇa after duly honouring him.

18b-22a. The holy rite of a Daurbhāgya-Śamana-Vrata[2] (i.e. the holy rite for quelling misfortunes) is to be observed on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha. The devotee should take the holy dip in the river water and worship the following three plants growing in clean spots : the white Mandāra, the white Arka, (the sun-plant) and the red Karavīra (the oleander). Gazing at the sun in the sky, he should utter this mantra and pray : "O Mandāra, O Arka, O Karavīra, you are all born in the family of the sun. Worshipped by me, quell my misfortune; obeisance be to you all." If any one devotedly worships the three plants thus every year, his misfortune is quelled. No doubt need be entertained in this regard.

22b-28a. On the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha, the devotee should take in only one meal a day. According to his ability, he should get the image of Umā

1. The complete name of the Vrata is Mahāmahā Vāruṇī vide HD. V. i. 405-406.

2. This Vrata shows how the cult of 'tree-worship' of Pre-Aryans in India was observed in Hinduism. A number of trees e.g. The Pippala (Aśvattha), Vaṭa Bilva, Tulasi-Aśoka (vide VV. 41-45 below) and others have been firmly established as 'deities' in Puranic Hinduism.

and Maheśvara made in gold, silver or clay. The goddess and the Lord of the universe are represented as seated respectively on a lion and on a bull. O Nārada, the images are installed and consecrated in a temple or in a cowpen or in the house of a Brāhmaṇa, by the divine Mantras. Then the worship is continued for five days and the Vrata (vow) of taking a single meal is kept up. On the Tṛtīyā (third) day, the devotee takes his bath in the morning and worships the deities once again. The images are to be given to a Brāhmaṇa who is a master of the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas (ancillaries of Vedas). This Vrata is continued from year to year for full five years. At its end, he should give those images (to a Brāhmaṇa) alongwith a pair of cows, If the devotee, whether a man or a woman, performs this auspicious Vrata thus, he never experiences a break in the conjugal love in the course of seven births.

28b-32. The auspicious, holy rite of Ratikāma-vrata is to be observed on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa. It prevents widowhood of ladies. It is conducive to the increase in the number of children, O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the virgin or the woman devotee observes fast. The images of Rati and Kāma are made of copper, clay, gold or silver and placed in a similar vessel. She should then properly (according to injunctions) worship them with scents etc. Then she invites a Brāhmaṇa couple for the following Caturdaśī day. After honouring them and feeding them, she should give them images alongwith monetary gifts. This excellent Vrata is continued for fourteen years. For completing the Vrata, the images are to be given along with a pair of cows.

33-40. The holy rite of go-tri-rātra[1] is to be observed on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada. The image of Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa is made of gold or silver. On an auspicious Maṇḍala (mystic diagram) of a lotus of eight petals, the image is to be placed on a pedestal covered with a cloth, after bathing the image with Pañcāmṛta. He should duly worship the deity with scents and other things. After the rite of waving the light, (Ārātrika) he should make a gift of a pot of water and cooked rice. This rite is performed for three days. At the conclusion of the Vrata, he should worship the deity for a month. O Nārada, after gathering enough wealth, he should offer it as gift alongwith this Mantra :— "When the great ocean was being churned, five cows were born. Nandā is in the middle of them. Repeated Obeisance to that cow." After circumambulating the cow, he should give it to a Brāhmaṇa with this Mantra :— "May cows be in front of me. May cows be behind me. May cows be on my sides. I stay in the midst of the cows." Thereafter, he should duly honour a Brāhmaṇa couple and feed them. After honouring them suitably, the devotee should give them an image of Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa. One shall obtain from the holy rite of Gotrirātravrata, the same benefit as one obtains by performing thousands of horse-sacrifices and hundreds of Rājasūyas.

1. Kane records three varieties of Go-tri-rātra Vrata out of which this is the second and is described by Hemādri (Vrata II. 293-303). It is a synthesis of Viṣṇu-worship and cow-worship.

41-45. The holy rite of Tri-rātāśoka-Vrata[1] is to be observed on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina. The replica of the Aśoka tree is made in gold. The woman devotee observes fast. After worshipping the image in accordance with the injunctions, she should circumambulate it for a hundred and eight times every day. O Brāhmaṇa, she should repeat this mantra with respect—"O Aśoka, formerly you have been created by Hara, the merciful deity ! You are the cause of rendering help to the whole world. O favourite one of Śiva, be gracious unto me." On the third day thereafter, she should worship the bull emblemed deity on that tree, in accordance with the injunctions. A Brāhmaṇa should be fed and given this as a gift. The woman who observed the holy rite thus, is never visited by widowhood. She will be blessed with sons, grandsons, etc. She will also be the great beloved of her husband.

1. This is an amalgamation of the ancient cult of tree-worship and Śaivism. This blesses one with Saubhāgya (life on one's husband) and progeny. Kane records a number of Saubhāgya Vratas (HD. V. i. 455-57) but this is not included therein.

46-47. The devotee should take only one meal on the thirteenth day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika, and with great concentration, he should light an oil lamp and assiduously worship it. Thereafter, he should keep it outside his front door saying "May Yama be pleased with me". O leading Brāhmaṇa, if this is done, one is not afflicted by Yama.

48-51 O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should take a single meal on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika. At sunset, he should take bath again and observing silence, light a thousand, a hundred or a row of thirty-two lamps for Śiva. O Brāhmaṇa, he should do so with great concentration. He should light the lamp with ghee. With scents and other things he should worship Śiva. O Nārada, he should propitiate the Lord with fruits of various kinds and other items of Naivedya. Then, he should eulogise Śiva, the Lord of the Devas, with the following hundred names.[1] Those names, the bestowers of all desired benefits, are being detailed (as follows) :

52. Obeisance to Rudra, the terrible, to the bluenecked God, to the Creator, to one with matted hair, to the Lord of the Devas, bow to Vyomakeśa (one whose tresses constitute the firmament.)

53. Hail to the bull-emblemed one, to Soma (God accompanied by Umā), obeisance to Somanātha. Obeisance to Digambara (i.e. one with the quarters for garments i.e. Naked) ; Obeisance to Bhṛṅga; Obeisance to the deity who causes plentitude.

54. Bow to the deity full of penance (Tapas). Obeisance to the pervaded one. Obeisance to Śipiviṣṭa (pervaded by rays)

1. This 'Century of Rudra's names' bears a strong influence of the Fifth Prapāṭhaka in the IV Kāṇḍa of the Taittirīya Saṁhitā, popularly known as Rudrādhyāya. The so called Namakas beginning with namas te Rudra manyave etc. have subsequently strongly influenced the 'century of names' and 'Thousand of names' of Rudra or god Śiva first, then Viṣṇu down to a river like the Gaṅgā.

It is significant that the author of the NP is not a fanatic Vaiṣṇava like his later descendants in the south. He treats fairly both the deities, as they are but two names of the Supreme Deity, Para Brahman.

Salutations to one fond of serpents. Obeisance to Vyāla. and to the Lord of serpents (Vyāla).

55. Hail to the supporter of the Earth, obeisance to (the god of the form of) Vyoma (ether), to the Lord of Paśus and to the lion that destroyed the three Puras (cities) (of asuras). Obeisance to Śārdūla (Tiger), Obeisance to Ṛṣabha (the bull, the chief).

56. Obeisance to Mita (the measured one), to Mitanātha (to the Lord of the measured ones); to Siddha (one who has realised the soul), to Parameṣṭhin (one stationed in the highest being), Obeisance to one who is sung about by the Vedas; to one who is concealed in the Vedas; Obeisance to one who is worthy of being kept as a secret in the Vedas.

57. Hail to the long one, to one of a long form, to one of large objects; to the greater one (than all); obeisance to the deity in whom the universe is installed; obeisance to one of the form of the sky.

58. Obeisance to one who causes welfare; obeisance to one of special nature; obeisance to Śiṣṭa (the disciplined one); to Paramātman (the reatest soul), to one who wears the elephant's hide and to one who split the demon Andhaka.

59. Obeisance to one who is blue, red and white (in complexion), to one who is the favourite of Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa; to the Lord fond of devotion, to the destroyer of the Yajña, to the unchanging one.

60. Hail to you, O Mahādeva, to Maheśa; to Hara, to the three-eyed one; obeisance to Triveda (one described in three Vedas). Repeated obeisance to one who is the embodiment of the Vedas.

61. Obeisance to the Artha (wealth), to one whose form is Artha, to one who is in the highest reality; obeisance to one whose form is the Universe, to the Universe itself, to one who is verily the Lord of the Universe.

62. Obeisance to Śaṅkara, to Kāla, to one of the form of the units of Kāla, obeisance to Arūpa (one without form), to Virūpa (the deformed), to the subtlest of the subtle.

63. Obeisance to you the resident of the cremation ground, to the wearer of the hide garment; to one with the moon for crest jewel, obeisance to one who has resorted to Rudrabhūmi (i.e. cremation ground).

64-66. Obeisance to Durga (very difficult to know), to Durgapāra (one who is on the other side of Saṁsāra), to the witness of the limbs of Durgā, obeisance to one of the form of Liṅga, to Liṅga and to the Lord of Liṅgas, obeisance to one of the form of Prowess; Obeisance to one whose object is prowess. Repeated salutes to the cause of causes, to you, the conqueror of Death, to one of the form of the self-born; obeisance to the three-eyed one; to the bluenecked, obeisance to one full of splendour; to one united to Gaurī and the cause of auspiciousness.

67. O Brāhmaṇa, this is the century of names glorifying the attributes of the Pināka-bearing Lord. The devotee should recite this, make circumambulation and go back to his own abode.

68. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing this holy rite, the devotee enjoys all worldly pleasures here, thanks to the grace of Mahādeva. In the end he shall attain the region of Śiva.

69-71. On the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee should duly worship Anaṅga who had become so, due to his contact with Śiva. He should worship him thrice or once per day. After worshipping with scents and other Upacāras in accordance with the injunctions, he should feed a Brāhmaṇa couple in a pot or on an auspicious cloth. Then, he should give them Dakṣiṇā and take only a single meal. If this vrata is duly performed, O prominent Brāhmaṇa, the devotee becomes the object of blessedness on Earth, thanks to the grace of Mahādeva.

72. The devotee shall worship Hari—Acyuta on the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa. For the achievement of everything, he should give a pot of ghee to a leading Brāhmaṇa.

73-75a. O Brāhmaṇa, the holy rite of Māgha snāna is to be observed for three days beginning with the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Māgha. It is conducive to the attainment ofmany desired benefits. On this earth even with a thousand horse-sacrifices, that benefit cannot be attained, which one gets on taking the holy dip in Prayāga for these three days in the month of Māgha. The holy dip, Japa, Homa and charitable gifts on this day yields endless benefits.

75b-84. On the thirteenth day in the bright half of the month of Phālguna, the devotee observes fast. After bowing to the Lord of the Universe at the outset, he performs the holy rite of Dhanada Vrata.[1] The picture of the great king, the Lord of the Yakṣas, is painted in colours on a cloth. The devotee worships the Lord with scents and other Upacāras with noble emotions of devotion in the mind. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, in this same manner, he should worship the deity every month on the thirteenth day in the bright half, after observing fast or taking a single meal. At the end of the Vrata he gets the image of the Lord ofwealth made along with the image of the lord of Nidhis (Treasure) made in gold. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, with all the sixteen Upacāras, with the ablutions with Pañcāmṛta etc. and with different kinds of Naivedyas, he should with great concentration and devotion worship the deity. O Brāhmaṇa, thereafter, he adorns a cow with its calf by means of cloths, garlands, scents and ornaments. He then gifts it away to a knower of the Vedas. He feeds twelve or thirteen Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice. The preceptor is propitiated with clothes and other things and the gold image (Kubera) is given to him. According to his ability, he should give Dakṣiṇā to the Brāhmaṇas, bow to them and bid farewell to them. The intelligent devotee, thereafter, takes his food alongwith friends and kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, if the Vrata is performed thus, the indigent devotee attains great wealth. He rejoices in the world. He becomes well-known on the Earth as another Rājarāja (King of Kings or Kubera).

1. This is the Dhana Vrata given in the Viṣṇu-dharmottara III. 184. 1-3 and quoted by Hemādri as Nanda-Vrata. What Hemādri calls Dhanada Vrata (Vrata I. 1161-62), begins on the 11th of Mārgaśīrṣa Śu. though both have Kubera as the deity to be propitiated.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTYTHREE

Description of the Vratas to be observed on Caturdaśi (fourteenth day in a lunar fortnight)

Sanātana said :

1. O Nārada, listen. I shall recount to you the holy rites to be observed on the Caturdaśī (fourteenth) days (of lunar fortnights). On observing these holy rites, a man shall attain his cherished desires in this world.

2-4a. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, magnificent worship of Śiva should be performed with saffron, agallochum, sandal paste, scents, and other things, clothes and ornaments. Erecting the canopy, the banner and the umbrellas, the mothers are to be worshipped. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing the worship thus alongwith the observance of fast or taking a single meal on that day, the man obtains merit more than that of a horse-sacrifice, on this Earth.

4b-5a. On this very same day, the devotee should perform Damanārcā (worship by means of Damanaka leaves and fragrant flowers). When the Vrata is concluded the devotee should dedicate the fruit to Śiva of auspicious form.

5b-8a. On the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Vaiśākha, the intelligent devotee should observe fast. At sunset he should take bath and wear clean white clothes and worship Liṅga with scents and other Upacāras and the leaves of a Bilva tree. After giving invitation to a prominent Brāhmaṇa, he should take food on the next day. O excellent Brāhmaṇa on all Caturdaśīs in the dark halves of the months, the holy rites Śivarātra Vrata should be performed by one who wishes for wealth and progeny.

8b-13. The devotee should observe the holy Vrata of Śrī-Nṛsiṁha[1] on the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha. If he is physically capable, he should observe fast.

1. VV. 8b-13 describe what is popularly known as Nṛsiṁha Jayanti as Viṣṇu manifested himself on Vaiśākha Śu 14 as Narasiṁha in the evening on Svāti Nakṣatra. The NP. calls this simply as Nṛsiṁha-Vrata, a confusing designation, as we have Nṛsiṁha Vratas on 8th, 12th and the 13th Tithis of different months (vide HD. V. I, pp. 328-329).

Otherwise, he should take a single meal on that day. At sunset he should worship Nṛsiṁha, the slayer of the Daityas, with all the sixteen Upacāras and ablutions with Pañcāmṛta. Then, O Nārada, with the following Mantra, he should crave forgiveness of the Lord—"O Divine Lion with the mane resembling molten gold, with eyes shining like fire and with the touch of claws sharper than thunderbolt, obeisance be to you." After praying thus to the Lord of the Devas, the observer of holy rite should lie down on the bare ground. He should subdue his sense-organs and anger and should eschew all worldly pleasures. O Brāhmaṇa, he who duly performs this excellent holy rite every year, attains all pleasures and (after death) Hari's region.

14-15. O leading sage, the pilgrimage to Oṁkāreśvara is also to be undertaken on this day. The worship of that deity is very difficult to be obtained. The vision of deity is destructive of sins. Of what avail is much talk ? Whatever is accessible, the worship of the deity, meditation, Japa or the vision of the deity is the bestower of perfect knowledge and salvation.

16-18a. On this day, the holy rite of Liṅga-Vrata is to be performed. It is destructive of sins. Liṅga is bathed in Pañcāmṛta and saffron is smeared over it. Fruits are offered as Naivedyas. Incense, lights, clothes and ornaments are offered duly. He who worships Liṅga made of ground flour, attains worldly pleasures and salvation, thanks to the grace of Mahādeva. This Liṅga is the bestower of achievements of all objects.

18b-19a. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the devotee performs austerities in the midst of five fires, during the day time, at night-fall he should make a gift of a golden cow. This is called Rudravrata[1].

19b-20a. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha, the devotee should worship Śiva by means of the flowers of the season and clime. The man who performs worship thus shall attain all riches.

1. Rudra-Vrata: This is Pañcāgnisādhana. Kane notes another variety HD. V. i. 393-94.

20b-22. The holy rite of Pavitrāropaṇa is to be observed on the fourteenth day of the bright half of the month of Śrāvaṇa. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, that has to be performed in accordance with the injunctions laid down in his own branch of the Veda. He should repeat the Mantra a hundred times and dedicate it to the Goddess. By performing the rite of Pavitrāropaṇa,[1] any person, be it a man or a woman, shall attain worldly pleasures and salvation by the grace of the great Goddess (Mahādevī).

23-27. The excellent holy rite of Ananta Caturdaśī[2] is to be performed on the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada. The devotee should take only a single meal on that day. He cooks the Prastha-measure of ground wheat flour smeared with ghee and mixed with sugar and offers it to Ananta as Naivedya after worshipping him at the outset with scents. The old thread worn round the hand is taken off and thrown into the water. A new thread of silken or cotton cord is taken and fourteen knots are tied. The woman devotee wears this on her left hand and the male devotee on his right hand. After cooking the ground flour, he should give it as gift alongwith Dakṣiṇā. He himself shall take in moderate (quantity of) food. The intelligent devotee should perform this excellent Vrata for twice seven years and then perform Udyāpana (Valedictory) rite.

1. VV. 20b-22 mention the outline of Pavitrāropaṇa Vrata. For details vide HD V. i. 339-40. The NP does not clarify that Pavitra is the sacred thread Yajñopavīta.

2. VV. 23-33a describe Ananta-caturdaśī Vrata. Ananta is a form of Hari. It is a very popular Vrata and is described with slight variations in the procedure in AP. 192. 7-10, the Bhaviṣyottara and Vratārka. Hemādri (Vrata II pp, 26-36) gives an elaborate description of this Vrata quoting the story of Kauṇḍinya and his wife Sītā Kauṇḍinya losing every thing by cutting the Ananta-thread from his wife's hand and regaining it after propitiation of Ananta. Kane (HD. V. I. pp. 151-53) does not clarify how a thread could represent Kṛṣṇa. Ananta is the name of Serpent Śeṣa. Is it an assimilation of the cult of serpent-worship in Brahmanism ?

28-33a. The devotee draws the mystic diagram Sarvato-Bhadra by means of coloured power and grains. O sage, after making it splendid, the devotee places a copper pot over it. The auspicious golden image of Ananta is then placed over the Kalaśa (vessel) of copper and covered with a yellow silken cloth. He shall then worship the image in accordance with the injunctions. He should severally worship Gaṇeśa, Mothers, planets and the ten guardians of the worlds, quarters. He then performs Homa with Haviṣya (cooked rice soaked in ghee) alongwith the Pūrṇāhuti. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, to his preceptor the devotee gives a bed with all adjuncts, a cow and the image of Ananta. With great devotion he should feed fourteen other Brāhmaṇas, with sweet cooked rice, and propitiate them with Dakṣiṇās. He who thus respectfully performs the Ananta Vrata, directly enjoys worldly pleasures and attains salvation by the grace of Ananta.

33b-39a. The holy rite of Kadalī vrata[1] is also to be observed on this day. Listen to its rules of procedure from me. The devotee may be a man or a woman. He should take his bath and worship the plantain tree in the garden by means of scents, fragrant flowers, germinating grains as well as curds, Dūrvā grass, raw rice-grains, lights, clothes and diverse kinds of cooked food. After the worship, the observer of the holy rite should pray with this Mantra : "O plantain tree, who are worshipped by the Apsaras, Amara (divine) virgins and the serpent virgins, O goddess, obeisance be to you. Grant me freedom from ailment in the body and also loveliness." After the prayer the devotee should feed four virgins or Suvāsinīs (married women) ; they should be provided with silken cloth, saffron powder, collyrium and red lac juice. After bowing to them and concluding the observance, he or she should go back to the house. O Brāhmaṇa, if this Vrata is performed thus the devotee obtains excellent conjugal bliss in this world. After death, he shall go to the heavenly world in an aerial chariot.

1. VV 336-39a describe the Kadalī Vrata—wherein the plantain tree is the beauty-giving deity. Hemādri, on the authority of Bhaviṣyottara details it (Vrata II. 132-33). This is another instance of assimilation of the cult of tree worship in Brahmanism.

39b-43a. On the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Āśvina, the Śrāddha rites of the following categories of persons are performed viz. those who are killed by means of poison or weapons; those who are drowned in water, those who are burnt by fire, those who are bitten by serpents or mauled by beasts of prey, those who are killed by thunderbolt and those who murder Brāhmaṇas. They are performed in accordance with the rules laid down in the case of Ekoddiṣṭa Śrāddhas. Brāhmaṇas are fed with sweet cooked rice. The Tarpaṇa rite is performed, mouthfuls of fodder are given to cows and oblations are given to dogs and crows. After performing these rites and the Ācamana rite, the devotee should take his food along with his kinsmen. O Brāhmaṇa, he who performs Śrāddha in this manner alongwith the requisite Dakṣiṇās shall uplift the Pitṛs and go to the eternal world of the Devas.

43b-45. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Āśvina O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the devotee should perfectly worship the image in gold of Dharmarāja[1] with scents etc. After feeding a Brāhmaṇa, the image is given to him. O Nārada, Dharmarāja protects everyone in the world. He who thus performs the excellent rite of gifting away the image of Dharmarāja enjoys all excellent pleasures here and at the behest of Dharmarāja goes to the heaven.

46-47. On the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika, the devotee takes oil bath at the rise of the moon. After the bath he should worship Dharma. The devotee shall attain fearlessness from hell. For the propitiation of Yama, he should light oil lamps at night fall. With great concentration the devotee should place the lamps at the cross-roads or outside the house.

48-52. In the year called Hemalambi, on the fourteenth day in the bright half of the glorious month of Kārttika, against the dawn, Lord Viśveśvara took his bath in the holy waters at the Maṇikarṇikā Tīrtha alongwith the Devas. O leading sage, with Bhasma he applied the Tripundra (three parallel marks on the forehead). He worshipped his own self and performed the Pāśupata rite. Hence on that day, the devotee should perform the great worship of the Liṅga with scents and other things. He should offer worship with the flowers of Droṇa Bilva leaves, Arka flowers Ketakī flowers, fruits and different kinds of Naivedyas. If the Vrata is thus performed and only a single meal is taken on that day, it satisfies Viśveśa. O Nārada, he attains all cherished desires, both here and hereafter.

1. This is not recorded by Kane in HD. V. i.

53-57. On this very day the holy rite of Brahmakūrca Vrata is to be observed by one who wishes for prosperity. Observing fast and controlling the sense-organs, the observer of the vow should drink Pañcagavya at night. The Pañcagavya is made thus :

The urine of a tawny-coloured cow; the dung of a black cow; the milk of a white cow; the curds of a red cow and the ghee of a cow of variegated colours.—all these are taken and mixed together. The devotee then takes his bath in the morning with the water sanctified by Kuśa grass and performs the Tarpaṇa rite to the Devas. After propitiating the Brāhmaṇas, he should himself take his food silently. This is the Brahmakūrca Vrata[1] that destroys all sins. The sin committed during the infancy, youth and old age, is dispelled instantaneously by means of the Brahma-Kūrca vrata and the fast on that day.

58-60a. The holy rite of Pāṣāṇa-Vrata is also to be observed on this day. Listen to it, O Nārada. The devotee observes fast during the day. He cooks ground flour in ghee, shaping it in the form of a brick. During the night, he worships Gaurī with scents and other things and offers the flour-brick cooked in ghee as Naivedya. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, after performing this holy rite in the manner mentioned above, the man attains glory, happiness, conjugal bliss and beauty of form.

60b-63. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa the devotee takes a single meal or abstains from food and performs the holy rite mentioned before. He should make a gold replica of a bull, worship it and give it to a Brāhmaṇa. On the next day, he should get up early in the morning, take his bath and worship Maheśvara accompanied by Umā, with lotus flowers, scents, fragrant garlands and unguents. He should then feed the Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice and propitiate them with Dakṣiṇā etc. O Brāhmaṇa, this is called Śiva Vrata. It is the bestower of worldly pleasures and liberation to the performers, to the instructors, to those who assist, and to those who approve.

1. Brahma-Kūrca is treated here as a Vrata though it is really a Prāyaścitta.

64-66a. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Pauṣa, the holy rite of Virūpākṣavrata is to be observed. The devotee should think thus "I shall attain the presence of Kapardīśvara." Having thought thus, O Brāhmaṇa, he should worship Virūpākṣa Śiva with scents, fragrant garlands, incense, lights, richly prepared cooked rice and obeisances. By giving what is contained therein, the devotee rejoices in the heaven like Deva.

66b-68. On the fourteenth day in the dark half of Māgha is prescribed the holy rite of Yamatapana.[1] Before the sunrise the devotee must take his bath and perform the rite of Tarpaṇa unto Yama with the fourteen names mentioned before (chap. 119 verses 59-90) for the purpose of liberation from all sins. The Tarpaṇa rite is to be performed by means of gingelly seeds, Darbha grass and water. Kṛśara and cooked rice constitute the meal of the Brāhmaṇas. He himself should eat the same with restricted speech in silence.

69-73a. O Brāhmaṇa, the holy rite of Śivarātrī[2] is to be observed on the fourteenth day in the dark half of the last month (i.e Phālguna). The devotee observes fast, even abjuring water, during the day, and worships the deity at night in the self-born Liṅga etc. or the Liṅga made of clay with deep concentration of mind. He worships the Lord with scents and

1. Kane has recorded a number of Śiva Vratas (HD. V. i. pp. 426-427), but this Vrata is different from them.

2. This is the famous Mahāśivarātri-Vrata popular all over India. The NP follows Pūrṇimānta reckoning and thus locates it in Phālguna. This Vrata is highly extolled in Garuḍa P. I-124, SK. P. I-1. 33, Pd. P. VI. 240 and AP. 193. The whole Vrata is discussed in details by Kane HD. V. 1-225-236. As compared with other Purāṇas and digests, the NP. gives a bare outline of the Vrata.

other Upacāras, the leaves of the Bilva, etc., water, incense, lights, recitation of hymns, Japa etc. as well as Naivedyas duly offered. On the next day too the deity is again worshipped with the Upacāras. After feeding Brāhmaṇas with sweet cooked rice, he should give them the requisite Dakṣiṇās and bid farewell to them. By performing the Vrata thus, the man obtains immortal pleasures, thanks to the grace of Mahādeva. He is well-honoured and respected by Devas.

73b-74. On the fourteenth day, in the bright half of the last month, the devotee worships Durgā with great devotion, offering scents and other Upacāras. Thereafter, he feeds the Brāhmaṇas. O Brāhmaṇa, he should take only a single meal on that day. By performing the Vrata of Durgā thus, he derives cherished desires, both here and hereafter, O Nārada.

75-76. The devotee shall observe fast on the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Caitra. By drinking water from a rice-field on the day one derives the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

The general procedure regarding Udyāpana[1] (valedictory rite of conclusion) for all these holy rites is now narrated.

77-79. Fourteen pots with areca nuts, unbroken raw rice-grains and sweet-meats, may be made of copper or clay. They must be fresh and uncracked. The Dakṣiṇās and silken garments should also be placed there. Besides these the following too are to be provided as necessary viz. fourteen bamboo poles, fourteen sacred seats, fourteen vessels and fourteen sacred texts. As for the other things, they should be performed in the manner mentioned before. The devotee should not be stingy in the matter of expenses.

1. VV. 77-79 give the general procedure of the Udyāpana (concluding ceremony) of these Caturdaśī Vratas.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTYFOUR

Exposition of Vratas to be observed on the Full Moon and the New Moon days

Sanātana said :

1. Henceforth, O Nārada, I shall recount to you the holy rite to be observed on the Full Moon day. Listen. On observing these rites the performer of Vratas whether he be a man or a woman, attains series of happiness.

2. O leading Brāhmaṇa, the Full Moon day in the month of Caitra is the day of the inauguration of the Manvantara. On this day, the observer of the Vrata should give a pot of water with cooked rice, for the propitiation of Soma (the Moon).

3. On the full moon day in the month of Vaiśākha, the gift of all articles is the bestower of all things. Certainly, one attains those things which one bestows on a Brāhmaṇa.

4-5a. The holy rite of Dharmarāja Vrata is also to be performed on this day. Listen to it. One should give cooked rice and pot of water to an excellent Brāhmaṇa on the Full Moon day in the month of Vaiśākha. It is conducive to the propitiation of Dharmarāja and it yields the same benefit as the gift of a cow.

5b-7. On this very same day, one should give the hide of a deer alongwith its horn and the hoofs to a Brāhmaṇa alongwith gingelly seeds and gold. They should be covered with clothes. He who gives, in accordance with the prescribed injunctions, the hide of a deer after honouring the scholar who knows the Śāstras, is actually the donor of the whole of the earth consisting of the seven continents, and rejoices in the world of Viṣṇu as long as the moon, sun and stars shine in the firmament.

8. He who gives to prominent Brāhmaṇas pots full of water alongwith gold never meets with sorrow.

9. On the Full Moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha the holy rite of vaṭasāvitrikā[1] is to be observed. The woman devotee

1. VV. 9-12 briefly describe the famous Vaṭa-Sāvitrī-Vrata, the main features of which are sprinkling water at the foot of a banyan tree, observes fast and pours nectar like water at the root of the Vaṭa (Banyan tree).

10. She should encircle with threads the holy tree and circumambulate it one hundred and eight times. Thereafter, she should pray to the divine and highly chaste lady Sāvitrī :

11. "O Mother Sāvitrī, who considered your husband a deity, you are the mother of the Universe. You are worthy of being worshipped by the whole universe. O gentle lady present in this Vaṭa tree, obeisance to you. Grant me nonseparation from my husband.

12. After praying thus she goes home. On the next day, she shall feed Suvāsinīs (married women whose husbands are alive) and take food herself. She shall be blessed with conjugal bliss.

13-15. The holy rite of Go-padma[1] is prescribed for performance on the full moon day in the month of Āṣāḍha. After taking his bath the devotee meditates on Hari thus :

"He has four arms and a huge body. He has the lustre of gold. He appears beautiful with the conch, discus, iron circumambulating the tree one hundred and eight times and weaving a thread round it all the while, prayer of Sāvitrī (associated with the tree) for sparing oneself from widowhood and feeding Suvāsinīs the next day after which the lady observer of the Vrata breaks the fast.

This Vrata is observed on Jyeṣṭha Kṛ. 30 also (infra verse 85). The story of Sāvitrī who brought back her husband from the god of death is extremely popular (vide Mbh.-Vana Chs. 293-299, Mt. P. Chs. 208-214 the SK. P.-Prabhāsa Ch. 166). The Vrata consists of fast for three nights which the NP. fails to prescribe. Its mention in the AP. 194. 5-8 shows that the Vrata was in vogue before the 10th Cent. A.D. It is said that the Vrata is called Vaṭa-Sāvitrī as it was under the shade of a Vaṭa tree that Satyavān (Sāvitrī's husband) went and took hold of its branch before he collapsed.

The banyan tree with its spreading branches symbolises the spread of one's race. Perhaps pre-Aryans worshipped this tree for increase and spread of their race and the story of Sāvitrī came to be associated with it while it was being Brahminised.

1. VV. 13-17 describe the Go-Padma Vrata. The NP. fails to justify the title Go-Padma of this Viṣṇu Vrata. The girl or woman has to draw 33 figures of cows foot-print everyday during the Vrata. Hence its title Gopadma. For details vide VRJ., pp. 301-302.

club, lotus, goddess Lakṣmī and Garuḍa. He is served by sages, Devas, Yakṣas, Gandharvas and Kinnaras."

(After meditation) he should worship the Lord by means of the Puruṣa Sūkta, and with scents and other Upacāras.

16 He should propitiate the preceptor with clothes, ornaments and other things as well as with affectionate mind. He should feed Brāhmaṇas and others with sweet cooked rice according to his capacity.

17. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing this Vrata, the devotee undoubtedly, derives his cherished desires both here and hereafter, thanks to the grace of the Lord of (Kamalā) Lakṣmī.

18-21. The holy rite of Kokilā Vrata is to be observed on this very same day. The rules of procedure are now described. The observance is from this full moon to the next full moon in the month of Śrāvaṇa. The woman should take her bath in the water outside the house (i.e. in a river or a tank). She should meditate on goddess Pārvatī as follows : "Gaurī has the form of a cuckoo with golden wings, jewelled eyes, louts-like face, having the lustre of coral and the complextion of musk. She is born in the heavenly Nandana Park, seated on mango and Campaka trees cooking out exquisite song." Her figure is painted in colours on cloth. The devotee worships her every day with scents and other things.

22. O Brāhmaṇa, when the Vrata is concluded, she devoutly should give a Brāhmaṇa the image of the goddess in gold or ground flour of gingelly seeds, alongwith a gold piece as Dakṣiṇā. The following Mantra is uttered.

23. "O Goddess Kokilā, born in the park of Citraratha, O beloved wife of Hara, you have been worshipped and given to a Brāhmaṇa. Be the cause of happiness to me."

24. He should then feed the Brāhmaṇa and thirty Sanyāsinīs if possible, otherwise one, and give clothes etc. and Dakṣiṇā in accordance with her capacity. After bowing to them she should bid farewell to them.

25. O Nārada, the woman who performs this excellent Kokilāvrata attains happiness and conjugal bliss in the course of seven births.

26-28. On the full moon day in the month of Śrāvaṇa is the holy rite of Vedopākarma[1] (i.e. inauguration of Vedic studies). On this day the rite of Tarpaṇa unto the Devás, sages and the Pitṛs is to be performed through the Mantras of the Yajurveda. (The followers of the Yajurveda perform this rite of Upākarma on the day). The followers of Ṛgveda (i.e. Bahvṛcas) perform this on the Caturdaśī day and the followers of the Sāmaveda perform this in the month of Bhādrapada (on the Caturthī day). The worship of the sages is performed in the manner laid down in one's own Śākhā (branch of the Vedas). The Rakṣā (holy string) should be tied round the hand in accordance with the injunctions.

29. White Mustard seeds, unbroken raw rice-grains and black mustard are washed in water kept in a bell-metal vessel and then tied in a red silk cloth with a saffron-smeared thread. The devotee then worships Devas and prays to Viṣṇu and others. Delighted in mind, the devotee should lay down to a Brāhmaṇa and get the thread tied round his wrist by him.

30-31. Thereafter, he gives Dakṣiṇā to Brāhmaṇas and begins the study of the Vedas. After ritualistically dismissing the seven sages, he should wear a new sacred thread made by himself and coloured with saffron, etc. According to his capacity he should feed the prominent Brāhmaṇas and he himself should take only a single meal on that day.

32. O Brāhmaṇa, if this Vrata is performed, it makes atonement for all omissions and commissions in the Vedic study. If the Vedic rites are forgotten or are performed in contravention of the injunctions, this holy rite rectifies it.

33-34. The holy rite of Umāmaheśvara Vrata is to be performed on the full moon day in the month of Bhādrapada.

1. Vedopākarma is simply upākarma and means opening, beginning. Nārāyaṇa on Āśvalāyana Gr. S. III. 5.1 states that upākarma or upākaraṇa is the ceremony marking the (re-) beginning of Vedic Studies. Various dates and varieties of details of the upākarma are given by Kane in HD. II. ii. pp. 807-818. Due to its performance on Śravaṇa Nakṣatra in the month of Śrāvaṇa, it came to be known as Śrāvaṇo in Marathi. The tradition of Vedic studies is lost and what the elderly people do now is to change their Yajñopavīta on this day with or without the performance of the rite of Upākarma. The ritual given by the NP is different from the traditional one prescribed in the gṛhya sūtras.

The devotee takes a single meal on the previous day i.e. Caturdaśī day, assiduously worships Śiva. With palms joined in reverence he should pray thus : "O Lord, I shall perform holy Vrata (vow) tomorrow." After intimating thus to the Lord, the devotee takes up the excellent Vrata.

35. At night, he sleeps near the deity and gets up in the last watch (Yāma) of the night. After carrying out the routine such as voiding of excrement and washing, etc. the devotee applies Bhasma and wears Rudrākṣa.

36. He should worship Śaṅkara correctly with different kinds of Upacāras, fragrant flowers, leaves of Bilva, incense lights and diverse kinds of Naivedya.

37. Then the scholarly devotee should observe fast till sunset. After the moonrise, he worships the deity once again and keeps awake at night.

38-41. Carefully and alertly, the devotee should perform this rite for fifteen years. In the last year, in the course of its Utsarga rite (valedictory and concluding rite), he should get two gold images made, that of Umā and that of Maheśa. He should get ready fifteen excellent posts made of gold, silver or clay. In one of the pots should be placed the two images covered with a cloth. He should bathe them in Pañcāmṛta first and then in pure water. Thereafter he shall worship deity with the sixteen Upacāras. Then fifteen Brāhmaṇas are fed with sweet cooked rice and Dakṣiṇās too are given.

42-43a. He should give pots to the preceptor. Each of the pots is accompanied by a Mūrti (image) of the Lord. By performing this holy rite named Umā Maheśvara, the devotee becomes famous in the world and the receptacle of all riches.

43b-44. On this very same day, the holy rite of Śakra-Vrata also is to be observed. Early in the morning, the devotee takes his bath and worships the ruler of the Devas, in accordance with the injunctions, with scents and other Upacāras and different articles of Naivedya in heaps.

45. Then O, Brāhmaṇa, he should duly feed the invited Brāhmaṇas and others who had come as visitors. He shall feed the indigent and the helpless also.

46. O Brāhmaṇa, this Śakravrata must be performed every year by a king or any other rich man who wishes for plenty of food-grains.

47-48. The holy rite named Kojāgara[1] is to be observed on the full moon day in the month of Āśvina. The devotee takes the holy dip in accordance with the injunctions. He observes fast and subdues his sense-organs. A gold image of goddess Lakṣmī is placed in a pot made of copper or clay. It is covered with a cloth and worshipped with different kinds of Upacāras.

49. In the evening when the moon has risen, he should light lamps made of gold, silver or clay after filling them with ghee.

50-51. They should be a hundred thousands, fifty thousand, ten thousand, one thousand or hundred in number. Milk puddings are prepared in a huge quantity with plenty of sugar and ghee. They shall be kept in many vessels in the bright moonlight. When the night has advanced by a full Yāma (three hours), the devotee shall offer milk puddings as Naivedya to Lakṣmī.

52. With great devotion he should then feed the Brāhmaṇas with the milk puddings. All of them then keep awake for the whole of the night with songs and auspicious instrumental music and dances.

53-54. The next day before dawn, the devotee takes his bath and dedicates the gold image to the preceptor. (It is said) that on this night goddess Mahālakṣmī with the gestures of granting boon and fearlessness in her lotus-like hands moves over the Earth saying—ko jāgarti (who is keeping awake) on this Earth ? I shall give wealth to that person who keeps awake and worships me."

55. This Vrata should be performed every year. It propitiates Lakṣmī. It yields prosperity in this world and bliss in the other world after death.

1. VV. 47-55 describe the Kojāgara Vrata or Kaumudī Mahotsava mentioned in Sanskrit and Prakrit Literature, Purāṇas and mediaeval digests. The NP. does not mention dice-playing on that night.

56. On the full moon day in the month of Kārttika, Lord Kārttikeya should be visited for the attainment of Brahminhood again (i.e. in the next birth) and for the conquest of all enemies.

57. On this very same day, Tripurotsava (the festival of Tripura) should be performed by celebrating illuminations (of buildings, ghats etc.), O excellent Brāhmaṇa, this festival of light at night-fall is conducive to the happiness of all living beings.

58. Insects, locusts, mosquitoes, trees and the living beings that move about in water or dry land are not reborn after seeing these lights. They attain liberation.

59-61. O Brāhmaṇa, at the time of the moon-rise the six Kṛttikās must be worshipped. So also Kārttikeya, Khaḍgī, Varuṇa and Hutāśana (Fire-God) are to be worshipped with scents and fragrant flowers, incense, lights, extensive Naivedyas, excellent cooked rice, fruits, vegetable and by propitiation of the fire-god and the Brāhmaṇas. Thus after bowing down and worshipping the Devas, light should be offered outside the house.

62-64. Very near the lamps, a beautiful square-shaped pit fourteen Aṅgulas deep should be made and sprinkled with sandal water. After filling it with milk of cows, the devotee should put in it an image of a fish made of gold and exquisite in every limb, and with eyes constituted of pearls. Uttering the Mantra, 'Obeisance to the great Fish' the devotee should worship it with scents and other things and offer it to a Brāhmaṇa.

65. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the charitable gift of the ocean of Milk[1] has been recounted to you by me. Thanks to the power of this charitable gift, the devotee rejoices in the presence of Hari.

66. O Nārada, by performing the rite of Vṛṣotsarga (setting a bull-calf free) during the night, the devotee attains Rudra's region. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

1. VV. 62-65 describe the Kṣīra-sāgara dāna (gift of the milky ocean). The whole procedure is symbolic.

67. For the profuse abundance of all desired benefits, an Āḍhaka-measure of salt should be offered to a quiet Brāhmaṇa alongwith gold, on the full moon day in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa.

68-69. Formerly, this universe was abandoned by Lakṣmī. So Hari, Indra, Soma, Tiṣya and Bṛhaspati—these five made the universe still more dignified and decorated by means of the sports of festivities of blessedness on the full moon day coinciding with the Puṣya constellation.

70. Hence, for the increase of all conjugal bliss and good fortune he (the Vratin) should smear his body with the Kalka (minced pieces after being boiled in a decoction) of white mustard and take his bath when there is the conjunction of Puṣya and the full moon.

71-72a. He should pour over his body, water, in which all medicinal herbs are put. He should wear new silk clothes. After seeing, touching and bowing to all the auspicious articles, he should worship Hari, Śakra, Indu, Puṣya and Ijyā (i.e. Jupiter, Bṛhaspati) with scents and other Upacāras.

72b-73. After performing Homa he should propitiate the Brāhmaṇas by feeding them with milk puddings. O Brāhmaṇa, by performing this Vrata that increases the pleasure of Ramā (Lakṣmī) and destroys Alakṣmī (Misfortune), the devotee rejoices here and hereafter.

74-76a. On the full moon day in the month of Māgha, the following should be offered as charitable gifts :— gingelly seeds, cotton or woollen blanket, jewels, bodice, turban, shoes or cash presents. By giving these charitable gifts according to his affluence, the devotee rejoices in heaven. He who worships Lord Śaṅkara duly, attains the benefit of a Horse-sacrifice and is honoured in Viṣṇu's world.

76b-78. The holy rite of Holikā-worship[1] is to be observed

1. VV. 76b-81 deal with Holikā-worship. The NP. says that it is the celebration of burning Kāma or the ogress Holikā. There is a little obscenity attended with this celebration, only Bengal is free from it, as they celebrate the Dolā-yātrā of Kṛṣṇa on this day, and engage a priest to perform worship before the bone-fire. This religious element persisted since the period of the NP. (or even before) in Bengal.

on the full moon day in the month of Phālguna. The devotee collects all types of wood and cow-dung cakes. After duly kindling fire therein, by means of extensive Mantras destructive of Rākṣasas, the devotee repeats this Mantra—"O Holi, you have been made by people of childish traits who are afraid of blood-sucking Ogresses. Hence I shall worship you. Be the bestower of prosperity on the living beings."

79. By repeating this Mantra, more and more wood is thrown in and the fire is made brighter. The devotees go round it and carry on the festivities with songs and instrumental music.

80-81. (There are two opinions about the burning of Holikā).* (one opinion) : This ogress Holikā was a terror to Prahlāda. Hence, people burn her with wood to the accompaniment of songs and instrumental music. This is the burning of the Saṁvatsara (year). In the opinion of others, it is the burning of Kāma. Thus O leading Brāhmaṇa, you shall know that there are many traditions in the world.

82. The two days of festival at the end of a fortnight are the full moon and the new moon. Hence the Amāvrata[1] (the holy rite on New Moon days) is described. O Brāhmaṇa, listen to their separate nature. This Vrata is a great favourite of the manes.

83-84. On the new moon days of the months of Caitra and Vaiśākha the worship of Pitṛs is recommended. The Śrāddha in accordance with the injunction governing festival days and in accordance with one's affluence is to be performed. The feeding of Brāhmaṇas and charitable gifts of cows etc. in particular, are highly meritorious on the new moon days, in all the months.

85. The Vrata of Sāvitrī is to be observed on the new moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha. O Nārada, its rules of

*It is a very ancient festival and was called Holikā in east India (Śabara on Pūrvamīmāṁsā I. 3. 15-23). Hemādri calls this Hutāśanī as we do now.

1. In VV. 82-96 the NP. groups together Amā-Vratas i.e. Vratas to be observed on the new-moon days. As this day is specially sacred to the manes (Pitṛs) different śrāddhas are prescribed on these days.

procedure are the same as for the festival of the full moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha.

86. O Brāhmaṇa, in the months of Āṣāḍha, Śrāvaṇa and Bhādrapada (when Pūrṇimānta or) ending with the full moon day, the following rites are to be performed, and they are endless in their benefits. The rites are Śrāddha of manes (ancestors), charitable gift, Homa and the worship of the Devas.

87-88a. O Brāhmaṇa, Kuśas grow in the fields of gingelly seeds. In the afternoon of the new moon day in the month of Bhādrapada, the devotee repeats the Mantra of Viriñci (god Brahmā) and cuts those Kuśa grasses saying 'Hum phaṭ'. These grasses can be used always in all holy rites. But the other Kuśa grasses can be used only once.

88b-89a. On the new moon day in the month of Āśvina, Śrāddha and Tarpaṇa of the Pitṛs are particularly recommended. They must be performed in the waters of Gaṅgā. In the holy centre of Gayā, it yields liberation.

89b-91a. On the new moon day in the month of Kārttika, lights should be offered as gifts in temples of gods, river banks, parks, tanks, cowpens, market places, monasteries and other places. Worship of Lakṣmī is performed on this day. Gold and silver whether made into ornaments or not (are dealt in on this day). Playing at dice throughout the year, predicts gain or loss exactly as one wins or loses.

91b-92a. On this day, worship of cows is laid down in the following manner viz. : the horns and other limbs are painted; barley and other grains are given; cows are bowed to and circumambulated.

92b-93a. In the month of Mārgaśīrṣa also, there is Pitṛ Pūjā (worship of the manes) by means of Śrāddhas and feeding of Brāhmaṇas, observances of the restraints of celibacy etc. as well as Japa, Homa, Arcanā and other rites.

93b-96. O leading Brāhmaṇa, in the months of Pauṣa and Māgha, the Śrāddhas performed to the Pitṛs are more efficacious. If on the New Moon Day in the month of Phālguna, the day is combined with Karṇapāta (?) and the Sun (i.e. prob. Vyatīpāta, Śravaṇā Nakṣatra and the Sun are found on that day), performance of mere Śrāddha or feeding of Brāhmaṇas is more efficacious (in giving good fruit) than even at Gayā (their performance at Gayā); charitable gifts etc. are the bestowers of all benefit if made on the new moon day. If it falls on a Monday the benefit is still more. O sage, thus in brief, I have recounted to you the duties on the different Tithis. In all these instances there are some special cases. Those are mentioned in other Purāṇas.

CHAPTER ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTYFIVE

The greatness of the Purāṇa[1]

Sūta said :

1. Having recounted thus (the matter in the foregone four Pādas of this Purāṇa) on being enquired (about it) by the sage Nārada, it is reported that the (four) Kumāras (viz. Sanat, Sanaka, Sanandana and Sanātana) who were the most excellent ones among the knowers of the sacred lore (śāstras) were worshipped by Nārada. After performing their

1. This is the concluding chapter of the original Nārada Purāṇa which consisted of four pādas (catuṣpādasamāyuktam V. 26). Here the interlocutors disperse as follows.

(1) The Kumāras, the reciters of the NP. are worshipped by Nārada. They went to god Śiva and learnt the Śaiva Āgama. After this they visited god Brahmā and lastly god Viṣṇu at the Badari forest (VV. 1-5).

(2) Bidding good-bye to Śaunaka and other Brāhmaṇas, Sūta went to his preceptor Vyāsa (VV. 48-49).

(3) Śaunaka and other Brāhmaṇas remained there in the Naimiṣa forest and resumed their Satra (sacrificial session) V. 49.

(4) VV. in this chapter 26-47 is the eulogy of the NP. and of the benefit derived form hearing NP. This is called phalaśruti which marks the end of a particular work.

These verses show that the original NP. was completed here at the end of this chapter.

prescribed daily routine duties, they went to the world of the Lord of Umā (i.e. god Śiva).

2. There (in the region of god Śiva) they bowed down to Ugra (i.e. Śiva), Īśa, whose feet have been worshipped by the leading sages like Śrīvāmadeva and others who resembled (in refulgence) the fire and the sun—Śiva who is worthy of being adored by the leaders of the Devas and Asuras. At his behest, they sat on the bare ground.

3. There, they heard the Śaiva Āgama which is the essence of all sacred lores, and which is conducive to the liberation of Paśu (individual soul) from Pāśa (bondage of Saṁsāra). After bowing to Purāri (Śiva) those sages who were the very concrete embodiments of Pure knowledge, went to the presence of their father (god Brahmā).

4. They bowed down to his lotus feet. They were duly honoured and welcomed by their father. Receiving his blessings they became holy and sacred. From that time onwards, they who are the embodiments of holy places, are continuously moving about in the holy centres in all the three worlds.

5. Thereafter, they went to the holy forest of Badarī, where they meditated for a long time on the immutable lotus-like feet of Lord Viṣṇu which are being resorted to by groups of leading Devas and on which the ascetics, devoid of passion, contemplate.

6. After acquiring the spiritual knowledge along with sound wisdom and discrimination so longed for by him from those Kumāras (viz. Sanaka, Sanandana and others), Nārada was highly pleased in his mind.

7. From the banks of that celestial river, he returned to his father's presence, where he was warmly welcomed by his father (god Brahmā). After bowing to him he took his seat there.

8. He described factually the spiritual wisdom along with sound knowledge that he had heard from the Kumāras. On hearing that, he (i.e. Brahmā) too rejoiced.

9. Then the excellent sage (Nārada) bowed down (to Brahmā) with his head and received his blessings. He came over to Kailāsa which is frequented by sages and Siddhas.

10-11. The place is continuously filled with different kinds ofwonderful things. It is full of trees blossoming in all the seasons—trees such as Mandāras, Pārijātas, Campakas, Aśokas, Vañjulas and many others. They are occupied by flocks of different kinds of birds. When their branches are shaken by the wind, they appear as though they are inviting the way-farers.

12. The place is full of different herds of deer. It is thronged by the Siddhas and Kinnaras. It appears splendid, thanks to the lakes with crystal-clear water where golden lotuses bloom with splendour.

13-15a. It was reverberated with the sounds of various aquatic birds such as Sārasas, Cakravākas and swans. It was resounded with the tumultuous sound of the fall of heavenly river, by the sporting bevies of celestial damsels playing in the waters of the river Alakanandā which had turned tawny-coloured through the saffron powders from their breasts. It was teeming with joyous elephants who bathed their mates and cubs with the waters taken up by their trunks.

15b-16a. On a peak that resembled a white cloud, of that mountain, he saw a spreading banyan tree which extended over a hundred Yojanas and which appeared like a black cloud.

16b-18a. Beneath it, he saw Lord Śiva seated in the middle of a group of Yogins. The lord had matted hair and unusual number (i.e. three) of eyes. He was clad in the hide of a tiger. He had smeared ashes all over his body. He was adorned with serpents as ornaments. He was perpetually refulgent with his necklace of Rudrākṣa-beads and he had a crescent of the moon on his head.

18b-19a. On seeing (the moon-crested) Lord, O Brāhmaṇa, Nārada bent down and lowered his neck with great devotion. He bowed his head down at the feet of the Lord of the Universe.

19b-20. With a delighted mind, he eulogised the bull-bannered Lord, verbally. At the behest of Sthāṇu (Śiva), he sat down. He was greeted and honoured by the Yogins. Then the preceptor of the worlds (i.e. Lord Śiva) enquired about the health and welfare of Nārada.

21-22a. He replied—"Thanks to your Honour's grace, I am blest with everything." O Brāhmaṇas, even as all the leading Yogins were listening, (Nārada) asked Śiva about special knowledge of Śambhu, that is conducive to the liberation of the Paśu from the Pāśa.

22b-23a. Śiva was highly delighted in his mind with his respectful devotion. The Lord favourably disposed towards those who bow down to him, recounted the Yoga philosophy with all its eight subsections. (or accessories)

23b-24a. After acquiring the knowledge pertaining to Śambhu, from Śaṅkara, the benefactor of all the worlds, Nārada became delighted in his mind. After bowing to him, he went near Nārāyaṇa.

24b-25a. Nārada who was accustomed to coming to and fro frequently, propitiated Nārāyaṇa, who is served by the Yogins and the Siddhas.

25b-26. Thus, O Brāhmaṇas, the great narrative of Nārada Puraṇa has been recounted to you. It is on a par with the Vedas. It is a model for all sacred lores. It comprises four Pādas (quarters, sections). It increases the perfect knowledge of listeners.

27-29. O Brāhmaṇas, he who recites and glorifies devoutly this narrative pertaining to Nārada, in a Śiva temple, in the assembly of prominent Brāhmaṇas, in the temple of Keśava, in Mathurā, in Prayāga, in the presence of Puruṣottama (or at Jagannātha Puri), at Setu (i.e. the bridge built by Rāma on his way to Laṅkā), in Kāñcī, at Dvārakā, at Gaṅgādvāra, Kuśasthala, on the banks of the lotus tanks (or at Puṣkara), on the banks of rivers—in fact, anywhere (he pleases) shall obtain the great benefit of performance of all Yajñas and the visit of all holy centres.

30-31. He shall obtain the benefit of all charitable gifts and of performing all austerities. Both the listener and the propounder (narrator) should be devoted to Nārāyaṇa or to Śiva; He should either observe fast or take in only Haviṣya food (cooked rice soaked in ghee). He should subdue his sense-organs. Listening thus to this Purāṇa he shall attain Siddhi (Mokṣa).

32. It is in this narrative that all merits and Siddhis originate. It is declared as destructive of all sins of those who read and listen to it.

33. It removes the defects due to Kali's harrassment; it is conducive to the increase of all riches of men. This is liked by everyone. It illuminates all knowledge.

34-37a. It sheds light on the modes of austerities, holy rites and their benefits of the followers of Śiva, Viṣṇu, Śakti, the Sun god and Gaṇapati. It explains the duties of those who adhere to the system of disciplined life in accordance with the classification of various castes and stages of life. It throws light on the Mantras, Yantras and the ancillary subjects of the Vedas with their divisions. It is a brief digest of the Āgamas, the Vedas and the Sāṁkhya tenets. He who reads this devoutly or listens to it with great concentration, shall derive all cherished desires difficult of access, even to the Devas and others.

37b-39a. After listening to this Nārada Purāṇa which is on a par with the Vedas, the devotee should worship the expounder with devotion, wealth, jewels, silk cloths, etc. and with the gifts of plots of land, cows, jewels etc. With the gifts of elephants, horses and chariots, he should ever please the preceptor.

39b-40a. O Brāhmaṇa, who else can be a preceptor other than the person who comments on the Purāṇas wherein all dharmas (religious duties) have been collected together and which bestows all the fourfold aims of human life. (viz. Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa).

40b-41a. The devotee should always do what is pleasing to the preceptor who instructs him in religious duties. He should render him service physically, mentally and verbally as well as through cash presents.

41b-42. After listening to the Purāṇa duly and after performing Homa and worship of the Devas, the devotee should feed a hundred Brāhmaṇas, with sweet cooked rice and milk puddings. He should give them monetary gifts in accordance with his capacity. Mādhava shall be pleased with his devotion.

43-46. Just as Gaṅgā is the most excellent among the rivers, Puṣkara is the most excellent among the lakes, (and just as in their respective categories the following are the best viz.) the city of Kāśi, the mountain Meru, Lord Hari, Nārāyaṇa, the Kṛta age, the Sāma Veda, the cow, the Brāhmaṇa, the cooked rice, water, the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the lion, the (Cosmic Man) Puruṣa, the Aśvattha (holy fig tree), Prahlāda, the face, the horse Uccaiśśravas, the season Vasanta (spring), Japa, the serpent Seṣa, Aryaman, the bow, the fire, Viṣṇu, Indra, the sage Kapila, the Lord of speech (Bṛhaspati) Kavi (poet, Śukra), Arjuna, Hanumān, Darbha grass, the mind, the gandharva Citraratha, the Lotus, the Apsaras Ūrvaśī and gold—all these are the most excellent ones in their own groups.

47. Similarly, the Nārada Purāṇa is the most excellent among all the Purāṇas. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, peace be to you; welfare be to all of you.

48. I shall now go to my preceptor Vyāsa, of unmeasured splendour. After saying this, Sūta was worshipped by Śaunaka and other noble souls.

49. Permitted by all of them, he went his way to see his preceptor Vyāsa.

All those excellent Brāhmaṇas, Śaunaka and others carried out the advice they had heard with great concentration and perfection in details. They remained there itself, performing their Satra (sacrifice).

50. He who takes (resorts) to meditating in the form of injunctions regarding the performance of Japa and worship of Hari, the destroyer of the poison of the sins of Kali, purges completely his mind of that poison (or Kali) and accomplishes Yoga and ultimately attains the ever-cherished region of Hari.

UTTARA BHĀGA[1]

CHAPTER ONE

The greatness of Ekādaśi day

Obeisance to Śri Gaṇeśa

Obeisance to Śri Kṛṣṇa

1. May the four arms of Hari protect you all—the arms dark like clouds in complexion, hardened by the friction (strokes) of the strings of the Śārṅga bow and which are like columns supporting the big pavilion (-like structure) of the three worlds.

2. May the lotus-like pair of Hari's feet be the bestower of desires on us—the pair of feet refulgent with the brilliance of the polished crest jewels of Devas and Asuras (as they bow to him).

Māndhātā[2] said :

3. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, It behoves your honour to tell me what that fire is that burns both dry and damp fuel of terrible sins.

1. Although the last redactor of the NP. tries to show that this Part (Uttara Khaṇḍa) also called Uttara Bhāga in colophons of chapters) is an integral part of the NP (vide Supra I. 97. 10-18), the whole setting of this part is different, showing that it must have been an independent work to glorify Ekādaśī Vrata and to illustrate it with the Rukmāṅgada-Mohinī episode. But this unification of the two parts took place before the 10th cent. A.D. (Kane HD. V. ii. pp. 892-93), An early digest writer like Devaṇa Bhaṭṭa (1200-1225 A.D.) quotes many verses from the Uttara-Khaṇḍa of the extant NP. in his Smṛti-Chandrikā. Earlier still, Aparārka (1100-1130 A.D.) quotes from it two verses on Ekādaśi (HD. V. ii. 892). Hence, though apocryphal, the Uttara-Khaṇḍa has been regarded as the integral part of the NP. for the last 1000 years. By any standard, it is a good story and the writer of this part is a gifted story-teller.

2. Māndhātā—An emperor of the solar race, son of king Yuvanāśva, He was born from his father's belly. When the problem of feeding him

4. O sage, born of the four-faced deity (Brahmā), there is nothing that is unknown to you in the three worlds. O prominent Brāhmaṇa, the three - fold things (of the past, present and future time) are precisely known to you.

5. The sin committed unknowingly is called Śuṣka (dry) and the sin committed knowingly is cited as Ārdra (wet). Please tell us the three events: that which are yet to be (future), that which has passed by (past), and that which is current (present).

6a. What is that fire whereby the sin may be reduced to ashes? This is esteemed by me (i.e. what I want to know).

Vasiṣṭha said :

6b-9. O mighty king, may it be heard what that fire is whereby it is possible to reduce to ashes completely the dry as well as the wet kinds of sin. A person who, on the day of Lord Viṣṇu (i.e. Ekādaśī day) with due control of sense-organs observes fast, worships the killer of demon Madhu (i.e. God Viṣṇu), takes bath in water containing Emblic Myrobalan and keeps awake during that (Ekādaśī) night, completely absolves himself of all sins like a gambler losing all his wealth.

10. O king of kings, the fuel of sins even though accumulated (lit. generated) in the course of hundred births, is reduced to ashes through the fire called Ekādaśī.

11. O king, there is nothing that sanctifies men so much as the day of Padmanābha (i.e. Ekādaśī) that destroys sins.

12. O ruler of men, sins remain in this body, only so long as the creature (i.e. man) does not observe fast on the auspicious day of Padmanābha.

arose, god Indra came forward and said, "He will suck me" (māṁdhātā). The Pd. P. tells us that when there was a drought for the continuous three years, the sages advised him to observe Ekādaśi Padma-nābhā (i.e. Padmā). He observed Ekādaśi Vrata and made all his subjects to follow it. Rains showered, people became happy and the king prospered (Pd. P. VI—Uttara Khaṇḍa, Ch. 58. 33-38.

A proper setting for glorifying the Ekādaśī Vrata with Māndhātā as an interlocutor. But it is after two benedictory verses that Māndhātā is abruptly introduced. In fact no background is provided to this dialogue between Māndhātā and Vasiṣṭha, his family priest.

13. Thousands of horse-sacrifices and hundreds of Rājasūya sacrifices do not deserve even a sixteenth part of the fast observed on the Ekādaśī day.

14. O Lord, all the sins that have been committed by the eleven sense organs shall be dissolved, thanks to the fast on the Ekādaśī (eleventh) day.

15. O king, there is nothing equal to Ekādaśī that is destructive of sins. Even if it is observed under a pretext it exempts one from seeing the son of the Sun-god (i.e. Yama, the god of death and Hell).

16. It bestows heavently pleasure and salvation; it yields kingdom and sons; it grants good wives and freedom from ailments to the body.

17-18. O king, neither Gaṅgā, nor Kāśī, nor Gayā, nor Puṣkara, nor Kurukṣetra nor the river Revā, or the Devikā,[1] and neither the Yamunā nor the Candrabhāgā are more meritorious than the day of Hari. O leading king, Hari's abode is attained without any strain.

19. By observing fast during the day on the day of Hari and by keeping awake during the night, a man is liberated from sins and he goes direct to the region of Viṣṇu.

20. O leading king, it uplifts ten generations on the mother-side, ten generations on the father's side, and ten generations on the wife's side.

21-23. O Sovereign king, he leads his own soul to the city of Viṣṇu. This rite of fast is like the Cintāmaṇi (wish-yielding stone) or it is equal to a Nidhi (treasuretrove) or it is like the Saṁkalpapādapa (wish-yielding tree). O the most excellent one among kings, those who resort to Dvādaśī (i.e. after observing fast on the previous day who break fast on this day) put forth two more arms (become like viṣṇu four-armed), they ride on the enemy of serpents (i.e. Garuḍa) as their vehicle, they will be having garlands and yellow garments (like Viṣṇu). Thus they go to Hari's abode.

1. The southern portion of the river Sarayū—De. p. 55. According to Kālikā P., (Ch. 53), Devikā is a distinct river between Gomati and Sarayū and joins at the confluence of Gaṇḍak and Gaṅgā and the confluence is called Triveṇi.

24. Thus the power of Dvādaśī has been glorified by me, O king, it is called the fire that consumes the terrible fuel of sin.

25. Always the day of Hari should be observed as a day of fast by men, devoted to holiness and piety, who wish for abundant worldly pleasures as well as sons, grandsons etc.

26. The man who observes the day of Hari (Ekādaśī) with great respect, O most excellent one among men, never enters the womb of a mother even if he has committed many sins or even if he observes the fast with or without intention. He goes to the endless region of Viṣṇu, the Lord of the world.

CHAPTER TWO

Discussion on Tithis[1]

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. It was bearing on this same topic that the saintly residents of the Naimiṣa forest asked the highly intelligent Sūta, the disciple of Vyāsa.

1. Tithi is the period required by the moon to gain twelve degrees on the sun to the east (Sūrya-siddhānta, Tithi Tattva p. 2.). Due to the irregular motion of the moon, the tithi varies between 67 to 50 ghaṭikās—a finding recorded in the maxim.

Saptа-vṛddhir daśa kṣayaḥ

As a Tithi is not coterminus with a 'civil day' and as every religious rite, be it Vrata, Dāna etc. must be done at the exact time of the Tithi (otherwise it becomes fruitless), this topic has been discussed since very old times. As the word is used in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and Gṛhya and Dharma sūtras, the belief in Tithi exists since the 8th Cent. B.C. Works have been devoted to the discussion of the correct time on a Tithi for observing Vratas. For example, Jīmūta-vāhana's Kāla-viveka, Hemādri's CC., Kāla-mādhava, Nīlakaṇṭha's Kāla-mayūkha, Dharmasindhu and others.

But this very topic has been discussed previously in NP. I. 29 and elsewhere and the technical terms like Pūrṇā, Śuddhā, Viddhā etc., the Yugma-Vākya and rules for deciding the Ekādaśī fast etc. have been discussed in details in the annotations to those Chapters and verses. Hence, they are not repeated here.

2. On being asked, that highly pleased one recounted the greatness of Ekādaśī[1] in detail and also the rules of procedure regarding the observance of fast.

3-4a On hearing that statement of the son of Sūta, as well as the greatness of the wielder of discus (god Viṣṇu) that subdues vast multitudes of sins, O king, the excellent Brāhmaṇas again asked Sūta who is devoid of impurities and who is well versed in the Purāṇas.

4b-5. "O bestower of honour, you know the eighteen Purāṇas. Thanks to the favour of the son of virgin[2] '(i.e. Vyāsa) you know the Mahābhārata too. Hence, there is nothing in the Purāṇas or the Smṛtis which you do not know.

6-7a. A doubt is produced in our minds in the story of Raghunātha that is very extensive, containing hundred crores of verses. It behoves you to dispel it by means of factual and detailed explanation.

7b-8a. Is it the end of the Tithi that has to be taken up for the observance of fast. Or is it the root (beginning)? What is the rule regarding this in the rites pertaining to the Devas and those pertaining to the Pitṛs (manes)? Kindly narrate it as there is nothing that is unknown to you.

Sauti said :

8b. In regard to the Devas (i.e. rites pertaining to Devas) the end-period of the Tithi is to be taken for observing fast. Then it is conducive to the increase of their pleasure.

9. The root (beginning) of the Tithi is declared by the knowers of Time as pleasing to the Pitṛs. Hence, the tip is

1. In the previous Chs. in the NP. I discussed Tithis with reference to the religious rites like Śrāddha, Vrata etc., but this verse and the following discussion makes it clear that the object of this part is disquisition on all aspects of Ekādaśī Vrata only.

Another important point here is the conspicuous absence of Nārada. He is neither a listener nor a narrator of NP. Uttarārdha as contrasted with NP. Purvārdha where he is at least the listener.

2. Kānina—A child born of an un-married women. Mbh. Ādi. 60.2 tells us that Vyāsa alias Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana was born of an unmarried girl (Matsyagandhā or Satyavatī) on an island in the Yamunā.

taken up for the observance of fast by those who wish to obtain tenfold benefits.

10-12a. The root is to be known for being taken up (for fast) by those who desire for virtue and piety, for the purpose of propitiation of the Pitṛs. Neither Dvitīyā (the second day) nor the Aṣṭamī (the eighth day) nor Ṣaṣṭhī (the sixth day) nor Ekādaśī (the eleventh day) in a human fortnight, O king, should be taken up by those who wish for virtue, love and wealth, if it overlaps (lit. is pierced by) the previous one.

12b. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, Saptamī (the seventh day) in lunar fortnight is always to be taken up only when it overlaps the previous one. If any one eschews the following, when they overlap the previous ones, he falls into hell. Those Tithis are Darśa, (the New Moon day), Paurṇamāsa (the Full moon day) and the anniversary day of the father.

13. O king, he will be visited by misfortunes and loss of progeny. O Brāhmaṇas this has been heard by me formerly from Kṛsṇa Dvaipāyana.

14. That Tithi is called Pūrvaviddhā (overlapping the previous one) if there is even a slight trace of it at the time of sunrise. That Tithi should be considered Prabhūta (full) (if it extends throughout) not excluding the time of sunrise.

15. In the rite of Pāraṇā (break-fast) and in the case of death of men, that Tithi is remembered which exists at that particular time. In the case of rites pertaining to Pitṛs, if there is contact of the Tithi at the time of sunset, it is called Pūrṇā (full).

16. In that case, the Tithi at the time of sunrise is not taken into account. But in the case of rites of the deities, the Tithi at the time of sunrise must be taken into account. The intelligent devotee should get the Tithi confirmed through a thoughtful astrologer.

17. O leading Brāhmaṇas, the bases for the extent of the Tithis are the sun and the moon. The knowers of the time reckon it through the movements of moon and the sun.

18. Due to the fault of the contact of the previous Tithi, these are not worthy of being taken up for worship. Those who know about this matter eschew them. O Brāhmaṇas, they eschew all the four Yāmas.

19-20.[1] Henceforth, I shall recount the orderly procedure for bath and worship. If they do not attain purity during the day time, the injunctions are so observed for the night. All the duties of the day must be completely performed at night-fall. This rule has been laid down by me in the case of men who observe fast.

21. O leading Brāhmaṇas, if there is even a little of Dvādaśī at the time of dawn, the rites of ablution, worship, charitable gift, Homa etc. are to be performed then.

22. The breaking of the fast on a pure Trayodaśī day is conducive to the attainment of benefit of (a grant of) land and performance more than a hundred of Yajñas. There is no doubt about it.

23. For this reason, O Brāhmaṇas, the ablution is to be performed alongwith the rite of Pitṛ-Tarpaṇa, early in the morning, without reckoning the day of Dvādaśī.

24. This Dvādaśī, if transgressed (?) by men causes great loss. Like the Sarasvatī who is not washed, it dispels virtue and piety.

25. If there be a loss or increase in the period of Dvādaśī or if it is available at the sunrise, Dvādaśī should be taken advantage of for the purpose of fasting. It is meritorious. One should eschew that Tithi if that overlaps the previous one.

The Brāhamaṇa submitted :

26. O Sūta, kindly explain to me how can there be a fast on the Dvādaśī day if the previous Tithi happens to extend to Dvādaśī.

27-31a. When the day of fast becomes overlapped by the previous Tithi and when there is not even a trace of Ekādaśī on the next day, how is the observance of fast enjoined on that day? O son of Sūta, pray explain to me.

1. VV. 19-32 lay down the rules of observing Ekādaśī fast by Vaiṣṇavas.

Sauti said :

O Brāhmaṇas, when on Dvādaśī the previous Tithi is not at all obtainable and the day of the week is Saturday, Sunday or Monday (?) the next day is to be taken up for fasting. Even when there is the risk of contravening many Āgamas and when the Brāhmaṇas raise arguments against it, the holy Dvādaśī should be observed as the day of fast and the break fast (Pāraṇā) is on Trayodaśī (the Thirteenth day of the lunar fortnight).

31b. When Ekādaśī is Viddhā (i.e. it is overlapped by the previous Tithi) and it is the month of Śrāvaṇa, it is the holy Dvādaśī that should be observed as the day of fast, in both the fortnights. This decision, arrived at in accordance with the Śāstras (sacred lore) has been announced to you by me.

32a. What else do you wish to hear? You may be pleased to tell me the same.

The sages said :

32b-33a. O Sauti, tell us the rules regarding the observances on the inaugural days of the Yugas precisely and factually. Similarly, tell us the rules regarding the transit of the sun etc. There is nothing that cannot be understood by you.

Sauti said :

33b-34a. Wise persons know that two of the inaugural days of the Yugas fall in the bright half of the month and two in the dark half. The Tithis in the bright half are to be taken up when they exist in the forenoon, those in the dark half are to be taken up when they exist in the afternoon.

34b-35. The Ayana (the tropical transit) has the part of the day as the basis and the transit time is sixteen Palas (certain unit of time). In the southern portion (transit from the tropic of Cancer) the former one (? the forenoon) is to be taken and in the northern (transit from the tropic of Capricorn) the past one (the afternoon) is considered (for acceptance). In the middle period of Viṣuva (equinox), it is glorified as Akṣaya (imperishable).

36. O Brāhmaṇas, fast is to be undertaken after knowing precisely the Tithi mentioned for the full year. Otherwise, one is likely to fall into a hell.

37. The man observing fast when it is Pūrvaviddhā breaks Dharma. It is likely to result in death of the progeny and loss of wealth.

38. Just as one eschews the water of the Gaṅgā if it is contaminated by even a drop of liquor, O leading Brāhmaṇa, one should avoid the Ekādaśī day even if there is the overlapping of Daśamī by a single pala (a small unit of time).

39. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, just as one should throw away the Pañcagavya if it is defiled by a dog, so one should do, if Ekādaśī in both the fortnights, is defiled by Daśamī.

40. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, the Pūrvaviddhā Ekādaśī Tithi (i.e. the eleventh day with the overlapping of the tenth day) had been formerly given to the Dānavas by the scion of the family of the Yadus (i.e. Viṣṇu) for the propitiation of the noble souls.

41-44a. O excellent Brāhmaṇas the following gifts are no better than gifts offered to Asuras : the monetary gift given at the wrong time, the gift to the undeserving, what is given by the angry donor, what is given after dishonouring the recipient, the gift on a Tithi 'pierced by' the previous Tithi; the gift offered by one who is defiled by ucchiṣṭa (leavings of food), what is given unto the fallen ones, what is gifted to the hen-pecked ones, what is given without water offerings and what is offered with subsequent and frequent allusions to it. Hence, O Brāhmaṇas, the Ekādaśī Tithi should not be observed if it is Viddhā (i.e. when Daśamī overlaps it).

44b-46. Just as the paramour of Śūdra woman defiles the previous merits, Śrāddha, charitable gifts, Japas, Homas and holy dips, so also the Pūjā offered to Hari in a Tithi overlapped by the previous one, undergoes rapid decline like darkness at sunrise. Women proud of their blooming youth and overwhelmed by the fish-bannered Lord (i.e. Kāma or sexual passion) abandon their ageing husbands. So also the learned men should eschew the Tithi that has the Vedha (overlapping). For the enhancement of Dharma they always adopt other Tithis.

CHAPTER THREE

Yama goes to the Region of Brahmā[1]

The sages said :

1. Kindly narrate in detail the rite of propitiating Viṣṇu, whereby he becomes satisfied and bounteously bestows the cherished desire.

2. The Lord of the Universe, the consort of Lakṣmī, is the destroyer of all the vast multitudes of sins. By what rite will he be pleased alongwith all the mobile and immobile creation (which he pervades through his omni-presence).

Sauti said :

3. Hṛṣīkeśa (Viṣṇu) can be captivated by devotion and not by riches. O Ruler of the Earth, Viṣṇu when duly worshipped with devotion, grants all desires.

4. Hence, O Brāhmaṇas, the devotion to the discus-bearing Lord should always be practised. The Lord of the universe worshipped even by ordinary people, shall be the destroyer of distress.

5. Just as a thirsty man immediately derives satisfaction with water, so is the Lord pleased immediately (with activities of devotion). O Brāhmaṇas, in this connection, a mythological narrative that is destructive of sins, is heard.

1. It is an interesting introduction to the story of Rukmāṅgada and Mohini. This chapter emphasizes the efficacy of the Ekādaśī Vrata by describing how Yama has to close his Office as all men, being compelled to observe Ekādaśi by Rukmāṅgada, straightway went to Vaikuṇṭha.

6. It is in the course of conversation between Rukmāṅgada and sage Gautama.

There was a king named Rukmāṅgada.[1] He was an Emperor endowed with the quality of patience and forgiveness.

7. He was a beloved devotee of the deity lying in the Milk Ocean (i.e. Viṣṇu). He was devoted to the day of Hari (i.e. Ekādaśī). The Lord of the Earth does not see anyone other than Padmanābha (Viṣṇu), Lord of the Devas.

8-11. On the day of Hari (Ekādaśī), he used to proclaim through his servants by beating a drum kept on an elephant—"If any man (or woman) aged more than eight years and less than eightyfive years takes food on the day of Viṣṇu, that stupid fellow will be punished, killed or banished out of the city, even if it be my father, brother, son, wife or friend. The person who takes food on the day of Padmanābha (i.e. Viṣṇu) will be worthy of being punished like a robber.[2] Give gifts to leading Brāhmaṇas, have your holy dip in the waters of Jāhnavī. Listen to my words and enjoy my kingdom."

12. Thus on every day of Viṣṇu (Ekādaśī day) in the bright half of the month and especially in the dark half also, the king proclaimed thus through the drums with golden coverings.

13. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, when this was announced by the king throughout the land, the pathway leading to Hari's world (Vaikuṇṭha) was thronged by the people going there.

14. All the men who died in the realm of the king (observing Ekādaśī) whether knowingly or through error, went to the abode of Hari.

1. Rukmāṅgada the son of Ṛtadhvaja, the King of Vidiśā. He is the hero of this story.

2. Hemādri on Kāla (p. 172) quotes these verses with a slight difference, but in Kālanirṇaya (p. 257) a different text of the same import is quoted as from the NP. The verse is as follows :

atra Nāradaḥ

aṣṭābdād adhiko martyo hyapūrṇāśīti-hāyanaḥ / bhuṅkte yo mānavo mohād ekādaśyāṁ sa pāpakṛt //

15. O Brāhmaṇas, the world of Viṣṇu is definitely attained by men even if they fraudulently observe the rite of Ekādaśī that is destructive of sins.

16. He who takes food on the day of Hari consumes the sin of the whole of the Earth. He who does not eat food on the day of Hari, attains the virtue (religious merit) of the entire Earth.

17. The Smṛti following the Vedas says :

"A Brāhmaṇa should not be killed so also Food should not be taken on the Ekādaśī day in both the fortnights."

18. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, the king, the son of the Sun (i.e. Yama) became embarrassed. Citragupta[1] had ample rest in his writing activity.

19. Everything that had been written by him based on the activities of the previous births was erased and struck off by him (since) the men instantaneously went over to Viṣṇu's abode through their holy rites.

20. All the hells became devoid of sinful creatures. The pathway leading to Yama's world became scorched by the twelve Ādityas and delapidated.

21. All the people went to Hari's region riding on Garuḍa. The worlds of the Devas also became vacant and tenantless.

22. The sacrifices to the Pitṛs and the Devas, pilgrimage to holy centres, charitable gifts and other holy rites became out of vogue. Excepting Ekādaśī, men did not know any other Vrata.

23. When the heaven and the hell became empty, Nārada went to Dharmarāja (Yama) and said :—

Nārada said :

24. "O King, no cry is heard in your court-yard and in the hells. Nothing is being noted down in writing about the evil-doers.

25. This Citragupta[1] is sitting silent like a sage. What is the reason whereby no sinner comes to your abode ?

1. Citragupta—the record-keeper of merits and sins of human beings, in Yama's Office.

26-27a. No one engaged in wicked actions comes to your threshold. None in the grip of deception and arrogance comes to your abode."

When these words were uttered by the noble-souled Nārada, Vaivasvata (son of the Sun), the king of the world of Death said with a little disconcertedness :

Yama said :

27b-28. O Nārada, the King who is now ruling over the Earth is a great devotee of Hṛṣīkeśa (Lord Viṣṇu). This leading king instructs the people announcing on the beating of the drum.

29. "Nothing should be eaten, nothing should be eaten at all on the day of Hari. The men who take food shall be liable to punishment."

30-31. Being afraid of him, all the people observe fast on the Ekādaśī day. O excellent sage, those who even fraudulently observe fast on the Ekādaśī day, go to the world of Viṣṇu which is devoid of burning and dissolution (at the end of Kalpa). By resorting to Ekādaśī (Vrata) people go to Hari's palace.

32. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the paths leading to my world have been made empty by that king now. The hells as well as the worlds of heaven-dwellers have been made vacant by him.

33. The writers (Yama's accountants of deeds of men) are taking rest. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, what has been already written is erased and written off, thanks to the greatness of the fast on the Ekādaśī day.

34. O Brāhmaṇa, without experiencing the fruits of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter and other sins, people go to Hari's mansion by observing fast on the day of Viṣṇu.

35. O great sage, I have become one resembling a wooden deer. I am like a person devoid of eyes and ears, like a Brāhmaṇa who has eschewed Sandhyā prayers.

36. I am like a hen-pecked husband, or like an impotent husband of a youthful woman. I have abandoned all desire for such a post of guardianship of the world.

37-38a. I shall now go to the region of Brahmā to report to him about my misery. If an employee who is to abide by the behest of his master does not work actively but goes on eating the wealth of his master, he shall certainly go to hell.

Sauti said :

38b-41. O Brāhmaṇas, after saying this, Yama went to the abode of Virañci (god Brahmā) accompanied by Nārada and followed by Citragupta. He beheld there seated the great-grand-father of all, surrounded by both embodied and bodiless people—Brahmā the seed of the universe, the support of the universe, the self-born deity, the abode of all living beings. He was free from sin, and was designated as Oṁkāra. He is Śuci (pure) and Śucipada (of pure region). Brahmā, the Supreme Soul (Haṁsa) holding Kuśa grass was being worshipped by the different guardians of the quarters and rulers of the worlds.

42-47. He was being served by all these (in person) : viz —the Epics, Purāṇas and Vedas in their embodied forms; he was served by the oceans, the rivers and the lakes that had assumed bodily forms; the trees such as the holy fig tree and others served him by taking up human bodies; so also the tanks, wells, lakes, mountains, days and nights, fortnights, months, years, Kalās, Kāṣṭhās and Nimeṣas (units of time), seasons, transits of the suns, Yugas, Manvantaras, Kalpas, closing and opening of the eyelids (the smallert unit of time) constellations, Yogas (combinations) Karaṇas, (astronomical divisions), full-moon days, declines of the moon, new-moon days, Dvandvas (i.e. mutually clashing opposites such as happiness and misery, profits and loss, success and failures, truth and falsehood—all these were serving the deity. The Lord of the Devas, the sanctifier of righteousness, was surrounded by them. He was being served by persons who knew the holy rites and who were befitting him. The grandfather was being served by Sattva, Rajas. and Tamas Guṇas.

48-50. The lord was served and surrounded by the emotions such as Śānta, (calm), Mūḍha (confused) and Ati-ghora (exceedingly terrible); by the wind, phlegm and bile (the humours), by the embodied Ātaṅka (agony) etc. and by Ānanda bliss; the soul of the universe had recourse to the greatest Dharma; the creator of the worlds himself was surrounded by other living beings not mentioned here; he was being served by the embodiments of evil words and harsh statements etc. Yama the son of the Sun, entered the place amidst them like a bashful bride.

51-55. With his head bent down and glance directed beneath to the floor, he appeared before them. On seeing Yama entering alongwith Nārada and his Kâyastha (accountant i.e. Citragupta) the people there were surprised. With surprised looks they spoke to one another—"Why ? How comes it to be that Bhāskari (son of the Sun i.e. Yama) has come here to see the Creator and the grand-sire of the worlds ? This son of Sun never remains inactive even for a moment. He is always active. Then how is it that he has come now. I hope everything is all right with the heaven-dwellers. I consider this as the wonder of wonders, that the clerk (Chitragupta) has come with his (writing) cloth completely erased and clean. He is full of great distress. No person who performs holy rites has ever erased his cloth. What has never been seen or heard is being seen now."

56-58. O Brāhmaṇa, even as they were speaking mutually thus, the son of Sun (i.e. Yama) who used to chastise all living beings, fell in front of god Brahmā, just like a tree the root of which is cut. He cried aloud "O save me, O save me, O Lord of the Devas, I have been overwhelmed and oppressed since my writing cloth has been erased clean. While you are my Lord, O Lotus-seated one, I find myself distressed." O excellent Brāhmaṇas, after saying this he became unconscious, motionless.

59-61. Then a tumultuous commotion arose in the assembly, "He who makes all the worlds consisting of the mobile and immobile beings, is himself distressed and is crying. Why is Yama, the son of the Sun, crying? Or this common saying seems to be a statement of truth – the saying "He who distresses the people ere long is distressed himself. No man who commits an evil action ever attains auspicious results."

62-64. Thereafter, knowing the view of god Brahmā, Vāyu the Wind-god, silenced the talk of those people of the same mind (i.e. holding the same opinion regarding Yama and his arrival there) The liberal-minded Vāyu raised Yama slowly with his brawny well-developed hands. He placed him on a seat even as he was agitated and was about to run away. He spoke to Yama the son of Sun, having the Ethereal form and accompanied by his Kāyastha (Accounts-clerk Citragupta).

65-67. "By whom have you been attacked? By whom have you been displaced and banished? By whom has your cloth (record) of the world, the divine cloth, been erased? Speak out everything completely. Or may this god Brahmā say? O dear one, he who is the lord of all, shall grant you the uplift. O son of Mārtaṇḍa (Sun), he will remove all the misery in your heart."

68. On being addressed thus by the Windgod, Yama, the son of the Lord of Day (the Sun), looked to the face of Nārada, the son of Brahmā and slowly uttered the following words in a voice choked with tears.

CHAPTER FOUR

An Appeal by Yama

Yama said :

1. O Lord Pitāmaha, Grandsire of the world, listen to my words. O Lord, humiliation of one's exploits is worse than death.

2. O lotus-born deity, he who is devoid of selfish motives and desire, and does not carry out his appointed task, falls into hell which is like a blind well.

3. O lotus-seated one, the employee who does not implement the direction, but continues to consume the wealth of his master, shall be a worm in the decaying wood.

4. The employee who, out of greed, consumes (i.e. misappropriates) the wealth of the common subjects or the king falls into hell for a period of three hundred Kalpas.

5. He who is interested only in selfish gains and so robs his master, shall be a slow-witted mouse in the house for three hundred Kalpas.

6. The employee who, enjoying himself in his house, shirks his own work and compels the king's servants to do his work also, shall take the birth of a cat.

7-8a. O Lord ! It is at your behest that after due consultation with sages and texts on DharmaŚāstra that I had been administering justice and governing the subjects commending the merit of the meritorious and condemning the sin of the sinners.

8b-9. Since the beginning of the present Kalpa so long as it is your day, I can carry out my duties by dint of your command. But today I have been defeated (and overpowered) in my work by King Rukmāṅgada.[1]

10. O Lord of the Universe, afraid of that king, the entire ocean-girt Earth does not eat anything on the day of Viṣṇu (the Ekādaśī day) that is destructive of all sins.

11. People eschew all holy rites; they abandon the worship of Pitṛs, they do not worship Devas, they neglect pilgrimages, holy ablutions and other good rites.

12. O bestower of honour, they eschew both the systems of philosophy—Yoga and Sāṅkhya. They neglect the perfect knowledge and the knowable; they abandon self study of Vedas and the performance of Homas; (over and above all these) they commit many number of sins.

13-15a. Still they go to the region of Viṣṇu by observing fast on the day of Hari. They go to the world of Viṣṇu alongwith their fathers and grandfathers. Their fathers and father's fathers, mother's fathers, their fathers and their ancestors—all these go to the world of Viṣṇu.

15b-19. O Lord, this is the misery that cuts me to the quick wiping off my writings (i.e. decrees), the fathers of their beloved ones go to the abode of Viṣṇu (?). A man is born of the seed of his ancestors, he is held in the belly of the bearer (woman). He who commits any sin, has to experience the fruits thereof. But O Brahmā, the seed that originates from the nurse is sown by another. It may perhaps redeem both the sides, the one who is offered the Piṇḍa and the one to whom the body belongs. But the wife has no seed nor the wife holds him in her womb. Then, O Lord of the Universe, how does her side attain the greatest region through the greatness of the merit of the son-in-law ? Therefore, my head aches.

1. VV. 9-25 a: This is another way of describing the glory and efficacy of the Ekādaśī Vrata.

20. O Lord, no purpose of mine is served, thanks to this sort of employment, whoever observes fast on the Ekādaśī day leaves me off and goes to Hari.

21. O Lotus-born deity, he uplifts three generations including himself. After leaving off my path, he goes to Hari's mansion.

22-24. No man attains such a destination as that of a devotee who performs the holy rite of Viṣṇu—Not even if he performs sacrifices (Yajñas), goes on pilgrimage to the holy centres or gives charitable gifts or performs those Vratas with the exception of those pertaining to Viṣṇu. No one giving up life in water or fire attains such a goal. O god Brahmā neither the person who gives up his body by the Yoga practice nor he who falls down from a precipice attains that goal. O most excellent one among those who attain good goals, it is the truth that has been uttered by me.

25. Any human being, even if he perpetrates extremely wicked actions, goes to the world of Dharaṇīdhara (Viṣṇu who holds and supports the Earth). If the man smears his limbs with the fruits of embylic myrobalan and if he has no interest in sweet juices and meals on the Ekādaśī day.

26. I have become disappointed because I have no work on the Earth. Hence, I have resorted to your pair of lotuslike feet. O cause of creation, sustenance and dissolution (of the universe) make time propitious for the attainment of fearlessness on this mere intimation.*

*But if the reading is sarga-sthiti-nāśa-hetoḥ as in my text, the verse means.

"O Lord, who grant immunity from fear by mere request, fix up the time for attaining creation, sustenance and destruction."

27. May not the sinful men be devoid of restraint through my Bhūtagaṇas (attendants). Let them be chained or tied with ropes. Let them come near me and be under my control.

28. The path oppressed by the heat of the sun is broken because crowds of people are being released very quickly at the hands of Viṣṇu's attendants from the hell Kumbhī. They go to the splendid abode of the lord who is greater than the greatest.

CHAPTER FIVE

The lamentation of Yama

Yama continued:

1. The path of the discus-bearing lord has been furnished and rubbed, O deity worshipped by the three worlds, by men who pass through it without break.

2. O Lord of the Universe, I consider the world of Viṣṇu to be infinite in magnitude, since it is not filled with the floods of people with all living beings cropping up like lotuses.

3-4. O Pitāmaha, (Grandsire of the universe) people adhering to their duties, people following other men's duties, pure people and impure people, every one observes fast on the day of Viṣṇu and goes to the world of Viṣṇu, at the behest of the king. The entire world is accommodated only in the residence of Mādhava. This king is hence our great enemy. He is particularly your enemy as well.

5. O Lord of the worlds, undoubtedly he must be curbed and restrained. For the last one thousand years, he has ruled over the sphere of the world.

6-8a. Immeasurable number of persons have been taken over by him to the world beloved of Hari. They were enabled to ride Garuḍa. They were given forms having four arms; they were neatly clad in yellow garments; they were garlanded and smeared with sweet-smelling unguents. If he continues to abide by the holy rite of Ekādaśī, O Lord of Devas, this beloved devotee of Viṣṇu will take the entire world to the region of Viṣṇu free from ailments.

8b-9. This staff of justice and this cloth (the scroll recording details of acts of omission and commission of men) have been released by your feet (i.e. by you). My incomparable guardianship of the world has been nullified by that king Rukmāṅgada. Blessed is that lady who has borne him.

10. If the son is superior to others in good qualities, he becomes competent to destroy the miseries of his mother. Of what avail is a child that is born, if it brings distress to its mother ?

11. If the son does not harass his enemies like the sun in the month of Jyeṣṭha, the labour pain of the mother has gone in vain. O Lord, she is one having a bad son.

12-13a. That son is called the ailment or diseased part from the mother's womb born on this earth, if his fame does not shine like the lightning among the clouds, the son who does not uplift his father's side through learning or strength.

13b-16. The son who is deprived of virtue, wealth and love, though born on the Earth is only an ailment in the belly of his mother. His life is futile. O Brahmā, there is undoubtedly one heroic mother—the lady from whom is born Rukmāṅgada for the purpose of erasing my writings. Such a thing as this has never been accomplished by any king. O Lord of the Universe, even in the Purāṇas (or even since ancient times) this wiping off of the cloth has not been heard of. Seeing this king adhering to his service to Hari, proclaiming aloud by means of drum and destroying the path leading to my mansion, I cannot continue to be alive.

CHAPTER SIX

God Brahmā's Reply

Brahmā said :

1. What surprising thing has been seen by you ? Why do your feel distressed ? Distress at the good points in others is an agony that lasts till death.

2. O Sauri (Son of the Sun), how does a man not attain the highest region by observing fast on the day of the Lord, the mere utterance of whose name enables one to attain the same ?

3. A single bow offered to Kṛṣṇa is on a par with the sacred final (Avabhṛtha) ablutions in ten horse-sacrifices. Moreover, the person who performs ten horse-sacrifices may be reborn in this Saṁsāra, but the man who makes obeisance to Kṛṣṇa is never reborn.

4. If at the tip of one's tongue the two syllables HARI are present, what has one to do with the holy centres of Kurukṣetra, Kāśī and Vraja ?

5-6. A Brāhmaṇa who indulges in sexual intercourse with a Cāṇḍāla woman, especially during her monthly course, and eats food cooked in spirituous liquor, can eschew heaps of sins accumulated by perpetrating forbidden acts of eating the forbidden food and of cohabiting with a forbidden woman, if he but remembers Hari at the time of death. He (thereby) attains (Sāyujya (complete identity) with Viṣṇu and is liberated from the bondage of worldly existence.

7. If one gets salvation on uttering his name, how is it that he should not get it by observing fast on his day ? He who is sung about in it (fasting period), is the Puruṣottama who becomes contemplated.

8. Even if he were to utter the name of Lord Janārdana sportingly or listens to it, a man acquires equality with the waters of Gaṅgā in regard to sanctity and meritoriousness.

9. Puruṣottama, the Sovereign Lord of the worlds, is the cause of our birth. How can a wicked-minded fellow (like you) chastise the person who observes fast on his (Viṣṇu's) day ?

10. That you have not been ground down into powder, that you have not been tightly bound by them, is due to the honour bestowed on us. You are not trying to understand the real point from me.

11. The employee who does not know the most excellent and loyal devotees of the king on the Earth is subjected to arduous exertion and is again kept captive by them.

12. Persons favourite with the king should not be apprehended as culprits by an employee (a servant of a king). Achieving their objects through the favour of the master, they may get the employee dismissed.

13. Similar is the position of the sinners who bow down to Janārdana. How will you restrain them out of foolhardiness, O son of Bhāskara ?

14. O son of Divākara (Sun-god), O son of Bhāskara I may help you with the devotee of Śiva or Bhāskara (Sun-god) or my own devotees, but never with the devotees of Hari.

15. Puruṣottama is the Primordial deity among all Devas.

16. Restraining the devotees of Madhusūdana (God Viṣṇu) is not proper even if they fraudulently observe the holy rite of Ekādaśī during the lunar fortnight.

17-18. If they have slighted you, I cannot help you. O son of the Sun, if any help is rendered to you that will be injustice to me. It may even destroy my body. There may even be reversion from the post of Brahmā that is attained through high merit which I have achieved during the course of my life in the company of Viṣṇu's devotees.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The statement of Brahmā

Yama submitted :

1-2a. Dear grand-sire, in bowing down at the feet of the Veda, the benefit has been achieved by me. O Lord of the Universe, I shall not go again and join my duties while the king called Rukmāṅgada is ruling over the world.

2b-3. O excellent one among the deities, if when the day of Hari arrives, you are able to shake him from his courageous resolve, I shall be your servant. O Lord, he is my great foe. My cloth (account of merits and sins) has been rubbed (and erased) by him.

4. By making him take his food on the day of Kṛṣṇa (i.e. Ekādaśī), I shall feel as if I have accomplished all my objects like a person who has offered balls of rice to the manes at Gayā.

5. From today onwards, those persons cannot be restrained by me—those persons by whom Hari, the Lord of the Devas, is remembered or eulogised or by whom the fast is undertaken on his day.

6. Those men who burst into ejaculation, even fraudulently, with the word 'Hari', are liberated from the path leading to the mother's womb. They are clever people. They do not enter the sphere of writing on my cloth (of virtue and sins). They are worthy of being bowed down to by the excellent groups of heaven-walkers (i.e. gods).

Sauti said :

7. In connection with the affair (problem) of the son of Vivasvān (i.e. Yama), the Kuśa-emblemed god Brahmā had a desire to do something in his honour. He therefore pondered thus.

8-9. The Lord, adorned by the Bhūtas (living beings) pondered for a moment. The omnipresent Lord thereafter assumed a form that would terrify all living beings. He, thereafter, procreated therein a young woman who fascinated the worlds. That gentle lady, mentally created by him, the most excellent of all beautiful women, appeared splendid.

10-11. Fully bedecked in all ornaments, she stood in front of him. On seeing her fully endowed with the wealth of beauty, he (Brahmā) spoke to his own people who being deluded by lust for her, were ogling at her. Brahmā closed his eyes for fear of committing a sinful offence.

12-13. He who looks with lustful eyes or thinks about with lascivious mind, at one's own mother, or daughter, daughter-in-law or brother's wife, preceptor's wife or the king's wife falls into the terrible hell; by thinking about a Cāṇḍāla woman also, the man falls into a hell.

14. The man who becomes perturbed on seeing these young women, loses all his merits acquired in the course of various births. His merits thus become futile but not otherwise.

15. If he indulges in sexual intercourse with them, ten thousand merits of his are wasted away. As the merit goes on diminishing he becomes more and more sinful and eventually he is born as a rock-rat.

16-17. Hence no intelligent man should think about them or see them with lustful eyes. Once the sons have attained their twelfth year, they must not stroke the feet of even their mother. The mother should not get herself applied with oil over her body by sons who have reached the age of youth then. A clever son may engage his mother whose age is more than sixty, in anointing his body with oil.

18. Whether an old man or a young man, no one shall ask his daughter-in-law to massage his feet. It is proclaimed that both of them will fall into the Raurava hell full of burning coal.

19-20. O king, the daughter-in-law who shows her uncovered limbs to her father-in-law shall be knocked and kicked and will be eaten by worms therein in the hell. The same goal awaits that sinful man who gets his feet cleaned by the hands of his daughter-in-law or makes her bathe him or smear oil over him. In the hell, he shall be eaten by worms with needlelike snouts and black faces, for a period of one full Kalpa.

21. Hence no man shall glance at other's women, or one's own daughter or daughter-in-law with lustful eyes and thoughts. Immediately the man falls or incurs sins.

22-23. It was because he thought over like this that he looked at her, with a subtle, penetrating view-point. It is nothing but a mere skeleton (lit. cage) of bones covered with flesh and skin that appears a face, lofty, circular and splendid. The shining eyes seen present in women comprise suet and flesh.

24. The extremely protruding mass of flesh has been piled up over the breasts. The three folds of skin on the upper part of the belly (which are regarded as a mask of beauty) show lesser (distribution of) flesh.

25. In the buttocks again, more flesh has been stacked. This is the passage for urine. It is a private part, of which the three worlds are enamoured.

26. It is joined with the Apāna wind (i.e. this wind functions there). It is always vile (with bad odour) and contemptible always. More flesh is heaped up than the swollen bellows in the part of the buttocks.

27. Just as a log of wood is sawn into two (half way through), so also is the region of shanks (thighs ?). It (the body) is filled with semen, flesh, bone, fat and marrow. How can it be beautiful ?

28. What is there by way of essence, in the body of men wherein the main constituents are flesh, fat and marrow ? Tell me which man will be enamoured of the body, nourished and grown plump by means of faeces, urine and other dirts.

29. Viriñci (God Brahmā) pondered thus, after seeing everything with his vision of knowledge. He took courage and spoke to that lady whose gait was like that of a female elephant.

30. "O fair-complexioned lady, since you have been created by me mentally you have become a lady of beautiful limbs, competent to madden the minds of men."

31-33a. Then she bowed to the fourfaced God and said : "O Lord, see the entire universe consisting of the mobile and immobile beings deluded and falling unto senselessness. It includes even the Yogins who are totally sinless. O lotus-born deity, keeping you in the beginning (inclusive of you), there is no man in the three worlds who does not get agitated and perturbed on seeing me.

33b-34. Boasting about oneself should not be indulged in by one who wishes for one's own auspicious welfare. Even an extremely pure man falls into hell due to selfpraise. Still, O Brahmā, the glorification or self-praise must be stated to achieve some special end.

35. O Brahmā, indeed, it must be to make some one excited and perturbed that I have been created by you. O Lord of the Universe, command me. Mention who he is. I shall definitely make him excited.

36-37. O Lord, on seeing me even a mountain becomes infatuated. What then of an ordinary man endowed with consciousness who inhales and exhales ? The description of the powerful impact of a woman's glance is described in the Purāṇas. It causes madness in men and is destructive of all holy vows and rites difficult to be observed.

38. Till then the man treads the path of the good, till then the man has perfect control over his sense organs, till then he retains his humility and sense of shame, till the shaft-like glances of dalliance-minded damsels pierce his heart and destroy his fortitude. The shafts that are discharged from the well-drawn bow of the eye-brow, the eyes having blue lashes, reach up to the ears.[1]

39. Fie upon the poetry of that stupid ill-informed poet who equates the face of a lady to the moon. Is there any of these in the moon—viz. the knitting of the eyebrow, the side-glances expressing the wounding look, fury, pleasure and laughter ?

40. O Lord, only when it is drunk does the spirituous liquor cause delusion in the mind of a clever man. But a youthful maiden excites delusion even when she is seen or remembered by a man. So she is more powerful than the spirituous liquor.

41. O great grand sire of the world I have been created

1. Just as an archer bends his bow stretching the bow-string up to his ear and discharges the arrow which pierces the heart of the enemy, the shaft-like glances are discharged from the bow-like bent eye-brows of women with blue eye-lashes—eyes which are long upto the ears. Such longish eyes were traditionally regarded beautiful.

by you for fascinating men. Command me. Who is it ? I shall enchant even the three worlds.

Brahmā said :

42. O Lady with thighs like the trunk of an elephant, O fortunate one with the gait like that of an elephant in rut, the truth has been expressed by you. There is nothing that cannot be achieved by you in the three worlds.

43. O fair-complexioned lady, you are defiling even my mind also although I control and steady it by means of the goad of perfect knowledge.

44. Such being your charm how then will you not captivate the minds of people ? O large-eyed lady, truly your beauty of form is seductive.

45. I find that the entire Universe including the immortal being, is motionless. O excellent-faced lady, achieve that for which you have been created.

46. O auspicious lady, on the earth, in the city of Vidiśā[1] there is a king named Rukmāṅgada whose wife Sandhyāvalī is comparable to you in beauty.[2]

47. His son Dharmāṅgada was born of her. The son surpasses the father. He is endowed with the strength of a hundred elephants. He is like the sun in exploits.

48-52. In forbearance he is equal to the Earth; in profundity he is comparable to the ocean; like the fire, he shines with his brilliance, he is comparable to Vaivasvata Yama, God of Death in fury; he is like Bali in munificence; he is comparable to the wind god in mobility; in gentleness he is equal to the moon; he is as handsome as Manmatha the god of love; the prince is equal to Jīva (Bṛhaspati) and Bhārgava

1. A few years back (under the British) it was called Bhilsa. Now its old name Vidiśā has been adopted. In the NP. here and in the Devī Purāṇa (Ch. 76) it is called Vidiśā.

2. VV. 46-73 contain instructions and guidance given by god Brahmā to Mohini how to make king Rukmāṅgada break his Ekādaśi Vrata and thereby make people go to the region of Yama. This plot in a nutshell is developed in details in subsequent chapters. The denouement is very interesting.

(Śukra) (preceptors of Devas and Daityas) in statesmanship. O fair-faced lady, the entire Jambūdvīpa alone is enjoyed by his father (Rukmāṅgada). But the other Dvīpas (continents) are conquered by Dharmāṅgada. He has not yet known the thrill of a contact with a youthful maiden due to his bashfulness. Thousands of women come to him of their own accord but they are avoided by him. He does not move astray from his pledged word.

53. O fortunate lady with sweet smiles, in his father's house three hundred mothers look upon him equally without any difference in their affection, O lady with gold-like complexion !

54. O woman of beautiful limbs ! On the excellent mount Mandara, approach the King to whom Dharma is of prominent importance and who is adorned with the jewel of a son.

55. The king carried away to that place by his horse will stay there enamoured of your song, O woman of beautiful limbs, even leaving off his horse.

56-57. Climbing on to the top of the mountain he will come into contact with you. On meeting the king there, O gentle lady, you must say thus : — O king, undoubtedly, I will become your wife. But O lord, whatever I say must be definitely carried out by you.

58-62. Enamoured of your beauty the king will promise it to you. Thereupon, after a few days have elapsed you shall hold him by the right hand with imprecations. O woman of lovely eyebrows and charming limbs, when the king appears to be rapturously eager for cohabitation with you, you shall laughingly remind the king of his earlier words : "O King, you have sworn that you will abide by my word. Hence, O king, keep your promise. I think the time has now come for the same." When this is said by you, the king will certainly say thus on account of the high value and importance of the promise. "There is no doubt about it, I shall keep it. Tell me what shall I give you?" When he replies thus, O auspicious fair-faced lady, Rukmāṅgada, the king and father of Dharmāṅgada must be addressed thus by you.

63-68a. "Never should the fast be observed on the Ekādaśī day of Hari. O my darling, your fast is a hindrance to my sexual intercourse with you. He who does not attend to his own wife who is charming and who is endowed with youthful virility, he who expects another opportunity (i.e. he who postpones) is a man of wicked actions. Certainly, he goes to hell. Due to your fasting, I am abandoned by you for three nights. But actually I am incapable of staying even a moment without you. When the time of Śrāddha has come and the Brāhmaṇas sit and wait (for the performance), if the wife solicits the husband for cohabitation, she must be enjoyed at the very same time."

O woman of sweet limbs, even after being urged thus, if the king does not carry out your request, you shall say thus thereafter :

68b-69. "O King if you do not abandon your fast on the day of Hari, cut off the head of your own son Dharmāṅgada with an excellent sword, and place it on my lap.

70. O king if you do not carry out this loving wish of mine, you shall become deficient in virtue, merits and you will undoubtedly fall into hell."

71-72. O excellent lady, if, on hearing your words, he does not injure his son who is like his own vital breath unto him, he shall pay heed to the advice of the Brāhmaṇas and shall take food on the day of Ekādaśī. Thereupon, the people will go near Yama as before after being tied with ropes by the attendants. Taking the writing (of Chitragupta) as authority, there will be persons occupying hell. Thus what you do will be splendid.

73. Or if the glorious king, abiding by the promise, really kills his son he will go to the region of Padmanābha, that is worthy of being worshipped by the immortal beings wholly.

CHAPTER EIGHT

The description of Mount Mandara

Sauti said :

1. On hearing the words of Brahmā, that lotus-eyed woman said—"Give a name unto me with which I should go to Mandara mountain.

2. O Lord of the Universe, children must be named by the father. The name is said to be destructive of sins. O Kuśa-emblemed God, kindly do so."

Brahmā said :

3. Since, O beautiful woman, the entire universe is enchanted by you. O gentle lady, Mohinī (enchantress) as your name shall be true to your attributes.

4. O woman of lovely eyebrows, if he comes into a pleasure-giving contact with you, thanks to a clear vision of yours, he will have to experience all the ten states of a love-lorn lover).

5. On being thus commanded, the fair lady bowed down to the lotus-seated deity and set off to the mountain Mandara wistfully gazed at on the way by the immortal ones (gods).

6. By the third Muhūrta (one Muhurta— = 48 minutes) she reached the summit of the mountain. It had been impossible for Vāsuki to go round it once (i.e. to encircle it bodily).[1]

7. It was this mountain that was formerly lifted up by Hari (in the form of Divine Tortoise) and used for churning (the milk ocean) by the Devas and Dānavas. Sindhu (the ocean) which extends to six hundred thousand Yojanas is the deep pit made by this mountain.

1. This refers to the churning of the ocean by gods and demons for attaining nectar. Mount Mandara was used as the churning rod and serpent Vāsuki as the string to wind round it for churning (Mbh-Adi-Ch.18). The Mbh. regards mount Mandara of the Himalayan range as the real Mandara. The claim of a hill 30 miles to the south of Bhagalpur in Bhagalpur district, with grooves of artificial chiselling to indicate the impression of the coils of a serpent, disqualifies its claim of being the real Mandara—De. 124-125.

8. This great mountain was not broken even when it rubbed against the physical body of the Divine Tortoise. O leading king, when it fell into the ocean all the hidden parts of the ocean were exposed by this mountain.

9. O Brāhmaṇas, water gushed out from this mountain went up through the path of the Brahmāṇḍa (Cosmic Egg). Great fire was generated by this mountain due to attrition when it came into contact with the bony shell of the (Divine) Tortoise.

10. It is on this mountāin that Lord Digambara (naked deity i.e. Śiva) resides along with his goblins, but, O exellent Brāhmaṇas, he is not visible either to the Devas or to the Dānavas.

11. It was for a great period of time viz. ten thousand years that this mountain ground and rubbed the armlets of the discus-bearing Lord.[1]

12. This is a veritable mansion of jewels equipped with many kinds of minerals.

13. It is the sporting ground of the heaven-dwellers; it is the place for penance of the sages, it enhances the zest of the divine maidens for sexual dalliance; this great mountain is the source of jewels and medicinal herbs.

14. Its girth at the root is ten thousand Yojanas, its width at the top is also that much. With the length too being as many Yojanas, it rises up as the measuring rod of the three world.

15. It illuminates the surface of the Earth and the sky by means of its golden peaks full of jewels and gems. On reaching it the son of Kaśyapa (i.e. Sun) loses his splendour. He becomes devoid of rays.

16-17. The lady of golden splendour reached the Mandara mountain whose parts are the abodes of gold (ingots). Endowed with her own splendour she made the mountain Mandara the destroyer of the brilliance of the sun, (i.e. surpass it) with her own lustre. For the purpose of exciting the lustful passion of the king, she sat on the rocky surface of the mountain that extended to seven Yojanas and that had a divine bluish splendour.

1. The description of the churning for Amṛta differs slightly in the Mbh and other Purāṇas in minor details. But the object of the NP. here is to describe the glory of mount Mandara and not the churning of the nectar.

18. O leading king,[1] there stands on that rocky surface an adamantine Liṅga, ten Hastas in height as well as in girth.

19. It is famous by the name of Vṛṣaliṅga. It appeared like a great palace among the clouds. O excellent Brāhmaṇas that girl gave a sweet and excellent performance of music.

20. That charming lady sat near that Liṅga and played on the strings of the lute beating time harmoniously. Her songs were exquisitely destructive of tedium.

21-22. It had the Mūrcchanā (the regulated rise and fall of sounds) and the Tāla (beating time). It had the Gandhāra note in its composition. O leading king (?), when the song that heightened passionate love flowed forth from her like this, O leading sages, even the immobile beings began to desire it. Neither divine nor non-divine music had ever been like that before.

23-24. On hearing that sweet note flowing out of the mouth of Mohinī, the note that enchanted all living beings, Lord Śiva became lustful and wanted to enjoy her in that very form of Digambara (nakedness). But, on being seen by Pārvatī he felt ashamed.

1. We are to suppose that the words of address 'O king' in such contexts, are addressed to King Māndhātā by Vasiṣṭha.

CHAPTER NINE

A dialogue between Rukmāṅgada and Dharmāṅgada

Sauti said :

1-3. O Brāhmaṇas, the leading king Rukmāṅgada enjoyed all human pleasure. In diverse ways he worshipped the yellow-robed Lord Hari. He had already placed his feet on the heads of his enemies who dared to fight him. By making the pathway leading to Yama's land empty he conquered Yama, the son of Vivasvat (Sun). He made the path of Viṣṇu's world thronged with human beings. At the proper time, he called his son Dharmāṅgada and spoke thus :

4. "O son, protect this earth full of wealth all round, with your own might. Be firmly resolved in your own duties.

5. If the father does not hand over the kingdom when the son has become competent, there is no doubt in this that his merits and fame perish.

6. The father who does not feel happiness, thanks to his efficient son, must be certainly known as the greatest sinner in the three worlds.

7. The son who, after becoming strong enough to do so, does not take up the burden of his father, is no better than the excrement of his mother. He is a two-tongued serpent devoid of poison.

8. He is the real son who becomes more famous than the father on this Earth and illuminates the places like the sun with his rays.

9. If the father keeps awake during the night due to the sorrow resulting from the misdemeanour of the son, the son stays in hell till the final dissolution of all living beings.

10. He who honours the words of his father and carries out his behests in the house, attains Sāyujya with the deity, while he will be eulogised by the gods stationed in the heaven.

11. O son, as for me, I have been attracted by holy actions in the world for the sake of subjects. Stationed in the activity of protection (i.e. abiding by my duty as their protector) I have never enjoyed or slept of my own accord.

12. O son, As long as you were unable to shoulder the responsibilities of the kingdom, ease and happiness was not attained by me, as I was determined to restrain those who partook of food on the day of Lord Viṣṇu (i.e. on Ekādaśī days).

13. Among the people some (i.e. Śaivites) followed the path of the devotees of Śiva. Some abided by the path of the Sun, others were the followers of Brahmā, while others (i.e. Śāktas) stood in the path of Pārvatī.[1]

14-16. (Many excuses were offered by people for eating food on Ekādaśī day). "In the morning and in the evening, we are sitting up and performing the Agnihotra (Fire-worship) rites. Moreover a small boy, a young man, an old man, a pregnant woman, a small girl, a sick man or a physically handicapped person cannot undertake a fast." When people protested like this, I refuted them everywhere by means of words mentioned in the Purāṇas. I spent many days over this. For the purpose of abiding happiness of the subjects, I enlightened them in various ways.

17-18. I chastised them and made them desist from taking food. The scholars were made to refrain from food (on the authority of sacred scriptures (i.e. they were convinced that sacred texts prescribed the Ekādaśī rite). The ignorant people were made to refrain from taking food by chastising them by means of deterrent punishment. Thus all were forced to observe fast on the day of Hari. Thereby being thus engaged I did not enjoy any personal happiness on the Earth.

19. O dear son, the king who wishes to protect his subjects shall not inflict on them miseries from himself or from others (from his own people or officers or through enemies).

1. This shows that at the time of the NP, the sects of god Brahmā and Sun were equally prominent like the Vaiṣṇava, Śaiva and Śākta sects.

20. To such a king ever-lasting worlds have been declared (as a reward) in the Purāṇas. I exist for the sake of the subject O gentle boy, and never for myself.

21. I wish to enjoy the pleasures derived from hunting and other strenuous exercises. O son, I never desire the pleasures of drinking bouts and gambling.

22-23. Dear son, a king indulging in these vices will perish ere long. Through your favour, my dear son, I wish now to roam about the mountains, forests, rivers and lakes of diverse kinds under the pretext of hunting. After entrusting you with the burden of kingdom, I am desirous of enjoying covetable pleasures.

24. All these things which I had in my mind have been disclosed to you. If they are carried out, you will earn a great fame; if they are not done, you will fall into hell.

Dharmāṅgada said :

25. "I shall do all these things. Enjoy the pleasures that appeal to your mind. O dear father, I shall bear the heavy burden of kingdom with pleasure.

26. No other holy virtue except the execution of your behest is acceptable to me. A son who does not act according to the directives of his father incurs fall, though he may be performing holy rites.

27. Hence, I shall carry out your order : Here have I joined my palms (in reverential promise)." When these words were spoken, the king became delighted.

28. Learning again the availability of the game, Rukmāṅgada became desirous of going to the forest. Dharmāṅgada was delighted in his mind. He summoned his subjects and said :

29. "I have been commanded by my father to strive for your protection and welfare. My father's behests must be carried out in every respect by me who wish for the attainment of Dharma.

30. O subjects, a son has no other Dharma (holy duty) except the execution of the directives of his father. When I hold the rod of justice, even Yama cannot be the chastiser.

31. After realising this, the Garuḍa-emblemed Lord (i.e. Viṣṇu) should be remembered by you all. Janārdana is to be worshipped by you after dedicating the fruit thereof to the Brahman.

32. You must eschew the sense of my-ness, and the feeling of possessiveness). You must worship in the manner laid down for your caste. Thereby, you will gain everlasting worlds. There is no doubt about this.

33. O subjects, something in addition to the path of my father has been pointed out to you, since you will be endowed with the rite of dedicating the fruit to the Brahman. May all of you be adapts in perfect knowledge.

34. You must not take food on the day of Hari. This is the permanent path in accordance with the injunction of my father. A special additional thing has been mentioned to you by me viz. abidance in the Brahman.

35. This adherence to the Brahman is to be practised by persons who know the truth. It is rare to be achieved. There is no return therefrom. As for the observance of the fast, the stipulation is that it must be observed necessarily."

36. Dharmāṅgada had no rest or sleep by day or at night. He spent his day in consoling and cajolling his subjects again and again.

37. He used to tour everywhere, through his heroic valour. He weeded the earth of all the thorns (undesirable elements). The following loud proclamation used to be announced daily with the beating of drums placed on the heads of elephants :

38-41. "O people of the world, may Hari the Lord of the Devas, be contemplated while engaged in the threefold activities (?) Refrain from taking food on the Dvādaśī day; be free from the feeling of possessiveness. The Lord partakes of oblation offered to gods and manes. He alone is the Supreme person. The Lord of the worlds is to be remembered in the Sun, in the Kṛśākāśa (in the minutest of Ethereal space) and in the Visarga (subsidiary creation) by all men who are desirous of accomplishing virtue, love and wealth. Worship of Viṣṇu has been enjoined among the duties of one's own caste. It is in the path of the good. Mādhava himself is the Enjoyer and (the object of enjoyment. He alone is the supreme Man (Puruṣottama). Employment of him alone in all holy rites is the proper thing.

42-43. Thus it proclaimed to the people by means of beating of drums with the rumbling sound of the cloud, O leading Brāhmaṇas. Thus the father of Dharmāṅgada realised the virtue of his son. O Brāhmaṇas, on realising that his son was equipped with the practical holy rites even more than himself, the delighted king said to his wife who stood there like another Lakṣmī.

44. "O fair-complexioned Sandhyāvalī, I am blessed. You too are blessed. To both of us is born as son white as the moon on the Earth.

45. Salvation has never been seen by anyone anywhere. Much about it has been heard by the ears. But the birth of our good son is the super-salvation that has been attained by us.

46. O fair lady, if the son is richly endowed with humility, good conduct and heroism, if he is valorous, certainly it is salvation obtained by the father in his very house.

47-48. Bliss is the form of the Brahman. Hundred such blisses are acquired by the father through his son, O woman of beautiful limbs, by his auspicious and holy rites.

49. O gentle lady, there is nothing on a par with this in the whole world consisting of mobile and immobile beings, if the good son takes over the burden of his father and lifts it himself.

50. So, I am delighted now. I shall go to the forest for hunting the deer and have some good sports. O woman of wide eyes, I am freed of my sins by affording protection to the people. I shall now freely move about.

CHAPTER TEN

The dialogue between Rukmāṅgada and Vāmadeva

Vasiṣṭha continued :

1-2. On hearing the words of her husband, the wide-eyed lady said : "O king, the truth has been spoken by you. O leading king, just as the sages say, there cannot be a greater happiness than that of a son. In this world it is equal to that of the greatest being named Viṣṇu.

3-4. The burden of responsibility arising out of the administration of the seven continents has been placed on the son by you. Abstaining from the violence to the deer, worship Janārdana by means of sacrifices; abandon desire for worldly pleasures; serve the celestial river; this is the proper and justifiable course of life to you but not the killing of the deer.

5. O king, resorting to worldly pleasures by fathers having grown up sons is like leaving the amorous marks with the nail on the breasts of an old woman.

6. O ruler of the Earth, worship Lord Hṛṣīkeśa (Viṣṇu) in the house. It is not proper on your part to kill innocent herds of deer.

7-8a. Non-violence has been glorified as the greatest virtue in the Purāṇas. One who maintains himself through violence pursues holy rites in vain. He who follows the path of violence does not gain anything, even if he follows the righteous path. O king, good men do not enjoy those things polluted and hurt by others.

8b. Violence to living beings is said to be of six types, O king.

9. The first man responsible for violence is the person who approves of it; the second one is the actual killer; the third one is the person who believes in it (who has faith in it) ; the fourth man (guilty) of violence is he who eats (the meat) ; the fifth man is the person who cooks and O king the sixth one is the person who is a participant in it. Learned men know the Dharma connected with violence is Adharma.

10. O king, a father who resorts to Dharma and who has become old in àge, does not commit sins after entrusting the burden to the son.

11. Eschew the emotional feeling connected with the violence done to the deer. O king, hundreds of kings addicted to the vice of hunting deer have perished.

12-13. Hence I consider the act of striking down deer as wickedness. Excellent deep sympathy and mercy towards deer is seen in the righteous kings. It is with the earnest desire for your welfare that you are being prevented by me." To his wife who repeatedly urged thus, the king spoke these words :

14. O gentle lady, I do not wish to hurt or kill the deer. Under the pretext of hunting deer, I will wander in the forest weeding out thorns (undesirable element) with the bow kept ready in the hand.

15. May my son be among the people, O fairfaced lady, and may I be in the forest. The subjects must be protected from both the beasts of prey and the robbers, by the king.

16. O auspicious lady, the subjects must be protected by oneself or through one's son. The king who does not protect his subjects faces downfall, though he may be virtuous or religious.

17-20. O beloved lady, it is with the protection of people in view that I will be going to the forest. I am devoid of false emotions and feelings. After saying this to her, the king climbed on to an excellent horse like the sun on the peak of the Meru mountain. The horse was defectless, lustrous like the moon, and was as it were the ornament unto the Earth. It was like the celestial horse Uccaiḥśravas in respect of its beauty; it was like the Wind God in its speed. Paying respect to the Earth the king offered his right hand (?) which had given gifts of thousands and crores, which used to press and rub the breasts of beautiful ladies, which had the shape and appearance of the tender sprouts of the Aśoka tree and which bore the marks of a thunderbolt and goad.

21. The ruler of the Earth set off on his journey making the ground quake (beneath him). The excellent king passing many lands reached the forest.

22. Elephants, horses and chariots were shaken off due to the velocity of the horse. The foot soldiers fell unconscious on the surface of the Earth.

23. O king, after traversing hundred and eight Yojanas (one Yojana = 12 kms.) that king all at once reached the great Āśrama (hermitage) of the sages.

24-27. He entered the beautiful hermitage abounding in trees such as clusters of plantain trees, Aśoka, Bakula Mimusops Elengi), Punnāga (nut-meg), Sarala (pine trees), Mātuliṅga (citron trees), Kapittha (feronia elephantum), date palms, jack trees, coconut palms, palmyra, Ketakas, Sinduvāras, Sandalwoods, Tamālas (Xanthochymus epictorius), Pippalas, Campakas, Areca palms, Dāḍimas (pomegranates), thousands of embylic myrobalans, margoas trees, mango trees, Lodhras (a tree with red-white flowers) and many other trees full of ripe fruits. They bent down due to the weight of fruits and many birds perched on them.

28-29. Sweet smelling wind gently blew, wafting the fragrance of the flowers. Searching for the sages therein the king saw Vāmadeva[1], the most excellent Brāhmaṇa who had the lustre of fire and who was surrounded by many disciples. On seeing him the king got down from his horse and bowed to him with great respect.

30. The king was honoured and greeted with Arghya and other things by that sage. Sitting on the Kuśa grass seat he said in a delighted tone :-

31. "On seeing today the lotus-like feet of yours who are ever engrossed in deep meditation, my sins have been eliminated and fruition of my meritorious deeds has been achieved."

32. On hearing the words of king Rukmāṅgada, sage Vāmadeva rejoiced much. After enquiring about his health and welfare he said thus:

1. This is not the Vedic seer Vāmadeva but some other sage of the same name. A number of sages of this name are mentioned in the Mbh. (Sabhā. 7. 17, Vana. 192. 43 H, Śānti. 92-94) and VR. (I. 7. 4. II. 67. 3 etc.)

33. O highly blessed king, my hermitage visited by you, a highly meritorious devotee of Viṣṇu, has become the most sanctified on the surface of the Earth.

34. Which other king on the Earth can attain equality with you by whom Yama has been vanquished and the path leading to his abode has been broken.

35. O king, by compelling them to observe fast on the Dvādaśī day that is destructive of sins, the entire world has been led to the imperishable region of Vaikuṇṭha.

36. After controlling and restraining the subjects on the surface of the Earth soundly through the four splendid Upāyas (means of success, viz. Sāman, dāna, daṇḍa, bheda) they have been led to the region of the slayer of Madhu (i.e. of Viṣṇu) whether they abide by their duties or carry on the duties of others.

37-38. O king, you have come within our view and we had been desirous of seeing you. O king, even a Cāṇḍāla who is a devotee of Viṣṇu is superior to a Brāhmaṇa. Even a Brāhmaṇa devoid of devotion to Viṣṇu is inferior to a Cāṇḍāla. O king, rare indeed are those kings who are devoted to Viṣṇu on the surface of this Earth.

39-40. No king who is not a devotee of Viṣṇu can be the person who embellishes the glory and splendour of the Earth. If the king is not devoted to Hari but is devoted to other Deities, that king is like a woman who has abandoned her husband and is attached to her paramour. Certainly this kind of adverse behaviour affects that king.

41-43a. His behaviour will be contrary to virtue, wealth, love, intelligence and salvation.

Hence, the worship of Viṣṇu that is reasonably laid down has been performed by you. Hence, O king, you are blessed. We too are blessed since we have seen you.

Even as Vāmadeva spoke thus to him, the excellent king, naturally endowed with humility bowed down humbly and said :

43b-45. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, I crave your forgiveness, O holy Lord, I am not like this. O Brāhmaṇa, I am not equal to even the dust of your feet. Never can even the Devas be superior to Brāhmaṇas. A creature (i.e. the individual soul) becomes devoted to Mādhava through the Brāhmaṇas who are satisfied. If they are furious he becomes worthy of being hated (by Mādhava). This is the truth that has been stated by me.

46. Vāmadeva then asked him— Tell me. What shall I give you? O king, there is nothing that cannot be given to you who have come to my house as my guest now.

47. O king, if he gives anything on the earth, it must be that which is the most pleasing to him like the announcement through drums on the day of Viṣṇu which prevents people from taking food.

48. The king thereupon joined his palms in reverence and said to him— I have achieved everything by the sight of the pair of your feet.

49. O Brāhmaṇa, I have a doubt that has persisted for a long time. I am asking you the same since you are a leading Brāhmaṇa, who dispel all doubts.

50. By what meritorious deed has my wife become the most beautiful lady in the three worlds. She looks upon me as though I am superior to Manmatha.

51. Wherever the fair-complexioned gentle lady sets her foot, the earth reveals its great treasures.

52. Her limbs are devoid of the symptoms of old age. There are neither wrinkles nor greying hairs. O excellent sage, she shines always like the lustre of the autumnal moon.

53. O Brāhmaṇa, even without fire she prepares dishes of six tastes. Crores of men take their meal out of the little quantity of food that she cooks.

54. She is a chaste woman. She is by nature munificent; she causes happiness to all living beings. O Brāhmaṇa, disrespect is not expressed by her through words even when she is asleep.

55. My son who is born of her abides by my behest always. O excellent one among the leading Brāhmaṇa, on the surface of this earth, I am the only one who have a son in the sense of the term.

56. My son is a great devotee of his father. He surpasses me by means of his attributes. It is well known on the surface of the Earth that I am only the ruler of a single continent.

57-58a. My son has surpassed me in this respect as he is the protector of all the seven continents. O leading Brāhmaṇa, for my sake, the princess well-known by the name of Vidyullekhā, had been brought by him after conquering many kings in the battlefield.

58b-59a. In the course of six months that Lord equipped with the wealth of beauty conquered those kings and made them stripped of their weapons.

59b-60. He went to the realm of damsels and conquered them in the battle. He brought eight excellent ladies from among them with force and presented them to me with repeated obeisances.

61. Urged by his mother, my son brought and handed over to me the divine and exquisite garments and jewels on the surface of the Earth.

62. Within a day he takes a round of many Yojanas over the Earth and returns to me by nightfall for the purpose of massaging my feet.

63. After massaging my feet, he stands at the threshold at midnight with his coat of mail on. He wakens and pulls up the attendants and servants who are overwhelmed by drowsiness.

64. That is why, O excellent sage, this physical body of mine is free from sickness and ailments. My happiness is immeasurable. My beloved in the house is fully subservient to me.

65. I have numerous horses and elephants. The foodgrains and riches I possess are infinite. All the people on the Earth obey my behests.

66. My present happiness is infinite. What is that meritorious action thanks to the power of which I possess it? Is it what has been performed in the course of this birth or the previous one?

67-68. O Brāhmaṇa, recount to me about my merit after pondering over it in your mind. There is no ailment in the body; the beloved wife is submissive; there is affluence in the house, devotion to Hari and reverence to scholars as well as capacity to give liberally to the Brāhmaṇas. I consider this as originating from my merits.

CHAPTER ELEVAN

Rukmāṅgada meets Mohini

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. On hearing the words of the king, the excellent sage of sound and perfect knowledge thought for a moment. He understood its real cause and said thus :—

Vāmadeva said :

2. O king, formerly you were born of the Śūdra caste.[1] You were oppressed by poverty and harassed by a wicked wife.

3. You sustained yourself by serving others and receiving wages. O king, thus you continued to live for many years, distressed due to misery.

4-5. Thanks to your coming into contact with some Brāhmaṇas, once, your honour went on a pilgrimage to holy centres. O king, after going over all holy centres you reached the holy centre Mathurā and became interested in serving Brāhmaṇas. There, in the company of Brāhmaṇas, you took bath in the waters of the Yamunā.

6-8. At the holy centre named Viśrānti which is the most excellent of all holy centres, in the temple of the Divine

1. The motif of re-birth as an explanation of events in the present birth has been very popular in ancient and mediaeval Indian literature. The soul-denying Buddhists have extensively used it in Jātaka tales on the authority of the Buddha. Jainas used it widely in their Sanskrit-Prākrit-Apabhraṁśa narrative literature. Brahmanical Purāṇas are no exception. The NP. used it in Part-I Chs. 20, 23 with reference to Viṣṇu Vratas. Here too the same device is used to explain the exceptional luck of Rukmāṅgada.

Boar (Varāha), O king you heard the Puranic story being recounted. The holy rite of Aśūnya Sayana,* was being explained. As the Vrata is to be observed for four months on the 2nd tithi of the dark half of each month from Śrāvaṇa onwards, there are, for the completion of the Vrata four pāraṇās—one breaking of fast per month. Hence for its conclusion there are four Pāraṇās (breaking of the fasts). By its observance the Lord of the Devas, Hari, with the lustrous complexion like the cloud who is the Lord of the worlds and the consort of goddess Lakṣmī and the destroyer of all sins, is pleased.

9. Coming again to the temple that holy rite was performed by your honour. This observance called Aśūnya-śayana (non-vacant bed) is highly conducive to prosperity at home.

10-11a. If any one continues the life of a house-holder without observing this rite that destroys sins, O great king, his life is rendered fruitless like that of a barren woman. It appears to me that a happiness of this sort is very rare.

11b. O king, this holy rite must be undertaken on the Dvitīyā day in the month of Śrāvaṇa. It is destructive of rebirths, death and old age.

12. O king, on this day the Lord of the Universe should be worshipped in the company of Lakṣmī with fruits, flowers, incense, sweet-smelling red unguents, charitable gifts of beds and clothes as well as by feeding Brāhmaṇas.

13. O king, everything of this Vrata has been performed by you though they were difficult. O king, this is the full fruition of the same holy rite called Aśūnya. Listen to the other sacred rites mentioned (or observed) by you in detail.

14. It is certain that these results will not have taken place, if the Lord of the Universe had been displeased. The Lord of the Devas had been worshipped by you in the previous birth through the observance of Aśunya rite.

---

*(Formerly this was mentioned as Aśoka Śayana, vide supra I.111.13.

In the region of the author of the NP a month is Pūrṇimānta. Hence the word 'dark half' is not probably used.

15. O leading king, in this birth, you are worshipping Hari by means of the holy rite of Dvādaśī. Surely you will attain the identity with Viṣṇu.

16. O king, thus your enquiry of auspicious nature has been explained by me regarding the origin of your affluence and leading to prosperity of your kinsmen.

17. O king, what else shall I give you or do for you ? By all means you are worthy of everything, as you are a devotee of Janārdana.

The king submitted :—

18. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, I am eagerly desirous of visiting the Mandara mountain. With your permission , I wish to see the various miraculous things there.

19-20. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, after transferring the weighty burden of administering the kingdom that other kings find unbearable, to my son, I have become light(less burdened). I am free to roam about as I please. My duty will be looked after by my son. On hearing the words of the king, Vāmadeva spoke thus :

21. O prominent king, this is the highest duty of the son that he should always extricate his father from distress, out of affection.

22. He who carries out the order of his father to the best of his mental, verbal and physical capacity, shall derive the benefit of having a holy dip in Gaṅgā every day.

23. It is heard mentioned in the Vedic text that if the son goes to Gaṅgā for a holy dip against the expressed desire of his father, he will not attain the usual purity and sanctity.

24. O king, you are contented and blessed. Go as you please. Thanks to the favour of Hari, a meritorious son has been born in your family.

25. After this had been spoken by the sage, the glorious king mounted his horse and rode swiftly like the Wind God himself.

26-27a. Looking at and observing all the mountains, forests, rivers and the wonderful lakes and parks, the king ere long reached the mountain Mandara.

27b-28a. On his way he went round the white mountain 'Gandhamādana',[1] crossed the Mahāmeru and saw the northern Kurus.

28b-30. He reached the Mandara mountain refulgent with the splendour of a hundred suns and covered in gold all round. On being rubbed with the hands of Hari it had generated liquid gold. The whole region there was full of trees and decorated with many metals and minerals. With many fountains over it, it was embellished with many caves. It was full of ten thousand rivers and was washed by the auspicious waters of the river Gaṅgā.

31-32a. It was frequented by bevies of youthful maidens with rendezvous for serving their lovers.

The mountain was adorned with ripe, sweet smelling, potlike big fruits of trees which resembled the breasts of youthful damsels.

32b-33. The place was resonant with the buzzing sound of the bees and was reverberating with the cooing of cuckoos. On seeing the mountain resound with the cries of many living beings all round, the king entered the great mountain.

34-35. He desired to climb on to the top of the mountain. He was curious to find out the path whereby he could climb up. As he spied all round, he saw flocks of birds from the trees moving out attracted by the charming voice of an enchanting lady. He saw the birds flying quickly over the trees and he too went swiftly alongwith them.

36-37. The enchantingly sweet sound coming out of the mouth of that bewitching beauty entered his ears also. Fascinated by it, he left off his horse that had crossed the path as if in three steps. The whole path of the mountain was spell-bound by the sweet song of the enchantress. Instantaneously, the king saw a lady stationed on the mountain. She had the lustre of molten gold. She was created like the staff of Kāma.

1. The location of Gandhamādana is disputed. M. Ali (The Geography of the Purāṇas, Fig. 7—the sketch of the Hindukush Range) shows it to be the Khwaja Mohammad Range while De identifies it with Rudra Himālayas—a part of the Kailāsa range. But in either case it is difficult to understand why a traveller from India (Vidiśā, in the case of King Rukmāṅgada) need cross or visit in passing Uttara Kuru (modern Kirghizia, Samarkand and Turkemenistan-vide D.P. Mishra's Studies in Proto-history of India, pp. 17:18 and the map of Uttarakuru facing p. 17) and Mahāmeru (the Pamirs) to reach Gandhamādana. It appears that the author of the NP. had some vague ideas of the locations of these places.

38-40. She was worshipping the Liṅga that rose high into the sky, for the welfare of the world. She was like the embodied form of the Earth and she was as it were the culmination of beauty like a Pārvatī, the daughter of the mountain Himālaya. She had the beauteous form of the seashore. Her body could be called the very mansion of sexual pleasure. She appeared to drag even the three-eyed lord stationed in the Linga, suddenly for the pleasure of the Lord. She was the personified form of the mental wish of a meritorious person. On seeing the beautiful form of Mohinī, the king was enamoured by the enchanting arrows of the god of love and the king fell down senselessly.

41. Regaining consciousness again as if his body was seized with a very high fever, he moved swiftly to her presence. The lady of beautiful eyes noted the approaching king with her side-glances.

42-44. She stopped singing and kept lute aside. She thought of her duties for the occasion. She drove off the flocks and herds of birds and animals. She covered her cheeks and arms with a fine cloth. She shook off the bees that were attracted by the fragrance of her breath. The gentle lady then went near the king after leaving off the worship-worthy Liṅga. After going near him, the enchanting lady of elegant movements and eyes like the petals of the lotus spoke these sweet words to Rukmāṅgada who had already been scorched by the arrows of Kāma— O king, get up, I am under your control.

45-47. Why do you waste this body of yours by falling in a swoon. You are a person who bear the burden of the Earth as though it was only a blade of grass. Why do you, on seeing my enchanting form, lose sense, like a weak cow sinking beneath the mire ? Be steady and firm. You are bold. You are a brave warrior. Why do you make yourself ridiculous ? You of elegant activities. O Lord of kings, if you have any desire to have extremely pleasant and favourable sexual intercourse with me as a willing partner, after giving charitable gifts with due rites, you can do so. You can freely enjoy me like your own slave. I am an adept in the sexual act.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Stipulation of the conditions

Vasiṣṭha said :

1-3. When these splendid words were uttered by Mohinī, the leading king opened his eyes resembling a lotus. Deluded by the sight of Mohinī, he uttered the following words in a faltering tone "O young woman, many ladies with faces like the full moon have been seen and enjoyed by me. But I have never seen such a beautiful person like yours; such personal beauty as you have, fascinates the whole world.

4. O fair-faced lady, by your sheer sight I have been struck and hit by the arrows of Cupid. I have suddenly fallen on the Earth. O gentle lady, I prattled much on being fascinated by your brilliance.

5. O lady of beautiful thighs resembling the trunk of an elephant, be favourable to me. I shall grant you whatever you have in mind. My mind has been bound by your love and as such there is nothing in the three worlds that is not worth giving to you.

6-7. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, I am ready to give you this entire Earth whose limbs are bedecked in the mountains, whose garments are the oceans, whose eyes are the moon and the sun, whose bosom are the clouds (or is supple and firm), whose body is well set with the firmament (?), whose face is a gold coin, whose nature is beautiful, whose private parts are the nether worlds, whose hair is constituted by many trees and who has seven mountain lips (?). O beautiful lady I will give you the Earth alongwith my treasury, elephants, horses and cities accompanied by the ministers and therefore hearty.

8. O Mohinī of charming limbs, for a contact with you I will give even my soul; what then about wealth, gems etc ? Be favourable to me.

9. On hearing the words of the king Mohinī smiled, raised the king up and said in sweet voice.

10. O king, I do not wish to choose the Earth alongwith the mountains and oceans.. Whatever I say on a certain occasion must be carried out without hesitation.

11-12. I will resort to you. There is no doubt about it. Enter into this agreement with me.

The king said :

O gentle lady, I will enter into that agreement whereby you shall be satisfied. For want of the sexual contact with you my body has attained well nigh the tenth state (of a loveborn person).

Mohini said :

13. Give unto me your right hand that has practised many holy rites, whereby I will be able to believe in your words, O king.

14. You are a king. You practise religious and holy rites regularly. You have won fame for truthfulness in the three worlds. You will never utter a lie on any occasion. Still this is a worldly convention of making you promise which has been followed by you.

15. When Mohinī said these words, the king who was overwhelmed with mental agony said with a delighted heart.

16. O beautiful lady, I have never uttered a lie since my birth. O fair-complexioned lady, even in the course of fun and sports I have never spoken a lie.

17. Or of what avail are these words uttered by me by way of convincing you in so many words ? Look that my right hand, marked by merits, is offered to you.

18. O beautiful woman, of lovely thighs, if I do not carry out your words, whatever merit has been accumulated by me ever since my birth shall become yours.

19. (In case I fail to carry out your words) my virtue and piety have been given in exchange to you. O lady become my wife. I have been forcibly and extremely perturbed and excited by your beauty.

20. I am a king by name Rukmāṅgada, the son of Ṛtadhvaja, born in the race of Ikṣvāku. Dharmāṅgada is my son.

21. O lady of charming eyes, under the pretext of hunting the deer, I have entered the forest. Then the pleasant hermitage of Vâmadeva was seen by me.

22. Something was mentioned by that sage. Thereafter I was bid adieu by him. Riding on my excellent horse I came here to see mount Mandara.

23. With my mind curious and enthusiastic I was roaming over the excellent mountain, when the sweet song emanating from your mouth reached my ears.

24. Attracted by that song, I have approached you. O lady of charming eyes, you have come within the range of my vision.

25. Thereafter, O gentle lady, I fell unconscious on the ground. Now I have regained consciousness, thanks to your nectarine words.

26. O enchantress of the worlds, I consider myself as a person born again. It behoves you to favour me by replying to me suitably.

27. On being requested by the king thus, Mohinī spoke in reply :—

O king, I am born of God Brahmā and have come here for your sake.

28. On hearing about your fame, I was overwhelmed by Cupid. I have forsaken all gods, the chief of whom was Indra, and come to the golden mountain of Mandara.

29. With my mind in concentration, I stayed here engaged in penance. I am worshipping God Śaṅkara, the Lord of the Devas, by offering (singing) songs unto him.

30. I consider presentation of music is the great favourite of the deities. O king, it is superior to all other Dānas (charitable gifts) and it is the bestower of endless salvation.

31-32. Paśupati (god Śiva) is satisfied with it and has immediately granted me the boon. You, the king of the Earth have been attained by me and this was what I had liked. O king you are loved by me and I am loved by you.

33. After saying thus to him, Mohinī caught hold of the hand of the king and quickly lifted him up even as he was lying on the ground like the thunderbolt of Indra.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

The Fascination of Mohini

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. Lifting up the king, Mohinī spoke these words : O leading king, do not entertain any doubt. Know me to be a virgin without sins.

2-3a. O king, marry me in accordance with the injunctions laid down in the Gṛhyasūtras. If an unmarried virgin becomes pregnant, she delivers of a son of ill fame who will be despised by the people of all castes.

3b-4. In the Purāṇa, the wise know (i. e. say) that there are three types of Cāṇḍālas. One is the child born of an unmarried virgin; the second type is the progeny of Sagotra marriage (i.e. marriage between a man and a woman of the same Gotra or lineage). O leading king, the third type of Cāṇḍāla is the progeny of a Brāhmaṇa lady begot by a Śūdra.[1]

5-6a. For this reason, O king marry me a virgin." Thereafter, King Rukmāṅgada married that lady of tremulous

1. Cf Veda-Vyāsa Smṛti I. 9-10
Kumārī-Sambhavas tvekaḥ sagotrāyāṁ dvitīyakaḥ /
Brāhmaṇyāṁ śūdra-janitaś cāṇḍālas trividhaḥ smṛtaḥ // side-glances, on that mountain itself, in accordance with the (Gṛhya-sūtra) injunctions. United with her the king said smilingly :

The king said :

6b-7a. O fair-faced lady, attainment of heaven is not as much conducive to happiness as winning you, O gentle lady, on this Mandara mountain. It does not please me so much as this meeting with you.

7b-8. O gentle lady, even though I am on this Earth I consider myself superior to Purandara (god Indra) since I have obtained O fair-eyed lady, you, the most beautiful lady in the three worlds as my wife. Hence I shall do whatever is favourable to you. Command me.

9. Tell me whether you wish to sport about here itself, O young lady, or in my palace or on the Malaya mountain or on the top of the Meru or in the Nandana park.

10. On hearing the words of the king that were indicative of his close attachment to her, Mohinī spoke these sweet words that increased the pleasure of the king :—

11. O king, in your capital city I shall be the victim of wounding side-glances of my co-wives. How can I, therefore, go over to your city ?

12. Let there not be, in the whole of the Earth, any woman who will be facing the misery originating from co-wives, throughout her life (till death).

13. O king, I have been obtained by you. From the bottom of my heart, I am subservient to you. It was after understanding that there would be the misery from co-wives that you have been wooed as my husband by me.

14. I will be able to reside on the excellent mountain that contains many miraculous features. But, O leading king the only thing is you cannot stay anywhere without Sandhyāvalī.

15. On being separated from her and her son, you will be definitely unhappy. Your sadness, O king, will increase my sorrow.

16. I shall establish myself soundly wherever you will derive sufficient happiness. O king, where you are happily diverted, I shall also be happy, feeling that your place of residence is mount Mandara to me.

17. The wife must live in the place where her husband stays, even if it is not an affluent one. They say (i.e. wise people say) that, in the proximity of her husband that place is the veritable mountain Meru of gold.

18. O Lord, where you feel happy is surely my Meru, the place of my desire. Staying in the place of one's father after eschewing that of one's husband, is to be avoided.

19. A woman interested in staying permanently in the abode of her father sinks in darkness of hell. All her holy rites shall be fruitless and she shall be born as a sow.

20. I know such evil consequences. How, then can I stay on in the Mandara mountain ? I will go along with you. You are the Lord of my happiness and misery."

21. On hearing the words of Mohinī, the king was delighted in his mind. After embracing the beautiful, lady, he spoke these words : —

22. You will be above all my wives. O lady of beautiful thighs, do not have any doubt that you will have to face misery !

23. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, in my house you will be far superior to my own life. O lady of slender frame, come on. We shall proceed to the city for our mutual happiness.

24. O my beloved wife, staying there, enjoy freely all the worldly pleasures along with me.

25. It was eventually for his own destruction that Rukmāṅgada told her thus. Mohinī whose face was as white and fair as the moon, started from there producing the tinkling sound of her anklets. It seemed that she even dragged the beauty of the mountain too after her.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

The salvation of Godhā, (the lizard)

Vasiṣṭha continued :

1. O king, both of them set off from the top of the mountain towards the surface of the Earth, surveying the various features of the mountain that captivated their mind.

2. Some of the regions resembled corals, some were white like silver, some had the blue lustre of sapphire and some regions had golden hue.

3. Some of them were crystal-coloured and others resembled the yellow orpiment. All the immobile beings were as if closely knit together.

4. After reaching the foot of the mountain (ground level), the king saw his excellent horse scrapping the ground with his powerful hoofs that resembled the thunderbolt.

5. As it scrapped and dug up the Earth with its sharp hoofs, a domestic lizard that had been beneath the ground came out.

6. While coming out, O king (?) it was crushed beneath the hoof of the horse. The kind-hearted king saw it being crushcd.

7-8. Crying out to his beloved wife "Alas it is crushed !" he rushed to it. Then, with the tender leaf of a tree the king scrapped it from the hoof and threw it on a plot of grassy land. Seeing that it had become senseless he spoke to Mohinī :—

9. "O lady of beautiful limbs and lotus-like eyes ! Bring some water immediately so that I can sprinkle it on the lizard that has become unconscious due to its being crushed.

10. At the instance of her husband, she brought some cool water immediately. With that the king sprinkled the unconscious domestic lizard.

11-13. O king, Being sprinkled with cold water the lizard regained consciousness. In all cases of smiting blows, sprinkling with water is recommended. Or it is beneficial if it is immediately bandaged with a damp cloth. O king (?), after regaining consciousness the lizard spoke these words. Seeing the king in front of her, though it was distressed with (acute) pain it (the lizard) spoke out slowly : "O mighty-armed Rukmāṅgada, listen to my story of life.

14. O Lord, I was the wife of a Brāhmaṇa, in the beautiful city of Śākala.[1] I was endowed with beauty and youth. But I was not liked much by him.

15. O king, that husband of mine did not hate anyone else, but he was always full of hatred towards me. He invariably spoke harsh words to me.

16. I was furious on account of this. In order to attain the power of Vaśī-karaṇa (attraction), O king I consulted those young women who had been abandoned by their husbands. (but who later on controlled them).

17. O king, I was informed by them—"Your husband will be subservient. We have been convinced (because once) we too had been abandoned and slighted by our husbands.

18. Indeed our husbands became meek and submissive through the medicines and potions given by an ascetic woman. O beautiful lady, you too ask her. She will give you the auspicious medicines.

19-20. You need not entertain any doubt. Your husband will be obedient like a slave. O king, at their instance I started from the place immediately. As I asked the people on the way, they pointed out her palace consisting of hundred columns and white-washed in a shining form.

21. After entering it, I saw the brilliant woman under the vow of celibacy. She had covered herself with a long cloth. She had the tawny coloured complexion like that of the dusk.

22. The refulgent lady wore long matted hairs; a number of attendants were waiting upon her; she was being fanned gently by them.

23. With a rosary of beads in her hand, she was repeating the Mantra that was Vaśyakara (conducive to attract and subdue people), that could cause excitement which could be verified (and hence was convincing.) She had the garland of happiness giving beads (?) round her neck).

1. Śākala—Capital of Madra deśa of Mahābhārata fame, and also of Indo-Greek King Menander alias Milinda of the Buddhist work Milinda-Paṅṅha. Identified with mod. Sialkot in Pakistan.

24-25. Thereafter, I placed a soft lustrous ring of fine gold with superb brilliance at her feet and bowed to her. On seeing the ring placed at her feet she become delighted. Even before being asked, she had understood the disrespect to me by my husband.

26-27. Then, O king, I was advised by the ascetic lady when I bowed to her and stood by. "This medicinal powder alongwith this amulet brings all living beings under control. The powder must be given to your husband (for being taken in) and the amulet must be worn round the neck. Certainly the husband will become submissive. He will not go to any other beautiful woman.

28. Taking the medicinal powder and the amulet, I soon reached the house of my husband. At nightfall, the powder was mixed with milk and given to my husband.

29-30. The amulet was tied round the neck and I ceased to be anxious over anything. O excellent king, when my husband drank the potion with the medicinal powder, the consumptive disease took possession of him the same day. My husband became weaker and weaker day by day. Worms originating from cuts and putrefying wounds abounded in his private parts.

31-32. Within a few days, he became pale and dim like a lamp when the sun has risen. My husband became agitated and perturbed in his sense organs. Lamenting over his lot day and night he told me : O splendid lady, I am your slave. I seek refuge in you. Save me. I will never approach another woman.

33. O king, on hearing his lamentation I became much terrified. I informed the ascetic lady about everything and asked her. How shall my husband be happy ?

34. A second course of medicine was given by her for subduing the burning sensation. When the medicine was administered, my husband attained normal health instantaneously.

35. The burning sensation originating from the previous powder was nullified by that medicine. Thereafter, my husband became subservient to me. He abided by my words and advice.

36. In due course of time, I passed away and fell into the hell called Tāmrabhrāṣṭra (Copper frying pan) where I underwent torture for the period of fifteen Yugas.

37. Pieces as subtle and minute as gingelly seeds were cut off from my body and I was tortured: When a little of my sin remained still, I was born on the Earth.

38. The form of a lizard was given to me by Yama (the son of the Sun). Thus, O king, I have been here for the last ten thousand years.

39. O king, if any young maiden were to perform Vaśīkaraṇa rite to attract and control her husband, all her holy rites will be futile; she will be considered wicked and sinful in action and she will be burned and tortured in Tāmrabhrāṣṭraka (hell).

40. To a lady the husband is the Lord, he is the goal; he is the deity and he is the preceptor. If she were to perform the Vaśīkaraṇa rite in respect of him, how can she attain happiness?

41. She is born among hundreds of species of animals and creatures including the germs of leprosy. Hence, O king, the behest of the husband must always be carried out by a woman.

42. O king, unless you redeem me who have sought refuge in you, I shall have to be born again as a despicable creature with all my sins.

43-44. You can redeem me by giving me the merit acquired by you by observing the holy rite of Vijayā Dvādaśī[1] associated with the constellation (Nakṣatra) Śravaṇa at the confluence of Gaṅgā and Sarayū. This confluence is destructive of sins. The holy rite is conducive to the redemption of ghosts. It is the bestower of all mentally cherished desires.

45. On that day, O king, even if Hari is remembered in their own house by men, there is no doubt about it that he enables them to attain the merit accrued by visiting holy centres.

46. O king, whatever meritorious act like charitable gifts, oblations to fire, worship of gods, is performed on the day of Vijayā it has ever-lasting beneficial effect.

1. There are eight kinds of Dvādaśis, Vijayā Dvādaśī has Śravaṇa Nakṣatra vide Hemādri on Kāla, pp. 260-263, Smṛti Kaustubha, pp. 250-54.

47-49a Please do grant unto me that merit. If one observes fast on the Dvādaśī day and performs Pāraṇā on the Trayodaśī day, one acquires the benefit of observing fast for twelve years. O king, take pity on me and pass on that merit to me. On the Earth, you are the very physical manifestation of Dharma (virtue). You are the destroyer of the path of Yama. O save me. I am utterly miserable.

49b. On hearing the words of the lizard, Mohinī spoke these words :

50. O Lord, whether happiness or misery one experiences, it has the result of his own actions. Hence, what have you to do with this sinful creature who had been wicked to her own husband ?

51. O king, by means of amulets, medicinal powder and other things she gained control over her husband. O king, whatever is given to good men may be conducive to fame and heavenly pleasure.

52-53. What is rendered as a gift etc to the sinners causes downfall of both (the giver and the receiver). It falls off both the worlds. If milk mixed with sugar is given to a serpent, it will certainly increase its poison. Similar indeed is the help rendered to the sinners. Leave off this sinful creature. Let us go to the city.

54. If one delves into the births and dealings of others one's happiness perishes.

Rukmāṅgada said :

O daughter of Brahmā, how is it that these things were uttered by you ? O fair-faced lady, how can you say that this is not the conduct or way of life of good men?

55. O fair lady, those who are opposed to helping others are sinners. They do everything for their own happiness and harass others. They are opposed to rendering obligation to others.

56. The moon, sun, cloud, earth, fire, water, sandal, trees and good men are always for helping others.

57-58. O fair-faced lady, it is heard that there was a king named Hariścandra. Afraid of uttering a lie he experienced various miseries one after the other. He had to stay in the house of a Cāṇḍāla. He had to sell his wife and son. Thanks to his steadfast adherence to truth, Śakra and other Devas became satisfied.

59. They asked Hariścandra[1] the king to choose any boon. Brahmā and other Devas were given this reply by that truthful king—If the Devas are satisfied it behoves them to grant this boon :

60-62. May this entire city alongwith its trees, reptiles, children, young men, old men, women, and quadrupeds go to heaven. Even if it had committed sins, I shall take over the entire sins of Ayodhyā and would like to go to hell. I do not wish to go to heaven alone after leaving people on the Earth. O great Devas, this is the truth, I utter.

63. On seeing his steadfastness, Indra and others permitted it. The entire city went to the heavenly world alongwith him.

64. The king is stationed in heaven in the company of his city. He moves about in the aerial chariot that goes wherever he pleases. He is being worshipped even by the immortal beings.

65. O gentle lady, on hearing that the Devas had been defeated by the Daityas, the gift of his own bones was made by Dadhīci for helping the Devas.

66. O fair lady, his own flesh was given to the hungry vulture by king Śibi formerly, for protecting a dove.

67. Formerly, there was a king over this earth named Jīmūtavāhana[2]. O fairfaced lady, his own life was given up by him for the sake of serpents.

1. Son of King Triśaṅku of the solar-race. His truthfulness and harassment by Viśvāmitra mentioned here is described in details in DB. VII Chs. 20.27. The readiness of Hariścandra to go to hell for the sins of others probably discloses the influence of Buddhist ideal expressed through Bodhisattvas.

2. The story of Jimūtavāhana's self-sacrifice probably formed a part of Guṇāḍhya's Bṛhat-Kathā, a Paiśācī work now lost forever. It is recorded in its Sanskrit version Kathāsaritsāgara (Śaśāṅkavati Lambaka, Taraṅga 23). Harṣa selected him as the hero of his play Nāgānanda for propagating the Buddhist ideal of self-sacrifice.

68. Hence, O gentle lady, a king should be kind-hearted and sympathetic. O splendid lady, the cloud showers its waters equally on an unholy and pure spot.

69-70. The moon should delight even the Cāṇḍālas and the fallen persons through his rays. Hence, O fair lady, I shall uplift this distressed lizard by means of my own merits in the same way as Nahuṣa through his daughter's descendant (?).[1] Disregarding the enchantress thus, he spoke to the lizard.

71. My merit originating from the holy rite of Vijayā is given, (I repeat) is given unto you, by me. Be free from all sins and go to the world of Viṣṇu.

72-74. O king, on his uttering this, she eschewed the old and emaciated form of the lizard and became a beautiful lady bedecked in celestial ornaments. She took leave of the king and went away brightening the ten quarters and making (as if) a wonderful boundary line to the region of Viṣṇu. It is the place approachable only by Yogins. It is an excellent region brilliant like fire. It is the greatest Ātman. Hence she is also like the lamp of fire for the illumination of the universe and was transformed by the king.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

The dialogue between the father (Rukmāṅgada) and the son (Dharmāṅgada)

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. After setting the lizard free from the sin, the delighted king laughingly said to Mohinī—May the horse be mounted instantaneously.

1. Dauhitraiḥ-lit. by daughter's sons. Nahuṣa after his fall from heaven, was redeemed by Yudhiṣṭhira (Mbh. Vana, Chs. 179-181). Yudhiṣṭhira was not exactly his daughter's son but the term is used here loosely to express a descendant.

2-3. Like Kṛṣṇa's horse (?) this can go ten thousand Yojanas in a moment. On hearing the words of the king, Mohinī, the ardently passionate lady, climbed on to the horse which was as swift as the wind, alongwith her husband. The lady of sweet smiles spoke these words to the king her husband.

4. O king, drive this horse towards your city. My desire to see the face of your son is intense.

5. O excellent king, I am at your disposal. You may go wherever you are inclined to go. On hearing the words of Mohinī, he started towards his city.

6-9. With great delight he observed the trees, the mountains, the rivers, the different kinds of forests, the animals of various sorts, villages, forts, lands, splendid cities, lakes of variegated nature and the charming plots of lands on the way. On seeing the hermitage of Vāmadeva soon, the king who was in a hurry, bowed down from the firmament itself. Again the king proceeded on his way on his horse that was as swift as the wind-god. Observing many lands fully endowed with riches and foodgrains.

10-12. The king reached Vidiśā (a city in Madhya Pradesh) that was under his control. His son Dharmāṅgada had already heard through his spies that the king, his father, was coming. With great delight he spoke these words to the vassal kings :—O excellent kings, this northern quarter is becoming brighter on being illuminated by his splendour and on being occupied by my father's horse. Hence, let us all go to greet the king face to face.

13. If the son does not come face to face with (i.e. does not personally go to receive) his father immediately on his arrival, he falls into the terrible hell and stays there as long as fourteen Indras reign.

14. The Brāhmaṇas well-versed in the Purāṇas say that if the son goes ahead to receive his father face to face, (personally he derives the fruit of a Yajña for every step he takes).

15. Get up. I shall go to greet him lovingly surrounded by you all. He is my deity of deities.

16. When the king approved of his words saying "So be it," the prince accompanied by all of them went on foot for a distance of a Krośa (3 km.) to greet his father personally face to face.

17. Appearing like the embodied form of Manmatha and accompanied by a thousand kings, he went a long distance and met the king on the way.

18. Meeting his father, he prostrated to him by falling at his feet on the ground affectionately. Alongwith the vassal kings, he bent his head down and made obeisance.

19-20. With great love the king observed his son falling at his feet immediately after arrival along with the vassal kings. The king got down from the horse. With his brawny arms he lifted up his son and warmly embraced him closely. Sniffing at his head the king then spoke to his son.

21. O son, I hope you are protecting your subjects. I also hope you are punishing the enemies. I presume you fill the treasury only with such amounts as are earned by justifiable means.

22. I hope, never failing maintenance amounts that are more than sufficient have been handed over to the Brāhmaṇas. I hope you practise attractive and pleasant manners, and that you do not speak harsh words.

23. I hope cows are now milked in the houses of Cāṇḍālas and sons carry out the behests of their fathers always.

24. I hope the daughter-in-law obeys the mother-in-law and her own husband. O son, I hope you never enter into verbal disputes with the Brâhmaṇas.

25. I hope the cows are not restrained in the land and are fed on different kinds of grass. I hope you scrutinise the weights and balances of foodgrains and other things.

26. O son, I hope you do not impose too much of a burden on the householder by means of taxes. I believe game of dice and over-addiction to liquor are not present in your land.

27. I hope there are people of different tastes and different opinions expressed in words in your city. I (further) hope the men do not maintain themselves on liberal gifts of others and do not wear old ragged clothes.

28. O son, I hope you personally survey the elephants and horses in your army and protect them. I hope you look after all your mothers without partiality.

29. O son, I hope men do not take food on the day of Viṣṇu (on the Ekādaśī day). I hope men are interested in performing Śrāddha when the moon is waning (on the New Moon day).

30. I hope you always eschew slumber in the latter halves of the nights. Slumber is the root of sins.

31. Slumber is the mother of poverty. It is destructive of prosperity and welfare. No king who is a slave unto slumber rules over the Earth for a long time.

32. Just as an unchaste woman destroys both the worlds of her husband so also slumber destroys both the worlds of the king.

When the father said all these things, the son spoke these words.

33. The son Dharmāṅgada bowed to the king again and again and said.

O dear father, all these things have been done by me. I shall again carry out your behests.

34. In all the three worlds those sons who carry out the instructions of their fathers, are blessed. O king, what is more sinful than not carrying out the directives of one's own father?

35. If the son disobeys his father and goes to Gaṅgā for his holy dip, he does not attain the benefit of the holy river. He who does not carry out his father's directives does not enjoy the fruits of pilgrimage to holy centres.

36. My body is subservient to you; my life is at your disposal.[1] My duty is subservient to you. You are my great deity.

37. A son cannot free himself from indebtedness to his father even by making a gift of the three worlds. O Lord, what then by means of physical strain, monetary gift and other things.

38-39. Even as his son surrounded by many kings said thus, Rukmāṅgada embraced the son and spoke these words : O

1. Henceforth every now and then Dharmāṅgada and Sandhyāvalī unknowingly and unintentionally hint the future tragedy—Dharmāṅgada's death at the hands of his father.

son, you have spoken the truth. You are the knower of virtue. There is no other greater deity for a son than his father. If the son disrespects the father, even the gods turn their faces from him.

40. Since you have conquered the Earth consisting of many continents and possessing many kings and since you protect that Earth, I have been held by you on your head.

41. This is the greatest happiness in the world, certainly this is the heavenly region on the surface of the Earth, that the son is superior to the father.

42. O son, I have been made contented by you who traverse the path of good qualities and who make all the kings observe holy rite on the auspicious day of Hari.

43. On hearing these words of his father, Dharmāṅgada, the son said :-

"O father, where did you go after depositing all the riches in me ?

44. At what place was this lady with the lustre of ten thousand suns attained by you? I think, after creating her Prajāpati (Brahmā) had become disgusted with the world and detached from it.

45. O king, in the whole of the three worlds there is no other woman with this form and beauty. I think she is born of the mountain or originated from the ocean.

46-47. Or she may be the Māyā (illusion) of the Daitya Maya, with the form of a young woman assumed by her. O Lord, indeed, Brahmā by whom she has been created is very clever. There is no slightest defect even to the extent of a hundred part of the tip of a hair. O Lord of the kings of the Earth, she is worthy of being the heroine of your house since she is as pure as gold. If I were to have a mother of such a type, which man is more meritorious than I ?"

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

The Anecdote of a chaste Lady

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. On hearing the words of Dharmāṅgada, Rukmāṅgada became delighted and said : It is true, O son, your new mother has been obtained by me on the Mandara mountain.

2. She is the daughter of Vedāśraya (support of the Vedas i.e. Brahmā). Formerly, O dear son, she had been performing a terrible penance on the divine mountain Mandara, with the determination of attaining me.

3. Some fifteen days before I started from here, riding on the horse I reached the Mandara, the most excellent of the mountains, containing many metals and minerals.

4. This damsel of comely appearance was seen by me seated on the top of the mountain, propitiating Maheśvara and engaged in singing.

5. Hit by the arrows of Anaṅga (the God of Love), I became unconscious and fell on the ground like the deer hit by a hunter.

6. Thereafter, I had been shaken (and revived into) consciousness)by this gentle lady of charming eyes; with some importunity I have been chosen as her husband.

7. I too have taken the pledge with offering of my right hand. This lady of large eyes has been made my wife by me on the top of the mountain.

8. Descending to the ground level (at that foot of the mountain), we got up on to the horse. Hurried (travelling therefrom) we have come to you within three days.

9.-11. On my way I had the pleasure of seeing mountains, different lands, lakes and rivers. O son, she is your mother. She would heighten your pleasure. Make obeisance to this lady of charming limbs as though to your own natural mother. On hearing the words of his father, the son, the suppressor of his enemies, bent down his head as far as the ground level and spoke these words :— O gentle lady, O dear mother, favour me. I am your son, servant and slave.

12-13. Accompanied by many kings I make obeisance to my mother. On seeing the son prostrating on the ground and thanks to the chivalry of her husband, the king, Mohinī got down from the horse, raised up the son and embraced him with her hands.

14-16a. Embraced by his mother, he saluted her once again. He adorned her with nice clothes and charming ornaments. Dharmāṅgada, the son with eyes like lotus, requested her to place her legs on his back and mount the horse. In the same manner, he made his father too mount the horse.

16b-17a. He himself walked on foot surrounded by the vassal kings. On looking at his step-mother he was delighted and had his hair standing on their ends. Praising himself in a resonant voice like the rumbling sound of the cloud he said.

17b-21a. Blessed is the son who has many mothers in the world, new, fresh and charming beloved wives of his father. If one has only one mother, one's father is miserable. If the father is miserable what happiness can the son have in the heart ? By saluting one mother the son has only the merit of bowing to one earth. By saluting many mothers I will have greater benefit day by day.

21b-22. Saying thus he entered the city surrounded by the vassal kings. He entered the beautiful city of Vaidiśa endowed with (i.e. abounding in) all prosperity. Seated on the horse alongwith Mohinī the king too followed instantaneously.

23. Then he entered the excellent mansion. On being greeted and honoured by the people, the king got down from the horse and spoke these words to Mohinī.

24. O charming one, go to the house of Dharmāṅgada our son. In accordance with his attributes, he will render service to you as befitting an elderly person.

25. Neither a chaperon nor a servant can render such a willing service ! On being thus advised by her husband, she started for the mansion of their son.

26-27. She was seen entering the mansion by Dharmāṅgada, at the instance of her husband's words. He thereupon left the vassal kings saying—"All of you stay here. At the behest of my father, I shall render personal service unto her. On saying this he entered the mansion and grasped the hands of his step-mother. After walking fifteen steps, they reached the cot. He made Mohinī sit there.

28-29. It was made of gold with silk cloth spread over. It was soft and firm. A soft bed-sheet was spread over it. It was bedecked in gems and jewels. Many jewelled lamps having the refulgence of the sun, were fitted on to it. Thereafter, the prince who had virtue as his ornament (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) offered water for washing the feet of Mohinī.

30-31. The prince considered her even elderly to Sandhyāvalī. His mind did not have any ignoble feelings towards Mohinī. Though he was beautiful and graceful and she a charming lady with plump and stout thighs, buttocks and breasts, he considered her a lady ten thousand years old and himself a boy of three years.

32. After washing her feet, he applied (sprinkled) that water on his head. With the head bent down in humility he said : Mother, I am meritorious (with you as my mother).

33. After saying this, he dispelled her fatigue by his own efforts and by those of men and women (servants). With great joy he placed all means of pleasures at her disposal.

34-35a. At the time of the churning of the milk ocean two earrings were produced. They used to emit nectarine juice. These were acquired by Dharmamurti.[1] After conquering Dānavas in the Pātāla (nether worlds). Vṛṣāṅgada (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) himself put these in the ears of Mohinī.

35b-36a. A necklace of a thousand and eight auspicious white pearls each like the fruit of the embylic myrobalan was put on the bosom of the gentle lady.

36b-37. Then the prince offered her a subsidiary light necklace of gold coins of a hundred Palas inset with ten thousand diamonds to his mothers. He gave her twice eight bangles (i.e. sixteen) studded with diamonds for both the hands.

1. VV. 34-46 contain reference to the history of some rare ornaments acquired by Dharmāṅgada and gifted to Mohinī. I could not trace it in other purāṇas.

38-43a. They were made by men who knew their value. For each of the hands, a crore of gold coins was spent. The prince gave invaluable armlets and anklets to the beloved wife of his father as ornament. They had the refulgence of the sun. The girdle of fiery refulgence that Śarvāṇī (Pārvatī) had, fell off as she was extremely terrified in the course of the fight called Tārakāmaya (pertaining to the demon Tāraka) while Kālanemi was ruling over the kingdom. It then fell into Mūlapācana (original fire). Thereafter, it was picked up by the demon Maya who wielded his power of illusion over the whole world. Dharmāṅgada had killed that Daitya on Mount Malaya although he had been surrounded by a crore of Daityas. At the instance of his father, he had killed him in the course of a terrible war that lasted for a year (on the mountain Malaya). He got the girdle that the beloved of the king of the Daityas had on her person. The king gave that to his father's beloved great queen with his hair standing on their ends out of delight.

43b-46. Formerly, Hiraṇyakaśipu's queen who was an outstanding beauty in the world, had a crest jewel that had the refulgence of lightning. She immolated herself in her husband's funeral pyre. Before dying, the extremely distressed lady had cast her crest-jewel into the sea. The sea collected the excellent jewel and presented it to Dharmāṅgada on being delighted at his prowess. The delighted prince now gave that jewel which had the brilliance of a crore of suns to his step-mother.

47. He gave Mohinī two auspicious clothes sanctified in fire and two charming bodices, a thousand crores in value.

48-49. Dharmāṅgada then gave the gentle lady Mohinī, the divine garland and the sweet-smelling divine unguent that was very rare and had been acquired from the accomplished hands of the preceptor of all the Devas by the heroic Dharmāṅgada in the course of his conquest of all the continents. He gave her the unguent that enhanced her love.

50. After embellishing her with great devotion, he fed her with meals consisting of dishes of six tastes and brought by his natural mother herself

51. Even before this, he had addressed his natural mother and enlightened her by means of many words. There is no doubt about this that the behest of the king must be carried out by me as well as by you.

52-53a. O gentle lady, she who is the king's beloved is a highly respectable woman for us. The wife who acts wickedly against the lady-love of the king, her husband, falls into hell and stays there till fourteen Indras reign.

53b-54. She who nurses feelings of enmity against the lady-love of her husband and tries to separate them in their love, is fried in Tāmrabhrāṣṭa hell (the frying pan made of copper.) Everything that is conducive to the happiness of her husband, should be done by the wife.

55. O fair-complexioned lady, she must view her as she views her husband. She must do what is favourable and beneficent to the lady-love of her husband.

56a. Even if she (the husband's lady-love) happens to be of a lower caste, the wife who renders service to her, goes to heaven.

56b. Afterwards she will occupy the same loving place in the mind of her husband.

57. After acceding to the wish of her husband she derives all worldly pleasures. By eschewing the feelings of malice and jealousy, she attains the region of the Lord of every one.

58. On seeing a cowife to be the most beloved of her husband, if a woman renders service to her, she will attain an eternal place in heaven.

59-60. There was a very wicked man of the Śūdra caste. He had abandoned all holy rites.[1] He had a wife and also a beloved lady, a prostitute whom he kept in his house. The wife who wanted to please her husband served him as well as the prostitute. She washed the feet of both of them. She partook only of the leavings of the food of both of them.

1. VV. 59-89 give an illustration of a chaste Śūdra lady who served her depraved husband and his keep who when he was affected by fistula left him penniless. This chaste lady borrowed money from father, gave medical treatment to him, personally nursed his wound. When he died, she immolated herself on his funeral pyre and washed off her husband's sins by her merits; both of them went to heaven.

61. Though she was prevented from doing this by the prostitute, she continued her activities of service. She ever remained in the path of the good. She was engaged in what was beneficent for both of them; while both of them lay on the cot, she used to lie down beneath on the bare ground.

62. Thus she served her husband alongwith the prostitute for a long time, wading through the ocean of misery.

63-64. Without caring for the advice of the chaste wife the man committed many blunders in the matter of his diet etc. He drank the milk of the buffalo alongwith radish. The foolish fellow ate the winnowings (of corn) mixed with oil. As a result of this he had a terrible fistula in the anus.

65-66a. He was extremely distressed by day and night. The prostitute took everything valuable that the house contained and went over to another young man. The lustful woman gave him all the wealth.

66b-67. Now the Śūdra man became much ashamed. With distress evident in his face, he lamented and spoke thus to his wife : O gentle lady, save me though I had been very cruel to you and much attached to a prostitute.

68. O beautiful lady, the sinner that I am, I have never done a good thing to you. O lady of slender waist, for many years I sported about alongwith the prostitute.

69. The sinful haughty man who does not console his wife who bows down to him, attains all inauspicious things in the course of fifteen rebirths.

70. O gentle lady, since I had disrespected you, I shall attain the despicable birth in the house of a Cāṇḍāla. But your mind has not been turbid despite insults.

71. On hearing these words of her husband, the wife spoke to the husband. It is the sins committed in the previous births that yield miseries. A learned man who bears them with fortitude, should be known as the most excellent among men.

72. I had been sinful in the previous births. Now I experienced the fruits thereof in this birth. Hence, I have neither sorrow nor misery.

73. By saying this she consoled and cautioned her husband. The fair-complexioned lady brought some money from her father and other kinsmen.

74-75. The chaste lady considered her husband a Viṣṇu, the resident of the milk ocean. She cleaned his anus and other private parts assiduously by day as well as by night, by means of turmeric juice and water. She scraped the germs and worms in the body of her husband, by means of her nail.

76. She fanned him with peacock feathers. O gentle lady, the fair-faced lady slept neither during the day nor at night.

77-78. Distressed by the misery of her husband, she felt that the whole universe was blazing (?). She said—If there is goddess of earth, if there are manes, if there are deities, may they make my husband free from ailments. May he be free from sins. I shall give unto Goddess Caṇḍikā blood mixed with flesh.

79. I shall offer the flesh of goats, buffaloes and even human beings for the well being of my husband. With great respect I shall observe ten fasts.

80. I shall place my body on a bed of sharp-pointed thorns. I shall not take sweet things. I shall not take ghee.

81. I shall remain for days together without anointing the body externally with oil. May my husband live for a hundred years without any ailment.

82-83a. As day followed day, she blurted out like this in her agony. Within a short while, all the three humours in his system were upset. With great effort she gave her husband the three astringent medicines (black and long pepper and dry ginger).

83b-84. Once due to chilliness the man was quaking and shivering. His jaws suddenly came together and the finger of the wife was bitten off by the teeth coming together. O queen of the Lord of men, the piece of finger remained within the rigid mouth.

85. She sold off her bangle and brought a great deal of fuel. She prepared the funeral pyre. After placing her dead husband on it, she poured ghee over the pyre (fuel).

86-89. She too climbed on the funeral pyre joining her face to his face, her heart near his heart and O gentle lady, her buttocks near his buttocks. With her foot she dragged the fire. The auspicious lady of charming limbs set fire to the ailing body of the husband alongwith her body. As the fire blazed brightly, she cast off her body and went to the world of the Devas taking her husband with her after annihilating many of his sins by means of her holy rites very difficult to be performed.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

The statement of Mohini

The son (Dharmāṅgada) said :

1. Hence, O Mother, eschew jealousy and feed Mohinī. A holy rite (dharma) like this cannot be attained in the three worlds.

2-3. The wife who, with her own hands, feeds the beloved lady love of her husband, the co-wife who gives a little quantity of cooked rice to the co-wife shall, O gentle lady, O dear mother, become immortal—So says god Brahmā. O Mistress (of the Mansion) be favourable to me carry out what has been related by me.

4. O fair-complexioned lady, what is conducive to the happiness of my dear father must be performed by both of us. The sins shall be exterminated perfectly. Similarly, the attainment of heaven shall be everlasting.

5-6. On hearing the words of her son then, the queen Sandhyāvalī invited* her son and embraced him again and again. She sniffed at his head and spoke these words : "O son, I shall carry out your words pregnant with dharma (virtues).

7. Eschewing jealousy and false prestige I shall feed Mohinī. I have the pleasure of being the mother of a hundred sons, O son, with you as my only son.

8. It was after observing many holy rites and restraints causing bodily exertion, that you were born. Since I observed the holiest of holy rites, the 'king' of holy rites, you were attained by me as my son.

9. In this world there is no other holy rite that is seen to be yielding benefits like this. This gives convincing proofs immediately. This is destructive of great sins.

10. Of what avail is it if many sons who cause sorrow and distress are born ? It is better to have one son, as the main prop of the family, where the entire family takes comfortable rest.

11. On attaining you as one stationed in my womb, I have reached the top of the three worlds (I am above the three worlds). O sinless one, blessed are those pains of labour whereby you are born as my son.

12. You are the son who delight both father and mother, you are the heroic son who have become the Lord of seven continents; you have carried out the words of your father.

13-15. Poets (Learned Philosophers) call only that person real son—the person who delights both the father and the mother. Others are only 'so-called' sons.

After saying these words, queen Sandhyāvalī just glanced at the pots and utensils for the purpose of a meal consisting of dishes of all the six tastes. By her very glance the utensils were full of dishes that would be pleasantly warm and that would be as tasty as Nectar, which she wished that Mohinī should partake of.

---

*A better emendation : abhinandya "praised", 'approved of' in stead of abhi-mantrya in the text.

16. She took a golden ladle studded with jewels. Smiling sweetly, she served food to Mohinī without any perturbation.

17. She slowly ate the desired and well cooked food in a polished excellent vessel, all round which beverages and edible dishes had been placed.

18-19. The gentle lady, the daughter of Brahmā, sat on an auspicious golden seat and took food that was comparable to nectar. While taking food, the fair lady was fanned with a fan of peacock feathers held by Dharmāṅgada, in accompaniment of music.

20-21. After washing with cool water (her hands and mouth gurgling four times), she accepted the fragrant Tāmbūla (chewing betel leaves) given by her (step)-son. The fair-complexioned lady took it with her hand over which excellent sandal paste had been applied. Then O king, she laughed and said slowly to Sandhyāvalī.

22. "O gentle lady, are you the mother of king Vṛṣāṅgada (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) ? O auspicious lady, due to perspiring tiredness you cauld not be recognised by me."

23. O king, while the daughter of Brahmā was speaking thus to Sandhyāvali, the son of the king bowed to her and spoke these words.

24. "I had been held in her belly (womb) by this gentle lady for three years. I flourished thanks to the favour of your husband.

25. O Beautiful lady, I have hundreds of mothers. But much milk flowing out from the breasts of this lady out of (motherly) affection has been drunk by me.

26. That severe pain which more or less amounts to old age has been endured by her. It was after giving birth to me that she had become disjointed in her limbs.

27. A son has nothing in possession in all the three worlds by giving which he can be free from the indebtedness to his mother. O lady of sweet limbs, this is the truth that has been pronounced by me.

28. I am the most blessed one in the world. No man is superior to me. Everyday I sit on the lap of groups of mothers.

29. If anywhere the son does not sit on the lap of his mother, he does not become aware of the happiness of motherly affection like a virgin who remains unaware of the love of a husband.

30. A son who has climbed on to the lap of his mother may become very proud, and wish to snatch the necklace from the excellent body of his mother, with his hand.

31. Maternal milk is so powerful that even if any body is bereft of his father, he desires to seize the whole world on being duly reared and brought up by his mother.

32-33. (?) My love toward this lady is due to the contact of the belly. My love towards the other mothers is due to the contact of the lap. If it be true that I do not cherish any difference (or partiality) between this (mother) and (my) other mothers may my father live for hundred years, thanks to that truth." When her (step) son said thus Mohini was wonder-struck.

34-37. "Ruthless as I am by nature, how can I strike him who is so humble and sinless. This would have been proper in the house of a tinner (?) If a boy is regularly rendering service to his father, there is no one on Earth on a par with him. It is for perpetrating a despicable act with regard to such a boy so superb in virtue (as compared with others) and by nature so virtuous and inclined to religion that I have become a step-mother unto him, in this world." After reflecting like this in various ways, Mohinī the most beautiful woman in the world spoke to her step-son : "Fetch my husband quickly. Without him I cannot stay even for a Muhūrta (i.e. 48 minutes).

38-39. Then, O king (?), he hastened to his father and bowed to him. He said—O dear father, the younger mother desires to see you immediately. Be favourably disposed towards her. May Brahmā's daughter be greeted and honoured" At the instance of the son the king got ready to go instantaneously.

40-42a. With pleasure evident in his face. the king entered the apartment of Sandhyāvalī and saw Mohinī the enchanting lady having the luster of molted gold lying on the bed and being served slowly by his beloved Sandhyāvalī eschewing at the advice of her son the natural anger and jealousy felt towards a co-wife.

42b-43. On seeing Rukmāṅgada come, the beautiful lady on the bed, Mohinī, delightedly said to the king who had a great deal of chivalry—" O husband, be pleased to sit here on the cot spread with soft cotton (cloth).

44. O king, the affairs of the kingdom have been looked after by you for a long time and in their entirety. Still your desire for the administration of kingdom does not cease.

45. O king, I consider you the most sinful one on the surface of the Earth since you yourself look after the royal glory (affairs of the state) although you have been aware that your son is efficient.

46-47a. Hence, there is no one more miserable than you in all the worlds. O king, the time of those fathers who have good sons passes happily and that of the experiencers of the fruits of sins, whose mind is drawn towards worldly pleasures passes in misery.

47b. All the Prakṛtis (the elements of the statecraft) (or subjects), O king, are fond of you. This is the result of your full meritoriousness.

48. When Dharmāṅgada is protecting this kingdom and the subjects, why should you also see to it now after eschewing the pleasure of your beloved wife like a weak niggardly fellow.

49. If you are going to look after the kingdom, of what use am I to you ? In vain have I been brought from the head Mandara, the churning rod of the ocean of milk (?)

50a. Just as flesh is to birds I shall be turning food to faeces (?)

50b-52a. If any foolish person, too much interested in carrying out his duties, does not take to his wife endowed with blooming youth, whence can he expect to have the beloved ? If the wife is not enjoyed, she may go away; if the wealth is not given in charity, it may go (disappear); if the kingdom is not protected well it may go (to ruins); if the learning is not recited and revised, it may (be forgotten and vanished).

52b-54a. Learning is not acquired by idle persons; a wife is not acquired by persons always observing holy vows; good fortune is not obtained without regular and assiduous performance (of good deeds); glory is not attained by persons who are not devotees, an industrious man does not get happiness; a person who has no wife cannot obtain children, an impure person does not attain virtue (dharma) and a Brāhmaṇa of unpleasant words does not attain wealth.

54b-56. Without asking no one understands things; without walking (i.e. moving forward) no one reaches destination; a person who is not a disciple does not understand the holy rite; a wakeful person knows no fear. Why should you, O king, leave me alone in the splendid house of Dharmāṅgada and look after the affairs of your kingdom, O lord, when your son is competent (to do it himself)?

57. When the daughter of Brahmā, who was fond of sexual intercourse and who had large charming eyes spoke thus, the king who was standing by the side of his son became ashamed. He spoke thus to his beloved.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Honouring the Mothers

The king said :

1-3. "O timid lady, I did not assume authority to take up the duties of the king. Since I was very tired, I was overpowered by a pleasing slumber. I told Dharmāṅgada thus : "Take Mohinī to your apartment that is bedecked in all jewels, that could be ventilated or controlled (and protected from) wind (at will) and that is pleasing in all the seasons. O son of beautiful eyes resembling the petals of a lotus, worship her duly. She is my most beloved wife."

4. After commanding my son thus, I went to sleep after reaching the bed with great difficulty like a man of ill-luck attaining wealth.

5. The moment I woke up I have hastened to your presence at once. O gentle lady, there is no doubt about this that I shall carry out whatever you say."

Mohini said :

6. O leading king, appease these wives of yours who are very miserable. They are dejected by your marrying me. They have lost all hopes of satisfying their passionate desire for worldly pleasures.

7-8. O king, O Lord of the subjects, If any one were to strike and pierce into the heads of the Senior wives of comely appearance, the wedge known as the younger wife, he will not have salvation nor will she attain the final beatitude. What peace can I have when I have been burnt in the scalding tears of chaste women ?

9. O king, the gentle and chaste ladies may reduce even my procreator (Brahmā) to ashes. What then about an ordinary persons like you or me ?

10. O king, there is no woman like Sandhyāvalī in all the three worlds. With all her limbs bound by love towards you, she had been feeding me with food-stuffs having all the six tastes.

11-12. Thanks to the honour and weightage given to you, she spoke pleasing and coaxing words to me. There are hundreds of women like these in your abode and O king, I am not even equal to the dust of their feet."

On hearing these words of Mohinī, the king became ashamed.

13. The king was then standing near the eldest wife who was accompanied by her son. The son who was a person understanding the inner feelings of other persons, knew that the king had gone through all the ten states of love-lorn persons.

14. He understood that his father was overwhelmed by passionate love and was fascinated by Mohinī. He called together all the mothers. (i.e. the queens of Rukmāṅgada) beginning with Sandhyāvalī.

15. With palms joined in reverence, he spoke to them these pleasing words—Mohinī, the daughter of Brahmā and the newly wedded wife (of my father) is my (step) mother.

16. O gentle ladies, she yearns for a secret meeting with the king for dalliance with him. Hence delightfully approve of it.

The Mothers said :

17. O son, who will approve of and encourage the swallowing of oneself by a serpent? O foremost one among embodied beings, who will place fire over himself and kindle it ?

18. Who will swallow the terrible poison ? Who will cut off one's own head ? Who will tie a terrible stone round one's neck and try to cross the sea ?

19. Who will enter the jaws of leopards. Who will try to pluck hairs from the manes of a fierce lion ? Who will sit over the sharp edge of a sword that dazzles in the sky.

20. Which lady will approve of the dalliance of her co-wife with her husband (?) One would rather give everything that one has than entertain thoughts about this in the mind.

21. Which woman will see with her own eyes her husband respected (and openly loved) by another woman ? It would be by far the better that her head is cut off with an excellent sharp-edged sword.

22. Who is that lady, if at all any one is like that anywhere, who will be able to bear that her husband whom she considers her own vital breath is pressing and caressing the breasts of another lady ?

23-25a. Much less who will be able to see it with her own eyes. This is the most miserable of all miseries bringing in endless grief if a woman is compelled to see with her own eyes her husband enamoured of another woman. O son, it is even better if all your mothers die simultaneously; but the king, our husband, should not be seen united with Mohinī.

Dharmāṅgada said :

25b-26a. O ladies of splendid faces, If you are not prepared to accord happiness to my father, I will mix poison and drink it. After I die you can have the happiness.

26b-27a. If any lady were to carry out anything mentally, verbally or physically causing misery to my father, she is my enemy, she deserves to be killed by me even if she were Sandhyāvalī.

27b-28a. That gentle lady Mohinī is superior to all. She is the most beloved of my father. The maiden has come from her abode on the mountain Mandara for the purpose of dalliance.

28b-29. On hearing these words of their step-son, the mother-queens trembled with grief In a faltering tone they spoke wishing for the benefit of their step-son.

"Your statement must of necessity be executed. It is reasonable by all means.

30-32. But your father may approach Mohinī after giving gifts duly to his other wives. If any husband wishes to marry a second or a subsequent wife, he must give the eldest wife twice the amount (of dowry received from her ?) Otherwise he is a debtor. If the husband takes the permission of the eldest wife and marries another lady, he must give what the eldest wife desires and demands—so opine the persons who know the traditional customs and manners. The excellent man must perform Iṣṭāpūrta (i.e. sacrifices, digging of wells and charitable rites) in the company of the eldest wife.

33a. This is the Dharma (religious practice). Otherrwise it will be injustice and there will be complete destruction of Dharma as well.

33b-34. On hearing the words of the mothers the son (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) gave with a delightful heart each of them many presents. The prince gave them more than a crore each. He gave away a thousand cities and a thousand villages to them as well.

35. To each of them he gave eight chariots fitted with garlands of gold and yoked to four female mules.

36-37. He gave them ten thousand garments the price of each of which was more than a hundred coins. To each of his mothers the prince gave a hundred thousand pure gold pieces of everlasting (lustre) excavated from Mount Meru. The son of the king gave each of them more than a hundred men servants and women slaves.

38. To each of them he gave ten thousand cows, each of which yielded a big potfull of milk (at a time). He gave them a thousand good poles to which the yokes are to be fixed, severally.

39. The son of the king gave each of them ten kinds of grains. Laughingly he gave a hundred thousand gardens.

40. He gave ten thousand pots of ghee and oil separately. To each of them he offered inumerable goats and ewes.

41. The highly devoted son presented them (the queen-mothers) thousands of gold ornaments studded with diamonds (and precious stones).

42. He gave them necklaces made of brilliant pearls of the size of embylic myrobalan fruits. He gave them five and seven (a dozen) bangles each.

43. Sandhyāvalī was already wearing on her person two hundred and fifty pearls resembling the moon.

44. The son presented each of them two necklaces that captivated the mind. He gave them Prastha measures of Saffron, sandal paste and camphor.

45-46. The son gave them huge quantity of musk. Desirous of the happiness of his father he impartially distributed to them different kinds of vessels, water pots, ghee pots, milk pots, and pots for different kinds of beverages.

47. The prince gave them gold plates, pots and vessels one thousand and fourteen hundred in number (?)

48. To each of them he gave three hundred to five hundred she-elephants of great speed with muscular and fleshy shoulders.

49. He gave them twenty she-camels each and hundred palanquins with brawny men with excellent dress (uniform).

50-51. To the mothers he gave seventy horses of happy pleasing trot. After giving thus to them much wealth, the blessed prince who had the affluence and brilliance of Kubera circumambulated them. With palms joined in reverence he addressed these words.

52-53. I bow down to you with my head bent low. It is my importunity to you all that all of you should say thus to my father.— O king, enjoy Mohinī freely. We have no trace of malice towards you nor should you be malicious towards us. Sport with Mohinī the good natured daughter of Brahmā, with hundreds of secret pleasures from her.

54. On hearing the statement of the son, all of them were thrilled with delight. They spoke to their husband the king. "Sport with the daughter of the self-born deity for a long time like the leading scion of the family of Raghu, (Rāma) with the daughter of the king of Videha (i.e. Sītā).

55. There is no doubt about it that the daughter of Brahmā cannot be a cause of poignant grief to us because of her sexual connection with you. Know that these words are uttered by us without any heart-burning misery. Thanks to the brilliance of your son.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

The love-making of Mohini

Vasiṣṭha continued :

1. The king who was passionately fond of his lady-love, on being permitted by his wives, derived incomparable delight. He spoke to Dharmāṅgada thus :—

2. "O son, protect this Earth consisting of seven island-continents after slaying the wicked at the outset. Be ever vigilant and alert and active.

3. Always make use of the best opportunites. Be a supervisor of good conduct. Be always conscious of everything and alert, be favourable to good business transactions.

4. Be moving continuously; always be interested in charitable gifts; always eschew crookedness, be always engaged in the disciplined life of the good.

5. O son, listen to another thing which should be pursued by you now. Lack of trust and confidence in everything and everyone is recommended in the case of kings.

6. O popularly loved one, (you must possess) the accurate knowledge of the treasure and of the (assets of the) people.

You should elicit money (taxation) like the (absorption of) flowery juice by a bee gathering honey (from flowers).

7. Through you as my son, I feel that youth has been regained by me.

8. After delightfully entrusting you with the burden of the earth with its seven oceans and continents and having obtained this moon-faced wife of excellent and rare beauty and seductive charms, I shall enjoy myself in dalliance.

9. In the human world, a father overcome with wrinkles, shaking old teeth and white greying hairs becomes a cause of shame and (derisive laughter) if he is desirous of sexual intercourse, when the son has attained muturity and is competent.

10. Though aged, I am not weak and infirm; I am flourishing in happiness, I desire this fair lady the most beautiful in the world, who for my sake has forsaken even the Devas; this lady of sweet and charming eyes, who has been smitten by the arrows of Cupid, has come to me (of her own accord).

11. I will engage myself at will in sexual dalliance with this lady of the lustre of molten gold, my mind shall then be full (thanks to the realisation of my cherished desires). After hiding myself on the banks of rivers of divine beauty as well as sylvan fountains and rivulets (I shall enjoy myself with this lady).

12. This lady is dearer to me than my life. She is the sole lady of heaven who can easily be held by me. For her sake even the Devas lost their sense like groups of kings over Ramā (goddess Lakṣmī).

13. On hearing these words of his father, the prince of fine intelligence devoutly bowed down to the excellent king who was in the company of his step-mother and gave him much wealth for the sake of enjoying pleasures.

14. For the happiness of his father who was distressed, thanks to the activities of the fish-bannered deity (i.e. Cupid), he engaged men-servants who would comply with the commands and women-servants who had gold necklaces.

Thereafter, the son protected the Earth.

15. Dharmavibhūṣaṇa (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) was eulogised by the kings who surrounded him. He moved about in the whole of the Earth consisting of many continents. At that time, O king, (?) the people had no inclination towards sins.

16. The trees were never devoid of fruits and flowers; the fields were never devoid of barley and rice grains. Cows yielded potfulls of milk sweet like sugar and productive of ghee.

17. Under his rule Milk was a good beverage, destructive of all distress, dispelling sins and increasing the development of the body. No man saved and hoarded wealth (for his selfish purpose); no wife spoke harsh or bitter words.

18. The son was humble (all sons were humble) engaged in carying out the behests of his father; the daughter-in-law remained perfectly obedient and submissive to the mother-in-law; the common people abided by the advice of Brāhmaṇas; excellent Brāhmaṇas performed holy rites mentioned in the Vedas.

19. People never took food on the day of Mādhava (Viṣṇu) i.e. on the Ekādaśī day; the rivers never went dry; riches did not get exhausted although they were enjoyed by men in the course of their enjoyment of pleasures.

20. When Dharmāṅgada engaged himself in the protection of his kingdom, the people were contented, as the Dūrvā grass flourishes when watered well and a fine grassy plain is evolved, so people flourished.

21. By observing fast etc. on the day of Hari, men enjoyed pleasures and attained the region of Hari. People, not being afraid of robbers (due to security measures and police protection prevalent then), did not bolt their doors even in dark nights.

22. Cows did not give extra trouble to the cowherds in looking after them; they went to graze according to their own wish and returned to the abodes as usual. They yielded potful of milk in plenty. They were fond of their calves and they spread peace everywhere.

23. The Earth grew plenty of grains etc. without being ploughed. All plants and trees grew up without the use of ploughshare. Infants were nourished by the breast-milk of their mothers. Young damsels were developed and nourished thanks to the activities of their husbands.

24. The people well protected by the king, were fully developed. Virtue in the company of truth was fully developed; when the people who were endowed with devotion to Hari and who had the great interest in virtue were being protected by the king's son, time passed on causing happiness to all.

25. The king was free from ailment. He was endowed with riches; showering much (i.e. spending a great deal) he celebrated great festivals; he was much enamoured of Mohinī and all her activities gave him happiness.

26. Neither of the day nor of the night was he aware. He was not conscious of the fortnights and months that passed by; even years went by unnoticed; he was so enamoured of the sexual dalliance of the daughter of Brahmā of auspicious activities.

27. The king's virility increased with the loving union with Mohinī; the more he resorted to her with the backing of Kāma (God of Love), the sexual potency increased all the more like the moon in the bright half of the month; it never got exhausted by the frequent indulgence in sex.

28. Just as the Devas become stronger and stronger by imbibing the nectar juice, so also the more he touched her the fresher he became. Drinking charming beverages and listening to sweet songs consisting of melodious tone (he increased in virility and strength).

29-32. Even while glancing at the beauty of the (attendant) women, he touched and caressed the moon-like face of Mohinī. With delight he pressed and caressed her stout breasts resembling gold pots and covered with necklaces and other ornaments. The three curly lines of hair that grew round her navel appeared splendid and charming. On seeing the all-round beauty of the breasts of the fair-limbed lady of splendid eyes, the king thought thus (?) "No other women has a beauty like this. It is charming and pleasing to mind. The way in which the features of Mohinī have been created by Brahmā (is not found elsewhere). It is very fascinating to look at her calves that have the lustre of molten gold, that resemble the paws of a lion and that have no hair on them."

33-34. The row of her teeth had the lustre of the moon. Her hidden ankles had been created for fascinating the people. After seeing the beautiful form, from head to foot of the lady of large charming eyes, the king considered himself superior to the Devas. He was delighted and considered himself blessed much—O ! whatever this lady of slender frame and large eyes may request me should be given to her.

35-36. For the sweet and charming sexual intercourse with this splendid lady, I will give her in the end all the wealth I possess. Even rare things should be given to her, those things which cannot be given by others, I will give her even those things which should not be given. For example, my life should not be given. But if the gold-complexioned lady requests for it, I will definitely give it to her. I will never think over it hesitatingly. Excepting my son, there is nothing which should not be given to her.

CHAPTER TWENTY

Dharmāṅgada's conquest of quarters (world)

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. Thus eight years passed on happily during which king Rukmāṅgada was deluded by the sexual intercourse with Mohinī.

2-3a. In the course of the ninth year, the king's powerful son Dharmāṅgada attacked and conquered five Vidyādharas on the Malaya, the excellent mountain. He brought as booty five splendid jewels that bestowed all cherished desires.

3b-5. One of the jewels yielded crores and crores of gold pieces, and was very auspicious. The second jewel bestowed lakhs and crores of garments, ornaments etc., the third jewel exuded nectar that rejuvinated the people: the fourth jewel could erect assembly halls and present cooked accomplished food and the fifth enable one to move about anywhere in the three worlds and range through the sky.

6-7. Taking with him those five jewels, the prince instantly came near his step mother and father Rukmāṅgada accompanied by those defeated Vidyādharas and their women folk whose eyes were filled with tears. He bowed down to them and dedicated the five jewels at their feet. With the head bent down in humility he said :—

8. "O king, O dear father, these five Vidyādharas have been defeated by me in battle by the miraculous missile pertaining to Viṣṇu, on the Malaya, the excellent mountain.

9. O excellent king, these (Vidyādharas) and their women folk have come here as your servants. Please present the jewels to Mohinī as ornaments for her arms.

10-11. They are the bestowers of all cherished desires; they cause rejuvination. By wearing the jewels, old shaky teeth become stronger once again. They yield garments, mansions, gold pieces, movement through heaven and nectar. I had to fight them for a month and thanks to your brilliance, these jewels were obtained by me.

12. With great difficulty, O king, the seven island continents were won by me and thanks to your brilliance the people there are compelled to pay tributes.

13. A year elapsed since I entered into the ocean, and the city Bhogavatī surrounded by serpents has been conquered by me.

14. Serpent virgins numbering to ten thousand have been brought over by me. Necklaces and jewels are brought by me in plenty.

15-17a. Thereafter, O dear father, I went to the great city of Dānavas. After defeating them, eight thousand beautiful girls of great splendour are brought by me. O king, ten crores of jewels that carry on the duty of illumination at nightfall have been brought into your mansion.

17b-19. Then I went to the world of Varuṇa situated beneath Rasātala (netherworlds.) There Lord Varuṇa who was puffed with pride of his power and influence, although he deserves to be the servant of your feet, was intimated by me thus—"Stay under the control of my father, King Rukmāṅgada if you wish to remain alive. At my words Varuṇa was infuriated and he came to fight with me.

20. Then a fight ensued with him terribly at Rasātala and continued for a year. The leader of aquatic forces was defeated by me by means of the miraculous missile pertaining to Nārāyaṇa.

21. At the supplication of young women (his wives), he was not killed. For the protection of his life, ten thousand horses as fast as the wind were given (as tribute) by the defeated (lord).

22. These horses were white in colour with the refulgence of the moon but had one of their ears dark in colour. Without grass and water they could live for many years.

23. A beautiful and fully bedecked virgin was presented to me. Varuṇa gave her to me as my wife. That auspicious girl also has been brought by me.

24-25. The girl was brought by me alongwith much wealth. O dear, there is no spot in the three worlds which had been difficult of access to me and which had not been conquered by me because of the merit of serving your feet. Hence get up and inspect carefully the great fortune earned by me through your grace.

26-27. O Lord of the subjects, myself, all my riches, everything is subservient to you. The son who says "This fortune has been earned by me, it shall not be given to Brāhmaṇas," will fall into hell. O dear father, self-esteem should not be indulged in by the son.

28-30. In regard to the hoarded wealth, the son is like a dagger or a sickle. It is thanks to the heroism of the father that the hoards of wealth of the son increase. Taking a sharp-shining sickle, one cuts off clusters of grass.

If the cloth (mast) is filled with wind, one is enabled to cross a river etc. in a boat. (The sails filled with wind (i.e. the force of wind enables the man in the boat to cross the river (lit. water). Just as the wooden doll of a woman moves and dances in accordance with the desire of the (wire-pulling) juggler, so also the sons are instilled with brilliance and strength through the virility of the father.

31. Hence this good fortune that has been brought by me may be viewed at by you. You may distribute or preserve your riches as you wish or they may be given to the most excellent one among the groups of mothers.

CHAPTER TWENTYONE

Dharmāṅgada's marriages and his order as a Ruler

Māndhātā enquired :

1. What did the king do on hearing the words of his son ? O Brāhmaṇa, what did the daughter of the creator, Mohinī, the beloved of the king, do ?

2. A particularly wonderful and holy narrative that is comparable to the nectar and is destructive of all doubts has been told by you.

Vasiṣṭha said :

3. On hearing the words of his son, the prominent king became delighted. He got up alongwith his beloved wife and surveyed the wealth (the booty brought by Dharmāṅgada).

4-6a. Instantaneously, O king, the delighted king who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu, joyfully and lovingly gave to his son Dharmāṅgada, all those serpent-girls alongwith the daughter of Varuṇa, for the purpose of becoming his wives. All the remaining things, the king who was overwhelmed by the arrows of Kāma gave to Mohinī along with many jewels and the Dānava women (?)

6b. Thus the father distributed the wealth brought by Dharmāṅgada.

7-8. At an opportune time, the king called his priest and said this : "O Brāhmaṇa, may my son take in marriage the hands of all the virgins in accordance with religious rites.

under the ascendancy of the star propitious for marriages and on the Muhūrta that confers all cherished desires.

9. Having performed the initial religious rite of the proclamation of propitiousness (known as Svasti-Vācana) through Brāhmaṇas and after propitiating them with the gifts of cows, gold, clothes, celebrate the rite of marriage ceremony of my son Dharmāṅgada.

10. The foolish father who does not celebrate the marriage of his son, will sink down in the terrible bottomless hell and remain there for ten thousand Yugas.

11. Hence, the father endowed with (i.e. following) religious rites should celebrate the marriage of his son. He who has settled his son, has also established his own self.

12. O god on the earth (Brāhmaṇa), when the marriage of a son is celebrated, a person derives the benefit of all sacrifices irrespective of the son being endowed with good attributes or devoid of attributes.

13-15a. The marriage of the son must be celebrated by the father who wishes for gaining merit and piety. If the father does not unite (i.e. endow) his sons with wealth and a spouse, he is despised both here and hereafter, and he should not be considered a good man. Hence sons must be settled in avocations and be provided with wives, (they must be given these facilities) so that the sons are satisfied and well honoured and are able to sport (spend their life) happily."

15b-16a. On hearing these words of the king, the Brāhmaṇa his priest, exerted himself assiduously for the celebration of the marriage of Dharmāṅgada, with great. delight.

16b-17a. Though he did not crave for the happiness of contact with women, on account of his bashfulness, the son accepted the betrothal ceremony at the behest of his father.

17b-18a. The prince of mighty arms, unequalled on the Earth in beauty, married the charming serpent-virgins alongwith the daughter of Varuṇa.

18b-19. After marrying all of them in accordance with the injunctions of the sacred texts, he joyously gifted wealth, cows and jewels to the Brāhmaṇas. After the marriage rite, he joyously bowed down to the feet of his mother and father.

20. Then the son Dharmāṅgada spoke to the gentle lady Sandhyāvalī—"O gentle lady, my marriage rite has been celebrated at the instance of my father.

21. I am not retaining the memory of this fact in my mind that my marriage has already been celebrated by my father. O gentle lady, I shall serve as before my unchanging father who is a man of perfect wisdom.

22. I have nothing to do with divine enjoyment of pleasures. I don't have any use even for heaven. Service must be rendered by me to my father as well as to you both by day and at night.

Sandhyāvali said :

23. O son, live long. Live happily. Enjoy all pleasures in accordance with your mental inclinations (i.e. as you please). May you be long-lived, thanks to the grace of your father. O my son, delight my mind.

24. O son, with you as my son of good qualities, I have become Suputriṇī (mother of a good son). I have got a special place in the hearts of all my co-wives (i.e. all of them love me)."

25. After saying this, the lady embraced him, sniffed many times the crown of his head and finally discharged him to resume his duty of looking after the administration of the kingdom.

26. After being discharged by his mother, he bowed to all the other mothers. Abiding by the advice of his father, the prince looked after the problems of government administration.

27. He chastised and restrained the wicked ones; he protected the good and the well-disciplined men of virtues; he toured over all his lands and personally looked into all affairs.

28. He inspected all the affairs in each place once in a month; he looked after the breeding and rearing of elephants and horses; he surveyed the troops of spies.

29. He observed the arguments (going on in the courts of justice); everyday he examined the measures and balances; he protected men in every house.

30. No infant in the arms accustomed to suck the breasts cried for want of breast milk; nowhere did a mother-in-law lament and complain of being disrespected by the daughter-in-law.

31. No competent and efficient son begged of his father; there was no mixing and mingling of castes in any group again.

32. No man kept any concealed income; no man blamed Dharma; no woman remained without bodice if her husband was alive.

33. "May not there be the coming out of women from their houses in my country. May not the widow keep her tresses in tact.[1] May not the ladies with their husband alive be devoid of hair on their heads.

34. May not the devotee observing holy rites be one who reviles always; may not the forest-dwellers permanently dwell in the city. Let there not be any ruthless person who does not give even ordinary maintenance.

35. Let these not stay in my kingdom—A cowherd desirous of urban life; an advisor devoid of good attributes; a Ṛtvik who has not learned the sacred texts.

1. This reference to tonsure of widows shows the lateness of this portion of NP. in date (not earlier than the 10th Cent. A.D.). There is no injunction or reference to such tonsure in the Vedas, the Gṛhya and Dharma Sūtras or in the old Smṛtis like Manu & Yājñavalkya. The prohibition of widows from "adorning the hair, chewing the betel-nut, using perfumes or decking in flowers and ornaments in the Vṛddha-Hārīta VIII. 205, shows that tonsure of widows was not in vogue then. References to Kṣatriya widows of the Kaurava and Yādava families in the Mbh. (Strī 17.25, 21.6; Mausala 7-17) shows no reference to their tonsure. Vijñāneśvara, on Yājñavalkya III. 325, approvingly quotes in the Mitākṣarā Manu's prohibition of tonsure of women :

(keśa-rañjana-tāmbūla-gandha-puṣpādisevanam)

vidvad-vipra-nṛpa-strīṇām neṣyate keśa-vāpanam /

A late work or a late interpolation in the Sk. P. gives us its first indication in Kāśī Khaṇḍa 4·75 ff.

śiraso vapanaṁ tasmāt kāryam vidhavayā sadā)

Restriction on wearing on bodice along with this shows that both NP & Sk. P. record a period when widows came to be looked upon as Yatis (NP. II. 24.15). Kane conjectures that this shows a society in the 10th or 11th cent. A.D. (H.D. II. i. P. 592).

36. The man who grows the indigo plant, the man who sprinkles profusely, the blue colour; these two sinners must be banished and so also the man who brews the liquor.

37. A back-biter, a slanderer who is fond of eating the fish on the back—may he not find a residence in my kingdom. So also the man who forsakes his own wife.

38. These persons are to be punished and given capital punishment—he who eschews Viṣṇu the foremost among the gods and worships any other deity; he who cohabits with a pregnant woman and he who has sexual intercourse with a young woman who has recently delivered of a child.

CHAPTER TWENTYTWO

The glory of the month of Kārttika

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. Thus, O leading king, at the behest of his father, Dharmāṅgada ruled over the kingdom on the earth, observing fast on the day of Hari.

2. There was no such man as was not stabilised in virtue, no one was unhappy, no one was devoid of issues, O king, there was no leper in the kingdom.

3. The Earth yielded treasures to the people who were joyous and well-nourished. O king, even after the calves were fully satisfied, the cows yielded pots full of milk.

4. In every leafy cup there was honey; every tree yielded a Droṇa measure of honey ? The earth being highly delighted, all kinds of grains were produced.

5-14. It was the Dvāparayuga at the end of Tretā but it vied with Kṛta age (in piety). The danger due to clouds disappeared; the sky and the house became free from clouds or impurities. The fragrant Śāli rice grains had ripened. The star canopus (Agastya) surveyed the world (was in ascendancy).

Everywhere the rivers had medium flow of water currents (neither too much nor too little). With the white Kāśa flowers growing on the banks, the rivers appeared like whitehaired ladies, the whole world was whitened by the rays of the moon, the sun was not very fierce; the people in variegated dresses and features thronged rivers and tanks for their holy ablutions; everywhere the kings were eager to go on campaigns of conquests; at the end of Āśvina month, during the period of wakening of Viṣṇu, the preceptor of the Universe, Mohinī the beautiful lady who had delighted the king with nice feelings and different kinds of pleasures (acts of service) was oppressed by mental yearnings. She delighted the king in the forests, on the peaks of mountains, in the confluences of rivers, in the different kinds of lakes, abounding in lotus flowers, on the mountains of Malaya, Mandara, Vindhya, Mahendra, the abode of the Devas, the Sahya, the Himālayas and the auspicious mountain of the sky-clad (naked) God viz. Śiva—i.e. Śiva's mountain of Kailāsa. She gave delight to the king in the heavenly abodes, and other places. O leading king, assuming her divine form, she delighted him day by day. On obtaining Mohinī, the king forsook all holy rites but not the observance on the day of Hari (i.e. the Ekādaśī) that is destructive of births and deaths. Though excessively enamoured of her, the king did not forsake this Vrata.

15-16. The king used to eschew sexual dalliance for three days beginning with Daśamī (the tenth day). Even as he sported like this, one full year elapsed and the auspicious month of Kārttika, the most excellent one in the view of those who know time, arrived once again. This month is highly meritorious, because it puts an end to the slumber of Viṣṇu.

17. O king (Māndhātā), whatever is done in this month is meritorious; the holy rites performed by those men who are the devotees of Viṣṇu shall yield everlasting benefits; they take one to Viṣṇu's world.

18. There is no other month equal to Kārttika; there is no other Yuga equal to Kṛta; there is no other holy rite that is equal to mercifulness; there is no other Jyotis (luminary) equal to the eye.

19. There is no sacred text equal to the Vedas; there is no holy river equal to Gaṅgā; there is no other charitable gift equal to that of lands; no other pleasure is equal to that derived from one's wife.

20. There is no other valuable possession equal to agricultural lands; there is no other profitable acquisition equal to a good cow; there is no greater austerity than abstaining from taking food; there is no other auspicious thing on a par with self control.

21. No other gratification is equal to that of the palate; no one is equal to a Brāhmaṇa; there is no other friend on a par with Dharma (virtue) and there is no other fame equal to that of truthfulness.

22. No other Aiśvarya (prosperity and glory) can be equal to the freedom from ailments, no other deity greater than Keśava. The learned and wise men know of no other thing as sacred as the month of Kārttika in this world.

23-24. Kārttika is the most excellent of all months of which God Viṣṇu is always fond. He who passes this favourite month of Dāmodara without the observance of holy rites, is reborn in the wombs of animals and other creatures. He is excluded from all holy religious rites.

Māndhātā enquired :—

25-26. O sage, when the month of Kārttika arrived, how did king Rukmāṅgada enjoy Mohinī of highly fascinating features ? Tell me. The excellent king was a devotee of Viṣṇu, a follower of the Vedas and the foremost among kings. What did he do in that holiest month ?

Vasiṣṭha replied :

27. On seeing that the month of Kārttika had arrived for the awakening of Hari, the excessively enamoured prominent king spoke these words to Mohinī.

28. O gentle lady, I have had sexual dalliance with you for many years, but nothing against you had been mentioned to by me so far because I had been afraid of being disrespected by you.

29. I am desirous of telling you now. O splendid fair-faced lady, know it. O gentle lady, many Kārttika months have gone by since my infatuation over you.

30. I did not observe any holy rite except the single holy vow of the day of Hari. But now I wish to observe the holy vow of the month of Kārttika.

31. If mortal beings spend the Kārttika month without observing the holy vows, O daughter of Brahmā, all their righteous activities and the Iṣṭāpūrtas (charitable rites such as digging wells, tanks etc. and sacrificial rites) are futile.

32. O blessed lady, even those kings, who are addicted to non-vegetarian diet and who are too much engaged in hunting have eschewed meat in the month of Kārttika and have gone to Viṣṇu's abode.

33. If the aspirant abstains from those foodstuffs to which he is addicted in the month of Kārttika, certainly he attains the form of Viṣṇu.

34. O fair-complexioned lady, let alone the charitable gifts involving the expense of great amounts of wealth and causing great mental strain, one can go to heaven merely by means of the charitable gift of lamps.

35. If that is not available, O blessed lady, one shall kindle the lights offered by others with great devotion. It is superior to all charitable gifts.

36. If one were to weigh all the charitable gifts placed on one side and the charitable gift of lamps on the other side, Lord Kārttikeya has said that the charitable gifts of lamps and the kindling of lamps are on a par with each other.

37-38a. This kindling of lights must be performed with the feelings of devotion. Then it is superior to all kinds of charitable gifts. There is no doubt about this that, by observing the holy rite (by fasting etc.) on the full moon day in the month of Kārttika, in the holy centre of the umbilical lotus of Viṣṇu (i.e. Puṣkara), one is liberated from the sins committed ever since the birth.

38b-39a. He who observes holy vows, fasts and other restraints throughout the month of Kārttika shall become a Deva with an aerial chariot and he attains the highest beatitude.

39b-41a. Hence, O Mohinī, eschew your delusion and fascination over me; command me immediately. I shall perform the holy rite of Kārttika Vrata. O lotus-eyed lady, I shall desist from the worship of your breasts and I shall observe the vows for the worship of Hari.

Mohini said :

41b-43. Narrate in detail the greatness of Kārttika. O excellent king, this month is said to be the receptacle of all merits. O highly intelligent one, what are the special features mentioned and where ? After hearing about the greatness of Kārttika, I shall perform it as desired.

Rukmāṅgada said :

44. O fair-faced lady, I shall tell you the greatness of this month,[1] whereby you will have devotion (engendered in you) for the performance of the worship of Hari.

45-46. The man who performs the Kṛcchra penance or the Prājāpatya rite[2] in the month of Kārttika or observes fast on alternate days or once in three days, or for ten days, or for a fortnight or for the whole of the month, O fair-complexioned lady attains the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

1. The month of Kārttika is regarded as the holiest month, holier than all Tirthas (sacred places) and great sacrifices. The glory of Kārttika is detailed in Pd. P. VI. Chs. 92-95. A number of vratas are prescribed for performance in this month. vide CG. Vrata II. 769-784, Smṛti-Kaustubha 358-427, Nirṇaya Sindhu 192-208. For their alphabetic list HD V. 1. 283-285.

2. The Prājāpatya Vrata consists of donation of a cow at the end of Kṛcchra penance and feeding Brāhmaṇas according to one's ability. Fruit—a place in god Śiva's region.

Kṛcchrānte gopradaḥ kuryād bhojanaṁ śaktitaḥ padaṁ
Viprāṇāṁ Śāṅkaraṁ yāti Prājāpatyam idaṁ vratam

- Mt. P. 100.66

It may be noted that this Vrata is different from Prajāpati Vrata which (according to Praśnopaniṣad I. 15) means 'indulging in sexual intercourse only at night'.

47. If in this month one takes only one meal per day or takes food at night only, or takes only what is received unsolicited, the whole Earth consisting of a series of continents is obtained by the vow-observing men.

48. This month is said to be the bestower of devotion through Vratas, charitable gifts, worship etc. especially in the holy centre of Puṣkara, the city of Dvārāvatī and in Śaukara (Soron on the Gaṅgā near Itah).

49-50a. In this month the day of Hari is sacred; so also the five days called Bhīṣmapañcaka[1] (i.e. from the eleventh day to the full moon day of the Kārttika). If the Prabodhinī (wakening, the eleventh day or Ekādaśī called the "wakening of the Lord") day is spent by observing fast alongwith keeping awake at night, even a sinful man will never stay in the womb of a mother.

50b-51a. O fair lady, a person who sees a Maṇḍala (halo, disc of the sun) on that day attains the greatest region without having recourse to the systems of Sāṁkhya and Yoga.

51b-52a. O auspicious lady, by seeing Maṇḍala in the month of Kārttika, or Śūkara in the holy centre of Śaukara or by seeing Kokavarāha (the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu) one does not become a son once again (i.e. one attains Mokṣa).

52b-53. O lady of unsteady side glances by seeing Maṇḍala or Śrīdhara in Kubjaka, men are liberated from the three types of sins. One shall avoid oil and honey in the month of Kārttika.

54-55. One should avoid meat in the month of Kārttika,[2] one shall also abstain from women in the month of

1. Bhīṣma-pañcaka is a special Vrata to be performed for five days from the Kārttika Śu. 11 to the Full moon day. The performer has to take three baths per day, perform Tarpaṇa, Japas or 108 times repetition of the mantra, Oṁ namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya, worship of Viṣṇu and Homa with the mantra Oṁ namo Viṣṇave and partake of the five components of Pañca-gavya respectively on each day of the Vrata: feeding of Brāhmaṇas and giving of religious fees.

2. Abstinence from flesh-eating in Kārttika is regarded as equivalent to performance of severe penance for one hundred years (Kṛtya Ratnākara 397-99). Abstinence of meat-eating during the Bhīṣma pañcaka period is called Baka-Pañcaka (Kṛtya-ratnākara 425).

Kārttika. O gentle lady, in the month of Kārttika a person devoted to Viṣṇu shall avoid Niṣpāva (? the bran blown away by the winnowing siev). He shall instantaneously be liberated from the sins committed in the course of the year. By taking a meal once a day the devotee attains royal womb (i.e. is born in a royal family).

56. The foolish person who partakes a bacon in the month of Kārttika is cooked (or roasted) in the Raurava hell for sixty thousand years.

57-58. Having been liberated from it, the sinner is born as a rural pig that eats faeces. No man shall eat fish or the flesh of a tortoise or a dear in the month of Kārttika. O gentle lady, by eating flesh in the month of Kārttika one is born as a Cāṇḍāla. Even if one observes a minor Vrata, Kārttika destroys all sins.

59. The initiation undertaken in the month of Kārttika is destructive of births of men. Hence, one shall assiduously undertake initiation in the month of Kārttika.

60. O lady of beautiful thighs, every thing performed by one who has not undergone initiation is futile. A man devoid of initiation attains the womb of an animal.

61. The Kārttika Vrata shall not be performed at home especially on the eleventh day of the Kārttika month. A man who performs the Kārttika Vrata in a holy centre attains the region of Hari.

62. A man shall observe fast on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika and on the next day, in the morning, he should give auspicious pots whereby he attains the abode of Hari.

63-65. The conclusion of all the Vratas in the course of a year is laid down in smṛtis in the month of Kārttika. In the holy centre of Puṣkara marriages are seen performed even without insisting on Uttarāyaṇa (northern transit of the sun) and the auspiciousness of Lagna (astrological division of time) especially during these four days in this month, O lady of fair complexion. The connections entered into during that period cause the increase of sons and grandsons. Hence, O Mohinī, I shall perform the holy rite in the month of Kārttika for the destruction of all sins and for the crease of your love".

Mohini said :

66-67. O The incomparable greatness of the month of Kārttika has been described by you. Kindly recount the rules of procedure of the concluding rites of Cāturmāsya Vratas (holy rites during the four months of the rainy season) O Lord of the earth, whereby the Vratas shall be complete and there will not be any deficiency or omission in the Vrata or in the benefit, thereof.

The king said :

68. O beloved wife, the devotee who performs the Naktavrata (i.e. taking food only at night) should feed a Brāhmaṇa with food-stuffs consisting of all the six tastes.

69. If he performs the rite of Ayācita (not begging for anything) he shall give a bull as gift along with gold. A person who does not eat flesh (meat) shall give a cow as gift alongwith Dakṣiṇā.

70. In the rite of ablution with embylic myrobalan, the man should give curds and milk-puddings. If the person observes the vow of abstaining from fruits, O lady of good eyebrows, he should make gifts of fruits.

71. If one has eschewed oil, one shall make gifts of ghee and if one has eschewed ghee, one shall make gifts of milk. If there is a vow restricting the eating of grains, one should give Śāli (rice) or the respective grains of corn.

72. If the vow is for laying down on the bare ground, he should make gift of a mattress filled with cotton along with four cowries as Dakṣiṇā. If the devotee has vowed to take food on leaves, he shall give a vessel full of ghee.

73. If the devotee has vowed silence, he should give either a bell or gingelly seeds alongwith gold. He should feed a couple and give beds for both.

74. The enjoyment of pleasures shall be alongwith Dakṣiṇās for the sake of completion of the Vrata. If the rite is regular morning ablution, he should offer a horse; if the vow is for eschewing oily stuff, he shall offer ghee and barley.

75. If the rite is for growing nails and hair he should give a mirror as a gift. If the rite is for eschewing foot-wear he should give a pair of shoes.

76. If one has vowed to forsake salt, a good cow is to be given; if one has eschewed meat eating, one should give a tawny coloured cow with its calf.

77-78. If one has vowed the offering of the lighted lamp in one's favourite temple every day, one should give a lamp made of gold or copper alongwith ghee. O beloved one, for the completion of the Vrata he should give an umbrella to a devotee of Viṣṇu alongwith a cloth. One who has undertaken fast on alternate days, should give silk-garment as a gift.

79. If one has undertaken fast once in three days one should give a fully bedecked bed accompanied by gold. In the fasts such as one for six successive days etc., one should give a palanquin alongwith umbrella.

80. If the vow is for a single meal per day, one should give stout bull alongwith a man to look after the same, or goats and sheep. If one has vowed for a fruitarian diet, one shall give gold as gift.

81. If one has vowed vegetable diet one shall give fruit as gift alongwith gold and ghee. If one has eschewed all tasty beverages, one shall give even what is not mentioned here as a gift.

82-84. One must give silver or gold vessel as gift in accordance with one's capacity. If one does not follow the injunctions in the performance of these rites or if one does give things mentioned as gifts (one will incur sin). O beautiful lady of good eyebrows, one must abide by the advice of the Brāhmaṇa priest and perform the rite with the remembrance of Viṣṇu. O auspicious lady, if one considers the statement (i.e. advice) of the Brāhmaṇa futile and does not give Dakṣiṇās, one certainly falls into hell, if there is omission or deficiency in the Vrata the man becomes a leper and a blind fellow.

85-86. The heaven-dwellers, the group of holy centres, the sacrifices of all these are well established in the words of Brāhmaṇas. O beautiful lady, who will transgress their words, if he desires welfare and if he is a sensible scholar and knowledgeable person.

87. This is the secret of Dharma (holy rites) that has been mentioned to you in the same manner as it had been mentioned to Brahmā by Lord of Śrī (Viṣṇu). It should not be divulged to others. It is beneficial and it is the cause of Mādhava's satisfaction.

CHAPTER TWENTYTHREE

The dialogue with Rukmāṅgada

Mohinī said :

1. The statement made by you about the observance of fast in the month of Kārttika is quite excellent. But the observance of Vrata etc. by kings is not found anywhere in the sacred texts.

2. In fact, excepting for a Brāhmaṇa, it has not been prescribed for anyone else; not for the Śūdras and the Vaiśyas too. (As the duty) of the kings, charitable gifts, protection (of subjects) and fighting are laid down (in Smṛtis).

3. If you wish to retain me as your beloved, the Vrata should not be observed by you. O leading king, I cannot remain without ou even for a Muhūrta.

4-5a. O dear king having the lustre of god Brahmā, how can I remain separated for a period of month? O ruler of the Earth, where you think of observing fast, food should rather be offered in lieu of it to Brāhmaṇas of noble souls. Or may the eldest of all your wives observe the Vratas.

5b-6. When this was argued by Mohinī, Rukmabhūṣaṇa (i.e. Rukāṅgada) called his auspicious and beloved wife Sandhyāvalī. The instant she was called, she came near the king who was one who had distributed religious gifts and fees in plenty.

7-8. He was seated on a divine like splendid bed clasped between the arms of Mohinī. The tip of her breasts resembled golden pitcher when rubbing against him. O king (Māndhātā) he was seated on the mattress of the lustful lady of charming eyes. With the palms joined in reverence, Sandhyāvalī stooped down her neck in bowing down to her husband.

9. She said to the king, " O darling, why have I been called? Being completely free from the jealousy usual among co-wives, I have always abided by your order.

10. There is no doubt about this, O king, that the more you indulge in sexual dalliance with Mohinī the more my pleasure increases.

11-12. O king, the woman who becomes miserable at the personal pleasure of her husband is reborn as a she-falcon for eight years (?). Command me, O king, do not get abashed due to your lustfulness.

Rukmāṅgada said :

13. O fair lady, I know your good conduct, and the nobility of your birth. It was at your instance that sexual dalliance with Mohinī for a long time was indulged in by me.

14. Many Kārttika months have gone by while I indulged in sexual dalliance. Though I have been enamoured of the happiness derived from my beloved, the day of Hari (i.e. Ekādaśī) did not slip by.

15. By my frequent enjoyment of lustful pleasures I have achieved satiety. This month of Kārttika is known to be the destroyer of all sins.

16. O gentle lady, I am desirous of observing the holy vow of Kārttika Vrata that yields great merit. But O auspicious lady, this daughter of Brahmā prevents me from observing it.

17. O fair-complexioned lady, by no means should anything displeasing to her be committed. Hence you take up my Vrata called Kṛcchra that dries up the body.

18. On being urged thus by her husband, the lady whose complexion was like that of newly burnished gold, whose breasts and other limbs were plump and whose face resembled the moon spoke these words :— "I shall observe the holy Vrata for your satisfaction."

19. O Lord of rulers of men, I shall perform only those things whereby you will have fame and renown, whereby you will have happiness without prejudice to your good reputation. I shall even cast off my tender body into the fire for your sake.

20. O king, at your instance, I will even kill my son. I will not consider it as something that should not be done. All the more, O ruler of men, I shall perform this simple holy rite."

21. After saying this and after bowing to the king who was the enemy of the son of the sun (i.e. Yama), the gentle lady of charming large eyes performed holy rite for the destruction of sins.

22. When the excellent holy penance ealled Kṛcchra was begun by his beloved wife, the king derived much pleasure. He spoke these words to the daughter of the Kuśa-emblemed deity (Brahmā)—"O lady of beautiful eyebrows, your suggestion has been carried out in accordance with your desire.

23. O beautiful lady with thighs resembling metacarpus, sport as you please with the gladness of your heart. Leave off your cares and concentrate your ambitions and desires in me. O lady of sweet eye-brows, for your sake I have eschewed my duties. There is no other woman to give me happiness."

24. On being thus addressed by her Lord, she attained great pleasure. She spoke to the king thus :— "O Lord, It was after knowing that you are exceedingly loving (and tender) that I had come to you from the heaven.

25. I had forsaken the immortal ones, the groups of Daityas, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, serpents and Rākṣasas, who were awaiting me. Overcome with love, I approached you at the mountain of Mandara.

26. The like-mindedness of both (husband and wife) is the real fruit of passion. Passionate union with the mind elsewhere is no better than the union of two corpses.

27. Fruitful is my body. Fruitful is my beauty. O lover, with you full of love towards me, I have acquired that which is very rare in the three worlds.

28-29a. When the heart clasped within plump protruding breasts does not relent (break), I think it is certainly like Indra's thunderbolt. The nectarine juice from the lips of beautiful ladies is the very ambrosia in the world. It is being drunk with the breasts pressed close to the heart."

29b-30a. After saying this, the lady of slender limbs embraced the king who was in the secluded spot and delighted him in accordance with the injunctions of Vātsyāyana[1], the author of erotic science (Kāma-sūtra).

30b-31. Even as he was diverting himself in the company of Mohinī, the sound of drums which were placed on an intoxicated elephant according to the decree of Dharmāṅgada reached his ears.

32. "O people, the day of Hari dawns tomorrow. Remain with only a single meal.[2] All shall eschew alkaline salts, taking in only Havisya (cooked rice soaked in ghee).

33. You must lie down on the bare ground. You must avoid sexual union with your beloved wives. Remember the Lord of the Chief of the Devas, the ancient and excellent Puruṣa.

34-35a. Either take a single meal or observe fast. You will thereby be able to go to the region of Śrī Hari without performing a series of Śrāddhas, without offering or taking Piṇḍas and even when your sons have not gone to Gayā.[3]

1. Vātsyāyana (Circa 300-400 A.D.) is the author of the famous treatise, Kāma Sūtra. The instructions on erotics mentioned here are given in the Adhikaraṇa (section) on Sāmprayogika. For details vide Kāma sūtra with com. Jayamaṅgalā. (Chowkhamba, 1912.)

2. Compare the procedure of the Ekādasi Vrata Supra I. Ch. 23.

3. A famous sacred place in Bihar. It is supposed that by performing Śrāddha and offering Piṇḍas on Viṣṇupada at Gayā one redeems one thousand generations and takes them and himself to the world of Viṣṇu. The sacredness of the place and its efficacy to redeem the ancestors of the pilgrim is glorified in many other Purāṇas like AP., Vāyu etc. Thus the Vāyu 105.30 states he who performs Śrāddha at Gayā repays his debts to his ancestors.

Śrāddha-krd yo Gayā-kṣetre pitṛṇām anṛno hi saḥ /

For details vide infra Chs. 44 to 47 with annotations.

35b-38a. This is the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Kārttika, which dispels the slumber of Hari. The Ekādaśī dawns tomorrow. Do not take food at all. If one observes fast on the Prabodhinī Ekādaśī day, all the sins such as the slaughter of a Brāhmaṇa and the like which one might have committed wilfully, disappear. This is called Prabodhinī Ekādaśī because it enlightens virtuous persons and those who practise just activities. Also it wakens Hari from slumber.

38b-39a. The man who at least once observes the fast on this day that dispels the slumber of Hari, does not become a son once again. He is not reborn in any womb.

39b-40. O men, perform the worship of the discus-bearing Lord with your own wealth, clothes, flowers, incense, lights, excellent sandal paste, saffron, sweet fruits and scents. All of you worship the feet of Śrī Hari.

41. He who does not carry out my instructions, conducive to the attainment of piety and salvation (attainment to the vision of Viṣṇu), is liable (lit. deserves) to be killed, banished from the realm or certainly punished (otherwise) by me."

42. While the drum that had the sound of the clouds was being beaten to proclaim as before, the most excellent king dropped down the chewing betel along with camphor from his hand.

43. Withdrawing his chest that was in contact with the breasts of Mohinī, the king (though) of enhanced appetite for sexual pleasure, stood up from his bed.

44. With bland speech he consoled Mohinī who was afflicted with delusion and passion :— "O gentle lady the day of Hari that is destructive of sins dawns tomorrow.

45. I will be observing restraints. May I be forgiven. May I be excused. At your behest the Kṛcchra penance is being caused to be performed by Sandhyāvalī.

46. But this Ekādaśī vow that is called Prabodhakāraṇī should be performed by me. It cuts off bonds of all sins. It bestows salvation.

47. To all the three worlds, it is the cause of celebrating great festivities. Hence, O lady of elated gait, I will partake of only Haviṣya invariably.

48. O lady of large eyes propitiate Adhokṣaja (Viṣṇu) Hṛṣīkeśa along with me, by being engaged in the observance of fast. Thereby, you will attain salvation devoid of burning sensation and dissolution.

Mohinī said :

49. O king, you have spoken pertinently. At your behest, I shall perform the worship of the discus-bearing deity, that dispels births, deaths and old age.

50-52a. The time of fulfillment has come for that vow (promise) that had been undertaken by you formerly on the top of the Mandara mountain, along with the offering of the hand. It was marked by staking your merits. Hence, may that be given to me. If you do not grant me that boon, all the merits that you have accumulated since your birth with great difficulty, will perish instantaneously.

Rul māṅgada said :

52b-53. Come on, O lady of charming limbs I will carry out whatever you entertain in your mind. There is nothing which should not be given to you. Even my life shall be given to you, O beautiful lady—what then of villages, wealth etc. including the earth.

Mohinī said :

54-57. O Lord, O love, O powerful king, O Lord of my life fond of sexual intercourse, if I, your beloved wife, am to be enjoyed, no fast should be observed on the day of Viṣṇu. O king, am I not your beloved wife ? I do not wish to spend even a Muhūrta without contact with you, O excellent one. So O king, devoted to truth, if you wish to enjoy me, give up this vow of fast. May food be taken on the day of Hari.

57-58a. It is this boon that should be granted to me. This is what had been requested for by me formerly. O leading king, if you do not grant it (this boon) to me, you will become a man of falsehood. You will fall into a terrible hell (and remain there as long as all living beings are dissolved. (upto the end of the world).

The king implored :

58b. O auspicious lady, please do not speak like this. This is not proper on your part ?

59. Why do you, though a daughter of god Brahmā, create obstacles in the observance of holy rites. Ever since my birth I have never taken food on the day of Hari.

60-61a. O auspicious lady, now that my hairs have begun to turn grey, how shall I take food ? Having recourse to the heavenly river (i.e. the Gaṅgā) or the worship of Hari is proper in case of a man who has gone beyond the prime of youth and the power of whose sense-organs has dwindled.

61b-62a. This (i.e. taking food on the Ekādaśī day) is what has not been committed by me whether in boyhood or in youth. It is a despicable act. How can I perform it now, when I have become feeble and am lacking in virility ?

62b-63. Be pleased, O lady of roving side-glances. be pleased, O fair-complexioned lady. Do not create obstacles in my Vrata. I shall give you the riches of the kingdom. O lady of beautiful eyes, if you do not wish for it, I shall do another thing.

64. I shall make you seated in a palanquin that is very splendid and resembling the aerial chariot. Accompanied by my wife, I shall walk on food and take you wherever you wish.

65-66. If you do not like the aerial chariot made by me, I will make two pillars of gold adorned with corals. O my beloved wife, I will prepare a swing of pearls for your sake. I shall swing you therein day and night for many months.

67-68. O my beloved lady, O beautiful one, do not create obstacles in the performance of my holy rite. If food is taken on the day of Hari, O fair-faced lady, it is more despicable than eating the flesh (from the hands) of a Cāṇḍāla or that of a dog. If one indulges in sexual intercourse when the moon dwindles (i.e. on the New Moon day), one incurs the sin of destroying the three worlds.

69-70. A man incurs sins in the following circumstances: —if he gets himself shaved on the Bhūta day (i.e. the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Kārttika); if he takes food on the day of Viṣṇu; if he takes oil bath on Ṣaṣṭhī (sixth day of a lunar fortnight); if he takes salt, O auspicious lady, on the Tṛtīyā (third) day and meat on the Saptamī (seventh) day if he takes in ghee on the full moon day and drinks liquor during the transit of the sun from one sign of zodiac to another.

71-73. On the day of Hari, food (to be taken in) contains the sin accrued in the following acts viz.—if one spoils the pasture-land of cows., if one commits perjury; if one misappropriates a deposit, if one causes hardships to a virgin (e.g. making her marriage impossible), if one commits breach of trust; if one milks a cow the calf of which is dead; if he does not give an excellent Brāhmaṇa what he solemnly promises to give saying 'I will give you", in Maṇikūṭa (fraud committed in regard to a precious gem), in Tulākūṭa (in using false weights), in Kanyānrta (in uttering a lie about a virgin) and in Gavānrta (in uttering a lie over a cow). Hence, O fair-eyed lady, how shall I take food knowing that it is a great sin?

Mohini said :

74-77. While I was in the mountain of Mandara, Gautama told me thus : O leading king, one shall not pass an Ekādaśī day by taking in single meal throughout the day or a nocturnal meal or unsolicited food[1] or by observing fast. Observance of fast is not proper for women advanced in pregnancy, for Gṛhasthas (worshippers) of domestic sacrificial fires), Kṛśas (worn-out weaklings), sick men, Śiśu (children) and the wrinkled worne-out bodied (old people). O leading king, those who are engaged in Yajñas and their enjoyment, those who serve the Earth, those who fight and the Pativratās (chaste ladies) must not observe fast.

1. This verse is found in other Purāṇas e.g. Mk. P. quoted by Hemādri on Kāla p. 170, Gd, P. I. 136. 2-3. The snag in Mohini's argument is that she applies these to an ablebodied person like Rukmāṅgada. Manu X 1.28 & 30 forbids an able-bodied capable person to resort to these alternatives. Mbh. Śānti 165.17 supports this. The terms ekabhakta or abhukta (taking meal after mid-day-dinārdha-samayettte), nakta (taking food after the appearance of stars after the sun-set) and ayācita (subsistence on food not obtained by begging or soliciting) were used formerly with reference to Prāyaścittas like Kṛcchra. They came to be applied to fasts in Purāṇas later on.

78. O excellent man, the day of Viṣṇu must not be spent without the observance of Vrata. Those Brāhmaṇas who have maintained the sacred fire should be known as Gṛhasthas (householders).

79. Those who abide by the duties of protecting the subjects should be known as Rājas (kings). Gurviṇī is the lady who is pregnant for eight months. Śiśus are children upto their eighth year.

80. Kṣīṇas are those who observe too many fasts. Valigātras are those old men (whose body contains wrinkles) Mahotsavas are those who are busily engaged in auspicious rites such as marriage etc.

81-82. Those who are engaged in Yajñas are the persons who refrain from worldly activities. (Defective) The woman who is engaged in the welfare of her hnsband by means of the three Karaṇas(organs etc) (i.e. mind, body and speech) should be known as Pativratā (chaste lady). So also the woman who protects her vaginal passage. O king, of what avail are the many utterances I may indulge in ?

83. I will be pleased if you take food on the Ekādaśī day but I won't by pleased even if you cut off your own head and give it to me.

84. O king, if you do not take food on the day of Hari, I will not touch the body belonging to you who are untruthful in your words.

85. O leading king, truthfulness is revered among people of all stages of life and castes. O king, especially it is so among rulers of kingdom like you.

86. It is through truth that the sun blazes;[1] the moon shines through truth. O king, the Earth is established in truth. It is the truth that upholds the universe.

87. The wind blows through truthfulness and the fire burns through truth. This entire Universe consisting of the mobile and the immobile beings has truth for its support.

88. It is through truth that the ocean does not move

1. It appears that in VV. 86-89 the Vedic concept of Ṛta is extended to Satya (Truth).

(away from its place). O king (for the same reason) the Vindhya mountain does grow (rise) up. Never does a yonng woman carry the child in her crossing the time limit (i.e. beyond a stipulated period of about ten months, she does not hold it.)

89. It is only when they are abiding by truthfulness that trees put forth flowers and fruits. O king, the means of Divine judgement, etc. of men has for its basis, truthfulness alone.

90. Truthfulness surpasses thousands of horse-sacrifices. Through falsehood you will be tainted with such a sin as that of drinking liquor.

CHAPTER TWENTYFOUR

Questions of Mohini[1]

The king said :

1-2. You mention that it had been recounted to you by Gautama on the excellent mountain Mandara that food be taken on the day of Hari. But this is contrary to the opinion of the Purāṇas. O fair-faced lady, it has been mentioned by that Brāhmaṇa who indulges in spreading the insignificant sacred texts out of greed.

3-5. The following decisions have been proclaimed in the Purāṇas by learned men viz—one should not drink water with a conch shell; one must not kill* 'tortoises' and 'pigs;' food should not be taken on the eleventh day in either half of the month. The sin of taking food on that day, O gentle lady, is the same as that of the sexual intercourse with a forbidden woman or that of eating forbidden food or that of doing a prohibited act. It is also equal to the slaughter of a thousand cows. O, gentle lady, how can I take food on the day of Hari in spite of my knowledge of this ?

1. This chapter describes a typical conflict between parochical Vedists and Vaiṣṇavas. This part of the NP. is meant for the glorification of the Ekādaśī Vrata. Though this topic is discussed in Part I Ch. 23 (and elsewhere), a detailed description and importance of this Vrata is found (sometimes repeated in this part also. This chapter emphasizes the importtance of complete fasts of Ekādaśī and the acceptance of the authority of Purāṇas in interpreting the Vedas. The medieval writers who compiled treatises on Ekādaśī (e.g. Śūlapāṇi's Ekādaśi Viveka, Raghunandana's Ekādaśitattva) and on Kāla (e.g. Hemādri on Kāla, Mādhava on Kālanirṇaya) have profusely quoted the NP as an authority on Ekādaśi. Hence the importance of these chapters.

6. O lady of charming thighs, when the day of Hari has dawned, even the Puroḍāśa (the sacrificial oblation of ground rice) is declared to be equal to the forbidden food. What then about the (ordinary) food taken in by way of regular meal?

7. O fair-complexioned lady, roots, fruits, milk and water are mentioned by leading sages as favourable foodstuffs of feeble men. They can be eaten.

8-9. But taking full meal on the Ekādaśī day has not been recommended by anyone. Abstinence from food is recommended in the case of persons suffering from fever, and observance of full fast in the case of righteous persons, when the day of Hari has dawned. This is auspicious and conducive to the attainment of salvation. Even if Pathya (wholesome) food is taken in the middle of fever, it is likely to result in death.

10. If food is taken on the day of Viṣṇu (Ekādaśī) it leads only to a fall in hell. O lady of beautiful thighs, please don't insist, let there be no breaking of my holy vow. If there is anything else that appeals to you I shall undoubtedly do it.

Khādet* should be the reading in the NP. as it is found in this verse in KP. and Devala Smrti. For discussion vide note below.

This verse is attributed to the KP and Devala Smrti in the Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 35, and to Viṣṇudharmottara P. by Hemādri in Kāla. But those verses read

na khādet Kūrma-Śūkarau

The reading na khādet is better as Kūrma and Śūkara are the bulbous roots called Kaṅgar and Kon in Marathi and the question of 'killing' bulbous roots does not arise. Moreover, the reading in the NP. will amount to a license in killing other animals including cows. But the reading should be decided on the MS evidence of the NP.

Mohinī insisted :

11-12. "O king, nothing else appeals to me except your taking food. No purpose of mine is served even by your dedication of life. Moreover, the observance of fast on the day of Hari is not found in the Vedas.

13. The Brāhmaṇas maintaining the holy sacrificial fires do not accept the observance of fast. How is it that you wish to practise a rite that is outside the pale of the Vedas. ?"

14. O King (Māndhātā), on hearing the words of Mohinī, the king who was the most excellent one among the knowers of the Vedas said laughingly though he got furious in mind.

15-17. "O Mohinī, listen to my words. The performance of sacrifices has its procedure in the Veda (Kriyā Veda) and in the stage of life of a householder the Smṛtis are like the Vedas. The Vedas in the form of Smṛtis and the Kriyā Vedas are based on the Purāṇas. Just as this wonderful universe is born of Purāṇapurusa (the ancient Puruṣa or Being) so also the whole range of literature undoubtedly originates from the Purāṇas. O fair-faced lady, I, therefore, consider the meanings of the Purāṇas superior to the meanings of the Vedas.[1]

18. All the Vedas are ever established in the Purāṇas. The Veda is afraid of a man of deficient learning, thinking "O, this man will strike me."

1. VV. 15-22 establish the authoritative nature of the Purānas and their relation vis-á-vis the Vedas. The NP regards Purāṇas as the essence of all the Vedas (supra I. 1. 61-62), nay their import ss superior to the Vedas. And the NP is not the only Purāṇa to hold this view. For example, the Sk. P. repeats the very wording of these verses : e.g.

Vedāḥ pratiṣṭhitāḥ sarve purāṇe nātra saṁśayaḥ / bibhetyalpa-śrutād Vedo mām ayam prahariṣyati // yan na dṛṣṭaṁ hi Vedeṣu tad dṛṣṭam smṛtibhiḥ kila / ubhābhyāṁ yan na dṛṣṭaṁ hi tat purāṇeṣu gīyate // purāṇaṁ sarva-śāstrāṇām prathamaṁ Brahmaṇā smṛtam/

—Revā Khaṇḍa I. 20-23.

The equivalence of Purāṇas with the Vedas has been stated in the Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Up. (11. 4. 10) where both of them are regarded as the exhalation of God. This authority of Purāṇas is confirmed by Vātsyāyana in his com. on Nyāya Sūtra IV. 1.62, Kumārila in Tantra-Vārtika. On Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmāṁsā sūtra I. 3. 1 and Śaṅkara on Br. Sūtra I.3.33.

19. There is no mention about the movements of the planets in the Vedas:[1] there is no indication of the time that is endowed with purity; nor (can we find these things therein) viz. the increase and the decrease of the Tithis nor the decision about the Parvans (New Moon and full moon) or the position of the planets.

20. Formerly, these had been decided by means of the Itihāsas and the Purāṇas ; what is not seen in the Vedas is observed fully in the Smṛti.

21. What is not seen in both of these is explained by the Purāṇas, as for example, the expiatory rites in the cases of killing. O beloved wife, it is like the medicine in the case of a seriously ill patient.

22-25a. (If the Purāṇas had not explained the expiatory rites)it would not have been possible to have purification from sins in one's own case or in the case of others. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, what is sung about by the Vedas, what is recounted by the Vādāṅgas (ancillaries) is explained in detail by the Purāṇas and Smṛtis. O fair-faced lady, the Purāṇas repeat often like this—"when the day of Hari has arrived, food should not be eaten, food should never be eaten." By disregarding the Purāṇas one will attain the womb of animal. Even if one has taken holy ablutions, even if he has perfect self-control he will not attain salvation if he disregards the Purāṇas.

25b-26. Who will not salute his father ? Who will not worship his mother ? Who will not go to Gaṅgā the holiest of all rivers. Who will eat food on the day of Hari ? Who will slander the Vedas ? Who will cause the downfall of a Brāhmaṇa.

27. Who will have sexual intercourse with another man's wife ? Who will take food on the day of Hari ?

28. O beloved one, there is no other sin for a creature of muddleheaded nature, than taking food on the day of Hari. O lady of bright eyes, it is the cause that makes one fall into the pit (hell) of Yama.

1. VV. 19-22 state what topics are not mentioned in the Vedas but are decided in Purāṇas. Hence their superiority in some respects.

Mohini said :

29. "O Ghūrṇikā (the name of the female attendant) bring here immediately those Brāhmaṇas who are the masters of the Vedas. It is likely that on being convinced by means of their words, the king may take food."

30. On hearing her words she (i.e. Ghūrṇikā) brought Gautama and the other Brāhmaṇas who were masters of the Vedas, near Mohinī.

31. On seeing the Brāhmaṇas, the experts in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas come, Mohinī who was interested in her own affairs saluted them in the company of the king.

32. O king, all of them had the refulgence of the blazing fires. They sat on seats made of gold.

33-34a. Gautama who was the oldest among them spoke these words :"O queen, we experts in the different branches of sacred literature who dispel all doubts, have come here, for the purpose we have been called by you."

34b-35a. On hearing the words of those (Brāhmaṇas), Mohinī the daughter of Brahmā, spoke to them who were engaged in doing what was impossible for others.

Mohini said :

35b-36. The doubt here is whether this man is stupid or deficient in intellect (?) The king says—"I will not take food on the day of Hari." (But) this entire universe consisting of the mobile and immobile beings has food as its support.

37-38a. Even the dead persons, the Pitṛs (manes) in the heaven are delighted with cooked food. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, the Devas desire for cooked rice, the Puroḍāśa [sacrificial oblations with ground rice) of the size of Jujube fruit. Hence cooked rice is the greatest nectar.

38b-39. Even the hungry man takes a bit of rice in its mouth and enters its crevice with great strain. To whom does not the food appeal ? But this king does not eat cooked rice and other edibles, when the day of Hari has arrived.

40. He has forsaken his own holy duties and abides by other peoples' Dharma. It is but proper on the part of widows and ascetics to observe Vratas.

41. The man who is devoted to other peoples' Dharma and averse to his own Dharma, sinks deep down into blinding darkness of hell and remains there as long as fourteen Indras reign.

42. It has not been mentioned anywhere that kings should abandon their legitimate duty of protecting their subjects that bestow on them the fourfold aims of life, and perform the vow of fasting.

43. (The following are the legitimate duties of the concerned persons). Service to their husbands by women; service to their parents by sons; service to the twice-born by the Śūdras and the protection of the world by the kings.

44. If out of blunder or ignorance, a person forsakes his duties and applies his efforts elsewhere, he shall undoubtedly face a downfall.

45. O Brāhmaṇas, this king of good intellect and of excellent conduct practises Dharma of ascetics and forsakes what his dharma is laid down in the Vedas.

46-47a. O Brāhmaṇas, the following fall into hell : viz.—a woman who behaves according to her own sweet will, an impudent son, a king who practises isolation, a servant who shirks work, and a person who has no steadiness and stability.

47b-48. Suppose the king is engaged in the worship of Hari and maintains all observances and also suppose some one cries out in distress. At that time, if he does not rush out leaving aside his worship of Hari, he will surely incur the sin of a Brāhmaṇa-slaughter.

49-50. n the day of Hari, if he is weak in the body, how can he restrain (his enemies) ? It is from the food that the Prāṇa (vigour) is evolved. The activities of the body are based on the Prāṇas. The destruction of the enemy is through the activities of the body. If one is devoid of them, one is harassed and overpowered. I have realised this. Though I try to enlighten the king, he does not wake up, or realise it.

51. If the king protects his subjects that alone constitutes his Vrata. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, a king has no other holy Vrata (except this).

52. Of what avail are devotion and worship of gods to a king after spreading disaffection and wrath among his subjects staying in the realm. If there is no bloodshed in his kingdom that alone is on a par with Yajñas, Homas and services to gods.

CHAPTER TWENTYFIVE

The story of Mohinī

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. On hearing the words uttered by Mohinī the Brāhmaṇas said—'True', and addressed these words to the king.

The Brāhmaṇas said :

2-3. O king, you have taken up the holy vow that food should not be taken in on the Ekādaśī day in both the fortnights (of every month). This vow is not taken from the point of view of the scriptural texts. It is evolved out of your own intellectual fancies. It has been laid down that those who maintain holy fires should take in (the food offered as oblation) during both the junctions of a day. (i.e. morning and evening.)

4. Three castes are glorified as the partakers of the leavings of Homas. Hence, how shall it be considered proper if they observe fast, particularly in the case of kings ?

5-6. The kings, O lord, are always up in arms. They are the persons who restrain the wicked. Whether with the backing of the scripture or without it, may the vow that you have taken up be concluded today through the words of the Brāhmaṇas. You will not incur (the sin of) breaking the holy vow. Eat in the company of the Brāhmaṇas.

7-8a. You need not regret or repent it. The words of a Brāhmaṇa are important (weightier) and valuable. O excellent king, he who disregards the statements of a Brāhmaṇa takes birth as a Rākṣasa fifteen times.

8b-9a. On hearing those words the king became terribly furious but with throbbing lips, he spoke to the Brāhmaṇas in soft and bland speech.

9b-11. "O Brāhmaṇas, you are the guides for all living beings. You have cited a verse regarding ascetics and widows. But when you say that observance of fasts is not laid down for kings, it is but the opinion of those who traverse the wrong path and not that of the Vaiṣṇava persons. In that connection listen to the statements in the sacred text book "Vaiṣṇavācāralakṣaṇa" (or pertaining to the characteristics of the conduct of life of a devotee of Viṣṇu)—

12. "One shall not drink water by means of a conch shell; one shall not kill "tortoises" and "pigs", in both fortnights food should not be taken on the Ekādaśī day.

13. Liquor should not be drunk; nowhere should a Brāhmaṇa be killed; a knower of Dharma shall never play the game of dice; no one should take food on the day of Hari.

14. Eating of the forbidden food is sinful; violating the chastity of another man's wife is sinful; taking food on the Ekādaśī day is definitely the cause of downfall.

15. Should any one live for a hundred years after performing an action that should not be performed. Which active man takes food on the day of Hari ?

16. Fodder should not be given even to the quadrupeds on the day of Hari by the Brāhmaṇas staying in the northern region who are devoted to the holy rites of Viṣṇu (Vaiṣṇava rites).

17. How can I eat the forbidden food today ? I am not a man physically weak and feeble.[1] O excellent Brāhmaṇas, I am not afflicted by dyspepsia.

18-19a. How can I therefore eschew the holy vow merely at the instance of the Brahmaṇa following the wrong path. When the whole earth is being protected by the king Dharmabhūṣaṇa (i.e. Dharmāṅgada) I am not without sufficient protection. I have no enemy.

1. In VV. 17-20, the king is perfectly right on Śāstric grounds. (vide Manu XI. 30.) He hit the week point correctly in the arguments of Gautama and Mohini.

19b-20a. After knowing all these things, O excellent Brāhmaṇas regularly practising the holy rites pertaining to Viṣṇu, it is not proper on your part to speak against me decrying my holy vow.

20b-21a. The Brāhmaṇas who observe (give) expiatory rites without carefully examining (the case) will incur sin due to the breaking (of injunctions of) the Smṛtis.

21b-23a. I will not take food on the day of Hari even if the following persons urge me to do it viz. — devas, Dānavas, Gandharvas, Rākṣasas, Siddhas, Brāhmaṇas, my own father himself, Hari, Hara, the father of Mohinī, the sun or any of the guardians of the world's quarters.

23b-25. O Brāhmaṇas, the king who is well-known on the Earth as Rukmāṅgada will never make his truthful pledge fruitless. Even the refulgence of the sun may vanish, even the Himālayas may crumble, even the ocean may dry up, even the fire may eschew its heat; still, O Brāhmaṇas, I will not break my Vrata on the day of Ekādaśī.[1]

26-28. O Brāhmaṇas, this is well-known in the three worlds. This is being proclaimed by the beating of drums —"Those who take food on the day of Hari, which is the most important of all Yajñas, which dispels sins, increases piety, bestows salvation which is called the severer of the chain of births, which is the receptacle of refulgence and is popular and established among all people in the villages and lands of Rukmāṅgada and others deserve to be killed or punished (otherwise) alongwith their sons. They will not be allowed to reside in the whole of the realm." When this has been announced loudly, if I were to take food, I would be committing a sin.

29-30a. It would be as though the drum was tarnished with filth or muffled with a blue cloth. The creature that has earned renown but spoils it by itself committing sin due to the fear of life stays in the hell called Kṛmidaṁśa for sixty Yugas.

1. VV. 21b-25 show the firm determination of Rukmāṅgada which acts as a challenge to Mohinī to demand the head of his only son Dharmāṅgada.

30b-31a. As soon as I break my solemn vow of the holy rite, the delivery of my mother would be futile; the Brāhmaṇas, the Pitṛs and the Devas would be disappointed and Vaivasvata (Yama) would be delighted alongwith his scribe namely Citragupta.

31b-32. Of what avail is the birth of that evil-minded being who delights the beautiful wives of his enemies (by refraining from killing their husbands). He takes delight in sins by means of evil actions; he is no better than a man of low caste; he is the destroyer of every thing. He is unclean and foolish. He does not have regard for the Vedas, Purāṇas and scriptures. In the end, he goes to the city of the son of the Lord of the day (i.e. Yama).

33-34a. He who breaks his pledged word or solemn vow is no better than one who vomits his food and eats it again. Neither the Vedas, nor the scriptures, neither the good men nor the Purāṇas and Smṛtis advocate the act of taking food on the pure day worthy of holy rites pleasing to Mādhava.

34b-35. If Śrāddha is performed on the day of Hari, the Pitṛs will not be satisfied thereby. The Ekādaśī Vrata is one that bestows the region of Viṣṇu. Only foolish persons will mention it alongwith Kṣayāha (the new moon day when Śrāddha is to be performed).

36. On hearing his words Mohinī burned within herself. With eyes turned red with anger, she retorted to her husband :-

37. "If you do not act in accordance with my advice you will be out of the pale of Dharma. A man excluded from Dharma shall be no better than dust.

38-39. The dust, at least, fills a pit whereas this sinner of a man is the digger of a pit. O king, for the purpose of granting the boon you extended your hand and offered it to me (by way of taking a pledge). You have now broken that pledge. If you do not keep up that promise my responsibility is over. I shall go away, I have obtained your Dharma (i.e. you are deprived of it.)

40. I am not your beloved wife any more. O king, you are no longer my husband. I shall have my own arms as my head-rest and not yours; (even) in case of fighting (I shall not depend on your protection.)

41. Fie upon you the destroyer of piety, the breaker of your own promise. Even among the Mlecchas (alien outcastes) a heretic like you cannot be seen.

42. I will forsake you today since you have moved away from the truth sinfully." After saying this the fair lady hurriedly stood up.

43. Just as Satī went away leaving off Hara, so also the slender-bodied lady bedecked in divine ornaments started from there accompanied by those Brāhmaṇas.

44. "Better to touch liquor than have contact with this king. Better to wear the blue cloth, rather than have the touch of this king who has swerved from virtue."

45. Lamenting thus, the infuriated Mohinī cried much and went out of the abode accompanied by Gautama and others.

46. "O father, O Lord of the Universe, the cause of creation, maintenance and dissolution (of the worlds)," cried, the mentally created daughter of Brahmā.

47. In the meantime, Dharmāṅgada who was seated on an excellent horse returned to the palace after touring over the entire Earth.

48-49. Coming in a hurry, the renowned Prince Dharmāṅgada the son of Rukmāṅgada, a prince devoid of rivalry and favourite with his father, the very embodiment of virtue came face to face. The words coming out of the mouth of Mohinī, endorsed by the words of the Brāhmaṇas reached the ears of the prince.

50. Dismounting hurriedly from the horse, he went near his father and fell at his feet. Getting up again he bowed down to the leading Brāhmaṇas with palms joined together in reverence.

51-52. Then, observing that Mohinī was mentally furious and she was hurrying out, he went over to her and with folded palms, he said to her in reverence. "O Mother, O gentle lady, O beloved wife of my father, by whom have you been insulted ? Why are you angry ? Where have you set off now alongwith these Brāhmaṇas ?"

53. On hearing the words of Dharmāṅgada, Mohinī spoke these words :

"O dear son, your father is a liar. Falsely did he offer his (right) hand (to me).

54-55. The hand that always performed holy rites, has the shape and features of red Aśoka tree, the glorious right hand wearing gold armlet and is marked with lines in the form of a banner and a goad is by your father Rukmāṅgada withdrawn—Hence I am not enthused to stay here."

Dharmāṅgada said :

56. O gentle lady, whatever you say, I shall do. There is no doubt about it. O mother, do not be angry. O beloved wife of my father, return.

Mohini said :

57. By this father of yours, I have been made his wife on the mountain Mandara with this (certain) stipulation: Śiva, the Lord of the Devas, was standing witness thereof.

58. Your father, Rukmāṅgada, has gone astray breaking those stipulations. He does not give me what should be given to me. It is not his flourishing prosperity that I am thinking about.

59. O prince, I do not beg for gold, nor for foodgrains nor for horse, elephants, villages nor clothes whereby he might incur any loss.

60. O foremost one among embodied beings, O son, only that was requested for by me whereby he could please his own body. But out of delusion, he does not give it to me.

61. O prince, the excellent king was requested for by me to help his own body for his own happiness.

62. The Lord has now landed himself in a terrible mess of falsehood on a par with imbibing liquor.

63. I will have to forsake your father who has fallen off from truthfulness, who speaks harsh words, has eschewed and is false, roguish and base. My stay alongwith him is impossible.

64. On hearing the words of Mohinī, the son Dharmāṅgada said :

"As long as I am alive, my father cannot be false in respect of anything.

65. O fair lady, return. I shall do whatever is desired by you. O gentle lady no falsehood has ever been uttered before by my father.

66-67. How can that king speak falsehood, now that I his son, am here ? The whole world consisting of the Devas, Asuras and human beings is established in his truthfulness; the abode of Vaivasvata (Yama) has been made void of sinners and cleared of sinners by him. His fame spreads everywhere. The whole sphere of the Cosmic egg has been pervaded by his fame.

68. How can that king get involved in false utterances. I have not heard my father's words. How can I believe in an indirect (reported) statement (said to have been uttered in my absence) ?

69-70. O splendid-faced lady, take mercy on me and return."

On hearing these words of Dharmāṅgada, O king, Mohinī returned with (her hands) resting on the shoulders of her son to the place where Rukmāṅgada, as refulgent as the sun, was lying down as though dead.

71-72. She made her son sit on the bed of Rukmāṅgada which was equipped with gold, was brightly illuminated by gemset lamps, and decorated in variegated forms by corals; its extremely tender (soft-looking) legs were fashioned out of adamantine jewels. It was long and wide and charming beyond comparison.

73-75. With palms joined in reverence, he spoke to his father with bland speech. "O dear father, this mother of of mine, here says that you are a liar. How can you be, O king, a liar on this Earth ? When the kingdom consisting of the treasury hoarded with gems, possessing elephants, horses, chariots, etc., extending over the whole world containing the seven oceans is being ruled by you, O Lord, give everything to her, everything whatever has been promised to her.

76. O dear father, as long as I hold the bow who can act against you ? Give even the post of Indra to the gentle lady. Know that Indra has been defeated.

77. The region of Brahmā, which is difficult of access, is unsullied and can be approached only by Yogins. I am willing to give that too to her after propitiating the lotus-deity born by means of penance.

78. After conquering human beings, Devas and Dānavas, I will give whatever my mother wishes for in the nether worlds, on the Earth, in the heaven or in any other region.

79. O king, since I am your slave, I may even be sold. If I am considered insignificant, may I be entrusted to a sinful Cāṇḍāla.[1] I shall be his servant and be fed by him.

Or

79. O king, since I am your slave, sell me or my mother and propitiate the daughter of Kuśa-emblemed deity (i.e. Brahmā) lest there should be, O Lord of men, the (stigma) of falsehood on you in the world.

80. O Lord of the Earth, there is nothing in the three worlds, which is difficult for me to do and which hence cannot be given to her, should she like it. O leading king, give her even my life or that of my mother.

81. O Lord of kings, by that very thing, be endowed with good renown for ever. You can illuminate the groups of kings with your attributes (like the moon) that brightens the sky by means of its rays.

82. It is true what Manu has said that there will be sin in the destruction of one's reputation as killing of one's own progeny (or the subjects). But O king, how can I otherwise, wipe off the pure (stainless) fame and be happy ? Hence this course is proper.

1. This is an obvious reference to king Hariścandra who for sage Viśvāmitra sold his wife and son to stick to the truth.

CHAPTER TWENTYSIX

The story of Mohini

The king said :

1. O son, may my fame perish. May I be called a liar. May I even fall into a terrible hell. But how should I take food on the day of Hari ?

2-3. O son, let this gentle lady, Mohinī go to the abode of Brahmā. This lady says to me foolishly and childishly for many times. "Excepting your taking food on the day of Hari that is destructive of sins, I do not wish for anything else such as kingdom, Earth, wealth, etc."

4. Even If I am to be born in the despicable species of a germ, I will not take food on the day of Hari.

5. This Dundubhī (drum) has loudly proclaimed (my views) and has instructed the people. How can it be made false ?

6. Is it desirable to live for a hundred years after taking the forbidden food, after approaching a forbidden woman and after drinking the prohibited beverage ?

7. Even if I were charged with falsehood and have strayed away from the royal policy and am insulted and rebuked by the people, I will not take food on the day of Hari.

8. Even if I were to die due to the separation from the lady of tremulous side-glances, that is preferable, but I will never take food on the day of Hari.

9. How can I give excessive delight to Yama by making the miserable men proceed alongwith the path leading to hell ?

10. O dear son, the rows of hell which had been made empty by me, will be filled with people if I take food.

11. Let not any lady bear in her womb such a son as would cause delight to the enemies though he is efficient enough to destroy them.

12. She requests only for this viz : taking food on the day of Viṣṇu. I shall not grant the request of Mohinī even if I am requested for it by the Devas and Asuras.

13-14. He may even drink poison, he may enter fire, he may jump down from a lofty mountain; he may cut off his head with an excellent sword that brightens the sky; but king Rukmāṅgada will never take food on the day of Hari, on this Earth. My name Rukmāṅgada is famous in the three worlds.

15. How can I, by taking food on the Ekādaśī day, destroy the reputation earned by me—accumulated by me through the observance of fast on the Ekādaśī day.

16. Even if it dies, goes off, falls down, perishes, breaks into pieces, my heart shall not desist from this for the sake of Mohinī.

17. I may even forsake my life alongwith the worlds, my wives and servants. But I will never resort to the taking of food on the auspicious day of Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER TWENTYSEVEN

*The story of Kāṣṭhilā

Vasiṣṭha said :

1-2. On hearing the words of his father, the son Dharmāṅgada called his mother named Sandhyāvalī who was auspicious, lustrous like ten thousand suns, of beautiful breasts and who protected the entire earth by the pacing of her steps over it.

3. At the instance of her son, she immediately reached the presence of the king. The words of Mohinī as well as those of his father were repeated to her.

4-5. Get an agreement effected between these two—console Mohini who tenaciously clings to (the stipulation of)

*Standard dictionaries like SKD, MW, give a 'plantain tree" as the meaning of Kāṣṭhilā but the story shows it to be a worm in the wood.

taking food by the king on the day of Hari. Let something be done so that my father does not swerve from truth and also does not take food. Let there be happiness to both.

6. O king, (Māndhātā), on hearing the words of her son the gentle lady Sandhyāvalī spoke these soft words to Mohinī, the daughter of Brahmā :

7. O beautiful lady, do not be importunate. By no means will the king taste the sinful food (cooked rice when the day of Hari has arrived.

8-9a. Closely follow the king. He is the eternal preceptor. Just as the worlds of Sāvitrī were free from impurities, so also will be the worlds of that woman who always carries out the directions of her husband.

9b-10a. O gentle lady, formerly, he was overwhelmed by passion and beguiled. If then, he had offered his hand to you, on the mountain, that should not be thought much of (no capital be made out of it). He does give what should not be given. Do not beg for what should not be given.

10b-12. Even an adversity is beneficent to one who strictly adheres to the path of the good. O blessed lady, even during his boyhood, food has not been taken by him during the day of Hari. How will he then take food now on the day of Viṣṇu (Ekādaśī). O lady of sweet and charming thighs, you may very well choose some other boon for something rare.

13-14. The king will definitely give it to you. Desist from the insistence on the taking of food. If you are convinced, O gentle lady, that it was I who brought up Dharmāṅgada, choose the kingdom alongwith our own lives, O lady of auspicious holy rites. (Choose the entire worlds) consisting of seven continents and many rivers, forests and mountains.

15. O lady of large eyes, and slender waist, for the sake of my husband I shall bow down to your feet though I am the eldest and you are the youngest.

16. The woman who traps and gets her husband involved in the faults due to the verbal pledge and makes him do what should not be done is sinful and she will stay in the hell.

17. After falling off from the terrible hell, she takes twelve successive births as a sow. Thereafter, she is born as a Cāṇḍālī.

18. It is after knowing this aberration resulting from sins, that O gentle lady, O lady of beautiful thighs, O charming lady, you have been prevented by me with the feelings of a dear friend.

19. Good counsel must be given to an enemy by one who wishes for piety. What then, O lotus-faced lady to you who remains as a friend of mine ?

20. On hearing the words of Sandhyāvalī, Mohinī the fascinating lady spoke to the eldest wife of her husband whose complexion was lustrous like gold.

21-22. Mohinī said—"O lady of beautiful eyebrows, you are worthy of being honoured by me. I shall carry out your instructions. If the king does not wish to do what is being sung about by Nārada and other scholarly sages, viz taking food on the day of Hari, O gentle lady, may another thing, greater than your death, (?) be pursued.

23. O blessed lady, this is indeed painful to me also, but I prattle thus, thanks to divine intercession. Who likes self-slaughter? Who desires to swallow poison ?

24. Who wishes to fall down from the top of a mountain ? Who wants to play with snakes living in burrows ? Who likes to rush at lions and tigers ? Who wants to swim across the sea ?

25. Who wants to indulge in harsh words and false statements ? Who is fond of outraging the modesty of another man's wife ? Who likes to eat unwholesome food ? Who desires to eat the forbidden food in the world ?

26-27. Who wants to go hunting deer ? Who likes to play the game of dice ? Who likes to enter into risky adventure? Who wants all these such as cutting of grass and hewing of wood; trampling and holding of clods of earth, harassing of minor deities* (?), playing in water or with fire and similar things ? Yet O beautiful lady, urged by the deity (or Fate) a man does all these things.

*In the reading dehānām instead of devānām, it means "minor beings (such as poor worms, etc.)

28. A man who deserves to be in the hell, does all inauspicious things that destroy his body in the form of fame and that make him fall off from the three aims of life.

29-31. I am naturally sinful and wicked in my evil[1] actions. I am desirous of saying extremely harsh words. The child is born with the same emotions and feelings as the progenitor has at the time of discharging semen into the vaginal passage. I have been created by the lotusborn deity Brahmā who had his emotions disturbed by arguments against king Rukmāṅgada. I have the form of a fair-complexioned lady but defiled in emotions. I shall be the perpetrator of some evil action in regard to the king.

32-34. O gentle lady, it is neither the Lagna nor the planet, nor the Horā (the hour, the rising of the zodiacal sign) that can indicate the future nature. The emotional feeling at that time (i.e. the time of conception) should be taken up (for consideration) The son is also born with the same emotion. In a son born with that ill feeling, there is no courtesy or kindness, there is neither shame nor affection nor any Dharma (piety) also, O gentle lady. In spite of his knowledge about his evil tendencies he pursues the same feelings.

35. I am going to say something that will take away your life, that of our husband and that of all women folk alongwith the world. It spoils my merits (dharma) and may cause slander against me. O timid lady, it is impossible to conceive mentally about it.

36. If you do according to my suggestion, your fame in the world will be great. It will cause the fame of your husband to spread; it is conducive to the attainment of heaven; your son will be praised and thereby my lot will be controversial and full of condemnation.

Vasiṣṭha said :

37. O Lord, on hearing the words of Mohini the gentle lady Sandhyāvalī (screwed up all her courage) and urged that young woman saying "Tell me, Tell me"[1].

1. This sinister confession of Mohini—the pangs of conscience (whether sincere or hypocritical) prepares the tense background for the terrible catastrophe which is impending.

38. "Of what nature are the words you are going to speak which will cause sorrow to me ? In making my husband truthful, misery cannot be caused to me by any means. If it is done for the name of my husband, I am not distressed at my death, or at the death of my son or at the destruction of my kingdom.

39. If the wife is affluent but sinful, and hence, O fair-complexioned lady, the husband is miserable (it is proclaimed that) she will have a downfall (in hell).

40. That sinful lady falls into hell called Pūya (of foetid things) and remains there for seventy Yugas. Thereafter, she is born as female musk-rat in the Bhārata land for seven births.

41-42. Then she is born as a female crow and then a female jackal* and mungoose. After taking the birth of a cow, she becomes purified. O beautiful lady, she who does not give wealth she possesses or her own life for the sake of her husband, is born as a worm in the faeces. O splendid lady, after being released from the womb of a worm, she is born as a Kāṣṭhilā[1] (plantain tree ?)

43. This happened during my girlhood days. A splitter of wood at my father's place was chopping the wood for fuel for a long time.

44. Inclined to play alongwith my girl friends, I went near him as he was splitting the wood.

45-46. O lady of fair eyebrows, there a worm was seen by me coming from between the wood. Its body resembled butter and it had the lustre of collyrium. It had the length of the little finger and the thickness of a finger. On seeing it fallen on the ground, a crow came there to peck at it.

47. Even as the hungry crow was about to peck at it with its beak, it was prevented by me instantaneously with a lump of clay.

*Śyāli is a hyper-Sanskritisation of Pkt. Siyāli. SK. Śṛgālī.

1. A Prakritic formation in Sk. meaning "one who lives in a log of wood (kāṣṭha)".

48. O fair lady, it was let off by the crow that was thus hit; but it had been pecked at by the beak and wounded. It was not able to run away.

49. It began to tremble. It was about to die. But sprinkled with water a little, it regained its normal health.

50. Then O fair-complexioned lady, the Kāṣṭhīlā spoke to me in human voice. She addressed me by my name Sandhyāvalī, while I was in the midst of my friends.

51. "O splendid-faced lady in my previous birth I was the daughter of the sage named Sumantu who was omniscient. I was the wife of Kauṇḍinya.

52. I lived in Kānyakubja (Kanauj in U.P.). I was affluent, hence, very arrogant. I was the favourite darling of my mother, father and other kinsmen.

53. Then I was given in marriage to the noble-souled Kauṇḍinya who was born of a noble family, was celibate (lit. who had no physical contact with any other women) and befitting me in every respect.

54. Bed and other things were given to me by my father as dowry and present. Ten thousand gold pieces too were given to me at the outset by my father-in-law.

55. I was fully satisfied with the wealth obtained from my father as well as father-in-law. I had cows, buffaloes etc. I was endowed with affluence (wealth) and foodgrains.

56. I was liked by my parents-in-law and the common people, on account of my good conduct. In due course of time, my father-in-law, the knower of the real meaning of the Vedic texts, passed away.

57. Taking the dead body of her husband my mother-in-law entered the funeral pyre. Thereafter, my husband offered water libations to his parents and performed their Śrāddha.

58. Within two months of that, O gentle lady, my husband went to the Royal palace out of curiosity but was afterwards overwhelmed by love passions of the heart.

59. Beautiful courtesans in the prime of their youth were seen entering the royal palace by that Brāhmaṇa.

60. With gifts of profuse wealth two of them were taken from there and brought to his house. My evil-minded husband retained them in his house for dalliance.

61. Using it up the entire wealth of my husband was wasted by both of them. O gentle lady, by the time three years elapsed, my husband became indigent.

62. Then he requested me "Give me your ornaments". Those were not given to my husband by me as he was addicted to vice.

63-65. O blessed lady, I took everything and went to my father's abode. (He too followed me there). At my house he sold the slaves and other possessions and the money (received thereby) was given to the two courtesans. That also was exhausted. Whatever was left such as the fields, grains, etc. was sold off at throw-away-prices alongwith the garments, utensils and other personal effects. My husband thereupon entered the great ocean by means of a boat. He went oversea.

66. He went a long distance seeing wonderful things and miracles on the way. O splendid lady, he saw many animals of the sea and all their activities.

67. By the time it had gone a hundred Yojanas, the boat was caught in a violent storm. It broke into pieces and all others on the boat were killed.

68-69a. As providence would have it, and urged by his Karmans of the previous births, my husband clung to a long piece of wood. O gentle lady, led by the wind he reached a mountain bedecked with adamantine peaks.

69b-70. That mountain contained many rivulets and fountains, many birds and many trees full of fruits and flowers. With its three prominent peaks, it scraped the middle of the sky.

71. O lady of beautiful eyes, on seeing the divine, wonderfnl mountain my husbund left off the piece of wood (that brought him there) and jocously climbed on to it, as he was eager to earn some wealth.

72. He rested there for a while. When he was overwhelmed with hunger and thirst, he got up in search of food and surveyed the trees all round.

73-74. He saw ripe grape vines there and ate the grapes joyfully. He was a bit assuaged and he saw a very clean big Śāla tree with a thick shade and its thick foliage resembling the spreading clouds, and had the height of fifty men. Spreading his upper cloth he went to sleep under its shade.

75. Overcome by fascinating sleep his eyes began to roll. By the time the sun had set the excessively tired (Brāhmaṇa) went to sleep.

76. When the sun had set and the night had set in, a terrible Rākṣasa roaring like the cloud came there rushing in.

77. Like the ten-headed Rāvaṇa who had abducted Sītā, he had carried the slender-limbed auspicious daughter of the ruler of Kāśī, named Ratnāvalī on his lap.

78. Without washing her feet, she had gone to sleep with her head directed towards the north. The virgin of beautiful buttocks was desirous of obtaining a husband, but did not obtain one befitting her.

79. That girl was the foremost among all women. Overwhelmed by slumber she was crying. In the matter of giving her in marriage, her father had been extremely anxious day and night.

80. O lady of slender limbs, this beautiful girl, occupying a bed spread in the shadow of the lamp was seen by the sinful demon who was roaming about.

81-83. He saw her in the light of gems and jewels that were shining like lamps. She was wearing two bangles well studded with bright gems and jewels. In each bangle there were ten jewels, and in the necklace of gold coin (?) there were fifteen jewels. On the crest, there were seven jewels. On the armlets there were eight and five (thirteen) jewels. The demon abducted such a virgin bedecked in jewels and with gold-like lustrous complexion. He carried away the girl of sweet smiles from the palace of the king. Through the aerial path he reached his own abode in a moment.

84-87. He came to that mountain where my husband (was sleeping) beneath the Śāla tree. There she saw his cave that had the lustre of gold. Unable to bear the terror struck by him, she entered the cave even as he was looking on. The cave had been beautified by many jewels and it had mansions of variegated colours. Many articles lay scattered here and there. It contained beds and seats. Pots of beverages and edibles with various kinds of dishes had been kept there. After entering the cave, the demon placed that weeping girl of lily-like eyes, the excessively frightened girl of plump bosom and buttocks, on to a bed.

88. On hearing the weeping of the girl, his wife the ogress hurriedly came to the place where the demon was standing.

89. On seeing that girl whose lustre was like that of molten gold and everyone of whose limbs was beautiful, she became infuriated. Rebuking her husband she asked thus :

90. "O ruthless one, why is this girl brought here when I am alive ? Do you wish for another wife ? I will no longer be your wife then.

91. That demon joyously spoke to his beloved wife of beautiful eyes, the ogress of black eyes who had spoken to him thus.

92. "O splendid-faced lady, this pabulum (eatable) prey has been brought by me from Kāśī for your sake. A second one is standing at the gate. It has been brought to me by providence.

93. O fair-faced lady, a Brāhmaṇa is lying beneath the Śāla tree. Bring him here quickly so that I can make a meal of him.

94. On hearing the words of the Rākṣasa that virgin spoke thus :— "O Rākṣasī, out of his fear for you, your husband utters a lie.

95-96. He knows that you are old in age, hideous in form and torturous in your gait. At night when I was soundly sleeping in my father's house, he came to me passionately. O gentle lady, since I am not married he has brought me here to make me his wife in spite of my cries."

97. On hearing these words uttered by the princess, the ogress became extremely infuriated. On seeing the beautiful form (of the princess), she decided that it was the truth. In her anger she hurled words (at her husband).

98. She thought thus—"She has been brought here to be made his wife. Of necessity, this demon will strike a wedge in my head.

99. Let there not be any woman in the three worlds who undergoes the misery of having a co-wife. There will hardly be any woman in the three worlds who will survive the harassment due to the misery of being a co-wife.

100. There is no doubt about this that it is the greatest of all miseries when there is another woman to have a share in the wealth and enjoyment of pleasures."

101. After thinking much like this, she spoke these words to her husband, "This girl is mine, as this lady of charming eyes has been brought by you as food for me.

102-103a. I shall bring that Brāhmaṇa to be your prey, O Suvrata (one of holy rites)". Then the Rākṣasa urged "Go, go quickly. The corner of my mouth drips too much of saliva due to my desire to eat him."

103b-104. Thereafter, on hearing the words uttered by her husband, the terrible Rākṣasī set out with infinite hope. She saw the excellent Brāhmaṇa endowed with comely features and blooming youth as well as adorned with the jewels of learning.

105. On seeing him she was overwhelmed with love pangs in the heart. Through her Māyā (power of illusion), she became a beautiful maiden of sixteen years and approached him.

106. The maiden of large buttocks spoke to the Brāhmaṇa with great pleasure—"Who are you ? Whence have you come here ? Why do you stay here ?

107. I ask you this as I am desirous of making you my husband. I am an ogress overcome with pangs of love. I have been abandoned by my husband. I have come here to make you my husband."

108. On hearing her words my husband was frightened. O splendid lady, yet he emboldened himself. The intelligent (Brāhmaṇa) spoke these words :—

109. "O Ogress, how can there be the copulation of a Rākṣasī and a human being ? There is no doubt about this that men are remembered as the prey of Rākṣasas."

110. On hearing those words she spoke to him again respectfully—"The impossible is made possible, thanks to the intercession of the Providence.

111: This is heard in the Purāṇa. This is a future incident mentioned in the Bhārata, O Brāhmaṇa, Hiḍambā an ogress will become the wife of Bhīma.[1]

112. The son procreated by a human being will be Ghaṭotkaca. He will be one who cannot be killed by any other weapon. He will attain death through the weapon called Śakti (of Indra, hurled by Karṇa against Ghaṭotkaca).

113. Hence, O Brāhmaṇa, do not grieve. It is through Providential intercession that I have become your wife. Fate is indeed very powerful.

114-115. When Indra went to the mortal world to meet Bali, my husband, the terrible Rākṣasa had a convenient opportunity. He stole Śakti from his abode as though it were the blazing flame. And that Śakti belonging to Indra has been kept here in the Śāla Tree.

116. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, without killing at least one it does not go back to Indra. The person for whose slaying it was hurled will perish even if he be immortal.

117. Hence, I shall climb up to the top of this Śāla tree, bring the shining Śakti to you and hand it over to you with a desire for the death of my husband.

118. If you do not hit and injure the night-prowler with this Śakti, there is no doubt that the evil-minded one will swallow you as well as me.

119. He is a great enemy of yours as well as that of me, O scorcher of enemies, since, by that foolish fellow, a virgin has been brought here for being made his wife.

120. Hence, an enmity (inimical feelings) has been generated in me against my husband of the wicked soul. If he is killed, it will be possible for both of us to have sexual dalliance.

---

1. The future tense in VV. 111 and 112 regarding Bhima's marriage with Hiḍambā and the birth of their son Ghaṭotkaca and his death by a Śakti in the Bhārata war is used to show that this Kāṣṭhilā incident (esp. her previous birth) is more ancient than the Mahābhārata-history (mentioned only as Bhārata in the N.P.).

121. O Rativardhana (one who intensifies, lustfulness) if I am making a false statement to you, may I not be the partaker of benefits of the merit performed by myself.

122. If this were to be a lie, may I attain that condition of a despicable nature which is attained by men on committing Brāhmaṇa slaughter.

123. O Brāhmaṇa, may I get that state, the terrible state that is laid down in the case of an evil-minded Brāhmaṇa who drinks liquor.

124. By uttering a lie, may I attain that fate, O excellent Brāhmaṇa, of that creature that is engaged in seducing the preceptor's wife and that resorts to sinful actions.

125-126. If I tell a lie, may I incur that sin which the following undergo viz :—he who steals gold and misappropriates the sum given on trust; he who forcibly occupies another man's land; he who commits suicide; he who eats meat on the Pañcamī (fifth) and Aṣṭamī (eighth) day, of a lunar fortnight.

127. The man who commits the sin of cutting off a tree or cohabiting with a woman on the new moon day, the sin acquired by taking in ghee while one is defiled by Ucchiṣṭa, the sin of sexual intercourse during the day time.

128. The householder Brāhmaṇa who does not perform the holy rite of Vaiśvadeva, the person who does not give alms to the mendicant, the widow who takes meal twice a day.[1]

129. The person who uses gingelly oil on the day of Saṁkrānti (the transit of the sun from one sign of Zodiac to another), the person who goes to the holy centre along with the cows (?), the person who takes bath in another man's tank without taking out mud therefrom.

130. The person who chews the tooth stick twig from a forbidden tree; the person who does not serve cows, but binds them; the person who treads the heretic's path.

1. Formerly, widows were looked upon as Yatis and all the restrictions of a Sannyāsin were imposed on them. Hence this restriction of limiting to one meal for widows.

131. The person who performs the worship of the Pitṛs and the Devas standing on a piece of wood or rock (?), the person who keeps only a buffalo without a cow also, the person who takes food off a bell metal vessel that is broken.

132. The person who performs holy rites clad in unwashed or torn clothes or those belonging to others. The person who stares at a naked woman and the person who partakes of forbidden food.

133. O Brāhmaṇa, if I tell you a lie, may I be tarnished with the same sin as that of a person who creates obstacles in the discourse about Śrīharī.

134. O Brāhmaṇa, if I tell a lie, may I be the person who incurs all these sins[1] that I have mentioned and also those I have not mentioned."

135. O gentle lady, my husband who was thus addressed by that sinful woman was deluded by the inevitable future, and he decided accordingly, saying "So be it."

136. That indigent Brāhmaṇa who had been indulging in vices and so perturbed extremely due to my harsh words spoke thus to the ogress. His words (proved to be) the best-ower of all achievements.

137. "Bring that Śakti quickly. I shall carry out your directions. When the Rākṣasa is killed, all these things should be given by you to me.

138-139a It is with a keen desire for wealth that I undertook (the voyage) through the sea full of whales and sharks". On hearing these words, the ogress brought the Śakti that was on the top of the tree and that emitted brilliant lustre. She gave it to my husband for the realisation of their desire.

139b-140. In the meantime, the Rākṣasa who was overwhelmed by passion attempted to rape the virgin. She became terrified and spoke these words—"O Rākṣasa, there is a great sin in cohabiting with a virgin.

141. While I was sleeping I had been fraudulently brought here from my father's house at Kāśī. It is not your fault in this regard. My fate is evidently of this nature.

1. VV. 122-134 record a series of acts which were regarded as sins or undesirable ones in the elite Indian society of the NP-Period.

142. I am in the middle of a cave. Who will be the protector here ? It is through fate that one gets a husband. It is through fate that one gets a wife.

143. Fate alone plays the chief part in the matter of acquiring learning, house, happiness, wealth and nobility of birth. It is urged by the fate that man goes anywhere.

144. O night-prowler, of necessity you alone will be my husband. When the path is traced out by fate, what will (even) a scholar do ?

145. Hence bring that Brāhmaṇa who has resorted to that Śāla tree. Fetch ghee, water, Kuśa grass and fire. Celebrate marriage in accordance with the injunctions.

146. Even without the Darbha grass, water and fire, even without the traditional rites laid down, a marriage may be fruitful if it is blessed with the permissive statement of a Brāhmaṇa.

147. O Rākṣasa, if that Brāhmaṇa has not already been killed (bring him here quickly). When the holy rites of Homa have been performed, you will be able to eat him up.

148. When these words were addressed by that princess the Rākṣasa had full belief in his mind. He set out proudly.

149. Afflicted by pangs of love he hastened out to bring that Brāhmaṇa.

150. O gentle lady, as he was setting out he himself sneezed, his left eye throbbed and his own clothes dropped down.

151-153. Unmindful of everything, he set out from the cave. There he saw his wife in human form engaged in that form of union as is usual between a husband and a wife. She said— "I am abandoning you, a sinful Rākṣasa of ruthless action. You are enamoured of a young woman of human species. You are the defiler of my body." On hearing these terrible words uttered by his wife, the night-prowler (demon) became infuriated and malicious. He rushed at her.

154. He lifted up his arms. He kept his mouth wide open. He rushed at them to devour both of them. Uttering curses of harmful nature, he rushed at them like a violent storm, that blows in the proper season.

CHAPTER TWENTYEIGHT

Kāṣṭhilā's story (Contd.)

Kāṣṭhilā said :

1. On seeing the Rākṣasa, comparable to the black annihilator Yama, rushing at them, the Ogress became afraid and spoke thus to my husband.

2. "Hurl this Śakti that is as refulgent as fire and bedecked in gold. May this husband of mine die and become the beloved of Digambara's enemy (i.e. Yama).

3. At her instance, my husband assumed great manliness and hurled the massive Śakti at the chest of the Rākṣasa.

4-5. The Śakti that blazed brilliantly like fire and illuminated the ten quarters, the point of which was sharp and emitted divine rays and was jingling with hundreds of tinkling bells fitted into it, the body of which was smeared with red sandal paste, and was beautified with (the covering) of red cloth. It went off from the hands of the Brāhmaṇa, pierced into the heart of the Rākṣasa.

6-7. After reducing the Rākṣasa to ashes, it went up into the sky. After felling (killing) her husband through the hands of the Brāhmaṇa, the ogress considered herself as having achieved her goal. Hairs stood on end due to her delight. The delighted ogress then spoke to the splendid-eyed Brāhmaṇa.

8. "O my lover, come on, Enter freely my beautiful cave. Enjoy all the great pleasures, divine as well as human, in my company."

9. "So be it" said my husband who was extremely delighted. Then she took my husband and entered her cave joyfully.

10. Without caring to look at the ashes to which her husband's body had been reduced, she clasped my husband with her protruding breasts.

11-12. She pointed out to him that maiden of slender body who was lying down on the bed.—"O excellent Brāhmaṇa, this lady of black side-glances, with lips red like the Bimba fruit and of gold-like lustrous complexion had been brought (by my husband) to make her his wife, from Varanasi, the city whose limits are not transgressed by all sins.

13. That city is called Śakti Kṣetra (the sacred place of Divine Power) and is holy and destructive of sins. It is the abode of Tripurāri (God Śiva) and it extends to five Gavyūtis (i.e. fifteen Kilometers).

14. Men who die therein are never reborn into any womb. Kindly take this lady of bright eyes to her father's house.

15. These jewels, beds and seats are at your disposal. If you wish you can sell all these things including myself.

16. O Brāhmaṇa, for your sake the terrible Rākṣasa was slain by me who am enamoured of your comely features. He has been sent to the abode of Yama.

17. Hence, O Lord, have confidence in me. O large-eyed one, I am your devotee. I can assume any form I like. 'Enjoy me.'

18. O lady of beautiful eyes, on hearing these words of the love-lorn ogress, my husband spoke these words to the Rākṣasī in the presence of that virgin.

19. As he was guarded and suspicious he spoke sweet words—

"O blessed lady, (it is mentioned) in the treatises on polity and ethics that women should not be trusted.

20-21. How will she not injure me, she who kills her husband ever since her girlhood days ? Considering another man more handsome, this lascivious woman (may cause my death). O fair-faced lady, still I continue to believe in you.

22. O beautiful woman, I have sought refuge in you, kill me, if you please, to-day or tomorrow or after a fortnight or a month or a year.

23-24. This must be done by you only thus (as though) I have not helped you today (?) For the sake of vengeance (help in return ?) the soul must be offered by you. (You must give yourself up). Since you unhesitatingly killed your husband for my sake, O lady of good eyes, I do not say anything more."

25. On hearing the words of my husband, she spoke thus : "O Brāhmaṇa, killing some one who has trusted in one is on a par with the slaughter of a Brāhmaṇa.

26. If, on account of this, you consider me a cruel Rākṣasī, the destroyer of her husband (my reply is) I hate my husband. How will I kill one who confides in me and believes in me?

27. The way of Dharma (virtue and piety) is very subtle. It cannot be understood by any means, by any one anywhere, whether Daitya or Rākṣasa or others. But some men are clever in thinking about the subtleties of Dharma.

28. (Those who know Dharma) attain Naiṣkarmya (freedom from the Karmans i.e. Mokṣa) through their perishable physical body. This is heard in the Purāṇas. Same thing is being mentioned here.

29. It is through the favourable nature of Dharma that Viṣṇu the powerful God could assume ten incarnations. But in them much misery was experienced by him.[1]

30. Where is Rāma, the abode of Śrī, who for the sake of Sītā, accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa lamented in the course of the events and they were bound by the serpentine nooses?

31. Where is Vasudeva's son, the lord of Devas, of the form of perfect knowledge ? And where is the fully worldly man who sheds tears saying "O what a pity ?" who makes signs and gestures with his eyes and who acts as servant unto Pārtha (i.e. Arjuna), Ugrasena and others ? (What a lot of difference there is !)

32. O Brāhmaṇa, the activities of the Lord are beyond human scrutiny[1] though he abides by the favourable Dharma. Vyāsa[2] the son of Parāśara, is himself the classifier of the Vedas. He was a man of truthful vision. His very form is worthy of being worshipped. (But) he was born of the semen virile of one who destroyed the virginity (of a woman). Hence he is called a Kānīna (son of an unmarried girl). Moreover, he had sexual intercourse with the wives of his younger brothers.[2]

1. VV. 29-47 give instances of adharma passed on as Dharma. The Rākṣasī describes the power of fate over all beings.

2. This refers to the births of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu from the queens of Vicitravīrya, the son of Satyavatī and Śantanu. To have a heir

33. Śantanu was a Parivettṛ (one who had married before his elder brother Devāpi). He was the second husband of a lady (Satyavatī who married twice). At first he was the husband of the heavenly river. His son was the veritable Vasu (Bhīṣma), the unmarried elder brother (whose younger brother vicitra-Vīrya was married before him); he attained death due to the arguments of a woman (Ambā) who became Śikhaṇḍin in the next birth.

34. The Pāṇḍavas were born of adultery (as each was born from a different person other than their legal father Pāṇḍu. Thus they were actually bastards. All of them cohabited with the same woman, viz. Draupadī. Still their glorification is considered holy and sacred. It is destructive of sins.

35-37. Viṣṇu whom people meditate upon and truly remember, who is called Yogamūrti (Embodiment of Yoga) and who is eternal, was enamoured of courtesans. Śrinṛsiṁha who advised Prahlāda and others and who destroyed Asuras is considered as the deity and Lord of the Devas (Defective). He is the destroyer of even the impression of worldly existence, he is the deity and Lord of the Devas. He was the destroyer of Hiraṇyākṣa (Hiraṇyakaśipu ?) but he stayed in his abode (?)

38. The son of Jamadagni (Paraśurāma) had realised his soul himself. He had destroyed his sins by means of his austerities. He was Lord himself. But he was the perpetrator of such deeds as massacres of Kṣattriyas and killing of children in the womb.

39. He himself was a leading Yogin. He was a Brāhmaṇa engaged in educating people, but acting within the perview of Dharma, he became one who brought agony into the world.

40. Nārada was a Nārada (destroyer of groups of men)[1] again and again. Nārada was devoted to Nārāyaṇa. Nāra to the Throne, Satyavatī requested Vyāsa who was born of her from Parāśara, to have sons from the queens of his younger brother Vicitravīrya. (Mbh-Ādi). 104 and 105).

1. These different connotations of Nārada are peculiar.

means one who is a benefactor of men and also one who is immortal.

41. Gautama was Gotama (most timid like a cow). O Brāhmaṇa, he was devoted to the activities of a cowherd. He had written a treatise (i.e. Nyāya sūtra) the topics of which are beyond the pale of the Vedas; (but he is called) one who helps the Vedas.

42-44a Vasiṣṭha and even Agastya, who were born of Urvaśī, are considered to be masters. By Vasiṣṭha a sacred treatise of excellent nature named Vasiṣṭhasmṛti had been composed for helping the whole world. In that work the Purāṇas and the Vedas are considered to be equal. He was himself the preceptor of Śrī Rāma who was none other than the Almighty (Viṣṇu). Why was he cursed by Gādhija (Viśvāmitra) ?[1] Why was he born in the womb of a lower animal ?[2]

44b-45a The powerful Agastya had overpowered the Vindhya mountain, the demon Vātāpi and also the ocean. How is he the receiver of hire money (?)[2] He served in the way that is difficult for others to do.

45b-46a. The creator is worthy of being worshipped by the sun etc. and is the honourable grandsire of the world. How did he become enamoured of a lady of fascinating beauty and give up his body ?

46b-47a. God Śiva, the bestower of auspicious things, is the lord of Prakṛti. He is greater than the greatest. How did he carnally approach the wives of the Devas ? How does he pursue inauspicious activities in the cremation ground ?

47b-48. Hence, O Brāhmaṇa, it is the prescribed rule that good conduct must be pursued duly. He who is the foremost among the knowers of things shall not abandon good conduct by having the egotist feeling, (then) he will obtain the highest peace conducive to virtue here and hereafter.

1. When Vasiṣṭha learnt how Viśvāmitra persecuted his patron-disciple Hariścandra, he cursed Viśvāmitra to be a stork. In retaliation Viśvāmitra cursed him to be a kingfisher. (DB. VI. 13. 34-47).

2. This refers to Agastya's employment as a bearer of the palanquin of Nahuṣa while he was in the position of Indra. Agastya however cursed Nahuṣa who was then transformed into a serpent.
Mbh. Udyoga ch. 17; Śānti 342-51.

49. Dharma is remembered as conducive to Apavarga (salvation). Wealth is the only thing through which Dharma can be achieved. That Dharma I have achieved in the form of wealth that is the greatest of all.

50-51. O Brāhmaṇa, listen. In this connection, I shall recount to you the subtle way of Dharma. Abducting a girl, my husband was coming this way. He saw you were involved because you were brought there by your Karman. That was not his fault. He was asked by me—"Why was this girl brought ?"

52-53. Then a lie was uttered by him that it was for his food. On hearing that, the girl in bondage told me everything pointing out his desire. Those who say that in wedded life the wife is a hindrance to salvation, cannot be understood as knowers of reality. Since the wife is not an obstacle.

54. Only she is the real wife who is able to uplift a husband falling into the hell. Any other woman is like a twining creeper of Karman, the bestower of worldly bondage.

55. What is sinful in this you hear from me, O my bridegroom who have come to me by yourself. Even if the vital breaths come to the throat, falsehood should not be uttered.

56. One must always be truthful. Dharma is directly based on Truth. God Brahmā is based on Truth. All good men abide by Truth.

57. The entire universe is established in the Truth, the universe consisting of the mobile and the immobile beings is always based on Truth. The words "One shall always speak the Truth"[1] are proclaimed in the Vedāntas.

58. The Truth is of the form of Brahman. We call Brahman by the word Truth. O Brāhmaṇa, the Truth is always auspicious. It is the bestower of everything that is auspicious.

59. Untruth is the bestower of self destruction though immediately it may breed the confidence of belief. But

1. In various Upaniṣads such commandments are found e.g. Taittiriya I. 11.1, Kauṣitaki 1.6.

Truth should not be spoken to women. Listen to the reason thereof.

60. In such directives as "Do not reveal to the woman (the extent of) the treasury", it prevents future faults. That is said to be the cause of Dharma which reveals the subtlety of Dharma.

61. That is called wedded life where the witnesses of marriage had been Kuśa grass, Brāhmaṇas, water, fire, Vedas, Earth, time, space and Devas.

62. The rite of acceptance is laid down in the celebration of marriage. If the woman and the man are consecrated by Brāhmaṇas, they are regarded as the teacher and the disciple.

63. Hence, the bride and the bridegroom are mutually related as teachers and disciples. No difference at all, even to the minutest extent, should be understood by a discriminating man as existing between these two.

64. The importance of women and employees is in accordance with the difference in rites. If there is the defect of contrariety (in relations etc.) anywhere, the cause of it is fate alone.

65-66. The entire universe consisting of gods, Asuras, and human beings is subservient to Fate. Fate is the accumulation of impressions of Karmas in the previous births. He who enjoys and experiences whatever comes to his lot, whether auspicious or inauspicious and behaves spontaneously with both, is called a quiescent person by the learned knowledgeable men.

67. A quiet person whose activity is based on the Truth enables the world to cross mundane existence. It is by knowing such and other details that my husband was prevented from falling into hell.

68. He was sanctified by me by preventing him from committing the sin of violating virginity. That is the help rendered by me. He has now attained the goal of the virtuous and lucky men after having been struck down by you.

69. My husband was helped by me who know the subtlety of Dharma. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, I have acquired merit (Dharma) in saving your life.

70-71a. What has been achieved by that Dharma? Know it properly from me. I who am born in the species of an ogress, I who have been the wife of a Rākṣasa, have now become a Brāhmaṇa woman who can assume any form, the reason being Dharma.

71b-72. Dharma is the wish-yielding cow (Kāmadhenu). Satisfaction is the heavenly Nandana park. Vidyā is the cause of salvation and Tṛṣṇā (insatiable thirst) is the river Vaitaraṇī. My husband who was about to fall into Vaitaraṇī has been redeemed by me.

73. O Brāhmaṇa, I have helped this fair-faced girl also because she has been placed near a person who is the highest of all castes. She will be your wife in her father's house.

74-75. I will be guarding her and you for ever enlightening you with Dharma. Before my contact you had a wife, O Brāhmaṇa, who will be born as a being in lower animal species. Later on, as a result of my blessings, she will be released.

76. O Brāhmaṇa, in my previous birth I was the most beautiful woman in the world well-known as Kandalī. I was the daughter of the sage Aurva.

77. By the power of penance I was born as one of a twin. My brother born along with me, was suppressed by Aurva himself for the cause of Dharma.

78-79. I was educated and given in marriage to Durvāsas. O leading Brāhmaṇa, it was a result of my previous Karman that I attained him as my husband. I quarrelled with my husband. Hence, I was cursed by him and reduced to ashes. As a little of my sins remained, I was born as ogress.

80. In that birth this brilliant leader of demons Gobhila was attained by me as my husband but he has been struck down by you.

81. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, in his youth he had incurred a curse "Your death will be initiated by your wife on account of a certain princess."

82. As a result of my previous Karman, I have been bereft of the nature of an ogress. Being powerful on account of the auspicious actions, I become your helpmate.

83. At the outset my husband abducted a virgin and I had been made miserable by him. Hence, O Brāhmaṇa, he has been killed by me.

84. O lover, since you put trust in me with all your heart and soul in every respect I shall protect you in every respect.

85. This is my binding by oath with five elements as my witness and uttered in the presence of the all-pervading person. It is the truth.

86. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, you will not alter this agreement in any respect. O bestower of honour, you must abide by me in all activities."

87. On hearing the words uttered by the ogress, the noble Brāhmaṇa carried out all instructions and she did accordingly.

88-89. Thereafter, the demoness gathered together all wealth from the cave. She assumed the form of a she-elephant and kept my husband on her back along with Ratnāvalī, the large-eyed girl. Joyously she went through the path of firmament, O lady of good eyes, towards Kāśī.

CHAPTER TWENTYNINE

The description of Kāśi

Kāṣṭhilā said :

1. Thus, O lady of beautiful eyebrows, that ogress who had assumed the form of a she-elephant, reached the temple of Viśveśa at Kāśī within three Muhūrtas.

2. On reaching that city, the lady of black eyes spoke to her husband—"O Lord, this (city) is glorified as the axe for the cutting of the tree of sin.

3. O beloved, this is said to be the dice box for the gold of six types of distresses (?) It is destructive of all seeds of Karmans, and it is the bestower of salvation on all.

4. The Purāṇas say that it was at first the abode of Viṣṇu.[1] No one can ever have salvation in a holy centre not belonging to Viṣṇu.

5. O excellant Brāhmaṇa, this was formerly a city of Viṣṇu, the bestower of salvation on all creatures and the destroyer of every one's sin.

6. Once Lord Śaṅkara went there to see Pitāmaha (god Brahmā) the sole creator of all worlds, shining with his own splendour.

7. After going there, Mahādeva bowed down to Brahmā the preceptor of the worlds. He stood in front of him listening to the recital of the Vedic lore.

8. He was delighted on seeing the Lord of the Universe joyously reciting the four Vedas by means of the four wonderful faces.

9. Thereafter, the leader of goblins saw the fifth face of Brahmā. On observing him to be impudent and arrogant, he became malicious instantaneously.

10. O leading Brāhmaṇa, the three-eyed deity, born of anger could not brook his audacity. Hence with the tip of his nail he cut off the head stationed above in the firmament (?)

11. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the head of Brahmā that had been severed, stuck up to the sproutlike left hand (of Śiva). It did not fall off though shaken frequently.

12. Brahmā became sad. He stood there staring at Śiva. Śiva became ashamed and he hurriedly went out of the place.

13. Though he tried in many ways impatiently to cast off that head, he could not get rid of it. It was a great mystery.

14. Being perturbed and worried he remembered Viṣṇu, the Garuḍa-emblemed deity. The moment he was remembered, Viṣṇu manifested himself.

1. The claim that Kāśi was originally an abode of Viṣṇu and that Śiva begged of him to give that place to himself as a permanent residence as a protection against Brahma-hatyā is a Vaiṣṇavite tilt in the NP. The assertion that liberation in sacred place is possible only if it is presided over by Viṣṇu is a part of sectarian propaganda. It is also an explanation why a particular Tīrtha at Kāśi was called Kapāla-mocana.

15. O Brāhmaṇa, on seeing the omnipresent Viṣṇu the Lord of the chiefs of the Devas, the bull-emblemed deity who had turned pale became humble and bent down his head.

16. On seeing (Śiva) the antagonist of Brahmā, sick and frightened, Hari consoled him and spoke these words that made him satisfied.

17. "Inasmuch as the head of Brahmā had been cut off, O Śambhu, the omniscient one, you have committed a sin. Experience the fruit thereof for a short while.

18. O beloved one, a Karman performed by one, whether auspicious or inauspicious will yield its fruit which one must, of necessity, experience. Even if hundreds of births are to be taken, a Karman does not perish without being experienced.

19. What can I do ? Where shall I go ? On seeing you miserable, O Śambhu, at the sight of your misery, my Prāṇas are agitated and dispirited.

20. It is my opinion that even the most heinous of all great sins are not equal to Brāhmaṇa-slaughter.

21. You are the preceptor of the whole world. You are the instructor in Dharma. But, overpowered by the sin of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter you are incapable of remaining quiet even for a moment.

22. This extremely terrible Hatyā (the sin of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter) emits fish odour; she is senile and sick; she has put out her tongue. O Lord of Devas ! She is running after you to catch you.

23. Hence you must not stay in any single place for a while. For the sake of your benefit you have to be wandering (continuously) for twelve years, with the desire for the destruction of sins.

24-25. You must wander for twelve years with the skull, begging for alms, washing your left hand in the holy rivers and tanks. Then, O Lord of the Devas you will become pure and be liberated from this sin." O Brāhmaṇa, on being advised thus by Viṣṇu, Śiva went over all the places.

26. In order to get rid of the skull he washed his left hand in every sacred water. Wandering thus for three years he reached the penance grove of Badarikāśrama.

27. O bestower of honour, for the sake of alms he stood at the threshold of Dharmaputra,[1] the lord of the Devas and repeatedly said—"Viṣṇu, give me alms."

28. On seeing Śiva stationed at the threshold, Lord Nārāyaṇa said—"Take the alms". After saying this he offered his right hand.

29. On seeing Hari attempting to give the alms, O excellent Brāhmaṇa, Śiva struck his right hand with his trident.

30-33. Through the three wounds inflicted by (the three points of) the trident, three streamlike jets came out. They were terrifying to the worlds. They had different colours; they were twelve Hastas high. One of the streams was of blood. It fell on the skull. The second, a milky stream, reached his face; the third, a stream of water came up to Śiva in front of him, for the sake of saving Śiva. Śiva resorted to these three streams in accordance with the injunctions for the duration of three years. Becoming a little delighted, O Brāhmaṇa, he went to the holy centre of Kurukṣetra. Having gone there, he became a pillar and fell down.

34. In the holy centre of Brahma-hrada, he lay immersed in the waters of Brahmahrada. When a period of three years had elapsed he came out with half of his body wounded (?)

35. He eulogised Viṣṇu the Lord of the Devas, abiding in the cavity of the heart of everyone, for a long time. Then the Lord of the Universe who was pleased with him granted him the boon.

36-38. "O Hara, after wandering over many holy centres go to Kāśī."

Thereafter, he bowed down to Hari and circumambulating him wandered over many places. Making his pilgrimage duly he reached the city of Avimukta (Kāśī). After entering the limits of Avimukta, when Dhurjaṭi (Śiva) observed, he did not see Brahmahatyā following him. She was standing outside. Knowing that it was a holy centre belonging to Viṣṇu and destructive of sins he became satisfied in mind and enthusiastically eulogised Viṣṇu, the Lord worthy of being saluted.

1. Nārāyaṇa was the son of Dharma and Mūrti. (Bh. P. I. 3.9, II. 7.6, Mbh. Śānti 334.9-12).

39. "Be victorious, be victorious, O Lord of the universe O Lord Viṣṇu, the storehouse of bliss of the entire universe, knowable only through the Vedas; O suppressor of demon Madhu, O Nṛsiṁha, O yellow-robed one, O One riding on Garuḍa, O Mādhava, O primordial Lord.

40. O Lord of Ramā, the lover of Vrajas, (cowherd's colony), Lord of Rādhā, Lord of the Devas, the fulfiller of the desires of all, O Kṛṣṇa, O foremost among the Devas, O ocean of kindness, O destroyer of anguish, O lotus-eyed, O Lord of the greatest beings.

41. O Ornament of the family of Yadu, O resident of the milky ocean, O Śauri, O archer, O expert in the art of uplifting the mountain (Govardhana), O deity having a pair of the lotus-feet that destroy the sin of Kali age, O deity who bestow favour on those who eulogise thee, O Kūrma (Divine Tortoise), O son of Kaśyapa (Vāmana).

42. O Paraśurāma—the fire for the forest of wicked kings, O Buddha with a saffron cloth that cleaned off blood from all sacrifices, O Kalkin, O remover of the fear of worldly existence, O deity governable by (i.e. under the influence of) the devotees, O cowherd, who lift up those who bow down to you, O Lord of sacred fame and name.

43. O remover of the burden of the Earth, O Lord worthy of being worshipped by the enemies of Asuras, O Lord of Prakṛti, O residential abode of the whole universe, O Rāma, O Lord of the mobile and immobile beings shining with many attributes, O Lord who are beyond the three Guṇas., O eternal one, O Lord worthy of being worshipped at the head of all, O Lord who protect the enemy of the annihilator Yama through your own people, O Lord with lotus-like feet, O beautiful Padmanābha, O lotus-palmed Lord, O Lord favourite of the resident of the lotus (i.e. God Brahmā), O Lord, worthy of being saluted by the destroyer of Kāma and the Lord of three worlds (?)

44. O remover of sins, O Lord of the Raghus, O Lord of the Yādavas, one who are fond of Brāhmaṇas, O greater than the greatest one, O Lord worthy of being worshipped by the immortal beings, O wielder of the ploughshare, O remover of sins, O Lord, worthy of being bowed to ; O Lord pervaded by the three Guṇas, O cleverest one in the three worlds and three units of Time.

45. O Lord with the sole duty of destroying the hosts of demons, O sinless one, O Lord lying on Śeṣa, the king of serpents, O destroyer of Kaṁsa, O Lord having the sun and the moon as eyes, O Lord of powerful activities, O Lord having the lustre of fresh clouds, O Lord of the Goddess of Fortune.

46. O sacrifice, O Lord maintaining sacrifice, O Lord who were bound with a rope by your mother, O Lord fond of fresh butter, O Lord of groups of cowherd lasses, O destroyer of demons Agha, Baka, Vṛṣa, Keśin and Pūtanā, O destroyer of Triśiras, Bāli and the ten-headed Rāvaṇa.

47. O destroyer of Naraka and Mura, O Lord who cut off the hands of Bāṇa, O Lord worthy of being worshipped by the enemy of the Tripuras, O friend of Sudāman, O Lord worthy of being served, O Lord whose lotus-like feet constitute a raft that takes one across the ocean of worldly existence, O Lord whose Aiśvarya (Lordship and prowess) is manifest, O ancient one, O One whose arms are full.

48-49. O Lord who can be attained only through the merits of many births, O Lord worthy of all auspicious things, knowable through the Vedas, O receptacle of Śrutis (Vedas), O quiescent, pure, bestower of boons, I seek refuge in your excellent pair of feet; it destroys sins, protect me.

50. There is none who can grant salvation to me other than the ancient Puruṣa. Be pleased with me with this request." The Lord of the universe, who was thus eulogised with great devotion by Lord Śambhu, Viṣṇu favourably disposed towards the devotees manifested himself suddenly.

51. On seeing Hari, Hara fell on the ground like a staff. O leading Brāhmaṇa, he got up again and with palms joined in reverence he bowed down to him.

52. Viṣṇu spoke to that leader of Bhūtas (goblins) who had bowed to him—"Choose a boon, I will give it to you. I am pleased with your eulogy."

53. On hearing the words of the Lord, Bhūteśa, Lord of the goblins who had been harassed by the evil of the slaughter of a Brāhmaṇa spoke this to Hari who is the bestower of worldly pleasures and liberation.

54. "O wielder of discus and iron club, I wish to stay in your holy centre since the 'brāhmaṇa-slaughter' is seen stationed outside the limits of your holy centre.

55. O Garuḍa-bannered deity, be merciful to me by the gift of this holy centre. On my going out, the evil of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter will harass me again.

56. Stationed in your holy centre, I will derive worship in all the three worlds."

After saying this to the Lord of the Devas the bull-bannered deity kept quiet.

57. The lover of Lakṣmī, the daughter of the milk ocean, said "So be it" and accepted the proposal. O leading Brāhmaṇa, ever since then, this place is mentioned as the holy centre pertaining to Śiva.

58-59. But poets knew this as the ancient holy centre of Keśava. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, water (tears) gushed out of the eyes of Viṣṇu overwhelmed with sympathy. Thereby the lake called Bindusaras originated. At the behest of Viṣṇu, the bull-bannered Lord took his ablution there.

60. No sooner did Hara take his holy dip therein, then the skull of Brahmā fell down from his hand. That sacred lake became famous by the name of Kapālamocana.

61. Bound by the emotional feelings of devotion of Śambhu, Viṣṇu is stationed there by the name of Bindu-Mādhava after giving his own abode to the Trident-bearing Lord.

62. He was resorted to by the Sky-clad Śiva; he had the lustre of ten thousand suns. In this manner, Brahmā and other Devas residing in Heaven ever see him.

63. O darling (husband), obstacles are put by the trident-bearing Lord (in the lives of people) so that they will serve him. People who are overwhelmed by these obstacles will eulogise Viṣṇu and then worship Śiva.

64-65. All those people dwell here thinking "Lord is Śiva: the city is Kāśī. O Brāhmaṇa, by thinking about Śiva, the devotees of Śiva are free from perturbation. They go to Siva's world devoid of old age and death. Good men endowed with many merits stay here free from ailments.

66-67. O lover of Kāśi, those who partake of the leavings of sacrifice become endowed with prosperity. O excellent Brāhmaṇa they do not extol ablution here nor Japa, nor the worship of the Devas nor charitable gifts. Excepting the abandoning of one's physical body nothing else is praised. After courting death here a man certainly becomes contented and blessed.

68. O Brāhmaṇa, such a city full of palaces, has been reached by us. It is conducive to the salvation of even those who indulge in worldly pleasures: what then of those who observe holy vows.

69. May this maiden who had been formerly separated from her parents by that wicked Rākṣasa be left in the palace of the Lord of Kāśī.

70-72. This virgin who had been practising observances had been abducted by that Rākṣasa for sexual intercourse. Thus the power of this holy centre has been described, O excellent Brāhmaṇa. All Karmans auspicious and inauspicious, of past, present and future, perpetrated knowingly or unknowingly do perish here. It is for the destruction of Karmans that this city was formerly built by (Viṣṇu). Men who die therein never experience fierce and endless misery nor the tortures of Yama.

CHAPTER THIRTY

The story of Kāṣṭhilā (Contd.)

Kāṣṭhilā said :

1. On hearing these words based on (and approved by) Dharma of his wife, the ogress, the Brāhmaṇa and girl descended from the back of the ogress who had assumed the form of a she-elephant.

2. When the Brāhmaṇa got down, that ogress became once again a beautiful young woman with her face resembling the moon and with plump and protruding breasts.

3. On reaching the splendid city of her own father, that virgin spoke to the city governor who had come there in the course of his duty of guarding the exterior limits of the city.

4-7. O city Governor, go to my father the king Sudyumna and tell him that I Ratnāvalī alias Ratnaśālā* who had been abducted from his city, from my bed, have come back. O Brāhmaṇa, (you remember) that I had been abducted though I had been considered the jewel of the king Sudyumna. His daughter has come back alive and safe and sound. (You tell him as though I say) "O dear father, be consoled. Do not feel sorry on my account, O leading king, I have never been ravaged. I am like the pure water of the Gaṅgā. I have brought about your fame (I have not marred your fame). I am the index of the good nature of my mother."

8. On hearing the words of the virgin, the city-governor who was well known as Abāhu reached the presence of Sudyumna in a hurry.

9-10. He made obeisance and on being asked spoke to the king respectfully. "O king, O bestower of honour, your daughter well known as Ratnāvalī, who had been lost has come back. She is accompanied by a Brāhmaṇa in the company of a woman. She was seen by me standing outside the city limits but could not be recognized.

Ratna-śālām* in the Text. It should have been rather Ratna-śālāyāḥ who was abducted from Ratna-śālā. She was sleeping in Ratnaśālā. The Accusative is used for Ablative in the text. [vide v. 17 below]

11. Urged by her, O Lord, I have come to report the matter to you. She says "I am unravaged. May my father know that I have come back.

12-13a. O father no doubt need be entertained in respect to my good action." On hearing these wonderful words of the city Governor, the king instantaneously set off alongwith his wife, ministers and the Brāhmaṇa priest.

13b-14a After going out of the city the king saw his daughter comfortably seated on the banks of the Gaṅgā. She was as refulgent as the sun. She was accompanied by a Brāhmaṇa alongwith a woman.

14b-15. She was bedecked in her natural dress though she was fond of ornaments. She had the lustre of unfading flowers. She was refulgent like molten gold. After seeing her from a distance, the king hurriedly went near her and embraced her.

16. Over-joyed she too embraced her father and bowed down to him. Then she met her mother with great delight within her heart.

17-18. Addressing her father, the king, the large-eyed girl spoke these words. "Surrounded by my female friends I was sleeping in the Hall of Jewels. O dear father, without washing my feet I lay with my head directed towards the north on the couch anxiously pondering over a possible alliance with a husband. I was abducted during the middle of the night.

19. Taking me with him, the demon went to his city beyond the ocean on a mountain full of different kinds of jewels. I was confined in a cave.

20. There he was thinking deeply within himself about the means of a marriage with me. This lady of beautiful eyebrows and slender waist who stands here, is his wife.

21-22. She is an ogress who has assumed a human form. She had been the wife of that demon. O King, using the Śakti of god Indra intelligently she caused the death of her own husband of ruthless actions, at the hands of the Brāhmaṇa. It was through the intercession of fate that even before me the Brāhmaṇa had reached the mountain.

23-24a. This ogress found that her husband was a defiler of virtue. Moreover, she became enamoured of the handsome features of the Brāhmaṇa. Urged by her own Karman, she entered into an agreement with the Brāhmaṇa, for wedded life (with him) and brought about the death of the Rākṣasa.

24b-26. Thus, after having made the Brāhmaṇa her husband, she assumed the form of a she-elephant. The wealth got in exchange of all the articles of the house was kept on her back alongwith the Brāhmaṇa and myself. O king, she has now come here to your mansion. O king, it was by this Rākṣasī that I had been saved from that demon. Hence, honour and worship her alongwith the Brāhmaṇa.

27. With her permission give me in marriage to this Brāhmaṇa. I shared the same seat with him. Hence he has become my husband.

28. "He alone shall be the husband of a woman, with whom she shares the same seat. No one else, so we hear in the Purāṇas and Āgamas.

29. I had occupied her back with delight alongwith this Brāhmaṇa. Hence, in my opinion he must be my husband, according to Dharma.

30. Hence, dear father, console this lady and give me to the Brāhmaṇa in accordance with the injunctions in the Āgamas and other scriptural texts. I do not wish to choose any other husband."

31. On hearing these words of his daughter, Sudyumna the king, consoled the ogress in the form of the lady of slender waist. He stood bowing down with humility.

[Sudyumna requested :]

32. "This, my daughter, afraid of losing her merits (Dharma), has sought refuge in you alone. For that reason O chaste woman, your previous husband was killed by you.

33. Hence, O gentle lady, she has become one subservient to you. This, my daughter wishes to have as her husband the same gentleman who had been made by you your husband.

34. O Ogress, you have been requested by me by means of obeisances and gifts. O lady of beautiful eyes, give your consent to my daughter by extending your help to her.

35. At your instance, may my daughter be even the hand-maid of the Brāhmaṇa. Eschew the feelings of rivalry common among co-wives and protect my daughter.

36. There is no doubt about this that you are the mistress of myself, my daughter, my wife, my army, my people, my city and even the whole of my kingdom.

37-38. She will always abide by your instructions." On hearing these words of Sudyumna, the ogress approved his statement with a pure conscience mentally (deciding to be) her co-wife. She spoke thus to the king who was ready to give her in marriage.

39. "O excellent king, since you bowed to me with pure feelings, may this lady be the second wife of the Brāhmaṇa.

40. In the bright half of the month of Phālguna, I must be worshipped in the temple by you alongwith all the citizens.

41. Beginning with Aṣṭamī, the eighth day and ending with Caturdaśī, the festivities must be conducted by means of songs and instrumental music alongwith actors and dancers.

42-43a. Oblations of intoxicating beverages, meat, blood, etc. must be given in the course of worship. If you continue to do in this manner I shall always be the cause of your welfare. O leading king, keep your own words."

43b-44. On hearing these words of the ogress, Sudyumna, the king, accepted everything that had been proposed by that delighted lady. When it had been agreed to by the king, the ogress became satisfied.

45. She lovingly spoke to the Brāhmaṇa "O excellent Brāhmaṇa, make this splendid princess also your wife in the manner laid down in the Gṛhya texts.

46-47. I shall eschew jealousy and malice and be a sister to this large-eyed girl." At the instance of the ogress, the Brāhmaṇa, married the daughter of the king who had been endowed with much wealth. Seated on the ogress who assumed the form of a she-elephant, he went to the city of Mahodaya (Kanauj) instantaneously.

48. Then I heard thus—"O gentle lady, your husband has returned with plenty of wealth and jewels with two wives also in the bargain."

49. Thereupon, I was rebuked and cursed by the kinsmen, parents and friends with harsh and wounding words.

50. "O lady greedy of money, how will you go to your husband who is endowed with fortune now, but who had been abandoned by you before since he was indigent and wretched ?

51. O blessed lady, in case of woman the riches inherited from parents are fickle and unsteady. It is stated that the riches earned by her husband are permanent.

52. He had once been rebuked by you with harsh words. How can you dare to speak to him now ? Your entry into his house is also difficult.

53. Granting that you are able to go there, O woman of evil actions, sharing the bed with your husband can never be conducive to your happiness.

54. If out of fear for the public censure your husband accepts you (once again), he will never have intercourse with you, because he is devoid of affection in the heart.

55. There is nothing else in the world so miserable as the coming together of a man and wife who are mentally far apart. It is exceedingly agitating and crippling."

56. I heard these and many other similar words uttered by the kinsmen. On hearing these I became extremely grief-stricken. With tears filling the eyes, I kept my face bent down.

57-58. I thought within myself thus :— "Formerly, I had been deluded by greediness. Hence neither the bangle of the hand nor the girdle round the waist nor the anklets round the legs were given up so that my husband could be satisfied. The husband is regarded in the world as the master of both wealth and life.

59. That wealth has been taken away by me. What will be my future ? How can I go to his abode ? How shall I speak to him again ?

60-62a. How can he who had been wickedly abandoned by me believe me now." Even as I was thinking thus in my perturbed mind, the palanquin surrounded by kinsmen arrived there. It was tender and elegant. It shone with an umbrella, resembling the moon in lustre. Deer skins were spread within it. Stout men bore it on their shoulders.

62b-63. Those men came in and requested me again and again: "O splendid lady, you have been invited by your husband. Hasten there with glee and joy. Your husband has returned endowed with plenty of wealth and jewels as well as two other wives.

64. O fair-faced lady, we had been sent by your husband immediately after his arrival, to fetch you who have been staying in the house of your parents."

65. O gentle lady, on noting that act of my husband I became ashamed. I did not say anything in reply to them. I remained silent.

66. Thereafter I was urged and enlightened again and again by the kinsmen. "You have been called by your husband with due honour. Hence go back to him.

67. O daughter, if the wife does not rejoin her husband when invited (to do so) she is born as a female crow for fifteen births."

68. They said thus and assuaged my grief. They took me hurriedly and made me sit in the palanquin with affection, they repeatedly said, 'Go'.

69. Thereafter those men placed the palanquin on their shoulders and started immediately with speed. They reached the city of Mahodaya where my husband was staying.

70. That his house had been surrounded by gold (i.e. full of articles, pots etc. of gold) was seen by me. It was fully equipped with furniture, foodstuffs, riches and raiments.

71. Then, O beautiful woman, that ogress and the gentle lady, the princess bowed to me with love and devotion.

72. I was befittingly greeted and honoured with love by those two ladies. Respected, and so delighted with the words of my husband, I took my bath and meal.

73. Thereafter, soon after sunset my husband called me and immediately clasped me within his arms. He made me sit on the couch and kept me within his embrace for a long time.

74. Then he called the ogress and the princess and said : "Service to this lady's feet should be rendered by both of you with due devotion.

75. She had been my wife previously. Hence she is certainly the eldest and senior-most to both of you." Then at the instance of our husband, my feet were touched by those two ladies.

76. O lady of beautiful eyes, they eschewed (completely) the jealousy and malice originating from the feeling that I am a cowife. Then, my husband called the servants and spoke those words.

77-78. "O servants, whatever wealth had been acquired by me at the outset from the possessions of the Rākṣasa, whatever had been received by me when I wedded the daughter of the king, bring these things respectfully. Do not delay. This lady is the mistress of everything of those riches."

79-81. O splendid lady, at his words the wealth was immediately brought by the servants. My husband offered the entire wealth to me with love and mind untarnished by deception. He honoured me with ornaments and garments, even as the two ladies, the ogress and the princess were looking on.

82. O splendid lady, he kissed my lips and embraced me as I was seated on the couch. On seeing this wonderful dedication of his self and wealth unto me by my husband, (and on hearing) his words that thrilled me and (feeling excited) because his hands pressed my breasts, I fell down dead like a cow struck down by a sword. My vital breaths left me.

83. Then I attained the torture in the hell assigned to me by Yama. O splendid lady, after covering that period I experienced anguish and misery and was born as a Kāṣṭhīlā.

84-85. I shall have to be born in the animal kingdom thousands of times. O splendid-faced lady, the woman who does not dedicate her wealth and life to her husband will undoubtedly attain this state. By understanding this, one should save the wealth and life of one's husband.

86. Husband is both father and mother, wealth and life, preceptor and salvation.

87. With a great deal of merits the woman goes to the region of Viṣṇu alongwith her husband if her body is cremated alongwith him. But a woman greedy of wealth and of her body (?) attains Yama's torture and the affliction of being born in base wombs in lower species.

CHAPTER THIRTYONE

The Glory of the month of Māgha

Vasiṣṭha said :

1-4. On hearing the words of that Kāṣṭhīlā, the lady of pure smiles named Sandhyāvalī became extremely surprised and addressed her with respect. "O Kāṣṭhīlā, by your words I am much surprised now. Why at all did I happen to see you attaining the base mode of existence ? By what Karman can your liberation be effected from this base birth ? O, one of large limbs, please tell this to me. On seeing you I have become miserable. O excellent one, pity is roused in my heart, on seeing your body resembling a lump of meat that is smooth and comparable to a lump of butter.

Kāṣṭhīlā said :

5. O lady of charming eyebrows, even if you are going to give the entire earth for my sake, I cannot all of a sudden extricate myself from this base birth.

6. O blessed lady, listen, I shall point out that holy rite (from which accrues merit) that bestows the great goal, whereby I can liberate myself from the bondage of Karmas.

7. What is called the month of Māgha is remembered as the most excellent of all months. In it, Brāhmaṇā-slaughter and other sins cry out in distress (as they are annihilated therein).

8. Rare indeed is the month of Māgha; rare indeed is the human birth; rare indeed is the ablution early in the morning and rare indeed is the opportunity to serve Kṛṣṇa.

9-12. Rare still is the day of Viṣṇu (i e. the Ekādaśī Tithi) that is duly observed as the day of fast. Their own splendour has been cast off into the water by gods during the month of Māgha. Here water is very particularly sacred during this month. The goal that is obtained by persons who maintain regular observances by means of bathing into the water early in the morning, is the bestower of happiness, and is never attained by even heroic warriors (after death) in the battle. If one takes one's bath in the waters of rivers, lakes or tanks it is called the most excellent. If the bath is taken in the well water kept in a vessel, it is of mediocre benefit. If water that is warmed in fire is taken for bath, it is of the least benefit. Merit cannot be attained through pleasures. It is obtained only through distress and exertion.

13. Bath is taken for the purpose of observing holy and virtuous rites and not merely for the sake of purity and cleanliness of the limbs. Fire is resorted to for the purpose of performing Homas and not for removing chillness.

14. Bath should be taken before the sunrise. If the sky is overcast with clouds, one should pray and request the sun who is going to rise.

15. If rivers etc. are not available, water should be kept over-night in a fresh mud-pot. Wind must blow over it during the night. People know such water to be equal to the Gaṅgā for the purpose of holy ablution.

16. O fair lady, a person who regularly takes bath in the month of Māgha, never sees misery and misfortune. There exists no such sin as cannot be wiped off by the holy bath during the month of Māgha.

17-18. Taking the holy dip into water in the morning during the month of Māgha is better than entering fire (?) Misery is experienced if one survives (after entering fire) but if one dies one enjoys happiness. For this reason, O gentle lady the bath during the month of Māgha is of special significance Everyday gingelly seeds along (or coated ?) with sugar must be given as charitable gifts.

19. O lady of slender waist, Homa should be performed with cooked rice as white as hail or with barley grains foll wed by the oblation of cow's ghee on the full-moon day in the month of Māgha.

20. At the end of the holy observance of (pre-sunrise) bath in the month of Māgha one shall give food consisting of the six tastes (such as sweet, sour and others) and say "May the lord, the sun-god be pleased with me—Lord sun who is unsullied and the embodiment of Viṣṇu.

21. To a Brāhmaṇa couple, clothes should be given along with seven kinds of food. Thirty sweet-meats too must be given as well as gingelly seeds and cooked rice along with sugar.

22. The gingelly seeds and sugar must be in the ratio of three to one. The devotee who knows the procedure must give Tāmbūla (betel leaves) and other sources of enjoyment with devotion.

23. One should face the current when one bathes in a river, if it be in any other place (tank etc.), one should face the sun. There he must invoke Gaṅgā and other holy rivers from the disc of the sun (and then take bath).

24-25. "There are thousands of sins originating in the course of many births, some knowingly committed, some unknowingly committed. But may all those be dispelled by your brilliance, O sun, O Lord of the worlds, O Prabhākara (cause of lustre), obeisance be to you. O Acyuta, make my (observance of) holy dip in the month of Māgha well accomplished and complete."

26. O fair lady, the devotee who takes bath in the holy centres gets lesser benefit than the devotee who takes holy dip in the month of Māgha. One may go to heaven by means of baths in the holy centres. One goes to the highest region (Mokṣa) through the bath in the month of Māgha.

27. The eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Māgha is the destroyer of great sins, if it coincides with a Sunday.

28-36. Even without the conjunction of the constellation Pleiades, the eleventh day in the bright half of Māgha burns the sins of men in the same manner as a base king spoils the kingdom, or as a bad son the family, or as a vicious wife the husband, or as sin the virtue, or as the wicked minister ruins the king, or as ignorance dispels (i.e. vitiates) knowledge, or as complete uncleanliness mars purity, or as untruth dispels truth, or as a controversy spoils a conversation or as heat dispels snow or as misfortune spoils fortune, or as a sin mars fame or arrogance vitiates austerity. Just as Rasas (medicinal potions) destroy great ailments, just as Śaṅkara (fixing of rendezvous) spoils śrāddha (?), so also the Dvādaśī, if properly observed, destroys heaps of sins. The day of Hari (Ekādaśī) quickly destroys the great sins such as Brāhmaṇa-slaughter, imbibing of liquor, stealing, and outraging the modesty of the preceptor's wife. The collections of these sins are not quelled by bath in Puṣkara. Neither the holy centre of the Naimiṣa forest nor Kurukṣetra nor Prabhāsa, Gayā, Revā, Sarasvatī, Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Prayāga nor the river Devikā nor the lakes nor rivers nor Homas, gifts and austerities (can dispel these sins). Excepting the only (auspicious) day of Hari i.e. Ekādaśī no other day can destroy the multitude of sins; no other merit is clearly mentioned in the Purāṇa O lady of charming eyebrows, for the purpose of destroying aggregates of sins.

37-40. O gentle lady, by observing fast even for once, heaps of sins do perish. On one side of the balance the gift of the whole Earth and on another side the day of Hari, it is declared by Brahmā that they are not equal. The day of Hari is superior. On that day, the devotee should make a gold image of the Lord in the form of a Boar. An auspicious new copper vessel shall be kept over a jar. Into that vessel the image of the lord should be placed, so also all the seeds. It must be covered with a white cloth. Gold pieces, bright lamp etc. should be placed, and the vessel be decorated with flowers. The observer of the holy rite should worship the Lord in accordance with the injunctions and keep himself awake.

41. In the morning, the devotee should gift away the jar alongwith the Boar image and all the things within it and also the Naivedyas and other ancillary articles to a Brāhmaṇa householder who is a devotee of Viṣṇu.

42. After feeding Brāhmaṇas, he should break his fast surrounded by his friends. O fair lady, if this observance is performed, he is never born again anywhere.

43. The sin accumulated in the course of many births whether knowingly or unknowingly committed, is wholly destroyed like the darkness at sunrise.

44. O splendid lady, the holy rite of Ekādaśī has been recounted to you by me in accordance with the (description of the same in the) scriptural texts. O gentle lady, this is the same as had been performed formerly by you in the course of another birth.

45-46. As a result of this holy rite, you have derived incomparable nourishment. It will be enhanced further later on. It is the bestower of happiness on your husband and son always. If, out of that merit a fourth part is willingly and respectfully given to me, I will become delighted and will go to the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

47. O beautiful woman, I had incurred a sin due to the denial and concealment of the wealth. In order to sanctify it (i.e. in order to dispel it and sanctify me) kindly give me one fourth part of your merit as I just now requested for.

48. The woman who deceives her husband with regard to the life or wealth undergoes hundred births in the wombs of germs and is reborn ultimately as a Pulkasī (Cāṇḍāla woman).

49. O honourable lady, the woman of perverted mind who does not yield herself up for sexual intercourse when the husband requests for the same or does not give him wealth (when he needs it) certainly is reborn as Kāṣṭhīlā (a worm ?).

50. If you have any mercy on me, give me a fourth part of your merit accruing from the observance of the holy rite of Ekādaśī for the purpose of dispelling the sin, which I had incurred.

51. O lady of good eyes, on hearing the words of that Kāṣṭhīlā, I took water in my hand and gave the (required) merit to her.

52. "By one-fourth of the merit accrued to me formerly by observing a fast on the Ekādaśī day, may this Kāṣṭhīlā be liberated from the sins committed by her in the previous birth. What I have averred is truth and nothing but the truth."

53b-54a. When those words were uttered by me, she was seen going to the region of Viṣṇu seated in a divine aerial chariot. Her lustre was like that of lightning.

54b-55. The husband is a deity in the visible world. He should not be deceived by the wife either through her body or through her wealth, if she wishes for splendid existence (in the next birth). Hence, you speak out. I shall give you what is desired by you for the sake of our husband.

56-57. O fair-faced lady, I shall give up wealth, body, my own son or anything else (if you desire it). Who else is a deity unto the women in this world except her own husband ? O lady of beautiful eyes, the woman who sacrifices her wealth or life for his sake, is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu for the duration of a hundred crores of Kalpas and more.

58. The wife of the Brāhmaṇa saw her husband, who had wooed her with fire etc. as witness, indulging in terrible vices. So she became ruthless. Although she was requested, she did not give him wealth, as a result of that sin she became a worm.

59. During my girlhood days this flag-staff of Kāma was seen by me when I was at my father's place. After knowing that it is beneficial to the husband, I give up everything. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, take it.

CHAPTER THIRTYTWO

The Narration by Sandhyāvalī

Vasiṣṭha continued :

1. On hearing the words of Sandhyāvalī, Mohinī the daughter of Brahmā who was Mohakaraṇḍikā (a box of delusion ?) said thus, as she was interested in her own mission.

2-3. "O splendid lady, if thus you know the ways of Dharma and Adharma, and if for the sake of your husband you will readily give up your wealth and life, I beg of you then, O splendid lady, a wealth that is superior to life. Give me the head of your son which is liked by you more than the heart.

4-8a. If your husband, the king does not take food on the day of Hari (Ekādaśī), may he take the sword in his hand and cut off the beautiful head of Dharmāṅgada, which is splendid, which is comparable to the disc of the moon, which is decorated with two ear-rings and in which the moustache has not yet grown. O lady of beautiful eyes, may he cut it off and let it fall on to my lap. If he does not take food, O gentle lady, at least do this on the day of lord Viṣṇu, that is destructive of heaps of sins."

On hearing these words of Mohinī couched in bitter words, (Sandhyāvalī) the gentle lady shivered for a short while like the plantain tree blasted by chillness.

8b-14. Thereafter, Sandhyāvalī, the fair-complexioned lady mustered courage and composure and spoke these words to Mohinī, smilingly and preserving gentle expression on the face, —"O lady of beautiful eyebrows, these verses are heard mentioned in the Purāṇas. They are connected with Ekādaśī. They are the bestowers of heavenly bliss and salvation. (They are as follows :) "One should abandon wealth, one should eschew one's wife, life and house. One should abandon one's land, king, heaven, friends, and preceptor. One may leave off the holy centre, Dharma and whatever one is most fond of. One shall eschew Yoga, charitable gifts, perfect knowledge and holy rites. One should leave off austerities, Vidyā (learning), Siddhi (achievement of supernatural powers) and even salvation, O splendid lady. But one shall not leave off the holy Ekādaśī rite in both fortnights. Sons, brothers, friends and beloved ones, all are but persons with whom we come in contact only here (in this world). But Ekādaśī is remembered, O gentle lady, as the means of achievement of pleasures both here and hereafter (in this world and the other world). Thanks to the power of Ekādaśī, everything will become beneficent.

15. O blessed lady, I shall make him give you the head of Dharmāṅgada for your satisfaction. O splendid lady, believe in my statement and be happy.

16. In this matter, O gentle lady, this traditional mythological story is heard. I shall tell you, O gentle lady, listen with attention.

17. Formerly, there was a Daitya devoted to virtuous activities. (His name was) Virocana.[1] His wife, a lady of large eyes, was interested in the worship of Brāhmaṇas.

18. O lady of beautiful eye-brows, every day in the morning, she used to worship a sage in accordance with the injunctions. With great devotion and a delighted mind, she used to drink the water with which his feet had been washed.

19-21. (Defective) The Devas became apprehensive of the son of Prahlāda (i.e. Virocana) in the same manner as they were, while Hiraṇyakaśipu of fierce valour was ruling over the kingdom. Even when he was dead, they moved about on the Earth with great anxiety when the son of Prahlāda (i.e. Virocana) was himself delighted. Once those Devas the chief of whom was Indra, consulted Bṛhaspati, the preceptor of the Devas and said : "We are oppressed by the enemies. What is it that should be done by us ?" On hearing those words of the Devas, the preceptor Bṛhaspati said :

22-23. "Viṣṇu must be respectfully informed by the Devas (gods) who have become miserable." On hearing the utterance of their preceptor, the Devas of unmeasured splendour went to Vaikuṇṭha for securing the death of Virocana. After going there, they eulogised Viṣṇu, the most excellent of all Devas, by reciting hymns.

The Devas said :

24. Obeisance to the overlord of the Devas, to Viṣṇu of unmeasured splendour. Repeated salutes to the destroyer of obstacles of devotees, to Vaikuṇṭha (Viṣṇu).

1. Virocana was Bali's father. As such he preceded Viṣṇu's incarnation as Vāmana. Strictly speaking, reference to Viṣṇu calling him by his future incarnation as Paraśurāma, Kṛṣṇa, Buddha etc. is anachronic. But the Purāṇa-writers have not developed that sense. To the author of the NP., Viṣṇu is Para-Brahman. Hence addressing him as Śiva, the universe, Kāla etc., is natural (vide VV. 30-40 below).

25. Obeisance to Hari, the miraculous lion. Hail to the noble-souled Vāmana. Bow to the deity of the form of a Boar. Obeisance to the Divine Fire, the resident of the ocean (at the time) of dissolution of the universe.

26. Obeisance to the Tortoise, the upholder of the Mandara mountain. Hail to Bhārgva; obeisance to the deity lying in the ocean; Bow to Rāma the lord of all; obeisance to the lord of the universe, the cosmic witness.

27. Obeisance to Dattātreya, the pure one; obeisance to Kapila, the remover of distress; Bow to the sacrifice the upholder of Dharma; obeisance to the deity of the form of Sanaka and others.

28. Hail to the deity who granted boons to Dhruva; to Prthu of plenty of activities; to Ṛṣabha the pure one; obeisance to the Ātman bearing horse's head.

29. Bow to Haṁsa (the swan), the embodiment of Āgama, to the deity holding the vessel of nectar; obeisance to Kṛṣṇa, to Vāsudeva, to the deity who assumes the form of Saṁkarṣaṇa.

30. Obeisance to Pradyumna, to Aniruddha, to Brahmā, Śaṅkara, to Kumāra, to Gaṇeśa, to Nandin, to Bhṛṅgin.

31. Obeisance to the deity staying on the mountain Gandhamādana, obeisance to Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Bow to the lord of the universe; obeisance to Rāmeśvara.

32. Hail to the resident of Dvārakā; obeisance to the resident of Tulasī grove. Obeisance to the deity having the lotus in umbilicus. Bow to you the lotus-footed.

33. Obeisance to the Lotus-handed deity; obeisance to you, the Lotus-eyed one. Hail to the protector of Kamalā (Lakṣmī). Repeated obeisance to Keśava.

34. Bow to the deity having the form of the Sun; obeisance to the deity assuming the form of the moon; obeisance to the deity having the form of the guardians of the worlds (quarters). Hail to the deity assuming the form of Prajāpati.

35. Obeisance to the deity of the form of the groups of elements (or mass of living beings); obeisance to the splendour in the form of the Jīva (individual soul); obeisance to the Victory, to the victorious, to the leader, to the deity in the form of observances and holy rites.

36. Obeisance to the deity devoid of attributes, to the deity without desires, to the deity the knower of ethics, to the Ātman devoid of motion, to Buddha, to the deity of the form of Kalki, to Kṣetrajña; obeisance to the imperishable.

37. Obeisance to Govinda; to the lord of the universe, to the infinite one, to the primordial one; obeisance to the deity having the bow Śārṅga; to the deity wielding the conch and the iron club. Bow to the deity holding the discus.

38. Hail to the deity having the sword; obeisance to the Trident-bearing deity: obeisance to the deity striking with all weapons and missiles; Bow to the deity worthy of being a refuge; obeisance to the transcendental deity. Bow to the great Ātman.

39. Obeisance to Hṛṣīkeśa; to the deity identical with the universe; obeisance to you of the form of the universe. Hail to the deity having the Time as his umbilicus; salute to Kāla (God of Death, Time). Bow to the deity having the moon and the sun for his eyes; obeisance to the perfect one; obeisance to the deity worthy of being served. Hail to the deity who is greater than the greatest.

40. Obeisance to the maker of the universe, to the upholder of the universe, and to the annihilator of the universe; obeisance to one who fascinates, to one who agitates, to one who assumes the form as he desires; obeisance to the unborn, to the poet (the wise one).

41. O lord, on being oppressed by the Daityas, we have sought refuge in you. Hence, O supporter of everything, do that whereby we may be happy.

42a. May we sport about accompanied by our sons, friends, wives and others."

42b.-45a. On hearing their hymn of praise, Vaikuṇṭha (god Viṣṇu) was delighted in his mind. He granted personal vision to those Devas who were distressed and harassed by the Daityas. On seeing Vaikuṇṭha (God Viṣṇu), the lord of the chiefs of the Devas very affectionate at heart, they respectfully prayed to him for the destruction of Virocana. On hearing the main task of those Devas the chief of whom was Indra, the lord who is the foremost among those who know their duties, consoled the Devas with Love and let them off fully delighted and joyous.

45.B-48. When the groups of the Devas had gone, the lord who is the foremost among the knowers of all expedients, assumed the form of an old Brāhmaṇa and went to the abode of Virocana. He, the achiever of the missions, reached the place at the time of the worship of the Brāhmaṇas. On seeing him, Viśālāksī (a lady of large eyes) became delighted in her mind. After greeting and honouring the extra-ordinary Brāhmaṇa with devotion, she gave him the seat. Without accepting the seat given by her, he told her :— "O splendid and gentle lady, I am not accepting the great seat offered by you.

49-50.A Listen. The mission for which I have come here is incomparable. O woman of honour, he who understands the task kept in my mind must agree to its fulfilment. Then, O fairfaced lady, I will accept his wor-hip."

50.B-51.A On hearing the words of the old Brāhmaṇa the lady (though) an expert in understanding the deep significance of expressions, was deluded by the Māyā of Viṣṇu, as she was a woman. She spoke with great delight.

Viśālākṣi said :-

51-55.A "O Brāhmaṇa, I shall give you whatever may be in your mind. Take it from me. Here is the seat. Here is the water for washing the feet. Give unto me the desired object (viz. the water where-with you wash the feet)". On being requested thus, the Brāhmaṇa said, "I do not believe in the words of a woman. If your husband says it I can believe."

On hearing the words spoken by the Brāhmaṇa, the mistress of the abode of Virocana invited her husband there itself, in the presence of the Brāhmaṇa.

At the instance of the messenger, the delighted son of Prahlāda came to the harem where his wife Viśālākṣī was present.

55.B-57.A On seeing her husband arrived, the lady engaged in holy rites got up, bowed to the leading Brāhmaṇa and offered the seat. When he did not accept the seat offered respectfully, she informed her husband, the king of the Daityas.

57B-61.A. On coming to know of the incident, Virocana, the king of Daityas, was swayed by his love for his wife. With mind deluded, he accepted the (proposal of the Brāhmaṇa). After understanding the mental idea when the Daitya accepted the suggestion, the Brāhmaṇa became delighted and said, :- " Offier me your age and longevity". Then the couple became deluded due to the grief caused by themselves. After meditaing for a short while and joining the hands together, they spoke to the Brāhmaṇa, "O Brāhmaṇa, accept our life. Give us the water from your feet. We shall make your utterance true, Be delighted".

61.63 A. Janārdana who was delighted by their devotion, gave her the water from his feet. Viśālākṣī became joyous by washing the feetof the Brāhmaṇa. Along with her husband, she sprinkled water with which his feet were washed, over her head.

63.B. 65. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, the couple thereupon suddenly assumed divine forms, climbed into the excellent aerial chariot and went to the region of Viṣṇu.[1] Thereafter, the lord became delighted by uprooting the cause of grief to the Devas. He went to his abode in Vaikuṇṭha. He was eulogised by all the groups of Devas. Thus, O gentle ledy, what has been promised to you must be given to you by me.

66. O gentle lady, I will not make my husband Rukmāṅgada move away from truth. It is truth alone that has been glorified as the bestower of salvation on men.

67-68. They know that the man who has fallen off from truth is baser than a Cāṇḍāla". After speaking thus to Mohinī, the daughter of the lotus-born deity (Brahmā), Sandhyāvalī as refulgent as gold, and having beautiful eyebrows touched the feet of her husband with both of her hands, the feet that were copper-coloured with red toes.

1. The account of the death of Virocana given here—the self-sacrifice of Virocana and queen Viśālākṣi—is not complimentary to Viṣṇu. In the Mbh. Śānti. 98. 49-50, he was killed by Indra in the battle with demon Tāraka. This second version of Virocana's death is supported by Mt. P., Pd. P. and Brahmāṇḍa P.

CHAPTER THIRTYTHREE

The Submission of Dharmāṅgada

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. Thereafter, O king, Sandhyāvalī clasped the feet of her husband. The gentle lady spoke these words about the (imminent) death of Dharmāṅgada (at his hands).

Sandhyāvalī said :

2. "O king, just as by you, so also by me, this lady has been advised in many ways. But nothing else appeals to Mohinī, the very embodiment of delusion.

3. She wants you to take food on the day of Viṣṇu or to kill your son. O lord striking the son down is better than violating the holy observance.

4. O king, the affliction of the father is not as severe as that of the mother in giving birth to the son.

5. Since the mother undergoes misery in holding the son in her womb, O king, her affection is excessive. O king, the affection of the father cannot be as much as that of the mother.

6. In the world, O leading king, the father is said to be the person who sows the seed, the mother is the porson who holds it within her womb. In protecting and nourishing the child, the mother is superior to the father.

7. The affection of the mother is hundred times more than that of the father. It is in view of this abundance of love and affection that they recognise that the mother is greater.

8. In spite of that, I have become devoid of affection towards the son, O leading king, because of my desire to win the other world through the maintenance of the truth of the words uttered.

9. Eschewing all your affectionate feelings O king, kill your son. Do not transgress the truthfulness of the words uttered. On my very soul, you are bound by an oath.

10-14. Hṛṣīkeśa will be the bestower of fruits (after testing persons) on touch-stones (of holy rites), if, after observing them, O king, no pain is felt in the body. There is no doubt about this that it is through Adharma that a man falls off from heaven. The man who takes off his life or that of his son or sacrifices his possessions O king, and follows fate, is sung about as a great man. O king, blessed are those adversities which make men truthful. In view of their purpose of keeping up truthfulness, they may be the bestowers of salvation on men. In order to spread and guard their fame, holy rites must always be performed by men in the manner mentioned in the scriptures, without being swayed either by love or by hatred. Hence, O king, enough of your distress and anguish. Keep up the truth.

15. O king, by keeping up the truth, a man becomes united with Viṣṇu's person. This Mohinī (enchantress) is a touchstone created by the Devas for you.

16. O king, I consider that she has been made your wife (for this purpose), but you do not understand that. By your act of killing your son, the Devas will hang down their heads (in shame).

17. Placing your foot on their heads, you will attain the highest region. The Devas are the antagonists of those who have devotion towards Viṣṇu.

18-19. What has been made clear is that there will be blindness in the world. O king, the Devas along with the deities are antagonistic to you. With their activities, they break (obstruct) your path towards salvation. They cause you to drop down your resolve. Hence, O king, be steady and firm. Kill your dear son.

20-21. Carry out the directions of Mohinī by way of keeping up your own vow. O lord of kings, if the directives are unheeded, you will incur a terrible sin equal to that of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter. O ruler of the earth, you will be going to the world of Śamana (i.e. Yama) and there will be damage to your reputation on the earth."

Vasiṣṭha said :

22. O king, on hearing the words of his wife, the king Rukmāṅgada spoke those words to Sandhyāvalī in the presence of Mohinī :—

23. "O beloved wife, the slaughter of one's own son is an exceedingly sinful act. It is worse than Brāhmaṇaslaughter. What will be my future destiny in the world, after killing my own son ?

24. Wherefore did I go to the Mandara mountain ? Wherefore did I meet with Mohinī ? O gentle lady, this is veritable Kāla or god of death in the form of the beloved (Mohinī), for the destruction of Dharmāṅgada.

25. What will be my future state by killing my son who is conversant with Dharma, who is endowed with humility, who reconciles and delights the people and who has no issue of his own ?

26-31. O gentle lady, the father incurs great misery even by killing a vicious son. What then if he happens to be by nature righteous and rendering regular service to his elders ? O fair-complexioned lady, this continent of Jambūdvīpa alone is enjoyed by me. But all the seven continents are being enjoyed by your son now. O fair lady, he is a part of Viṣṇu. He will surely be superior to his father. O fair lady, this son of mine, Dharmāṅgada who has been highly extolled in Purāṇas by poets (O wise sages) is superior to all on this earth.

O lady of charming limbs, he is the bestower of honour on my family as well as on me. Alas ! In this matter I am faced with a greater misery than even my son. O fair lady, with your auspicious utterances speak again to Mohinī who is deluded and so who gives me much grief."

32. After saying thus to his beloved wife Sandhyāvalī, the king came near Mohinī and spoke this :—

33-34. "O splendid lady, I will not take food on the day of Viṣṇu nor will I injure my son in any way. I would rather tear up my own self or the gentle lady Sandhyāvalī. At your behest, I may even do any other terrible deed. But, O lady of charming eyebrows, leave off your stubbornness in regard to my son.

35. What benefit will you attain by killing my son Dharmāṅgada ? What do you gain by compelling me to take food on the day of Viṣṇu ? Tell me.

36. O fair-faced lady, I am your servant. I am your slave. I am subservient to you. O blessed lady request for some other boon, I submit to you.

37-40. O lady of beautiful limbs, your feet are equal to the red Aśoka flowers. I am absolutely obedient to you. I shall carry out some other purpose of yours.

I am subservient to you. O gentle lady, be pleased with me. Give me the alms in the form of my own son's life. A virtuous son is very rare to be obtained. The day of Hari (Ekādaśī) is a rare day of holy rites. Rare indeed is the water of Gaṅgā. Rare is a beloved mother on the Earth. Rare is the birth in a noble family. Rare is the beloved wife born of a good family. Rare is the charitable gift of gold. Rare is the facility to worship Hari. Rare is the initiation pertaining to Viṣṇu. Rare is the collection of Smṛti texts?

41-45A. Rare is the residence in the holy centre of Śaukara.* Rare is the opportunity to meditate on Hari; rare is the holy rite of keeping awake on the day of Viṣṇu; rare is the purification of the self (or getting honour to oneself); rare is the attainment of the birth of a son; rare is the holy water of Puṣkara; rare is the contact with virtuous eminent people; devotion is said to be rare; rare is the charitable gift of a Kapilā (tawny) cow; rare is the (facility to) set a blue (calf) free. O fair-faced lady, rare is the Śrāddha performed on Trayodaśī (Thirteenth day). Rare is the Earth (as an object of charitable gift). Rare is the observance of holy rite that destroys sins. O woman of sweet eyebrows, rare is the replica of cow made of gingelly seeds and given over to a Brāhmaṇa. O fair lady, rare is the bath with the embylic myrobalan. Rare is the day of Hari.

45B.-46. Rare indeed is bath in cold water at the auspicious time of the passage (Parva-kāla) of the moon, especially at the auspicious time of dawn in the month of Māgha. O queen, rare is the performance of a religious rite punctiliously in conformity to Śāstric injunctions.

47. Rare indeed is the wholesome diet and efficacious medicine that dispels sickness. Rare is the procedure along the path of scriptures.

48. Rare is the remembrance of Viṣṇu at the time of death, O fair-complexioned lady. Thus, O fair lady, carry out my words that protect Dharma.

*Mod. Soron on the Gaṅgā, 27 miles NE of Itah (U.P.). Viṣṇu in the Sūkara (Boar) form killed Hiraṇyākṣa here—DE 195.

49. O lady of beautiful limbs, of what advantage is the killing of my son to you ? It behoves you to be pleased. The worldly pleasures have been duly enjoyed. The kingdom has been made free of thorns.

50A. I have placed my foot on the heads of those (i.e. surpassed those) who protect Devas, cows and Brāhmaṇas.

50B-51. A. I will never injure with my hands my son who is the object of my destiny."

Mohinī said :

52-53. Dharmāṅgada is not my enemy, nor do I kill your son. I have told you at the outset, "Eat on the day of Hari". O king, rule over the earth as you please, for many years. I do not kill your son. My object of accomplishment lies in your taking food. O king, I have no interest in the death of your son.

54. O king, if the son is dear to you, may the food be taken on the day of Hari. O king, of what avail are these laments which are beyond the pale of Dharma.

55-56. Keep the truth assiduously. Carry out my word. "Dharmāṅgada who was standing in front, observed Mohinī, the lady with slender waist, speaking thus. After bowing to her he said. It is this (here). Take it. Do not entertain any fear or suspicion, O beautiful lady.

57-60. He drew out his stainless glistenting sword and placed it in front of the king. He placed himself too in front of the king and said with a steady resolve in truth and virtue.

Dharmāṅgada requested :

"O my father, delay should not be made by you in striking me down. O king, make my mother's words true. Keep up your promise. The Ātman should be protected even at the sacrifice of wealth, wives or sons.

To a king who is desirous of welfare, the progeny is for the purpose of preservation of Dharma. Death for your sake is the bestower of ever-lasting salvation on me. You too will attain the pure worlds in virtue of your keeping of your own promise.

61-62A. Eschew the deep overwhelming sorrow originating from killing your own son. O lord, (even if) this body is abandoned, it will lead to the creation of another body, that is devoid of all sorts of ailments and equal to that of Indra.

62B-64. Those who are killed for the cause of their fathers, or for their mothers, or for cows, Brāhmaṇas, young women, Earth, king, or the deities, or for the sake of their children or the handicapped, attain the excessively brilliant worlds. Hence enough of your worries and anxieties. Kill me with your excellent sword.

65. O leading king, stick to your vow. Do not take food on the day of Hari. O king, one may kill one's own son or wife for the sake of Dharma.

66. It is heard in the Vedic texts : A person (i.e. a king) who sits consecrated for the performance of horse-sacrifice may kill his son in that excellent sacrifice and no sin is incurred thereby.

67. O king, whatever, Mohinī, my mother, says must be carried out unhesitatingly by you.

68. O leading king, be pleased. Carry out the suggestions made by me, in regard to my own death. O king you will then release yourself from the terrible utterance of falsehood through the interference of Mohinī.

69. O king, as a result of the killing of your own son, your fame will be illuminated. Thanks to the splendour of your fame, your reputation and esteem will be very high and ever-lasting. O dear father, no doubt should be entertained in this matter."

CHAPTER THIRTYFOUR

The Visions of the Lord

Vasiṣṭha said :—

1-4. On hearing the words of his son, the king Rukmāṅgada glanced at Sandhyāvalī's face resembling a lotus and became glad. (It seemed as though her face urged) : "listening to the words of Mohinī, do not take food. Kill the boy born of your body. Do not take food. Rather kill your son". This importunity was evident in her face. In the meantime, the Lotus-eyed Lord (Viṣṇu) came there and stood in the sky but in an invisible state. He began to watch the courage and fortitude of the three persons—the heroic king, Sandhyāvalī and Dharmāṅgada. O leading king, the unsullied lord Viṣṇu having the colour of the cloud, seated himself on the Lord of birds viz. his vehicle Garuḍa.

5-9. When the words "Eat, Eat" were uttered by Mohinī, the king took up the stainless (bright) sword to kill his son Dharmāṅgada, With a delighted mind, he made obeisance to the Garuḍa-emblemed lord. On seeing his father armed with the sword, Dharmāṅgada bowed down to his parents and to the discus-bearing Lord without any feelings of sorrow, he looked at the face of his mother, O great king.*

Dharmāṅgada who was endowed with devotion to his father and who was superior to all in his devotion to his mother, kept his neck close to the ground. His neck resembled a conch-shell. It was tender with the lustre of gold. It was plump and it contained many lines. He placed his neck on the path of sword.

10. O king, (Māndhātā), when the son offered his neck with delight in the face that resembled the beautiful moon, and when the lord of the Earth (i.e. Rukmāṅgada) took up his sword, the entire Earth along with the mountains began to quake.

11. Immediately the ocean tides arose as if to submerge the three worlds. Hundreds of meteors fell on the Earth with violent gusts of wind and thunder-bolt's stroke from the middle of the sky.

Nṛpa-Puṅgavaḥ* in the text has no predicate, hence taken in the Voc. as Nṛpa-Puṅgava (Māndhātā) "O king" is repeated even out of context in this part of the NP.

12-14. Thinking (to herself) : "O the mission of the Devas has not been accomplished by me. My birth has been thus fruitless. It has been made so by the fate that had created the universe. My enchanting beauty has been only a fraud, since the food is not taken in by the king on the day of Hari—the day that dispels the fear of sins. In the Heaven, I will be treated as equal to grass.

He who has abundance of Sattva qualities will go along the path of salvation. But I, the sinner, will fall into the terrible hell."

15. O leading king, when the sword was lifted up by the king, Mohinī endowed with delusion over-came with swoon fell on the ground.

16-18. Shining with that sword, the king attempted to cut off the neck of his son Dharmāṅgada. When the courageous king Rukmāṅgada, with great delight, was to cut off his son's head alongwith the ear-rings the head that was beautiful, had the brilliance of the moon that was shining. But immediately the king was caught in his hand by Viṣṇu, the lord of the daughter of the Milk-ocean". I am pleased I am delighted. There is no doubt about this. O lord of the people, go to my region.

19-20. O king, establish on the Earth your fame that is worthy of being worshipped in the three worlds and that is white and pure. Set your foot on the head of Yama. O king, thereafter, accompanied by your beloved wife and son you go to my residence called after my body (i.e. Vaikuṇṭha)". The moment he was touched with the hand of the discus-bearing lord, the king became free from sins in the company of his wife and his son.

21-22. Approaching quickly, the noble-souled king entered the divine body of the lord, leaving off the Royal glory originating from the Earth abandoning the slaves, riches and treasury, elephants, horses, chariots, wives in the harem and the kinsmen. He became one with the body of Viṣṇu. Then a shower of flowers fell from the sky.

23. O king (Māndhātā), the large drums called Dundubhis were sounded by the delighted Siddhas, and the guardians of the divine world. The celestial ladies sang sweet songs and danced joyously.

24-26. The daughters of the Gandharvas were satisfied with the action of the king. The son of the sun (i.e Yama) too observed this wonderful phenomenon viz. the king entered the divine body of Viṣṇu accompanied by his wife and son after wiping off the writings of Yama. He placed all the people in the path leading to the world of Hari. The people followed the path pointed out by the king and were grateful to him. Yama became frightened again. He came to the four-faced lord Brahmā and spoke to him crying :- "O lord, I will not be a mere employee without the power to command. O lord of Devas, create another post for me. I shall do my best. Let not my baton of punishment be a thing of mere show."

CHAPTER THIRTYFIVE

Mohini incurs a cause

Yama said :

1. "O lord of the Devas; O lord of the universe ! O lord and preceptor of the mobile and immobile beings Mohinī has become unsuccessful like a barren woman in the matter of giving birth (to childern).

2. O Kuśa-emblemed one the entire world goes to Vaikuṇṭha along the path advocated by Rukmāṅgada. No one comes to me.

3. Although the lord of kings entered the body of the discus-bearing lord (Viṣṇu), the mind of all the living beings has not changed.

4. O grand-sire of the universe, after observing fast on the day of Viṣṇu, all men including young children, go to the greatest world with their sins dispelled.

5. Your daughter, Mohinī, the gentle lady is ashamed and has been in swoon. She is not coming near you because she is despised by the world. She does not even take food.

6. I have become jobless, what am I to do? Guide me." On hearing the words of Yama the lotus-seated deity said :

7-8A "We all shall go together to bring Mohinī to consciousness. After she has got up (regained normalcy) O son of the sun, we shall perform your task. There is no doubt about it. May excitement and agitation be eschewed.

8B-9. Then all the groups of Devas led by Indra and others accompanied by Brahmā, came down to the Earth in their aerial chariots as refulgent as the sun, in order to rouse that woman to consciousness O king (Māndhātā).

10-23. With their aerial chariots they surrounded the auspicious (beautiful)-faced lady (who was in a swoon then). She was devoid of brilliance and bliss. She resembled (the following) : a river the water of which had dried up, the night without the moon, a holy rite without the Ṛtvik priest, a man who is defeated in a battle, a flower that has faded, the dais where-from the celebration of the festival has ceased, the coral that has become white and colourless, the grain-field from-where the grains have been removed, the light that is dim, the churning rod O king, when the butter is taken out,* the speech that is not refined, the army that has been crushed (severely defeated), a young woman whose husband has been killed, the subjects deprived of food grains, the sacred-rite without Mantras, the war waged in violation of its prescribed code and without mercy, the Earth without a king, the king without a minister, O excellent king, the house devoid of wealth and food-grains, the pot without water, the lordly bull stuck in mire, the householder without his wife, the king banished from his kingdom; the physician whose medical treatment has failed, the tree whose branches have been cut, the house without fire, the cloud without water, the fire with plenty of smoke, the sun without his rays, the man who has gone out of his senses, the man who indulges in sexual intercourse on Parvan days (the new moon, the full moon days etc), a lover who is not satisfied with his beloved, (or with no favourable response from his beloved), the serpent deprived of its poison, the bird whose wings have been clipped, the Brāhmaṇa who has no means of sustenance; the garland that has been dropped down from the head, the mountain without metals and minerals, the scriptural text the script of which is distorted, the Ṛk and Yajus Mantra that is recited in wrong notes, the Sāman verse recited with a discordant note, a lake devoid of lotuses, the pathway overgrown with grasses, the lotus devoid of petals, knowledge (vitiated) by the feelings of egotism, the Puruṣa without Prakṛti, the Sāṅkhya philosophy minus the Tattvas (principles), and the Dharma (Virtue, piety) (tarnished) with arrogance, thus the heaven-dwellers saw Mohinī devoid of brilliance.

*Here the text is defective.

24-25. The Devas, on arrival, spoke to that fierce lady who was meditating (brooding) and lacking in enthusiasm; who was viewed by the people as one with (the stigma of) the murder of her son; who was criticised in cruel rebuking terms as a woman of bad conduct; who had been abandoned by the virtuous people; who had been stubborn in clinging to her own words and had been defrauded by those very words (?)

26. "O fair lady, do not feel aggrieved; you have put in manly efforts. Indeed, there is no question of wounded prestige in regard to the devotees of Viṣṇu.

27. O fawn-eyed lady, it is for the fulfilment of the work of the Devas that you have come (here). O fair lady, that is not fulfilled, now that he (king Rukmāṅgada) has attained absence of birth (i.e. salvation).

28-29. (Defective) O Mohinī, the Ekādaśī in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha has been previously observed by Rukmāṅgada (as a day of fast). It destroys all obstacles, and it is highly meritorious. O lady of large eyes, he observed the rite continuously for a year with very great strain. The fact that he did not swerve from truth is an act without a parallel.

30-31. A woman is described as the queen of obstacles (except in your case). The king decided on killing his son without reservation in mind, thought or speech. He cast off his affection and lifted his sword. The lord Viṣṇu observed that (the king's steadfastness had been proved) on that touch-stone.

32-33. For he was prepared to kill his son but he would not take food on the day of Hari. Hari (Viṣṇu) saw the real feelings of the king, his wife and his son. He was extremely pleased (with them) and so all the three were taken to his own abode along with their physical bodies like coals deposited (ignited) with fire, as their Karmans were exhausted.

34. O blessed and gentle lady, if the work is begun in earnest and performed assiduously but the fruit is not derived, what is your fault in it now ?

35. For this reason, O splendid lady, Devas have come as granters of boon. Whether it fructifies or not, one should engage oneself in an activity. One must not remain idle.

36-38. All his attendants must be properly maintained by a king, who wishes for piety. If, even after an honest effort, the servant is not able to accomplish the task, at least the remuneration must be paid. There may not be any gratuity. If a man (i.e. the master) does not give the (servant) living sustenance, he attains the sin of a cow-slaughter. There is no doubt about this. Hence, O fair lady, O excellently beautiful woman, what is desired by you must be given.

39-40A. (Defective) the task of heaven-dwellers had been to create the obstacle. Since you have endeavoured with sincerity what is it that the Devas will not do. But O fair-faced lady, along with you, they too have been frustrated by the brilliance of fast which they call the destroyer of obstacles."

40B-41. On being told thus by the Devas, Mohinī the enchantress of the worlds, who was bereft of her husband and so was cheerless and extremely distressed, spoke thus :- "Fie upon this life of mine, inasmuch as the entrusted work was not achieved.

42-43. O lords of the immortal beings, the path of the world of Yama has not been rendered thronging with people. The vow of the day of Hari was not violated. Food was not taken by that king. His own son was executed by that hero joyously. After placing his foot on my head, Rukmāṅgada has attained Viṣṇu.

44-47. He has attained Viṣṇu of immeasurable attributes, who is free from impurities, who is the support of pure ones, who is called Haṁsa, Śucipāda (of pure region), Vyoman (firmament), Praṇava (OM) the imperishable seed; who is formless, without any appearances; transcendental to the universe; perfectly pure and unsullied and of the nature of void (firmament), who is worthy of being meditated upon; who is beyond contemplation; whom they call both the Existent and the non-existent, who is neither far off nor close by; who is the great splendour and capable of being grasped only by the mind; who is identical with the universe and is called Puruṣa; who is abiding in the lotus of the heart; who is the embodiment of splendour and eternal. When the king has already dissolved himself in the lord, what benefit do I derive from life ?

48. The man who accepts his salary when the (appointed) work is not accomplished, goes definitely to the hell leaving off his master.

49. O heaven-dwellers, the servants who do not accomplish the tasks of their masters but still enjoy the salary, are reborn in the Earth as horses.

50. I am the destroyer of my husband as well as of my son. I am not successful in accomplishing the task. How can I accept the boon from you, the dwellers of Heaven ?"

The Devas promised :

51. "Speak out, O Mohinī, I [we] shall give what is desired by you in your heart of hearts. After helping you, we shall free ourselves from indebtedness to you.

52. O gentle lady, endeavour has been made by you in motivating the king to take food. O gentle lady, when such task has been accomplished, you deserve a share in the benefit."

53. O king (Māndhātā) ! When the Devas were speaking thus, the priest of the king (Rukmāṅgada) resplendent like fire, arrived there.

54. The sage who had been engaged in Prāṇāyāma, had been living under water. When the twelve-year-period of this penance was completed, he came out of the water.

55. O king (Māndhātā), as soon as he came out of water, the actions of Mohinī were heard by him. The infuriated prominent sage approached that group of the Devas.

56. He condemned all those Devas who were about to grant boons to Mohinī. "Fie upon this (woman) ? Fie upon this group of Devas ! Fie upon this action that should be called a sin.

57. The boon that is desired by Mohinī and that you are about to give her is detrimental to your very existence (or feeling of devotion about you) and promotes that growth of Puruṣārtha *(Kāma ?).

58. She who has killed the son of her husband (and her husband as well) is no better than one who has killed ten thousand persons. She is like a man-eating ogress of the meanst conduct (?). O Devas, even by immolating herself into a well-kindled fire, she cannot gain in purity.

59. These three have been considered equal to one-another by the ancient excellent Brāhmaṇas, Viz. Killing ten thousand persons; slaughter of the husband, and the slaughter committed without any purpose. O Devas, even by falling into a well-kindled fire, she cannot purify herself. She had with her nectar-like sweet words deluded Rukmāṅgada, and Dharmāṅgada. Rukmāṅgada killed his son and attained salvation accompanied by his beloved wife. She (Mohinī) has made the Earth bereft of its rulers, the protectors of men.

60. She cannot have her residence even in the hells, O Devas. How can she, who is intellectually deficient (and perverse) stay in heaven ? O Devas, nor can she stay near the king; she may not attain the eternal region of Viṣṇu.

61. Nowhere in the worlds can she have her residence since she has been defiled (and condemned) by the public censure. Fie upon the life of this lady of despicable activities who was always indulging in sinful actions, O Devas.

*The text puruṣārtha-prarohakaṁ is obscure as pra-rohaka means 'causing to grow' (MW. p. 689). How could the boon to Mohinī promote the germination of any Puruṣārtha except Kāma ?

62. After killing her husband, after taking away the life of her son, after murdering her co-wife who was just like a mother unto her and after destroying the entire Earth, O Devas, what sort of existence or fate will she attain ?

63-64A. (Defective) O Devas, this lady is a greater sinner (than others). She has destroyed the holy observances of Hari. She always advocated "May food be taken on the day of Hari." Downfall is suffered even by those who take food (to relish it and not) for the sustenance of life. (?)

64B-65. How can one get residence in heaven by propagating "May food be eaten on the Ekādaśī day. May a cow be killed along with Brāhmaṇas. May undrinkable liquors be drunk". Such is spoken by the ignorant. This is not the decision of the learned.

66. If out of ignorance the statement viż :— "May the food be taken on the day of Hari" is made, there is an expiation for it with a hundred Prāṇāyāmas.

67-68A. O heaven-dwellers, they can atone for it by observing fast on the Ekādaśī day, or by taking a bath in the lake Puṣkara when the star under which one is born is associated with it (?), or by touching the Deity (Viṣṇu) in the Boar form or by the worship of God.

68B-69A. This expiation has been recounted by the Brāhmaṇas if the words are uttered (as mentioned before). This lady was ruthlessly engaged in sin. She insisted on food being taken on the day of Viṣṇu which is difficult of performance to sinners.

69B-70. She did not pay heed to the words of her husband. She got the favourite son killed—the son who knew the fitting words, who abided by the advice (of elders) and who was engaged in activities beneficial to his mothers. This woman has violated the Dharma of Viṣṇu. She is burdened with many sins.

71. O lords of the Devas, she is not worthy of even being touched. How then can you bestow boons on her ? Indeed your excellencies are interested in persons endowed with the qualities of justice and piety.

72. Heaven-dwellers do not accord protection to sinners. Devas are remembered as the supporters of Virtue. And Virtue (Dharma) is enshrined in the Vedas.

73. Service unto the husband is glorified as the duty of woman by the Vedas. Whatever the husband says must be carried out unhesitatingly by her.

74. If the husband says that anything is white she must also say that it is white. If he says that it is black, she must also say that it is black. This is to be known as real Śuśrūṣā (service) and mere menial action of attendance is not Śuśrūṣā.

75-77. O Devas, her husband's orders were disobeyed by her with a view of her desire to establish her own command. Hence there is no doubt that Mohinī is the most sinful of all women. In order to achieve truthfulness, the king, who had been restrained by imprecations, said different kinds of words (i.e. offered various proposals). But this lady, the murdress of her son, did not like them. Hence the king relegated the sins to her and attained salvation. Thus she is indeed a woman of sinful physical body responsible for ten thousand murders.

78-83. This woman of evil activities had repudiated the king who was the donor of various charitable gifts; who was a patron of Brāhmaṇas; whose deity was Hari; who invariably delighted his subjects; who regularly observed fasts on the days of Hari; who cherished no indecent Love towards the wives of others; who had no desire for worldly pleasures; who eschewed his passionate love for the sake of others; who always performed sacrifices; who continuously maintained the suppression of the wicked ones on the Earth, and who was never overwhelmed by the seven terrible vices. How can she be worthy of being granted the boons ? O excellent Devas within a trice I shall reduce to ashes the person who is likely to side with her, whether he is a Deva or Dānava. O gods, if anyone endeavours to protect Mohinī, he incurs that sin which is fixed in Mohinī."

84. O king (Māndhātā), after saying this and taking up water in his hand, the eminent Brāhmaṇa furiously looked at the daughter of Brahmā and violently hurled it on her head. The water then shone like fire.

85. O king, no sooner was the water cast on her, her body blazed like a bundle of straw licked up by the flames of fire, even as the residents of heaven were (helplessly) looking on.

86. "O Lord, check your anger; check your anger," even as these words of the Devas rose up in the sky, that (violent) fire created by the utterance of the Brāhmaṇa reduced that young woman to ashes.

CHAPTER THIRTYSIX

Brahmā intercedes for Mohinī

Vasiṣṭha continued:

1. Recovering herself from her unconscious senseless condition, Mohinī went to the mansions of the Devas, (the Heaven). She was then rebuked by the messenger of the Devas, "You are a sinning woman and you have no place here.

2. O foolish woman, a habitual sinner, O woman indulging in censuring your own husband, you have no place for staying in the heaven, since you have violated the day of Hari (the Ekādaśī Vrata).

3-5. It is in the hell that the residence of those averse to Dharma is recommended." Vāyu said thus to her in cruel and unexpected words. Beating her with a baton, he pushed her to (the place of) torture. O king, beaten thus by the celestial messenger and completely over-powered by the Brahmadaṇḍa (the baton i.e. curse of a Brāhmaṇa), Mohinī reached the hell. There, at the behest of Dharma (i.e. Yama), she was beaten by the messengers for a long time.

6-7A. She was taken to hells in the order and made to fall therein. They rebuked her, "O sinful woman, your son Dharmāṅgada had been killed by you through the hands of your husband. Hence experience here the evil effects of the sinful actions perpetrated by you.

7B-8A. You are the experiencer of such fruit as this, inasmuch as you have brought about the death of your son who was a benefactor of the subjects, whose intellect was stable and firm, who was comparable to Mahendra and Varuṇa and who was the overlord of seven continents.

8B-9A. If one violently injures even an uncultured son, one becomes the murderer of a Brāhmaṇa. What then, O sinful woman, if one injures a son like Dharmāṅgada endowed with all piety ?"

9B-10A. O excellent king, she was thus expostulated by the messengers of lord Yama. She experienced one by one all the tortures suggested by that lord.

10B-11. Since she had already been struck down by Brahmadaṇḍa (the curse of a Brāhmaṇa). the tortures (or the hells) themselves became scorched due to their contact with her. They became unable to detain her (within themselves). Then, O king, those hells approached Dharmarāja.

12. They were afflicted due to the contact with her limbs. They were frightened. With palms joined in reverence, they said, "O Lord of the Devas, O Lord of the universe, O Dharmarāja, be merciful.

13. Take away this lady from the place of tortures immediately for the sake of our relief. O lord, at her very touch, we are being instantaneously reduced to ashes.

14. Hence banish her from all hells." On hearing their words, Dharmarāja was mnch surprised.

15-16A. Dharmar āja then commanded his messengers, "This woman is to be banished from my mansion. Tortures (in my hell) do not wish to have any contact with that sinner who is burned by a Brāhmaṇa's imprecation, whether such a sinner is a man or a woman or even a thief (?)

16B. Hence banish from here this excessively sinning woman, who had disobeyed her husband's words, who had caused the death of her son; who has destroyed Dharma and who is already struck by Brahmadaṇḍa. Even my body burns at her sight".

17-18. O king, thus commanded by Dharmarāja, those emissaries struck her with weapons and missiles and threw her out of Yama's abode.

19. Thereafter, O king, the distressed woman of delusion, Mohinī went to the nether-worlds. She was prevented (from entering the region) by the people there.

20. Extremely ashamed due to this, Mohinī, the daughter of Brahmā, went to her father's presence and intimated her own grief to him.

21. "O father, there is no place of rest for me in all the three worlds consisting of mobile and immobile beings. Wherever I go they throw me out after rebuking me.

22. I have been banished by the people of the world who struck me hard with weapons. It was at your behest that I had gone to Rukmāṅgada at the outset.

23-24A. (For the same reason) this sinful activity was indulged in by me though that course of action was despicable to the entire world. I had caused distress to my husband; I had got my son killed with sword; I had made Sandhyāvalī perturbed. Hence, O father, I am reduced to this plight.

24B-25A. O lord, there is no redemption at all now, for me who am the sinner. Particularly due to the curse of the Brāhmaṇa I have had to experience the misery.

25B-26. O father, the celestial river (Gaṅgā) is the bestower of liberation to those who have been struck down by the imprecation of a Brāhmaṇa, to those who have been burnt by fire, to those who are killed by a Cāṇḍāla, to those who are eaten by animals etc. and to those who have been struck dead by lightning.

27. If out of love for me, you, accompanied by gods, can propitiate and persuade the Brāhmaṇa who had cursed me, then alone any better state of existence can be brought about."

28-29. O king, when she said thus, Brahmā, the grandfather of the worlds, started from there accompanied by Śiva Indra, Dharma, Sun, Fire, and other lords of Devas, and sages. With Mohinī at the head (of deputation) he went to the presence of the Brāhmaṇa.

29B-30. After going there, O king, god Brahmā, surrounded by gods, paid obeisance to the Brāhmaṇa with great dignity, even though it is true that god Brahmā, the creator (of the universe), is the grandsire of the world and is worthy of respect and worship by all gods of whom Rudra was prominent.

31A-32A It was out of his affection for Mohinī (and for her consolation and pleasure) that god Brahmā got perplexed and presented his solution. O king, when a great work is at hand and if it is impossible to get it accomplished in the three worlds, the obeisance offered to a younger person is not censured.

32B-33. On seeing the creator of all the worlds arrived there alongwith the Devas, that Brāhmaṇa who was a master of the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas and who was absorbed in performing austerities, got up and bowed down to god Brahmā, those sages and the Devas.

34. With great devotion, he made all of them sit and eulogised the lotus-born deity. Then the lord and creator of the worlds, the preceptor of the universe became delighted.

35. 36A On behalf of Mohinī, they requested the Brāhmaṇa who had been honoured by the king before. "O dear one, O Brāhmaṇa of good conduct, O helper of the other world, O Ocean of mercy, please show some compassion. Be the bestower of salvation on Mohinī.

36B-38. O Brāhmaṇa, it was for deluding Rukmāṅgada that she had been deputed by me. She is my daughter. O bestower of honour, on seeing the world of Yama empty and Vaikuṇṭha full of unperturbed people this gentle lady, the benefactress of the Devas, was mentally created by me. O Brāhmaṇa, listen to what I am explaining to you.

39-40. The way of Dharma is very subtle. It brings about the welfare of the entire world. I had tested Rukmāṅgada through this lady who acted as the touch-stone. Thus along with his wife and the son, O Brāhmaṇa, he was enabled to attain Hari's abode through the unflinching and unobstructable devotion and the observance of fast on the day of Hari.

41-42. Yama's abode was made empty by the activity of wiping off the lines in the record of Citragupta—Yama's accountant of human deeds. O Brāhmaṇa sage, it is not proper on the part of a Kṣatriya to be critical and antagonistic to the Devas. Particularly to the Brāhmaṇa they render great assistance.

43. It (the place in Vaikuṇṭha) is attained neither by the knower of Sāṁkhya, nor through the Yoga system consisting of eightfold paths. It is to be attained only through devotion. O Brāhmaṇa, the husband who was the king (Rukmāṅgada), the son (Dharmāṅgada) and the cowife (Sandhyāvatī) were enabled to reach it.

44. What she had done against the crestjewel of a king who was extremely meritorious was a sin by which she was cursed and reduced to ashes by your imprecations.

45. This woman strove for the Devas, for the increase of worldly existence and for rendering help to the king. She is not selfish. O Brāhmaṇa, how can she incur disrespect ? If at all there is any disservice on her part, kindly forgive it.

46. Be merciful, resort to tranquillity and quiescence, the grinding of the pounded flour (i.e. superflous exertion) is not justifiable. This woman was struck down by your cursing her. Be pleased. Be the bestower of salvation. O Brāhmaṇa, if this is performed, this Mohinī will eschew her cruel grudge against you, who are worthy of being worshipped."

47. On being urged thus by the lotus-seated deity, he (the Brāhmaṇa) thought intelligently and abandoned his anger. Then the leading Brāhmaṇa said to the lord of the Devas (Brahmā) who created the body of Mohinī.

48. "O lord, inasmuch as your daughter Mohinī is burdened with so many sins, she has no place in this world teeming with living beings.

49. "It is out of my affection for you that I shall state before you what has been thought of by me after much critical deliberation in the case of Mohinī, and you are certainly worthy of respectful worship by me all the more.

50-53A O lord of Devas, I shall see that your words turn out to be true as well as those of mine. The affairs of the Devas and duties of Mohinī must go on. Hence let Mohinī stay in such a spot as has not been occupied by any living being. The Earth consisting of seven continents is inhabited fully by the mobile and immobile beings for ever. The nether-worlds are occupied by the Daityas and others. The firmament has been occupied by the birds etc., heaven is occupied by the meritorious beings. Hells are teeming with persons of sinful actions. The oceans have been full of the fish and other animals. Hence it is not possible for this woman to stay in these, as she is not worthy of being touched.

53B-54A Then, O exceellent king, Brahmā took counsel with the Devas and spoke to Mohinī. "Gentle lady there is no space anywhere for you".

45B-58. On hearing the words of her father Mohinī, the obedient lady who wanted to destroy the observance of the day of Hari bowed down to all and said :- "O leading Devas, I hereby join my palms in reverence to you all including the priest, and to the Devas who are the witness of the worlds. O Devas, with delighted heart, thanks to the hundred obeisances, what has been requested for should be granted to me. It is conducive to the pleasure of everyone. Salvation of all the sinners is achieved through the power of Ekādaśī. My purpose is to increase it further. I have enabled my husband, co-wife and the son to go to Vaikuṇṭha.

59-60. I shall stay behind in the world of Earth, the widow that I am. I shall stay there for your sake, so that, O bestowers of honour, the day of Hari associated with me may not become defiled. For the sake of gaining my own selfish end I request for this. Not otherwise. Kindly grant it."

CHAPTER THIRTYSEVEN

Mohinī regains her physical body

Mohinī said :

1-2A. "O Devas, there cannot be anything else so sanctifying as the Ekādaśī (Vrata). Even great sinners go to the abode of Hari, on being sanctified by it. It seems to me proper to have my abode in its vicinity. Let this proposal be considered."

Devas said :

2B-3.[1] O Mohinī, the Vedha (overlapping of the previous Tithi) at mid-night or at the Sunrise is conducive to the help of the Devas as ordained by Hari. The breaking of the fast on the Trayodaśī day is destructive of the benefit of the fast.

4. The eight days, remembered in the Āgamas (Scriptures), of the devotees of Viṣṇu as 'Mahādvādaśīs' are those days wherein Ekādaśi is also present. They are observed as the days of fast by the devotees of Viṣṇu.

5. This observance of Ekādaśī is different in regard to the noble souls, the followers of Viṣṇu. In both the fortnights, it is observed alike for three days together.

6. In the evening of the previous (i.e. Daśamī) day and in the morning of the following (i.e. Dvādaśī) day meal is missed. (Of course, both the meals are eschewed in the middle day i.e. Ekādaśī day). But if Ekādaśī is overlapped (by the previous Tithi), the observance of full fast is on the next day. The holy rite, in that case, should be performed on the Dvādaśī

1. VV. 2B-18 discuss the proper Tithi for observance of Ekādaśī. This topic has been treated in detail in the Pūrvārdha of the NP. Shorn of mythological paddings, it means that an Ekādaśī when affected by Aruṇodaya-Vedha should not be observed i.e. if the 10th Tithi, Daśamī, extends on a civil day beyond 56 ghaṭikās from sunrise and Ekādaśī follows and continues for the whole of the next day, there is Aruṇodaya-Vedha and such affected or penetrated (viddhā) Ekādaśī is not to be observed. This period of two muhūrtas before the sunrise (i.e. Aruṇodaya Vedha) is assigned to Mohinī for occupation and the merit of people observing Aruṇodaya-Viddhā Ekādaśī goes to Mohinī. (vv. 8-18 also V. 22).

The Smārtas (non-Vaiṣṇavas) however, are not governed by the doctrine of Aruṇodaya-Vedha.

day by fasting and even by eschewing water.

7. Those who are physically incapable of observing full fast can take water, vegetables, fruits, milk or the Naivedya offerings of Hari. In any case the quantity must not exceed a fourth of the usual diet.

8. O chaste lady, the Smārtas (those who follow Smṛtis) eschew the Ekādaśī that is overlapped (by Daśamī) at sunrise. Those who are devoid of any desire (from this Vrata) leave off (the Ekādaśī) that is overlapped by Daśamī even at midnight.

9. It is wellknown in all the worlds that the Daśamī Tithī belongs to Yama. O sinless lady, you must station yourself in its vicinity on the border.

10. O splendid lady, thanks to this, even the task of the Devas can be realised. Staying along the border of Daśamī, you will traverse along with the Sun and the Moon too.

11. In order to dispel your sins, you move about the various sacred places on the Earth. You can have the benefit of the rite of Ekādaśī within the period of time between Aruṇodaya (dawn) and sunrise.

12. If any one observes the holy rite of Ekādaśī on the day when it has been occupied by you, he will be the person assisting you, O beloved one of the Devas. The period of two Muhūrtas of the dawn should be known (as your period of occupancy).

13-14. The number of Muhūrtas of the day and of the night are remembered to be fifteen for each. They vary when the extent of time of the day and the night varies becoming short and long (by turns). This extent of time should be understood by the process of Trairāśika (Rule of Three).

15. You come (and occupy your place) after the thirteenth Muhūrta of the night. O lady of pure smiles, deriving the merit of those who observe fast on that day, be happy.

16-17 O Mohinī, the time marked by the early dawn has been assigned as the abode to you for the purpose of re-establishing Yama, to destroy the path to Vaikuṇṭha, to increase the number of heretics and to accumulate sins.

18. O splendid lady, enjoy the benefit of the merit of those persons who assiduously observe the holy rite of Ekādaśī on the day of your occupancy and overlapping. Be gracious unto this Brāhmaṇa (?)

19. Thus advised and guided by the lotus-seated deity (Brahmā) and others, Mohinī became much more delighted. She considered her life contented and blessed by the opportunity to resort to holy centers for wiping off her sins.

20. "Although my body had been reduced to ashes, this task of the Devas has been achieved. Although the body is reduced to a mere mass of ashes and consciousness of aerial nature (Liṅga-Śarīra) remains, the path made by the king is swept clean.

21. What has been stated by me when I was delighted has been carried out by myself." After thinking thus, the delighted lady bowed down to the Devas, who protected the earth as well as the priest.

22. For the delusion of the people, she stationed herself in the transition period of time of Daśamī (that is called Sūryavihīnā (devoid of the Sun or Aruṇodaya Vedha). She enjoys the whole day (?) in the form of Kṛcchrānta for the downfall into hell of men (?)

23-24. On seeing her staioned on the border (of his Daśamī Tithi) the son of Sun (Yama) became delighted as (was) evident from his face. He spoke these words :- "O lady of beautiful eyes, my re-establishment here, in this world, has been properly made by you. The sound of the drum placed on an elephant belonging to Rukmāṅgada has been silenced. (i.e. no longer do they announce the necessity of observing fast as before). Now all people place their faith only in the affairs they see.

25. If Daśamī touches Ekādaśi at the time of Sunrise what is called Sūryodaya Vedha it is always condemned. The sunrise that is not touched will be conducive to the fascination of men.

26-27. (Defective) That Daśamī day must be eschewed even if it extends to a fourth of the period and is also invisible (?) if enjoyment of the favourable Yoga is desired (?) O large-eyed lady, your name Mohinī, as people call you, is significant indeed. After deluding the people you get them recorded on the canvas (i.e. the record of their acts kept by Citragupta.)"

28A. After saying this, the son of Vivasvat (i.e. god Yama) bowed to the daughter of Brahmā. Delightfully, he went to the heavenly world along with the Devas holding his scribe, Citragupta by the hand.

28B-29. After the Devas had departed, Mohinī approached Brahmā, the lord of Devas and Asuras, and entreated him thus : O father, this priest is fiercely angry with me, O lord of the worlds, my body has been burnt by him. Do something whereby I shall regain my physical body.

30. By stationing myself on the border of Yama's Tithi, the universe has been deluded by me. O dear father, thanks to your power, Yama who had been formerly conquered by the king is now made victorious.

31. O dear father, now it is your duty that I should become one who am embodied. O lord of the universe, appease the Brāhmaṇa."

32. On hearing those words of Mohinī, god Brahmā the ordainer of the worlds, mollified the Brāhmaṇa once again for the sake of his daughter.

33. "O deer one, O Vasu, understand this that I speak which is beneficial to this lady. O blessed one, this is conducive to the benefit of all the worlds.

34. Out of anger, this Mohinī was reduced to ashes by you. She requests you for the restoration of her physical body once again. O bestower of honour, give commands for the same.

35. She is my daughter and your Yājyā (one on whose behalf you must perform Yajñas). O dear one, she has attained misfortune. This pitiable lady who has accomplished her task (assigned to her by me) must be protected by you.

36. O bestower of honour if with pure feelings you inform me, I shall, thereupon create her physical body again.

37. But she became a sinner inasmuch as she was antagonistic to Viṣṇu's day. O leading Brāhmaṇa may something be done immediately so that she is sanctified."

38. On hearing god Brahmā's words of request, the sacrificial priest (of Mohinī's family) delightfully passed orders for reunion of the physical body (after its creation) with (the jīva) of his Yājyā.

39. On hearing the words of the Brāhmaṇa, Brahmā, the grandfather of the worlds, sprinkled water from his waterpot on the ashes of the body of Mohinī.

40. When the ashes were sprinkled with water by Brahmā, the maker of the worlds, Mohinī was endowed with a physical body. After bowing down to her father, she humbly bowed down to Vasu, the priest and grasped his feet.

41. Then Vasu, the Yājaka (priest) of the king, became joyous. He spoke these words to (Mohinī) who was the wife of his Yājya (one on whose behalf he had to perform a Yajña), whose prowess was wellknown and who had been abandoned by her husband and son.

42. Vasu said:- "O gentle lady, anger has been abandoned by me at the instance of Brahmā. I shall facilitate your salvation by means of such rites as visiting holy centres and taking holy dips".

43. After saying this to Mohinī, the Brāhmaṇa joyously bowed down to Brahmā, the lord of the worlds, and the father of Mohinī, and bade goodbye to him.

44. Bidden farewell by Mohinī and Vasu out of affection Brahmā went to the world beyond darkness through the unmanifest path.

45-46. Vasu the excellent Brāhmaṇa who was the priest of Rukmāṅgada considered Mohinī worthy of being blessed and pondered. After meditating for a Muhūrta he understood the way to her salvation.[1]

1. This chapter serves as a background for the Tīrtha-Yātrā (Pilgrimage to holy places) section that follows.

THE NĀRADA-PURĀNA

PART V

CONTENTS

TRANSLATION AND NOTES

Part V

CHAPTERS

38.	The Greatness of the Gaṅgā	1747
39.	The Glory of Ablution in the Gaṅgā	1753
40.	The Fruit of Ablution in Different Holy Centres	1757
41.	The Procedure for Charitable Gifts	1763
42.	The Procedure for the Gift of Guḍa-dhenu	1770
43.	The Procedure of Worship of the Gaṅgā	1774
44.	The Greatness of Gayā	1787
45.	The Procedure of offering Piṇḍas in the Gayā-Yātrā	1797
46.	Importance of offering Piṇḍas at Gayā	1808
47.	The Glory of Gayā	1814
48.	The Greatness of Kāśī	1824
49.	Pilgrimage to Kāśī	1833
50.	The Glory of Kāśī	1839
51.	The Greatness of Kāśī (concluded)	1846
52.	The Greatness of Puruṣottama (Jagannātha of Puri)	1850
53.	The Greatness of Puruṣottama (contd.)	1859
54.	The Glory of Puruṣottama (contd.)	1865
55.	The Greatness of Puruṣottama (contd.)	1876
56.	The Greatness of Puruṣottama (contd.)	1876
57.	The Glory of Puruṣottama : The Procedure of Worship	1896
58.	The Creation of the Golden Egg	1902
59.	Puruṣottama Māhātmyam (Contd.)	1909
60.	Ablution of Deity	1913
61.	The Fruit of Pilgrimage to Puruṣottama Kṣetra	1920

62. The Greatness of Prayāga; the Procedure of Pilgrimage 1929
63. The Greatness of Prayāga (concluded) 1935
64. The Greatness of Kurukṣetra 1952
65. Pilgrimage to Kurukṣetra 1956
66. Glory of Gaṅgādvāra (or Haridvāra) 1969
67. The Greatness of Badarikāśrama 1975
68. The Legend of Kāmadā 1983
69. The Greatness of Kāmākṣā 1985
70. The Greatness of Prabhāsa 1989
71. The Greatness of Puṣkara 1998
72. The Power of Austerities of Gautama 2004
73. The Greatness of Tryambakeśvara 2008
74. The Glory of Gokarṇa 2024
75. The Greatness of Lakṣmaṇācala 2028
76. The Greatness of Setu 2035
77. Sanctity of the Tīrthas in Narmadā 2037
78. The Glory of Avanti 2040
79. The Greatness of Mathura 2045
80. The Glory of Vṛndāvana 2050
81. The Review of the Story of Vasu 2061
82. The Benefit of Listening to the Nārada Purāṇa 2066

CHAPTER THIRTYEIGHT

The greatness of the Gaṅgā[1]

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. O leading king, that Vasu who was engaged in what was beneficial to all the worlds, spoke these soft words to Mohinī, beloved of his Yājya (patron whose sacrifices Vasu performed).

Vasu said :

2. O Mohinī, listen. I shall narrate the characteristics of the holy places severally. On understanding them, the sinners can have the most excellent salvation instantaneously.

3. On the surface of the Earth, the most excellent of all the sacred places is the Gaṅgā. There is nothing else which is as destructive of sins as the Gaṅgā.

4. On hearing these words of Vasu, her own priest, Mohinī who had great respect for a holy dip in the Gaṅgā, bowed to him and said :

Mohinī said :

5. O holy sir, the most excellent Brāhmaṇa, now kindly recount the excellent greatness of the Gaṅgā, acknowledged by the Purāṇas.

6. After hearing the unequalled grandeur of the Gaṅgā that is destructive of sins, I shall go alongwith you, to take holy bath in that river that destroys all sins.

7. Those lands, countries, mountains and the hermitages are very holy if the sacred Gaṅgā is ever adjacent to them.

1. Though Gaṅgā is mentioned in the Nadī-Sūkta of the ṚV. X. 75. 5-6, it was in the age of Epics and Purāṇas that it came to be looked upon as the holiest of rivers. The Mbh. and other Purāṇas are vying with one another in singing the glory of the Gaṅgā (and borrowing such verses from each other). As this section of the NP. deals with pilgrimage to holy places, it is meet that it should start with the glory of the Gaṅgā.

8. On hearing those words of Mohinī, Vasu who was conversant with the Purāṇas recounted the greatness of the Gaṅgā that is destructive of sins.

Vasu said :

9. A creature (living soul) does not attain by means of austerities, celibacy, Yajñas or renunciation, that state of existence or salvation which it may derive after resorting to the Gaṅgā.

10. Those men also who commit sins in the early years of their lives but resort to the Gaṅgā during the later years, attain great salvation.

11. The man who stands on a single leg for a thousand years (by way of penance), and the man who takes his holy dip into the Gaṅgā for only a month, —these two attain equal benefits.

12. By way of penance a man may stand topsy-turvy for ten thousand Yugas. But, if a man stands on the Gaṅgā in any manner as he pleases he is superior to the former.

13. In the case of living beings there (in the world), whose minds are afflicted by misery and who are in search of salvation, there is no other place like the Gaṅgā.

14. The Gaṅgā may redeem per force those base men who are sinful on account of great and terrible sins. It will prevent them from going to the impure hell.

15. Those who always go near Gaṅgā that is liked even by the gods, are certainly on a par with the sages and the Devas including their king Indra.

16. On every occasion, the Gaṅgā is resorted to by the Devas including Indra, by sages and by human beings, for the sake of flourishing prosperity. The Gaṅgā has an immense cosmic form. It may sanctify even blind men, senseless men and the indigent ones.

17-19. O Mohinī, in the beginning of the dark half of the month, the Gaṅgā is present on Earth for ten days ending with the sacred Amāvāsyā day. From the first to the tenth of the bright half of the month, it is present in the nether-worlds by itself. Beginning with the eleventh day in the bright half and ending with the fifth day (in the dark half), she is always present in heaven for ten days.

20. In the Kṛtayuga all sacred places are alike. In the Tretā the Puṣkara lake is the greatest, in the Dvāpara Kurukṣetra is the holiest centre and in the Kali age the Gaṅgā is superior to all other holy places.[1]

21. In the Kali age, the holy centres and sacred rivers cast off (deposit) their prowess in the Gaṅgā naturally. But the divine Gaṅgā does not cast it off anywhere else.

22. Even those men who are habitually interested in sinful actions attain the greatest goal, even if they are touched with the wind blowing from a person wet with the drops of waters from the Gaṅgā.

23. There is no doubt that he who is Lord Viṣṇu, Janārdana, embodiment of consciousness and all-pervading himself assumes the liquid form, it is then called the Gaṅgā water.

24. The murderer of a Brāhmaṇa, the slayer of his preceptor, the slaughterer of a cow, the thief and the defiler of the preceptor's bed are sanctified by the waters of the Gaṅgā. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

25. The water of the Gaṅgā shall dispel one's sin committed till one's death, if it is used as it is in a holy centre, or if it is taken out elsewhere or if it is taken in hot or cold weather.

26. Ordinary water kept overnight is to be avoided. The leaf or flower petal kept overnight is to be avoided, but not so in the case of the water of the Gaṅgā or the leaf of Tulasī, the holy basil plant.

27. No one has the power to count the gold pieces or the jewels in mount Meru or to describe the extent of the special merits of the waters of the Gaṅgā.

28. Even if a man does not fulfil the procedure laid down for the performance of pilgrimage, he too shall benefit by it, thanks to the greatness of the waters of the Gaṅgā.

1. The same as Mbh. Vana 85.90. Also Kūrma I. 27.37 except for Kṛta-Yuga.

29. The drops of waters of the Gaṅgā are superior to many wish-yielding jewels, since they grant the devotees whatever benefit they desire.

30. Even if a person gargles once with the waters of the Gaṅgā devoutly, he enjoys in heaven the divine juices originating from the udders of the wish-yielding cow.

31. He who sprinkles the Gaṅgā water on the Śālagrāma stone, shines like the sun that dispels dense darkness at the time of rising.

32. There is no doubt that a man who is engulfed in different sins originating from (or committed by) mind, words, or body becomes purified on seeing the Gaṅgā.

33. He who always partakes of alms sprinkled with the Gaṅgā water, sheds off all sins like the serpent that casts off its slough.

34. Heaps of sinful vicious actions as big as the Himālayas or the Vindhya mountains perish through the waters of the Gaṅgā like misfortunes through devotion to Viṣṇu.

35. At the very moment when men devoutly enter the Gaṅgā for taking ablution, their sins of Brāhmaṇa slaughter etc. cry out 'Alas !' and disappear.

36. The man who continuously stays on the banks of the Gaṅgā, and who drinks the water of the Gaṅgā always shall be liberated from the sins accumulated before.

37. Verily, he who, resorting to the Gaṅgā, always stays there fearlessly, deserves to be worshipped by gods, mortals and great sages.

38. Of what avail is the Yoga with its eight ancillaries ? Of what use are the austerities ? Of what advantage are the sacrifices ? The residence on the banks of the Gaṅgā alone is superior to them all in every respect.

39. Why should you go in for many Yajñas, words of Japas, austerities and gifts of wealth ? For, the Gaṅgā that can be easily served and that bestows heavenly pleasures and salvation is present nearby.

40. By means of Yajñas, observances, restraints, charitable gifts and renunciation one does not attain that benefit which one attains by resorting to the Gaṅgā.

41. The benefit that a man derives at Prabhāsa by giving away a thousand cows when the sun is swallowed by Rāhu (i.e. at the time of solar eclipse), can be derived by taking bath in the Gaṅgā by a single day.

42. If a man is desirous of liberation, he must eschew other means and decisively stay happily on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Only then can he be the object of salvation.

43. In Vārāṇasī particularly, the Gaṅgā bestows liberation immediately. Every month, on the eighth or fourteenth day, it confers emancipation from Saṁsāra.

44-45a. The residence on the banks of the Gaṅgā as long as one lives, is the bestower of final beatitude. On the banks of the Gaṅgā, one obtains that benefit and happiness which is usually obtained after performing Kṛcchra rites or the Cāndrāyaṇa expiation always.

45b-46a. O daughter of Brahmā, even by hundreds of sacrifices it is not possible to obtain the benefit that one gets in half a day by being devoted to the service of Gaṅgā.

46b-47a. By staying on the banks of the Gaṅgā with devotion, one gets that benefit which is obtained by all these rites viz. Yajña, austerities, charitable gifts, Yaugic practice and recitation of the Vedic passages.

47b-48a. By staying on the bank of the Gaṅgā that merit is obtained which life-long Brahmacārins (those who have taken the vow of celibacy) get through truthful words and which those who perform Agnihotra get.

48b-49a. Devotion to the Gaṅgā certainly redeems infinite crores of families belonging to the mother, father, and wife from the ocean of worldly existence.

49b-50. The devotee of the Gaṅgā attains contentment, great power and prosperity, knowledge of truth, happiness of the soul and the acquisition of humility and good conduct. Only by resorting to the Gaṅgā does a man become contented and blessed.

51-52a. There is no doubt about this that even after death he will be its devotee and engrossed in devotion. The man who devoutly touches its waters and drinks them, obtains the means of salvation without any strain.

52b-53. These men rejoice in the presence of Śiva, viz. the man who gets initiated in the Yajñas; the man who drinks Soma juice every day;the man whose rites are always performed through the waters of the Gaṅgā. They eschew their bodies and rejoice in the presence of Śiva.

54. Just as Indra and other Devas imbibe the nectarine juice present in the moon and the sun, so also men drink the Gaṅgā water through their mouths.

55-56. By drinking a handful of the Gaṅgā water, one derives hundred times the merits of the gifts of virgins (in marriage), plots of lands, cooked rice, cows, gold and other metals, chariots, horses and elephants (all gifts being) duly devoutly performed.

57. A benefit more than what is glorified in the case of thousands of Cāndrāyaṇa observance, is obtained by drinking the waters of the Gaṅgā.

58. If one drinks a mouthful of the Gaṅgā water, one attains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. Salvation is within the grasp of that person who drinks the water of the Gaṅgā freely.

59. The water of the Sarasvatī becomes stale in three months; that of the Yamunā in seven months, that of the Narmadā in ten months and that of the Gaṅgā in a year.

60. If in the case of any dead person the obsequies and the water libations are not performed in accordance with the injunctions in the scriptures, they can have the subsequent benefit by casting the bones in the Gaṅgā.

61. Of the two—one performing a thousand Cāndrāyaṇa Vratas (vows) subjecting himself to bodily strain and the other drinking the Gaṅgā water as he pleases—it is the latter that excels the former.

62. He who sees, eulogises and bathes in the Gaṅgā and he who drinks water of the Gaṅgā, attains heavenly pleasures, pure knowledge, Yogic power and salvation.

63. He who drinks water of the Gaṅgā warmed by the rays of the sun gains merits. The drinking of the Gaṅgā water is superior to the partaking of barley grains soaked in cow's urine.

CHAPTER THIRTYNINE

The Glory of Ablution in the Gaṅgā

Vasu said :

1. "O Mohinī listen. I shall recount to you the meritorious benefit of seeing the Gaṅgā as mentioned in the Purāṇas by sages, the seers of the Truth.

2. Just as the serpents become devoid of poison at the sight of Tārkṣya (Garuḍa), so also one is liberated from sins at the sight of the Gaṅgā.

3. By seeing, touching and plunging into the Gaṅgā, a man redeems seven subsequent generations, seven earlier generations as well as other manes beyond them.

4. By seeing, touching, and drinking the waters of the Gaṅgā and by glorifying the name Gaṅgā, a man sanctifies hundreds and thousands of persons in his family.

5. The benefits originating from seeing the Gaṅgā are perfect knowledge, unequalled lordship and prowess, establishment of auspicious Āśramas (stages of life), longevity and renown.

6. By the mere sight of the Gaṅgā, all these (the following) perish viz.—the frivolousness of the sense-organs, vices, sins and ruthlessness.

7. Violence towards others, crookedness, looking at others' faults etc and the hypocrisy of men, perish by the mere sight of the Gaṅgā.

8. If a man wishes for the permanent unchanging region (Mokṣa) may he see (the Gaṅgā) frequently; may he touch it with devotion again and again.

9. By the sight of the Gaṅgā one attains the same merit as one gets elsewhere through the digging and construction of tanks, wells, lakes, watering sheds, asylums, etc.

10. By looking at the Gaṅgā with devotional feelings, one attains the same benefit as is obtained in visualizing the great Ātman.

11-12a. The great sages say that in the Kali age, by the mere sight of the Gaṅgā, a man obtains the same benefit as one obtains by resorting to taking bath in or touching (the sacred waters) in Naimiṣa, Kurukṣetra, Narmadā and Puṣkara.

12b-13a. Henceforth, O beautiful wife of the king, I shall recount to you the benefit of remembering the Gaṅgā as glorified in the Purāṇas.

13b-14a. Even when it is remembered from a far distance, the Gaṅgā uplifts people falling into the hell or sinking into the ocean of worldly existence and endowed with inauspicious Karmans.

14b-15a. Man who remembers the Gaṅgā from the distance of thousands of Yojanas away from it, attains the greatest salvation, although he may be a man of vicious activities.[1]

15b-16a. Through the remembrance of the Gaṅgā, the cage of multitudes of sins breaks into a thousand pieces like a mountain when struck with the thunderbolt.

16b-18a. He who always remembers the Gaṅgā while walking, standing, sleeping, meditating, waking, eating, laughing or crying becomes liberated from bondage.[2] Those who devoutly remember the Gaṅgā though stationed a thousand Yojanas away, and shout out "Gaṅgā, Gaṅgā" are released from sins.

18b-19a. Those who remember the Gaṅgā, those who are devotedly attached to the Gaṅgā are liberated wholly from great sins. There is no doubt in this.

19b-20a. These are the benefits of remembering the Gaṅgā viz. obtaining houses of variegated nature, different kinds of ornaments, women, absence of ailments, and plenty of riches.

20b-21a. The man who mentally remembers the Gaṅgā even while staying far off, certainly attains the benefit of observances of a thousand Cāndrāyaṇa rites.

21b-22. One who repeats the name "Gaṅgā, Gaṅgā" even when stationed a hundred Yojanas away, is liberated from all sins.[3] He goes to the world of Viṣṇu. By glorifying the

---

1. VP. II. 8. 121; Pd. P. VI. 8; Brahma 175.82 with slight variations.
2. The same as Skanda IV. 1. 27. 37.
3. Mt. P. 104.14.

Gaṅgā, he is liberated from sins. By seeing the Gaṅgā one derives auspiciousness.

23. By taking bath into the Gaṅgā and by drinking its water, a man sanctifies upto the seventh generation in his family. He sanctifies seven earlier generations, seven subsequent generations and seven generations beyond these.

24-25a. When glorified even casually, the Gaṅgā redeems persons. Even he who carelessly or with lack of faith mentions the name of the holy river Gaṅgā becomes the beneficiary of heavenly pleasures.

25b-26a. Whatever may be the plight one is in, even if one is devoid of all holy acts and rites, one attains auspicious goal and salvation merely by glorifying the Gaṅgā.

26b-27a. Even if he is a Brāhmaṇa-slayer, or the murderer of his preceptor or the slaughterer of a cow or one who is defiled by all sorts of sins, a man is liberated from sins by drinking the water of the Gaṅgā.

27b-28a. "When shall I see the Gaṅgā ? When shall I be able to take my bath in it ?" If a man desires earnestly like this, the Gaṅgā redeems a hundred families.

28b-30a. Henceforth, O gentle lady, I shall recount to you the meritorious benefit of ablution in the Gaṅgā. On hearing this, one is liberated from all sins. There is no doubt in this. O Mohinī, the sin of a person who takes his bath in the waters of the Gaṅgā perishes immediately. He will immediately acquire unprecedented merits.

30b-32a. The prosperity that is attained by those men of pure souls who take bath in the pure waters of the Gaṅgā is not obtained even by hundreds of sacrifices. Just as, on rising, the sun dispels dense darkness and shines brilliantly, so also one who is sprinkled with the water of the Gaṅgā dispels sins and shines brightly.

32b-33. O beautiful wife of the king, a man certainly derives the benefit of horse-sacrifice even with a single bath in the Gaṅgā, if it is taken in accordance with injunctions. By the mere ablution in the Gaṅgā, the sins of a man accumulated in many births, perish.

34. He becomes the object of merit immediately. Sins committed in other places perish on the banks of the Gaṅgā.

35. Sins committed on the banks of the Gaṅgā perish as a result of the bath in the Gaṅgā. One gets the merit of a horse-sacrifice by taking bath assiduously in the Gaṅgā by day or by night or during Sandhyā (twilight).

36-37a. One can take one's bath at home with the water taken from the Gaṅgā. There is no doubt in this that a man derives from bath in the Gaṅgā that benefit which one gets in all the holy centres and favourite temples.

37b-38. A man burdened with great sins or with all sins is liberated from all of them through bath in the Gaṅgā duly performed. There has never been a greater ablution than one in the Gaṅgā nor will it ever be.

39. Especially in the Kali yuga, the Gaṅgā dispels sins after destroying defects originating from lust, mentally, physically or verbally.

40-41a. By taking bath in Gaṅgā with great devotion, one rejoices in heaven like a god. The man who devotedly bathes in the Gaṅgā for a year, can stay in the world of Viṣṇu for a Kalpa.

41b-42. The man who takes bath in the Gaṅgā every day till his death is absolved of all sins. In the company of all the members of his family, he is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu and is blessed with all sorts of pleasures.

43-44a. He is honoured there for the period of two Parārdhas. No doubt need be entertained in this regard. He who continuously and daily takes bath in the Gaṅgā is a liberated soul during his life-time. When dead, he attains Viṣṇu's region.

44b-45. The merit of bath at midday is ten times that of bath in the morning. The bath in the evening has hundred times the merit. In the presence of Śiva the merit of the bath is infinite. The bath in the Gaṅgā excels even a crore of charitable gifts of tawny-coloured cows.

46. Wherever you perform ablution in it, the Gaṅgā yields the same benefit as the ablution at Kurukṣetra. It bestows more benefit when bathed at Haridvāra, Prayāga and at the place where it meets with the sea.[1]

47. These are the words of the sun. "O Gaṅgā those who take bath in your waters heated by my rays, pierce my disc and attain salvation."

48. Varuṇa said to Gaṅgā.

"He who glorifies you while taking bath in his house, goes to the heaven."

CHAPTER FORTY

The Fruit of Ablution in Different Holy Centres

Vasu said :

1. O woman of beautiful thighs, henceforth I shall recount to you the benefit of ablution in Gaṅgā on special occasions. Listen attentively.

2. The man who continuously takes bath in the Gaṅgā in the month of Māgha shall stay in the world of Indra (i.e. heaven) for a long time along with all the members of his family.

3-4. Thereafter, he goes to the city of god Brahmā and stays there for hundreds and crores of Kalpas. The man who continuously takes bath duly in the Gaṅgā for six months taking meals only once a day, or the man who takes bath once in the Gaṅgā during Uttarāyaṇa (northern transit of the sun) goes to Viṣṇu's region, redeeming hundred members of his family.

5. The man who takes bath in the waters of the Gaṅgā in the course of all the Saṅkrāntis (transits of the sun from one sign of the zodiac to another) goes to the abode of Viṣṇu, seated in chariot having the lustre of the sun.

1. Garuḍa I. 81-1-2, Pd. P. V. 60.120

6. There have been announced (in scriptures) special benefits (in taking baths) during the equinoxes and tropical transits. They know that the benefit of ablution in the Gaṅgā during the month of Kārttika is like that of performing a penance.

7. O Mohinī, the lotus-seated deity (god) Brahmā and others say that the holy dip in the Gaṅgā when the sun enters the Aries or on the full moon day in the month of Kārttika is superior to the holy bath during the month of Māgha.

8. Your father has stated that the benefit of ablution for the whole of the year is obtained if the bath is taken on the Akṣaya tithi (i.e. third day in the bright half of Vaiśākha), the month of Kārttika or the month of Vaiśākha.

9. O wife of my Yājya, the benefit obtained by taking bath in the course of the three months (i.e. Māgha, Kārttika and Vaiśākha) is the same as that of the bath in the Gaṅgā water on the Manvādi days and the Yugādi days (i.e. days marking the anniversary of Manvantaras and Yugas).

10. Rare indeed is a holy bath in the Gaṅgā when Śravaṇa constellation coincides with Dvādaśī, or Puṣya star is in conjunction with Aṣṭamī (eighth day) or the Ārdrā star is in conjunction with Caturdaśī (fourteenth day) of the lunar fortnight.

11. The full moon day in the month of Vaiśākha is highly meritorious; so also in the months of Kārttika and Māgha. Rare indeed are the new moon days in these months for the holy bath in the Gaṅgā.

12a. If the merit in all the Parvans is hundred-fold, that on the Aṣṭamī day in the dark half (of Bhādrapada) is a thousandfold.

12b-14. O Chaste lady, on the New Moon day and the eighth day in the dark half of the month of Māgha, there is a special hundredfold merit. There is the Ardhodaya Parva*

*According to the Mbh. quoted in the Nirṇaya Sindhu 211, when there is Śravaṇa Nakṣatra and Vyatīpāta yoga on the new Moon day of Pauṣa (accordin to Amānta reckoning) or Māgha (according to Pūrṇimānta on the New moon day of Māgha and when there is a slight deficiency (when one of the requirements for the Ardhodaya Parva is lacking), there is the Mahodaya Parva. The bath at Mahodaya Parva yields hundred-fold merits, whilst that at the time of the Ardhodaya Parva is stated as yielding a hundred thousand-fold benefit in merits. O gentle lady, if the bath is taken in the waters of the Gaṅgā during the eclipse of the sun or the moon, it yields high benefits. If the bath is taken in the months of Phālguna and Āṣāḍha, it has the benefit of ablution for three months.

15. If the bath is taken in the Gaṅgā devoutly, when the constellation under which one is born, occurs on the day, sins accumulated since one's birth are annihilated.

16. For taking ablutions in the Gaṅgā, rare indeed is the Yoga (specific astronomical period) called Vyatīpāta* on the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Māgha; so also is rare the Vaidhṛti Yoga especially on the Kṛṣṇāṣṭamī (the eighth day in the dark half of Bhādrapada.)

17-18a. If a man takes bath every day at dawn throughout the month of Māgha in accordance with the injunctions, he shall become Jātismara (one who can recall incidents of the previous births). He shall certainly become perfectly conversant with the scriptural topics and also free from ailments.

18b-20a. If a man willingly takes bath in the Gaṅgā during the days of transit, during the last days of the fortnights and during the eclipses of the sun and the moon, he shall attain the abode of Brahmā. The benefit of the (bath at the time of Lunar eclipse is a hundred thousand times and that at the reckoning which the NP follows), that is called Ardhodaya. When one of above requirements is absent it becames Mahodaya—Parva-Kriyā-sāra-Samuccaya, p. 30.

*There are two types of Vyatīpātas : (1) The one in the dark half is the New Moon day on Sunday, the moon being on the first quarter of any of the following Nakṣatras—Aśvinī, Śravaṇa, Dhaniṣṭhā, Āśleṣā. (ii) The second is on the 12th day, the day's Nakṣatra being Hasta, the planets Jupiter and Mars in the Leo and the Sun in the Aries.

_Vaidhṛti_ is the 27th Yoga similar to Vyatipāta, with a difference (vide Sūrya Siddhānta XI.1) time of the solar eclipse is ten times that. But if it is performed on the banks of the Gaṅgā, the benefit of the lunar eclipse is a crore times and that of the solar eclipse is ten times that.

20b-c. If the thirteenth day in the dark half of the month of Caitra accompanied by the constellation pertaining to Varuṇa viz. Śata-bhiṣaj is obtained in the Gaṅgā, it is their equal to hundreds of solar eclipses.

21. It was on the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, when the day of the week was Tuesday and the constellation was Hasta, that Gaṅgā descended to the mortal world. On that Tithi, Gaṅgā dispels sins. It yields merits hundred times those of horse sacrifices.

22. (The devotee must say thus) "O Gaṅgā, I have come on the day of Govinda Dvādaśī, dispel the multitudes of great sins that I have."

23-24. When the constellation is Maghā and it is the full moon day and the moon and Jupiter are in the same zodiac, that Tithi is stated to be great. If the day is obtained in the Gaṅgā (i.e. if the ablution in the Gaṅgā is possible on that day) it is on a par with hundreds of solar eclipses.

Henceforth, the benefit of the holy dip (in Tīrthas) in different lands is being mentioned :

25.[1] Bath in the Gaṅgā may be taken anywhere at random; it has ten times the benefit (if taken at) Kurukṣetra; in the place where it is associated with the Vindhya, it has hundred times the benefit of Kurukṣetra.

26-27. The Gaṅgā at the city of Kāśī has the merit hundred times than that of Vindhya. The Gaṅgā is difficult of access everywhere. In three places it is all the more so, viz. in Gaṅgādvāra, in Prayāga and at the place where it meets with the ocean. Those who take bath in these places go to heaven. Those who die here are not reborn. (i.e. attain Mokṣa)

28. Listen to the meritorious benefit of ablution in the Gaṅgā at Gaṅgādvāra, and Kuśāvarta. It is the same as that of seven Rājasūya sacrifices or two horse-sacrifices.

1. Mt. P. 106.54; Kūrma I. 37.54.

29. Learned men know that by residing there for half a month, one derives the benefit of six 'Viśvajit' sacrifices or that of the charitable gift of a hundred thousand cows.

30. By worshipping etc. Lord Viṣṇu at the excellent lake (Kuśāvarta) and god Rudra who abides at Kanakhala or by taking bath into the Gaṅgā at these places, one attains inexhaustible fund of merits.

31. O auspicious lady, listen. There is the highly meritorious holy centre named Śaukara wherein formerly Acyuta manifested himself in the form of a Divine Boar.

32. By visiting this holy centre and bathing therein a man attains the benefit of a hundred 'Agnicit' sacrifices (Agnihotras) or two Jyotiṣṭomas or a thousand Agniṣṭomas.

33. If a man takes bath there itself in the Tīrtha of Brahmā, he obtains the merit of ten thousand Jyotiṣṭomas and three-horse sacrifices.

34. O Mohinī, the Tīrtha (holy centre) named Kubjā is a pure one. All ailments perish here. So also the sins committed throughout life, perish there.

35. There is another Tīrtha here called Kāpila. O auspicious lady, a man who takes bath here derives a benefit equal to that of religious gift of eighty thousand Kapilā (tawny-coloured) cows.

36. By taking holy dip in Gaṅgā-Dvāra Kuśāvarta, Bilvaka, Nīlaparvata and in Kanakhala, a man shakes off his sins and attains heaven.

37. Thereafter is the holy centre designated as 'Pavitra'. It is the most excellent of all excellent Tīrthas. By taking holy dip there, a man obtains the benefit of two 'Viśvajit' sacrifices.

38. Thereafter is the holy centre called Veṇīrājya where the highly meritorious Sarayū joins the holy Gaṅgā like a sister meeting with her sister.

39. The Gaṅgā has become the celestial river inasmuch as it washes the right foot of Hari resembling a lotus. The Sarayū born of the Mānasa lake* originates from his left foot.

40. Worshipping Rudra or Viṣṇu in that holy centre the worshipper shall attain oneness with Viṣṇu. The holy dip there is glorified as yielding the benefit of five horse-sacrifices.

41. Thereafter is the holy centre Gaṇḍaka and (the river) Gaṇḍakī flow there (in the Gaṅgā). The charitable gift of a thousand cows and the holy dip there—both are equal.

42-44a. Thereafter is the holy centre Rāmatīrtha. Vaikuṇṭha is near it. Thereafter is the holy centre Somatīrtha, where sage Nakula worshipped and meditated on Śiva and attained a position as the attendant of Śiva. Then there is the meritorious holy centre Campaka where the Gaṅgā flows in a northerly direction. It is equal to Maṇikarṇikā and is destructive of great sins.

44b-45a. Thereafter is the holy centre Kalaśa. Sage Agastya born of a Kalaśa (pot) worshipped Rudra there and became an excellent sage.

45b-46a. The holy centre Somadvīpa is highly meritorious and is equal to Vārāṇasī. Soma (the moon) worshipped Īśa (Rudra)there and so was held by him on his head.

46b-47a. Viśvāmitra's sister, Satyavatī (?) mingled with the Gaṅgā there. The man who takes holy dip there, shall be the favourite guest of Indra.

47b-52a. O Mohinī, the man who takes holy dip in the great Tīrtha called Jahnuhrada certainly becomes the redeemer of twentyone generations of his family. Thereafter is the holy centre called Aditītīrtha. It was here tnat Aditi

*Though the Sarayū rises in the mountains of Kumaun, according to a legend in the Mbh-Anuśāsana 155.23-24, while the Gaṅgā was going to Kailāsa, Vasiṣṭha brought her to the Mānasa lake. But the Gaṅgā broke the bank of the lake and flowed forth. Hence it came to be known as the sarayū: 'saro bhinnas tayā nadyā sarayūḥ sā tato'bhavat | Ibid 24a.

Prob. at Jahnu's Āśrama at Sultangunj to the west of Bhagalpur B.C. Law (Historical Geography of Ancient India, p. 223.

bore Hari to Kaśyapa. O blessed lady, they say that the holy dip there is Mahodaya (having great rise) (i.e. yielding great results). Then there is the great holy centre called Śiloccaya where people perform penance and go to heaven. Even the grasses there, in view of their being supported by a number of holy centre attain heaven. Thereafter is the holy centre called Indrāṇī Tīrtha where Indrāṇī performed penance and obtained Indra as her husband. This holy centre must be resorted to like Prayāga. Then there is the holy centre Snātaka that yields merits. It was here that Viśvāmitra performed penance and although he was a Kṣatriya, he derived the status of a Brāhmaṇa sage by resorting to the holy centre.

52b-54. Then the holy centre Pradyumna Tīrtha is famous. By means of his penance here, Kāma became the son of Hari by the name Pradyumna. Thereafter is the holy centre Dakṣaprayāga which is very great and which yields great prosperity. This extends from Gaṅgā to Yamunā(?) By taking the holy dip therein ever-lasting merit is obtained as one gets at Prayāga.

CHAPTER FORTYONE

The Procedure for Charitable Gifts

Vasu said :

1. Henceforth, the benefit of the rites of taking bath etc. is being explained. O daughter of Brahmā and the beloved of the king, listen attentively.

2. Śivā (the auspicious river) redeems from the world a hundred thousand members of the families of those persons by whom the meritorious river Gaṅgā was at least once bathed into, with devotion.

3. O gentle lady, if the Sandhyā prayers are offered there, the merit thereof is a hundred thousand times more than the benefit when they are performed in ordinary places. The Gaṅgā who sanctifies the Brāhmaṇas is competent to do so.

4. If water-libations are offered to the Pitṛs by the sons endowed with faith, O Mohinī, they give rare and everlasting satisfaction to the manes.

5. The Pitṛs will stay in the heaven for as many thousand years as the number of gingelly seeds taken by their sons in the holy rite of the Pitṛs.

6. If the Pitṛs are propitiated with the auspicious waters of the Gaṅgā, all the Pitṛs staying in the worlds of the Pitṛs (including the ancestors of all other people) attain the greatest satisfaction.

7. O auspicious-faced lady, he who wishes his life to be fruitful and has a desire for progeny, must propitiate the Pitṛs and the Devas after approaching the Gaṅgā.

8. Those who are dead and have gone to miserable condition (in hell), and are propitiated by persons born in their families by means of Kuśa grass, gingelly seeds and the waters of the Gaṅgā, go to Hari's region.

9. It is the statement of god Brahmā that "those Pitṛs who are meritorious and who are stationed in the heaven attain salvation if they are propitiated with the waters of the Gaṅgā."

10. If the Pitṛs are propitiated for a month by means of Tarpaṇa[1] rites, and the offerings of balls of rice (Piṇḍas) in the Gaṅgā, all of them are highly delighted and they attain splendour of the sun.

11-13a. (Defective) They get into excellent aerial chariots and go over to the world of Brahmā, accompanied by the bevies of celestial ladies, bedecked in gold ornaments and jewels, embellished in clusters of pearls and beautified with garlands etc. and having the charming bodies of the Gandharvas. They will have divine pleasures and they will be honoured with

1. Tarpaṇa means satiating one by offering water. Manu (2. 176) has prescribed daily Tarpaṇa of gods, sages and Pitṛs (ancestors). Tarpaṇa is both a part of bath as well as of Brahma-Yajña. It is to be performed with both the hands according to one's particular Śākhā of the Vedas. (for details vide HD. II. pp. 689-95.)

the pleasing sounds of flutes, lutes, drums, conchs, Mṛdaṅgas and other instruments.

13b-14a. The man who takes bath in the Gaṅgā every day and worships the Liṅga of god Śiva certainly attains the greatest liberation, even in a single birth.

14b-15a. Agni-Hotras, Vedas and Yajñas with sumptuous monetary gifts are not equal to even a hundred millionth part of the worship of the Liṅga in the Gaṅgā.

15b-16a. If one sprinkles with the waters of the Gaṅgā (directing the act to the Pitṛs or the Devas, in view of his Pitṛs, they will be pleased and satisfied instantaneously even if they are in the hell.

16b-18a. The waters of the copper-pots are ten times better than the waters of the mud-pots for the holy ablution. The merit in silver vessels is hundred times better and that of gold vessels is remembered to be crore times better. Similarly, in the cases of Arghya, Naivedya, and oblations and worships the benefit goes on increasing due to the qualities of the vessels used.

18b-19a. Being affluent, if one does not extend the paraphernalia of worship due to delusion, he does not attain the benefit of those respective rites. He is shouted down as Devadrohī (inimical to God).

19b-20. The sight of the Devas is meritorious; touching them is better than seeing; worshipping is more excellent than touching. Beyond this is the ablution with ghee. Learned men say that ablution with the waters of the Gaṅgā is equal to the ablution with ghee.

21-22b. By offering Arghya even once to the deities alongwith one's own Pitṛs, a man shall attain heavenly pleasures in the company of his sons and grandsons.—the Arghya, however, shall consist of special articles of worship alongwith the Gaṅgā water, in a copper vessel of the capacity of a Prastha according to the reckoning in the Magadha land.

22c-23. The constituents of the Arghya to the sun are eight viz—water, milk, ends of Kuśa grass, ghee, curds, honey, red Karavīra flowers and red sandal paste.

24-25. An excellent man must instal the idols of Viṣṇu, Śiva, sun, Durgā and Brahmā on the banks of the Gaṅgā. According to his ability he must construct shrines too for them. The benefit of constructing these here is crores and crores of times more than that of erecting them in other holy centres.

26-27. According to one's ability one must make Liṅgas having all special characteristics, out of the clay found on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Every day he must instal them, worship them with Mantras, leaves, flowers etc. according to his ability and finally cast them into the Gaṅgā. The benefit of these activities is endless.

28. If an excellent man devoutly performs the Japa of eight-syllabled Mantra i.e. Oṁ Namo Nārāyaṇāya (Om, obeisance unto Nārāyaṇa) in the Gaṅgā that bestows bliss on everyone, liberation is within his reach.

29. All the Siddhis wait upon the person who observes rules and restraints and performs Japa of the Mantra "Oṁ namo Nārāyaṇāya", for six months.

30. He who performs Japa of the Mantra "Namaḥ Śivāya" (Obeisance to Śiva) alongwith the Oṁkāra, in accordance with the injunction, for two million and four hundred thousand times, shall become Śaṅkara himself.

31. There is no doubt that the five-syllabled Mantra—Namaḥ Śivāya—is highly efficacious and is Śiva himself. By performing its Japa whether one is unholy or holy, one becomes free from sins.

32. If the Gaṅgā is worshipped, the deities too are worshipped. Hence, one shall assiduously worship the celestial river.

33-35. One shall meditate on the Gaṅgā as follows :- She has four arms and three eyes. She is splendid in all limbs; she holds the jewelled pot, white lotus and the gestures of granting boons and fearlessness with her four arms. She is clad in white garments; she is bedecked in pearls and jewels; she is pleased; her face is splendid and her lotus-like heart melts with pity; she has flooded the entire surface of the Earth with nectarine juice and is ever bowed to by the three worlds.[1] One who

1. This description is instructive to have a mental picture of the Gaṅgā while meditating as well as making her idol.

meditates on the Gaṅgā thus and worships her shall be meritorious.

36. He who worships her continuously even for half a month shall be equal to a Deva. The benefit will be more if the duration of worship is more.

37. It was on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Vaiśākha that the Gaṅgā was formerly drunk up by Jahnu out of anger, and cast off later on through the right ear.

38. O splendid-faced lady, one should worship the divine Gaṅgā, the girdle of the firmament, on that day or on the Akṣayatṛtīyā day or in the month of Vaiśākha or Kārttika.

39. After keeping awake at night, the devotee shall worship Viṣṇu, Gaṅgā and Śiva with feelings of great devotion, by means of cooked barley grains and gingelly seeds.

40-42a. Similarly, the following articles too shall be used in worship viz.—fragrant flowers, saffron, Agallochum, sandal paste, the leaves of Tulasī, Bilva etc., the fruits of Mātuluṅga (citron-like fruit,) etc, incense, lights, Naivedya (food) offerings etc. Their quantity and variety must be befitting one's affluence and status. He will be going to the world of Viṣṇu, riding on a divine aerial chariot. He will be honoured there for hundreds, thousands and crores of Kalpas.

42b-43. Thereafter, he will return to the Earth and become a virtuous king. He will be endowed with comely features and good conduct. He will enjoy different kinds of pleasures. On death he will have perfect knowledge and shall attain Absorption in Śiva.

44. Whether it is Yajña, or charitable gift, penance or Japa, Śrāddha or the worship of the gods, everything performed in (i.e. on the bank of) the Gaṅgā yields benefits crores and crores of times.

45. Listen to the merit of that person who makes a charitable gift of a cow of ghee (?) on the day of Akṣaya Tṛtīyā on the banks of the Gaṅgā in accordance with the injunctions.

46-48. For thousands and crores of Kalpas, for hundreds and crores of Kalpas, he will be honoured in the world of Brahmā alongwith his ancestors. He will be going there in an aerial chariot, variously bedecked in gold and jewels and embellished with figures of swans. He will be as refulgent as a thousand suns. He will be blessed with all cherished desires. Thereafter he is born as a Brāhmaṇa endowed with much wealth on the banks of Gaṅgā. Undoubtedly he will become a knower of the Brahman after death and attain salvation.

49. Similarly, he who makes a charitable gift of a cow duly, is honoured in the heavenly world for as many years as there are hairs on the body of the cow.

50. Afterwards, he is born in a family richly endowed with wealth and foodgrains, full of jewels, gold and plots of lands and possessing good conduct, learning and fame.

51. No doubt need be entertained in this regard that he will enjoy extensive pleasures, that he will be blessed with sons and grandsons and that he will be attaining final emancipation from Saṁsāra.

52. If a Kapilā (tawny-coloured) cow is duly given to a person who has mastered the Vedas, he leads all his ancestors stationed in the hell on to the heaven.

53. He who gives a plot of land on the Gaṅgā, extending to a Nivartana (i.e. about two hundred and ten hands) excels Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva for as many years as there are particles of dust on that plot of land.

54-57. He is reborn on the Earth. He shall become the lord of seven continents. He will be awakened after sleep by means of musical sounds, drums, conchs, etc., songs and instrumental music as well as eulogies of the Māgadhas (bards). He will attain all sorts of pleasures. He will be engrossed in all holy religious acts. He will take all those ancestors detained in the hell, on to the heaven, and will liberate those who are in heaven. O Mohinī, he will derive perfect spiritual knowledge himself. In the end, with the sword of perfect knowledge, he will cut off Avidyā (Ignorance) consisting of five knots. Attaining the greatest detachment, he will realise the greatest Brahman.

58. Each rod is seven hands long. Thirty such rods make a Nivartana. Two thirds of this constitute Gocarma measure. Vidhi (Brahmā) himself has mentioned this measurement.

59. If anyone gives a village on the bank of the Gaṅgā to Brāhmaṇas, it is conducive to the delight of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Durgā and the sun-god.

60-62a. The giver of the village attains thousand times the benefit mentioned in the case of all charitable gifts, all Yajñas, all penances, holy rites and merits. He will be joyously eulogised by the Devas and others. He will be sporting about in an aerial chariot as refulgent as crores of suns in the city pertaining to Viṣṇu (Vaikuṇṭha) or to Śaṅkara (Kailāsa). He stays there for as many years as there are dust particles in the plot of land. He is then reborn in the family of Yogins, endowed with Aṇimā (ability to be atomic in size) and other supernormal powers.

62b-66a. O gentle lady, he who gives sixteen Māṣas of gold to a leading Brāhmaṇa on the Akṣaya-Tṛtīyā day is worshipped in all the worlds. Thanks to the charitable gift of cooked food, one attains Viṣṇu's world; thanks to the gift of gingelly seeds, one attains Śiva's world; by giving jewels, one attains Brahmā's world; Indra's world by giving cow and gold; the world of the Gandharvas by giving gold and garments; renown by giving away a virgin in marriage. He shall attain salvation-yielding knowledge through learning, and realise the pure unsullied Being.

66b-72. I shall succinctly mention the merit attained by a person who plants a big park on the banks of the Gaṅgā with the following trees viz. plantain trees, coconut trees, wood apple trees, Aśoka, Campaka jack trees, Bilva trees, Kadamba trees, holy fig trees, Pāṭala trees, mango trees, palmyras, oranges, and other trees. After making an image also therein bedecked in flowers such as Jāti, Vijaya (?) and Pāṭala he shall dedicate it to Śiva or Viṣṇu or Durgā or the sun god. With great devotion he must provide it with all necessary objects. They will stay in those worlds for as many thousands of Kalpas as there are flowers, roots, fruits and seeds of various kinds.

CHAPTER FORTYTWO

The Procedure for the Gift of Guḍa-dhenu[1]

Mohinī said :

1. I am blessed. I am contented. My life is successful, since the excellent greatness of the Gaṅgā has been heard from your lotus-like mouth.

2. There is no other sacred river equal to the Gaṅgā on the surface of the Earth. The merit accruing from the sight etc. of that river has been described in this manner.

3. O leading Brāhmaṇa, I have been always your devotee. In due order, mention the procedure of the gift of Guḍadhenu (a cow made of Jaggery) etc.

Vasiṣṭha said :

4. On hearing those words of Mohinī, Vasu, her priest, who knew the principles and real meanings of the Vedas and Āgamas said smilingly.

Vasu said :

5. O Mohinī, listen. I shall recount to you what has been asked by you viz. the procedure for the gift of the cow made of jaggery etc. as glorified and prescribed in the scriptures.

1. Although the chapter is captioned as Guḍa-dhenu (dāna) vidhi, 'The procedure for the gift of the (replica of the) cow made of jaggery', it prescribes some thirteen kinds of articles (some liquids) to be presented as 'cows'. This chapter is called Guḍa-dhenu-vidhi as jaggery is the first in the list of such articles representing cows. vide VV. 22-25 below. The Mt. P. Ch. 81 and AP. 212-10-34 endorse the procedure of the gift (dāna) of guḍa-dhenu which is broadly thus :

A black-antelope-skin four cubits in length is to be spread over-ground smeared with cow-dung and overstrewn with darbha grass, with the neck-portion of the skin to the east and a smaller skin symbolic of the calf is also to be spread. The jaggery-cow should be of the weight of 4 or 2 or 1 Bhāra and the calf to be proportionately of one quarter of the cow's weight depending on the affluence of the donor. vide VV. 6-20 below for the detailed procedure of gifting the jaggery-cow. As usual the cow is identified with the Lakṣmī of all deities. V. 20 states that the above procedure is to be followed in gifting other articles as 'cows'.

6. The ground must be smeared with cow-dung, and Kuśa grass must be assiduously spread over it. Over it a deer skin measuring four Hastas (hands) must be placed with the neck (portion) directed towards the east.

7-9a. The replica of the cow shall be so made that its face is turned towards the East and the calf is near the leg on the northern side (i.e. the left side). In the most excellent Guḍadhenu four Bhāras (special weight of 3000 Palas) of jaggery must be used, and the calf is made with a Bhāra of Jaggery. The middling replica of the cow is to be made with two Bhāras of jaggery. The calf must be made with half a Bhāra of jaggery. The lowest type of Guḍadhenu is made of one Bhāra of Jaggery (1 Bhāra = 200 Palas). The calf shall then be made with a fourth of it. These replicas are made in accordance with the wealth of the household.

9b-10. A person who is affluent enough to make the earlier type of replica but prepares a latter type of replica, is a person of confused mind. He will not have the excellent future benefit. Both the cow and the calf made of jaggery shall be covered with a soft white cloth.

11. Oyster shells are to be used for their ears. Sugarcane stems for the legs, pure pearls for their eyes; white threads for their sinews and veins and white plants for their dewlaps.

12. The knots on their backs shall be represented by a copper pot; the hair by means of white chowries (tail of the antelope called Camara), corals shall be studded to their feet and butter shall represent the udders.

13. There must be a bell metal vessel for the purpose of milking into. The pupils of the eyes shall be represented by a sapphire gem; the two horns must be bedecked in gold; the hoofs must be of pure silver.

14. Many kinds of fruits (must be given along with the cow). A small case of scents shall represent the snout. After making (the cow and the calf) thus, the devotee shall worship them with incense and lights. The following prayer shall be repeated :

15. "May the Lakṣmī of all living beings, may goddess Lakṣmī of the Devas stationed in the form of a cow, give me peace and calmness.

16. May the beloved wife of Śaṅkara stationed in the bodies of the Rudras, may the goddess in the form of a cow dispel my sin.

17. May that Laksmī stationed on the chest of Viṣṇu, may that Lakṣmī in the form of Svāhā (wife of the fire god), may the Śakti of the moon, the sun and Indra and which is in the form of the cow be conducive to prosperity.

18. May that Lakṣmī of the four-faced deity, may that Lakṣmī of Kubera, may that Laksmī of the guardians of the worlds, may this cow be the bestower of boons on me.

19. May that Svadhā of the chiefs of the Pitṛs, may that Svāhā of the partakers of Yajña, may this cow that dispels sins grant peace unto me."

20. After repeating this Mantra the devotee should dedicate the cow to the Brāhmaṇa. This is the procedure cited in the case of all articles to be given as cows.

21. O Mohinī, listen. I shall describe the nature as laid down in the scriptures, of all those ten kinds of cow glorified as destroyers of sins.

22-24a. The first is the cow made of jaggery, the next one is the cow of ghee; the third is the cow of gingelly seeds; the fourth is that named after the water ; the fifth shall be the cow of milk; the sixth is made of honey; the seventh the cow of sugar ; the eighth shall be the cow of curds; the ninth is the cow of jewels, and the tenth is the one in its own form (the real form).[1]

24b-25. For the cows in the form of liquids, pots shall be used and for others the masses and heaps of the articles concerned. Some wise men desire to include gold (cows) also among these. Some great sages recommend cows of fresh butter as well as of oil.

26. This alone is the procedure. These alone are the articles facilitating the completion of the holy rite along with the Mantras and invocations in the different Parvans for ever.

1. These verses list the names of the articles to be gifted as 'cows'. The list is common to Mt. P. 81. 18-19 and AP. 212.11-12. But the NP adds 'gold', fresh butter and oil as additional articles for cow (v. 25) out of which 'gold' and 'butter' are recommended in the Mt. P. 81. 21 which include Ratna-dhenu (jewelled cow) as well.

27. They must be given as gifts in accordane with one's faith. They yield worldly pleasures and liberation. They accord the same benefit as mantras. They are auspicious, removers of all sins.

28-29. The cow of jaggery etc. must be given by persons endowed with devotion and faith during tropical and equinotical transits of the sun, on the holy occasions of Vyatīpāta, during the anniversaries of the beginnings of the Yugas and Manvantaras, and during the special occasions like eclipses etc.[1] They may be given in holy centres, in one's own house, or particularly on the banks of the Gaṅgā.

30-31. After making this gift of a cow to a leading Brāhmaṇa in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee shall circumambulate the Brāhmaṇa and please the Ṛtviks with monetary gifts. He shall make obeisance to them and bid them farewel. Thereafter, with great concentration and purity of mind, he should worship the Gaṅgā duly.

32-36. He must visit the goddess of divine forms assuming the eight physical bodies, with a Prastha-measure of Śālī rice grains and two Prasthas of milk. The devotee should make the milk pudding. He must add honey and ghee a pala of each with devotional feelings. He should then cast off that milk pudding into the Gaṅgā along with sweet-meats and ring-like pies, half a Guñjā weight of gold and silver, sandal paste, agollochum, camphor, saffron, aromatic resin, Bilva leaves, Dūrvā grass, Rocanā (yellow pigment), white sandal, blue lotuses and other fragrant flowers according to his ability. He must be fully devout then.

37-38. O blessed lady, he must respect this Mantra mentioned in the Purāṇa viz- "Obeisance, obeisance to the Gaṅgā. to Nārāyaṇa and to Śiva." O Mohinī, this alone is the procedure. Every month, on the New moon day, and on the full moon day,

1. The days for giving a jaggery-cow are the same as in the case of other dānas

Ayane viṣuve caiva ṣaḍaśīti-mukheṣu ca /
Candra-Sūryoparāge ca dattam akṣayam ucyate //,

Mbh. Vana. 200.125

this must be observed in the morning by persons, with great concentration.

39-41. With great devotion and mental joy, the man must worship thus in accordance with his ability, for the period of a year. He must take only a small quantity of food and that too only Haviṣya) (cooked rice offerings soaked in ghee). He must observe the vow of celibacy by day and by night. O Mohinī, by observing this strictly at the end of a year, the Gaṅgā, assuming divine form, wearing heavenly garlands and bedecked in divine jewels shall reveal herself to him personally. She will stand personally in front of him and grant him boons.

42. O splendid lady ! After visualizing with his own eyes, the actual manifestation of the divine form of the Gaṅgā before him, the man shall become quite contented and blessed.

43. Whatever desires he cherishes, he accomplishes them all. If he be devoid of any desire, he will attain the final beatitude in this very existence.

44. Thus the procedure of the worship of the Gaṅgā alongwith that of the gift of cow made of jaggery, about which you asked me, has been recounted by me completely. It is a holy rite that brings about salvation. This observance lasts for a year, and it yields satisfaction to the lord of Śrī (Viṣṇu).

CHAPTER FORTYTHREE

The Procedure af Worship of the Gaṅgā

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. O leading king, on hearing the words of Vasu indicating the greatness of the Gaṅgā, Mohinī once again asked her Brāhmaṇa priest.

Mohinī said :

2. O Brāhmaṇa, everything auspicious, like the gift of a cow etc. has been heard by me. Now I wish to hear the excellent Gaṅgāvrata (holy observance pertaining to the Gaṅgā).

3. O Brāhmaṇa, O omniscient one, tell me what is the benefit of the worship of the Gaṅgā, etc. or its installation there ? I seek refuge in you.

4. You alone are the bestower of salvation to me who am abandoned by my kinsmen. O Prominent one among the knowers or the learned, I am bereaved of my husband, nor have I any son.

5. I have sought refuge in you giving full credence and weight to the words of my father. Hence, holy sir, kindly narrate to me the way of propitiation of the deity along with the glorification of the Gaṅgā on hearing which exery one is absolved of his sins. I have bowed down to you.

Vasiṣṭha said :

6. O king, on hearing the words of Mohinī, Vasu, the dignified Brāhmaṇa, the foremost among the knowers of the Vedas, honoured Mohinī and said :

Vasu said :

7-8a. "O gentle, lady, you have asked me pertinently, with the desire for the benefit of all the worlds. (I shall tell you) the greatness of the Gaṅgā completely. It is destructive of great sins.

8b-9a. Formerly, while residing on the bank of the Gaṅgā this was narrated out of mercy by the bull-bannered god Śiva when he was lovingly asked by his consort goddess Pārvatī.

9b-10. Food offering is taken in the forenoon by the Devas and at midday by the sages; in the afternoon by the Pitṛs and at night by the Guhyakas and others. It is excellent to take food at night after going beyond all other periods of times.

11. Begging alms is more excellent than observing fast. Taking unsolicited food is better than begging for alms. Taking food at night* is better than taking unsolicited food. Hence, one shall take food at night (when stars appear in the sky).

Nakta* is mainly the time when the stars appear in the sky—Hemādri on Kāla, p. 114.

12. The devotee regularly practising Nakta (acceptance of food after appearance of stars in the evening) shall observe six things viz. partaking of Haviṣya, ablution, truthfulness, lightness of deity, holy rites in the fire, and sleeping below* (on the bare ground).

13-14. The man who regularly practises this observance of Nakta shall do so in the month of Māgha on the bank of the Gaṅgā. If he takes it near a Śiva temple he shall take Kṛśara with ghee. He shall offer Kṛśarānna as Naivedya (food offering) to Śiva. Observing Kāṣṭamauna (the silence of a log of wood), he shall take food and avoid over-indulgence of the tongue.

15. He shall take food in the leafy cups of Palāśa tree. Conquering the sense-organs, he shall remember Śiva. He shall offer separate balls of rice to Dharmarāja and the goddess (Pārvatī).

16-17. On the Caturdaśī (fourteenth) day in both the fortnights, he should observe fast. On the full moon day the ablution of Śiva must be performed severally with scents, Gaṅgā water, milk, honey, ghee and curds. So also he must offer a golden flower on the head of the Liṅga.

18. Then he should offer to the extent of his capacity, baked pies cooked in ghee. Taking an Āḍhaka measure of gingelly seeds, he should put it upon the Śivaliṅga.

19. The devotee should worship the lord of all by means of blue lotuses and lilies. If they are not available, he should worship Hara with golden lotuses.

20-21. With devotion, one should offer to Maheśa, milk pudding soaked in honey, agallochum accompanied by ghee, lamp wherein ghee is burned and smear with sandal-paste, etc. He should offer leaves and fruits and dedicate a pair of black cows of handsome appearance.

22. At the end of a month he should feed eight Brāhmaṇas and give them monetary gifts. For the whole of that month, he should avoid honey (wine) and flesh. He shall observe celibacy for the whole of that month.

*Cf. Liṅga P. I.10-12. Hemādri on Vrata I. p. 333. Smṛti-kaustubha, p. 11 quotes Gd. P.

23-24a If a person performs this holy rite even for once in the manner mentioned before, with faith and devotion, maintaining all observances and restraints, attains all the pleasures here and after death, he attains excellent salvation.

24b-27. He goes to the beautiful city of Śiva accompanied by the members of his family, in aerial chariots resembling sapphire gems, full of divine jewels. Peacocks shall be yoked to them. Means of all divine pleasures will be present there. He shall be accompanied by different friends. Until the dissolution of all living beings, he will enjoy different kinds of desired pleasures. Thereafter, he becomes the righteous-souled ruler of Jambūdvīpa. Free from all sins, he will enjoy all sorts of pleasures.

28. Endowed with comely form and good fortune, exercising royal powers and free from all ailments, he too will enjoy this fruit.

29. Or on the fourteenth day, in the bright half of Vaiśākha, he who with a concentrated mind observes the Nakta-Vrata should take at night food consisting of cooked Śāli rice mixed with milk.

30-31. The devotee should worship Śiva with flowers etc. and offer edibles as Naivedya. He should partake of the food with the silence of a log of wood. He should perform the rite of brushing the teeth silently with the twig of a banyan tree with purity of mind. He should sleep near the Śivaliṅga at night, on the banks of the river Gaṅgā.

32. On the morning of the full-moon day (of Vaiśākha) he should duly take bath in the Gaṅgā. He should perform the Saṁkalpa rite (formal declaration of the intention) for fast. On that night, he should keep awake.

33-34. He should perform ablution of the Liṅga duly with ghee and worship it with flowers, scents, incense, lamps and food offerings. He should embellish a splendid bull with white flowers, cloths, etc. as well as powdered turmeric and sandal paste. He should duly dedicate it to Śiva.

35-36. He should feed Brāhmaṇas with milk pudding in accordance with his capacity. He who performs thus with devotion and faith, even for once, undoubtedly obtains that merit which one gets after performing penance with due observances for one thousand seven hundred and fifty divine Yugas.

37-38a. He goes to Īśvara's (god Śiva's) palace alongwith his ancestors by means of aerial chariots that have the luster of swans and Kunda flowers that resemble the moonchariots that are yoked with white bulls and embellished with clusters of pearls.

38b-39a. He enjoys different kinds of pleasures through beloved ladies of divine beauty, having the fragrance of blue lotuses. He will be surrounded by them.

39b-40. He will be blessed with prosperity and power for an indefinite period of time. He is born on the Earth as a king endowed with fame and prosperity. Under his single royal umbrella, he holds sway over the Earth.

41-42a. In the end, he gains detached outlook on life and regains the Gaṅgā. With that faith he courts death in the Gaṅgā. He remembers the previous birth and certainly attains salvation.

42b-44. A man or a woman should observe the following holy rite with devotional feelings. On the tenth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha when associated with the constellation Hasta, the devotee should keep vigil at night on the banks of the river Gaṅgā; with great faith he should worship the Gaṅgā with ten kinds of flowers and scents, ten varieties of fruits, ten different articles of Naivedyas and ten lights. He shall offer batel leaves too.

45-46a. After taking bath in the Gaṅgā with devotion the devotee should, with due formality, offer ten handfuls of black gingelly seeds with ghee into the water. He should also offer balls of ground flour of fried grains as well as those of Jaggery each being ten in number.

46b-49a. On the beautiful banks of the Gaṅgā, a mystic diagram of the lotus and Svastika should be drawn, over which a full water-pot should be placed. It must be covered with a cloth. Round the neck of the pot, a garland must be tied. An idol of the Gaṅgā, in the form mentioned below, shall be made in gold or silver and placed over the pot. The devotee should worship the goddess (i.e. the divine Gaṅgā) thus. If gold or silver is not available, the image shall be made of clay. If the devotee is not able to make the clay idol, he shall draw the figure on the ground by means of flour dough.

49b-51. The form of the Gaṅgā for the idol as well as the picture is as follows : She has four arms. The eyes are beautiful. She has the lustre of ten thousand moons. She is being fanned with chowries. A white umbrella above her head embellishes her. She is delighted. Her innermost heart melts with pity. She is ready to grant boons. With nectarine juice, she has flooded the surface of the Earth. She is eulogised by the Devas and others. She is adorned with divine jewels. She has divine garlands and unguents.[1]

52. After meditating on the goddess in the water in the manner mentioned before, the devotee should worship her in the objects used for worship (i.e. image or picture). He should observe a special worshipping rite with the following Mantra. (vide verse 66 below).

53. During the worship, the ablution of the deity with Pañcāmṛta is specially recommended. Just in front of the image, the ground shall be scrubbed and smeared with cow-dung.

54-55. In accordance with his capacity the devotee should worship Nārāyaṇa, Maheśa, Brahmā, Bhāskara the sun, Bhagīratha the king, and the king of mountains, Himavān, by means of scents, fragrant flowers etc. To ten Brāhmaṇas he shall distribute ten Prastha measures of gingelly seeds.

56-57. Similarly, he should distribute ten Prastha measures of barley-grains to ten persons after mixing them with milk products. In accordance with his capacity, the devotee should cause the replicas of aquatic animals such as fish, tortoise, frog, (crocodiles), etc. made in gold or silver. If it is not available, he should make them out of flour dough. After worshipping these with flowers etc., the knower of the Mantras shall cast them into the Gaṅgā reciting the Mantra (in verse 66 below) in the meanwhile.

58. On the day of Rathayātrā (chariot procession), the devotee should make a replica of the Gaṅgā facing the north and riding a chariot, if he has the required affluence and means there.

1. Cf. Supra 41. 33-35.

59. Rare indeed is the vision of the Gaṅgā going round in procession in the case of men of evil deeds. Just as there is the chariot procession of Durgā; this procession too should *be conducted in the same manner.

60. After observing all the rites thus, in accordance with the injunction, the devotee should avoid stinginess in the matter of expense. Thereby he is immediately liberated from the ten kinds of sins mentioned below.

61-63.* Among them there are three types of physical sins viz. a) as taking away what is not voluntarily given, b) killing, etc. without scriptural sanction and c) enjoying another man's wife carnally. There are four types of verbal sins viz. (i) harsh words (ii) false-hood (iii) back-biting in all its modes and (iv) irrelevant speech. There are three kinds of mental sins viz. a) wistful contemplation of another man's wealth, b) thinking ill of others mentally and c) futile ardour and yearning.

64. The devotee will be liberated from ten types of sins accumulated in the course of crores of births. There is no doubt about itsofar as the utterance of Brahmā goes.

65. (The Gaṅgā) worshipped with the following Mantra does redeem from worldly existence, forty earlier generations and forty subsequent generations.

66-67. The Mantra is "Om namo daśa-harāyai Nārāyaṇyai Gaṅgāyai namaḥ" —"Oṁ obeisance to Daśaharā (remover of tenfold ills), to Nārāyaṇī, to Gaṅgā." He who repeats this Mantra five thousand times within a day and a night, on the day of the chariot procession, shall attain the fruit of ten kinds of Dharmas (?). He shall redeem from the ocean of worldly existence ten earlier generations and ten subsequent generations.

68. The following hymn should be taken up for repetition on that day. The devotee should, thereafter, proceed ahead with the worship of Viṣṇu.

*Quoted from Manu XII 5-7.

Hymn to Gaṅgā[1]

69. Om obeisance to Śivā, the Gaṅgā, the bestower of auspicious things. Obeisance be to you. Hail be to the deity of the form of Viṣṇu. Obeisance, Obeisance be to you the Gaṅgā.

70. Bow to the deity, the embodiment of all Devas; obeisance to the deity of the form of medicine; Hail to you, O most excellent physician of all ailments of everyone.

71. Obeisance be to you; O queller of poisons originating from mobile and immobile beings; obeisance, obeisance to the destroyer of the poison of worldly existence; obeisance to the enlivener.

72. Repeated bows to the remover of the three types of miseries of human beings, to the Īśvarī (controller) of vital breaths. Obeisance to you, the remover of distress, the bestower of calmness and peace; obeisance to you the omniformed one.

73. Hail to the purifier of all for liberation from sins; obeisance to the deity bestowing worldly pleasures and salvation. obeisance, obeisance to the deity possessing pleasures.

74. Bow to you, the Mandākinī (i.e. heavenly Gaṅgā); obeisance, obeisance to the bestower of heavenly pleasures; obeisance to the embodied form of the set of the three worlds; obeisance, obeisance to the divine one.

75. Hail to you stationed in Śukla (i.e. Śiva); obeisance, obeisance to the possessor of well-being; Bow to you the divinity stationed in the seats of the Devas. Hail to you the possessor of brilliance.

76. Salutations to the slow-moving river, to the bearer of the Liṅga, to Nārāyaṇī. Obeisance to you who are friendly to the universe. Obeisance to you, O Revatī.

77. Obeisance always to you of huge size. Salutations to the support of all the worlds. Obeisance to you the chief one in the universe. Repeated bow to you Nandinī (the delighter).

---

1. Here Gaṅgā is identified with the supreme Deity. Hence, many epithets of the river Gāṅgā remind one of Vedāntic Hymns.

78. Obeisance to the large one, the auspicious one and to the immoral one; salutations to the Pure one, devoid of dust (sin); obeisance to the deity whose access is both far and near. Obeisance, obeisance to the redeeming divinity.

79. Obeisance to you who abide in the heaven; salutations to the non-different, to the unsplit divinity. Obeisance to the quiescent one; bow to you the stable foundation; obeisance, obeisance to you the bestower of these boons.

80. Obeisance to the fierce one. Obeisance to one who prattles with her mouth (?); salutations to the enlivener; obeisance to one who goes to the Brahman; obeisance to one who bestows the Brahman; obeisance, obeisance to the destroyer of sins.

81. Bow to the queller of the anguish of those who bow down; salutations to the mother of the universe; obeisance to Viluṣā (one who injures (the wicked); obeisance to the remover of difficulties; repeated obeisance to the efficient one.

82-83. Obeisance to one who is antagonistic to all miseries; repeated obeisance to the auspicious deity. O greatest deity, greater than the greatest, obeisance to you, O bestower of salvation for ever. May Gaṅgā be in front of me; may Gaṅgā be at my sides. May Gaṅgā be all round me; O Gaṅgā, may my existence be in you. You are at the beginning. You are in the end; you are in the middle, you are everything. O auspicious deity who have descended on the Earth.

84. You alone are the primordial Prakṛti; you are lord Nārāyaṇa. O Gaṅgā, you are the great Ātman; you are Śiva. Obeisance, obeisance to you."

85-87. He who recites this hymn every day with devotion or listens to this with faith, is liberated from the tenfold defects, physical and verbal. The patient will be liberated from the ailment and the unlucky from miseries and mishaps. He is liberated from the enemies, from the bondage and fears. He attains all desires. After death he gets absorbed into the Brahman.

88. There is no fear from arson, larceny or sinful activities in the house where this hymn is written down and is honoured.

89-90. A person who stands in the waters of the Gaṅgā and repeats this hymn ten times on the Daśamī (tenth) day whether he is indigent or incompetent, shall after worshipping the Gaṅgā with devotion, attain the benefit that is mentioned in case of the worship performed in accordance with the procedure laid down above.

91. Just as Gaurī, so also is the Gaṅgā. Hence the procedure laid down for the worship of Gaurī should be followed in the case of the worship of the Gaṅgā too.

92. Just as Śiva so also is Viṣṇu; Just as Viṣṇu so also Umā; just as Umā so also is the Gaṅgā. There is no difference and distinction among them.

93. He who advocates that there is difference between Viṣṇu and Rudra, that there is difference between Gaṅgā and Gaurī, and that there is difference between Lakṣmī and Gaurī, is a man of confounded intellect.[1]

94. It is the blessed men on the Earth who cast off their body by the day-time in the bright half of a month in the Gaṅgā during the Uttarāyaṇa (during the transit of the sun in the northern hemisphere), while Janārdana is abiding in the heart meditate upon him as such.

95. O daughter of Brahmā, those men who leave off their vital breaths by casting their bodies into the Gaṅgā go to the world of Viṣṇu eulogised by those who are domiciled in the heaven.

96. (?) He who dies partially due to observance of fast and partially due to being drowned in the Gaṅgā, is not reborn. He attains Sāyujya (identity) with the Brahman.

97. The embodied being that casts off its vital breaths (dies by throwing himself) in the Gaṅgā has the same salvation as that of an intelligent being endowed with Sattva guṇa and Yogic practice.

1. The NP, though a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, always advocates the oneness between Śiva and Viṣṇu and other deities. He emphasizes ekaṁ sat (Reality is one).

98. The man who takes up the vow of abstaining from taking food and dies on the banks of the Gaṅgā, attains in fact the greatest world alongwith the Pitṛs (his ancestors).

99-101a. (?) If an intelligent man desires to abaṇdon his vital breath by dying in the Gaṅgā but many births pass by and he meets his deaths here and there and at different places but not in the Gaṅgā, or many days elapse as he goes here and there and does not reach it (it does not matter. He will have the benefit). Even if he dies two Yojanas away, it is as beneficial as dying nearby or in the Gaṅgā itself. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

101b-102a. Whether with the perfect knowledge or without it, whether with desire or without desire, the man who dies in the Gaṅgā attains heavenly pleasures and salvation.

102b-103. Whilst dying, if a man remembers the Gaṅgā or touches it, he attains the greatest salvation even if he is a habitual sinner.

104. Those intelligent men (self-possessed ones) by whom the physical body is cast off after going off to the Gaṅgā attain equality with the Devas. Hence, one shall reasoningly eschew all other means of bestowing liberation and resort to the Gaṅgā till one's body falls.

105. He who dies in the firmament on the Earth or in the water, attains the everlasting region worthy of being honoured by Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva.

106. He who is righteous, is alive, who is pure and honoured by good men and who mentally thinks of the Gaṅgā, attains the greatest salvation.

107. Wherever one may die, if one devoutly remembers the Gaṅgā when death is imminent, one goes to the city pertaining to Śiva or to Viṣṇu.

108. The Gaṅgā came out of the cluster of the matted hair of Śambhu, that is very rough and hard. It flowed over the sons of Sagara who were sinners and led them to the heaven.

109. A man is honoured in the heavenly world as many thousands of years as the number of his bones that are cast in the Gaṅgā.[1]

110. A man's stay in the heavenly world begins from the moment when his bones are cast off into the waters of the Gaṅgā by other men.

111. If the bones of any one of auspicious rites are taken to the Gaṅgā water, he does not at all return from the world of Brahmā.

112. If any one's bones are cast off into the Gaṅgā water within the ten days (from his death), he attains a benefit similar to that of the death within the Gaṅgā.

113-115. The son (or others who perform the obsequies) should take bath and sprinkle Pañcagavya on the bones. He should then place them in a basket or casket alongwith the gold, honey, ghee and gingelly seeds. Facing the quarter frequented by the groups of ghosts (i.e. the south) he shall repeat this—"Obeisance be to Dharma". Thereafter he, should enter the water and saying "He was dear to me," cast off the bones. He should take bath once again and visit the Akṣayavaṭa (the everlasting holy banyan tree). Then he should give away the religious monetary gifts. When this is done the dead man detained in the city of the dead, shall go to the heaven and have a position similar to Indra (the king of gods).[2]

116. Nārāyaṇa is the lord of the place by the current of water on the one hand and a place of four Hastas away on the other hand. No one else can ever be the lord of that place.

117-118. No one shall accept Pratigraha (monetary gift) in that region (where Nārāyaṇa is the lord) even if the vital breaths have reached the throat i.e. even when death is imminent.). The water level reached on the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Bhādrapada is called Garbha.

1. The same as Matsya 106.52, Kūrma I. 37.32; NP Supra I. 15.163.

2. This is the procedure of costing-off bones of the deceased relative in the Gaṅgā. Cf. the procedure described in the Brahma P. and quoted in Tīrtha-Cintāmaṇi, pp. 265-266.

The distance covered by Garbha is called Tīra (bank, shore). "The distance of hundred and fifty Hastas is called Garbha (or the bed of the river). Beyond that is the Tīra."[1]

119-121. O gentle lady, this is the opinion of some and it is approved of in the Śrutis and Smṛtis. The distance of a Gavyūti (six kms) around the Tīra is called Kṣetra (sacred area or field). One should eschew the Tīra and reside in the Kṣetra. Residence in the Tīra is not advisable. The limiting boundary of the Kṣetra extends to one Yojana from either bank. All the sins never transgress the boundary of the Gaṅgā. On seeing it, the sins run away like the forest-dwellers (or the animals) on seeing the lion.

122. O excessively blessed lady, the space of three Yojanas on either side of the Gaṅgā should be known as Siddha-kṣetra. It was here that Rāma and Śambhu had their penance groves.

123. No man shall accept Pratigraha (monetary gift) in a holy centre or in the sacred temples. A man shall abstain from it under all circumstances (i.e. even when there are justifiable reasons).

124. The holy centre is of no avail (i.e. ceases to be so) to one who accepts Pratigraha in the holy centre or in sacred temples as long as that money is retained by him.

125. O gentle lady, by selling the Gaṅgā, one becomes (guilty) of selling (god) Viṣṇu. When Janārdana is sold, all the three worlds are sold.

126. He who applies the clay taken up from the banks of the Gaṅgā on his head assumes the form of the sun for the destruction of darkness.

127. A man shall spread the dust particles taken from the banks of the Gaṅgā and place the balls of rice for his Pitṛs. He shall thus propitiate them and lead them to heaven.

128. O gentle lady, thus the excellent greatness of the Gaṅgā has been recounted to you. A man who reads this or listens to this attains the greatest region of Viṣṇu.

1. Quoted by Tirtha-Cintāmaṇi, p. 266.

129. O daughter of Brahmā, this section is to be repeated every day with devotion by persons who are pure, endowed with faith and who wish for salvation leading to the region of Viṣṇu or Śiva.

CHAPTER FORTYFOUR

*The Greatness of Gayā.

Vasiṣṭha said :

1. O king, after hearing the excellent greatness of the Gaṅgā, the destroyer of sins, Mohinī said again to the priest.

Mohinī said :

2. O holy sir, I have been blessed with your sympathy since the holy story of the Gaṅgā that dispels sins has been recounted.

3. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, how is the holy place Gayā Tīrtha[1] well-known in the world ? I wish to know it. Kindly recount it now.

Vasu said :

4. The holy centre named Gayā is remembered as the most excellent of all Tīrthas. God Brahmā, the grandsire

*Gayā as a sacred place has been glorified since the Mbh. times. We find Gayā Māhātmya in the Mbh. Vana chs. 84-95, Vāyu P. chs. 105-112, Garuḍa chs. 82-86, Agni chs. 114-116, Matsya P. chs. 102-111. Padma I. 38. A no. of verses are common to these, esp in the Vāyu and the NP.

1. One wonders why after glorification of the Gaṅgā, Gayā which is away from the Gaṅgā is given precedence to Prayāga, the King of Tīrthas (Tirtha-rāja) and Kāśi, the sacred-most city when both of these holy places are on the Gaṅgā itself. Possibly the author of the NP being a resident of Bengal followed a separate order of sacred places.

of the world, the lord of the chief of the Devas, personally stays here.

5-6. It is here that the following verse was sung by the Pitṛs who desired Yoga : "One shall seek many sons so that at least one of them may go to Gayā or perform a horsesacrifice or set a dark-coloured bull free."[1] O gental lady, the excellent greatness of Gayā is the essence of all essences. I shall recount it succinctly. Listen to it. It yields worldly pleasures as well as liberation from Saṁsāra.

7-8. Formerly, there was an exceedingly powerful demon named Gayāsura. He performed a very terrible penance that scorched all living beings. The Devas being extremely afflicted by the severity of the heat of his penance went to Hari for bringing about his death.

9-11. The Devas sought refuge in Hari. Hari spoke to them :- "When his huge body is struck down, all of you should be auspicious-souled (pure in mind)"* The Devas said "So be it" Once (demon Gaya brought lotuses from the milk ocean for the sake of Śiva's worship. He went to bed in a place near Hari. Since he was deluded by Viṣṇu's Māyā, he was killed by Viṣṇu with his iron club.[2] Thereafter Viṣṇu is remembered when offering balls of rice, taking holy dip etc. (here). He shall go to

1. The same as Mbh. Vana. 87. 9-10. Mt. P. 22-6. Vāyu 105. 10, Kūrma P. II. 35. 12, Pd. P. I. 38.17.

*It may also be interpreted in view of the future events : When his huge body is felled down, you should be there (on it) with your auspicious souls.

2. The story differs in the Vāyu P. Ch. 106. There Gayāsura voluntarily offers his body for the sacrifice of god Brahmā and subsequently all gods stay permanently on him.

It is not known why this great self-sacrificer is called an 'Asura.' Apart from the reference to Gaya, the seer of two sūktas in the Ṛgveda (X. 63 and 64), we find a pious king Gaya, the son of King Samudravijaya of Rājagṛha in the Śvetāmbara Jaina work Uttarādhyayana-Sūtra and a royal sage Gaya whose hermitage the Buddha is said to have visited (in Aśva ghoṣa's Buddha-Carita). Even the Vāyu P. which calls it Asura states that his body was purer than gods' and his act of offering his body is too sublime to designate him as Asura.

Thus Jain, Buddhist and Brahmanical sources are unanimous about the saintly nature of the so-called 'Asura' Gaya.

the 'Gadādhara' (wielder of the iron club). At Gayā he is the bestower of salvation.

12. Assuming the form of the Liṅga pure (?) Pitāmaha (god Brahmā) stationed himself on his body. It will be a holy centre with the vehicle of Viṣṇu as the delimiting boundary and guardian deity.

13. The man who performs Yajña, Śrāddha, Piṇḍa-dāna will go to heaven or the world of Brahmā. That man will not go to hell.

14. Realising that the holy centre of Gayā is the greatest of all, Brahmā performed Yogic rites. He worshipped the Brāhmaṇas and the sages who came there.

15. After creating the river Sarasvatī, he stood pervading the quarters and the interstices of the quarters. Then he created edibles, foodstuffs, fruits, etc. and then Kāmadhenus (wish-yielding divine cows.).

16-18. He made Gayatīrtha five Krośas (15kms) in extent. He gave Brāhmaṇas sufficient wealth. In the Yoga (sacrifice) performed by Dharma, these Brāhmaṇas accepted wealth etc. as Pratigraha. Hence those Brāhmaṇas who stayed at Gayā were cursed by Brahmā. "May you not have any learning for three generations. To you the river shall be devoid of taste the mountain shall be a mere rock. Brahmā was then requested by them. Hence the lord created holy centres and sacred rivers.[1]

19. "The people in Gayā are holy ones, by means of Śrāddha they go to the world of Brahmā. I am always worshipped by those persons who honour you.

20. "Liberation is of four types : (That attained through) the perfect knowledge of Brahman, (b) Śrāddha rite at Gayā (c) death in a cowpen (d) residence of men in Kurukṣetra."[2]

21. O gentle lady, there is no doubt that all the oceans, rivers, tanks, wells and eddies go to the holy centre of Gayā tīrtha desirous of holy dips therein.

1. For the story of Brāhmaṇas of Gayā being cursed by God Brahmā for their greediness vide Vāyu 106. 73-83 and AP. 114. 33-39.

2. V. repeated in Vāyu 105. 16, Vāmana 33. 1 AP. 105. 5b and 6a.

22. The sins of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter, imbibing liquor, stealing, outraging the modesty of the preceptor's wife and those of coming into contact with these perish, thanks to Gayāśrāddha.*

23. Those who are dead but not consecrated (with Vedic Mantras) well, those who are killed by animals and those who are bitten by serpents become liberated by Gayāśrāddha and go to the heaven.

24. The benefit that a man attains by offering balls of rice in Gayā cannot be adequately described by me even in the course of hundreds and crores of Kalpas.

25. O Gentle lady, in this connection there is a traditional mythological story. O blessed lady, listen to it with concentration of mind.

26-27a. In the Tretā yuga there was a king named Viśāla.[1] He lived in the city of Viśālā. He was blessed with fortitude but was devoid of a son. Hence the ruler of Viśālā himself asked the leading Brāhmaṇas. The destroyer of enemies asked them about the son. The Brāhmaṇas of excellent spiritual power and virtue spoke to him.

27b-28a. "O king, go to Gayā. Propitiate Pitṛs with balls of rice in accordance with the injunctions, for the sake of a son. O heroic one, thereby you will certainly have a son who will be the donor of thousands and who will be lord of the entire Earth."

28b-30a. On being thus spoken by the groups of Brāhmaṇas the king, the ruler of Viśālā was delighted. His mind hovered round the most excellent of all holy centres. Accompanied by the Brāhmaṇas he went to Gayā. Desirous of a son he came to the most excellent of all the holy centres. At Gayāśīras he was engrossed in the sacrifice.

30b-31a. In accordance with the injunctions he made offerings of balls of rice to the Pitṛs. At that time he saw three persons in the sky. They were endowed with excellent, physical forms of white, red and black complexions. He spoke to them, "O sirs, why are you thus ? How is it, that delusion is experienced by you ? Tell me everything. Curiosity has been generated in my mind.

* Vāyu P. 112-7-14; Agni P. 115.54-59, Garuḍa P. 84.34-39.

1. The same as Vāyu 105. 13.

Sita (the white person) said :

31b-32. "O king, I am Sita (the white one), your father. My name, colour and activity expatiate upon my name Sita. (I am of pure conduct. Hence my name is 'white'). This red-complexioned one is my father. He has committed ruthless acts. He has killed Brāhmaṇas. He is a sinner. Thereafter (the person beyond that) is my grandfather. By name, colour and activity he is Kṛṣṇa (black).

33. Formerly, in the previous birth, many ancient sages had been killed by this Kṛṣṇa. These two the father and the son are remembered to have fallen into the hell called Avīci.

34. My father and beyond him, the other one both of them are black-faced. They were in the hell for a long time. By means of my pure karman, I attained the seat of Indra which is very difficult of access.

35. You are the knower of Mantras. By offering balls of rice at Gayā, these two who had gone inside the hell called Avīci were liberated, thanks to the power of excellent holy centre.

36-37. O destroyer of your enemies, you had offered water libations saying "I shall propitiate my father, grandfather and great grandfather." O excellent one, thanks to that statement, we all have come together at the same place and time. There is no doubt about this that we will go to the world of Pitṛs, thanks to the power of holy centre.

38. By your offering the balls of rice there at Gayā your grandfather and great-grandfather had been redeemed from their sins. Their subtle bodies too are deformed but they have now attained Siddhi.

39. O son, it is for this reason that I have taken them with me in order to see you. Now I shall go away.

40. As a result of the power of holy centre, a son may, by offerings the balls of rice at Gayā uplift his father who is a Brāhmaṇa-slayer."

41. After saying this and blessing his son viśāla ith benedictions, his father Sita, immediately went to his own world alongwith those two grandfathers.

42. Going once to Gayā, offering balls of rice once, even this is very difficult of access. What then a continuous stay therein ?

43. (?) The holy rite of fallen men is sometimes observed only once in a year in the Gayā-well by the relatives with the consideration for time and space.

44-47. A certain royal ghost* said to a merchant for the purpose of his own liberation ; You visit the holy place called Gayātīrtha. Take your holy bath and be scrupulously clean. Offer balls of rice in my name. By your offering the balls of rice there, I will be easily liberated from this state of ghosthood. I will then attain the auspicious world of all donors." After saying this to the merchant in the company of his attendants, the royal ghost duly but secretly narrated his name etc. After understanding these, the merchant went to the excellent holy centre of Gayāśīrṣa.

48. He performed the rite of Pāṁsunirvāpana (offering of balls of rice on the dust) to the ghosts in due order. He made the gift of wealth after making Pitṛs go ahead.

49. This highly, intelligent person offered balls of rice for himself in accordance with the injunctions but without gingelly seeds.[1] So also in the case of other members born in the family.

50. When the balls of rice were offered by the merchant, (the royal ghost and others) were liberated from ghosthood. They attained the status of twice-borns and went over to the world of Brahmā.

51. The following things should be offered by the sons: milk puddings and the meat of rhinoceros when offered take Pitṛs to their abode. The black and red ewe or ram shall be conducive to the infinite results.

*This story is repeated in Vāyu P 112.16-19 Agni P. 115.60-64 Garuda P. 84.32-35.

1. For offering Piṇḍa to oneself vide Vāyu 105. 12, AP. 115. 68.

52. Śrāddha, Japa, Homa and austerities performed at Gayā are of inexhaustible merit. These rites performed by the son on the death-anniversaries of the Pitṛs shall have endless benefits.

53. The Pitṛs who are over whelmed by the fear of hell desire for sons, hoping thus, "The son who goes to Gayā will redeem us."

54. Whatever is given to the Pitṛs at Gayā in the following places is of everlasting benefit. viz. Dharma Pṛṣṭha, the assembly of Brahmā, Gayaśīrṣa and the Akṣaya Vaṭa.

55. After visiting Brahmāraṇya, Dharmapṛṣṭha and Dhenukāraṇya one should worship the Pitṛs. He will thereby redeem twenty members of his family.

56. The sin committed in the course of great Kalpa perishes as soon as one reaches Gayā. The Śrāddha offered at the 'Bull' and at the Gṛdhravaṭa* (Banyan tree at Gṛdhra-kūṭa) yields great benefit.

57. The pada (foot-print) of sage Mataṅga is seen there by all men. The entire essence of Dharma has been proclaimed as an example to the people.

58. That grove of lotuses wherein Pāṇḍu had entered (?) and which is frequented by meritorious persons is holy and sacred. It is a holy centre that is a model for all.

59. On the third side at the foot of the śilā in the precinct of (the lotus-pond called) Nikṣira. and on the bank of the deep pool of the Kauśiki,[1] the śrāddha that is offered yields great benefit.

60. His foot was placed on the Muṇḍapṛṣṭha hill by the intelligent Mahādeva. Penance very difficult to be performed

*Mentioned in Mbh. Vana 84.91. The Gṛdhra-kūṭa hill is to the left of the (Preta) Śilā. The Gṛdhravaṭa in the NP is the same as Gṛdhrakūṭa-vaṭa in the Vāyu 108.63.

Mbh. Vana* 84, 101 refers to Mataṅga's hermitage and not to the foot-print.

vide Vāyu P. 108.83-84.

1. One of the rivers invited by sage Lomaśa there (vide Vāyu 108.81) was gone through for many hundreds of years in the holy places.

61. Here, a man devoted to Dharma casts off immediately his sins in the course of a short while, like serpent that casts off its old slough.

62. There itself to the north of Muṇḍapṛṣha (mountain) is the holy centre well-known by the name of Kanakananda. It is frequented by groups of Brāhmaṇa sages.

63. By taking their holy dips therein, men go to heaven in their physical bodies. The Śrāddha offered there is cited to be always of ever-lasting benefit.

64. O lady of beautiful eyes, the devotee must take a holy dip for three days in the Nikṣira and in the lake Mānasa. He shall then perform Śrāddha there.

65-66a. By going to the lake called northern Mānasa* one attains excellent Siddhi. He who offers Śrāddha there in accordance with his influence and capacity attains all divine desires and all the means of liberation.

66b-68. Thereafter, the devotee should go to Brahmaśiras that is embellished of necessity by Brahmā. He shall attain the world of Brahmā. Early in the morning, immediately after it had dawned, a holy sacrificial post was fixed in that lake by Brahmā. By circumambulating the sacrificial post, he shall obtain the benefit of Vājapeya sacrifice. Thereafter, O blessed lady, he should go to Dhenuka well known throughout the worlds.

69. The devotee should observe fast and spend a night there. He should then offer a cow with gingelly seeds (or replica of a cow made of gingelly seeds). Liberated from all sins he shall certainly go to the world of Soma (the moon-god).

70-72. O highly blessed lady, even today highly wonderful prints are seen there. A tawny-coloured cow grazes on the mountain along with calf. O Mohinī, the marks of the

Uttara and dakṣiṇa Mānasa* are the tanks at Gayā. Vāyu P. ch. 111.4 and 8

Cf. Vāyu 111.30-33. The NP seems to have skipped over the visit to the Bodhi tree (mentioned in the Vāyu 111.26-29) hoofs of that cow and calf are seen (even today). If there is any inauspicious Karman, it perishes the moment these foot-prints are seen by those leading men. Thereafter, he should go to the Gṛdhravaṭa, the abode of the intelligent lord (Śiva).

73-74. After applying Bhasman over the body the devotee should perform the Bhasmasnāna (Bath in ashes) and then approach the bull-bannered lord. O gentle lady, the holy observance of the Brāhmaṇas lasts for twelve years. In the case of all other castes, all the sins perish thereby. Thereafter, the devotee should go to the Udyāna mountain reverberating with songs.

75. The Brāhmaṇa of praiseworthy holy observances should perform Sandhyā prayers at the place where the highly meritorious foot-print of Śāvitrī is seen.

76-78. That has the benefit of (performance of) a twelve years Sandhyā prayer. O daughter of Brahmā, the Yonidvāra hill is also there. If a person passes through it, he is liberated from the torture of vaginal passage (i.e. rebirth). The king who resides in Gayā for both the fort-nights, the bright and the dark sanctifies seven generations of his family. Thereafter, O blessed lady, he should go to Dharmapṛṣṭha that yields great benefits.

79. By going to that place where Dharma, the protector of the world of the Pitṛs is himself stationed, the devotee shall attain the benefit of horse sacrifice.

80. Thereafter, the man should go to the excellent holy centre of Brahmā. By approaching and worshipping Brahmā there, the devotee attains the benefit of the Rājasūya sacrifice.

81. The holy centre of Phalgu tīrtha is well known. It is endowed with many roots and fruits. The Śrāddha performed in the place where the river Kauśikī flows is remembered as yielding ever-lasting benefits.

82-83. Thereafter, he should go to the mountain (Gayaśiras) protected by the king conversant with piety. It is being enjoyed by the meritorious king Gaya. It is here that the sacred river Mahānadī (i.e. Phalgu) flows. The lake Gayaśiras is also here. The holy lake Brahmasaras is frequented by sages and is exceedingly meritorious.

84. It was here that the holy sage Agastya went towards Vaivasvata Yama; the eternal ruler of Dharma stayed here always.

85. Here the outcome of all the rivers is seen. The Pināka-bearing Mahādeva is continuously present here.

86-87a. There is the world-famous Akṣayavaṭa (the ever-lasting banyan tree).Formerly, Gaya performed a sacrifice here and worshipped the deity. The most excellent river (Phalgu) which was protected in the sacrifices of Gaya is also present there.

87b-88a. At Gayā, one must see the Muṇḍa-Pṛṣṭha, the divine mountain Raivata and the third Krauñcapāda. On seeing them one is liberated from sins.

88b-89a By seeing Śaṁkara in the Śivanadī, Gadādhara at Gayā and the great Ātman everywhere, one is liberated from multitudes of sins.

89b-90. The goddess at Varanasi is Viśālākṣī, Lalitā at Prayāga; goddess named Maṅgalā at Gayā and Saiṁhikā (in the place called) Kṛta-śauca. Whatever a person gives while staying at Gayā attains infinite and ever-lasting benefits.

91. His Pitṛs (forefathers) are delighted by his excellent Karman (rites). The Pitṛs consider themselves really blessed with sons when they stay at Gayā and offer cooked rice-balls to the Pitṛs.

CHAPTER FORTYFIVE

The Procedure of offering Piṇḍas[1] (in the Gayā-Yātrā)

Vasu continued :

1. O Mohinī, listen, I shall now recount to you the merit accruing from Preta-Śilā (a part of Śilā – or a stone slab which is a hill supposed to have been placed on Gayāsura's head to stabilise him). By offering Piṇḍas (balls of rice) at it, one uplifts one's forefathers (from their present status in after-life).

2. The foot of the Śilā is covered by a hill* called Prabhāsa. Being pleased with sages (who propitiated him), Prabhāsa emerged out of the big-toe of the Śilā.

3. God Śiva abides in that "toe"(of the Śilā) and hence is glorified as Prabhāseśa. It is a part of the big toe of the Śilā and that whole is called Preta-Śilā.

4a. A person who offers balls of rice (Piṇḍas) there (at the Preta-Śilā) redeems his forefathers from ghost-hood.

4b-6a. The man who takes bath at the meeting-place of the great river Phalgu and Prabhāsa hill, will himself become

1. Offering of Piṇḍa (balls of rice) to Pitṛs—Piṇḍa-dāna has an important place in the pilgrimage to Gayā. This chapter has a close textual similarity with the Vāyu P. 108. 12ff.

As the NP. has borrowed a number of verses from the Gayā Yātrā section of the Vāyu P., it is not necessary to locate every verse that way. A few verses are however noted below as a specimen :

NP.	Vāyu p. (Ch. 108)
8b-9a.	20
9b-10a.	23
10b-11a.	22
11b-12a.	28
12b-13a.	29a.
13b-14a.	30 etc. etc.

*The reading Prabhāsenātriṇā in the NP is meaningless. It should have been Prabhāsenādriṇā, as Prabhāsa is the name of a hillock at Gayā. The Vāyu which gives a full-fledged Gayā Māhātmya reads this line thus : ārchāditaḥ śilāpādaḥ prabhāsenādriṇā yataḥ // 108.13

Vāmadeva. Hence it is remembered as Vāma-tīrtha*.

When, on being requested Rāma performed ablution in the Mahānadī (Phalgu), that place of bath came to be known as Rāma-Tīrtha since then. It completely purifies all the people.

6b-7a. Whatever sins have been committed by men in thousands of their previous births—all that sin gets dissolved (by taking a bath in Rāma Tīrtha).

7b-9a. Having taken bath while chanting the Mantra : "O Rāma ! Rāma of mighty arms who afford protection (and freedom from fear) to gods ! O Lord of gods ! I shall pay obeisance to you. May my sins perish.", a man should perform Śrāddha. He who offers Piṇḍas (balls of rice to Pitṛs) at Rāma-Tīrtha is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

9b-11. After bowing him down, one should go to refulgent Śiva, Prabhāseśa. After paying homage to Śambhu (Śiva), one should offer oblation (food with Kuśa-grass, sesame and water) to Yama (with the prayer) : "O lord of gods ! You are the waters as well as the Lord of luminaries. Annihilate instantly my sins committed by me with my mind, word and deed." (As the legend goes, when Gayāsura began to move) god Yama occupied the rear of the Śilā (to stabilise it with his weight.)

*The verse in the NP reads :

Vāmadevaḥ svayam bhūyād Vāma-Tīrthaṁ tataḥ smṛtam / 5 a. This verse as printed in the NP (and translated above) is irrelevant in the context, as the next verse shows that the Tīrtha became Rāma-Tīrtha when Rāma took bath in the great river Phalgu. The editors of the NP printed atri for original adri and brought in Vāmadeva from the blue. The original verse in the Vāyu P. is as follows :

Mahānadī-prabhāsādryoḥ saṅgame snāna-kṛn naraḥ /
Rāmo devyā saha snāto Rāma-Tīrthaṁ tataḥ smṛtam //—108.16

"Rāma along with his queen Sītā took bath at the meeting place of Mahānadī (Phalgu) and Prabhāsa hill. Thence-forth it came to be remembered as Rāma-Tīrtha".

At Gayā actually there is a Rāma-Tīrtha as mentioned in the verse in the Vāyu P. but no Rāma-Tīrtha is noted in the NP. In the next verse both the Vāyu and the NP note that Rāma was requested to take bath in the Phalgu. This agreement shows the Printing mistakes of the NP text about Vāmadeva and Atri (for adri)

12. Then the hill (viz. Śilā) was ordered by Dharma-rāja, "Do not go (move)" and hence it came to be remembered as "Na-ga" (motion-less). Yama-rāja and Dharma-rāja have stationed themselves here to bring stability and fixity.

13-14a. (After offering bali to these two gods, one should offer bali to their two dogs Śyāma and Śabala with the Mantra) "I shall offer Piṇḍa to two dogs Śyāma (a black-coloured dog) and Śabala (a dog of variegated colours) born of the family of Vaivasvata. May they be non-violent to me."

14b-15a. In the holy Tīrtha, on the Preta-Śilā and other places, the person should invoke the Pitṛs with the offerings of Caru (an oblation of rice) alongwith ghee. He should then offer the Piṇḍas chanting the mantras.

15b-16a. On the hillock near Gayā known as Preta-parvata, the person should meditate on the Pitṛs with self-restraint and concentration. He should wear the sacred thread over the right shoulder and passed under the left arm. Facing the south, he should meditate thus :

16b-19a. "May the following highly fortunate ones who have been protected by you come here—viz. Anala (the fire-god) who is the conveyor of oblations to Pitṛs (Kavya-vāha), Yama, Aryaman, the Pitṛ-devatās (the manes as deities) who are consumed by fire (Agniṣvātta), deceased ancestors (of a particular class) who imbibe Soma juice." I have come here to Gayā for offering balls of rice to those of my ancestors (Pitṛs) who had been born in the family and who are my kindred. May all of them attain permanent satisfaction by the efficacy of this Śrāddha."

19b-20. He should then perform the Ācamana rite and repeat the five items in the almanac and restrain the breath assiduously. He should then perform the Saṅkalpa rite (of vowing solemnly the performance of Śrāddha) thus : (This is) "For the the acquisition of the world of Brahmā from which there is no return." After performing this Saṁkalpa (rite of taking the solemn vow), he should duly perform Śrāddha in due order.

21. After first sanctifying the spot with the Pañcagavya ingredients severally, he should invoke the Pitṛs, worship them and offer Piṇḍas to them with the mantras.

22-23. After offering Śrāddha to Sapiṇḍas (nearest kins to whom the Piṇḍas—rice balls—are due), to their south he should spread over Kuśa grass over which he should offer once the libations of gingelly seeds and water. The Pitṛ-Tīrtha (holy water intended for the manes) should be assiduously taken in a single handful. He should then offer the everlasting Piṇḍa with a handful of fried barley-meal.

24. He should offer gingelly seeds, ghee, curds, honey etc. alongwith the articles for the balls of rice. He should invoke the kinsmen onto the Kuśa grass by means of gingelly seeds etc.

25. If the Śrāddha is for a lady, the Mantras must be uttered using the feminine gender suitably. The invocation of the Pitṛs is as before and he should offer the Piṇḍas too as before.

26. In regard to the offering of Piṇḍas to a couple of one's own Gotra or of a different Gotra, the Śrāddha, the Piṇḍa or the water libation, if not offered separately, becomes futile.

27-28. He should put gingelly seeds in the vessel of the Piṇḍas and fill it with auspicious waters. With the following Mantra he should sprinkle the Piṇḍas in the (clock-wise) form of a circle three times. He should bow down to all of them and crave their forgiveness. After bidding farewell to the Pitṛs and performing the Ācamana rite, he shall cite the Devas as witnesses.

29.[1] O Mohinī, in all the places, the offering of the Piṇḍas should be in this manner. In the offering of the Piṇḍas at Gayā one shall not think much of the time.

30. One must not perform Gayāśrāddha during the intercalary lunar month, on the birth day, at the setting of Jupiter and Venus, and when the Jupiter is in the Siṁharāśi (Leo).

31. A mendicant who does not want to offer Piṇḍas should after going to Gayā, exhibit his staff. By placing his staff at the Viṣṇu-pada (the foot-print of Viṣṇu), he is liberated alongwith his ancestors.

32. It is laid down in the scriptures that the Piṇḍas to be offered at Gayā can be made of milk pudding, powdered fried grain, pounded gingelly seeds, Carus, rice grains etc.

1. VV. 15-29 describe the procedure of Śrāddha at Gayā.

33. O blessed lady, on seeing Gayā, even a sinner guilty of great sins shall be sanctified and deserve holy rites. He who performs Śrāddha attains the world of Brahmā.

34. Even a person who performs thousands of horse-sacrifices does not attain that benefit which one attains in the Phalgutīrtha.

35. After reaching Gayā, the pilgrim should offer the Piṇḍas of which the Pitṛs are very fond. Delay should not be made, nor should any obstacles be put therein.

36-37. (Mantra)—"Balls of rice are offered by me to these viz.—Father, grandfather, great-grandfather, mother, grand-mother and great-grandmother, maternal grandfather and his father, maternal great-grandfather and others. May these Piṇḍas reach them and be of everlasting benefits.[1]

38. I am giving this Piṇḍa for the uplift of those persons in our family who are dead but who have not as yet attained salvation.

39. I am giving this Piṇḍa for the uplift of those persons among our kinsmen and their families who have not as yet attained salvation.

40. I am giving the Piṇḍa for the uplift of those persons who are dead before cutting their teeth or even while they were in the foetus stage.

41. I am giving the Piṇḍa unto those men some of whom are burnt in fire (that is who are cremeated properly) and others who are not properly cremated, and those who were killed by lightning or by thieves.

42. I am giving the Piṇḍa unto those men who died in the forest fire, who were killed by lions and tigers and those who were killed by fanged or horned animals.

43. I am giving this Piṇḍa to those who died by hanging themselves, those who were killed with poison or through weapons and those who had committed suicide (otherwise).

1. VV. 36-37 show the breadth of outlook of the performer of Śrāddha in offering Piṇḍas. cf. Vāyu 110. 23-59.

44. I am giving this Piṇḍa to those who died due to thirst and hunger in the forest or on the way to the forest and those who were killed by goblins, ghosts or spirits.

45. I am giving this Piṇḍa to those who are lying in hells—Raurava, Tāmisra and Kālasūtra in order to uplift them.

46. I am giving this Piṇḍa to redeem those persons who are lying in many different cells of torture and those who have gone to the world of the dead.

47. I am giving this Piṇḍa for the deliverance of those persons who had attained miseries due to imprecations and curses and were killed.

48. I am giving this Piṇḍa for the uplift of those persons who have been subjected to the control of emissaries of Yama in all the hells.

49. I am giving the Piṇḍa unto those who are born in the wombs of animals, or those who have become birds, worms, and reptiles or those who are born among the vegetable kingdom.

50. I am giving Piṇḍa to those who wander among thousands of other species of beings and to whom human birth is inaccessible.

51. I am giving this Piṇḍa to my Pitṛs, kinsmen and others stationed in the heaven, firmament or the Earth and to those who were not consecrated after death.

52. Some of my Pitṛs may be remaining in the form of ghosts. May all of them always attain satisfaction with this Piṇḍa.

53. Piṇḍa has been given by me to those who were or were not my kinsmen and to those who had been my kinsmen in other births. May this reach them and may this be of everlasting benefit.

54-56. Piṇḍa has been given by me to those who died in my father's family, to those who died in my mother's family, to those kinsmen of preceptors, father-in-law and other relatives who were dead, those who were devoid of sons and wives, in my family and hence had been deprived of these Piṇḍas; those who had gone astray due to the omission of holy rites, those who were born blind, those who were lame, those who had been deformed, those who had been prematurely delivered of and those of my family whether known or unknown. May it reach them and be of everlasting benefit.

57. I am giving Piṇḍa alongwith Svadhā to those who were born in my father's family (tracing the origin) to Brahmā, to those who were born of my mother's family and to those who are somehow connected with me in both the families.

58. May the Devas, Brahmā, Īśāna and others bear me my witnessess that I have come down to Gayā and performed the rites of redemption to my Pitṛs.

59. "O lord, Gadādhara, I have come to Gayā for the rites of my Pitṛs. You alone are the lord and witness thereof. I am now free from the three types of debts."

60. On the next[1] day the intelligent devotee should purify himself (in body and mind) and go to Pretaparvata (the mountain of the dead).

After taking a holy dip in the Brahmakuṇḍa, the intelligent person should perform Tarpaṇa rite to the Devas and others.

61. At the Pretaparvata, the pilgrim should, with self-control and purity, invoke the Pitṛs. After performing the Saṁkalpa rite as before, he should offer the Piṇḍas.

62-63. Just as the serpents afraid of Garuḍa, the Asuras terrified of the holy rite of Śrāddha, run away from that devotee. Their number shall be as many as that of the gingelly seeds taken by the men in the holy rite of the Pitṛs, after worshipping the great Pitṛ-deities by means of their own Mantras. O Mohinī, there also he should perform all the rites as before.

64-66a. So also, he should scatter the powdered fried grains mixed with gingelly seeds on that Pretaparvata saying—"With these fried grains of barley powdered and mixed with gingelly seeds may all the Pitṛs of mine be satisfied—those Pitṛs who may remain in the form of ghosts. Beginning with Brahmā

1. This is the 2nd day of Gayā Yātrā. Preta-Parvata is a hill to the NW of Gayā at a distance of four miles (Gavyūti). The Brahma-Kuṇḍa mentioned here is the foot of the NE part of Preta-Parvata (Tristhalī-Setu p. 355). Compare the text from v. 60 ff. with Vāyu p. 110. 8 ff.

and ending with a blade of grass whatever living being mobile or immobile there may be, let it be entirely satisfied with the Piṇḍa offered by me."

66b. At the outset this is the procedure in the northern Mānasa* lake among the five holy Tīrthas.[1]

67. With the Kuśa grass in the hand, the pilgrim should sprinkle his head with water after the Ācamana rite. He should then go to the northern Mānasa lake and perform the rite of ablution repeating this Mantra.

68. "I am taking the holy dip in the northern Mānasa lake for the purity of myself, for attaining the world of the sun etc. and for the liberation of my Pitṛs."

69-70. After the holy bath, he should duly perform the rite of Tarpaṇa for the Devas and others. "May every one—Devas, sages, Pitṛs and human beings, beginning with Brahmā and ending with the blade of grass—may all the Pitṛs, mothers, maternal grandfathers and others be satisfied."

He shall perform the rite of Śrāddha alongwith the offerings of the Piṇḍas in accordance with the injunctions laid down in one's particular Sūtra.

71. In Aṣṭakas, in Vṛddhi-Śrāddha, at Gayā, and on the anniversary of death, one should offer Śrāddha separately to one's mother but on all other occasions with her husband (i.e. with one's father.)

72. (Mantra) "Oṁ Obeisance be to lord Bhānu (the sun) who has the forms of the moon, of Mars, of Mercury, of Jupiter, of Venus, of Saturn, of Rāhu, and of Ketu."

73. By bowing down to the sun and worshipping him, the devotee shall take Pitṛs to the world of the sun. Here

*The five Tīrthas are Uttara-mānasa, Udicī-tīrtha, Kanakhala, Dakṣina-Mānasa and Phalgu. Phalgu Tirtha is the same as Gayā-Śiras vide Vāyu P. 111.1-22.

1. As per Vāyu Ch. 111 these Pañca-Tīrthī rites are to be performed on the 3rd day of this Yātrā.

Cf. Vāyu P. 110.17.

there is the Mānasa lake and beyond that is the northern Mānasa.

74. Observing silence, the pilgrim should go from the northern Mānasa to the Southern Mānasa*. To the north of it, is the Udīcītīrtha which is the bestower of liberation.

75. To the north of the hill Muṇḍapṛṣṭha, the devotee should perform the Tarpaṇa rite of Devas, sages and Pitṛs. The holy centre of Kanakhala is in the middle. It yields salvation to the Pitṛs.

76. After taking bath (in Kanakhala Tīrtha), the man shines like gold and attains sanctity. Hence, this holy centre is well known as the excellent Kanakhala Tīrtha.

77. To the South of it is the Tīrtha (holy bathing place) called Dakṣiṇa Mānasa (Southern Mānasa). Thus three Tīrthas are cited in the Dakṣiṇa Mānasa (as its constituents).

78-79. After duly bathing in them, the pilgrim should perform the Śrāddha separately (at each) (saying) "O Divākara (sun) I am bathing in the Dakṣiṇamānasa for the destruction of the masses of sins of Brāhmaṇa-slaughter etc. and for liberation." With this Mantra he should perform the rites of ablution, worship and Śrāddha alongwith the offerings of Piṇḍas.

80-81a. "I bow down to the sun-god for the redemption of the Pitṛs and their satisfaction as well as for the increase of sons, grandsons, wealth, prosperity, longevity, and health." After looking at the sun and worshipping him silently the devotee should repeat this Mantra.

81b-82. "May the deities of Pitṛs, 'Kavyavāha' (fire god) and others be propitiated alongwith my Pitṛs. May the partakers of Svadhā be propitiated". Thereafter, he should go to Phalgutīrtha that is the most excellent of all holy centres.

83. The performer shall attain liberation always, thanks to the Śrāddha of the Pitṛs. Formerly when he was requested by Brahmā, Viṣṇu became the holy Tīrtha Phalguka.

*The three Tirthas constituting Dakṣiṇa Mānasa are Udīcī-Tīrtha of the North, Kanakhala (in the middle) and Dakṣiṇa Mānasa to the South.

84. It had originated from the Dakṣiṇāgni (sacrificial fire) that is the sacred river of Phalgu. It yields plenty of fruits. Cows will be Kāmadhenus. The Phalgu water will facilitate the growth of fruits. The earth yields water (?)

85-86. Since this comes under the creation (of Lord himself) above [or from under-ground], Phalgutīrtha is never futile. There is no doubt that all the sacred rivers and bathing places in all the worlds come to Phalgutīrtha for taking bath. The Gaṅgā is the water coming out of the foot of Viṣṇu. But the Phalgu is the primordial Viṣṇu himself.[1]

87. Hence, they know that Phalgu is superior to Gaṅgā. From the plunge into the waters of the Phalgu, one derives the benefit equal to thousands of horse-sacrifices.

88. "I am taking bath today in the holy Phalgutīrtha which is the watery form of Viṣṇu. It is for facilitating the attainment of Viṣṇu's world by the Pitṛs and for the achievement of worldly pleasures and liberation."

89. After bathing in the Phalgutīrtha the man should perform the rites of Tarpaṇa and Śrāddha alongwith the Piṇḍas as prescribed in his own Sūtra. He shall bow down to Brahmā.

90. "Obeisance to lord Śiva, Īśāna, Puruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva, Sadyojāta, Śambhu."

91-93. After bowing down to lord Brahmā the Pilgrim should worship with the above mantra. After taking bath in the Phalgutīrtha, after visiting lord Viṣṇu and after bowing down to the lord, the devotee takes himself along with the Pitṛs to the region of Viṣṇu.

"Om obeisance to Vāsudeva. Bow to Saṁkarṣaṇa, to Pradyumna, to Aniruddha, to Śrīdhara and to Viṣṇu. By taking bath in the Pañcatīrthī (the collection of the above five holy bathing places) the devotee takes his Pitṛs to the world of Brahmā.

94. If anyone does not make Viṣṇu bathe in fivefold nectars or does not embellish Viṣṇu with flowers, garments, etc. his Śrāddha goes futile.

1. Vāyu 111. 16.

95. The place bounded by Nāgakūṭa, Gṛdhrakūṭa, Viṣṇukūṭa and Uttaramānasa is called Gayāśiras. It is also called Phalgutīrtha.

96-97. The excellent Phalgutīrtha is beneath the mountain Muṇḍapṛṣṭha. By performing Śrāddha there, all the Pitṛs shall attain salvation. At Gayāśiras the devotee should offer Piṇḍas of the size of the leaf of a Śamī tree. The devotee shall lead into the permanent Brahman, the person uttering whose name he had offered the Piṇḍas.

98. The Lord of unmanifest form, after assuming the form of the mountain Muṇḍapṛṣṭha or the form of Phalgutīrtha etc., bows down to Viṣṇu.

99. He who has assumed the state of non-manifestation by taking the form of (Preta) Śilā-parvata, the Phalgu, etc.— that Ādi-Viṣṇu presented manifest form as Gadādhara the wielder of the mace.

100. Thereafter,[1] the devotee shall go to the forest called Dharmāraṇya where Dharma (god Vāma)[2] is well established. After taking bath in the tank of Mataṅgavāpī the devotee should perform the rites of Tarpaṇa and Śrāddha.

101-102. After going there and bowing down to Mataṅgeśa the devotee shall utter this Mantra :—

"The deities are the authorities, Śambhu and the guardians of the worlds (quarters) are the witnesses. After coming to Mataṅga Kṣetra, atonement for redemption of the Pitṛs has been performed by me in this Mataṅga (vāpi). At the outset, the devotee should perform Śrāddha etc. in the well called Brahmatīrtha.

103-104. By performing (the Śrāddha etc) in between the well and the sacrificial post (viz. Brahma-Yūpa) the devotee shall redeem Pitṛs. After bowing to Dharma, and Dharme-

1 This is on the 4th day from entering Gayā.

2. Although B. M. Barua regards Dharma and Dharmāraṇya as referring to the Buddha Gayā (Buddha-Gayā I. p. 22). I follow Kane (H. D. IV 664 Ft. Note 1501) and interpret Dharma as Yama-Dharma. It may be noted that along with the Araṇyas (forests, Parks) viz. Puṣkara and Naimiṣa, Dharmāraṇya is recommended for Piṇḍa-dāna (Pd. P. Sṛṣṭi II. 73).

śvara, the devotee shall bow down to the tree Mahābodhi (tree of great enlightenment).

Thus the duties of the second day of (pañca-tīrthī) pilgrimage to Gayā[1] have been recounted to you by me. It is conducive to the happiness of the Pitṛs by means of holy dips, Tarpaṇa rites, offering of balls of rice, worship, obeisance, etc.

CHAPTER FORTYSIX

Importance of offering Piṇḍas (at Gayā)[*]

Vasu said :

1. Henceforth, I shall recount to you the duties on the third day.[2] They yield both the worldly pleasures as well as salvation. They yield the benefit of contact with Gayā.

2-3. After taking bath in the Brahmasaras, the pilgrim should perform Śrāddha alongwith the Piṇḍas:

"I take my holy bath in this Tīrtha for the liberation from the three-fold indebtedness, for conducting Śrāddha, for offering Piṇḍas, for the rite of Tarpaṇa and for the achievement of wealth."

He who performs that (the Śrāddha etc.) between the well called 'Brahmakūpa' and the sacrificial post (raised by Brahmā—) 'Brahma yūpa' redcems the Pitṛs.

4. The lofty sacrificial post is that of Brahmā. By performing Śrāddha at the Brahmasaras, the devotee shall take the Pitṛs to the world of Brahmā.

1. This 2nd day of the Pañca-Tīrthī rites is the 4th day from entering Gayā.

*Most of the verses in this chapter are identical with those in the Vāyu P. 111.32-75.

2. The 3rd day of Pañca-Tīrthī rites corresponds to the 5th day from entering Gayā.

5. The mango trees near Gopracāra were planted by Brahmā. Merely by sprinkling them with water (from Brahmasaras), the Pitṛs will attain salvation.

6. "I water the Mango tree that has grown out of Brahmasaras, that is lordly and containing all the Devas and that is the embodiment of Viṣṇu, for the sake of salvation of the Pitṛs.

7. A sage with a pot and the Kuśa grass at the tip of his hands pours water at the root of the mango tree. The Mango trees are watered and the Pitṛs are propitiated. A single action is well reputed as serving two purposes.* A man who performs the Ācamana rite and pours water at the root is not negligible (even) to gods.

8. By circumambulating the sacrificial post (of Brahmā) one shall attain the benefit of the Vājapeya sacrifice. By bowing down to Brahmā the devotee takes the Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā.

9. "Oṁ, Hail to Brahmā, who is eternal (unborn) and who is the cause of creation, etc. of the Universe; obeisance, to the redeemer of the devotees and the Pitṛs.

10-11. With the following Mantra he should offer oblation to Yama, with mental control : "Yamarāja and Dharamarāja are steadily stationed here. I offer oblation to them for the purpose of liberation of the Pitṛs." O Mohinī, he then offers oblation to the dogs with the Mantra mentioned before :

12-13. Thereafter, with self-control, the devotee should offer oblation to the crows repeating the following Mantra :

"May the crows pertaining to Indra, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Yama and Nirṛti accept the ball of rice placed by me on the ground." Thereafter, he shall take holy dip in the Brahma Tīrtha with the Kuśa grass (in his hand).

14. Thus completing the observances of the third day the intelligent pilgrim shall bow down to lord Gadādhara and maintain the vow of celibacy.

*Quoted in the Agni P. 115.40, the Vāyu P. 111.37 and Padma Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa 11.77.

15. On the fourth day,[1] the devotee should perform the rite of ablution etc, in the Phalgu tīrtha. At Gayāśiras, at various Pādas he should perform the Śrāddhas along with the Piṇḍas.[2]

16. The Gayāśiras itself has been made the support of Phalgu tīrtha. Gayāśiras extends from Krauñcapāda* to Phalgu Tīrtha.

17. (Defective) There are mountains etc. in the Gayāśiras as well as Phalgu Tīrtha. It is the face of the demon Gaya. One shall perform the Śrāddha after bathing.

18. The primordial lord Gadādhara presiding over the manifest and unmanifest things, has assumed the from of Viṣṇupāda (and other Pādas—foot-prints) for the liberation of the Pitṛs.

19. There is the Viṣṇu-pāda (the footprint of Viṣṇu). It is divine. By its mere sight the sins are destroyed. By touching and worshipping, it is conducive to the salvation of the Pitrs.

20. By performing Śrāddha at Viṣṇupāda alongwith the offering of the Piṇḍas the man uplifts a thousand members of his own family and takes them to Visṇu's world.

21. By performing Śrāddha at Rudrapāda, the man shall take a hundred members of his family to the city of Śiva alongwith himself. So also (with Śrāddha etc) at the auspicious Brahmapāda.

22. He who performs Śrāddha at the Dakṣiṇāgnipāda shall attain the benefit of a Vājapeya sacrifice. He who per-

1. The 4th day of Pañca-Tīrthī rite falls on the 6th day after entering into Gayā.

2. The Tristhalī Setu, p. 366 states that there is no separate Śrāddha on Gayāśiras apart from that performed on Viṣṇupāda and other Pādas.

*Vide verse 52 below : Krauñca-pāda is the hill Muṇḍa-Pṛṣṭha. On it a sage assuming the form of a heron performed penance and imprinted his (heron-like) footsteps on it. Hence it is called Krauñca-pāda (Vāyu P. 106.75)

This verse is a combination of the Vāyu P. 111.45a and 44b out of which 17a in the NP (i.e. Vāyu 111.45a) is wrongly printed. The original line in the Vāyu is : muṇḍa-pṛṣṭhān nagādhastāt sākṣāt tat Phalgu-Tīrthakam / "Below the hill called Muṇḍa-Pṛṣṭha is verily that Tirtha called Phalgu (the Phalgu river)."

The NP. 17a runs thus :—Gayā-śire nagādyāśca sākṣāt tat Phalgu-tīrthakam If nagādyās ca is emended as nagādhastāt the obscurity is lessened.

forms Śrāddha at the Gārhapatyapāda shall derive the benefit of a Rājasūya sacrifice.

23. By performing Śrāddha at the Candrapāda one shall attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. He who performs Śrāddha at the Satyapāda shall attain the benefit of a Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice.

24. He who performs Śrāddha at the Āvasathyapāda shall attain the world of Soma (moon). By performing Śrāddha at the* Candrapāda (Indra-pāda ?) the devotee shall lead his Pitṛs to Śakra's world.

25. He who performs Śrāddha at the Pāda of others shall take Pitṛs to the region of Brahmā. He who performs Śrāddha at the Sūryapāda shall take sinners to the city of Arka (sun).

26. He who performs Śrāddha at the Kārttikeyapāda shall take Pitṛs to Śiva's world. By performing the rite of Śrāddha at the Agastyapāda the devotee takes Pitṛs to the world of Brahmā.

27. The Kāśyapapāda is the most excellent of all Pādas. The Pādas of Viṣṇu, Rudra and Brahmā are cited to be the greatest of all.

28. At the beginning or at the conclusion, one of the above Pādas is recommended. O Mohinī, he who performs Śrāddha therein, will find it conducive to welfare.

29. Formerly, the divine sage Bhāradvāja wanted to perform Śrāddha and offer the Piṇḍas to Pitṛs and others at the Pāda of Kāśyapa.

30. Then two hands, one white and the other black, came out piercing through the Pāda. On seeing two hands, Bhāradvāja became doubtful about the real father.

31-32a. Then Bhāradvāja asked his mother Śāntā: "At the Kāśyapapāda, O mother, into which hand should I offer the

*The Vāyu P. reads śakra-pāda in the corresponding verse (111.52)

_anyeṣām ca pade_ in the NP is obscure. Who are these 'others' sacred enough to enable the Pitṛs to go to Brahmapāda ? The Vāyu P. reads Agastyasya pade in the corresponding verse (111.53) which line occurs below in verse 26 b in the NP.

This story is given in the Vāyu P. 111.58-63 in identical verses (as in the NP.).

Piṇḍa, the white one or the black one ? You know my father, Tell me."

32b-33. On hearing the words of the intelligent Bhāradvāja, Śāntā said with her face beaming with pleasure, to the son who was about to offer Śrāddha, "O highly intelligent Bhāradvāja give the Piṇḍa to the black one."

34. Thereupon, Bhāradvāja attempted to give the Piṇḍa to the black one. The white one became visible and said:* "O son give it to me. You are my bosom-born (legitimate) son."

35-37a. The black one said—"You are born of my wife (Kṣetraja). Hence give the Piṇḍa unto me." The white one said. "She is an unchaste woman. Hence, I am your progenitor (you are my bosom-born son). The son born of unchaste woman gave the Piṇḍa first to the Kṣetrin (the husband of the mother) and thereafter to the Bījin (the seed-giver i.e. the progenitor). O highly blessed lady, by devoutly handing over the Piṇḍas, * the excessively intelligent (Bhāradvāja) considered himself blessed, thanks to the direct talk (with the Pitṛs).

37b-38. In the course of his Śrāddha at Viṣṇupāda, Bhīṣma invoked his Pitṛs after duly performing the Śrāddha; when he attempted to offer the Piṇḍas, the pair of the hands of his father Śantanu sprang out.

39. But Bhīṣma placed the Piṇḍa on the ground since the hand is not authorised to receive the Piṇḍa directly. With delight Śantanu said :- "You are definite in the matter of the import of the scriptures.

40. Be blessed with the power of seeing the events of the three units of time. In the end, Viṣṇu will be your final goal. You can court death according to your will. After saying this he attained liberation.

41. At the beautiful Rudrapāda, Rāma attempted to give piṇḍas to the pitṛs. His father Daśaratha came down from heaven extending his hand.

The NP does not clarify to whom Bhāradvāja gave the Piṇḍa. The corresponding verse in the Vāyu P. 101.63 states that Bhāradvāja offered the Piṇḍa at Kāśyapa's pāda and transported his parents to Brahmaloka in an aerial car carried by swans.

42. Rāma, who was afraid of transgressing the purport of injunction of scriptures did not give the Piṇḍa in the hand (of Daśaratha). He gave the Piṇḍa on Rudrapāda. Daśaratha then said to Rāma.

43. "O son, I have been redeemed by you. I am sure to go to Rudraloka (the world of Rudra) because the Piṇḍa is offered at the foot of Rudra. If it had been placed in my hand I would not have attained the heavenly goal.

44-45. You will rule kingdom for a long time. After protecting your subjects and after performing Yajñas with appropriate Dakṣiṇās, you will go to Viṣṇu's world alongwith the citizens of Ayodhyā and even worms, insects and other beings. After saying this to Rāma, the king went to the world of Rudra.

46. After worshipping Kanakeśa, Kedāra, Narasiṁha and Vāmana on the high way (that is the path of the chariot) the devotee shall redeem the Pitṛs.

47. If the devotee performs the rite of Piṇḍadāna in the name of anyone at Gayāśiras, they go to heaven even if they are in the hell and if they are in the heavenly world they will attain salvation.

48. He who offers Piṇḍa at Gayāśiras, even of the size of a śamī leaf, or with bulbous roots, roots, fruits, etc. shall lead the Pitṛs to the heaven.

49. By offering Śrāddha in front of the Pādas of Viṣṇu etc. seen there, the devotee takes the Pitṛs to those worlds of the deities at whose foot the Śrāddha was offered.

50. The mountain Muṇḍapṛṣṭha is marked everywhere by these pādas (footprints). The Pitṛs who are worshipped there attain the region of Brahmā.

51. The Tīrtha here is known as Gadāloka since the head of the demon Gaya[1] had been split into two by Ādi-Gadādhara with the Gadā (iron club) and since the Gadā was washed in the Tīrtha.*

1. This must be a misprint. It was the head of demon Heti and not of Gaya that was split by Viṣṇu (vide Vāyu 11, 75).

*In the stream Phalgu.

52. A sage performed penance in the form of a Krauñca (heron), on the mountain Muṇḍapṛṣṭha. Due to the markings of his feet on that hill it is remembered as Krauñcapāda.

53. The feet of Viṣṇu and others are stationed here in the form of Liṅgas. After performing the rite of Tarpaṇa for the Devas and others the Śrāddha should be performed at Rudrapāda and other spots.

54. O Mohinī, after performing these rites on the fourth day, the devotee becomes sanctified. He then becomes eligible for the rites. The performer of the Śrāddha attains the world of Brahmā.

55. The devotee should take holy dips in the Śilā Tīrthas and perform the Tarpaṇa rites. These on behalf of whom they perform the Śrāddha along with the Piṇḍas go to the world of Brahmā.

56-57. They will stay there and sport about as long as the living beings are not dissolved. All living beings whether sweat-born, oviparous or viviparous, attain Sāyujya with Viṣṇu by abandoning their bodies on the back of the rock. They attain salvation along with seven hundred members of their families.

CHAPTER FORTYSEVEN

The Glory of Gayā

Vasu said :

1*. On the fifth day, the devotee should perform the holy ablution etc. in the Gadāloka tīrtha as before and then perform the Śrāddha alongwith the Piṇḍas under the Akṣayavaṭa (everlasting Banyan tree).

2. By performing Śrāddha there the pilgrim shall take Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā. Thereafter, he should feed and worship the Brāhmaṇas appointed by Brahmā.

*For vv. 1-10 cf Vāyu P. 111.79-83. This fifth day corresponds to the seventh day after entering Gayā. vide Agni P. 115.69-73.

3-4a. He who, with special efforts, performs the rite of Śrāddha at the Aksayavaṭa along with this and visits, salutes, and worships Vaṭeśa (the Lord of the Banyan tree) with concentration and purity of mind shall take his Pitṛs to the everlasting and eternal city of Brahmā.[1]

4b-8. "For the sake of purity and for attaining everlasting heavenly bliss I take my holy bath in the great and excellent Tīrtha called Gadāloka wherein the iron club of Lord Viṣṇu had been washed. He who assumes the form of a baby and sleeps at the tip of the banyan tree in Yogic slumber is called Yogaśāyin. Obeisance be to you the Yogaśāyin. Hail to you with the weapon with which the tree of worldly existence is cut.

Obeisance be to you the destroyer of all sins. Bow to the giver of ever-lasting Brahman; obeisance to the everlasting Vaṭa (Banyan tree.)"

"In this Kali age the people are devotees (followers) of Maheśvara. Hence, Gadādhara assumed the form of a Liṅga. I salute to you the (great grandfather of that nature." By bowing down to that great grandfather (of the Universe) at Rudrapāda, the devotee leads the Pitṛs to the region of Rudra.

9-10a. The lord killed the Asura Heti. His head was split into two with the iron club. Where the club was washed by the Lord the Tīrtha came to be called Gadāloka. It became the most excellent of all holy centres.[2]

10b. Heti was a Rākṣasa. He was the son of Brahmā. He performed a great and wonderful penance.

11-12. He chose the boon from the delighted bestowers of boons viz. Brahmā and others. They had been pleased with him on account of his penance. So he chose the boon thus :- "I should become very mighty. I must not be killed by Kṛṣṇa, Īśāna and others with their weapons viz. discus, etc. I must not be killed by human beings nor by Daityas and others with their different weapons and missiles. "They said "So be it." and then vanished. Thereafter, Heti conquered the Devas.

1. VV. 6b-8a are the same as Vāyu 111. 83-84.
2. Identical with Vāyu 111. 75.

13. Heti occupied the post of Indra. Then Brahmā, Hara and other Devas resorted to Hari and requested him 'Kindly kill Heti.'

14. Hari said :- "O Devas, this Heti cannot be killed, by Devas and Asuras. Give me the Brahmāstra (the missile of Brahmā) whereby I shall kill Heti."

15. Thus ordered, the Devas gave that Gadā (iron-club) to Viṣṇu. Aja (Brahmā) and others said – "O Upendra kill Heti (with this)".

16. Requested by the Devas, Gadādhara wielded that Gadā. After striking Heti down in the battle with that iron club Gadādhara gave heavenly world to the Devas.

17. The pilgrim should observe fast and take bath in the river Mahānadī, the Phalgu in front of the deity Gāyatrī. Then he should perform Sandhyā prayers.

18-19a. After performing Śrāddha along with Piṇḍas the devotee shall be able to lead his family to the abode of Brahmā. After taking bath in the Tīrtha situated in front of Sāvitrī and performing Sandhyā rites at Midday, the devotee shall be able to lead the Pitṛs to the abode of Brahmā.

19b-20.* The pilgrim who takes bath in the (Eastern Sarasvatī and observes the rite of Sandhyā prayers, in the evening in front of Sarasvatī shall lead the family to omniscience. He is purified from the sin of omission of the Sandhyā prayers in the course of many births.

21-22. He who performs Śrāddha and offers Piṇḍas in the following places shall lead a hundred ancestors to the world of Brahmā. They are the holy centre of Lelihāna in the Viśālā (city), the hermitage of Bharata, the Muṇḍapṛṣṭha hill marked by the different foot-prints near Gadādhara, in the Tīrtha of Ākāśagaṅgā (celestial Gaṅgā) and at the confluence of Girikarṇa (the Sabarmatī).

*There are a number of identical verses : 19ff in NP here and Vāyu P. 112.23 ff (to the end of that chapter).

23-24.* He who takes holy bath in the Gayāvaitaraṇī (Vaitaraṇi at Gayā) shall uplift twentyone generations of his family. He who offers Piṇḍas in the following places shall lead Pitṛs to the heaven.—They are the Gopracāra in the divine river the region of Mānasa lake, the Puṣkariṇī (lotus pond), the Tīrtha of Gadāloka; the Amaraka, the Koṭi-Tīrtha and the Rukmakuṇḍa.

25-26. The devotee shall be the redeemer of the Pitṛs by bowing down to Koṭīśa and Mārkaṇḍeyeśa. By the mere vision of the merit bestowing Pāṇḍuśilā, even the persons stationed in hell shall be sanctified. The devotee shall lead them to the heaven. After saying this, Pāṇḍu attained the eternal and unchanging region.

27. (The sacred rivers at Gayā are) Ghṛtakulyā, Madhukulyā, Devikā, Mahānada (Phalgu) and the Madhusravā is glorified where it comes in contact with Preta śilā.

28-29a. By taking bath there, a man attains the benefits of ten thousand horse sacrifices. By performing the Tarpaṇa rite for the Pitṛs and by offering Śrāddha along with the Piṇḍas, the man uplifts a thousand members of the family and takes them to the city of Viṣṇu.

29b33. Even the vegetable kingdom, the sweet-born animals, the oviparous and vixiparous beings—all these dying on reaching the Madhusravā attained Viṣṇu's region. By performing Śrāddha in the Haṁsa Tīrtha that is as meritorious as the Daśāśvamedha, the devotee shall attain heaven.

31. By bowing down to the Tīrthas called Daśāśvamedha and Haṁsa the devotee shall attain the city of Śiva. He who performs Śrāddha at the Pāda of Mātaṅga shall reside in the city of Brahmā.

32. Brahmā should churn fires within the Śamī alongwith Viṣṇu and others. The Tīrtha formed thereby is called Manthakuṇḍa. It causes liberation of the Pitṛs.

*These verses mention important spots at Gayā which can be located with the help of Vāyu P. : Go-Pracāra (111.35-37) where mango trees were planted by Brahmā; Mānasa (N. of tanks—Uttara M. and Dakṣiṇa M. 111.6 and 8; 2 and 22), Puskaraṇī (108.84), Gadāloka (111.75-76) is the stream of Phalgu; Rukma-Kuṇḍa is probably the same as Rukmiṇi Kuṇḍa (108.84).

33. He who takes a holy dip therein, attains liberation by performing Tarpaṇa and offering Piṇḍas. By bowing down to Rameśa and Karakeśvara the devotee shall take Pitṛs to the heaven.

34. By offering Piṇḍas at the Gayākūpa the devotee attains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. By taking Bhasma bath (smearing the body with the ashes) at the holy centre Bhasmakūṭa the devotee redeems the Pitṛs.

The man who takes holy bath at the confluence of Nikṣīra shall wash off his sins. He who performs Śrāddha in Rāmapuṣkariṇī shall take Pitrs to the world of Brahmā.

36. He who takes ablution in the river Suṣumnā shall uplift twentyone generations of his family. By bowing down to Vasiṣṭheśa in Tīrtha, the devotee has the same benefit as in a horse-sacrifice.

37. He who offers Piṇḍas in the forest Dhenuka at the footprints of Kāmadhenu after taking bath and bowing to that lord shall take Pitṛs to the world of Brahmā.

38a-39a. He who takes the holy dip and performs the Śrāddha at Kardamāla and Gayanābhi near Muṇḍapṛṣṭha hill shall take Pitṛs to the heaven by bowing down to Caṇḍikā as well as by worshipping the lord of confluence named Phalgucaṇḍīśa.

39b-40a. The following six Gayās are the bestowers of liberation viz. Gayāgaja, Gayāditya, Gāyatrī, Gadādhara, Gayā and Gayāśiras.[1] By setting a bull free at Gayā, the devotee shall uplift twentyone generations of the family.

41. The devotee who has conquered his sense organs and who has been formally permitted by Brāhmaṇas, wherever he stays, should meditate upon the primordial Gadādhara and offer Śrāddha and Piṇḍas.

42-44. He shall then uplift a hundred members of his family and lead them to the world of Brahmā. Thereafter, he should duly worship lord Janārdana and offer the excellent Naivedya of cooked rice and curds alone. The Piṇḍas should be deposited and offered and the pilgrim should sustain himself on the remnants.

1. The same as Vāyu P. 112. 60 ft.

44. Since the rock was kept on the back or the head of the Daitya, the mountain Muṇḍapṛṣṭha is the bestower of the world of Brahmā on the Pitṛs.

45-47a. When Rāma had gone to the forest, Bharata climbed on the mountain and stood there. After installing Rāmeśa he offered Piṇḍas to his father. He who takes holy bath there, bows with concentration to Rāmeśa, Rāma and Sītā, performs Śrāddha and offers Piṇḍa shall attain the city of Viṣṇu. The righteous soul shall go to the city of Viṣṇu along with his Pitṛs, and hundreds of members of his family.

47b-48. The deity is installed on the ridge of Kuṇḍa to the right hand of the slab. By performing Śrāddha etc., there, the devotee shall lead Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā. Penance was performed by Kunda on the mountain to the south of Sītādri (the mountain of Sītā).

49. He who offers Piṇḍas on the meritorious Pāda of Mataṅga shall lead Pitṛs to the heaven. To the left hand side of the rocky slab, the mountain Antaka is held.

50. The Udayādri (The mountain of the rising-sun) was brought here and established by Agastya, the great soul. He who offers Piṇḍas there shall lead Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā.

51. God Brahmā created the sacred water Pool called Udyantaka. It was used by him for his own penance. Brahmā was stationed there along with Sāvitrī and Kumāra (i.e. Sanatkumāra).

52-53. Hāhā, Hūhū and others sang songs, and played on instruments. He who takes holy dip in the Agastya Tīrtha, and worships Sāvitrī at midday shall be born as a Brāhmaṇa endowed with wealth and mastery of the Vedas for crores of birth. He who takes holy dip at the Pāda of Agastya and offers Piṇḍas shall lead the Pitṛs to the heaven.

54. The man who enters the Brahmayoni and comes out attains the great Brahman. He will be liberated from the uterine distress. (i.e. further births) and attain Mokṣa.

55. By bowing down to Gayākumāra a man obtains Brāhmaṇahood. By means of ablutions etc. in the Somakuṇḍa the devotee shall lead his Pitṛs to the world of Soma (Moon).

56. The oblation offered at Kākasilā to the crows bestows salvation instantaneously. By bowing down to Svargadvāreśvara (Lord of the Portals of the heaven), the devotee shall take his Pitṛs from the heaven to the city of Brahmā.

57a. He who offers Piṇḍas in the Vyomagaṅgā shall become free from impurities and lead Pitṛs to the heaven.

57b-58a. To the right hand side of (Preta) śilā, god Yama Dharma sustained the Bhasma-kūṭa hill. Hence god Śiva gave it that name there.

58b-59. O Mohinī, in the place where this pile of ashes Bhasma-kūṭa) lies like a mountain and is designated Bhasma-kūṭa there is a Vaṭa (banyan tree). The great grandfather of the world Brahmā, is stationed there as the lord of the Banyan Tree. Just in front of it is the Rukmiṇīkuṇḍa and to the west of it is the river Kapilā.

60. Lord Kapileśa is on the banks of the river where the meeting of Umā and river Śiva takes place. The man shall take bath in the Kapilā and bow down to and worship Kapileśa.

61. He who offers Śrāddha in the Maheśīkuṇḍa shall attain heaven. Gaurī and Maṅgalā when worshipped there, are the bestowers of all good fortune.

62-63a. Janārdana is the deity on the Bhasmakūṭa. The devotee shall offer Piṇḍa in his hand, with the right hand,* for his own sake and with the left hand for other's sake but without gingelly seeds. Of course the Piṇḍa shall be mixed with curds. All those people shall attain the world of Viṣṇu.

63b-65. "O Janārdana, this Piṇḍa is given unto your hand by me in the course of Gayāśrāddha.[1] When I am dead, the Piṇḍa should be given to me by you. The person for whose sake the Piṇḍa has been given to you by me, give that Piṇḍa at Gayā-śīrṣa when he dies. O Janārdana, Obeisance to you. Salutation to you in the form of Pitṛs.

66. Hail to you O Pitṛpātra (one who deserves to be worshipped by the Pitṛs). Obeisance to you, the cause of salvation.

*Reading Dakṣeṇa for Mantreṇa.

1. For offering Piṇḍa to oneself cf. Vāyu 108.85, also AP. 115.68.

At Gayā, Janārdana is himself present in the form of the Pitṛs.

67a. By seeing the lotus-eyed lord (Puṇḍarīkākṣa) one is liberated from the threefold indebtedness. "O Puṇḍarīkākṣa, I bow to you, O liberator from the threefold indebtedness, O lord of Lakṣmī, obeisance be to you. Hail to you O bestower of salvation on the Pitṛs."

By worshipping Puṇḍarīkākṣa Janārdana the devotee shall attain heaven.

69. Kneeling on the ground with the left knee bent, the devotee shall bow down to Janārdana. After performing the Śrāddha along with the Piṇḍas the devotee shall attain the world of Viṣṇu along with his brothers.

70. On the left leg of the rocky slab (śilā) is the mountain Pretakūṭa. It is held by Dharmarāja. The mountain consisting of Pretaśilā is sinful.

71. It was cast off very far by means of the leg (by Gadādhara) since the weight of the rocky slab had been felt on the Pāda (foot). The departed jīvas catch hold of (the deities) in the form of archers.

72. Many of them cause obstacles and they are stationed, separately. For the liberation of the Pitṛs the performance of Śrāddha etc. in the Tīrtha is a contributory cause.

73. The Pretakūṭa attained sanctity, thanks to the contact with the Śilādri (the hill called Śilā). The Pretakuṇḍa is also there. The Devas are stationed there by means of their Pādas (footprints).

74-76a He who takes bath and offers Śrāddha and Piṇḍas shall liberate Pitṛs from ghosthood. In the land of Kīkaṭas (Magadha), Gayā is highly sacred, the forest of Rājagṛha is sacred and meritorious, the hermitage of Cyavana is sanctifier, the river called Punapunā (mod. Punpun, a tributary of the Gaṅgā in Patna District) is highly sacred. Vaikuṇṭha, Lohadaṇḍa, Girikūṭa and Śoṇaga are holy centres. He who performs Śrāddha and offers Piṇḍas there, shall lead Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā.

76b-77. On the southern foot of the "rocky slab (śilā)", the mountain Gṛdhrakūṭa is held by Dharmarāja. In order to stabilise themselves immediately, the great holy sages assumed the forms of vultures, performed penances and achieved siddhis.

78. Hence the mountain is called Gṛdhṛakūṭa,[1] the lord of vultures. There is Śiva. By taking holy bath and visiting Gṛdhreśvara, the man goes to the city of Śambhu.

79. After going to the city of Grdhras, one whose opportune moment has arrived, shall go to the heaven. By visiting Śiva (in the holy centres of) Ṛṇamokṣa (that which liberates from indebtedness) and Pāpamokṣa (that which liberates from sins), the devotee shall attain Śivahood.

80. The śilodaka (the spring-water from the rocky slab) is pervaded by the Ādipāda (portion) of the mountain. It is there that vighneśa (the destroyer of obstacles) is stationed in the form of an elephant.

81. By visiting him one is liberated from obstacles. The devotee shall take Pitṛs to the city of Śiva. By visiting Gāyatrī and Gayāditya after the holy dip, the devotee shall attain heaven.

82. By visiting Brahmā stationed at the Ādipāda, the devotee shall redeem the Pitṛs. He who offers the Piṇḍas at the Navel shall lead Pitṛs to the city of Brahmā.

83. An excellent lotus rose up for beautifying the Muṇḍapṛṣṭha hill. By visiting the Muṇḍapṛṣṭha and the lotus, the devotee is liberated from sins.

84. (Defective) the devotee shall avoid from a pretty long distance the horned animals, fanged animals, serpents, poisons, fires, women and water. He who sports with them is no better than a dead person.

85-90. The following are proclaimed as Patitas (fallen ones) Viz : He who is killed while offending the serpents; he who is struck down by lightning; he who is captured and

1. Near Gayā there is a chain of sacred but rocky hills and their peaks are called Bhasma-Kūṭa, Gṛdhra-Kūṭa, Preta-Kūṭa, Nāga-Kūṭa, Rāma Śilā, Preta Śilā, Krauñca-Pāda.

Gayāśirṣa consists of this chain of hillocks extending to about two miles. But this spot was well-known even before the time of the Buddha as we find the record of Buddha's visit to Gayāśirṣa (Pāli for Gayā Śīṛa) in the Aṅguttara Nikāya, Vol. IV. P. 302.

punished by the king himself due to the fault of thieving; those who indulge in sexual dalliance with other men's wives and are killed by their husbands out of hatred; those who are killed after coming into conflict with Cāṇḍālas and others; those who are of unequal rank and of mixed caste; those who depend upon Cāṇḍālas and others; those who poison and burn cows; heretics of ruthless intellect; those base men who commit suicide out of anger with fasts into death, poisoning, burning, inflicting wounds with weapons, hanging themselves, drowning themselves in water; and falling from the tops of mountains and tall trees; those who maintain themselves through reproachful ingenuity; those who are authorized in the Pañcasūnās i.e. five household things namely, oven, grinding stone, broomstick, wooden mortar and water pots; those who are almost dejected in sacrifices and assemblies; the eunuchs; those who are struck down by the imprecations of the Brāhmaṇas; those who are killed by Brāhmaṇas and those who are guilty of great sins.

91. All these fallen ones attain purity, thanks to the Bhasman of Gayākūpa. Thus, O gentle lady, the excellent greatness of Gayā has been recounted to you.

92-94. This is destructive of all sins; it bestows liberation on the Pitṛs. The man, who devoutly listens to this during Śrāddha or on Parvan days or daily, O fair lady, the man who recounts this, shall attain the world of Brahmā. This is the source of welfare; this is holy; this is conducive to wealth; this bestows attainment of heaven on men; it is conducive to renown and longevity; it increases sons and grandsons.

CHAPTER FORTYEIGHT

The Greatness of Kāśi

Māndhātā Said :

1-4. "O holy sir, the meritorious life of Mohinī, that is destructive of great sins has been splendidly recounted by you who are omniscient and merciful. At the instance of her father, Mohinī had caused the release of her husband, son and co-wife from the ocean of worldly existence, after insisting too much on protection to Dharma. That daughter of Brahmā was omniscient and engaged in the welfare of all the worlds. She sought refuge in her priest. After listening to the greatness of Gayā, the bestower of salvation on the Pitṛs what did she once again ask that Brāhmaṇa Vasu, the most excellent among the knowers of the Vedas."

Vasiṣṭha replied :

5. "Listen O king, I shall recount what Mohinī who had been deluded and who was desirous of resorting to the holy places, asked Vasu once again".

Mohini submitted :

6-10. "Well done, well done, O excellent Brāhmaṇa, interested in uplifting the worlds. Now I have been blessed by you of merciful soul. O Brāhmaṇa, the excellent greatness of Gayā, which is a great secret which is a pleasing narrative of Dharma, which bestows salvation on the Pitṛs and which is meritorious, has been heard by me. Now O leading Brāhmaṇa, narrate the excellent greatness of Kāśī.

8-10. O Brāhmaṇa, a little of it had been formerly heard by me when orally repeated by Sandhyāvalī. Hence, it is being recollected by me. Now, tell it to me in detail.

Vasiṣṭha said :

On hearing those words of Mohinī, Vasu, her priest, who knew the reality of the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas spoke to her again.

Vasu said :

May it be heard. The city of Kāśī is blessed and auspicious. Lord Maheśvara is blessed.

11-12. To him who continuously resorts to Kāśī, it is the bestower of salvation. It was a city pertaining to Viṣṇu. The eternal lord Śiva requested for it from Hari. He remained there worshipping Hṛṣīkeśa and he was worshipped by Devas and others.

13. Varanasi is a beautiful city. It is the essence of the three worlds. On being resorted to it, it is the bestower of good goal (salvation) on men. Persons who have resorted to this city, even though they might have committed various sins, become free from all blemishes and shine like gods.

14. This holy centre is a mystically secret place. It is conducive to happiness to all living beings. It is the bestower of salvation on all creatures. It is pertaining to both Viṣṇu and Śiva.

15. He may be a Brāhmaṇa-slayer, a killer of cows, a defiler of his preceptor's bed or a betrayer of friends. He may be guilty of misappropriation of deposits on trust or he might have practised usury or adopted the basest form of maintenance—the man who approaches Varanasi, the city of Śiva, shall have his self liberated from the strong bondage of worldly existence.

16. Having reached this sacred place, frequented by gods and Siddhas, thanks to the power of his merit, the man shall be well-known amongst Devas and Asuras. When dead he may attain Mokṣa, the highest region.

17. Those meritorious persons who stay in this holy centre, are the devotees of either Hara or Hari and visit the deity every day with great respect, are as pure and saintly as Śambhu and whose activities and holy rites are very pure become free from fear, sorrow and sins. After cutting asunder the thick net of birth in Saṁsāra they obtain great liberation.

18. This Kāśī kṣetra extends to two and a half Yojanas (1 yojana = 3 km) from east to west and half a Yojana from North to South.

19. From the river Varanā (Mod. Barnā) (the north) to the river Asī of dry bed (to the south), is spoken of as the area of this holy place, by god Śiva.[1]

20. The Liṅga that is known as Timi Caṇḍeśvara is the northern limit (or entrance of this kṣetra). The southern end is Śaṅkukarṇa based on Oṁkāra.

21. It is described that there is a sacred pool called Piṅgalā in the south-east corner of this sacred place. The dry river Asi is to be known as the Piṅgalā Nāḍī near which stands Lolārka.

22. The mystic vein called Iḍā is described as being related to the moon and hence pleasing and auspicious. It should be known as the (river) Varaṇā—the place where Viṣṇu is stationed.

23-24. The mystic vein that is in between the two mystic veins is glorified as Suṣumnā which should be known to be the Gaṅgā (the container of fish in her belly or stream).[2] This great holy centre is traditionally known as Avimuktaka[3] as this has never been abandoned nor shall ever be given up (by Lord Śiva or Viṣṇu). Hence it is called quiet, soundless (visvara).*

25. O auspicious lady, in this holy centre the attainment of liberation is possible without any strain, more easily than in such holy centres as Prayāga which is very difficult of access.

26-28a. There are people of various castes; there are Cāṇḍālas of despicable character; there are persons whose

1. Cf. Mt. P. 184. 50-52 also Liṅga. Śuṣka-Nadī in the NP (for Śukla in Mt. P.) is correct, as the Asi is practically a dry stream.

2. The Sk. P. -Kāśī. 5.25 attaches the same Yogic significance to the Varaṇā and the Asi, but Avimukta is Suṣumnā, the Liṅga P. quoted in the Tīrtha-Cintāmaṇi, p. 341 repeats these NP. verses.

3. Avimukta proper is the area lying in the circle with the old temple of Viśveśvara as the centre and with 200 dhanus (= 800 cubits or about 1200 feet) as the radius. But later on, it was extended to cover the whole of Kāśī—avimuktam mahākṣetram pañca-Krośa-parimitam —SK P.I V. i 26.31.

even though elsewhere the SK. P. (74. 45-46) gives the following limits : West-Gokarṇeśa, East-Maṇikarṇīśa, South—Brahmeśa and North—Bhārabhūta.

*VV. 21-23 are found verbatim in the Liṅga P. (as quoted in the Tīrtha-cintāmaṇi, p. 341) but the reading for visvara is viṣṇu.

entire person is filled with sins and great evils. Learned men know that Avimukta is a great medicine for them. Hara takes pity on wicked persons, blind ones, indigent ones, miserable ones and those who commit sins. He leads them on to great salvation.

28b-30a. O auspicious-looking lady, that city becomes holy and meritorious ever since the Gaṅgā began to flow through the middle of the holy centre and then joined the ocean. The Gaṅgā flows through towards the North. The Sarasvatī flows towards the East.

30b-31a. The skull was left off there by Śiva of great and noble soul. The worlds attained by those people who go to that holy centre and propitiate the Pitṛs by means of Piṇḍa-offerings in the Śrāddhas, are refulgent ones.

31b-32a. If the murderer of a Brāhmaṇa goes to Avimukta at any time, the Brahmahatyā (the sin of Brahmin-slaughter) recedes due to the greatness of that holy centre.[1]

32b-33a. Those men of great merits who go to Avimukta become everlasting, free from old age and attain salvation and liberation from bodily bondage.

33b-34. If a man or a woman, knowingly or unknowingly commits some inauspicious act through evil intellect, all that is reduced to ashes (the moment) he enters Avimukta.[2]

35. A man staying in Avimukta is like a man who performs sacrifices continuously, who makes charitable gifts always and who continuously performs penance.

36. The salvation attained by the residents of Avimukta cannot be attained by residing at Kurukṣetra, Gaṅgādvāra or in Puṣkara.

37. There is no doubt in this matter that all the living beings have the benefit of truthfulness and penance by all means. But he who stays in Avimukta is Maheśvara himself.

38. Those foolish men of murky mind who do not resort to Avimukta, stay again and again in the midst of faeces, urine and menstrual blood (i.e. they are born of wombs, frequently.)

1. Mbh. Vana—84. 79-80; Pd. P. V-14.191.
2. Mt. P. 181. 17-21.

39. Even those persons of evil actions who come into contact with the dust particles which were lying in Avimukta, and were wafted by the wind towards them attain the greatest goal.

40. The man who stays there, who has controlled his mind and who has great concentration is remembered as equal to an ascetic feeding himself on wind although he may be enjoying all the three worlds.

41. He who stays there for a month, who takes food regularly, but who has controlled his sense-organs is like a person by whom the holy vow of the great Pāśupata Vrata has been performed.

42. He conquers the fear of birth and death; he attains the greatest goal; viz. Mokṣa, he obtains holy salvation and he attains the Yogic goal.

43. Indeed, the Yogic goal cannot be attained by ordinary persons even in hundreds of births. But it is attained here, thanks to the greatness of the holy centre and the superhuman power of Śaṅkara.

44. If a man stays there for a month taking only a single meal a day, O fair-faced lady, his sins committed throughout his life perish in a month.

45. The man who is endowed with the Vow of celibacy and who does not abandon Avimukta until the fall of the body (i.e. death) shall become Śaṅkara himself.

46. If anyone does not abandon Avimukta though overwhelmed by obstacles, he transcends old age and death as well as this transient life.

47. Those who resort to Avimukta till the fall of their bodies, go to divine worlds by means of swan-yoked vehicles after death.

48. A man's mind may be attracted towards worldly pleasures; he may have eschewed devotion and he may be unthinking. But if he dies in this holy centre, he does not re-enter the worldly existence.[1]

49. On this earth, this excellent holy centre is the cause for the attainment of heavenly pleasures as well as salvation.

1. Mt. P. 180.71; Liṅga I. 92.63, Sk. P. IV. 86.122.

There is no doubt about this that he who dies therein, obtains salvation.

50. The great salvation, the region that a Yogin attains in the course of a thousand births, one attains by merely dying here itself.[1]

51-52. Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Śūdras, persons of mixed castes, worms, outcastes alien tribes, persons of sinful birth and of intercaste origin, germs, insects, ants and all kinds of animals and birds who die here in due course of time (at the hands of Kāla) are remembered as lords of gods.

53-54a. They will attain identity of form with Rudra viz. all of them will have crests of crescent, eyes in the forehead and emblems of bull. O auspicious lady, those who cast off their vital airs there, in fact, attain Rudrahood. They rejoice in the vicinity of Śiva.

54b-55a. Whether willingly or unwillingly if one abandons one's life at Avimukta, one shall undoubtedly attain liberation. This is true in the case of even animals.

55b-56a. Those men who had ever been devotees of Śiva exclusively and not of others, those whose minds and vital airs adhere to him (lord Śiva), do become living liberated souls. There is no doubt about it.

56b-57a. O Mohinī, those who enter funeral pyre deliberately, in the holy centre of Avimukta attain complete identity with Rudra, the destructive fire at the end of the world.

57b-58a. There is no return to worldly existence even in hundreds and crores of Kalpas, in the case of those devotees of Śiva who observe fast unto death with a steady resolve.

58b-59a. At the time of death in Avimukta, the lord of all beings himself offers the prayerful word for repetition into the ears of living beings who are urged by their Karmans.

59b-61a. It has been mentioned thus by Rāma himself with great pleasure in his mind to Śiva who performs auspicious things and who resides in Avimukta : — O Śiva, if you yourself instruct my Mantra into the right ear of a dying person whoever he may be, he will become liberated.

1. Mt. P. 180.74; Liṅga I. 92.66.

61b-63. At the time of death when the Karmans of men are being split and when they are being urged by the wind, they lose all memory. The Rudras who are stationed in Avimukta viz. Ḍimicaṇḍeśvara and others are the bestowers of pleasures on devotees. They give the Tāraka Mantra (by whispering it) into the ears. No sinner dying in Avimukta goes to the hell.[1]

64. All persons blessed by Īśvara do attain great salvation. Here the attributes of Avimukta were recounted to you only by way of illustration.

65-66. The detailed explanation of the attributes of Avimukta is like that of the jewels in the ocean. The intellect of the dead, on being led to the heaven, is the same as that of those established in perfect knowledge and wisdom and those who wish for the greatest bliss. A man who abandons his vital airs here, is never born anywhere.

67. That endless salvation of that deity is like that of the Yogins. What is called Śmaśāna[2] (cremation ground) is the pedestal of Yoga and the Tīrtha thereof is Maṇikarṇikā.

68-69a. Liberation is indicated in those places by means of their Karmans in the case of fallen men. In this connection Manikarṇikā[3] is the most excellent of all Tīrthas, since O fair lady, there is perpetual presence of Dhūrjaṭi (Śiva).

1. Sk. P. IV. 32.115-116. The belief still prevails and persons who can afford to do so come to Varanasi in the last stage of their life.

2. Śmaśāna or Mahā-śmaśāna is another name of this holy centre. Cf. Sk. P. Kāśī 30. 111. Pd, P. 1. 33.14; Mt. P. 184.19. The Sk. P. (IV. 30. 103-104) explains that at the end of the world all bhūtas or elements (Śma) lie down here like corpses. Hence it is called Śmaśāna or Mahā-Śmaśāna.

3. Maṇikarṇikā is the sacred-most pool (Tīrtha) out of the five important (Tīrthas) (Pañca-Tīrthī) in Varanasi (Mt. P. 185. 68-69). Its north-south length is 105 hastas i.e. about 160 feet (Sk. P. IV. 99.54). Two popular etymologies of Maṇikarṇikā are recorded in the Sk. P. : (1) A jewel (Maṇi) among muktikṣetras forms the pericarp (Karṇikā) of the lotus-like feet of Mokṣa-Lakṣmī. (ii) God Śiva is the wish-bestowing jewel (Maṇi) who whispers in the ear (Karṇikā) of dying man the Tāraka Mantra (Sk. P. IV. 7.79-80).

69b-70a. O fair-faced lady, by taking his bath there, the righteous soul attains that fruit which ten horse sacrifices are remembered to yield.

70b-71a. He who gives away all his wealth to a Brāhmaṇa who has mastered the Vedas, like the Homa-offerings into the blazing fire attains splendid goal.

71b-72a. The man who observes fast and propitiates Brāhmaṇas decidedly attains the benefit of Sautrāmaṇiyajña (the sacrifice pertaining to Indra).

72b-73a. By offering lights, the sense-organs throb with knowledge. By offering incense, he attains that place resorted to by Rudras.

73b-74. He who marks a young gentle bull and sets it free along with four heifers, attains the greatest goal. Undoubtedly he derives liberation along with his ancestors.

75. Of what avail is much talk ? Infinite benefit accrues to one who performs Dharma etc., with Śiva in view.

76. The merit of ten horse-sacrifices is glorified to accrue to one on giving flowers. In giving incense one gets the benefit of Agnihotra; in giving scents, the benefit is that of making charitable gifts of plots of land.

77. In Mārjana (wiping off) the benefit glorified is that one gets by gifting away a cow; ten times the usual benefit accrues to one who offers unguents. While in offering garlands the benefit is ten-times that of the usual.

78-79a. In (offering vocal) music the benefit is a thousand-fold; in instrumental music the benefit is hundred-thousand fold.

Those who worship and eulogise Mahādeva at Avimukta are liberated from all sins, freed from old age and death. They stand in the heaven.

79b-80. If on reaching Avimukta a man worships the Liṅga, he has no rebirth even in hundreds and crores of Kalpas. Unaging and devoid of death he sports in the presence of Śiva.

81-82a. The liberated souls who perform the Japa of Śatarudrīya with great concentration along with requisite meditation and after restraining the groups of sense-organs, the excellent Brāhmaṇas who are stationed in Avimukta continuously are blessed and have their objects achieved.

82b-83. O famous lady, he who observes fast for a single day undoubtedly derives the benefit of observing fast for a hundred years. Henceforth the identity arising from the confluence of Gaṅgā and Varuṇā.

84. When the twelfth day of the month of Śrāvaṇa coincides with a Wednesday a man should take a holy bath therein. By his mere presence he derives the benefit.

85. He who performs Śrāddha rites at that time and place, O fair faced lady, redeems the Pitṛs and goes to Viṣṇu's world.

86. By giving a horse as gift in accordance with the injunctions, in the world-famous confluence of the Gaṅgā with Varaṇā and Asi,[1] the devotee is not born again (i.e. he gets Mokṣa).

87 The devout man who worships the lord of the Saṅgama (confluence) there, is the Lord of the chiefs of Devas himself. He is competent to restrain and bless.

88. Keśava[2] himself stands to the east of the lord of the Devas. To the east of Keśava is the well-known Saṅgameśvara.

1. This is a bit confusing statement. The confluence of the Varaṇā and the Gaṅgā and that of the Asī with Gangā are two different holy spots in the famous Pañca-Tīrthī of Varanasi. The temple of Lolārka is near the confluence of the Gaṅgā and the Asī.

2. Mt. P. (185. 68-69) regards this Keśava or Ādikeśava of the Sk. P. and the inscriptions of Gahadwal ruler of Kanauj (as in E. I. XIV. 197-198) as one of the holiest shrines. It is near the confluence of the Gaṅgā and Varaṇā. Saṅgameśvara mentioned in this verse is near Ādi-Keśava shrine.

CHAPTER FORTYNINE

Pilgrimage to Kāśi[1]

Vasu said :

1. O beautiful lady, to the north east of that seat of the deity (Saṅgameśvara), four-faced Liṅga had been installed by Sagara.

2. In the north-west corner of the holy centre pertaining to Sagara is the lake Bhadradeha made out of the milk of cows. It is destructive of all sins.

3. O Mohinī, merely by taking bath therein, a man attains the benefit of charitable gift of a thousand Tawny-coloured cows.

4. The period when the constellation Pūrvābhādrapadā coincides with the full moon day, is highly meritorious and it yields the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

5. The goddess who is seen in the cremation ground is well known as Bhīṣma Caṇḍikā. By worshipping her, a man never faces a mishap.

6. Krttivāseśvara[1] is to the East of Antakeśvara, to the South of Sarveśvara and to the north of Mātalīśvara.

7-8a. O gentle lady, by visiting Kṛttivāseśvara and by worshipping him, one attains the greatest goal even in a single birth. This is derived in Kṛttivāsa. Usually the sin committed in the previous birth is not dispelled even by penance. But by visiting that Liṅga (i.e. Kṛttivāsa) that sin perishes instantaneously.

8b-9. In the Kṛtayuga, the Tryambaka Liṅga is to be worshipped, in the Tretāyuga the liṅga of Kṛttivāsas is to be worshipped. It is the Maheśvara Liṅga that is sung about in the Dvāpara. The Liṅga Hastipāleśvara is sung about in the Kali age by the Siddhas.

10. If one desires to get eternal knowledge that absolves one from Saṁsāra and grants immortality one should visit the

1. This chapter describes some of the important holy spots in Varanasi.

god Kṛttivāseśvara[1] again and again.

11. By seeing the lord of the Devas even a murderer of a Brāhmaṇa is liberated from the sin. By touching and worshipping the Liṅga one derives the benefit of all Yajñas.

12-16a. On the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month of Phālguna, the devotees should worship the eternal lord with great faith and concentration by means of flowers, fruits, leaves and diverse kinds of foodstuffs as well as by means of milk, honey, water and ghee. They propitiate and worship the auspicious Liṅga by means of the sound of small hand-drums (Ḍamarus) bowing, dancing, singing, playing on mouth organs, recitation of Stotras (hymns) and chanting Mantras. After observing fast for one night and worshipping lord Śiva with deep devotion, they attain the supreme region, O Mohinī.

16b-17. He who worships Parameśvara on the fourteenth day in the month of Vaiśākha,[2] attains the world of Vaiśākha (lord Kārttikeya) and becomes his follower.

18-19a. He who worships Hara faithfully in the month Jyeṣṭha on the fourteenth day, attains the heavenly world and remains there until the time of dissolution of all living beings.

19b-20a. O gentle lady, he who worships Śiva with purity on the fourteenth day in the month of Āṣāḍha attains the world of the sun and sports himself about as much as he pleases.

20b-21a. By worshipping Yogin Śaṅkara in the month of Bhādrapada with various flowers and fruits the devotee attains the same world as that of Indra.

21b-23a. By worshipping Īśvara on the fourteenth day in the Pitṛpakṣa (dark half of the Bhādrapada month) the devotee attains the world of the Pitṛs and being honoured by them he sports about.

23b-24a. By worshipping Maheśvara, the lord of the Devas, in the month of Prabodha (i.e. Kārttika), the devotee

1. VV. 6-10 describe the glory of Kṛttivāseśvara. It was in the Hara-Tīrtha lane. It was destroyed by Aurangzeb and a masjid was constructed on its site where the site of original Kṛttivāsa Liṅga can be located. Now a new shrine for Kṛttivāseśvara is built near the Mosque (The Kalyāṇa XXX-I Tīrthāṅka, p. 133).

2. VV. 16b-27 describe the various Yātrās to be performed in various months.

attains the world of the moon and sports about as long as he pleases.

24b-25a. By worshipping the Pināka-bearing lord in the dark half of the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, the devotee attains the world of Viṣṇu and sports about there for endless Ages (time).

25b-26a. By worshipping Sthāṇu in the month of Pauṣa with a dilighted mind the devotee attains the spot pertaining to Nirṛti and rejoices alongwith him.

26b-27a. By worshipping Śiva with auspicious flowers, fruits and roots in the month of Māgha, the devotee eschews the ocean of worldly existence and attains Śivaloka.

27b-29. If one wishes for attaining the region of Śaṅkara, one should reside in Avimukta and assiduously worship lord Kṛttivāseśvara. Towards the west of Vyāseśa, there is the deep pool called Ghaṇṭākarṇa. By taking bath in that pool and by visiting Vyāseśa, O gentle lady, wherever one may die one shall have the benefit of dying in Varanasi.

30. If the man takes a holy bath in Daṇḍakhāta and performs Tarpaṇa rite for his deceased ancestors O gentle lady, those who are detained in the hell go to the world of Pitṛs.

31. The uplift of those men of evil deeds who have attained Piśāca-hood (the state of an evil spirit), O gentle lady, is through the offerings of Piṇḍas.

32-33. By seeing that pond, one has his objects achieved: Goddess Lalitā stays there and she bestows happiness on the people. Those who stay in that spot and worship her are given various pleasures by her, O bestower of honour.

34. O Mohinī, she confers the imperishable worlds upon those persons who keep awake with lamps in front of her.

35. Those who erect temples for her, those who sweep the ground thereof shall have the charitable gift of eight thousand gold pieces.

36. Listen to the meritorious benefit of the person, who, O gentle lady, feeds those Brāhmaṇas who are masters of the Vedas, with sweet cooked rice for the sake of the deity.

37. Whether the devotee is a man or a woman, he will be blessed with all worldly pleasures. He will reside in the world of Durgā for the period of a Kalpa and thereafter he will come here again.

38. The couples will be endowed with plenty of wealth and food grains. They will be born in the family of great persons. They will be fortunate, comely in features and proud, thanks to their beauty and youth.

39-40a. O gentle lady, they will be like this :— They will be the object of all pleasures. Whence is the fear of rebirth to that person who, after attaining the rare human birth as fickle as the fall of lightning, visits Lalitā ?

40b-41a. By seeing Lalitā at Vārāṇasī, the man attains the same benefit as one derives after circumambulating the earth.

41b-42. The devotee should observe fast on the fourth day in every month. He should then worship that goddess and keep awake during the night. O gentle lady, he gains prosperity of the three worlds.

43. O Mohinī, after worshipping the praiseworthy Nalakūbarakeśāna who is the bestower of all Siddhis, the man shall have all his objects accomplished.

44. O gentle lady, to the south of it is the holy centre Maṇikarṇī. There is a great Tīrtha in front of it. It is destructive of sins.

45. By seeing lord Maṇikarṇīśvara[1] abiding in the Kuṇḍa (the holy pool), by bowing down and then by worshipping him, one shall cease to stay in a belly once again (i.e. one is liberated from Saṁsāra).

46. By worshipping the great Gaṅgeśvara who is installed in the Gaṅgā to his southern side, the devotee shall attain the world of gods (Svarga).

47. O Mohinī, I shall describe another shrine at Varanasi. The beautiful spot dear to the lord of the Devas is there.

48. Once, O blessed lady, the Liṅga of the moon-crested lord was being taken away by Rākṣasas who were moving speedily through the sky.[2]

1. Vide note 3 on p. 1830

2. VV. 47-56 describe the Liṅga known as Kukkuṭeśvara. The sage's is an attempt to give a popular etymology of the name.

49. When they reached this place, the lord thought—"How will it be possible for me to avoid being separated from the spot of Avimukta ?"

50. O auspicious lady, even as the lord of the Devas was thinking about this, a cock crew there. (There arose the crowing sound of a cock.)

51. O gentle lady, on hearing that sound, the Rākṣasas became mentally afraid. They abandoned the Liṅga there itself, at the time of the early dawn, and fled away.

52-53. When the Rākṣasas ran away thus, the Liṅga remained lying there in an extremely beautiful spot. O beautiful lady, the lord of the Devas himself reappeared in the middle of Avimukta. Hence the place is known to be superior to (other places).

54. Then the name Hara was remembered by the Devas as Avimukta consisting of the most sacred syllables. Avimukta is the bestower of salvation on mobile and immobile beings, particularly on those living beings who die there.

55. O blessed lady, cocks had always been there in that holy spot. Even today they are seen there being worshipped by auspicious souls.

56. O gentle lady, the man who always resorts to it and observes it with his eyes is not reborn even in the course of hundreds and crores of Kalpas.

57. To the south of the lord, there is a splendid tank. If one drinks its water there is no return to the world here.

58-59a. There are three Liṅgas in the hearts of man. Those men by whom the waters of that pool are drunk get their desires accomplished. There is no doubt about this that these persons possess perfect knowledge which redeems them.

59b-60a. By taking bath in the waters of the tank, by seeing the deity named Daṇḍaka and by visiting Avimukta thereafter, one attains Kaivalya (salvation) instantaneously.

60b-61a. If a Brāhmaṇa performs the Sandhyā rites there even once, it is as good as performing the Sandhyā rites for sixtyfive years.

61b-62a. By visiting the city of Varanasi (also known as) the cremation ground (Śmaśāna) Avimuktaka, and the lord of Avimukta one becomes the lord of the Gaṇas.

62b-63a. By seeing the Liṅga Avimukteśvara,[1] the man is immediately liberated from sins, ailments and bondages with which jīvas are fettered.*

63b-64. In front of Avimukta, there is a Liṅga statjoned there facing the West. O gentle lady, it is called Lakṣaṇeśvara. If a man sees Avimukta and Lakṣaṇeśvara he immediately becomes one possessing perfect spiritual knowledge.

65. To the north of it, O gentle lady, there is a fourfaced Liṅga. It is named Caturtheśvara. It is excessively destructive of sins and fears.

66. To all living beings in the world the holy centre Varanasī is the bestower of salvation. But the Liṅga Avimukteśvara there is glorified as Jīvanmukta (i.e. which bestows upon devotees liberation even while they are alive).

67. If a man stays anywhere there, the lordship of Gaṇas is ordained in respect of him. By abandoning the vital breaths there, one shall attain the ultimate salvation.

68. The first Āvaraṇa (enclosure) is remembered to be the area within the above limits. In the second Āvaraṇa (enclosure) the Maṇikarṇikā is to the east.

69. There are seven crores of Liṅgas abiding in that spot. Merely by seeing them one shall attain the benefit of (performing) Yajñas.

70. These are Siddha (self-manifested ?) Liṅgas. (In Kāśi) all wells, tanks, ponds, rivers and pools—all of them are glorified as sacred.

71. A person who will take bath in these with concentrated mind and touch the Liṅgas (while bowing, worshipping etc.) will never re-enter Saṁsāra again.

72. All the important holy centres that are on the Earth and in the firmament have been recounted to yon by me.

73. O fair lady, the pilgrimage to the holy centres, that is destructive of sins, has been described by me. He who

1. VV. 61b-66 glorify Avimukteśvara which a Liṅga in Avimukta-Kṣetra for which vide note 3 on p. 1826 above.

*According to the Pāśupata darśana, the five Pāśas with bind jīvas are the products of Mala, Karman, Māyā, tirodhānaśakti and bindu.

undertakes the pilgrimage and he who sees him attains salvation.

74. O lady of beautiful hips, Avimukta is the splendid middle Āvaraṇa (enclosure). This is named Kaṇṭaka too. At the time of death it is the bestower of final liberation from saṁsāra.

CHAPTER FIFTY

The Glory of Kāśī

Vasu Said :—

1. Henceforth, O Mohinī, I shall recount the proper time for the Yātrā (pilgrimage) which has been undertaken by the Devas and others[1] and which yields befitting benefits.

2. Formerly, in the month of Caitra, this pilgrimage was performed by the heaven-born gods staying there at Kāmakuṇḍa. They were exclusively and devotedly engaged in performing ablutions and worship.

3. In the month of Jyeṣṭha, O splendid-faced lady, the pilgrimage was undertaken by the Siddhas devotedly engaged in the performance of religious bath and worship in the Rudravāsa Kuṇḍa (pool) which was the residence of Rudra.

---

1. VV. 1-10 enumerate the month and holy centres visited by gods and others for pilgrimage.

	Category of The Pilgrim	Month of Pilgrimage	Holy spot (Kuṇḍa) visited etc.
1.	Gods	Caitra	Kāma Kuṇḍa
2.	Siddhas	Jyeṣṭha	Rudra-Vāsa Kuṇḍa
3.	Gandharvas	Āṣāḍha	Priyā-devī Kuṇḍa
4.	Vidyādharas	Śrāvaṇa	Lakṣmi Kuṇḍa
5.	Yakṣas	Āśvina	Mārkaṇḍeya Kuṇḍa
6.	Pannagas	Mārgaśīrṣa	Koṭi-Tīrtha
7.	Guhyakas	Pauṣa	Kapāla-mocana Kuṇḍa
8.	Piśācas	Phālguna	Kāleśvara Kuṇḍa.

4. In the month of Āṣāḍha, the pilgrimage was carried out by the auspicious Gandharvas who performed their ablution and worship in the Kuṇḍa of goddess Priyādevī.

5. O Mohinī, in the month of Śrāvaṇa this pilgrimage was performed by the Vidyādharas who stayed near Lakṣmī-Kuṇḍa and who were devoutly engaged in the performance of ablution therein and the worship of the deity.

6. O fair-faced lady, in the month of Āśvina this pilgrimage was undertaken by Yakṣas who, stationed at the deep pool of Mārkaṇḍeya were engaged in the worship and ablution therein.

7. O Mohinī, in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, this pilgrimage was performed by the Pannagas (serpents) who stayed at the Koṭitīrthas and performed ablutions and worship.

8. O splendid-eyed lady, in the month of Pauṣa this pilgrimage was undertaken by the Guhyakas stationed at Kapālamocana (kuṇḍa) and were engaged in the regular practice of ablution, meditation and worship.

9. O splendid lady, in the month of Phālguna this pilgrimage was undertaken by the Piśācas stationed at the Kuṇḍa (pool) Kāleśvara who were devoutly engaged in ablution, worship etc.

10. Hence, O gentle lady it is well-known that the fourteenth day in the bright half of the auspicious month of Phālguna is called "Piśācī (Caturdaśī)".

11. Henceforth, O splendid-faced lady, I shall tell you the duties and procedure in respect of the pilgrimage, by performing which the man shall attain the full benefit of pilgrimage.

12. Waterpots should be given as gifts accompanied with sweet-cooked rice. They should be beautiful and be covered with cloths and be presented alongwith fruits and flowers.

13. The third day in the bright half of the month of Caitra is highly fruitful. On that day, Gaurī must be visited by men with devotional feelings.

14. O fair-faced lady, after taking bath the devotee should go to the holy centre Goprekṣa. At Svargadvāra (heavenly portals) Kālikādevī should be assiduously worshipped.

15. Another deity is also mentioned to be very great. She is Saṁvartā, the auspicious Lalitā. She should be visited with devotion. She is the bestower of all desired benefit.

16. Thereafter, he (the pilgrim) should feed Brāhmaṇa devotees of Śiva who are observers of pure vows, and offer them clothes and sumptuous monetary gifts of befitting nature.

17. With Pañca-Gaurīs in view the devotee shall dedicate tasty juices and sweet scents to a Brāhmaṇa. He will obtain excellent and great welfare and be endowed with good fortune.

18. I shall now mention the Vināyakas, the creators of obstacles and troubles in the residence of holy centre Kāśī. O gentle lady, by worshipping them, a man attains benefit without any hindrance.

19-20. Having visited Ḍhunḍhi-Vināyaka first (one should next visit) Kīla-Vināyaka, Devī-Vināyaka, Go-prekṣya Vināyaka, Hasti-hasti-Vināyaka and lastly the famous Sindūrya Vināyaka. O queen, all these Vināyakas be visited on the Caturthī (fourth Lunar) day.[1]

21. With these (Vināyakas) in view, sweet-meats (sweet-balls) should be given to a Brāhmaṇa. When this duty is performed the man realises Siddhi (accomplishment of his desire)

22. Henceforth, I shall enumerate the Caṇḍikās[2] who protect the holy place (Kāśī). Durgā protects in the south; Antareśvarī protects in the south-west.

23-24. Aṅgāreśī protects in the west; Bhadrakālikā in the north-west; Bhīmacaṇḍā in the north; Mahāmattā in the north-east, Śāṅkarī accompanied by Ūrdhvakeśī in the east, Adhaḥkeśī in the south-east and Citraghaṇṭā in the middle.

1. Vināyakas were originally trouble-mongering spirits. They were to be propitiated at the beginning of any undertaking lest they should spoil the work. Their identification with god Gaṇeśa and attribution of auspicious nature to them is a later development in epics. It is reported that there were 56 Vināyakas at Varanasi. The most frequented is Ḍhuṇḍi-rāja Gaṇeśa to the west of Annapūrṇā temple.

2. Like Vināyakas, Caṇḍikās are the other category to be propitiated for one's protection, though their main job is to guard Varanasi. Their postings are enumerated in VV. 22-27.

25. These goddesses (Caṇḍikās) when visited by men become delighted with them. All of them eagerly protect the holy place.

26. O gentle lady, they continuously create obstacles for sinners. Hence, for the sake of protection, the goddesses should always be worshipped along with the Vināyakas.

27. If one wishes for the greatest Siddhi, progeny, prosperity and happiness, one must offer scents, fragrant flowers, Naivedyas etc. with devotion.

28. O lady of beautiful eyes, I shall recount to you another thing in that holy spot (city). There are three rivers flowing there with splendid waters.

29-31. Merely by seeing them the sin of the murder of a Brāhmaṇa recedes. The first of these is Trisrotā (the three-currented). The next one is Mandākinī and the third is Matsyodarī. These three bestow merits. Among them Mandākinī is highly meritorious. It is stationed in Madhyameśvara. Trisrotā that exceedingly bestows merit, flows in Avimukta; Matsyodarī is stationed at Oṁkāra; it is always the bestower of merit.

32. O Mohinī, the time when the Gaṅgā flows into that holy spot is extremely meritorious. It is difficult even to the Devas to get its advantage.

33. Will anybody bewail if he takes bath in the meritorious (holy centre) Nādeśvara sprinkled with the waters of Jāhnavī? (No).

34. O auspicious lady, Śiva got rid of the skull by bathing in it at a time when the Gaṅgā got mingled with the Matsyodarī.

35. The great lake named Kapālamocana is there itself. It is glorified as sanctifying of all living beings. It bestows merit on them.

36-37. The Gaṅgā gets mixed with the waters of the Matsyodarī near Oṁkāreśvara. If at that time a man takes bath in its waters and visits lord Oṁkāra, he is not contaminated by grief, old age and the bondage of death. One who takes bath therein himself becomes that deity, called Oṁkāreśvara.

38-39. O fair-faced lady, out of affection for you, this esoteric secret has been communicated to you.[1] The (constituents) there are Akāra (letter 'A') Ukāra (letter 'U') and Makāra (letter 'M'). The letter 'A' should be known as the bestower of the goal of Viṣṇu's world. The letter 'U' is reputed to be on its southern side.

40. Bṛhaspati the preceptor of the Devas attained great Siddhi there. Oṁkāra should be known as the unchanging region of Brahman.

41. To the north side of both of them is the letter 'M' termed as Viṣṇu's syllable. Sage Kapila, the great ascetic achieved Siddhi at that Liṅga.

42. After coming to Varanasi, Bhīṣma stayed there, worshipping the lord of the Devas, the excellent Pañcāyatana (five-aboded Śiva).

43. In that highly hallowed spot, Śiva manifested himself. He is well-known as Gopreksaka. He is eulogised by all the deities.

44. After approaching, visiting and worshipping Gopreksesvara, a man never attains wretchedness. He is liberated from sins.

45. The cows staying in the forests and wandering about on being scorched by the forest-fire approached this deep pool of water and became calm. They drank water then.

46. Ever since then, this came to be called Kāpilāhrada (the Pool of Kapilā cows.) There also Śiva (who manifested himself) is as Vṛṣabha-dhvaja (bull-emblemed one).

47-49a. The lord always maintains his presence there and is always seen at that place. By taking bath in this holy Tīrtha of Kapilāhrada, and by visiting the bull-emblemed Śiva, the devotee of well-controlled mind shall attain the benefit of all the Yajñas. On dying there, he attains the heavenly world. By worshipping Śiva he becomes Śiva himself. With a different physical body, he attains Gaṇa-hood which is very difficult to attain.

49b-50. In this spot itself, cows were retained by Brahmā himself for peace in all the worlds and certainly to

1. This is an esoteric way of identifying the three mātrās of the sacred syllable Oṁ with the three rivers.

sanctify all. (It is from their milk that) the holy splendid lake Bhadradoha is created there. It is holy and destructive of sins.

51. A man who takes bath in that spot (Tīrtha) shall himself become the lord of speech. Śiva was brought there and installed by Parameṣṭhin (god Brahmā).

52. Collecting it from Brahmā, another Liṅga was installed by Viṣṇu. Śiva then remained there by the name Hiraṇyagarbha.

53. Thereafter, again, Brahmā installed a Liṅga which was named Svarlokeśvara (lord of heavenly world) which exhibited the divine heavenly sports at times.

54. By visiting that lord of the Devas, the devotee is honoured in Śiva's world. By abandoning the vital breath here, the devotee is not born again anywhere.

55-56. His state becomes eternal which is the same as in the case of Yogins. In this very same part of the earth, a certain Daitya, the thorn to the deities, had assumed the form of a tiger. This proud and strong Daitya was killed (by the lord), who became famous as Vyāghreśvara.[1] He abides here continuously.

57-58a. By visiting this lord of the immortals, the devotee never faces wretchedness. The Liṅga that is installed by the mountain Himālaya is stationed (and known as) Śaileśvara. O gentle lady, by visiting this no man will ever attain wretchedness.

58b-59. There were two Daityas Utpala and Vidala. As a result of the boon granted by Brahmā, they became arrogant. Seeing that they became indulgent to women out of lustfulness, Pārvatī killed them with bow and with a spear.* As a memento of it, this Liṅga has been established.

60. By visiting this Liṅga that has occupied the most important spot, no man is subjected to grief. O gentle lady, he becomes a Siddha in every one of his births.

1. Purāṇa-writers are fond of giving popular etymologies vide our note on Kukkuṭeśvara.

*The text Sāraṅgaṁ kantukenātra is corrupt and obscure. It is emended Śāṅgeṇa kuntakenātra and translated as above.

61. All round it, Liṅgas were installed by the Devas. By visiting there a man shall become a Gaṇa with a different body assuming a new form after death.

62-63. This river Varanasi (combined name for Varaṇā and Asī) is sacred and destructive of sins. After embellishing this holy centre, it meets with the Jāhnavī. In this confluence, an excellent Liṅga was installed by Brahmā. It is wellknown in the whole universe as Saṅgameśvara. May it be seen.

64. Whence is the fear of a rebirth to that person who takes holy dip, O auspicious lady, in the confluence of the two divine rivers and worships god Saṅgameśvara (lord of the confluence).

65. O gentle lady, the Liṅga installed by Śukra, the son of Bhṛgu, is known by the name Śukreśvara. It is worshipped by all Siddhas and immortal ones (i.e. gods).

66. By visiting this (Liṅga) a man shall immediately be liberated from all sins. After death, the man is never born in the world.

67. O Mohinī, Jambūka, a great Daitya was killed here by Mahādeva. By visiting that Liṅga, a man shall attain all desires.

68-69. Know that all these meritorious Liṅgas were installed by the Devas, the leader of whom was Indra. They bestow all desires. Thus, O Mohinī, all these Śiva Liṅgas in the holy place of Avimuktaka have been recounted to you by me.

CHAPTER FIFTYONE

The Greatness of Kāśi (concluded)

Vasu said :—

1. Now I shall narrate to you the excellent glory of the Gaṅgā as it flows through Varanasi. It yields worldly pleasure as well as Liberation from Saṁsāra after death.

2. Whatever meritorious deed is performed in Avimukta shall attain everlasting benefit. No sinner, after going to Avimukta, falls into the hell.

3-4a. O auspicious lady, the sin that is committed at Avimukta shall remain adamantine.[1] All the salvation-yielding Tīrthas in the three worlds, all of them entirely resort to the Gaṅgā which flows towards the north at Kāśī.

4b-6a. He who takes bath, at Daśāśvamedha and visits Śiva, Viśveśvara (Lord of the universe) shall immediately become free from sins and is liberated from worldly ties. Everywhere the Gaṅgā is holy and dispeller of the sin of murder of a Brāhmaṇa. Especially it is so at Varanasi where (the Gaṅgā) flows towards the north.

6b-7a. Merely by taking bath at the confluence of Varaṇā, Asī and Jāhnavī, a man is liberated from all sins.

7b-8a. By taking the holy dip in the Gaṅgā that flows towards the north at Kāśī, in the months of Kārttika as well as Māgha, men are liberated from Mahāpātakas (great sins) and other evils.

8b-9. O highly blessed lady, the well-known Tīrthas in all the worlds come always to the Jāhnavī at Kāśī at the time of Parvans (holy occasions) alongwith the holy shrines.

10-11a. It is to wipe off their own sins originating from their contact with persons defiled by the defects of great sins, that they go everyday to the Gaṅgā that flows towards the north at Kāśī. The waters of Gaṅgā are conducive to liberation from all sorts of sins.

1. Sk. P. —Kāśī. 33-115.

11b-13a. O gentle lady, salvation may or may not be obtained in the course of a hundred births by an intelligent devotee who is engaged in holy rites in other holy centres. But here, by the death in the Gaṅgā at Kāśī, salvation is attained in the course of a single birth by a man whose Ātman is not turned round (to the good path ?).

13b-14. O beautiful lady, a deep pool named Dharma-nada is famous there itself. Dharma (piety) stands embodied there and destroys great sins. The dust thereof purges all sins. It is auspicious and it consists of all Tīrthas.

15-16. The river Dhūtapāpā shall dispel multitudes of great sins like the tree on its banks. The following five rivers have been glorified :— viz : Kiraṇā, Dhūtapāpā, Sarasvatī of the holy waters, Gaṅgā and Yamunā. Hence, the holy centre Pañcanada[1] (spot of five rivers) has become well-known in all the three worlds.

17-18a. He who plunges into that holy river does not take up the physical body consisting of five elements (i.e. is liberated). Merely by taking bath in this confluence of five rivers, that dispels all sins, a man pierces through the bower of cosmic egg and goes to the Brahman and realises salvation.

18b-19a. Certainly, one attains in a single day by a holy dip in the Pañcanada at Kāśī, the same benefit as is obtained by means of an elaborate bath and ablution at Prayāga throughout the month of Māgha.

19b-20a. By taking the holy dip in the Tīrtha of Pañcanada, by performing the rite of Tarpaṇa for the Pitṛs and by worshipping Viṣṇu, the lord of Lakṣmī, one never takes rebirth.

1. VV. 15-40 describe the glory of Pañca-nada. It is so-called as there is a confluence of five rivers viz. the Kiraṇā, Dhūta-Pāpā, Sarasvatī, Gaṅgā and Yamunā. And Pañcagaṅgā ghāṭ at Varanasi is regarded as the place of this confluence. Actually there is only the Gaṅgā at the Ghāṭ, the existence of other four rivers is a matter of faith. Dharma-nada, Dhūta Pāpaka, Bindu-saras and Pañca-nada are the names of the same holy centre chronologically in Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali ages. Cf. Sk. P. IV. 59.115-117. VV. 101-113 of the same chapter give interesting stories regarding the names of tributaries (to the Gaṅgā) viz. Dhūta-Pāpā, Kiraṇā.

20b-21a. The satisfaction of the Pitṛs lasts for as many years as the number of gingelly seeds offered to the Pitṛs in the course of the water-libation in the holy Tīrtha of Pañcanada.

21b-22a. The ancestors of those by whom the Śrāddha rite has been performed in the splendid Tīrtha of Pañcanada with great faith, shall be liberated, though they may have been born in different wombs.

22b-24a. In the world of Yama this song is being sung by the groups of Pitṛs. "After seeing the greatness of Pañcanada in regard to the performance of Śrāddha rites, some-one belonging to our family may perform Śrāddha whereby we may be able to go to the Pañcanada Tīrtha at Kāśī and be liberated".

24b-26a. If any wealth is given as gift in the holy centre of Pañcanada, the merit that accrues to one does not dwindle even after Kalpas pass away. Even a barren lady will certainly give birth to a son if she takes her holy dip in the deep pool of the Pañcanada for a whole year and worships Maṅgalā Gaurī.

26b-27a. By performing holy ablution of the goddess well-known in all quarters (Dik-Śruta) with the holy waters of the Pañcanada filtered by means of the cloth, one attains great benefit.

27b-28a. A drop of the water of the Pañcanada was weighed against pots of Pañcāmṛta hundred and eight in number and was found to be superior to it.

28b-29a. By drinking a drop of the waters of Pañcanada with great faith, one attains that purity which is said to be acquired when Pañca-gavya is drunk.

29b-32. By taking the holy dip in the waters of the Pañcanada, one attains hundred times the benefit acquired by Rājasūya and Aśvamedha sacrifices. The Rājasūya and Aśvamedha sacrifices may be the means for attaining heaven, but through the waters of Pañcanada liberation is attained from Dvandva (mutually opposing pairs e.g. Pleasure-Pain) that covers up even the Brahman (i.e. Avidyā). Even the ablution with the waters of heavenly river is not so much approved of by good men as that of the Pañcanada. It is the bestower of boons not obtained from others. By taking the holy dip for once in the Pañcanada in the month of Kārttika, one derives the same benefit as is obtained by performing penance in the Kṛta age for a hundred years.

33-36. In the bath through the waters of the Pañcanada, one gets more benefit than is obtained through the holy rites of Iṣṭāpūrta performed in the course of whole life elsewhere. There is no other Tīrtha on the whole of the Earth, like Dhūtapāpa since, through a single bath therein, the entire sin accumulated in the course of three births perishes. In the Kṛta age Dharmanada is the holy Tīrtha, in the Tretā, it is Dhūtapāpā; in the Dvāpara it is Bindutīrtha and in the Kali it is Pañcanada. By making the gift of gold of the weight of a Guñjā-berry in the Bindutīrtha, no man shall ever become indigent. He is never devoid of happiness.

37-38a. By giving anything, whether it is a cow, a plot of land, gingelly seeds, gold, a horse, clothes, cooked rice, position or ornament, in the Bindutīrtha, one shall attain an ever lasting benefit.

38b-39a. By offering a single Āhuti in accordance with the injunctions in a well-kindled fire in the holy Tīrtha of Dharmanada, one shall attain the benefit of a crore of Homas.

39b-40. No one is competent to describe adequately the endless greatness of the Pañcanada Tīrtha that is the abode of all splendour of the four-fold aims of life. Thus, O gentle lady, the excellent greatness of Kāśī has been recounted to you.

41-42. It bestows happiness. It bestows salvation on men. It is destructive of sins. Even a Brāhmaṇa-slayer, a drink-addict, a thief of gold, a defiler of the preceptor's bed or a person guilty of principal and subsidiary sins shall attain purity on hearing the greatness of Avimukta.

43. A Brāhmaṇa shall become a great scholar of the Vedas; a Kṣatriya shall be victorious in battle; a Vaiśya shall be the lord of wealth and a Śūdra shall be an associate of the devotees of Viṣṇu.

44-46. O blessed lady, by listening to this, by reading this frequently, one attains all those benefits that are mentioned in the case of all Yajñas (sacrifices) and all the merits in the case of all Tīrthas. He who seeks learning shall obtain learning. He who seeks wealth shall obtain wealth. He who seeks wife shall get a wife and he who seeks son shall obtain a son. The greatness of Avimukta has been recounted to you by me.

47-48. This must be imparted to a devotee of Viṣṇu or to one engaged in devotion to Śiva or to a devotee of the mother of the universe or to one who serves the sun and Vighneśvara. By giving this to a person rendering service to his preceptor, one shall attain the benefit of the holy dip in a Tīrtha. By giving this to a rogue, a person who censures, a person who hates Brāhmaṇas, cows, and Devas, a person who is malicious towards the elderly persons or a person who is jealous of them, one may attain death.

CHAPTER FIFTYTWO

The Greatness of Puruṣottama[1] (Jagannātha of Puri)

Mohini said :

1. O excellent Brahmin, you are blessed. You are merciful to all embodied beings. (I am blessed) because the excellent greatness of Kāśī has been heard from your lotus-like mouth.

1. It is significant that the NP. attaches the highest importance to Puruṣottama Ksetra (Jagannātha of Puri—Orissa) as it devotes 843 verses to it, while Kāśī is described only in 279 verses and Prayāga, the so-called King of all Tīrthas only in 229 verses. According to the author of the NP., the traditionally famous Tri-sthalī—Prayāga, Varanasi and Gayā is less important than Puruṣottama Kṣetra. And his order of priorities in describing Kṣetras is Gayā, Kāśi, Puruṣottama Ksetra and Prayāga. This data gives credence to the theory that the author of the NP must be a person from a state in East India.

2. I feel that I have accomplished my objects in life since now I have been enlightened by you. Although I had fallen into the ocean of worldly existence, I have been redeemed by you, the merciful one.

3. Now I wish to hear, O bestower of honour, the greatness of a holy place of Hari, by going to which men become contented.

4. It is reported that a holy centre of Viṣṇu, the most excellent among other centres is described in the Purāṇas by sage and Brāhmaṇas as efficacious in granting Liberation from Saṁsāra.

5. May that be recounted, O blessed one, if I am liked by you as a disciple of yours. Indeed good men are always engaged in rendering continuous service to all the people of the world.

Vasu said :

6. O gentle lady, listen. I shall recount to you about the excellent greatness of the holy centre named Puruṣottama as narrated by god Brahmā.

7-8a. In the whole of this earth, Bhārata is said to be a Karmabhūmi (the land of holy rites). There, in the Bhāratavarṣa, on the shores of the southern sea, is a land known as Utkala. It is the bestower of heaven and Mokṣa (salvation) on all.

8b-9a. It is to the north of the ocean and it extends upto Virajamaṇḍala (a country stretching for ten miles round Jaipur on the river Vaitarṇī). This land is embellished with all the attributes of those who are habituated in performing meritorious deeds.

9b-11. O lady of large eyes, it should be known that there are many Tīrthas and holy shrines. In Utkala, on the northern shores of the ocean, in that land which is the most excellent of all, there is a great holy centre which yields salvation and dispels sins. It is in a place covered with sand everywhere. It is sacred and it bestows piety and love.

A large no. of verses on this topic are common to the NP and the Brahma Purāṇa (BM. P.), the NP, being presumably the borrower.

12-13a. The holy centre which is difficult of access is ten Yojanas in extent. Just as the moon is the best among constellations;[1] just as the ocean is the best among lakes (water-reservoirs), so is the holy centre Puruṣottama the best among sacred places.

13b-14a. Just as the fire-god is the best among Vasus, Just as Śaṅkara is the best among Rudras, so is the holy centre Puruṣottama, the most excellent of all holy centres.

14b-15a. Just as the Brāhmaṇa is the best among the castes, and Vainateya (Garuḍa) (the excellent most) among birds, so also Purusottama is the most excellent among holy centres.

15b-16a. Just as Skanda is among commanders; Kapila among Siddhas.

16b-25a. Airāvata among leading elephants; Bhṛgu among great sages; Meru among the mountains; the Himālayas among the immovables (i.e. mountains); Uccaiśśravas among the horses; Uśanas among the wise thinkers; Vyāsa among the sages; Kubera among Yakṣas and Rākṣasas, the mind among sense-organs; the earth among the elements; the Aśvattha among the trees; the wind-god among those who purify; Arundhatī among women; the thunderbolt among weapons; like the letter 'A' among letters; like the Gāyatrī among metres; the head (Uttamāṅga) among limbs; the spiritual lore of salvation among all lores; the king among men; Kāmadhenu (the wish-yielding cow) among cows; gold among all metals; Vāsuki among serpents; Prahlāda among Daityas; Rāma among the wielders of weapons; sharks among fishes; lion among beasts; Varuṇa among water deities; Yama among those who restrain; the milk ocean among oceans; Nārada among divine sages; Bṛhaspati (Jupiter) among priests; Kāla (Time) among reckoners; Bhāskara (the sun) among planets. Praṇava (Oṁ) among the

1. VV. 13-24 are an echo of BG (Bhagavad-gītā) X. 21-33. In the BG., the best specimen of individual is the Vibhūti of the Lord, here Puruṣottama Kṣetra is the best in all holy places as the Lord's Vibhūtis are the excellent most ones in their respective categories or species.

mantras and virtuous rites among duties—so should be known) Śrīpuruṣottama among holy centres.

25b-26. By visiting at least once, Puruṣottama who stands on the shore of the ocean, by knowing the Brahmavidyā once, there is no further stay within the womb.

Thus the holy centre is endowed with all attributes. It is highly diffiicult of access.

27. O fair lady, Puruṣottama, the lord of Devas, the Ātman of the Universe, pervading the universe stays where the holy centre Puruṣottama is.

28-29a. Where the lord of the universe, the source of origin of the universe is present, everything is established there. All the following are present therein :- Aja (Brahmā), Indra, Rudra, Agni and other Devas; O highly blessed lady, all these stay there always in that land.

29b-35. The following too are present :— The Gandharvas, the celestial damsels, Siddhas, Pitṛs, Devas, human beings, Yaksas, Vidyādharas, the sages of praise-worthy holy vows; the sages Vālakhilya and others; Kaśyapa and other Prajāpatis; Suparṇas; Kinnaras; Nāgas, and other residents of heaven; the four Vedas along with their ancillaries; the different scriptures; Itihāsas, Purāṇas, sacrifices wherein many monetary gifits (as religious fees) are given; the different sacred rivers; the holy centres and shrines; the ocean and the mountains were established in that land. Who will not like to live in such a meritorious land inhabited by the gods, sages and Pitṛs and fully equipped with all means of enjoyment ? There is the surpassing excellence of that lord. What is it that surpasses that wherein the lord of the universe, Puruṣottama, the bestower of salvation is present ? Blessed are those men who stay in Utkala and resemble the Devas.

36. Those men who take bath in the waters of the Tīrtharāja (the king of holy centres, viz. the Sea) and visit Puruṣottama, stay in the heaven and not in the abode of a Rājasa nature.

37. Fruitful is the life of those residents of Utkala of great intellect who habitually reside in the meritorious holy centre of Śrīpuruṣottama in Orissa.

38-40a. (Blessed are they) who see the lotus-like face of Kṛṣṇa, wherein the lips are very red like copper, the eyes are pleasant and large, the eyebrows, the tresses and coronets are very beautiful; which is embellished with beautiful ear-rings, which is beautified with smiles, and charming earrings; wherein the teeth are beautiful and the nose, cheeks and forehead have all good characteristics and which cause delight to the three worlds.

40b-41a. O gentle lady, it is reported that formerly, in the Kṛta age there was a glorious king wellknown as Indradyumna. His exploits were like those of Indra.

41b-42. He was truthful of speech, pure, clever and competent. He was the most excellent among the warrious wielding weapons. He was charming and blessed, brave and a liberal donor. He was an enjoyer of pleasures, and pleasing in speech. He was the performer of all Yajñas, and he was friendly to Brāhmaṇas.

43. He was truthful of promise. He was an adept in the Vedas, Scriptures and the science of archery. He was contented. He was popular with men and women like the moon on a Full-moon day.

44. He was like the sun in being too dazzling to be seen directly; he was as sweet as the moon; he was a devotee of Viṣṇu; he was endowed with truthfulness; he had conquered anger, he had subjugated sense-organs.

45. He was engaged in spiritual learning; he was fond of virtue and piety and brave. Thus the king, the abode of all attributes, protected the earth.

46. He became inclined to the propitiation of Viṣṇu. He thought, "How shall I propitiate Janārdana, the lord of the Devas.

47. In which holy centre, Tīrtha, or hermitage shall I do So." Thinking thus he mentally surveyed the whole of the earth.

48-49a. He reviewed before his mind's eye the various holy centres of the earth that dispel sins. Finally, he decided on the well-known great holy centre Puruṣottama that bestows salvation.

49b-50. The king went there with the full complement of his vehicles and army. He got a lofty palace erected there. He performed a horse-sacrifice in accordance with the injunctions and distributed wealth by way of monetary gifts.

51-52. The powerful king installed Saṅkarṣaṇa, Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā there. He caused five Tīrthas[1] to be constructed there. With great devotion he performed ablution, charitable gift, Japa, Homa and the visit to the deity. He propitiated lord Puruṣottama every day in accordance with the injunctions and with great devotion. Thanks to the grace of the lord of the Devas, he attained salvation.

Mohini enquired :

53-56a. O Lord, was there an already installed image of Viṣṇu in that excellent, meritorious sacred Vaiṣṇavite place called Puruṣottama, for the sake of which the king went there along with his army and vehicles and established the images of Kṛṣṇa, Balarāma and Subhadrā, the bestower of auspicious things. I have great doubt, O excellent Brāhmaṇa and feel a great surprise too. I wish to hear everything. Tell me the reason thereof.

Vasu narrated :

56b. Listen to the anecdote forming its background—a story which destroys sins.

57. I shall succinctly narrate to you what was formerly asked by goddess Śrī on the top of the golden peak of mount Sumeru which was full of all wondrous things.

58-59a. The goddess bowed down with her head to Lord Jagannātha, the imperishable (eternal), creator of the world

1. Every important Tīrtha has generally a set of five important-most sub-tīrthas which are called jointly Pañca-Tīrthī. According to BM. P. 60.11, Mārkaṇḍeya pool, Banyan tree (identified with Kṛṣṇa), Balarāma, the ocean (the Bay of Bengal) and Indradyumna lake (Saras) are the five important Tīrthas. The credit of creating or causing these is given to Indradyumna here.

who was residing there. Out of her desire for the benefit of the world, she asked this following question regarding the excellent-most holy place on the earth.

Śrī said :

59b-61. "O lord of all the worlds, tell me now clearing the doubts in my heart. The mortal world, the earth, is full of great miracles. It is very difficult to perform auspicious Karmans leading to Mokṣa here. It is a great ocean of lust and fury and contains big sharks (crocodiles) in the form of coveteousness and delusion. What is it, then, whereby the Ātman is liberated from impassable ocean of worldly existence ? Excepting you there is no one in the world who will propound everything and dispel my doubt."

62. On hearing her words thus, Janārdana, the lord of the Devas, spoke with great pleasure and explained the great means of happiness that is comparable to the nectar and great essence of everything—the means that is easily achievable yield great benefit and will not cause any strain.

The glorious Lord said :

63-64.[1] O goddess, there is a wellknown excellent holy centre named Puruṣottama. In the three worlds there is nothing else equal to this. O goddess of the Devas, by glorifying it, one is liberated from all sins.

65. It is not fully comprehended and realised by men; Daityas or Dānavas. O fair-faced lady, this is pointed out by Marīci and other excellent sages.

66-67a. On the shore of the southern sea, there is a holy (Indian) fig (Nyagrodha) tree. Even during the (close of the) kalpa, when everything is destroyed by means of great meteors (?) it is not destroyed. It remains by itself there.

67b-69a. As soon as one sees that banyan tree or if one resorts to its shade frequently, the sin of even Brāhmaṇa-slaughter perishes. What then about other lesser evils ? Those creatures (living beings) which circumambulate it and make obeisance to it, shake off their sins. All of them go to Keśava's abode (Vaikuṇṭha).

1. The rest of this chapter from vv. 63-87 is a prolonged quotation (with a few verses deleted in between) from the BM. P. Ch. 45 vv. 53-89, the only difference is that in the NP. the interlocutors are Śrī and Śrī Bhagavān (Viṣṇu) and in the BM. P. god Brahmā and sages.

69b-71a. On the southern side of the shrine of Keśava and to the north of the holy fig tree is the region of holy Dharma. By seeing the image made by the lord himself at the place, men go to my mansion without any exertion.

71b-72a. Going (along that way) once Dharmarāja (Yama) saw me, approached me and bowing down his head, spoke to me thus :-

72b. "Obeisance to you O lord, to the brilliant refulgence, to the lord of worlds.

73-81a. I bow down to that lord who stays in the milk-ocean; who lies down on the extensive body of Śeṣa; who is the most excellent one; who is the bestower of boons; who is the everlasting maker of the worlds; who is Viṣṇu. the unborn (eternal) lord of the universe; who is omniscient; who is unconquered; who is dark in complexion like the blue lily; whose eyes resemble the lotuses; who is present everywhere, who is devoid of attributes, quiet, the unchanging creator of the universe; who is the maker of worlds; who is the lord of worlds; who is conducive to happiness; who is the ancient Puruṣa, worthy of being known; who is both manifest and unmanifest, who is the eternal ancient Being, who is the creator; who is a sanctifying holy being unto all the worlds; who is the preceptor of the universe; who is endowed with Śrīvatsa on his chest; who is bedecked in Vanamālās (garlands of sylvan flowers); who is clad in yellow garments; who has four arms who wields conch, discus and iron club; who is beautified with necklaces and armlets; who wears coronet and bracelets; who is endowed with all auspicious characteristics; who is devoid of all sense organs; who is as steady and firm as a mountain; who is subtle, eternal and of the form of fiery brilliance; who is devoid of both existence and nonexistence; pervasive and beyond Prakṛti. I bow down to that Iśvara, the lord of the universe, the lord bestowing happiness. Thus the lord of Dharma (Yama) eulogised me with different hymns in the vicinity of the holy fig tree. Then he made obeisance to me.

81b-83. "O highly blessed lady, on seeing him standing with palms joined with reverence after obeisance, O gentle lady, I asked the god of Death, the reason for the eulogy, "O mighty armed Vaivasvata, you are identical with all Devas. Why did you eulogise me thus. Tell me succinctly".

Yama said :

84-85. In this holy shrine, well-known after Puruṣottama there is an idol made of Indranīla (sapphire). It bestows all desires. O lotus-eyed deity, men devoid of desires see that idol with faith and (single-minded) emotional feelings and go to the world called Śveta (Dvīpa).

86. Hence, O destroyer of enemies, I cannot proceed with my usual work of chastising the sinners. O great lord, be pleased. Withdraw this idol, O lord."

87. On hearing these words of Vaivasvata Yama, I spoke to him thus— "O Yama, I shall conceal this idol with sands all round".

88. Thereafter, O gentle lady, that idol was concealed with creepers, so that men desirous of going to heaven could not see it.

89. O gentle lady, after hiding it with creepers of golden coverings (?) I bade farewell to Yama to the southern direction".

90-91. Janārdana, the Lord of the Devas, narrated to her the following incidents that happened thereafter in the holy place, the famous sacred shrine of Puruṣottama, when the sapphire idol was concealed—all the following incidents occurred:-

92-97. Indradyumna's departure; visit to the shrine; description of the holy centre; O Mohinī, its prosperity, the vision of Baladeva and of Kṛṣṇa in particular and that of Subhadrā; the greatness of them all; the vision of Narasiṁha; the glorification of prosperity; the vision of Ananta and Vāsudeva; the glorification of his attributes; the greatness of Śvetamādhava; the description of the gateway of heaven; the sight of the ocean; the ablution therein and the performance of Tarpaṇa rite: the greatness of ablution in the sea and of Indradyumna pool (saras) ; the benefit of the Pañcatīrthas (five shrines and holy pools) on the full moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha; the bath of Kṛṣṇa and holy Balarāma; the benefit of all pilgrimages; the description of the world of Viṣṇu and again of the holy place. Thus Puruṣottama himself described to her the truth of all these things.

CHAPTER FIFTYTHREE

The Greatness of Puruṣottama (Contd.)

Mohini said :

1-2. O leading sage, kindly narrate to me what I ask about the ancient Being; as to how those idols were formerly made by Indradyumna and in what manner was Mādhava pleased with him; O, Brāhmaṇa. elucidate everything to me, as I am eager to hear about it.

Vasu said :

3. O lady of beautiful eyes, listen, I shall recount the ancient story of the origin of the idols, the mythological tradition that is on a par with the Vedas.

4. When the great Sacrifice commenced and the mansion had been built, king Indradyumna began to worry about the idols day and night.[1]

5. He pondered : "By what means can I see Puruṣottama the lord of the Devas, the conceiver and creator of the worlds and the cause of creation, maintenance and dissolution of the worlds ?".

6. The king who was anxious and worried could not sleep properly by day or by night. He did not enjoy the various worldly pleasures nor was he interested in taking bath or bedecking himself.

1. VV. 4-9 are selected Verbatim from BM. P. 48. 4-12. Thus NP. 4, 5, 6, NP 7, 8, 9=BM.P 10, 11, 11.

7. "On the surface of the earth three types of idols befitting Viṣṇu and marked with all characteristics are seen. Viz. : the idols made of stone, of wood or of metals.

8. The idols made of these three, when installed shall give pleasure. They shall be the beloved of the deity and worshipped by the Devas".—Thus the king pondered over in his mind.

9. After worshipping Puruṣottama in accordance with the injunctions in the scripture 'Pañcarātra', the anxious ruler of the Earth began to eulogise him.

Indradyumna prayed :[1]

10. O Vāsudeva, obeisance be to you, O cause of liberation, homage to you, O lord of all the worlds, save me from the ocean of births (and deaths) and the worldly existence.

11. Hail to you, O Puruṣottama, resembling a pure silken garment, O Saṁkarṣaṇa, obeisance be to you. Rescue me, O supporter of the earth.

12. Obeisance be to you (the deity) with the golden womb; Bow to you, the shark-emblemed lord. O lover of Rati, obeisance to you. Save me, O destroyer of Śambara.

13. Hail to you (the deity) resembling the cloud (in complexion) ; salute to you (the deity) favourably disposed to the devotees. O Aniruddha, obeisance be to you. Redeem me. Be the bestower of boons.[2]

14. Bow to you the seat of residence of the Devas. Obeisance to you who are dear to the Devas. O Nārāyaṇa, obeisance be to you, protect me who have sought refuge in you.

15. Hail to you, O most excellent one among powerful beings; Obeisance to you O ploughshare-armed one. Bow to you, the most excellent one among the Devas. Obeisance to you the lotus-born.

---

1. This prayer by Indradyumna—vv. 10-68 (the end of the chapter) is a prolonged quotation (with a few deletions) from BM. P. ch. 51. 1-59 which is also the prayer by Indradyumna.

2. VV. 10-13 are salutations to the four Vyūhas (manifestations of Viṣṇu). The NP. is depicted by the Pañcarātra Āgama.

16. O four-faced god, O creator of the universe; protect me, O great-grandfather of the universe, obeisance to you, who have the lustre of the blue cloud. Hail to you, one worshipped by the gods.

17. Redeem me, O Viṣṇu. O lord of the universe, Rescue me who am immersed in the ocean of worldly existence—O deity resembling the fire of dissolution, obeisance to you, the destroyer of the Daityas.

18-19. O Narasiṁha of great prowess, protect me, O deity of blazing eyes. O great boar, just as the earth that was formerly sunk into the waters had been lifted up from the nether-worlds, so also you rescue me from the ocean of misery. O Kṛṣṇa, the forms of your limbs (your ancillary forms) that bestow boons have been eulogised by me.

20-22. You and these viz. Baladeva and others are stationed in separate forms. O lord, O lord of the Devas, Garuḍa and others are your ancillaries. So also are the guardians of the quarters along with their weapons, such as Vâsava (Indra) and others. O Acyuta, O lord of the universe, O lord of the Devas with large eyes expressing delight, all your forms, these and others, have been mentioned by learned men—all have been worshipped and eulogised and bowed to by me.

23-25. Grant ye unto me that boon which bestows virtue, love, wealth and liberation. O Hari, your different forms e.g. Saṁkarṣaṇa and others that have been glorified are related to your worship. Hence, they have been incorporated in you, O lord of Devas. No factual difference exists between you and these forms of yours. The different forms of yours have been mentioned so, only in a secondary sense. How can man call you who are the non-dualistic one, as dualistic.

26. O Hari, you are but one, the pervader of all, of the nature of consciousness and unsullied : Your highest form is that which is devoid of existence as well as non-existence.

27-28a. It is unsmeared, free from impurities, subtle, firm, steady and eternal. It is devoid of all conditioning characteristics : It is pure existence only and is well stabilised. Even a Deva does not know about it. O lord, how can I, a human being know it ?

28b-30a. The other form of yours, that which is yellow-robed, four-armed, wearing the conch, discus and iron club, having coronet and armlets, embellished with Śrīvatsa in the chest and bedecked in garlands of sylvan flowers, is worshipped by the Devas and others that are dependent on you.

30b-32. O lord, the most excellent one among all gods, the bestower of fearlessness (or Mokṣa) on the devotees, save me, O deity of beautiful lotus-like eyes, rescue me who am immersed in the ocean of worldly existence and mundane affairs. O lord of Devas, O lord of Kamalā, O Madhusūdana, excepting you I do not see anyone else in whom I can seek refuge. Be pleased. I am over-whelmed by hundreds of ailments and old age; I am afflicted by many miseries.

33. I am confounded, sometimes delighted and sometimes aggrieved; I have been bound by the nooses of Karman. I have fallen into the extremely fierce and terrible ocean of worldly existence.

34-35. O lord, I am deluded by your Māyā for a long time. I have been wandering (in the ocean of mundane existence) which is very difficult to cross, the ocean with worldly objects as its waters, which is highly agitated with passion and hatred; which is deep due to the whirlpools of sense-organs, and is turbulent due to the billows of greedy thirst and grief which has neither receptacle nor a support which is actually insignificant but heavily moving to and fro.

36-37a. I am born again and again in thousands of species of creatures. O Janārdana, in this world thousands and ten thousands of different births have been undergone by me.

37b-38a The Vedas have been learned by me along with their ancillaries. The different kinds of scriptures, the Itihāsas the Purāṇas and many kinds of arts and crafts have been learned by me.

38b-39a. Dissatisfaction and satisfaction have been met with by me. Many times I have hoarded wealth. Many times I have spent (squandered) much. O lord of the universe, decline and increase, rise and fall I have faced in my life.

39b-40. I have experienced association with and separation from wives, friends and kinsmen. Different kinds of fathers and mothers have been seen by me. Many sorrows have been experienced by me and many happy occasions too.

41. Relatives, sisters, brothers and kinsmen have been acquired by me. I have occupied the bellies of women, bellies that are slimy due to faeces and urine.

42. O lord, while staying in the womb, great misery has been experienced by me. Miseries have been experienced during childhood as well as during haughty youth.

43-44a. O Hṛṣīkeśa, miseries have been experienced in the course of old age by me. Those miseries that are usually experienced at death, in the secret path of Yama's abode, and in the hell, full of tortures, have been experienced by me.

44b-46. I have been born again and again in various species, such as those of germs, insects, trees, elephants, horses, deer, birds, buffaloes, cows, and every other wild animal. I have been born in the wombs of Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas Vaiśyas as well as Śūdras. I have been born in the abodes of rich Vaiśyas, Ksatriyas, pious ascetics (Brāhmaṇas), of kings and kings' servants and other embodied beings.

47. O Lord, I have been born in their houses again and again, O lord, I had worked as a slave for the servants of many men.

48. I have attained poverty or affluence. Many have been killed by me. I have been killed by many others. Things belonging to me have been destroyed. Many have been caused to be killed by me.

49-50a. Things have been given to me by others and things have been given by me to others. I have suffered by what has been done by fathers, friends mothers and wives and have been delighted too (by what they did). On many occasions, due to misery my face has been washed by my tears.

50b-51a. O lord, there is no such spot among the Devas, animals, human beings, the mobile and immobile beings, where I have not been.

51b-54. O lord of the universe, sometimes I stayed in hell and sometimes in heaven. Sometimes in human worlds and sometimes in animal kingdom. Just as someone, in the mechanical device for lifting water fixed to a hole falls up and down or remains in the middle, so also O excellent one among Devas, I have had recourse to the series of my Karmans. Thus in this wheel of worldly existence, that is very terrible and that causes hairs to stand on their ends, I have been whirling for a long time. I do not see the end thereof.

55. O Hari, I do not know what I am doing. All my sense-organs are worn out and agitated. I have been overwhelmed by grief and greed. I am a terrified fugitive. I have lost consciousness.

56. O lord, utterly maimed and crippled, I have now sought refuge in you. Save me, O Kṛṣṇa, rescue me who am immersed in the ocean of worldly existence.

57. O lord of the universe, be merciful if you consider me that I am your devotee. Excepting you, I have no other kinsmen who will be worrying for my sake and take my care.

58. O Lord, after resorting to you as the lord, I have no fear from anywhere either in life or death or about my well-being.

59. How can there be good states and liberation from the bondage of worldly existence in the case of those base men who do not duly worship you, O lord ?

60. O what use is their nobility of birth, or good conduct or learning or even life, if they have no devotion to Keśava, the creator of the universe ?

61. Those who have Asuraic character and those who are deluded and those who censure you, do fall into the terrible hell and are born again and again.

62. O lord, those who are of evil activities and those who speak ill of you are base men. They do not have any way of escape from the hellish ocean.

63. O Hari, where I am destined to be born as a result of my Karmans, may my devotion to you be ever unimpaired.

64. By propitiating you, the great one, Daityas, human beings, and others too in a body have attained the greatest Siddhi. O lord, who would not like to worship you ?

65. Even Brahmā and others are not competent to eulogise you who are beyond Prakṛti. O lord, out of my ignorance, I too have eulogised you imperfectly.

66. Hence, forgive my guilt if you have mercy towards me. O Hari, even if others commit offence, good men forgive them.

67-68. Hence, O lord of the Devas, be pleased. With devotion I have resorted to your affection. O lord, you have been eulogised by me with the mind full of devotion. May that be fruitful. O Vāsudeva, obeisance be to you.

CHAPTER FIFTYFOUR

The Glory of Puruṣottama (Contd.)

Vasu said :

1.[1] Eulogised thus by him then, the Garuḍa-emblemed deity Viṣṇu became delighted, O blessed lady, and gave him everything mentally desired by him.

2. The man who worships the lord of the universe everyday and intelligently eulogises him with this hymn, certainly attains liberation.

3. The pure and learned man who performs the Japa of this excellent hymn during the three junctions (i.e. the dawn, dusk and midday) accomplishes (the four objectives of life, viz.) virtue, wealth, love and liberation.

1. VV. 1-12 are the same as BM.P. 49-60-71. Although the NP begins a new chapter (54), vv. 1-12 the Phala-Śruti constitute the eulogy by Indradyumna in the previous (53) chapter. As such these verses should have formed part of the previous chapter as is done in the BE.P. ch. 49 where vv. 60-71 (the Phala-Śruti verses) follow Indradyumna's prayer in a natural context.

4. He who reads, listens to and narrates this with concentration and purity of mind, will shake off all sins and go to the eternal world of Viṣṇu.

5. This is conducive to wealth. It dispels sins. It is auspicious and it yields worldly pleasures and salvation. It is an esoteric secret very difficult to be attained. It is meritorious. It should not be given to anyone and everyone (indiscriminately).

6. None shall ever impart this to an atheist, a foolish fellow, an ungrateful one, an arrogant person, a man of wicked intentions or one without devotion.

7. It should be imparted to one endowed with devotion, to one endowed with good qualities and conduct, to a devotee of Viṣṇu, to a quiescent person and to one who is by nature faithful and who practises befitting rites and observances.

8. This great hymn of Puruṣottama narrated by me is the cause of destruction of all sins; it is designated as mercy; it yields happiness and liberation. It is the most excellent one bestowing the desired benefits.

9. Those who continuously meditate on the ancient Puruṣa who is very subtle and who resembles the pure firmament, attain salvation. They enter Viṣṇu like the ghee that has been consigned to the sacrificial fire with Mantras.

10. The lord alone is the destroyer of the miseries of Saṁsāra. He is greater than the greatest. There is none supreme to him. He is the creator, sustainer and the annihilator of all. Viṣṇu is the same (impartial and good) to all. He is the essence of everything.

11. Of what avail are these—viz. learning, good qualities, Yajñas, charitable gifts and severe penances to those persons who have no devotion to Kṛṣṇa, the preceptor of the universe and the bestower of happiness and salvation.

12. He who cherishes devotion to the deity called Puruṣottama is blessed in this world. He is pure, he is a learned scholar; he is affluent speaker, he has righteous conduct. He is the knower. He is the donor. He is the speaker of truth.

13-14. O daughter of Brahmā, after eulogising thus and bowing down to the eternal Vāsudeva, the lord of the universe and the bestower of all desired benefits, the worried king spread Kuśa grass on the ground and spread his cloth over it. With his mind dwelling on the deity, he went to sleep on the bare ground.[1]

15. He thought to himself thus—"How will Janārdana, the lord of the Devas, manifest himself to me ? When shall this lord dispel my anxieties ?"

16. When the king went to sleep, Vāsudeva, the preceptor of the universe, revealed himself to him in the dream in the form of) the wielder of the discus.

17-19a. He saw in his dream the lord of the Devas, the lord of the universe, who holds the conch and the discus; who is calm; who wields the iron club and the lotus by the tip of his hands; who is armed with the bow Śārṅga, the arrows and the sword; who is encircled with the dazzling halo of brilliant refulgence: who displaced the lustre of the sun at the time of the end of the Yuga; who resembled the blue lapis lazuli in complexion, who was seated on the back of Garuḍa and who had eight arms.

19b. On seeing him, the lord said :- "O king of great intellect, well done, O ruler of the earth, I am satisfied with this divine sacrifice, your devotion and faith. Why do you worry unnecessarily ?

20. O King, I shall tell you the means whereby you will get the idol that is eternal and worthy of being worshipped by the kings.

21-24. When this night is over and the pure sun rises up you must find out this tree. It is inside the waters of the sea. The place is beautified with various trees. On the shore also much water can be seen, O King, that has accumulated from the tides of the sea. Supported by the shore, the great tree stands there partly in water and partly on the ground. The tidal waves lash against it but it is firm and steady (and immovable). It does not quake or move.

25-27. Take an axe in your hand and wade alone (without taking any companion) through the waves sportingly. You will notice the tree by means of snigs indicated; unhesitatingly cut it down. On seeing the huge tree of wonderful appearance felled down, you make an idol of the lord from that tree. You should cast off your anxiety that deludes you.

1. VV. 13-14 to 71 in the NP are the same as Bm. P. Ch. 50 with a few v.ls. The description of the Puruṣottama idols in Sk. P. II. ch. 19 slightly differs from that in the NP.

28. After saying this, Hari, the highly blessed one disappeared. The king too was extremely surprised by what he saw his dream.

29. He spent the remaining part of that night keeping awake with his mind dwelling on the lord, repeating the Mantras of Viṣṇu and the hymn pertaining to him.

30. When the night dawned, with his mind not dwelling on anything else, he duly took his bath in the sea.

31. He gave villages and cities by way of religious gifts to the Brāhmaṇas The excellent king performed the duties of the forenoon and went ahead.

32. He did not take any chariot, footsoldier, elephant or charioteer along with him. The ruler of the earth entered the great seashore, alone.

33. He saw the lofty tree, the brilliant great tree, the great destroyer (?) and one that has grown immensely. It was auspicious but had no fruit (viphalam).*

34. It was a means of great festival for him (Mahotsavam) (?) It had such a huge stem. It lay as though it was sleeping by the side of the water. It had the colour of the dense Indian madder. It had no name or genus.

35. On seeing the tree of Viṣṇu, the lord of men rejoiced. With the sharp axe he cut it off steadily.

36. The mind of Indra's friend (Indradyumna) was in a dilemma. While he was looking at the wood (i.e. the tree cut by him) there appeared a miraculous sight.

37-39. Viśvakarman and Viṣṇu assumed the forms of Brāhmaṇas. Those two noble souls came there. They were shining brilliantly with great lustre. They had divine scents, garlands, and unguents; they then approched king Indradyumna, the

*This verse is he same as Brahma P. 50.21 where that Purāṇa reads Mahātigam i.e. great transcending (all in height), and Vipula 'extensive, for Viphala of the NP above.

_Brahma P._ 50.2 reads mahotsedha : 'of great height and thickness.'

friend of Indra, and enquired : "O great king, what will you do here ? O mighty-armed one, why was this tree felled down ?

40. Unaided by anyone, in this great impassable lonely and dense forest on the shores of the great sea, this huge tree has been felled down."

41-42. O lady of beautiful eyebrows, on hearing their words, the king was filled with joy. On seeing those two Brâhmaṇas who had come there like the moon and the sun, he bowed down to them, the lords of the universe, and stood there with the head bent down. Then he addressed these sweet words to them :-

43. "It is my intention that I should make an idol of this wood in order to propitiate the god of the Devas, the lord of the universe who has neither a beginning nor an end, the lord who cannot be measured or comprehended.

44. In the course of a dream, I have been advised by the lord of the Devas, the greatest and noblest Ātman; I have recounted that to you also".

45. On hearing the words of the king who was on a par with Devendra, the lord of the universe became delighted. Laughingly he spoke these words :

46-48. "O ruler of the earth, well done. Your mind had been excellent, since you had an inclination towards the propitiation of Viṣṇu. This ocean of mundane existence is very terrible. It is like the leaf of a plantain tree (that can be torn easily). it is insignificant, yet it is full of miseries. It is boisterous and turbulent due to lust and furry. It is full of whirlpools of sense-organs. It is impassable and generates horripilation. Hundreds of ailments repeatedly assail the people. The ocean of worldly existence is like a transient bubble.

49-50. O leading king, you are blessed; you are adorned with the good attributes. The whole earth inclusive of subjects is blessed. The earth where you are the overlord, inclusive of mountains, forests and cities, containing many cities, villages and towns and adorned with the people of four castes, is blessed, since you are the lord and protector of the subjects.

51. O highly blessed one; Come on, come on. Stay under this tree which is cool and pleasant. Sit here with us discussing pious and virtuous matters.

52. This most excellent one among sculptors and artisans has come here to render help to you. He is equal to Viśvakarman himself. He is an adept in all arts and crafts.

53-54. He will make the idol thought of by you for me. Leave off the seashore". On hearing these words of the Brāhmaṇa, the king left the seashore and went near him. The most excellent king went and sat under the cool shade of the tree.

55. Thereafter, O daughter of Brahmā, the Ātman of the universe instructed the chief of artisans—"Make these idols in their respective shapes and sizes.

56. The first idol shall be the form of Kṛṣṇa. It shall be extremely peaceful with eyes large and resembling the petals of lotus. It must have the mark of Śrīvatsa and the jewel Kaustubha. It must wield the conch, discus and iron club.

57. The second idol should be white in complexion. It must have the lustre and colour of cow's milk. It must be marked with the sign of Svastika. It is the lord wielding the ploughshare as his weapon. It is the highly mighty lord named Ananta.

58. His final limit for nature has not been known by the Devas, Dānavas, Gandharvas, Vidyādharas and serpents. Hence he is remembered as Ananta.

59. The third idol shall be that of the sister of Vāsudeva. She has the golden complexion. She is extremely beautiful. She is Subhadrā marked by all the auspicious characteristics."

60. On hearing these words of his, Viśvakarman, the expert in excellent artisanship, instantaneously made those idols with beautiful and auspicious characteristics.

61. He made the idols shine resplendently with ear-rings of diverse kinds in their ears. Markings of the discus and the ploughshare were clear in the hands. They shone like the sun (?)

62. The first idol had white colour like the lustre of the autumnal moon. The eyes were red and the body huge and there was a hood over the head. It was Bala wearing the blue cloth. He was fierce and had wonderful earrings. He held a great ploughshare and a big threshing rod. He was divine in form.

63. The second idol resembled the blue cloud in complexion. It had eyes resembling lotuses. The lord resembled the flower of Atasī (Hemp or flax) and his eyes were as large as the petals of the lotus.

64. He was Hari, Acyuta, with the Śrīvatsa mark on the chest, with shining yellow robes. He was divine in character, holding the discus and the conch. He dispelled all sins.

65-67. The third idol had the golden lustre. It had eyes as large as the petals of a lotus. (It was that of Subhadrā) covered with various garments, bedecked in necklaces and armlets and equipped with ornaments of different kinds. There was a necklace of gems and jewels. The bosom was plump and protruding. Viśvakarman thus made a beautiful idol.

68-69. The king saw that wonderful feat and was surprised very much. Within a moment, he saw those beautiful idols covered with pairs of divine robes, embellished with different kinds of jewels and richly endowed with all characteristics. Being very much surprised, he spoke these words.

70. "Is it possible that both of you are Devas who have come here assuming the forms of Brāhmaṇas ? Both of you achieve wonderful feats and divine activities. You are super-human.

71-72. Are you Devas or human beings, or excellent Yakṣas or Vidyādharas, or Brahmā and Viṣṇu or Vasu and Rudra or the twin gods Aśvins ? I do not know your true nature (since) you are present here assuming a magic form. I seek refuge in you. Kindly reveal yourselves to me."

The Brāhmaṇa replied :

73.[1] "I am neither a god nor a Yakṣa. I am neither a Daitya nor a king of Devas. I am neither Brahmā nor Rudra. Know me as Puruṣottama.

1. VV. 73-125 in the NP. are the same as Bm. P. ch. 51. 1-58 with a few deletions, and some v.l.s.

74. I am the destroyer of the anguish of all the worlds, I possess infinite might and manliness. I am worthy of being worshipped by all living beings. I have no end.

75. I am that which is learnt (i.e. described) in all scriptures and is so recounted in the Vedāntas (Upaniṣads). I am) that which has been spoken of by Yogins as Vāsudeva who is approachable through meditation.

76. I alone am Brahmā himself. I am Viṣṇu; I am Śiva. I am Indra, the king of the Devas. I am Yama, the restrainer of the universe.

77-78. I am all the elements such as the Earth etc. : I am the three sacrificial fires as well as the devourer of what is consigned as offerings. I am Varuṇa, the lord of the waters, the earth, the mountains, whatever there is in this world worthy of being spoken about (in words)—whether mobile or immobile. Know me to be the embodiment of the universe. There is nothing other than I in the whole universe.

79. O excellent king. I am pleased with you. O king of good holy rites, choose a boon. I shall give you whatever is desired by you, whatever is fixed into your heart.

80. A vision of mine is not possible even in a dream for non-meritorious persons. But, as for you, you have seen me directly, thanks to your steadfast devotion."

81. On hearing these words of Vāsudeva, O Mohinī, the hairs stood on ends on the body of the king. He sang the following hymn :

The King prayed :

82. "O lover of Śrī, obeisance be to you, O lord of Śrī, Hail to the yellow-robed one; O bestower of fortune, lord of Śrī, O abode of Śrī, salutations to you, O abode of good fortune.

83. I bow down to the primordial Puruṣa, Īśāna, the lord of all, having faces all round; the greatest Deva devoid of any stigma; I bow down to the eternal one.

84. I bow down to him that is beyond all words, and all attributes, and devoid of existences as well as nonexistence. I salute to one that is unsmeared i. e. extremely pure, free from attributes, subtle, omniscient and the conceiver and creator of all.

85. I pay obeisance to the lord holding conch, discus, iron club and threshing rod. I shall bow down to the lord who bestows boons and has the complexion of the petals of blue lotus.

86. I shall salute to Hṛṣīkeśa, Hari who lies down on his serpent couch, who stays in the milk ocean and who dispels all sins.

87. O lord of the chiefs of the Devas, I shall again pay obeisance to you, the lord and bestower of boons, Viṣṇu the lord of all the worlds and the immutable cause of liberation".

88. After eulogising the lord thus, after bowing down with palms joined in reverence, he laid himself prostrate on the ground again and said :

89-92. "O lord, if you are pleased with me, I shall choose this excellent boon. I wish to go to that region of yours which all these meditate upon :— viz. The Devas, Asuras, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas and the great serpents along with the Gandharvas, Siddhas, Kinnaras, Guhyakas, Sages; those blessed persons who are experts in different scriptural texts; who are endowed with renunciation and Yogic practice; who ponder over the real meaning of the Vedic texts and who know the path of salvation as well as others; who meditate upon that highest state. Your region is devoid of impurities, free from attributes and quiescent; learned men see it. It is very difficult of access; yet I wish to attain it through your grace."

The glorious Lord (Śri Bhagavān) said :—

93. "May everything concerning you be auspicious and conducive to welfare. Attain everything as desired by you. Everything will happen as you desire, thanks to my grace. There is no doubt about this.

94. O excellent king, rule over your great kingdom without any break for ten thousand nine hundred years.

95-97. I, therefore, shall reveal to you that supreme state called Vijñeya which is the highest, divine, very difficult to attain even by gods and demons; is perfect and bestower of all desired objects; quiescent; deserves to be kept as secret; unmanifest, unchanging, greater than the greatest, subtle, perfectly pure (unstained), devoid of attributes, eternal, perfectly free from worries and sorrows, transcending causal relationship. After attaining it you will get the highest bliss and reach the supreme goal.

98-99. May your fame spread here on the earth as long as the earth, sky, moon, sun, stars, seven oceans, Meru and other mountains exist here. It shall be steady as long as the eternal Devas stay in the heaven and everywhere.

100. Here is the Tīrtha named Indradyumna saras.[1] It is evolved out of the ghee used in the Yajña. By taking ablution even once in this, people will attain Śakra's world.

101. He who offers Piṇḍas here, on this auspicious shore of the ocean, shall redeem twentyone generations of his family and go to Śakra's world (Heaven).

102. As long as fourteen Indras reign he will continue there, worshipped by the Apsaras and sung about by Gandharvas with their harmonious notes. He will move about by means of the aerial chariot.

103-104a. On the southern bank of the lake, to the south-west side of it, there is a holy fig tree. Near it a Maṇḍapa (pavilion) will be erected. It will be covered with a cluster of Ketakī trees and surrounded by many trees.

104b-107a. On the fifth day in the bright half of the month of Āṣāḍha, when the constellation Maghā is there, and people will take us there for seven days and instal us in the pavilion with splendid courtesans expert in diverse types of dalliance and charming in their dances and songs. They will have chowries with gold handles and fans bedecked in jewels. The great ladies must be standing there fanning us.[2]

1. This is one of the important sub-Tīrthas forming the Pañca-tīrthī at Puruṣottama Kṣetra. It is near Guṇḍicā Mandira (or Janakpur) at a distance of about a mile and a half from Jagannātha temple.

2. VV. 104b-107a refer to the famous Ratha Yātrā.

107b-109a. Other people, the religious students, Sannyāsins, lifelong students of Veda, excellent Brāhmaṇas, householders, forest-hermits, Siddhas, and other twice-borns will be chanting hymns from Ṛk, Yajus and Sāman, the hymns consisting of many words and syllables. O king, they will eulogise Rāma and Keśava.

109b-110. Then after eulogising, bowing to and visiting the deity with great devotion, such a man shall stay in the glorious city of Hari for ten thousand divine years, being worshipped by Apsaras and sung about by Gandharvas with harmonious notes of music.

111. He sports there as an attendant of Hari with Keśava.

112. He shines with a jewelled necklace, in an aerial chariot of the refulgence of the sun. All that he desires is to abide in the excellent abode that is highly blessed.

113. After the merit of penance dwindles down, he comes here to the earth as a human being and is born as a Brāhmaṇa. He shall be the lord of crores of wealth. He shall certainly be a glorious master of the four Vedas.

114. After granting him this boon and stipulating the conditions thus, O gentle lady, Hari vanished along with Viśvakarman.

115. The king became delighted. His hairs began to stand on their ends. Thanks to the visit of Hari, he considered himself blessed and of having accomplished all objectives in life.

116-117. The king accompanied by his ministers and family priests carried the idols of Kṛṣṇa, Rāma and Subhadrā, the bestowers of boons, by means of chariots resembling aerial chariots, variously decorated with jewels and gold pieces. After carrying them along to the accompaniment of auspicious shouts of victory, he brought them to his city.

118-119. The intelligent king along with the family priests and ministers installed the idols in a splendid spot to the accompaniment of different musical instruments and the recitation of Vedic Mantras. After keeping them in a holy, charming and splendid spot for a few days, he formally got these installed through the Brāhmaṇas on an auspicious Tithi when the constellation was favourable and on the whole the time was characterised as splendid, on an auspicious Muhūrta.

120-121. In accordance with the Śāstric injunctions and following the prescribed procedure to be observed and according to the precepts approved by the chief priest, the king performed every rite and gave the requisite monetary gift to the preceptor. The lord distributed wealth among the Ṛtviks and others in accordance with injunctions.

122. He installed those idols made by Viśvakarman, duly, in an excellent apartment in the palace.

123. He worshipped them duly with different fragrant flowers, gold, jewels, pearls as well as with different kinds of splendid clothes.

124-125. He granted large tracts of lands, cities and towns to the Brāhmaṇas. He ruled over the kingdom in a befitting manner. He performed sacrifices in various ways. He made over charitable gifts. Contented with everything, the king eschewed all possessions. He went over to the greatest place, the great region of Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER FIFTYFIVE

The Greatness of Puruṣottama (Contd.)

Mohini said :—

1. "O excellent Brāhmaṇa, what is that time when one should go to the shrine of Puruṣottama ? O bestower of Honour, what are the modes whereby the Pañcatīrthī[1] (the pilgrimage to the five holy centres) should be performed ?

1. This chapter deals with the Pañca-Tīrthi (five important sacred spots) at Jagannātha Puri.

2. Kindly tell me, everything, the benefit accruing from the holy ablution in each of these Tīrthas severally. Tell me the benefit of charitable gifts, visiting the deities separately".

Vasu said :—

3-4. "A devotee may eschew all food and perform a penance standing on a single foot for seventy thousand years controlling his sense-organs and suppressing his anger. But, if one observes fast for once on the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha and visits Puruṣottama, one derives a superior benefit thereby.

5. Hence, O blessed lady, it is in the month of Jyeṣṭha that Puruṣottama is to be visited ardently by self-controlled men who desire to attain heavenly world.

6. The excellent man should duly make a pilgrimage to the Pañcatīrthī and visit Puruṣottama on the twelfth day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha.

7. Those who visit the eternal lord Puruṣottama on the Dvādaśī (twelfth) day attain the world of Viṣṇu. They never fall off therefrom.

8. Hence, O daughter of Brahmā, one should go there ardently in the month of Jyeṣṭha. After duly visiting the five holy Tīrthas (Pañcatīrthī) and (or after the due ablutions in the five sacred water reservoirs) Puruṣottama should be visited.

9. Even if the pilgrim is far off but he glorifies Puruṣottama with a pure soul and a delighted mind day by day, he too shall go to the city of Viṣṇu.

10. He who, with full concentration and faith, undertakes the pilgrimage of Kṛṣṇa, shall be liberated from all sins. That man shall attain Viṣṇu's world (Vaikuṇṭha).

11. By seeing from even a great distance the discus of Hari, stationed on the top of the palace (Temple) and bowing down to it, the man shall be liberated from his sins instantaneously.

12. O Mohinī, I shall now narrate the procedure for the holy ablution in the five Tīrthas (Pañcatīrthī). Listen.

If this is performed duly, the man shall become a favourite of Mādhava.

13. The clean and pure devotee should go to the Mārkaṇḍeya-Hrada[1] (the Pool of Mārkaṇḍeya). Facing the north he should plunge therein three times. He should repeat the following Mantra :—

14. "O Bhaganetraghna (he who destroyed the eye of Bhaga). O Tripurāri (the destroyer of the Tripuras), save me who am immersed in the ocean of worldly existence, who have been possessed by sins and have fallen senseless. Obeisance be to you.

15. Obeisance to Śiva, the quiescent god, to the destroyer of all sins. O lord of the Devas, I am taking bath. May my sins perish."

16. The intelligent pilgrim should stand in navel-deep water. With water and gingelly seeds he should duly perform the Tarpana rite of the Devas, sages, Pitṛs and others.

17-18. After the bath and Ācamana rite, the pilgrim should go to the temple of Śiva. After entering the shrine, he should circumambulate three times. With the Mūla Mantra* he should respectfully worship the deity Mārkaṇḍeyeśa. Repeating the Aghora Mantra (as in Tait. Āraṇyaka 10.45.1 he should make obeisance and crave forgiveness.

19. "O three-eyed god, obeisance be to you. O moon-bedecked one, bow be to you. Redeem me, O lotus-eyed one (?) salute to you, O Mahādeva."

20. After thus taking ablution in the Mārkaṇḍeya Hrada and by visiting Śaṅkara, the man derives the benefit of (the performance of) ten horse-sacrifices.

21-22. Liberated from all sins; he goes to the world of Śiva. Till all the living beings are dissolved, he enjoys excellent pleasures there and comes back to this world. He is

1. Mārkaṇḍeya Hrada or pool is at a distance of 4 furlongs from the Jagannātha shrine. It is near the water pool called Candana (Kalyāṇa 31-1. P. 198).

*viz. oṁ namaḥ śivāya /

Aghora Mantra* : Om aghorebhyo ghorebhyo ghoratarebhyaḥ sarvebhyaḥ namastestu Rudra-rūpebhyaḥ born as a highly learned Brāhmaṇa. Thereafter, he adopts the Yoga of Śaṅkara and attains salvation.

23. The devotee shall then go to the Kalpa tree (i.e. the Banyan tree) and circumambulate it three times. He should then worship that holy Banyan tree with great devotion, repeating the following Mantra :

24. "Oṃ obeisance to you of unmanifest form, to the great one, to the protector of one who bows down to you. Obeisance be to you, the holy Banyan tree growing seated in the great waters.

25. You resided in the banyan tree that is the abode of Hari, always during the Kalpa. O Nyagrodha tree dispel my sin. O Kalpa tree, obeisance be to you".*

26. By approaching the Kalpa tree the Banyan tree, and by circumambulating it with devotion, the man instantaneously dispels the multitude of sins like a serpent casting off its slough.

27. O Mohinī, by coming under the shade of that Kalpa tree, a man shall dispel even the sin of the murder of a Brāhmaṇa. What then of other sins ?

28-29. O daughter of the creator, by visiting Viṣṇu in the form of the holy banyan tree that is born of Kṛṣṇa's limbs and that has the greatest brilliance of Brahman, and by bowing down to it, one attains more benefit than that of the Rājasūya sacrifice and the horse-sacrifice. He uplifts his family and goes to the world of Viṣṇu.

30. By bowing down to Vainateya (Garuḍa) stationed in front of Kṛṣṇa the devotee shall be liberated from all sins and he will go to the city of Viṣṇu.

31. He who sees Puruṣottama, Saṁkarṣaṇa and Subhadrā after visiting the banyan tree and Vainateya, attains the greatest goal (viz. Mokṣa).

32. After entering the shrine of Viṣṇu and circumambulating the deity three times, the pilgrim should worship and propitiate Saṁkarṣaṇa and Subhadrā with devotion.

*cf. BM. P. 57.13-14.

The Banyan tree is styled as Kalpa-vṛkṣa in BM P. 57. 12; 60, 18.

33. "Obeisance to you, the deity named Haladhara (wielder of the ploughshare); Hail to you, O deity armed with the threshing pestle, salute to you, the lover of Revatī; obeisance to you O deity favourably disposed to the devotees.

34. Obeisance to you, O most powerful one among the strong persons; Bow to you the supporter of the earth; obeisance be to you, O enemy of Pralamba;[1] save me, O elder brother of Kṛṣṇa."

35-37. Thus propitiating Ananta, who is unconquerable, who is worshipped by the Devas; who has the shape of the peak of Kailāsa; whose face is as excellent and resplendent as the moon; who is clad in blue robes; whose head is formidable due to the hood; who is highly mighty; who is wielding the ploughshare and who is bedecked only with one earring—by worshipping the son of Rohiṇī thus with devotion, a man may attain the desired benefit. Liberated from all sins, he goes to Viṣṇu's world.

38-39. The learned devotee shall enjoy all pleasures there, till the ultimate dissolution of all living beings. When the merits are exhausted, he comes here in the world and is born in the family of Yogins. He becomes an excellent Brāhmaṇa and masters all the scriptural texts and their meanings. After attaining perfect knowledge, he attains liberation that is usually very difficult of access.

40. After worshipping Balarāma (Lit. one armed with the ploughshare) thus, the clever devotee should, with great concentration, worship Kṛṣṇa by means of the twelve-syllabled Mantra (viz. Oṁ namo Bhagavate Vāsudevāya).

41. Those self-possessed men who devoutly worship Puruṣottama always by means of twelve-syllabled Mantra attain salvation.

42. O daughter of Brahmā, neither the Devas, nor the Yogins nor the imbibers of the Soma juice attain that state which those who are devoted to the twelve-syllabled Mantra attain.

1. N. of a demon killed by Balarāma at Gokul, vide Bh. P. X. 57. 26.

43. Hence, the devotee should worship Kṛṣṇa, the preceptor of the universe, devoutly by means of scents, fragrant flowers etc., repeating that Mantra alone. After bowing to him, he should propitiate him :—

44. "Victory to you O Kṛṣṇa; O lord of the universe, be victorious; victory to you, O slayer of Cāṇūra and Keśin, O slayer of Kaṁsa, be victorious.

45. O deity with eyes resembling the petals of the lotus, be victorious; victory to you, O bearer of the discus and the iron club; O deity dark-complexioned like the blue cloud, be victorious; O bestower of all happiness, be victorious.

46. O lord worthy of being worshipped by the universe, be victorious; O destroyer of worldly existence (Saṁsāra) be victorious; O lord, O lord of the worlds, be victorious; victory to you, O deity bestowing the desired benefits.

47-48. O Puruṣottama, rescue me. I am immersed in the terrible ocean of worldly existence, though factually it is insignificant. Miseries constitute its foams; it is turbulent with furious temperament constituting its sharks and crocodiles. The mundane affairs are its flood of waters; the different kinds of ailments are its waves; it is impassable due to the whirlpool of delusion."

49-52. By visiting Puruṣottama, with palms joined in reverence and by prostrating oneself flat, like a staff (before him) one attains, O Mohinī, the benefit of thousand of horse-sacrifices. By propitiating the lord of the Devas (the devotee attains great benefits); the lord who is the bestower of boons; who is favourably disposed towards the devotees; who is the destroyer of all sins, who grants all desired benefits, that lord Kṛṣṇa has two arms and plump shoulders. His eyes are as large as the petals of the lotus. His chest is large; his arms are mighty; his face is splendid. He is clad in yellow robes. He holds the conch, discus and iron club in his hands. He is bedecked with crown and armlets. He is endowed with all auspicious characteristics. He is adorned with garlands of sylvan flowers.

53. By visiting and bowing to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which has been glorified in the case of ablution in the Tīrthas and the offering of charitable gifts.

54. By bowing down to Lord Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which is linked up with the Vedas and Yajñas.

55. By visiting and bowing down to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which results from all charitable gifts, holy rites and observances.

56. By visiting and bowing down to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which is reputed to result from celibacy duly observed.[1]

57. By visiting and bowing down to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which is cited as the benefit of the life of a householder duly practised.

58. By visiting and bowing down to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which is glorified as being yielded by dwelling in the forest to one who practises Vānaprastha stage of life.

59. By visiting and bowing down to Kṛṣṇa, a man attains that benefit which has been cited as resulting from the due observance of the life of an ascetic Sannyāsin.

60. O beautiful, woman, of what avail is much talk about its greatness ? By visiting Kṛṣṇa with devotion, a man attains salvation which is so difficult to attain.

61-62. He will be liberated from the sins originating since crores of Kalpas. He will be endowed with the greatest glory and all attributes. After uplifting twentyone generations of his family, the man shall go to the city of Viṣṇu by means of an aerial chariot of great brilliance richly equipped with all desirable things.

63. Then for the duration of a hundred Kalpas, he will be enjoying pleasures sweet to the mind. He will be sporting about with Gandharvas and Apsaras like the four-armed Viṣṇu.

64. Falling off from that world, he comes down here and is born in the excellent family of Brāhmaṇas. He becomes omniscient. He knows everything. He eschews malice and jealous rivalry.

1. VV. 56-59 affirm the superiority of merely visiting Puruṣottama to the life-long observance of all Āśramas (stages of life).

65. He will be engaged in his own righteous duties. He will be quiescent and charitable. He will be engaged in the welfare of all living beings. After acquiring perfect knowledge pertaining to Viṣṇu, he shall attain liberation.

66. Thereafter, bowing down to Subhadrā with palms folded in reverence and with the following Mantra, the devotee should propitiate Subhadrā, who is favourably disposed towards her devotees, O daughter of god Brahmā.

67. "Obeisance to you, O omnipresent goddess; obeisance to you the bestower of auspiciousness and happiness. Protect me O Kātyāyanī, you who are possessed of eyes resembling the petals of a lotus."*

68-70. Thus propitiating that goddess, the mother of the universe, Subhadrā, the sister of Baladeva, the auspicious bestower of boons, the man shall go to the city of Viṣṇu by means of an aerial chariot that can go wherever he desires to go. After sporting about there like a god till the time of final dissolution of the universe, he will take birth as a human being. He shall then be a Brāhmaṇa who knows the Vedas. After acquiring the Yoga of Hari, he certainly attains liberation.

71. After coming out from the shrine, the man shall have the feeling of satisfaction (of having obtained his life's objects). After bowing down again to the deity in the shrine, the devotee should depart from there with great concentration.

72. Even though he has disappeared, one should bow down to the place where the sapphire idol of Viṣṇu is buried in sand. The devotee who bows down to this place shall go to the city of Viṣṇu.

73. O queen, the lord with half of his body being that of a lion (viz. Narasiṁha) is present there always. It was he who uplifted Hiraṇyakaśipu. He is identical with all Devas.

74. There is no doubt in this that by visiting that lord Nṛhari and by devoutly bowing to him, O splendid lady, the man is liberated from all sins.

*Cf. BM. P. 57.58.

75. Those men who are devotees of Narasiṁha on this earth have no sin attached to them at all. They derive the benefit as desired by them.

76. Since he grants the benefit of all Puruṣārthas, viz. virtue, wealth, love and liberation, the devotee shall by all means resort to Narasiṁha.

77. Hence, O daughter of Brahmā, the devotee should always devoutly worship the highly powerful lord of animals (Nara-Siṁha), the bestower of all desired benefits.

78-80. (All the people)—the Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Śūdras, women, Antyajas (outcastes) and others shall, by worshipping with devotion, the most excellent of all gods, possessing the physical form of a lion, be liberated from inauspicious misery originating from crores of births. They attain all desired things such as the state of being a god, of being the lord of the immortal beings, the state of the lord of wealth and the state of being Yakṣas and Vidyādharas. O beautiful woman, he bestows these and other things.

81. O daughter of the creator, listen to the powers of Narasiṁha, the unconquered deity, the incomprehensible god, the bestower of worldly pleasures and salvation.

82. O lady of good rites, who is competent to recount fully the attributes of that deity half of whose body is that of a lion ? I shall tell you succinctly.

83. There is no doubt about this that, thanks to his grace, one shall realise those Siddhis (super-human powers) both divine and human, that are heard about.

84. Thanks to the grace of that lord, one will have unimpeded movement in the heaven, mortal world, nether worlds, firmament, water, landmass or on a mountain.

85. O blessed lady, in this world consisting of the mobile and immobile beings, there is nothing that is unachievable to lord Narasiṁha who is always sympathetic to the devotees.

86. I shall narrate the procedure that will facilitate devotees and whereby the deity half of whose body is leonine (i.e. Narasiṁha) is delighted.

87a. The real nature of that lord is unknown even to the Devas and Asuras.

87b-89. The leader of the Sādhakas (aspirant devotees) sustains himself by means of vegetables, roots, fruits, barley grains, oil cakes, powdered fried grains or milk. He wears only a lion cloth or woven Kāśa grass. With the sense organs fully conquered, he meditates on the lord seated in a secluded spot, the confluence of rivers, the mountains, the Siddhakṣetra (the sacred places of the Siddhas), in a barren land or in the hermitage of Narasiṁha.

90-91a. He himself instals the idol and performs the worship in accordance with the injunctions. There is no doubt about this that, even if the Sādhaka is defiled by subsidiary sins or great sins, he is liberated from them.

91b-93. The devotee should circumambulate and worship Narasiṁha with scents, fragrant flowers, incense etc. After bowing down the head to the lord, he shall offer the Jāti flowers smeared with camphor and sandal-paste on the head of Narasiṁha. Thereby, Siddhi is realised. In none of these acts or (bestowing of Siddhis) the lord is thwarted.

94-95. Brahmā, Rudra and other gods are not competent to cross him. What then is the case of Dānavas in the world, and of the Siddhas, Gandharvas, human beings, Vidyādharas, Yakṣas, Kinnaras and serpents ? All those divine beings are annihilated by the splendour of divine fire. (of Narasiṁha).

96-97. By performing the Japa once, the devotee shall smite all harassing persons by the flame of fire. The performance of Japa for three times of the Divine Narasiṁha Kavaca (mystical syllables protective like an armour) shall protect one from Daityas Dānavas, goblins, ghosts, demons as well as other enemies. The Kavaca-Mantras repeated thrice cannot be split by the Devas and suras.

98. Lord Narasiṁha of great strength and exploits, O highly blessed lady, always protects the devotees within twelve Yojanas (I Yojana = 4 krośas or 8 miles).

99-100. The devotee should thereafter go to the opening of the cave and fast there for three nights. By means of the Palāśa twigs, he should ignite the fire and perform Homas with the Palāśa twigs soaked in Trimadhu (honey, ghee, sugar) for twenty thousand times. O lady of lotus-like eyes, a cart shall come into the view of the Sādhaka.

101-102. Then, the Kavallīvivara (the opening of Kavallī[1] (?) shall be revealed instantaneously. The learned devotee should unhesitatingly enter the opening. As the cart proceeds, darkness and delusion perish. O Mohinī, wide highway is seen there.

103. Remembering Narasiṁha, he should enter the nether worlds. After going there, the pure devotee should perform the Japa of the immutable Narasiṁha.

104. Thereafter, thousands of women shall come out of the city with lutes, chowries etc. in their hands and speak words of welcome to him.

105. O lady of beautiful eyes, they will grasp the leading Sādhaka by the hand and take him into the city. They will make him drink divine Rasāyana (elixir of life).

106. The moment he drinks, he will be endowed with a divine body. He will become very strong. He will be sporting about with divine virgins until the dissolution of the universe.

107. (?) With a different body, he is taken to Vāsudeva.[2] When these virgins do not appeal to him, he will come out of that place.

108-109. (Through the grace of Narasiṁha) the excellent Sādhaka shall obtain a magic tablet, trident, sword, yellow pigment, jewel, mercury, elixir and the collyrium and the sandals. He shall grasp the Vidyās (lores) of Guṭikā (magic pills)

1. kavallī is not traced to any Sk. Dictionary. The text in the NP. here: tato viśet tu niḥśaṅkaṁ kavallī-vivaram budhaḥ / is obscure. Brahma P. 58.35a reads : tato viśet tu niḥśaṅkaṃ Kavacī vivaraṁ budhaḥ "The wise man who has armoured himself with Narasiṁha kavaca should enter fearlessly.

2. The text is corrupt. This verse in the Brahma P. 58.40 reads: (bhinna-deho Vāsudeve liyate nātra Saṁśayaḥ) "There is no doubt that though his body is different, he is absorbed in Vāsudevu."

Manaḥśilā (red arsenic), Kṛṣṇāñjali (handful of Kṛṣṇa?)* Maṇḍala(?) (kamaṇḍalu-water-pot) Akṣasūtra (string of rosary) and the sixth Sañjīvanī) the lifegiver). i.e. the lore of restoring a dead man to life).

110-113. It is as though the lord in the heart is enveloped by the blazing flames of the fire. Placed but once, it burns all sins originating from crores of births. Having (mastered) the mystic lore (Siddha-Vidyā) and Śāstras (scriptures), the lord of Śādhakas, if places in his heart the fire enveloped with flames and burning sparks only once, it burns down all of his sins and evils perpetrated in a crore of births. Placed in poison, it destroys poison; kept on the body, it dispels even leprosy. If one kills a foetus and commits similar sins and places that divine fire on his person, he is absolved of the sins (by that divine fire). One should think of the blazing deity when overwhelmed by great evil planets. The evil and terrible planets begin to cry and they perish quickly. When the amulet is tied round the necks of children it is a perpetual protection.

114. It certainly destroys evil spirits such as the Gaṇḍa, Piṇḍaka and Kṛtyās. In order to dispel ailments, the devotee should perform Homa with the sacrificial twigs, ghee and milk.

115. If this is performed during the three Sandhyās (i.e. dawn, dusk and midday) for the period of a month, it will destroy all ailments. I do not find anything in the world consisting of the mobile and immobile beings, anything that is unachievable to this Tattva (principle or lore).

116. By worshipping the lord of beasts alone for hundred and eight times, the devotee certainly attains all those Siddhis whichever he may desire.

117-119. In the ant-hill, in the cremation ground, and in the crossroads, the devotee should smear the oil mixed with red sandal paste and cow's milk. With this paste he should make an idol of the lion six Aṅgulas in length; should then write (the

---

*An obvious error for kṛṣṇājina vide the same verse repeated in the Brahma P. 58-42.

The Brahma P. ibid reads kamaṇḍalum. 'Maṇḍala' in the NP. is obscure. Hence the reading of the Br. P. is adopted.

Mantra) on the leaf of Bhūrja with Rocana (yellow pigment). This leaf with Mantra should be tied to (the idol of Narasiṁha). He should then perform the Japa of the Mantra for unlimited number of times after worshipping it near a water reservoir."

120. By the time the devotee with all his sense-organs controlled, performs the Japas for seven days, the whole earth shall be showered with water. Within a Muhūrta the earth will be flooded with water.

121-122. Alternately, the devotee should sit on the top of pure tree and worship Narasiṁha. By performing a hundred and eight Japas of the Tattva (Narasiṁha Mantra), the devotee shall ward off that rain. After placing (the idol) in a cage the excellent Sādhaka shall whirl it. Within a Mahūrta a great violent gust of wind shall blow.

123-124. He can ward it off once again by sprinkling the idol with water charged with the Mantra seven times. If the aspirant were to put that idol under the ground at the threshold of anyone the whole of his family shall be exterminated. When it is taken out, it shall accord peace. Hence O daughter of Brahmā, one shall always worship it with devotion.

125-126. By visiting, eulogising, bowing to and worshipping Nṛhari, the lord of beasts who has great prowess and who bestows all desired benefits, O splendid lady, men obtain kingdom, heavenly pleasure, and liberation (from saṁsāra) which is very difficult to get. By seeing Narasiṁha, a man shall achieve the desired benefits.

127-128a. He shall be liberated form all sins. He shall go to the world of Viṣṇu. By visiting that lord having the leonine body, with great devotion even for once, the devotee is liberated from all sins, whether physical, verbal or mental in origin.

128b-130a. A man shall necessarily remember that lord in the following circumstances : When there is a war; when there is any difficulty; when in misery, when afflicted by thieves, tigers, etc., in the forest, when there is doubt about the safety of life, when oppressed by poison, fire or water, when there is fear from the king etc., during the day of battle, when one is afflicted by evil planets ailments etc., By remembering the lord, the man is liberated from difficulties.

130b-131a. Just as dense darkness perishes at the rise of the sun, so also all torments perish when the lord is visited.

131b-132. When Narasiṁha is delighted the devotee achieves the Guṭikās (Mystic pills), Añjana (magical collyrium), the Pâdalepa (unguent for the foot) and the elixir of life, enabling one to go anywhere. He achieves other desired benefits too. If a man worships Nṛhari meditating on other desired results, he shall undoubtedly attain those objects."

CHAPTER FIFTYSIX

The Greatness of Puruṣottama (Contd.)

Vasu said :

1-2. "O blessed lady, listen to another group of Tīrtha in the holy centre of Puruṣottama. It is highly meritorious. By the mere sight, it destroys sins. By visiting Vāsudeva termed Ananta with devotion and by bowing down to him, a man shall be liberated from all sins, he shall attain the greatest region (viz. Vaikuṇṭha)

3. By taking bath in the Śvetagaṅgā[1] and by visiting Śveta-Mādhava as well as Matsya-Mādhava, the devotee goes to Śveta Dvīpa (the abode of Nārāyaṇa).

4-7a. Viṣṇu's devotees of great concentration and purity shall attain heaven by visiting the pure deity which resembles snow in complexion; who bears conch, discus and iron club; who is endowed with all auspicious characteristics; whose chest has the mark of Śrīvatsa, who is delighted, who has four arms, whose chest is covered with garlands of sylvan flowers ; who wears coronet and armlets; whose garments are yellow in colour; whose shoulders are plum and who is bedecked in earrings. By touching the leading king, Śvetagāṅgeya (god Śveta-Mādhava), even with the tip of a Kuśa grass they go to heaven.

1. Śveta-Gaṅgā pool is on the way to the sea (from Jagannâtha Temple). The two Mādhava shrines (Matsya and Śveta) are near it.

7b-9a. He who sees this idol of lustre called Mādhava, that resembles conch and cow's milk and that destroys all sins, he who bows to that idol with eyes resembling lotuses even but once, with devotion and eschewing worldly desires is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

9b-10. For many Manvantaras, he enjoys extensive pleasures as he pleases, along with the Devas, surrounded by Divine virgins, sung in praise by the Gandharvas and worshipped by Siddhas and Vidyādharas.

11. Falling off from these, he comes to the mortal world and is born as a Brāhmaṇa knowing the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. He will be intelligent, long-lived and enjoying worldly pleasures.

12. He will be richly endowed with elephants, horses, chariots and other vehicles. He will be pure and blessed with wealth and food-grains. He shall be handsome and very fortunate. He will have sons and grandsons.

13. He goes again unto Puruṣottama on the seashore at the root of the holy Banyan tree. After abandoning the body and remembering Hari he shall go to the region of calmness and peace. (Mokṣa)

14-16. By visiting Śvetamādhava and Matsya-mādhava near him and by bowing down to him with purity, the devotee should leave off all distressing features. When formerly the whole universe was vast sheet of water, the lord had at the outset assumed the form of a fish of the Rohita type. It was to redeem the Vedas (from the demon who had stolen them) that the lord thus stationed himself on the surface of Rasātala. Thinking about the earth, the fish established itself there. Then the Matsya (fish) assumed the form of a youth. That is Matsya Mādhava.

17. He goes to that highly excellent place where lord Hari is present himself. In due course of time, he comes down here and shall be the king on the surface of the earth.

18. By resorting to Matsya-Mādhava, a man will be invincible. He will be a liberal donor, enjoyer of pleasures, a warrior, a devotee of Viṣṇu and true to his word.

19-20a. Afterwards, by being enlightened in the Yoga leading to Hari, he shall attain liberation. The greatness of Matsyamādhava has been recounted by me to you. On seeing him, O daughter of Brahmā, the devotee shall attain all desires.

20b-22. I shall now describe the rite of Mārjana in the sacred and auspicious pool of water called Mārkaṇḍeyahrada. The ablution in the Mārkaṇḍeyahrada at all times is praised. It is an ancient rite to plunge into it with a singleminded devotion. Particularly on the Caturdaśī day, the ablution is destructive of all sins. Similarly, the ablution in the ocean at all times is praised.

23-24a. Particularly, on the full moon day, (the ablution in the ocean) makes one attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. On the full Moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha, when the constellation is also Jyeṣṭhā, the devotee shall particulary visit that king of holy centres which is exceedingly splendid.

24b-25. He should have pure and holy Sāttvaic feelings physically, verbally and mentally, and his mind should not be directed towards anything else. He should be liberated from all mutually clashing opposites. He should be devoid of passions and malicious rivalry. He should circumambulate the beautiful Kalpa-tree, the banyan tree, where Janārdana himself abides.

26-27a. With great concentration, he should circumambulate it three times. On seeing it, the sin originating from seven births perishes. O Mohinī, he attains an extensive merit and his desired goal.

27b-28. I shall mention to you its names in the different Yugas. The names of the banyan tree in the Kṛta and other Yugas have been glorified as follows: (They know them as) Vaṭa, Vaṭeśvara, Śānta and Purāṇa Puruṣa.

29. In the Kṛta and other Yugas, the girth of the banyan tree has been respectively one Yojana, three-fourths of a Yojana, half a Yojana and one-fourth of a Yojana.

30. After bowing down to the banyan tree, repeating the Mantra mentioned above, the devotee should go to the south at a distance of three hundred Dhanus (bows or twelve hundred hastas or cubits).

31. It is the place where the sign, the beautiful portals of heaven, become visible within the ocean, a log of wood equipped with all auspicious attributes has been drawn.

32. He should bow down to it, worship it and then stand by. He shall then be liberated from all the mulitudes of sins, effects of evil planets and other inauspicious things.

33. Formerly, Ugrasena looked at the ocean through heavenly portals. He went there. With purity of word, mind and deed, he meditated on the supreme Nārāyaṇa and performed the Ācamana rite.

34. Thereafter, the devotee should fix the eight-syllabled Mantra on the hand as well as on the body.[1] The Mantra is what learned men utter viz. 'Om namo Nārāyaṇāya'.

35. What purpose is served by many Mantras causing the richness of the mind ? The Mantra "Namo Narāyaṇāya" is that which achieves all objects.

36. Āpaḥ (waters) are glorified as Nārā since they are the offsprings of Nara (Man). They were the former abode of Viṣṇu. Hence Viṣṇu is remembered as Nārāyaṇa.

37. The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa. The Brāhmaṇas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa. Perfect knowledge is concerned with Nārāyaṇa. Holy rites are related to Nārāyaṇa.

38. Dharma (virtue) is concerned with Nārāyaṇa. The penance is connected with Nārāyaṇa, charitable gift is concerned with Nārāyaṇa; holy rites are related to Nārāyaṇa.

39. The worlds are concerned with Nārāyaṇa, the Devas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the Nitya rites (routine holy rites) are related to Nārāyaṇa. The region (to be reached) is concerned with Nārāyaṇa.

40. (All the elements are concerned with Nārāyaṇa, such as the earth is devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the water is related to Nārāyaṇa; the fire element is concerned with Nārāyaṇa; the firmament is devoted to Nārāyaṇa.

1. VV. 34-54 disclose the powerful influence of the Pañcarātra system on the NP.

41. The Vāyu (wind god) is devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the mind is concerned with Nārāyaṇa: the Ahaṁkāra (Ego) and the Buddhi (Intellect) both of these are of the nature of Nārāyaṇa.

42. The things of the past, present and future, whatever is termed as Jīva (living individual), the gross, the subtle and the huge, everything is of the nature of Nārāyaṇa.

43. O Mohinī, I do not see anything here different than Nārāyaṇa; this world consisting of the visible and the invisible, the mobile, and immobile beings is pervaded by him.

44-45. Waters constitute the abode of Viṣṇu, the ocean is the lord of waters. Hence, he is in the waters. Particularly, at the time of ablution, the devotee should worship Nārāyaṇa the dispeller of sins. He should remember Nārāyaṇa and meditate on him. He should then perform the Nyāsa rite on the hand and on the body.

46-47. He should fix the syllable Oṁ on the left hip, the syllable 'Nā' on the right hip, the syllable 'Rā' in the umbilical region, the syllable 'Ya' in the left arm and the syllable 'Ṇā' in the right arm. He should fix the syllable 'Ya' on the head and then fix beneath, above, sideways, in the heart behind and in front.

48-50. The learned devotee should meditate on Nārāyaṇa and thereafter begin the Kavaca (protective Mantras of mystic syllables) : In the east of me may Govinda protect; may Madhusūdana protect me in my south; may lord Śrīdhara protect me in my west; may Keśava protect me in the north; may Viṣṇu protect me in the south-east; may the unchanging Mādhava protect me in the southwest; may Hṛṣīkeśa protect me in the north-west; may Vāmana protect me in the north-east; may the Boar protect me in the earth and may Trivikrama protect me in the upward direction.

51. After assigning the Kavaca to various parts thus, the devotee should contemplate about himself. thus—"I am lord Nārāyaṇa. the wielder of the conch, discus and iron club."

52-54. After meditating on the Ātman thus, the devotee should repeat this Mantra : "You are the fire-god, O lord of bipeds; you are the discharger of the semen ; you are the igniter of love's fire. You are the chief of all living beings and individual souls; you are the unchanging lord; you are the Araṇi of the nectar; O lord of waters, you are the source of origin of the Devas; dispel my sins, O king of Tīrthas obeisance be to you".

After uttering thus duly, he should perform the rite of ablution according to injunctions.

55. Otherwise, O daughter of Brahmā, the bath there is not commended. The devotee should perform the rite of ablution and Mārjana (sprinkling) within water with those Mantras the deities of which are the waters.

56-57a. Then he should repeat the Mantra of Aghamarṣaṇa. O gentle lady, just as the horse-sacrifice is a Yajña that dispels sins, so also the hymn of Aghamarṣaṇa[1] dispels all sins.

57b-58. He should then come out of water and wear clean washed clothes. He should then restrain his breath, perform Ācamana rite and worship the sun by way of Sandhyā. He should then offer in the upward direction a handful of water and flowers.

59. With the arms raised up, he should worship the sun by means of the Mantras his symbols. Thereafter, he should repeat the holy and divine Gāyatrī Mantra hundred and eight times.

60. Standing there with concentration, he should repeat other Mantras also pertaining to the sun. He should then circumambulate and bow to the sun and be seated.

61-62a. He should then face the east and recite Veda-Mantras as Svādhyāya. Then the Tarpaṇa rite of the Devas, human beings, sages and the Pitṛs of his own family should be duly performed by the devotee who is the knower of names and Gotra. He should perform the Tarpaṇa rite with water mixed with sesame seeds, according to prescribed injunction and with concentration of mind.

62b-64a. During Śrāddha and the Havana (oblations to fire) rites the devotee should perform the same with a single

---

1. Aghamarṣaṇa hymns (RV. X. 190. 1-3) are supposed to wash off sins of men.

hand. The rite of Tarpaṇa shall be performed with both the hands. This is the standing injunction. He should perform the rite with the right hand supported by the left (?) "May they be satiated". He shall utter these words clearly uttering the name and the Gotra but silently otherwise.

64b-65a. If anyone out of delusion performs the Tarpaṇa rite for the Pitṛs, by means of gingelly seeds clinging to the body, it is as though the Tarpaṇa rite has been performed by means of skin, flesh, blood and bones.

65b-67a. The water libation will not reach the Pitṛs, if the devotee stands in water and offers on to the ground or if he stands on the ground and offers it into the water. The water should be offered standing on the ground and on to the ground. What is not offered on the ground does not reach (the Pitṛs). The earth has been given by Brahmā as the imperishable (eternal) place of the Pitṛs. Hence (the libation) should be given only there, by the person who wishes for the pleasure of the Pitṛs.

67b-68a. The earth is born out of water; the water is present therein and gets dissolved in the earth. Hence, one should offer water on the ground.

68b,c. He should spread the Kuśa grass on the ground and invoke the Pitṛs or the Devas by their respective Mantras. In respect of the Devas, the tips of the Kuśa grass shall be towards the east, and in the case of the Pitṛs (manes) they shall be towards the south.

CHAPTER FIFTYSEVEN

The Glory of Puruṣottama : The Procedure of Worship[1]

Vasu said :

1-3. After performing the rite of Tarpaṇa to gods, sages, Pitṛs and others, the pilgrim should silently perform Ācamana (religious sipping of water). O daughter of Brahmā, he should draw a square of the side of a Hasta (a cubit of about eighteen inches). Is should be beautiful and should have four entrances. It represents the city of Puruṣottama on the shore of the great ocean. In its middle, he should draw the mystic diagram of a lotus with eight petals and the pericarp. O Mohinī, he should draw the mystic diagram and worship in it, Lord Nārāyaṇa, the unborn eternal deity, in accordance with the same injunctions as in the case of eight-syllabled Mantra.

4. Henceforth, I shall explain fully to you the excellent mode of purification of the physical body. The* syllable Kṣa in the company of the syllable Ra is red and should be thought of in the heart.

5. On his head, he should think of the syllable 'E' as stationed in the middle of the dice of the moon and having three blazing 'Śikhās' burning down the heaps of the sins of the world.

6. It is white in colour and it showers nectar flooding the earth. The devotee who has shaken off sins, thus shall thereafter become one with a divine body.

1. This chapter gives the application of Pañca-rātra Āgama to the worship of Purusottama. The esoteric application of the mantra Oṁ namo Nārāyaṇāya and Viṣṇave namaḥ to the various parts of one's person (technically known as Nyāsa) is an essential part of Tantrism.

This chapter is practically the same as the Brahma P. Ch. 61. Thus the Brahma purāṇa 61.1-12 are the same as the NP 57.1-12; so also Brahma P. 61.23-58 and the NP. 57.23-58 are identical but with the difference of few readings here and there.

*Here Brahma P. V. 46 reads :

akāraṁ hṛdaye dhyātvā cakra-rekhā-samanvitam |

The Anāhata Cakra is presumed to be at the heart. But neither Kṣa nor Ra or A form the bījas and the 'Petals' of that Cakra.

The qualities of blazing and burning sins may be those of the syllable Kṣa, in case the first half of verse 6 is taken along with the 5th verse).

7. The learned devotee, should then fix the eight syllabled Mantra in the body as well as in the Ātman. He should fix it beginning with the left foot and proceed gradually.

8. With the Mūla mantra, the aspirant should perform the rite of purification of the hand. The Nyāsa rite shall have five subsidiary limbs and four manifestations of Viṣṇu.

9. He should fix each of the syllables separately on the fingers. The syllable OM is the earth. He should fix it on the left foot. It is white in colour.

10. The syllable na is dark-coloured. It is the Bhuvaḥ (the world). It is fixed on the right foot. They call the syllable mo as Kāla (Time) alone. It must be fixed in the left hip.

11. The syllable nā (which is the previous seed*) is established in the southern right side. They call rā the refulgence (the Fire element) and it is stabilised in the umbilical region.

12. The syllable ya is of gaseous nature and it has resorted to the left shoulder. The syllable ṇā shall always be known to have been stablished in the right shoulder.

13-14. The syllable ya is stationed on the head, where the worlds are also stabilised. After fixing Oṁkāra in the heart, the syllable 'vi' on the head, the syllable 'ṣṇa' on the tuft and the syllable 've' in the Kavaca (coat of mail). He shall fix na in the eyes. The syllable maḥ is said to be the 'Astra' 'miraculous weapon'.

15. The (deity) Vāsudeva is of white colour. It is fixed in the forehead. (He is stationed on the forehead) The deity Saṁkarṣaṇa is red. He is fixed in the mouth. He resembles the fire and the sun.

16. (The manifestation called 'Pradyumna' is yellow in colour and is assigned in the heart and the Vyūha (manifestation) known as Aniruddha is stationed at the sex-organ. Hari thus pervades all limbs. The Almighty one is worshipped thus in his four-fold manifestations (Vyūhas)

Br. P. 57.11a reads: Sarva-bīja.

17. Viṣṇu is present in front of me; Keśava abides behind me; Govinda is present on the right side; Madhusūdana is present on the left side.

18. Vaikuṇṭha is present above, and Varāha (the Divine Boar) on the ground. Mādhava is present in all those intermediate quarters between the main directions.

19. My protection is effected by Narasiṁha whether I go or stay, whether I keep awake or am asleep. I am identical with Vāsudeva.

20. After becoming identical with Viṣṇu thus, the devotee should begin the rite. He should combine all the principles with the Deva, just as is done in the case of the physical body.

21. That which ends with the syllable 'pha' is cited to be auspicious and destructive of all obstacles. He shall think of the spheres of the sun, moon and fire.

22-23. In the middle of the lotus of the internal side of the cosmos, the devotee shall fix Viṣṇu. Thereafter, he should mentally think of the excellent lustre, Praṇava (om) seated in the pericarp, the eternal being of the form of brilliance. Thereafter, he should perform the Nyāsa* rite of the eight-syllabled Mantra in due order.

24. The worship by means of that Mantra in the state of analysis and synthesis (Vyasta-Samasta) is remembered to be great : He should then worship the eternal lord by means of the twelve-syllabled Mantra.

25. He should then retain in the heart the immense being with four arms and lustre equal to that of crores of suns.

26-29. After thinking about the great Yoga, he should invoke the following deities in due order :

(The Mantra for invocation) : "O Nārāyaṇa, may these Devas, the bestowers of boons come in front of me viz. he who has assumed the form of the Fish, Narasiṁha and Vāmana."

Nyāsa* is the assignment of the various parts of the body to different deities (or syllables of Mantras). It is accompanied with particular Mantra, syllable or prayer to corresponding gesticulations.

Literally : Vyasta='inherent in or pervading all the several parts of anything,' while Samasta='inherent in or pervading the whole of anything.

(The Mantra for offering a seat.) "Sumeru is the pedestal for your feet. The seat has been made in the form of the lotus. O Madhusūdana, stay behind for the benefit of all living beings". (The Mantra for Pādya) "O eternal lord Padmanābha, the Pādya (water for washing feet) is offered at your feet. O Viṣṇu, O deity with the eyes like the petals of the lotus, O Madhusūdana, accept it.

(The Mantra for Madhuparka and Arghya) 'O great lord, accept Madhuparka prepared by me. Accept it in the company of Brahmā and others. O Puruṣottama, accept the Arghya devoutly offered by me.

30-33. (The Mantra for Ācamanīya) : "The water of the Mandākinī (the Gaṅgā) is auspicious. It dispels all sins. Accept that as the water for the rite of Ācamana. It has been offered by me with great devotion."

(The Mantra for bath) : "You are the water, the earth, the fiery (element) and the wind (element). I am bathing you with the water that alone supports the worlds."

(The Mantra for offering clothes) : "May these two clothes be accepted; they are woven with the divine yarn; they have the colour of the Yajña and they have the lustre and the glitter of gold."

(The Mantra for smearing the Lord with unguents) : "O Keśava, neither your body nor your activities do I know perfectly.

34-36. May the unguent offered by me be accepted and smeared." (The Mantra for offering a sacred thread) : "The sacred thread which has been made of three turns by the Lotus-born god with Mantras of Ṛk, Yajus and Sāman and is equipped with the knot called Sāvitrī, has been dedicated to you."

(The Mantra for decorating with ornaments) : "O Mādhava, the ornaments consisting of divine jewels and having the lustre of the fire and the sun will make your limbs splendid-looking".

The Mantra for waving lights) : "O lord of the luminaries, you alone are the fiery refulgence of the sun and the moon of the lightning and the fire. May this light be accepted."

37. (The Mantra for offering incense) : "This fragrant vegetable juice divine and presented along with sweat scents is for you. May this incense offered to you devoutly by me be accepted."

38. (The Mantra for offering food as Naivedya) : "Tasty cooked food of four kinds has been offered to you with devotion. It has six tastes in the varieties of dishes. O Keśava, this is the Naivedya unto you."

39-41. The devotee should perform the Nyāsa in the petal in the east; that of Saṁkarṣaṇa in the petal in the south; that of Pradyumna in the petal in the west, and that of Anuruddha in the petal in the north. He should perform the Nyāsa of the Varāha incarnation in the south-east; that of Narasiṁha in the south-west; that of Mādhava in the north-west, that of Trivikrama in the north-east. He shall perform the Nyāsa of Garuḍa, in front of the lord of the eight-syllabled Mantra.

42-43. He should fix the discus on the left side and the conch on the right side. The great iron club also should be fixed on the right hand side of the lord. Then the scholarly devotee should fix the bow to the left of the lord. The divine quiver shall be fixed on the right hand side and the sword on the left.

44-45. After fixing Śrī to the south side, the devotee should fix Puṣṭi to the north side and the Vana-mālā (the garland of sylvan flowers) as well as the Śrīvatsa mark and Kaustubha gem in front of the Lord. He should fix the heart etc. in the four quarters beginning with the east. Thereafter, he shall fix the weapou of the lord of the Devas in the corner.

46-48a. He should worship the following deities (the guardians of the quarters) : Viz. Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vâyu, Dhanada (Kubera), Iśāna, Ananta and Brahmā. He should worship them with their respective Mantras (in the respective quarters) and below as well as above. By worshipping thus the lord of the Devas, Janārdana, stationed in the Mystic diagram, the man shall attain cherished desires.

48b-50a. He who sees this Janārdana stationed in the mystic diagram worshipped in accordance with this injunction, shall enter the unchanging Viṣṇu. He, by whom Keśava is worshipped at least once in this manner shall surmount (the difficulties of bath, old age and death and attain the region of Viṣṇu.

50b-51a. Śvetadvīpa is glorified for the daily residence of that person who devoutly remembers Nārāyaṇa continuously and diligently.

51b-52a. That Mantra which begins with 'Oṁ Namaḥ' (Lit : that which contains 'Namaskāra' accompanied with Oṁ at the beginning) and is embellished with word 'Namaḥ' at the end (that is the Mantra : Oṁ namo Nārāyaṇāya namaḥ) is regarded as the name (or illuminator) of all principles.

52b-53. In the same order of procedure, he should offer scents and fragrant flowers unto each in the manner prescribed. He shall show the eight mystic Mudrās (gestures) as indicated in the order mentioned above.

54. He should perform Japa by means of the Mūla Mantra eight, twentyeight or hundred and eight times. The knower of reality shall do thus.

55a. In those rites with specific desires in view, the devotee should do everything as mentioned with concentration and in accordance with his capacity.

55b-56a. The following eight are glorified as the Mudrās (mystic gestures) viz. : Lotus, Conch, Śrīvatsa, Gadā, Garuḍa, Cakra (discus), Khaḍga (Sword), Śārṅga (bow).

56b-57a. (Bidding farewell). "O Eternal Ancient Supreme Being, go, go into the greatest abode, the greatest region which Brahmā and other Devas do not know. O auspicious lady, those who do not know the mode of worship as mentioned by means of the Mantras of Hari should worship Acyuta by means of the Mūla mantra.

CHAPTER FIFTYEIGHT

*The Creation of the Cosmic Egg

Vasu said :—

1. After duly and devoutly worshipping Puruṣottama. the devotee should bow down his head and propitiate the ocean with the following Mantra.

2. "In the whole universe, O lord of rivers, you are the vital air (Prāṇa) of all living beings, O Tīrtharāja (King of holy centres), obeisance be to you. Save me, O favourite of Acyuta."

3-4. After duly taking the holy dip in the ocean, in that auspicious and excellent holy centre and after duly worshipping Nārâyaṇa devoid of ailments and blemishes on the shore (of ocean), and after bowing down to Rāma, Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā, the devotee should worship the ocean. Thereby, the man attains the benefit of hundreds of horse-sacrifices.

5-6. He shall be absolved of all sins. He shall be freed from all miseries. Like Hari, he shall be glorious and surrounded by the Devas. He can justifiably feel proud of beauty and youth. In an aerial chariot having the lustre of the sun and with the harmonious divine music of the Gandharvas, he shall take twentyone generations of his family and go to the world of Viṣṇu.

7. After enjoying various excellent pleasures there and after playing with the Devas (he will exhaust his merit and) fall off from that world. After coming here, he becomes a Brāhmaṇa, the most excellent knower of the Brahman.

8. He shall then be famous, intelligent, glorious and truthful. He shall have mastery over the sense-organs. He shall become a Brāhmaṇa fully conversant with the meanings of the Vedic and scriptural texts. Then he shall be a devotee of Viṣṇu.

*vide the Brahma P. Ch. 62 for comparison. Most of the verses (Viz. 1-23) in these chapters of the NP. and Brahma P. are common. The NP. however tells a different episode about the transformation of the sea-water from sweetness to saltishness (from v. 23 onwards)

9a. After attaining the Yoga pertaining to Viṣṇu, he shall attain liberation.

9b-11. The men of good intellect should offer charitable gifts on the following occasions—during the eclipses, during the transit of the sun (from one house of Zodiac to another), and on both tropical and equinotical transits, on the inaugural days of the Manvantaras and Yugas, during Vyatīpātas, when the days dwindle in length, during the full-moon days in the months of Āṣāḍha, Kārttika and Māgha and other auspicious Tithis. They then attain thousand times the benefit (as compared with that) derived from other holy centres.[1]

12. If the devotees offer balls of rice to the Pitṛs there, in accordance with the injunctions, the Pitṛs derive everlasting satisfaction.

13-15. Thus, O gentle lady, the benefit of the holy bath in the ocean has been recounted by me. So also the benefit of the charitable gifts and the offerings of Piṇḍas has been mentioned.

14. It is the bestower of the benefit of virtue, wealth, and liberation. It grants longevity, fame and renown. It yields worldly pleasures and liberation (from Saṁsāra) for men. It is conducive to wealth. It dispels the effects of evil dreams. It is meritorious. It annihilates all sins and bestows all desired benefits. It (this knowledge) should not be imparted to an atheist, to a knave or to a miser.

16. As long as the greatness of the Tīrtharāja[2] is not described by the Brāhmaṇas, other holy centres roar with their own respective greatness separately.

17. Puṣkara and other Tīrthas grant only their own respective benefits. But the Tīrtharāja, the ocean is the bestower of the benefit of all the Tīrthas.

18. Whichever Tīrthas, holy rivers and the lakes exist on the surface of the earth, they enter the ocean. Hence it has verily attained the excellence.

1. Compare the list of auspicious occasions for Dāna (religious gift) in Mbh. Vana 200. 125, Laghu Śātātapa 145, 150 Vyatīpāta is already explained.

2. Tīrtharāja 'The King of all Tīrthas' is the ocean (Bay of Bengal in this case). This title is explained in vv. 18-21.

19. The ocean, the lord of the rivers, is the king of all Tīrthas. Hence, it is superior to all other Tīrthas. It is the bestower of all desires.

20a.* When the sun rises up, the darkness perishes," (so also the sin perishes in a place).

20b. On the ocean there are ninety-nine crores of Tīrthas. Hence whatever is performed there (on the sea-shore) such as ablution, charitable gift, Homa, Japa and worship of the Devas, is declared to be everlasting in the Śāstras.

Mohini enquired :

21-22. Among all the oceans, how did this lord of rivers become briny ? O Preceptor, tell me, since O Brāhmaṇa, you are omniscient.[1]

Vasu narrated :

23. O lady of good fortune, listen. I shall explain the saltish state of this ocean and how this had been cursed by his mother who was the mother of the worlds.

24. O Mohinī, formerly in the process of creation there had been born seven oceans, born of the womb of Rādhā. They had divine physical bodies of various kinds.

25. Once, the lord of Rādhā, the lord of cowherds, cowherd-lasses and cows was indulging in sexual intercourse with his lady love in the Vṛndāvana forest.

26. In the middle of the group of Rāsa dances, in the brilliant-jewelled Maṇḍapa, he was in passionate union with his affectionate lady love.

27-28. Those seven children, the oceans, could not see their mother, the mother of the universe, when the time for

*A ref. to the Brahma P. shows that 20a and 20b in the NP. form parts of totally different verses. 20a in the NP becomes complete by the line "Similarly all the sins become totally annihilated by a bath in the Tīrtha-rāja (ocean)" 20a in B. M. P. Ch. 62.

1. The story about the saltish taste of the sea due to the curse of Rādhā as given here in vv. 23-38 has no basis in the Bh. P. or the Viṣṇu P. This story is not at all complimentary to Rādhā.

their breast-feeding had arrived. Weeping on being over-whelmed with hunger, they reached the jewelled Maṇḍapa. They went near it, eager to have their breast-feed.

29-30a. All of them were stopped by the groups of cowherdesses stationed at the entrance. The angry children impatient to have their usual breastfeed forced their entry into the Maṇḍapa. Thinking that they were only babies in the lap of their mother, the children were let in by the cowherdesses.

30b-32a. Then they went into the jewelled Maṇḍapa crying bitterly, "O mother, where are you ?". O queen, when the mother did not respond to the call of those children seeking breast-milk, the youngest of them all entered the actual spot of the mother's sexual dalliance.

32b-34a. On seeing her deluded sons unwittingly causing a break in her sexual dalliance, the agitated mother, O gentle lady, cursed them—"All of you go ere long to the world of earth since you had attempted to cause break in my sexual dalliance. After going to the earth, your sons will be staying there separately alone."

34b-35. O daughter of Brahmā, on hearing the worlds of their mother, the mother of the universe, all those children cried aloud (as they were) extremely frightened of the impending separation. Thereafter, Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the destroyer of the anguish of those who bow down, became pleased with them.

36-37. "O sons, do not be afraid. I shall stand near you. All of you shall be in the liquid state always with separate forms and movements. This youngest son who came well within the place shall become briny." After saying this, the lord of the universe dismissed his sons.

38. In order to console them, he always stood by them. He who entered the room of sexual dalliance became the briny sea. The others remained separately as the milk ocean etc. assuming liquid form.

Mohini queried :

39. O Preceptor, who is this Rādhā mentioned by you as the chaste lady and the mother of the worlds. Explain to me the reality about her. I am eager to listen to it.

40. The description of Rādhā and Mādhava is a mysterious secret in the Purāṇas. Since you factually know everything, O sage of holy rites, narrate it to me.

Vasiṣṭha said :

41. O King Māndhātā, on hearing the words of Mohinī, the magnanimous Vasu, the great devotee of Govinda, was visibly moved.

42. (Being extremely delighted) the hair all over his body stood on their ends. His heart was overwhelmed with joy. He as it were lost his consciousness with ecstasy. The excellent Brāhmaṇa spoke to Mohinī.

Vasu said :[1]

43. O gentle lady, listen, I shall tell you the secret of secrets. The story of Kṛṣṇa is to be guarded well. It brings about one's union with the Brahman.

44. I bow down to the lord who controls both—the Prakṛti and Puruṣa, who is the creator of the creators, who is the annihilator of the annihilators.

45. O gentle lady, all the incarnations are those of the Brahman in the form of Kṛṣṇa. The incarnator is Kṛṣṇa himself. He is both with and without attributes.

46. He alone is Rāma and Kṛṣṇa factually, but he is separate due to the variety of attributes. The other worlds are the creations of Prakṛti. But the Goloka (i.e. Kṛṣṇa's world) itself is devoid of attributes.

47. O gentle lady, the term, Gāvaḥ are the rays of brilliance, as observed (after ascertainment) by those who know the Vedas. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and others are manifestations of Prakṛti evolved out of its Guṇas.

48. O gentle lady, his refulgence is always without attributes but considered to be the cause of Guṇas. The Guṇas are

1. VV. 43-67 present a synthesis of Sāṅkhya and the Purāṇic concept of evolution of universe. It is obviously the theistic Sāṅkhya with Kṛṣṇa as the God.

18. By resorting to Matsya-Mādhava, a man will be invincible. He will be a liberal donor, enjoyer of pleasures, a warrior, a devotee of Viṣṇu and true to his word.

19-20a. Afterwards, by being enlightened in the Yoga leading to Hari, he shall attain liberation. The greatness of Matsyamādhava has been recounted by me to you. On seeing him, O daughter of Brahmā, the devotee shall attain all desires.

20b-22. I shall now describe the rite of Mārjana in the sacred and auspicious pool of water called Mārkaṇḍeyahrada. The ablution in the Mārkaṇḍeyahrada at all times is praised. It is an ancient rite to plunge into it with a singleminded devotion. Particularly on the Caturdaśī day, the ablution is destructive of all sins. Similarly, the ablution in the ocean at all times is praised.

23-24a. Particularly, on the full moon day, (the ablution in the ocean) makes one attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. On the full Moon day in the month of Jyeṣṭha, when the constellation is also Jyeṣṭhā, the devotee shall particulary visit that king of holy centres which is exceedingly splendid.

24b-25. He should have pure and holy Sāttvaic feelings physically, verbally and mentally, and his mind should not be directed towards anything else. He should be liberated from all mutually clashing opposites. He should be devoid of passions and malicious rivalry. He should circumambulate the beautiful Kalpa-tree, the banyan tree, where Janārdana himself abides.

26-27a. With great concentration, he should circumambulate it three times. On seeing it, the sin originating from seven births perishes. O Mohinī, he attains an extensive merit and his desired goal.

27b-28. I shall mention to you its names in the different Yugas. The names of the banyan tree in the Kṛta and other Yugas have been glorified as follows: (They know them as) Vaṭa, Vaṭeśvara, Śānta and Purāṇa Puruṣa.

29. In the Kṛta and other Yugas, the girth of the banyan tree has been respectively one Yojana, three-fourths of a Yojana, half a Yojana and one-fourth of a Yojana.

30. After bowing down to the banyan tree, repeating the Mantra mentioned above, the devotee should go to the south at a distance of three hundred Dhanus (bows or twelve hundred hastas or cubits).

31. It is the place where the sign, the beautiful portals of heaven, become visible within the ocean, a log of wood equipped with all auspicious attributes has been drawn.

32. He should bow down to it, worship it and then stand by. He shall then be liberated from all the mulitudes of sins, effects of evil planets and other inauspicious things.

33. Formerly, Ugrasena looked at the ocean through heavenly portals. He went there. With purity of word, mind and deed, he meditated on the supreme Nārāyaṇa and performed the Ācamana rite.

34. Thereafter, the devotee should fix the eight-syllabled Mantra on the hand as well as on the body.[1] The Mantra is what learned men utter viz. 'Om namo Nārāyaṇāya'.

35. What purpose is served by many Mantras causing the richness of the mind ? The Mantra "Namo Narāyaṇāya" is that which achieves all objects.

36. Āpaḥ (waters) are glorified as Nārā since they are the offsprings of Nara (Man). They were the former abode of Viṣṇu. Hence Viṣṇu is remembered as Nārāyaṇa.

37. The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa. The Brāhmaṇas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa. Perfect knowledge is concerned with Nārāyaṇa. Holy rites are related to Nārāyaṇa.

38. Dharma (virtue) is concerned with Nārāyaṇa. The penance is connected with Nārāyaṇa, charitable gift is concerned with Nārāyaṇa; holy rites are related to Nārāyaṇa.

39. The worlds are concerned with Nārāyaṇa, the Devas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the Nitya rites (routine holy rites) are related to Nārāyaṇa. The region (to be reached) is concerned with Nārāyaṇa.

40. (All the elements are concerned with Nārāyaṇa, such as the earth is devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the water is related to Nārāyaṇa; the fire element is concerned with Nārāyaṇa; the firmament is devoted to Nārāyaṇa.

1. VV. 34-54 disclose the powerful influence of the Pañcarātra system on the NP.

41. The Vâyu (wind god) is devoted to Nārāyaṇa; the mind is concerned with Nārāyaṇa: the Ahaṁkāra (Ego) and the Buddhi (Intellect) both of these are of the nature of Nārāyaṇa.

42. The things of the past, present and future, whatever is termed as Jīva (living individual), the gross, the subtle and the huge, everything is of the nature of Nārāyaṇa.

43. O Mohinī, I do not see anything here different than Nārāyaṇa; this world consisting of the visible and the invisible, the mobile, and immobile beings is pervaded by him.

44-45. Waters constitute the abode of Viṣṇu, the ocean is the lord of waters. Hence, he is in the waters. Particularly, at the time of ablution, the devotee should worship Nārāyaṇa the dispeller of sins. He should remember Nārāyaṇa and meditate on him. He should then perform the Nyāsa rite on the hand and on the body.

46-47. He should fix the syllable Oṁ on the left hip, the syllable 'Nā' on the right hip, the syllable 'Rā' in the umbilical region, the syllable 'Ya' in the left arm and the syllable 'Ṇā' in the right arm. He should fix the syllable 'Ya' on the head and then fix beneath, above, sideways, in the heart behind and in front.

48-50. The learned devotee should meditate on Nārāyaṇa and thereafter begin the Kavaca (protective Mantras of mystic syllables) : In the east of me may Govinda protect; may Madhusūdana protect me in my south; may lord Śrīdhara protect me in my west; may Keśava protect me in the north; may Viṣṇu protect me in the south-east; may the unchanging Mādhava protect me in the southwest; may Hṛṣīkeśa protect me in the north-west; may Vāmana protect me in the north-east; may the Boar protect me in the earth and may Trivikrama protect me in the upward direction.

51. After assigning the Kavaca to various parts thus, the devotee should contemplate about himself. thus—"I am lord Nārāyaṇa. the wielder of the conch, discus and iron club."

52-54. After meditating on the Ātman thus, the devotee should repeat this Mantra : "You are the fire-god, O lord of bipeds; you are the discharger of the semen ; you are the igniter of love's fire. You are the chief of all living beings and individual souls; you are the unchanging lord; you are the Araṇi of the nectar; O lord of waters, you are the source of origin of the Devas; dispel my sins, O king of Tīrthas obeisance be to you".

After uttering thus duly, he should perform the rite of ablution according to injunctions.

55. Otherwise, O daughter of Brahmā, the bath there is not commended. The devotee should perform the rite of ablution and Mārjana (sprinkling) within water with those Mantras the deities of which are the waters.

56-57a. Then he should repeat the Mantra of Aghamarṣaṇa. O gentle lady, just as the horse-sacrifice is a Yajña that dispels sins, so also the hymn of Aghamarṣaṇa[1] dispels all sins.

57b-58. He should then come out of water and wear clean washed clothes. He should then restrain his breath, perform Ācamana rite and worship the sun by way of Sandhyā. He should then offer in the upward direction a handful of water and flowers.

59. With the arms raised up, he should worship the sun by means of the Mantras his symbols. Thereafter, he should repeat the holy and divine Gāyatrī Mantra hundred and eight times.

60. Standing there with concentration, he should repeat other Mantras also pertaining to the sun. He should then circumambulate and bow to the sun and be seated.

61-62a. He should then face the east and recite Veda-Mantras as Svādhyāya. Then the Tarpaṇa rite of the Devas, human beings, sages and the Pitṛs of his own family should be duly performed by the devotee who is the knower of names and Gotra. He should perform the Tarpaṇa rite with water mixed with sesame seeds, according to prescribed injunction and with concentration of mind.

62b-64a. During Śrāddha and the Havana (oblations to fire) rites the devotee should perform the same with a single

---

1. Aghamarṣaṇa hymns (RV. X. 190. 1-3) are supposed to wash off sins of men.

hand. The rite of Tarpaṇa shall be performed with both the hands. This is the standing injunction. He should perform the rite with the right hand supported by the left (?) "May they be satiated". He shall utter these words clearly uttering the name and the Gotra but silently otherwise.

64b-65a. If anyone out of delusion performs the Tarpaṇa rite for the Pitṛs, by means of gingelly seeds clinging to the body, it is as though the Tarpaṇa rite has been performed by means of skin, flesh, blood and bones.

65b-67a. The water libation will not reach the Pitṛs, if the devotee stands in water and offers on to the ground or if he stands on the ground and offers it into the water. The water should be offered standing on the ground and on to the ground. What is not offered on the ground does not reach (the Pitṛs). The earth has been given by Brahmā as the imperishable (eternal) place of the Pitṛs. Hence (the libation) should be given only there, by the person who wishes for the pleasure of the Pitṛs.

67b-68a. The earth is born out of water; the water is present therein and gets dissolved in the earth. Hence, one should offer water on the ground.

68b,c. He should spread the Kuśa grass on the ground and invoke the Pitṛs or the Devas by their respective Mantras. In respect of the Devas, the tips of the Kuśa grass shall be towards the east, and in the case of the Pitṛs (manes) they shall be towards the south.

CHAPTER FIFTYSEVEN

The Glory of Puruṣottama : The Procedure of Worship[1]

Vasu said :

1-3. After performing the rite of Tarpaṇa to gods, sages, Pitṛs and others, the pilgrim should silently perform Ācamana (religious sipping of water). O daughter of Brahmā, he should draw a square of the side of a Hasta (a cubit of about eighteen inches). Is should be beautiful and should have four entrances. It represents the city of Puruṣottama on the shore of the great ocean. In its middle, he should draw the mystic diagram of a lotus with eight petals and the pericarp. O Mohinī, he should draw the mystic diagram and worship in it, Lord Nārāyaṇa, the unborn eternal deity, in accordance with the same injunctions as in the case of eight-syllabled Mantra.

4. Henceforth, I shall explain fully to you the excellent mode of purification of the physical body. The* syllable Kṣa in the company of the syllable Ra is red and should be thought of in the heart.

5. On his head, he should think of the syllable 'E' as stationed in the middle of the dice of the moon and having three blazing 'Śikhās' burning down the heaps of the sins of the world.

6. It is white in colour and it showers nectar flooding the earth. The devotee who has shaken off sins, thus shall thereafter become one with a divine body.

---

1. This chapter gives the application of Pañca-rātra Āgama to the worship of Puruṣottama. The esoteric application of the mantra Oṁ namo Nārāyaṇāya and Viṣṇave namaḥ to the various parts of one's person (technically known as Nyāsa) is an essential part of Tantrism.

This chapter is practically the same as the Brahma P. Ch. 61. Thus the Brahma purāṇa 61.1-12 are the same as the NP 57.1-12; so also Brahma P. 61.23-58 and the NP. 57.23-58 are identical but with the difference of few readings here and there.

*Here Brahma P. V. 46 reads :

akāraṁ hṛdaye dhyātvā cakra-rekhā-samanvitam |

The Anāhata Cakra is presumed to be at the heart. But neither Kṣa nor Ra or A form the bījas and the 'Petals' of that Cakra.

The qualities of blazing and burning sins may be those of the syllable Kṣa, in case the first half of verse 6 is taken along with the 5th verse).

7. The learned devotee, should then fix the eight syllabled Mantra in the body as well as in the Ātman. He should fix it beginning with the left foot and proceed gradually.

8. With the Mūla mantra, the aspirant should perform the rite of purification of the hand. The Nyāsa rite shall have five subsidiary limbs and four manifestations of Viṣṇu.

9. He should fix each of the syllables separately on the fingers. The syllable OM is the earth. He should fix it on the left foot. It is white in colour.

10. The syllable na is dark-coloured. It is the Bhuvaḥ (the world). It is fixed on the right foot. They call the syllable mo as Kāla (Time) alone. It must be fixed in the left hip.

11. The syllable nā (which is the previous seed*) is established in the southern right side. They call rā the refulgence (the Fire element) and it is stabilised in the umbilical region.

12. The syllable ya is of gaseous nature and it has resorted to the left shoulder. The syllable ṇā shall always be known to have been stablished in the right shoulder.

13-14. The syllable ya is stationed on the head, where the worlds are also stabilised. After fixing Oṁkāra in the heart, the syllable 'vi' on the head, the syllable 'ṣṇa' on the tuft and the syllable 've' in the Kavaca (coat of mail). He shall fix na in the eyes. The syllable maḥ is said to be the 'Astra' 'miraculous weapon'.

15. The (deity) Vāsudeva is of white colour. It is fixed in the forehead. (He is stationed on the forehead) The deity Saṁkarṣaṇa is red. He is fixed in the mouth. He resembles the fire and the sun.

16. (The manifestation called 'Pradyumna' is yellow in colour and is assigned in the heart and the Vyūha (manifestation) known as Aniruddha is stationed at the sex-organ. Hari thus pervades all limbs. The Almighty one is worshipped thus in his four-fold manifestations (Vyūhas)

Br. P. 57.11a reads: Sarva-bīja.

17. Viṣṇu is present in front of me; Keśava abides behind me; Govinda is present on the right side; Madhusūdana is present on the left side.

18. Vaikuṇṭha is present above, and Varāha (the Divine Boar) on the ground. Mādhava is present in all those intermediate quarters between the main directions.

19. My protection is effected by Narasiṁha whether I go or stay, whether I keep awake or am asleep. I am identical with Vāsudeva.

20. After becoming identical with Viṣṇu thus, the devotee should begin the rite. He should combine all the principles with the Deva, just as is done in the case of the physical body.

21. That which ends with the syllable 'pha' is cited to be auspicious and destructive of all obstacles. He shall think of the spheres of the sun, moon and fire.

22-23. In the middle of the lotus of the internal side of the cosmos, the devotee shall fix Viṣṇu. Thereafter, he should mentally think of the excellent lustre, Praṇava (om) seated in the pericarp, the eternal being of the form of brilliance. Thereafter, he should perform the Nyāsa* rite of the eight-syllabled Mantra in due order.

24. The worship by means of that Mantra in the state of analysis and synthesis (Vyasta-Samasta)  is remembered to be great : He should then worship the eternal lord by means of the twelve-syllabled Mantra.

25. He should then retain in the heart the immense being with four arms and lustre equal to that of crores of suns.

26-29. After thinking about the great Yoga, he should invoke the following deities in due order :

(The Mantra for invocation) : "O Nārāyaṇa, may these Devas, the bestowers of boons come in front of me viz. he who has assumed the form of the Fish, Narasiṁha and Vāmana."

*_Nyāsa_ is the assignment of the various parts of the body to different deities (or syllables of Mantras). It is accompanied with particular Mantra, syllable or prayer to corresponding gesticulations.

Literally : _Vyasta_='inherent in or pervading _all the several parts_ of anything,' while _Samasta_='inherent in or pervading _the whole of_ anything.

(The Mantra for offering a seat.) "Sumeru is the pedestal for your feet. The seat has been made in the form of the lotus. O Madhusūdana, stay behind for the benefit of all living beings". (The Mantra for Pādya) "O eternal lord Padmanābha, the Pādya (water for washing feet) is offered at your feet. O Viṣṇu, O deity with the eyes like the petals of the lotus, O Madhusūdana, accept it.

(The Mantra for Madhuparka and Arghya) 'O great lord, accept Madhuparka prepared by me. Accept it in the company of Brahmā and others. O Puruṣottama, accept the Arghya devoutly offered by me.

30-33. (The Mantra for Ācamanīya) : "The water of the Mandākinī (the Gaṅgā) is auspicious. It dispels all sins. Accept that as the water for the rite of Ācamana. It has been offered by me with great devotion."

(The Mantra for bath) : "You are the water, the earth, the fiery (element) and the wind (element). I am bathing you with the water that alone supports the worlds."

(The Mantra for offering clothes) : "May these two clothes be accepted; they are woven with the divine yarn; they have the colour of the Yajña and they have the lustre and the glitter of gold."

(The Mantra for smearing the Lord with unguents) : "O Keśava, neither your body nor your activities do I know perfectly.

34-36. May the unguent offered by me be accepted and smeared." (The Mantra for offering a sacred thread) : "The sacred thread which has been made of three turns by the Lotus-born god with Mantras of Ṛk, Yajus and Sāman and is equipped with the knot called Sāvitrī, has been dedicated to you."

(The Mantra for decorating with ornaments) : "O Mādhava, the ornaments consisting of divine jewels and having the lustre of the fire and the sun will make your limbs splendid-looking".

The Mantra for waving lights) : "O lord of the luminaries, you alone are the fiery refulgence of the sun and the moon of the lightning and the fire. May this light be accepted."

37. (The Mantra for offering incense) : "This fragrant vegetable juice divine and presented along with sweat scents is for you. May this incense offered to you devoutly by me be accepted."

38. (The Mantra for offering food as Naivedya) : "Tasty cooked food of four kinds has been offered to you with devotion. It has six tastes in the varieties of dishes. O Keśava, this is the Naivedya unto you."

39-41. The devotee should perform the Nyāsa in the petal in the east; that of Saṁkarṣaṇa in the petal in the south; that of Pradyumna in the petal in the west, and that of Anuruddha in the petal in the north. He should perform the Nyāsa of the Varāha incarnation in the south-east; that of Narasiṁha in the south-west; that of Mādhava in the north-west, that of Trivikrama in the north-east. He shall perform the Nyāsa of Garuḍa, in front of the lord of the eight-syllabled Mantra.

42-43. He should fix the discus on the left side and the conch on the right side. The great iron club also should be fixed on the right hand side of the lord. Then the scholarly devotee should fix the bow to the left of the lord. The divine quiver shall be fixed on the right hand side and the sword on the left.

44-45. After fixing Śrī to the south side, the devotee should fix Puṣṭi to the north side and the Vana-mālā (the garland of sylvan flowers) as well as the Śrīvatsa mark and Kaustubha gem in front of the Lord. He should fix the heart etc. in the four quarters beginning with the east. Thereafter, he shall fix the weapou of the lord of the Devas in the corner.

46-48a. He should worship the following deities (the guardians of the quarters) : Viz. Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirṛti, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Dhanada (Kubera), Īśāna, Ananta and Brahmā. He should worship them with their respective Mantras (in the respective quarters) and below as well as above. By worshipping thus the lord of the Devas, Janārdana, stationed in the Mystic diagram, the man shall attain cherished desires.

48b-50a. He who sees this Janārdana stationed in the mystic diagram worshipped in accordance with this injunction, shall enter the unchanging Viṣṇu. He, by whom Keśava is worshipped at least once in this manner shall surmount (the difficulties of bath, old age and death and attain the region of Viṣṇu.

50b-51a. Śvetadvīpa is glorified for the daily residence of that person who devoutly remembers Nārāyaṇa continuously and diligently.

51b-52a. That Mantra which begins with 'Oṁ Namaḥ' (Lit : that which contains 'Namaskāra' accompanied with Oṁ at the beginning) and is embellished with word 'Namaḥ' at the end (that is the Mantra : Oṁ namo Nārāyaṇāya namaḥ) is regarded as the name (or illuminator) of all principles.

52b-53. In the same order of procedure, he should offer scents and fragrant flowers unto each in the manner prescribed. He shall show the eight mystic Mudrās (gestures) as indicated in the order mentioned above.

54. He should perform Japa by means of the Mūla Mantra eight, twentyeight or hundred and eight times. The knower of reality shall do thus.

55a. In those rites with specific desires in view, the devotee should do everything as mentioned with concentration and in accordance with his capacity.

55b-56a. The following eight are glorified as the Mudrās (mystic gestures) viz. : Lotus, Conch, Śrīvatsa, Gadā, Garuḍa, Cakra (discus), Khaḍga (Sword), Śārṅga (bow).

56b-57a. (Bidding farewell). "O Eternal Ancient Supreme Being, go, go into the greatest abode, the greatest region which Brahmā and other Devas do not know. O auspicious lady, those who do not know the mode of worship as mentioned by means of the Mantras of Hari should worship Acyuta by means of the Mūla mantra.

CHAPTER FIFTYEIGHT

*The Creation of the Cosmic Egg

Vasu said :—

1. After duly and devoutly worshipping Puruṣottama. the devotee should bow down his head and propitiate the ocean with the following Mantra.

2. "In the whole universe, O lord of rivers, you are the vital air (Prāṇa) of all living beings, O Tīrtharāja (King of holy centres), obeisance be to you. Save me, O favourite of Acyuta."

3-4. After duly taking the holy dip in the ocean, in that auspicious and excellent holy centre and after duly worshipping Nārāyaṇa devoid of ailments and blemishes on the shore (of ocean), and after bowing down to Rāma, Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā, the devotee should worship the ocean. Thereby, the man attains the benefit of hundreds of horse-sacrifices.

5-6. He shall be absolved of all sins. He shall be freed from all miseries. Like Hari, he shall be glorious and surrounded by the Devas. He can justifiably feel proud of beauty and youth. In an aerial chariot having the lustre of the sun and with the harmonious divine music of the Gandharvas, he shall take twentyone generations of his family and go to the world of Viṣṇu.

7. After enjoying various excellent pleasures there and after playing with the Devas (he will exhaust his merit and) fall off from that world. After coming here, he becomes a Brāhmaṇa, the most excellent knower of the Brahman.

8. He shall then be famous, intelligent, glorious and truthful. He shall have mastery over the sense-organs. He shall become a Brāhmaṇa fully conversant with the meanings of the Vedic and scriptural texts. Then he shall be a devotee of Viṣṇu.

*vide the Brahma P. Ch. 62 for comparison. Most of the verses (Viz. 1-23) in these chapters of the NP. and Brahma P. are common. The NP. however tells a different episode about the transformation of the sea-water from sweetness to saltishness (from v. 23 onwards)

9a. After attaining the Yoga pertaining to Viṣṇu, he shall attain liberation.

9b-11. The men of good intellect should offer charitable gifts on the following occasions—during the eclipses, during the transit of the sun (from one house of Zodiac to another), and on both tropical and equinotical transits, on the inaugural days of the Manvantaras and Yugas, during Vyatīpātas, when the days dwindle in length, during the full-moon days in the months of Āṣāḍha, Kārttika and Māgha and other auspicious Tithis. They then attain thousand times the benefit (as compared with that) derived from other holy centres.[1]

12. If the devotees offer balls of rice to the Pitṛs there, in accordance with the injunctions, the Pitṛs derive everlasting satisfaction.

13-15. Thus, O gentle lady, the benefit of the holy bath in the ocean has been recounted by me. So also the benefit of the charitable gifts and the offerings of Piṇḍas has been mentioned.

14. It is the bestower of the benefit of virtue, wealth, and liberation. It grants longevity, fame and renown. It yields worldly pleasures and liberation (from Saṁsāra) for men. It is conducive to wealth. It dispels the effects of evil dreams. It is meritorious. It annihilates all sins and bestows all desired benefits. It (this knowledge) should not be imparted to an atheist, to a knave or to a miser.

16. As long as the greatness of the Tīrtharāja[2] is not described by the Brāhmaṇas, other holy centres roar with their own respective greatness separately.

17. Puṣkara and other Tīrthas grant only their own respective benefits. But the Tīrtharāja, the ocean is the bestower of the benefit of all the Tīrthas.

18. Whichever Tīrthas, holy rivers and the lakes exist on the surface of the earth, they enter the ocean. Hence it has verily attained the excellence.

1. Compare the list of auspicious occasions for Dāna (religious gift) in Mbh. Vana 200. 125, Laghu Śātātapa 145, 150 Vyatīpāta is already explained.

2. Tīrtharāja 'The King of all Tīrthas' is the ocean (Bay of Bengal in this case). This title is explained in vv. 18-21.

19. The ocean, the lord of the rivers, is the king of all Tīrthas. Hence, it is superior to all other Tīrthas. It is the bestower of all desires.

20a.* When the sun rises up, the darkness perishes, (so also the sin perishes in a place).

20b. On the ocean there are ninety-nine crores of Tīrthas. Hence whatever is performed there (on the sea-shore) such as ablution, charitable gift, Homa, Japa and worship of the Devas, is declared to be everlasting in the Śāstras.

Mohini enquired :

21-22. Among all the oceans, how did this lord of rivers become briny ? O Preceptor, tell me, since O Brāhmaṇa, you are omniscient.[1]

Vasu narrated :

23. O lady of good fortune, listen. I shall explain the saltish state of this ocean and how this had been cursed by his mother who was the mother of the worlds.

24. O Mohinī, formerly in the process of creation there had been born seven oceans, born of the womb of Rādhā. They had divine physical bodies of various kinds.

25. Once, the lord of Rādhā, the lord of cowherds, cowherd-lasses and cows was indulging in sexual intercourse with his lady love in the Vṛndāvana forest.

26. In the middle of the group of Rāsa dances, in the brilliant-jewelled Maṇḍapa, he was in passionate union with his affectionate lady love.

27-28. Those seven children, the oceans, could not see their mother, the mother of the universe, when the time for

*A ref. to the Brahma P. shows that 20a and 20b in the NP. form parts of totally different verses. 20a in the NP becomes complete by the line "Similarly all the sins become totally annihilated by a bath in the Tīrtha-rāja (ocean)" 20a in B. M. P. Ch. 62.

1. The story about the saltish taste of the sea due to the curse of Rādhā as given here in vv. 23-38 has no basis in the Bh. P. or the Viṣṇu P. This story is not at all complimentary to Rādhā.

their breast-feeding had arrived. Weeping on being over-whelmed with hunger, they reached the jewelled Maṇḍapa. They went near it, eager to have their breast-feed.

29-30a. All of them were stopped by the groups of cowherdesses stationed at the entrance. The angry children impatient to have their usual breastfeed forced their entry into the Maṇḍapa. Thinking that they were only babies in the lap of their mother, the children were let in by the cowherdesses.

30b-32a. Then they went into the jewelled Maṇḍapa crying bitterly, "O mother, where are you ?". O queen, when the mother did not respond to the call of those children seeking breast-milk, the youngest of them all entered the actual spot of the mother's sexual dalliance.

32b-34a. On seeing her deluded sons unwittingly causing a break in her sexual dalliance, the agitated mother, O gentle lady, cursed them—"All of you go ere long to the world of earth since you had attempted to cause break in my sexual dalliance. After going to the earth, your sons will be staying there separately alone."

34b-35. O daughter of Brahmā, on hearing the worlds of their mother, the mother of the universe, all those children cried aloud (as they were) extremely frightened of the impending separation. Thereafter, Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the destroyer of the anguish of those who bow down, became pleased with them.

36-37. "O sons, do not be afraid. I shall stand near you. All of you shall be in the liquid state always with separate forms and movements. This youngest son who came well within the place shall become briny." After saying this, the lord of the universe dismissed his sons.

38. In order to console them, he always stood by them. He who entered the room of sexual dalliance became the briny sea. The others remained separately as the milk ocean etc. assuming liquid form.

Mohinī queried :

39. O Preceptor, who is this Rādhā mentioned by you as the chaste lady and the mother of the worlds. Explain to me the reality about her. I am eager to listen to it.

40. The description of Rādhā and Mādhava is a mysterious secret in the Purāṇas. Since you factually know everything, O sage of holy rites, narrate it to me.

Vasiṣṭha said :

41. O King Māndhātā, on hearing the words of Mohinī, the magnanimous Vasu, the great devotee of Govinda, was visibly moved.

42. (Being extremely delighted) the hair all over his body stood on their ends. His heart was overwhelmed with joy. He as it were lost his consciousness with ecstasy. The excellent Brāhmaṇa spoke to Mohinī.

Vasu said :[1]

43. O gentle lady, listen, I shall tell you the secret of secrets. The story of Kṛṣṇa is to be guarded well. It brings about one's union with the Brahman.

44. I bow down to the lord who controls both—the Prakṛti and Puruṣa, who is the creator of the creators, who is the annihilator of the annihilators.

45. O gentle lady, all the incarnations are those of the Brahman in the form of Kṛṣṇa. The incarnator is Kṛṣṇa himself. He is both with and without attributes.

46. He alone is Rāma and Kṛṣṇa factually, but he is separate due to the variety of attributes. The other worlds are the creations of Prakṛti. But the Goloka (i.e. Kṛṣṇa's world) itself is devoid of attributes.

47. O gentle lady, the term, Gāvaḥ are the rays of brilliance, as observed (after ascertainment) by those who know the Vedas. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and others are manifestations of Prakṛti evolved out of its Guṇas.

48. O gentle lady, his refulgence is always without attributes but considered to be the cause of Guṇas. The Guṇas are

1. VV. 43-67 present a synthesis of Sāṅkhya and the Purāṇic concept of evolution of universe. It is obviously the theistic Sāṅkhya with Kṛṣṇa as the God.

26b-27a. By visiting Kṛṣṇa seated on the cushioned couch a man obtains that benefit which is cited to result from the gift of a hundred virgins.

27b-31. By visiting Rāma and Kṛṣṇa along with Subhadrā seated in the cushioned sofa, one obtains the following benefits viz. the gift of a hundred gold coins; the gift of lands; the gift of cooked rice; hospitability extended to every one; the rite of duly discharging the Vṛṣa (Bull); the gift of water during the summer; the gift of Tiladhenu (replica of cow in gingelly seeds); the gift of elephants, horses and chariots; the rite of Cāndrāyaṇa; observance of fast for a month; pilgrimage to all holy centres and holy rites and religious gifts. Hence a man or a woman must visit Puruṣottama. O Mohinī, when duly bathed with the water that remains after Kṛṣṇa has been duly bathed, the barren woman, the lady whose progeny is dead, unfortunate wretched persons, those who are affected by evil planets, those who are possessed by Rākṣasas and others and those who are affected by ailments attain purity immediately. They attain desired benefits. O lady of good lustre, they attain other things they desire, if they perform ablutions as per injunctions.

32. All other sacred waters on the earth do not deserve even the sixteenth part of the remainder of water after the ablution of Kṛṣṇa.

33. Hence the devotee should sprinkle limbs (of his body) with the sacred water that is left over after the ablution of the deity lying down in the waters. It is the sacred water that bestows all desired benefits.

34. There is no doubt about this that those who visit Kṛṣṇa who goes towards the south after ablution, are liberated from even the murder of a Brāhmaṇa and other sins.

35. By visiting Kṛṣṇa facing the south, a man obtains that benefit which is mentioned in the scriptures as the result of circumambulating the earth three times.

36. By visiting Kṛṣṇa proceeding to the south, one attains the benefit cited as the result of pilgrimages in the whole of the earth.

37-41. By visiting Kṛṣṇa proceeding to the south one attains that benefit which is derivable from the holy bath at Gaṅgādvāra, Kubjāmra, Kurukṣetra during the solar eclipse, at Puṣkara and other sacred waters. Of what avail is much talk ? By visiting Subhadrā, Balarāma and Keśava facing the south, one attains the benefit mentioned in the Vedas, scriptures, Purāṇas, Mahābhārata, Saṁhitās and other works, as the fruits of meritorious rites.

42. Those who see Kṛṣṇa seated in the chariot along with Subhadrā and Balarāma and proceed to Guṇḍicā[1] Maṇḍapa go to the abode of Hari.

43. By undertaking pilgrimage even once, at the time of journey to Guṇḍicā, at the time of equinox in the month of Phālguna, a man goes to the world of Viṣṇu.

44. It is certain that a man will stay in the world of Viṣṇu for as many Kalpas as the number of pilgrimages he undertakes to Śrīpuruṣottama.

45. O daughter of Brahmā, when twelve pilgrimages are completed, the devotee shall perform the rite of installation in accordance with the injunctions. It will be destructive of sins.

46. On the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha, the devotee should go to the sacred waters, pure in mind and body. He should perform the rite of Ācamana therein.

47. After invoking the holy Tīrthas and meditating on Nārāyaṇa, he should take holy bath in the manner indicated in the sacred precepts.

48. After the bath in a decent manner, the devotee should perform Tarpaṇa rite for the Devas, sages, and Pitṛs with the due utterance of their names and Gotras.

49-50. After coming out of the water he should wear two pure clothes and perform the Ācamana rite as well as the due worship of Bhāskara the sun. He should then repeat Gāyatrī, the holy Mantra, the mother of the Vedas, one hundred and eight times : and also other Mantras pertaining to the sun. He should circumambulate three times and then bow to the sun.

1. Guṇḍicā (Guṇḍivā in the BM. P.) is the summer 'palace' of Jagannātha (Puruṣottama). It is at a distance of about 1 mile from the Jagannātha temple at Puri.

51-53. The procedure for the holy dip and the repetition of Japas is, in regard to the three castes, the same as mentioned in the Vedas. O fair lady, in regard to the Śūdras and the women the repetition of the Vedic texts is to be avoided. Thereafter, he should, with devotion, go to Śrī Puruṣottama installed in the temple. According to the injunctions, he should wash his hands and feet and perform the Ācamana rite. He should bathe the lord with ghee and thereafter with milk.

54. He should then bathe deity with honey, fragrant water and the water from the Tīrtha mixed with the sandal paste. Thereafter, the devotee should clothe the deity with excellent pair of clothes.

55 He should smear deity with sandal paste, agallochum, camphor and saffron. He should worship Puruṣottama by means of lotuses, with great devotion.

56-57. After thus worshipping Hari, the lord of the universe the bestower of worldly pleasures and salvation, the devotee should burn incense mixed with agallochum. He should burn Guggula (aromatic resin) of the pure variety along with ghee. With devotion he should light the lamp with ghee in accordance with his capacity.

58. With great concentration, he should light twelve other lamps, O goddess, with cow's ghee or with gingelly oil.

59-60. The devotee then offers the following as Naivedyas viz ; milk-pudding, friend pie, coiled baked pie, circular fried coils, sweet meats, molasses and fruits. After completing the worship of Puruṣottama by means of the fivefold services, the devotee should perform hundred and eight times the Japa of the Mantra—"Om obeisance to Puruṣottama".

61. Thereafter, he should propitiate the lord by bowing down and prostrating before him like a staff. Thereafter, he should honour the preceptor with devotion, with flowers, garments and unguents.

62-63. O daughter of Brahmā, (the preceptor should be honoured) since there is no difference between these two (i.e. the preceptor and the lord).

With concentration and purity of mind, the devotee should erect the ceremonial hall (Maṇḍapa) over the lord. The zone in front should be brilliant and variegated with flowers. After making an emphatic determination at the outset, the devotee should keep awake at night.

64. The learned devotee should cause the discourse on Vāsudeva conducted and songs sung about him. He should spend the night meditating, reading and eulogising the lord.

65-66a. Then, after the Dvādaśī has dawned splendidly, the devotee should invite twelve Brāhmaṇas who are life-long students of the Vedas, who have taken a holy bath after holy rites, are well conversant with the Itihāsa and the Purāṇas, have learned the Vedas and have restrained their sense-organs.

66b-68. After duly completing holy bath, the devotee should wear washed cloth and restrain and conquer the sense-organs. He should then bathe Puruṣottama who is stationed there, with devotion as before. He shall propitiate the lord of the universe with scents, fragrant flowers, presents, offerings of food, lamps, many kinds of reverential services, salutations, circumambulations, Japas, eulogies, prostrations, pleasant songs and instrumental music.

69-70a. Then he should honour the Brāhmaṇas, He should give them twelve cows, gold, an umbrella, a pair of sandals and bellmetal vessel with devotion.

70b-73. He should, thereafter, feed the Brāhmaṇas with milkpudding at the outset. Afterwards different edibles and foodstuffs, cooked rice with jaggery and sugarcandy shall be offered to them. When the Brāhmaṇas are satisfied after the meal and have had their rest mentally (and physically), he should offer them twelve water pots along with sweets. O daughter of Brahmā, he should give them monetary gifts too according to his capacity. The learned devotee should worship them on a par with Viṣṇu by means of gold, clothes, cows, food-grains, and other articles. After making obeisance to them, he should repeat this Mantra.

74. (Mantra) "May the omnipresent lord who is the master of the universe, who wields conch, discus and iron club, may Puruṣottama, the lord devoid of beginning and death, be pleased".

75. After uttering this and respectfully circumambulating the Brāhmaṇas three times, the devotee should bow down his head and bid them farewell with the preceptor.

76-78. He should follow the Brāhmaṇas upto boundary line of his village with devotion. After following the Brāhmaṇas, he should bow to them once again and return. Having returned home, he should silently take food in the company of his kins and relatives. By doing thus, the man or the woman devotee shall derive the benefit of a thousand horse-sacrifices and a hundred Rājasūyas. The excellent man shall uplift a hundred previous ancestors.

79-82. O gentle lady, he will uplift a hundred successors as well. He will be assuming the divine unchanging form. He will be endowed with all auspicious characteristics. He will be bedecked in all ornaments. He will be flourishing with all desires in the mind realized. He will be blessed with good attributes, comeliness and youthful age (or longevity). He will be eulogised by Gandharvas and Apsaras all round. He will be going to the world of Viṣṇu by means of an aerial chariot that has the brilliance of the sun, which can go as he pleases, is steady, fitted with flags and banners and which has the lustre of a hundred suns. He will be brightening all the quarters thereby in the firmament. He will be devoid of exhaustion. He will become a youth of great strength and intelligence. Thus he will go to the world of Viṣṇu.

83. There he enjoys desired pleasures for the period of a hundred Kalpas. O gentle lady, he will stay there eulogised by excellent sages. He will be devoid of ailments.

84. O gentle lady, just as the lord of the universe, the wielder of the conch, discus and iron club rejoices after assuming the four-armed form, so this devotee will be rejoicing in that form.

85. O chaste lady, after enjoying excellent pleasures there and after sporting there for a long time, at the end thereof, he goes to the abode of Brahmā that yields all desires.

86. It is the abode that is rendered splendid by the Siddhas, Vidyādharas, Devas and Kinnaras.

87. After enjoying happiness there for the period of ninety Kalpas, the man goes to the world of Rudra that bestows happiness and that is resorted to by Devas, Siddhas, Vidyādharas and Yakṣas. It is adorned by Daityas and Dānavas.

88. After enjoying happiness there for the period of eighty Kalpas, the man at the end of that period, goes to Goloka equipped with all means of pleasures.

89-91. It is a place rendered splendid by Devas, Siddhas and Apsaras. It is charming. He enjoys desired pleasures there for the period of seventy Kalpas. Thereafter, he goes to the excellent world of Prajāpati. Joyously he experiences different kinds of happiness there for the period of sixty kalpas. At the end of that period, he shall go to Śakra's abode containing different kinds of wonderful features. There the man enjoys happiness for the period of fifty Kalpas. He then goes to the abode of immortal ones, embellished with aerial chariots.

92-96. He enjoys rare pleasures there for the period of forty Kalpas. Then he goes to the stellar world equipped with different kinds of happiness and enjoys there excellent pleasures as desired, for the period of thirty Kalpas. O daughter of Brahmā, from there he goes to the lunar world where stays the moon adorned by the Devas. After enjoying rare pleasures for the period of twenty Kalpas, he goes over to the world of the sun god worshipped by Devas. After enjoying splendid pleasures there for the period of ten Kalpas, he becomes contented and delighted; thence he goes to the abode of Gandharvas that is very inaccessible.

97. There he enjoys all kinds of pleasures upto satiety for the period of a Kalpa. Then he comes over to the earth and is born as a righteous king.

98. He becomes an emperor of great prowess. He is bedecked in all attributes. He rules over the kingdom righteously and performs Yajñas with liberal monetary gifts.

99. At the end of that period, he goes to the world of yogin that is auspicious and that bestows salvation. As long as all living beings are not dissolved, he enjoys excellent pleasures there.

100-101. Coming therefrom he is born in the family of Yogins, in an excellent family of devotees of Viṣṇu, difficult of access and received with approbation by the good. O chaste lady, he becomes an excellent Brāhmaṇa, a master of four Vedas, devoted to the performance of Brahmayajña.

102-103. By adopting Yoga pertaining to Viṣṇu, he shall attain liberation. Thus the benefit of the pilgrimage to Puruṣottama has been recounted to you. It yields both worldly pleasures and salvation unto men. What else do you wish to hear ?

CHAPTER SIXTYTWO

The greatness of the most Eminent Tīrtha Prayāga
The Procedure of Pilgrimage

Vasiṣṭha Said :

1-3. O king Māndhātā, on hearing this greatness of Puruṣottama (kṣetra), that bestows worldly pleasures and salvation, Mohinī the daughter of Brahmā asked that Brāhmaṇa Vasu, her own family priest.

Mohini requested :

O Brāhmaṇa, the very wonderful glory of Puruṣottama kṣetra has been heard. Now tell me the greatness of Prayāga too, O Brāhmaṇa, observer of holy rites. O preceptor, That the Tīrtha Prayāga is the king of all Tīrthas, has been heard by me before.

4-5. Narrate to me its greatness along with the procedure of its pilgrimages. What specific formalities be observed by men devoted to virtuous rites in regard to special sacred places regarded as highly meritorious and respectable, Tīrthas in particular.

6. O king on hearing those words uttered by Mohinī, that Brāhmaṇa recounted to her the traditional account of Prayāga with the enunciation of the general rules of pilgrimage at the outset.

Vasu said :

7. Listen, O gentle lady, I shall recount the rules of procedure in undertaking pilgrimages. It is only by observing those rules that a man can attain the benefit as mentioned. Going to a pilgrimage is meritorious; It surpasses even Yajñas.

8. A man becomes indigent by not observing fast for three days, by not giving gold in gift and by not offering cows after visiting holy places.

9. Even by performing Agniṣṭoma and other Yajñas with magnificent monetary gifts, one does not attain that benefit which results from undertaking pilgrimages.

10. Even he who casually visits a holy centre unwittingly shall attain all desires and flourish. He is honoured in the heavenly world.

11. He perpetually obtains a position that is full of wealth and food-grains. He shall be full of perfect knowledge and prosperity. He shall have pleasures for ever.

12. The Pitṛs (manes) and great-grand-fathers have been redeemed from hell by that person whose hands, feet and mind are well-controlled.

13. One who refrains from accepting monetary gifts, one who is satisfied with whatever one gets shall attain learning, penance, renown and the benefit of pilgrimage.

14-15A He who is devoid of egotism shall attain the benefit of pilgrimage. A person not conforming to the prescribed rules of a ceremony (akalpaka),* a person who does not undertake elaborate worldly activities, a person of restricted diet, a person who has conquered the sense-organs and one who is liberated from all attachments shall reap the benefit of pilgrimage.

15B-17. Even though a person has committed sins, if he frequents sacred places, is self-possessed, faithful and is calm in mind, becomes pure by pilgrimage. What then if a man of pure rites undertakes it ? The following five persons never reap the benefit of a pilgrimage viz.—a person who has no faith, a person distressed with sins, an atheist, a person whose doubts are not cleared and a Hetuniṣṭha (a heretic stubbornly clinging to arguments). In a holy place the sins of sinners are absolved.

*This appears to be a misprint as its meaning is inappropriate. Probably akalmaṣa i.e. 'A person devoid of sin,' may be the original reading.

18. The Tīrtha yields the benefits as mentioned above in the case of those men whose soul is pure. If a person enters the Tīrtha after conquering lust, fury and covetousness, there is nothing which is not attained by him through the pilgrimage undertaken. Those men who move about holy centres adhering to the rules of procedure laid down (for the performance of the pilgrimage to the particular Tīrtha) are self-possessed men and can bear Dvandvas (mutually clashing opposites), go to heaven.

19. The fishes stay in the sacred rivers like Gaṅgā etc. There are flocks of birds in a temple. But since they are devoid of devotional emotions, they do not attain any benefit from the Tīrtha or the important temple.

20-21a. Hence, a person of calm and concentrated mind shall retain devotional emotion in the lotus-like heart and then resort to the Tīrthas. A Brahmacārin duly uudertakes that pilgrimage which is described, undertaken and approved of by leading sages.

21b-22. He is urged to do it by his preceptor and he has full restraint of senses. When all possessions perish, or when persons supporting him become very few or when his capacity to perform sacrifices comes to an end, a Brāhmaṇa should undertake pilgrimage and roam about the Tīrthas, after keeping Brāhmaṇas at the head, since the benefit of Yajñas is also said to be resulting from Tīrthas, by leading sages of pure nature.

23. "In regard to a person who is authorised to perform Homas and Yajñas, the house itself and all the duties of a householder are excellent. Pilgrimage to holy centres is forbidden by ancient authorities in regard to a person who maintains a householder's life thus. Some opine that even all the Tīrthas put together are not equal to Agnihotra"[1]

1. Purāṇas do not advise recourse to pilgrimage in dereliction of one's duties as a householder vide Kūrma P. II. 44.20, also Bm. P. quoted by Tīrtha-Kalpataru P. 9 (v. 23 in the NP. here is the same as in the Bm. P. mentioned above).

24. He who wishes to go on a pilgrimage should at the outset remain in a house (i.e. be a householder) with self-restraint. Staying in the house, he should maintain purity and be non negligent. Humble with devotion he should worship god Gaṇeśa.

25. The intelligent Brāhmaṇa pilgrim should propitiate Devas, Pitṛs, Brāhmaṇas and ascetics assiduously and in accordance with his affluence. After returning from the pilgrimage also he shall again worship Devas, Pitṛs and Brāhmaṇas.[1]

36. There is not the slight doubt at all in this, that he who performs thus shall get the benefit mentioned (in Śāstras).

27. He who wishes to go on pilgrimage should perform Śrāddha with ghee. It is performed for the welfare during pilgrimage. During the return journey too the Śrāddha should be performed.

28. When one is on a pilgrimage to Prayāga, one should shave off the hair on the head when father or mother is dead.[2] No one shall have the hair cut without reason.

29. If one endeavours to go to Gayā one must assiduously perform Śrāddha. He must adopt the dress of a pilgrim and perform the rite of circumambulation of the town.

30. After going to the other village, he should partake of the remnants of Śrāddha food.[3] Then he shall go ahead every day without taking any monetary gift.

31-32. At every step one takes to Gayā one gets the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

O lady of good rites, he who rides on a bullock while going on a pilgrimage stays in the terrible hell. Indeed, the fury of the bull is terrible. From that embodied person his Pitṛs do not accept water libations.

1. VV. 24 and 25 are the same as those in Bm. P. quoted by Tīrtha-Kalpataru p. 9. Cf. The Sk. P Kāśi 6. 56-57 and the Pd. P. Uttara 237. 36-38. There is a great similarity (Practically unanimity) in Purāṇas about the procedure to be observed by the pilgrim.

2. The tonsure is recommended as it was believed that sins resort to the roots of the hair. vide v. 50 below. Vide Pd. P. Uttara Khaṇḍa 237. 45, Sk. P. Kāśi 6.65.

3. Vide Vāyu P. 110. 2-3 for similar instructions.

33. If any person, either because of his affluence or due to greed or delusion goes out (on a pilgrimage) in a vehicle, his pilgrimage to that sacred place becomes fruitless for him. Hence, one should avoid the use of vehicles for pilgrimage.

34. If a cow (or a bull) is used as a vehicle, it is no better than cowslaughter; if a horse is used as a vehicle, the pilgrimage becomes fruitless. If a man is used as a vehicle, the benefit shall be halved; if one undertakes journey on foot, the pilgrim has four times the benefit.

35. If there is heavy downpour or if there is scorching sunshine, one should go out with an umbrella; if the path is gravelly and thorny, one shall use a staff as a prop; if the devotee is desirous of protecting the body, he should always walk about with a shoe on.

36. After reaching the Tīrtha some-how and performing the rite of ablution, incidentally one may attain the benefit of ablution but not that of the pilgrimage.

37. He who goes on pilgrimage on another man's behalf attains a sixteenth part of the benefit. He who goes on a pilgrimage by force of circumstances derives half the benefit of pilgrimage.

38. One shall never test a Brāhmaṇa in the Tīrthas. Manu has said that a suppliant that comes here is worthy of being fed.

39. He must offer Piṇḍas with powdered fried grains, Saṁyāva (cake of wheat flour) milk pudding, Badara or Āmalaka fruits or an oil cake, O lady of beautiful eyes.

40. Śrāddha must be performed there without invoking Pitṛs by means of Ṛk Mantras (as the ancestors are already present at holy places). The material offered in the Śrāddha is not to be defiled by being seen by dogs, crows, vultures and sinners.

41-42. The Śrāddha offered in Tīrtha is conducive to the satisfaction of Pitṛs. Whether it is the proper time or not, the Tīrthaśrāddha should be done immediately on arrival. The Pitṛtarpaṇa rite must be performed always. There should not be any delay. Nor should any obstacle be put in.

43. If the image of any person made out of Kuśa grass is sunk in the water of the Tīrtha, O lady of large eyes, he derives the eighth part of the benefit.

44. (Mantra) "thou art Kuśa grass; Thou art the son of Kuśa grass. Thou wert made by Brahmā formerly. If thou takest a holy bath, he whose image is represented by the tying of this knot, also performs a holy ablution."

45. Excepting Kurukṣetra, Viśālā, Virajā and Gayā the general rule in all the Tīrthas lays down shaving of the head and observance of a fast.

46-47. Just as there are many limbs in the body but some are very important, so also some Tīrthas are very important. Now listen to the reason for the meritorious state of worldly Tīrthas. It is due to the influence of the Earth, water or fire or due to the acceptance for stay by sages that the holiness of Tīrthas is prescribed in Smṛtis.

48. O gentle lady, if any one, after reaching the Gaṅgā does not get his head shaved off, his holy rites shall be otherwise. He shall be a traitor unto the Tīrtha.

49. If any one does not get his head shaved off in the Bhāskara kṣetra i.e. Prayāga, in the Gaṅgā, he shall fall into the Raurava hell for the duration of a Kalpa along with a crore of the members of his family.

50. After reaching the Gaṅgā the excellent river, the multitudes of sins of the period of a Kalpa stay resorting to the tresses of hair. Hence, they must be cast off.

51. The devotee is honoured in the heavenly world as many thousands of years as the number of hairs and nails that fall in the waters of the Gaṅgā.

52. Excepting at Prayāga, nowhere else in the Gaṅgā is the rite of tonsure laid down. He who, out of delusion, does it otherwise, shall fall into Mahāraurava hell.

53-54. O chaste lady, a person whose father is alive shall undergo Kṣaura (shaving of the beard) rite after reaching the Tīrtha. The knower of procedure shall not shave off his moustaches. O goddess, in Gayā and other places it is not shaving of the beard that is forbidden but only shaving of the moustache is forbidden.

55. Learned men know that the shaving of the moustaches, beard and the hair is Muṇḍana (tonsure). O lady of beautiful eyebrows, mere shaving is not tonsure as mentioned by those who know the Vedas.

CHAPTER SIXTYTHREE

The Greatness of Prayāga (Concluded)

Vasu said :

1. Listen, O Mohinī, I shall recount the glory of Prayāga as approved in the Vedas. By taking the holy bath therein in acccordance with the religious injunctions, one becomes pure.

2. Wherever one may have his plunge in the Gaṅgā, it is on a par with Kurukṣetra. It is ten times more meritorious. where it comes into contact with Vindhya (?)

3. At Kāśī it flows towards the north. It is hundred times more efficacious there. The place where the Gaṅgā mingles with the Yamunā, the daughter of the Sun-god, is hundred times more effective than at Kāśī.

4. When it flows towards the west, it is thousand time more meritorious. O gentle lady, the Gaṅgā there dispels the evil of Brahmahatyā (murder of a Brāhmaṇa) etc. by its mere sight.

5. The Gaṅgā flowing towards the west and mingling with the Kālindī (Yamunā) destroys sins accumulated in hundreds of Kalpas. O gentle lady, it is very difficult of performance (and very auspicious) in the month of Māgha.

6. Its continuous flow of the braided currents of Gaṅgā and Yamunā coming in contact with the Earth, is said to be nectar. Even a Muhūrta (48 minutes) there in the month of Māgha is inaccessible even to the Devas.

7. During the month of Māgha, when the sun is in the the Makara (Capricorn) sign, O chaste lady, all the Tīrthas on the Earth. all meritorious cities, come to the Veṇī* (water of the confluence of the Gaṅgā and Yamunā) to take holy dip therein.

8-11. O daughter of Brahmā, all these come to the Veṇī to take their holy bath therein, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Mahādeva, Rudras, Ādityas, Maruts, Gandharvas guardians of the quarters, Yakṣas, Kinnaras, Guhyakas, all other seers of reality equipped with super-human powers (siddhis) like Aṇimā (minuteness) etc. Brahmāṇī, Pārvatī, Lakṣmī, Śacī, Medhā, Aditi, Rati, the wives of Devas, the women of Nāgas, famous celestial damsels like Ghṛtācī, Menakā Rambhā, Urvaśī, Tilottamā, Apsaras and Pitṛs come here for taking bath.

12-13A. These deities used to come down in their real form in Kṛtayuga, in the Kaliyuga they come down in disguise (in invisible form). Due to contact with the sinners, Tīrthas become black. They become white in colour once again by their holy dip at Prayāga in the month of Māgha.

13B-14. (At the time of bath the following Mantra should be recited) "O Govinda, O Acyuta, O Māhadeva, thanks to this holy bath of mine, in the month of Māgha. when the Sun is in the Capricorn, be you the bestower of benefit as mentioned in Śāstras". Uttering this Mantra and observing silence otherwise, the devotee should take the holy dip.

15-16. Again he should remember Vāsudeva, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, and Mādhava. When the sun is in Capricorn, if men take bath in the house with warm water, its benefit is earned only in the course of sixty years. If bath is taken outside in tanks, it yields the benefit in the course of twelve years.

*The Tristhalī-Setu (p. 8) clarifies that the confluence of the Gaṅgā, Yamunā (and Sarasvati) is called Veṇī.

17. The benefit of bath in a lake is twice that of the same in a tank and in the river it is fourfold. In a natural pond, it is tenfold and in a big river it is hundredfold.

18. In the confluence of two great rivers it is four hundred times more meritorious. These merits are increased a thousand times when the sun is in the Capricorn.

19A. When one takes a holy dip in Gaṅgā at Prayāga when the sun is in Capricorn, the same as above is reputed to be thousand times more meritorious.

19B-20a. O lady of beautiful eyes, those who take bath into the Gaṅgā in the month of Māgha, do not fall from the abode of Devas for the period of a thousand sets of four Yugas.

20B-21a. O daughter of Brahmā, if in the month of Māgha, it is hundred-times more meritorious, the bath in the confluence of the Gaṅga and Yamunā is thousand-times more meritorious.

21B-22A. O gentle lady, god Brahmā has created this Prayāga for the combustion of the burden due to multitude of sins on the Earth. He created Prayāga, out of desire for the benefit of his subjects.

22B-23A. In some places, its waters are white and in some other places its waters are black. It had been formerly created by Brahmā for the destruction of animals in the form of sins.

23B-24A. The creator has created that path to the world of Brahmā viz. the flow of the current that is white and black. It has been blended together (lit. closely strung together) by the Sarasvatī. In the Mānasa lake, the month of Māgha is the bestower of perfect knowledge but not of the benefit of salvation.

24B-25. In the holy places on the plateau of the Himālayas, the month of Māgha has been stipulated by the knowers of the Vedas as destructive of all sins and the bestower of the region of Indra (Svarga). But Māgha, the best of all months confers Mokṣa (liberation from Saṁsāra) at the forest of Badarī (Mod. Badri-Nārāyaṇa)

26. Bath in the waters of Narmadā in the month of Māgha is glorified as the destroyer of sins, remover of miseries, bestower of desired objects and conferer of stay in the region of Rudra.

27. Ablution in the waters of Sarasvatī (in the month of Māgha) annihilates multitude of sins and grants many pleasures in the world. At Viśālā[1] the month of Māgha is described as the river of extensive benefits.

28. The holy water of the Gaṅgā is a veritable forest fire for the fuel of sins. It is destructive of the necessity of staying in the womb (i.e. of taking rebirth). The holy waters are glorified as conducive to the attainment of the world of Viṣṇu and salvation.

29-30. A man who takes bath in the following rivers becomes free from sins and goes to the heavenly world. The rivers are Śarayū, Gaṇḍakī, Sindhu, Candrabhāga, (the Chenab), Kauśikī (Kuśī) Tāpi, Godāvarī, Bhīmā, Payoṣṇi (Bain-Gaṅgā), Kṛṣṇāveṇikā, (Kṛṣṇā) Kāverī, Tuṅgabhadrā and other rivers that flow into the sea.

31. The bath in the Naimiṣa in the month of Māgha yields identity of form with Viṣṇu; that in the Puṣkara lake confers nearness to Brahmā and that in Kurukṣetra bestows the world of Indra.

32. O gentle lady, in the Devahrada, the month of Māgha is the bestower of Yogic Siddhis. By taking a holy dip in Prabhāsa when the Sun is in Capricorn, one shall become Rudra's attendant.

33. By means of bath in Devikā (the lower course of Sarayū) during Māgha, a man becomes endowed with a divine body. O daughter of Brahmā, thanks to the holy dip in the Gomatī during the month of Māgha, one ceases to have rebirth.

34. The Month of Māgha is the bestower of the world of Rudra, if one stays at the following places viz. Hemakuṇḍa (or Kailāsa), Māhākāla (the famous Jyotir-liṅga at Ujjain)

1. Viśālā, the same as Vaiśālī in the Buddhist period. It is mod. Besāḍ in Muzaffarpur dist. in Bihar.

at Oṁkāra Māndhātā, (a Jyotirliṅga in the Narmadā), Nīlakaṇṭha (the Śiva Shrine, five miles north of Kathmandu, Nepal) and Arbuda (Mt. Abu).

35. During the period while the Sun is in the sign of Capricorn, the waters of rivers are conducive to the attainment of all cherished desires by performance of ablution in them. This should be noted by all clever people.

36. O daughter of Brahmā, only the blessed people reach Prayāga during the month of Māgha since the water of the confluence there which is both white and black is the bestower of non-recurrence of births.

37. Devas stationed in the heaven always do sing thus, "the month of Māgha must happen to us at Prayāga (i.e. we wish to be in Prayāga in the month of Māgha). Men who take their holy dip there at that time, do not experience the pain of being within the womb. They stay in the vicinity of Viṣṇu.

38. O daughter of the four-faced deity, formerly Māgha and Prayāga were weighed against Tīrthas, Vratas, charitable gifts, and sacrifices, in the balance. Of the two, Māgha was found to be weightier.

39. Through the holy bath at Prayāga, men attain that goal which they attain by more severe penances in which they subsist only on air, water or leaves and make the bodies emaciated or which had been practised in the course of long periods of time. They attain the same goal as is attained by the practice of Yogic exercises.

40. Swarms of bees flapped by the ears of Elephants will decorate the portals of houses of those persons who take a holy dip in the Tīrtha at Prayāga, the confluence of the divine rivers, when the Sun stays in the zodiac of Capricorn (i.e. they become rich and own many elephants.)

41. Through the holy bath in it, Prayāga fully bestows a benefit equal to that of sacrifice called Rājasūya, after destroying all sins sportively. Indeed, how is it that Prayāga cannot be described ?

42. He who takes a holy bath in the confluence of Gāṅgā and Yamunā attains merit acquired by masters of the four Vedas and habitual speakers of truth.

43. In the confluence, the devotee of praiseworthy holy vows should take ablution. He attains a benefit equal to both—Rājasūya and Aśvamedha (Horse Sacrifice).

44. The geographical area of Prayāga extends to five Yojanas. After the entry within its precincts one gains the merit of Horse-sacrifice at every step.[1]

45. O blessed lady, there are three consecrated pools and in the middle thereof is the Jāhnavī. By entering into Prayāga the sin perishes instantaneously.[2]

46. By taking a holy dip in Prayāga for a month and remaining restrained in the sense-organs, one is liberated from all sins.

47. By remaining pure in mind and body, by abjuring violence and by maintaining faith, he who takes holy bath is liberated from all sins. He shall go to the greatest region.

48-50A. There are many holy centres, spots and shrines abiding in Prayāga such as Naimiṣa, Puṣkara, Gotīrtha, Sindhu-sāgara, Gayā, Dhenuka, and the confluence of Gaṅgā and Sea. There are many sacred mountains. There are ten thousand Tīrthas and thirty crores of other shrines. These shrines stationed in Prayāga flourish day by day. They are enlightening to the mind.

50B-53. There are three Kuṇḍas of sacred fire and the Gaṅgā flows through the middle of them. It comes out from Prayāga. It is regarded as their supreme by all the Tīrthas. The divine river Yamunā, the daughter of the Sun, is well-known in the three worlds. It joins Gaṅga. It sanctifies the worlds. The other holy centres that are between Gaṅgā and Yamunā, though remembered as great in the Earth do not deserve to be even a sixteenth part of the holy centre Prayāga. Vāyu (the wind god) says that there are three and a half crores of holy shrines.

54.A They are in heaven, in firmament and in Gaṅgā.

1. The same as Mt. P. 108. 9-10, Pd. P. I 45.8.

2. NP. verse 50 below, Mbh. Vana 85. 73, Mt. P. 110. 4 also call these sacred spots as 'altars of sacrificial fire' (Agni-Kuṇḍa). The number of these Kuṇḍas (pools) is three even according to AP. 111-12 but Kūrma I. 36.28 reads 'five' Pañca-Kuṇḍāni Rājendra yeṣām madhye tu Jāhnavī.

54B-55. The area of Prayāga extends from Pratiṣṭhāna* upto the two Nāgas—Kambala and Aśvatara or upto Bhogavatī (the pool of Vāsuki.) This should be known as the Sacred altar of Prajāpati.[1] Assuming (physical) bodies the Vedas and sacrifices are present there.

56. O chaste lady, sages, ascetics, Devas and Cakradharas (holders of discus) worship Prajāpati by means of sacrifices.

57. O beautiful lady, there is no other holy centre more meritorious than it in the three worlds. Thanks to its power, it is superior to all other Tīrthas.

58. By visiting that greatest Tīrtha (viz Prayāga), people are liberated from all sins like the moon liberated from Rāhu.

59-60A. After going to Prayāga guarded by the Devas, a Brahmacārin (a religious student) should stay there for a month, performing Tarpaṇa rites unto the Pitṛs and the Devas. He attains desired benefits.

60B-61A. If a person even though enveloped with hundreds of sins, takes bath in the black and white waters of the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā when the Sun is in the Capricorn in the month of Māgha, he does not stay in the womb thereafter (as he is liberated from Saṁsāra thereby).

61B-62A. The Māyā pertaining to Viṣṇu is invincible. It cannot be shaken off even by the Devas. But, O daughter of Brahmā, in the month of Māgha, at Prayāga it is burned.

62B-63A. Those who take their holy dip at Prayāga in the month of Māgha, enjoy pleasures in the different worlds and get dissolved in the discus-bearing lord Viṣṇu thereafter.

63B-64. Even Citragupta does not adequately know the extent of the merit of the person who takes holy dip in the

* Samadhiṣṭhāya in the text is confusing. The Mbh. Vana 85. 76-77 from which this is a quotation reads Sa-pratiṣṭhānam. Hence it is adopted here. Pratiṣṭhāna is modern Jhusi near Prayāga and marks its eastern boundary. In Tristhalī-Setu, Pratiṣṭhāna is the name of a Kūpa (well) that marks the eastern boundary.

1. Quoted from Mbh. Vana 85. 76.77. cf. The Mt. P. 104. 5 Pd. P. I. 39. 69-70 for the sacred area of Prayāga.

Sitāsita (i.e. the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā) during the month of Māgha when the Sun is in Capricorn. Certainly, those who take holy bath in the Sitāsita during the month of Māgha attain the benefit of a thousand Rājasūya and a hundred Vājapeya sacrifices.

65. The sins accumulated by men in the course of their births ever since the beginning of the Kalpa are reduced to ashes, if they perform ablution in the Sitāsita during the month of Māgha.

66-69A. The confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā is well-known in the worlds. It is called a Kāmika Tīrtha (i.e. a holy centre where desires are realised). Whatever one may desire and whoever may desire it, it is realised by means of holy bath therein with devotion. If the devotee desires worldly pleasures he will have them. If the devotee desires a kingdom, he will get it. The heaven will be attained by one who desires it, and the person who wishes for salvation will attain salvation. There are many Tīrthas in the three worlds bestowing cherished desires. All of them resort to Prayāga when the Sun is in the Capricorn.

69B-70A. By taking holy dip in Haridvāra, Prayāga and at the confluence of meeting of Gaṅgā and the ocean, the devotee shall go to the city of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva.

70B-73A. O lady of beautiful eyes, the bath in the Sitāsita in the month of Māgha prevents the recurrence of births for hundreds and crores of Kalpas. A person who is truthful in speech, who has conquered anger, who has resorted to non-violence of the noblest type, who follows the path of virtue, who is conversant with realities, and who is engaged in what is beneficial to cows and Brāhmaṇas, shall be liberated from sins by taking bath in the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā. He attains the cherished desires in full.

73B-76. In the month of Māgha, in the Veṇī (the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā), every day one shall attain that benefit which one attains by means of charitable gifts of a thousand Bhāras of gold in Kurukṣetra during a solar eclipse. One who takes holy dip in Prayāga for three days in the month of Māgha attains that benefit which is derived when a hundred thousand cows are given away in charity. One who takes a holy bath in Prayāga for three days in the month of Māgha, attains that benefit (merit) which one may get in three hundred years by practising Yogic exercises. O chaste lady, even by means of a thousand horse-sacrifices, one does not attain that benefit which one gets by means of taking a holy dip in Prayāga for three days in the month of Māgha.

77. Formerly, Kāñcana-mālinī[1] gave a Rākṣasa, out of love, the benefit of taking the holy dip during the month of Māgha, for three days. That sinner was liberated thereby.

78. Within three days the sins were dispelled. She attained Deva-hood by means of that merit which resulted from the holy bath for twentyseven days.

79. She became the favourite friend of Girijā (goddess Pārvatī) and sported about in Kailāsa. Thanks to the grace of Prayāga, she became one who could remember previous births.

80. Formerly, in the country of Avanti, there was a king named Vatsarāja. He went to the banks of the river Narmadā and performed the Rājasūya sacrifice.

81. Sixteen horses were used there. They were tied to as many golden sacrificial posts where they shone with gold ornaments. He too duly appeared refulgent.

82. He gave heaps of food-grains, comparable to mountains, to Brāhmaṇas. He had full faith. He was a great devotee of the deity. He bestowed cows and gold.

83. At that time there was a foolish Brāhmaṇa named Bhadraka. He was born of a base family. He worked like a husbandman. His conduct was base and lowly. He was excluded from all holy rites.

84. He was disgusted with the work of ploughing. He was deceived by his own kinsmen. Afflicted by his misfortune, he went out of his house and wandered here and there.

85. Fortunately, wisdom dawned in him and he went to Prayāga. With Mahāmāghī in view (i.e. in the month of Māgha) he took a holy bath there for three days.

1. Some episodes about the greatness of Prayāga are given in vv. 77-90. I could not trace these episodes elsewhere and am inclined to regard these names as fictitious.

86. By the mere ablution, he became sinless. He became an excellent Brāhmaṇa. Returning from Prayāga he went back to the place from where he had come.

87. The king (Vatsarāja) and this Brāhmaṇa died simultaneously. They went simultaneously and in a similar manner to the presence of the king of the Devas.

88. They had the same brilliance. They had the same comely features and strength. They had similar groups of female attendants. The ornaments, the divine vehicle, the garland of Pārijāta flowers, dance, music, everything was similar to both of them.

89-90. After seeing this, what else should I say about the greatness of this holy centre ?

O gentle lady, the month of Māgha in the Sitāsita is not equal to Rājasūya sacrifice (but is superior) to it. The confluence of the white and blue or black waters extends to twenty bow lengths.* By taking the holy dip in this during the month of Māgha one does not return to the world. But even after the Rājasūya sacrifice one is likely to return (from heavenly pleasures) to Saṁsāra.

91. Kambala and Aśvatara are two serpents lying on the extensive banks of the Yumunā. By taking bath there and drinking the water thereof one is liberated from all sins.

92. After going to that spot of the intelligent Mahādeva a man redeems ten previous and ten subsequent generations.

93-94. There is a well there which is well-known by the name of Pratiṣṭhāna. The devotee should take bath there and perform Tarpaṇa rites for Pitṛs and Devas with full mental control. He must conquer anger. He who thus stays here for three nights, shall be purified of all sins. He shall derive the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

95-96. To the north of Pratiṣṭhāna and to the east of Bhāgīrathī, there is a Tīrtha named Haṁsapratapana. It is well-known in all the worlds. By the mere ablution

*This is the Veṇī Kṣetra in Prayāga according to Pd. P. Sitāsita is also called Veṇī.

The reading in Pd. P.I. 43.27 is Yamunā dakṣiṇe-taṭe 'on the south bank of Yamunā'.

therein, the benefit of a horse-sacrifice is derived. He is honoured in the heaven as long as the moon and the sun shine.

97-98. Thereafter, he should go to Bhogavatī, to the north of Vāsuki that is remembered as the greatest Tīrtha named Daśāśvamedhika. By the rite of ablution therein, the devotee derives the benefit of a horse-sacrifice. He becomes rich, handsome, and a liberal and virtuous donor.

99. By going to that place, one attains that benefit which a master of the four Vedas obtains, which those who speak truth derive, and which one attains as a result of nonviolence.

100. On the northern bank of the Pāyati (?) and to the south of Prayāga, there is the Tīrtha named Ṛṇamocanaka. It is remembered as the greatest holy centre.

101. One who spends a night there and takes a holy dip therein, is liberated from all indebtedness. He attains the heavenly world. He becomes immortal himself.

102. He who takes bath and misses three meals and continues like this for three months, is purified of sins of betrayal of confidence. (Within three months, he becomes pure).

103. By glorifying the holy centre, the devotee obtains merit, by visiting it he sees auspicious things, by plunging in and drinking its waters, he sanctifies upto the seventh generation.

104. When the sun is in Capricorn, during the month of Māgha, if one does not take bath before the sunrise how can one be liberated from sins? How can one go to heaven ?

105. One shall shave off one's head at Prayāga, one shall offer Piṇḍas into the Gaṅgā. One shall give charitable gifts at Kurukṣetra, one shall eschew body at Vārāṇasī.

106. If one has shaved off the head at Prayāga of what avail is offerings of Piṇḍas at Gayā,[1] or death at Kāśī or the giving of charitable gifts at Kurukṣetra ?

1. This is a misprint for 'Gaya' as can be seen from the quotation of this verse in Tīrtha-cintāmaṇi, p. 32 and elsewhere. For offering Piṇḍas at Gayā is unanimously recommended.

107. If the year is not over after a pilgrimage and the shortage is upto two months, the pilgrim shall assiduously perform the rites of tonsure and observance of fast again.

108. In regard to all the women who go to Prayāga, the rite of tonsure shall be performed thus. All the hairs are collected together and two Aṅgulas at the tip are cut off.[1]

109. All the sins of persons cling to the roots of hairs and stay there even after the holy dip in the Tīrtha. Hence they must be shaved off.

110-111A. (?) If the new moon day, Śravaṇa constellation and Arkapāta (the fall of the Sun ? sunset ?) coincide in the month of Pauṣa or Māgha it should be known as Ardhodaya Parva. It is superior to a hundred solar festive occasions.

O daughter of Brahmā, if it is slightly less (in these respects), it is remembered as Mahodaya Parva.

111B-112. If one is able to be at Prayāga at the time of dawn on the seventh day in the bright half of the month of Māgha, it is on a par with a thousand solar eclipses. If (one is at Prayāga) during the tropical transit of the sun, the merit is a crore times more. During the equinoxes the merit is a hundred thousand times more.

113. During the Ṣaḍaśīti* (meritorious hour) the benefit is a thousand times more. So also in the case of Viṣṇupadī (meritorious hour). One shall give charitable gifts at Prayāga in accordance with the extent of one's resources.

114-117. O daughter of Brahmā, thereby the benefit from the Tīrtha increases. If any one wishes to offer a cow at the confluence of the Gaṅgā and Yamunā, he must offer as Pratigraha (gift) a gold piece, a jewel or a pearl. O auspicious

1. This is called Veṇī-dāna, Even women whose husbands are alive offer the tresses of their hair measuring two Aṅgulas, to the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā (called Veṇi).

*The sun's entrance into the four signs viz. Pisces, Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius.

The sun's passage into the zodiacal signs of Taurus, Leo, Scorpio and Aquarius.

lady, if any one wishes to give a reddish, brown or a tawny coloured cow, he must cover its horns with gold, the hoofs with silver and the neck with a cloth. It must be a milch cow with a calf. It must be given to a Vedic Scholar in accordance with the injunctions. He must be a good-mannered person wearing white clothes, quiescent, knower of Dharma and a master of the Vedas. That cow must be given at the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā.

118-120. Costly clothes and different kinds of jewels (too must be given). The devotee if honoured in the heavenly world as many thousand years as there are hairpores in the bodies of the cow and the calf. The cow too is born there where the donor takes his rebirth. Thanks to that rite, the donors do not see hell. They reach the northern Kurus and rejoice for long periods of time.

121. It is better to give a milch cow than hundreds and thousands of dry cows. That cow alone will redeem the wife, sons and servants of the donor.

122-123A. Hence among all charitable gifts, the gift of a cow is specially praiseworthy. It is the cow alone that protects one in impassable, dangerous, terrible transmission of great sins. Hence the cow should be given as a gift to an excellent Brāhmaṇa.

123B-125A. One shall not accept monetary gifts in Tīrthas and holy shrines. As long as that amount (in case he has accepted) remains with him and he benefits by it, the holy centre is of no avail to him. When there are special indications and portents, the Brāhmaṇa shall guard himself against mistakes in his own activities and in those pertaining to the Pitṛs (Such as Śrāddha) as well as in the worship of the deities.

125B-126. He who makes a gift of a virgin (i e. gives her in marriage) on the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā does not see the terrible hell, thanks to that rite. He goes to the northern Kurus and rejoices for long endless periods of time.

127-129A. He obtains wives and righteous sons endowed with handsome features.

(Special austerities). A man who stands topsy-turvy with outstretched arms and inhales smoke from below is honoured in the heavenly world for a hundred thousand years. Falling from the heavenly abode, the man becomes an Agnihotrin. After enjoying extensive pleasures, he attains that same holy centre once again.

129B-130. (This holy sacred place and sphere of Prajāpati has the following boundaries :) Prayāga* extends from Pratiṣṭhāna up to the deep pool of Vāsuki in front of Prajāpati and up to the two Nāgas Kambala and Aśvatara and the Nāga Bahumūlaka. This is known in the three worlds as the sacred spot of Prajāpati.

131. By taking the holy bath there, people go to heaven. Those who are dead there are not reborn. Not only through the words of the Vedas but through the popular saying this is justified.

132. The soul goes up in its flight as a result of the death in Prayāga. There are ten thousand Tīrthas and another sixty crores.

133-134A. O daughter of Brahmā, their presence at that place is glorified. He who abandons his life at the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā attains the goal which a practising Yogin who is intelligent and who traverses the path of the good, attains.

134B-136. A man may be oppressed, afflicted, indigent or furious. But if he eschews life after reaching the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā, he rejoices in the heaven in the midst of Gandharvas and Apsaras. He goes there on aerial chariots having the lustre and colour of molten gold and the refulgence of the Sun. He attains all cherished desires, so say the leading sages.

137. From slumber he is wakened by means of songs and sounds of musical instruments. He is honoured in heaven as long as he does not remember about the birth.

Prayāgāt*—in the text means 'from Prayāga'. If emended as ā-Prayāgam as found in the same verses in the Mt. P. 104.5 and Pd. P. I.39 69-70 it gives better sense. The reading in Mt. P. is accepted in the above translation.

138. When his Karmans are exhausted and he falls from heaven, he comes back (to the world of human beings) and is born in a family that is rich and flourishing and that is full of gold and jewels.

139-141. Remembering the same thing he goes to the world of Viṣṇu. He who abandons life after reaching the root of the ('Eternal') banyan tree goes beyond all the worlds to the world of Rudra. The twelve Ādityas (Suns) shine there resorting to Rudra. The entire universe comes out (?). He burns at the root of the banyan tree* (?). O gentle lady, lord Hari honoured and kept in front by Prajāpati lies down on its leaf in the form of an infant child sucking the big toe.

142-144A. Listen to the benefit attained by the person who abandons his life in the beautiful bank of the river Urvaśī (Urvaśī-pulina) which is large and whitened like swans (due to the presence of flocks of Swans. O daughter of Brahmā, for sixtysix thousand years he shall stay in the heavenly world along with his Pitṛs.

144B-146. O lady of beautiful eyes, when he sees Urvaśī in the divine world, he is honoured continuously by the Devas, sages, Gandharvas and Kinnaras. Thereafter, when the Karmans are exhausted and he falls from the heaven he comes here (on the Earth). He obtains a hundred beloved wives like Urvaśī. He shall be the husband of many thousands of women amidst whom he sports.

147. O Mohinī, he shall be the enjoyer and administrator of ten thousand villages. He is wakened from his sleep (every day) by the sounds of girdles and anklets.

148-149. After enjoying extensive pleasures, he attains the same Tīrtha once again. Perpetually wearing white clothes

*The text in NP : nirgacchanti jagat sarvaṁ vaṭa-mūle sa dahyate / translated above is not satisfactory. We should rather accept the reading vaṭamūlaṁ na dahyate / given in the Mt. P. 105.12b. It means (although at the end of the world, the 12 suns resorting to Rudra burn down the whole universe the Banyan tree (on which Viṣṇu is to rest as a child) is not burnt.

and invariably subjugating the sense-organs, he takes only one meal a day. By continuing thus for a month he becomes the lord of Yoga. He obtains a hundred women bedecked in gold.

150-151A. He will be the master of great pleasures over the Earth extending up in the oceans. He shall be endowed with wealth and food-grains. He will be a donor continuously.

After enjoying extensive pleasures, he remembers that Tīrtha once again.

151b-153a. He who abandons life after reaching the holy place called 'Koṭitīrtha' is honoured in the heavenly world for a thousand crores of years. Thereafter, when the Karmans are exhausted, the excellent man comes here from heaven and is born in a family that is highly praiseworthy and endowed with gold, jewels and pearls. He is born a handsome person.

153b-154. Willingly or unwillingly he who dies in Gaṅgā, attains the abode of Śakra. He never goes to hell. He rides in an aerial chariot to which swans and Sārasa birds are yoked.

155-156a. He sleeps in the midst of Apsaras and is wakened by them. O daughter of Brahmā when the karmans are exhausted, he comes here from heaven. He chooses his birth in the family of Yogins and prosperous peoples.

156b-159a. A person who is not short of any limb, who is free from ailments and who has all the five sense-organs functioning perfectly shall immolate himself in the fire of dried cowdung cakes at the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā. He is honoured in the heavenly world for as many thousands of years as there are pores of hairs in the body of that intelligent devotee. Falling from heaven thereafter he becomes the lord of Jambūdvīpa. After enjoying extensively many pleasures he attains the same Tīrtha once again.

159b-161. He who chops off his own body and gives it to birds, is honoured in the Somaloka (world of the moon) for a hundred thousand years. Thereafter, he comes here from that world and becomes a righteous king endowed with all good qualities, comely features and learning. He speaks pleasing words and he remains pure. After enjoying extensive pleasures, he goes again to the same Tīrtha.

162-163. A person who has adopted holy observance Anāśaka (non destructive) and who dies anywhere in the area of Prayāga which extends to five Yojanas, redeems seven previous generations and fourteen subsequent generations. He uplifts himself.

164-166. There is a Tīrtha well-known as Agnitīrtha on the southern bank of Yamunā. On the Western bank is the Tīrtha of Dharmarāja known as Naraka.

165. By taking holy bath therein people go to heaven. Those who die there are not reborn. On the northern bank of Yamunā, there are many Tīrthas that destroy sins, O daughter of Brahmā. They are resorted to by prominent sages. Those who take holy dip there go to heaven. Those who die there are not reborn.

167. Gaṅgā and Yamunā are remembered as yielding similar fruits. Only because of its seniority, Gaṅgā is worshipped everywhere.

168-169a. O lady of Devas, Yogic power may or may not be attained by one who gives all jewels to the Brāhmaṇas. But surely all these befall a person who dies at Prayāga.

169b-172. One may be in one's own land, or in a forest, or in a foreign country or in his house. If he dies remembering Prayāga, he attains the world of Brahmā where the ground is golden. There are trees that yield all cherished desires, as their fruit. There are sages there. He sports about along with Siddhas and Gandharvas in the auspicious and beautiful bank of Mandākinī (Gaṅgā). He is worshipped by Devas. Thereafter, he comes here and becomes the lord of Jambūdvīpa.

173-174. He is a righteous soul and is fully endowed with all good qualities. He attains the same holy Tīrtha once again. Thus the entire greatness of Prayāga has been described to you. It is conducive to happiness and salvation. What other essence do you wish to hear ?

CHAPTER SIXTYFOUR

The greatness of Kurukṣetra[1].

Mohinī said :

1. O merciful Vasu, O knower of virtue, the greatness of Prayāga, the king of Tīrthas, has been narrated to me by you who are deeply erudite.

2. Now recount full details of the splendid Kurukṣetra which is the most auspicious of all important Tīrthas and which sanctifies all the worlds.

Vasu said :

3. Listen, O Mohinī, I shall narrate to you the details of Kurukṣetra which bestows great merits. By going there and taking the holy dip, a man is liberated from all sins.

4. There are many holy centres there resorted to by the leading sages. They bestow salvation to those who listen. I shall recount them to you.

5. Liberation is of four types : Viz : knowledge of the Brahman, Śrāddha at Gayā, death while defending cattle and residence at Kurukṣetra.

6. They call the land between the two divine rivers Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī 'Brahmāvarta', a land resorted to by the Devas.[2]

7. He who continuously says thus :— "Although I stay far off, I will go to Kurukṣetra and stay there", is liberated from all sins.[3]

1. Kurukṣetra or the land of Kurus is a very sacred region. Since Vedic times, it was the cradle of Aryan civilisation. As recorded in the opening verse of the BG., Kurukṣetra was originally a dharma-kṣetra as gods, sages and kings have performed sacrifices in the area on the banks of Sarasvatī. Its area is much wider than the place now called Kurukṣetra as it includes Thaneswar, Sonepat, Amin, Asthipur etc. De, p. 110.

2. Mbh. Vana 83. 3, 204-205 records that the land between the Sarasvatī and the Dṛṣad-vatī is Kurukṣetra. Manu II. 17 calls this tract Brahmāvarta.

3. A verbatim echo of the sentiment expressed in Mbh. Vana 83. 1-2.

8 There is no doubt about this that the knowledge of the self-possessed learned person who stays on the banks of the Sarasvatī will be full of Brahman.

9. O gentle lady, the deities, sages and Siddhas resort to Kurujāṅgala[1] (the forest in Kurukṣetra). By resorting to that place, one realises Brahman in his Ātman.

Mohini said :

10. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, how is Kurukṣetra superior to all other Tīrthas ? Recount it in detail to me. I have sought refuge in you.

Vasu said :

11. O splendid lady, listen. I shall recount to you the details of Kurukṣetra that yields great benefit. I shall tell you how it has become one that burns the sins of men and is a favourite of Brahmā.

12. At that holy spot, the meritorious Brahmasaras (the lake of Brahmā) came into being at the outset. Then the Rāmahrada (deep pool of Paraśurāma) came into being and thereafter Kurukṣetra (the land ploughed by King Kuru.)[2]

13. The lake nearby was created by Brahmā formerly. Moreover, the altar of Brahmā is in between the quarters.

14. O Mohinī, penance was performed here by Brahmā who was desirous of creation (of the universe). Penance was performed by the discus-bearing Hari also who was desirous of sustaining the worlds.

1. Vāmana P. 22.47 regards the region between Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvati as Kurujāṅgala. Formerly, there must have been some forests in Kurukṣetra but now no jungle is there. Mbh. Ādi 94-49 identifies Kurukṣetra and Kurujāṅgala with Hastināpura as its capital.

2. Vāmana P. 22.59-60 confirms that originally this tract of land was called the Vedī (sacrificial altar) of Brahmā. Later, when Paraśurāma filled five pools with blood of Kṣattriyas, it became known as Rāmahrada (or Syamanta or Samanta Pañcaka); lastly when king Kuru, the son of Saṁvaraṇa ploughed this land with a golden plough for fourteen miles all round, it came to be known as Kurukṣetra 'The farm-land of Kuru.'

15A. Thanks to the entry into the lake, Sthāṇutva (the state of being steady like a pillar) was attained by Śambhu also.

15B-17A. O beautiful woman, Paraśurāma was enraged because his father had been slain. (By way of revenge) he killed the Kṣatriyas unfavourable to Brāhmaṇas. Pools of blood were made by him. He performed the rite of Tarpaṇa to the Pitṛs with that blood and performed a penance there. Thereafter, it became famous as Rāmatīrtha.[1] It became destructive of sins.

17B-18. In the place where sage Mārkaṇḍeya performed a great penance, the river Sarasvatī originating from the Plakṣa tree flowed. The river was welcomed, honoured and eulogised by the righteous sage.

19-20. The river flooded the lake nearby and flowed to the West. The place all around extending to five Yojanas was ploughed by Kuru as cultivable land.[2] The area upto Syamantapañcaka is cited as Kurukṣetra. It is the source of (qualities like) mercy, truthfulness and forgiveness.

21. O gentle lady, men who take holy dip here obtain everlasting merit. Those who die here ride in an aerial chariot and go to the world of Brahmā.

22. No doubt need be entertained in this respect that observance of fast, charitable gifts, Homa, Japa and worship of the lord in this place attain everlasting benefit.

23-24. Those who die at Brahmavedī (the pulpit or altar of Brahmā) in Kurukṣetra are not reborn. Planets, stars

1. Rāmahrada is a lake at a distance of one mile from Kurukṣetra station. Its area is 3546 ft. (length) X 1900 (breadth). It was originally known as Brahmasaras as god Brahmā performed penance on its bank. Paraśurāma performed the Tarpaṇa of his Pitṛs here and hence it is called Rāmahrada. De (P. 166) is wrong in identifying Dvaipāyanahrada with it as that lake (also known as Pārāśara) is at a distance of 20 miles from Thanesar.

2. That the extent of Kurukṣetra is five Yojanas in radius is confirmed in the Mbh. Vana 129-22 and Vāmana P. 22.15-16. Sya (Sa-) mantapañcaka or Rāmahrada forms the boundary of Kurukṣetra. This specific area was advised as proper for the battlefield by Balarāma (Mbh. Śalya 55. 5-18).

and other luminaries have the fear of falling off after some time, but there is no fall in regard to those who die in Kurukṣetra. Hence, even Devas, sages, Siddhas and Gandharvas are eager to resort to that lake.

25-26. The holy spot is called Rantuka. O auspicious lady, the following guards were settled here by Viṣṇu for protecting the holy centre. They are :— Sucandra, Yakṣa, Rākṣasa, Sūrya, Vāsuki, Sukeśin and Vidyādhara, Śambukarṇaka.

27. With their servants whose number goes upto eight thousand and who bear bows and arrows, they protect Kurukṣetra and prevent sinners.

28. After reaching Rantuka,[1] the devotee should crave forgiveness again and again. He should take a holy dip in Sarasvatī, visit Yaksa Rantuka and bow to him. After offering flowers, incense and Naivedya, he should utter the following :

29-30A. "O leading Yakṣa, it is thanks to your favour that I could wander over forests, rivers and Tīrthas. Let there be no obstacle therein. Obeisance to you".

30B. After craving forgiveness and propitiating the leading Yakṣa thus, the devotee shall start on his pilgrimage.

31-32. O Mohinī, there is no shortage or deficiency in this world or in the other world in regard to that person who makes a pilgrimage to the forests, Tīrthas and rivers of Kurukṣetra. The pilgrimage yields merits.

1. Rantuka is probably (as opined by Cunningham in Arch. Survey Report for India II. P. 215) the Ratan Jaksha situated at the north-east corner of Kurukṣetra, four miles to the east of Thanesar.

CHAPTER SIXTYFIVE

Pilgrimage to Kurukṣetra

Mohini said :—

1. O leading Brāhmaṇa, what are the forests there ? What are the splendid rivers ? Kindly recount to me the pilgrimage that bestows Siddhi.

2. Mention to me the Tīrthas that are present in Kurukṣetra that yields merit, since you are my preceptor and bestower of salvation.

Vasu said :—

3. O Mohinī, listen. I shall recount to you the rules of procedure for undertaking the pilgrimage of Kuruksetra. It bestows merit. By undertaking the pilgrimage, the devotee attains excellent salvation.

4-7. In the middle of Kuruksetra there are seven holy forests.[1] I shall mention their names as they are bestowers of merit on men : 1) the Kāmyakavana is meritorious. 2) the Aditivana is very big. 3) Vyāsa's forest is sacred. 4) So also is Phalakīvana. 5) The Sūryavana is holy. 6) Madhuvana is equally meritorious. 7) Sītāvana is famous and is destructive of sins. Thus there are seven forests here. There are many Tīrthas. The river Sarasvatī is holy. So also is the river Vaitaraṇī. Gaṅgā, Mandākinī (flowing slowly) is also meritorious.

8-9. Another river is Madhusravā. Dṛṣadvatī, Kauśikī and Hairaṇvatī are also sacred.[2] Excepting Sarasvatī all these rivers are flooded during the rainy season. The waters of these rivers are holy for touching, drinking and plunging.

---

1. The Vāmana P. 34-37 confirms the list of seven forests in Kurukṣetra as given by NP. here. But today there is no trace of a single forest, though the names of some villages (e. g. Kamodā for Kāmyakavana, Pharal for Phalaki-vana) are popularly believed to be the sites of those forests.

2. The Vāmana P. 39. 6-8 confirms this list of so-called rivers. Today even the great Sarasvatī of Vedic and Purāṇic fame has a bare existence. V. 10a below euphemistically suggests that these rivers were dry even in the days of the Nārada Purāṇa.

10A. These rivers are not frothy and foaming in view of the greatness of the sacred holy centre.

10B-11A. The devotee should first go to Rantuka and pay respects to that Yakṣa, the extremely powerful gatekeeper. Only then the pilgrim should begin his pilgrimage.

11B-13A. Thereafter, O auspicious lady, the man should go to the holy Aditivana.[1] It was here that a great penance was duly performed by Aditi for obtaining sons. By taking holy dip and worshipping Aditi, the mother of the Devas, the lady-devotee gives birth to a great and heroic son endowed with all auspicious characteristic features.

13B-16A. Thereafter, O fair lady, the pilgrim should go to the excellent spot of Viṣṇu that is famous by the name of Vimala.[2] Lord Hari is present here. By taking holy dip in Vimala and by visiting lord of Vimala the devotee should become (free from impurities). He shall attain the world of discus-bearing lord of the Devas. O Mohini, there is no doubt about this that by visiting Hari and Baladeva occupying one and the same seat, the devotee shall immediately be liberated from sins.

16B-17. Thereafter, the devotee should go to the Tīrtha Pāriplava[3] wellknown in the worlds. By taking holy dip there and drinking its waters as well as by propitiating a Brāhmaṇa who has mastered the Vedas, by means of monetary gifts etc., the devotee shall derive the benefit of Brahma-Yajña.

18. By devoutly taking a holy dip in the place where the sin-destroying confluence of the Kauśikī[4] is present,

1. Now there is no jungle but it is believed that its site was near the village Amin where there is Aditi Tirtha. Amin is at a distance of 5 miles from Kurukṣetra on the Delhi-Ambala line Kalyāṇa-Tirthāṅka, p. 78).

2. Now-a-days a small eminence near Viṣṇupada is called Vimala and is regarded as the hermitage of sage Vimala (Kalyāṇa 31. 1 P. 82) but at the time of the NP. both Viṣṇupada and Vimala seem to have been identical.

3. Mentioned as a famous Tirtha at Kurukṣetra in Mbh. Vana. 83.12 and in VmP. (Vāmana P.) 34.17.

4. This is a different river from modern Kosi and the one mentioned in Gayā-māhātmya. Its confluence with the Dṛṣadvatī is regarded as holy in VmP. 34.18 and the same confluence is implied here.

O splendid lady, the man attains union with his beloved ones.

19. Thereafter, the man endowed with forbearance should go to the Pṛthivītīrtha and devoutly take holy dip. Thereby, O blessed lady, he attains excellent salvation.

20. The goddess (Earth) forgives the offences committed by a man on the Earth, if that embodied soul takes his holy dip there.

21. By visiting Śiva, the lord of Dakṣa in the holy hermitage Dakṣāśrama, the man obtains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

22. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to Śālakinī. After taking a holy dip there, he should worship Hari in communion with Hara, for achieving the desired object.

23. The devotee who knows rules of procedure should go to Nāgatīrtha and take holy dip there. By taking in ghee and curds thereafter, he shall attain freedom from the fear of serpents.

24. Thereafter, he should return in the evening to the shrine of Rantuka. Staying there for a night, the devotee should worship the getekeeper on the next day.

25. The next day he should worship a Brāhmaṇa receiving him with scents and other articles of service and then feed him. Thereafter, he should go to the Tīrtha, Pañcanada, well known in the three worlds.

26-27A. It was here that Śiva gave out five loud shouts that terrified the Asuras. Hence, the holy centre is famous by the name Pañcanada. It is destructive of all sins. By taking a holy dip there and making charitable gifts, the man becomes fearless.

27B-29A. Thereafter, he should go to Koṭitīrtha, O Mohinī, where a crore of Tīrtha were brought as installed by Rudra the Great Ātman. By taking the holy dip in that Tīrtha and by visiting Hara, Koṭīśvara (the lord of crores) the devotee shall attain the merit originating from five Yajñas ever since that day.

29B-30A. It was here alone that lord Vāmana was installed by all Devas.

30B. Hence by worshipping him the devotee shall derive the benefit of Agniṣṭoma sacrifice.

31A. Thereafter, he should go to Aśvitīrtha. By having faith and mastering sense-organs as well as by taking holy dip therein, the man shall become renowned and handsome.

31B-32A. Then he should go to the Varāhatīrtha created by Viṣṇu. By taking holy dip therein with faith, the man shall attain good goal.

32B-33. Thereafter, O fairfaced lady, he should go to Soma tīrtha[1] where Soma (the moon) performed penance and became free from ailments. The devotee should like his holy plunge therein. By giving a cow as gift there, he shall attain the benefit of Rājasūya sacrifice.

34. By worshipping Bhuteśvara, Jvālāmāleśvara and Tāṇḍaliṅga, the devotee shall never have rebirth.

35. By taking a holy dip in Ekahaṁsa, the man shall attain the benefit of charitable gift of a thousand cows. By taking holy bath in Kṛtaśauca the man shall attain the benefit of sacrifice called Puṇḍarīka

36. Thereafter, the devotee should go to the holy centre of the trident-bearing lord, called muñja-vaṭa. By observing fast for a night and worshipping Īśa he shall be the lord of Gaṇas.

37. The devotee should propitiate the female Yakṣiṇī stationed at the threshold by observing fast, taking the holy dip and worshipping. For quelling great sins, he should feed the Brāhmaṇas.

38. He shall circumambulate them. Thereafter, he shall go to Puṣkara. By taking a bath and by worshipping the Pitṛs, he shall have his objects accomplished.

39. If any one offers the gift of a virgin (i.e. if he gives a virgin away in marriage) there on the fullmoon day of Kārttika, the deities will be delighted and give him the desired benefit.

1. It is probably the tank to the South of Amin mentioned also in the Mbh. Vana 83.114, VmP. 41.4.

Many of the sub-Tīrthas mentioned in the NP. are the same as in the Mbh. Vana and also in VmP. In fact many lines are borrowed verbatim from Mbh. by NP. Thus NP. V. 35=Mbh Vana 83. 20b-21a, NP. V. 36=Mbh. Vana 83. 21b-22a. Such borrowings are found in all Purāṇas.

40. Kapila, the great Yakṣa, is stationed here as the gate-keeper. He creates obstacles in the commission of sins (to the sinners). He grants merit too.

41-42A His highly blessed wife Ūkhalamekhalā continuously beats the Dundubhi drum and wanders every where. She prevents sinners from taking bath. She leads the meritorious ones.

42B-43 Thereafter, the devotee shall go to Rāmahrada.[1] By taking a holy dip therein duly and by worshipping the Devas, Pitṛs and sages the devotee shall attain worldly pleasuses and liberation. By worshipping Paraśurāma faithfully and by making gift of gold, the devotee shall become rich.

44. By going to Vaṁśamūla Tīrtha and by taking the holy bath therein, the devotee shall uplift his own race. By taking the holy dip in Kāyaśodhanaka (that which purifies the body) the devotee's body shall become pure and he shall enter Hari.

45. The devotee shall go to Lokoddhāra. By taking bath and worshipping Janārdana, he shall attain the permanent world where the eternal Viṣṇu abides.

46. He should then go to Śrītīrtha and after taking bath should worship the excellent Śālagrāma. Thereby, he sees Hari present continuously near him.

47. After reaching Kapilahrada, he should take a holy bath and worship Devas and Pitṛs. Thereby, he derives the merit of a thousand tawny-coloured cows.

48. By duly worshipping Kapila, the lord of the universe, O gentle lady, the devotee shall be duly greeted by Devas and he shall derive the region of Śiva himself.

49. Thereafter, observing fast, he should worship the sun in the Sūryatīrtha. After attaining the benefit of Agniṣṭoma sacrifice, he shall go to heaven.

1. This is to the north of Thaneswar, Mbh. Vana 83. 26-40 tells us that originally five tanks were filled with the blood of Kṣattriyas by Paraśurāma for the Tarpaṇa to his ancestors and at his request they transformed them into Tīrthas; also vide Pd. P. I. 26. 23-37.

50. Gaṇapati himself is stationed at the entrance to a crevice into the Earth. By visiting him and duly worshipping him, the devotee shall attain the benefit of a Yajña.

51. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha of Goddess, a man obtains excellent features. By taking holy dip Brahmāvarta, a man attains perfect knowledge of the Brahman.

52. By taking holy dip in Sutīrthaka and by worshipping Devas, sages, Pitṛs and human beings, a man obtains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

53. By performing holy bath in the Tīrtha of Kāmeśvara with faith, the devotee shall be liberated from all ailments. He shall attain the eternal Brahman.

54. By taking a holy dip and worshipping with faith in the Mātṛtīrtha the family flourishes till the eleventh generation. Excellent prosperity increases.

55. Thereafter, the devotee should go to Śītāvana.[1] O auspicious lady, there is a great Tīrtha there. By its mere vision, it sanctifies twenty-one generations.

56-57. By casting off the tresses of hair there, the devotee becomes liberated from sins. The Tīrtha named Daśāśvamedhika is well known in all the three worlds. By seeing that Tīrtha one shall be liberated from sins. Thereafter, he shall go to the Tīrtha called Mānuṣa[2] and take the holy bath.

58-59. O daughter of god Brahmā, if one wishes for a human birth once again one shall take bath in the Tīrtha Mānuṣa. The river Mahānadī three kilometres from the Mānuṣa Tīrtha is well known. After taking bath there in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee should feed excellent Brāhmaṇa on Śyāmāka rice cooked in milk.

60-61A. His sins perish. He attains salvation by performing the rite of Śrāddha to the Pitṛs. At midday on the fourteenth day during the Pitṛpakṣa (the dark fortnight dedicated to the

1. Probably the same as Śītā-Vana mentioned as the seventh holy forest in Kurukṣetra in VmP. 34. 7. The village Sīvana is supposed to be on its site. Sītā, the queen of Rāma, has no association with Kurukṣetra as per VR.

2. It is also glorified in VmP. 35. 50-56, Pd. P. I. 26. 60-63.

manes) called Mahālaya in the month of Bhādra-pada, the devotee shall offer Piṇḍas. Thereby, he shall attain liberation.

61B-62A. Thereafter, he should go to Brahmā's spot Brahmodumbaraka. He who takes a holy dip in the pools of Brahmarṣis (Brahmanical sages) obtains the benefit of Somayāga.

62B-63A. By worshipping Sthāṇu accompanied by Daṇḍin in the Tīrtha called Vṛddhakedāraka the man attains the power of vanishing at will.

63B-64A. Thereafter, the devotee should go to Kalaśī where the goddess herself is present. By taking a holy dip here and worshipping Ambikā, one shall cross the ocean of worldly existence.

64B-65. By visiting lord Maheśvara at Saraka[1] on the fourteenth day in the dark half of the month, the man endowed with faith, shall attain the region of Śiva. O beautiful lady, there are three classes of Tīrthas at Saraka.

66-67A. The Rudrakoṭi (the crore of Rudras) is stationed in the well in the middle of the lake. The man who takes bath in that lake and remembers Rudrakoṭī is meritorious. There is no doubt about this that Rudrakoṭi it worshipped by him.

67B-69A. There is another Tīrtha there itself, viz. Īhāspapadam (Basis for desire). It is destructive of sins. By its mere sight a man attains liberation. By worshipping Devas and Pitṛs, the man wards off mishaps. He shall obtain everything mentally thought of.

69B-70A. There is a great Tīrtha called Kedāra. It is destructive of all sins. By taking a holy bath there, the man shall achieve the benefit of all gifts.

70B-71A. There is a great lake of very clear water to the east of Saraka. It is well known by the name "Anyajanma" (another birth), where the lord Hari and Hara are present. Viṣṇu stands there in his four-armed form, while Śiva abides there in the form of a Liṅga. By performing holy ablution there in visiting and eulogising the deity, the man obtains liberation.

1. Also glorified in Mbh. Vana 83. 75-76, Pd. P.I. 26.76.

71B-73A. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to Nāgahrada and take a holy dip towards the end of the bright half of the month of Caitra. By offering Śrāddha, he attains liberation. He never sees the world of Yama.

73B-75. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to the Tīrtha Triviṣṭapa that is resorted to by the Devas. There is a holy river Vaitaraṇī there. It liberates one from sins. By taking a holy dip and worshipping the trident-bearing and bull-emblemed deity, he shall purify his soul of all sins. He will definitely attain the greatest goal (Mokṣa). By taking holy dip in the Rasāvarta the man attains excellent Siddhi.

76. On the fourteenth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, the devotee should take a holy dip in the Vilepaka and worship Śiva devoutly. Thereby he is liberated from all sins.

77. Thereafter, O gentle lady, the man should go to the excellent Phalakīvana[1] where Devas perform great penance along with the Gandharvas.

78. By taking a holy dip in the river Dṛṣadvatī there in accordance with the injunctions and by performing the rite of Tarpaṇa to the Devas and Pitṛs. the man shall attain the benefit of Agniṣṭoma and Atirātra sacrifices.

79. On the new-moon day or on Lunar-day (Full-moon day (?) the man shall perform Śrāddha rite there. He attains an excellent benefit thereby on a par with that of Gayāśrāddha.

80A. That is the benefit of the Śrāddha. The remembrance of the forest yields satisfaction to the Pitṛs.

80B-81A. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to the Tīrtha Pāṇighāṭa and perform the rite of Tarpaṇas to the Pitṛs. Thereby he attains the benefit of Rājasūya and of Sāṅkhya and Yoga as well.

81B-82A. Then the man should perform bath in the Tīrtha Miśraka in accordance with the injunctions. Thereby he attains the benefit of all the Tīrthas and attains excellent salvation.

1. There is no jungle now, but the village Pharal is regarded as the site of Phalakī Vana.

82B-83A. Thereafter he should go to Vyāsavana[1] and take a holy dip in the Tīrtha Manojava. By visiting the lord Manīṣin he shall attain whatever is mentally thought of 83B-84A After going to the Madhu-vana, he should take a holy bath in the Tīrtha of the goddess and be pure. By worshipping Devas and sages, he attains an excellent Siddhi.

84B-85A The man shall take a holy plunge in the Tīrtha, the confluence of Kauśikī and Dṛṣadvatī. If he observes restraints and restricts his diet, he shall be liberated from all sins.

85B-86. Thereafter, the devotee should go to Vyāsa-sthalī. It was here that the intelligent Vyāsa, overwhelmed by grief at the bereavement of his son, decided on casting off his body. He was re-suscitated to life by Devas. By going to that holy spot, the man is rid of his grief.

87. After going to the well of Kinduśū kūpa the devotee should make a gift of a Prastha measure of gingelly seeds. Thereby, he attains the greatest Siddhi. If he dies there, he shall attain liberation.

88. Two Tīrthas are well-known over the Earth Viz. Āhna and Mudita. By taking a holy dip therein and purifying the soul, the devotee shall attain the world of Sun.

89. Thereafter, he should go to the Tīrtha Mṛgamucya on the Gaṅgā. By bowing down and worshipping Mahādeva, the devotee shall attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

90. Thereafter, he should go to Koṭitīrtha. By taking a holy dip, by visiting Śivakoṭīśvara and by eulogising him faithfully, he shall attain the benefit of a crore of sacrifices.

91-92. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to Vāmana-kuṇḍa[2] well-known in the three worlds. It was here that Vāmana

1. No jungle now. Its site is now occupied by the village Vārasā to the south of Karnal-Kaithal road. This is different from Vyāsasthali in VV. 85-86 below, where Vyāsa tried to commit suicide (mentioned in Pd. P. I. 26. 90-91).

2. Mentioned in Mbh. Vana 83.103, 88.130. Pd. P. I. 26.96. A Vāmana-Kuṇḍa (a pool) is now shown at its site (Ka'yāṇa 31. 1 P. 81) his birth with the desire to destroy Bali's Yajña. By taking the holy bath at Viṣṇupāda therein and by worshipping Vāmana, the devotee shall be freed of all sins. He is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

93-94. The hermitage Jyeṣṭhāśrama is destructive of all sins. The devotee should observe fast on the eleventh day in the bright half of the month of Jyeṣṭha. On the next day, he should perform ablution therein in accordance with the injunctions. Thereby, he attains the greatest excellence among men. O gentle lady, the Śrāddha performed there gives great satisfaction to the Pitṛs.

95. There itself is the Koṭitīrtha well known in the three worlds. By taking a holy dip in that Tīrtha he shall obtain the benefit of a crore of sacrifices.

96. By duly worshipping Maheśvara, the lord of the Devas, named Koṭīśvara, the devotee shall attain chieftancy of the Gaṇas.

97A. By taking a holy dip in the Sūryatīrtha the devotee shall attain the world of the Sun.

97B-98A. Going to the Tīrtha called Kulottāraṇaka and taking a holy dip therein, the devotee uplifts his family. He then stays in heaven till the end of Kalpa.

98B-99A. By taking a holy dip in the Deep pool of the Wind-God and by visiting lord Maheśvara, the devotee shall be liberated from all sins and attain Śiva's region.

99B. By taking a holy dip in the Hanumattīrtha the man shall attain liberation.

100. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha of the saintly king Śālahotra the devotee shall be devoid of sins. By taking the holy dip in the Tīrtha of the Sarasvatī named Śrīkumbha the man shall attain the benefit of Yajña.

101. By taking the holy dip in the Naimiṣakuṇḍa the devotee attains the merit of ablution in the Naimiṣa. By taking a holy bath in the Vedavatī tīrtha a woman shall attain the Status of Satī (Pārvatī).

102. By taking a holy dip in the Brahma Tīrtha a man obtains Brāhmaṇa-hood. This is the greatest spot of Brahmā. By going there none comes to grief.

103. By taking a holy dip in Somatīrtha, a man shall attain heavenly goal. By going to and by having a holy dip in the seven Sārasvata Tīrthas the man shall attain liberation.

104-105. The seven Sarasvatīs viz Suprabhā, Kāñcanākṣī, Viśālā, Manoharī, Sunandā, Suveṇu and Vimalodakā join together there. By taking a holy bath in the Auśanasa Tīrtha, the devotee shall be freed from all sins.

106. By taking a holy dip in the Kapālamocana even a Brāhmaṇa-slayer becomes pure. A man who takes a holy dip in the Vaiśvāmitra Tīrtha shall attain Brāhmaṇa-hood.

107. By taking the holy dip in the Pṛthūdaka[1] one is liberated from worldly bondage. By taking a holy dip in the Avakīrṇa a man attains the benefit of celibacy.

108. One who goes to Madhusrāva and takes a holy bath shall be liberated from sins. By taking the holy dip in the Vasiṣṭhatīrtha, the devotee attains the world of Vasiṣṭha.

109. By taking a holy bath in the confluence of Aruṇā and by observing fast for three days, the devotee attains liberation. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

110. O auspicious lady, there are four seas there. One who takes a holy dip there attains the benefit of the gift of a thousand cows. He is honoured in the heavenly world.

111. There is another Somatīrtha there. O Mohinī, by taking holy bath in that on the sixth day in the bright half of the month of Caitra, and by performing Śrāddha, one shall uplift the Pitṛs.

112. By taking a holy dip in the Pañcavaṭa and by duly worshipping Śiva who has assumed the Yogic form, the devotee rejoices along with the Devas.

113. One who takes a holy dip in the Kurutīrtha shall attain all Siddhis. The man who takes a plunge in the Svargadvāra, is honoured in the heavenly world.

1. Pṛthūdaka is the famous holy place Pehoa or Pehova, Karnal Dist. It is highly valued in Mbh. Vana 83. 142-149 and in Śalya Parva 39. 33-34. Also in Pd. P. Svarga, 27.31, 38, 39. VMP. calls it Brahma-yoni-Tīrtha (39. 20, 23).

114A. One who takes bath in the Tīrtha Anaraka is liberated from all sins.

114B-115A. O gentle lady, thereafter, the man should go to the excellent forest Kāmyaka Vana.[1] The moment he enters, he is liberated from all accumulations of sins.

115B-116A. After reaching Ādityavana, if he visits (the deity) he will be liberated. By taking holy dip there on a Sunday, the devotee shall attain everything desired.

116B. By taking a holy dip in the Yajñopavītika Tīrtha, the devotee shall attain the benefit of maintaining his own duty.

117. Thereafter, the excellent man shall take a holy dip in the Tīrtha Catuḥpravāha. Thereby, he attains the benefit of all Tīrthas and rejoices in heaven like a Deva.

118. One who takes bath in the Tīrtha Vihāra shall attain all happiness. By taking a holy dip in the Durgā Tīrtha a man never faces misfortunes.

119. Thereafter, the devotee should take bath in the well Sarasvatī also known as Pitṛ-Tīrtha, and perform the Tarpaṇa rite to the Devas and others; thereby he shall attain excellent salvation.

120. By taking a holy dip in the Prācī Sarasvatī[2] (Eastern Sarasvatī) and by performing the Śrāddha rites in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee shall attain even inaccessible desires. At the time of death, he shall attain heavenly goal.

121-22A. By taking a holy dip in the Śukra Tīrtha and offering Śrāddha a man shall uplift the Pitṛs. He should observe fast on the eighth or the fourteenth day particularly in the dark half of the month of Caitra and take bath in the Brahma Tīrtha. Undoubtedly he will attain liberation.

1. The site of the forest is occupied by the village Kamodhā. It is three miles from Jyotisaras to the south of the Pehova road.

2. It is so called as the Sarasvati turned to the east at this place. Today there is only a tank of that name where pilgrims performed Tarpaṇa to the ancestors. The surrounding relics testify to its glorious past.

122B-123. Thereafter, he shall take bath in the Sthāṇu-Tīrtha and visit the Sthāṇuvṛṣa. The man thereby is liberated from terrible sins. So says Pitāmaha. By visiting the Sthāṇuliṅga the pilgrimage becomes complete.

124. O goddess, the pilgrimage of the holy centre Kurukṣetra is thus complete. Truth and nothing but the truth is uttered by me. There has never been and there never will be a Tīrtha like Kurukṣetra.

125A. By undertaking twelve such pilgrimages the devotee is not born again.

125B-126A. Holy rites and laudable public works like digging tanks, wells, penances, Homas, duly given charitable gifts etc. at that place, everything shall be everlasting. They who know the Vedas know this.

126B-127. One who takes a holy dip on the inaugural days of Manvantaras and Yugas, during lunar and solar eclipses during the transits of the sun, on Mahāpāta period and on other holy occasions shall attain infinite benefits.

128. It is for the purification of sins of noble souls, originating from the Kali age that the pleasant Tīrtha of Kuruksetra has been created by Brahmā.

129. He too who glorifies this sacred story that destroys sins, or the man who devoutly listens to this, is liberated from sins

130. In every birth, the man shall always attain whatever he gives away at Kurukṣetra at the time of solar eclipse.

131. Now, of what avail is much talk ? O daughter of Brahmā, listen to this decision. If one wishes for deliverance from worldly bondage, one shall of necessity resort to Kurukṣetra.

132. This is the greatest merit. This is the greatest penance. This alone is the greatest perfect knowledge if one goes to the Sthāṇutīrtha.

133. There is no other Tīrtha on the Earth as splendid as Kurukṣetra. Whether one adheres to the Ācāras or not (i.e. discipline of castes and stages of life) one attains liberation there.

134-135. O sinless lady, what I have been asked, I have told you entirely, about the greatness of Kurukṣetra that destroys sins. It is meritorious. It bestows salvation. What else do you wish to hear ?

CHAPTER SIXTYSIX

Glory of Gaṅgādvāra
(Or Haridvāra)

Mohini submitted :

1. O most excellent one among the Brāhmaṇas, the greatness of Kuruksetra* that is exceedingly destructive of sins, and which bestows Siddhis on men, has been heard from you.

2. O preceptor, blessed are you. Kindly recount to me the meritorious Tīrtha well known as Gaṅgādvāra.[1] There is great desire in my heart to hear about it.

Vasu narrated :

3. Listen, O gentle lady, I shall describe to you the greatness of Gaṅgādvāra that destroys sins. It is holy and auspicious to those who listen and read.

4. It is at this place that the holy Gaṅgā named Alakanandā reaches the Earth piercing through the mountains in thousand places and following the chariot of Bhagīratha.

---

*The editor of the Sk. Text remarks :

Thus the greatness of Kurukṣetra is completely recounted. Now the greatness of Gaṅgādvāra is begun.

1. The same as Hari (ra) dvāra (U. P.). Although the name Haridvāra implying Gaṅgādvāra is used in the Sk. P. IV and the Pd. P., Gaṅgādvāra was more popular in ancient times as Hiuen Tsang and Al Biruni called it Gaṅgādvāra ('the Gate of the Gaṅgā' as the Chinese traveller put it). It is one of the seven holiest cities in India. It is also called Māyā or Māyāpurī.

5. It is here that Dakṣa,[1] the Prajāpati, formerly worshipped Yajñeśa (Lord of Yajñas). That holy place bestows merits on men and destroys sins.

6. In this Yajña, Devas with their leaders like Indra and others had been invoked. With a desire to partake of their shares in the Yajña, they came here accompanied by their attendants.

7. O auspicious lady, the divine sages, pure Brahmanical sages and saintly kings together with their disciples and their disciples' disciples had come there.

8-9A. All of them had been invited by that intelligent son of Brahmā. The Gandharvas, Apsaras, Yakṣas, Siddhas, Vidyādharas and serpents—all came to the place of Yajña, except Śiva, the Pināka-bearing deity.

9B-10. As the invitees were going in their aerial chariots along with their wives, they were extolling the festivities in the Yajña of Dakṣa delightedly. The beautiful lady Satī heard (their descriptions) and became eager (to see it for herself). She therefore requested Mahādeva for permission to go.

11-12. On hearing it, the Lord said : "It is not conducive to welfare to go there". In view of the gravity of the inevitable future, she disregarded the lord and went there to participate in the celebration of the Yajña by her father. When she reached there, she was neither honoured nor welcomed by anyone.

13-15A The beautiful lady laid down her life there and that spot became an excellent holy centre.[2] Those who take their holy bath in that Tīrtha and perform the rite of Tarpaṇa to the Devas and Pitṛs, shall be favourites of the goddess. They will be able to enjoy worldly pleasures as well as salvation. Those who cast off their lives there by means of fasts etc. attain Śiva himself. They are not reborn in Saṁsāra.

15B-16. On hearing about the death of his beloved from Nārada, lord Nīlalohita (Śiva) created Vīrabhadra.

1. It is at a distance of about half a mile or so from modern Haridvāra that we are shown the place of Dakṣa's famous sacrifice. The story of destruction of Dakṣa's sacrifice is given in Mbh. Śānti 283. 32-37 and in other Purāṇas like the Bh. P.

2. This is called Satī-Kuṇḍa.

Accompanied by all the Pramathas, he destroyed that Yajña completely.

17. By the subsequent prayer of Brahmā God Śiva was immediately propitiated. He reorganized the Yajña. The disorganized Yajña was brought back to normalcy.

18. Thereafter, that Tīrtha has become unequalled and destructive of all sins. By performing ablution into it, the moon-god became free from the grip of consumptive diseases.

19. No doubt need be entertained in this respect, O daughter of Brahmā. He who duly takes bath in that Tīrtha attains every desire he cherishes.

20. Hari Tīrtha is that holy centre where the immutable lord Viṣṇu, the lord of Yajñas, was eulogised by Dakṣa and Devas.

21. The man who duly takes a holy bath there at Haripāda, O chaste lady, shall be a beloved favourite of Viṣṇu and the receptacle of worldly pleasures and salvation.

22. To the east of this is the well known holy centre Trigaṅgā. The Tripathagā (Gaṅgā flowing along the three paths) is directly seen there by the people.

23. By taking a holy bath therein and by performing the rite of Tarpaṇa to the Devas, sages, Pitṛs and human beings, the man endowed with perfect faith rejoices in heaven like a god.

24. O chaste lady, he who falls into the current and abandons his life, shall go to the abode of Viṣṇu. He is duly honoured by Devas.

25. Thereafter, the devotee should go to the Tīrtha, Kanakhala[1] in the southern direction. In observing fast for three nights and by taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha, one is liberated from all sins.

26. O gentle lady, he who gives a cow there to a Brāhmaṇa who has mastered the Vedas never sees Vaitaraṇī nor Yama.

1. Kanakhala is at a distance of about three miles from Here ki Paiḍi.

27A. Anything given or offered into the sacred fire, or Japa, or penance performed here attains everlasting benefit.

27B-28. The Jahnu Tīrtha is also here where formerly that river was drunk up by the royal sage Jahnu after making a mouthful of her. When he was propitiated, the river was released by him and it came out of his ear.

29-30A. O blessed lady, the man who takes his holy dip there, who observes fast, who is equipped with faith and who duly propitiates a Brāhmaṇa who has mastered the Vedas, by feeding him with excellent cooked rice, shall stay in the heaven for the duration of a Kalpa.

30B-31. O lady of fine waist-line, thereafter, the devotee should go to the Koṭitīrtha which is in the western direction. By visiting Koṭīśa the merit acquired is a crore of times more. By observing fast for a night there, the devotee shall attain the benefit of Puṇḍarīka sacrifice.

32. Similarly, in the northern quarter, there is the great Tīrtha well known as Saptagaṅgā.[1] O gentle lady, it is destructive of all sins.

33-34A. O highly intelligent lady, the holy hermitages of the seven sages are there. By taking a holy bath severally in those Tīrthas and by performing the rite of Tarpaṇa to the gods and to the Pitṛs, the man obtains the eternal world of sages.

34B-35. When the Divine river Gaṅgā was being brought by king Bhagīratha, the river, thanks to her love and fondness for them (seven sages), flowed in seven currents. Therefore, the Tīrtha became famous as Saptagaṅgā.

36. The devotee then goes to the Āvarta and performs Tarpaṇa rite to all, beginning with the Devas, after the holy bath. Thereby, he rejoices in the abode of Devendra for the period of a Yuga.

37. Thereafter, O gentle lady, the devotee should go to the excellent Kapilahrada. By giving a cow as gift to an excellent Brāhmaṇa he shall attain the benefit of giving a thousand cows.

1. It is called Sapta-dhārā now. It is at a distance of a mile or so from Bhima-Goḍā.

38. The extremely sacred Tīrtha of Nāgarāja, (king of serpents, is here itself. He who performs the rite of ablution here, shall derive protection from serpents.

39. Thereafter, the devotee should go to Lalitaka and the excellent Tīrtha of Śantanu. By taking the holy bath therein and performing the rite of Tarpaṇa in accordance with injunctions the gods and others, the devotee attains salvation.

40. It was here that Gaṅgā who had come in a human form was attained by Śantanu. After giving birth to the Vasus year by year, it was here that she threw them in and finally cast off her body.

41-42A. Where the body was cast off, medicinal trees grew up. The man who takes bath there and eats parts of the trees never sees any misfortune by the grace of goddess Gaṅgā.

42B. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to the Tīrtha Bhīmasthala.[1] He who takes a holy bath there is a meritorious man.

43. After enjoying pleasures here, the devotee shall attain heavenly status after death.

O gentle lady, these holy centres have been narrated to you very briefly.

44-45A. O blessed lady, there are thousands of other Tīrthas there. He who takes a holy dip in this sacred holy centre when Jupiter is in Aquaries and the sun is in Aries, shall be a master of speech and shall be like the Sun god himself in refulgence.

45B-46. After having completed the pilgrimage of Prayāga and other holy centres full of sacred waters, the pilgrim should assiduously take a holy bath in the following Tīrthas Viz : Vāruṇa, Yoga, Mahāvāruṇa and Mahāmahāvāruṇa. He shall take holy bath in accordance with injunctions.

47-48. By worshipping the Brāhmaṇas devotedly, he shall attain the region of Brahmā. If he makes any charitable gift during the transit of the Sun, or on the new-moon day, or when the Vyatīpāta period of time occurs, or on the anniversary day of the beginning of Yugas, or during other sacred days, it shall have a crore times more benefit. It is the truth that has been declared by me.

1. Probably the same as Bhīma-goḍā, a holy centre on the way from Haridvāra to Rishikesh (Kalyāṇa 31. 1. P. 64).

49. He who remembers Gaṅgādvāra even when he is far away, attains good goal like the person who remembers Hari in the end.

50. That deity whom pure man worships at Haridvāra shall become delighted and fulfil his desires.

51. The place where Gaṅgā entered the Earth is itself a place of penance, it is a place of Japa and the place of Homa.

52. The man who observes restraints and after taking a holy dip, repeats the thousand epithets of the Gaṅgā three times per day, shall attain a line of progeny that gets never extinct.

53. O blessed lady, he who devoutly listens to the Purāṇa at Gaṅgādvāra with due observance of restraints, attains the unchanging region (i.e. the permanent abode of the Supreme Lord).

54. The excellent man who listens to or reads the greatness of Haridvāra with great devotion shall acquire the benefit of the holy bath there.

55-56. O gentle lady, there is no cause of fear from serpents, thieves, fires, evil planets or tyrannous kings. All the riches increase, thanks to the grace of lord Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER SIXTYSEVEN*

*The Greatness of Badarikāśrama

Mohini said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the greatness of Gaṅgādvāra has been recounted. Now narrate the greatness of Badarī that is destructive of sins.

Vasu said :

2. Listen, O gentle lady, I shall describe in detail to you the greatness of Badarī. On hearing this, a creature (the living soul) is liberated from the bondage of birth and saṁsāra.

3. The holy centre of Hari named Badarī is destructive of all sins. It bestows liberation on those men who are afraid of worldly existence and it dispels the defects of Kali Yuga.

4-5. There, lord Nārāyaṇa and the holy sage Nara who were born of Mūrti and Dharma, went to Gandhamādana mountain where there is a Badarī tree endowed with many fruits of sweet fragrance.

O blessed lady, on that spot, they have been engaged in penance ever since the beginning of Kalpa.

6. They are surrounded by Nārada and other excellent sages staying in the village of Kalāpa[1] and also by the groups of Siddhas. They stationed themselves there for the sustenance of the world.

7. There is a well known holy centre named Agnitīrtha[2] (Hot water spring). It yields all Siddhis. Even those who are defiled by great sins become purified by taking holy dip therein.

8. Just as the discoloured gold becomes pure when heated in the fire, so also the embodied soul becomes liberated from sins by plunging into the Agnitīrtha.

*The editor of the text of N. P. introduces this chapter with the remark : Henceforth the greatness of Badari is begun.

Mod. Badrinath in Garhwal, (Uttar Pradesh)

1. Purāṇas like Bh. P. X. 87.7 state that there was a village called Kalāpa near Badarikāśrama, but now there is no such village. The big plain behind Mucakunda's cave is regarded by some as the site of Kalāpa grāma (Kalyāṇa 31.1 P. 60); about other locations vide De, p. 84.

2. This is the hot-water spring near Badrīnāth temple where people take bath. It is below the local Kedāranātha shrine.

9. By taking a holy dip in the Agnitīrtha a man obtains that benefit which is obtained from thousands of Cāndrāyaṇas and crores of Kṛcchras.

10. There are five rocky slabs.[1] O daughter of Braḥmā, Agnitīrtha is situated in their midst. By its mere sight, it dispels sins.

11. That rocky slab is called Nāradī śilā where the holy sage Nārada performed a terrible penance. By its very sight, it yields liberation.

12-14A. O lady of beautiful eyes, there is the perpetual presence of Hari, there. The Nāradakuṇḍa (holy pool of Nārada) is also there. The man who takes a holy bath there becomes pure. He obtains whatever he desires, such as worldly pleasures, salvation and devotion to Hari. Whatever a man performs here with devotion such as holy bath, charitable gift, worship of Devas, Homa, Japa or other rites are imperishable.

14B-15. There is another splendid rocky slab in that holy centre. It is called Vainateyaśilā.

It was here that a very severe penance was performed y Garuḍa of noble soul, for thirty thousand years with the desire for seeing Hari.

16. O auspicious lady, the delighted lord granted him the boon and said, "O dear one, be unconquerable to the host of Daityas, and a terror unto the serpents.

17-18A. Become my vehicle. I am delighted with you. This rocky slab where the penance has been performed by you will become famous over the Earth by your name. By its mere sight it shall be the bestower of merit on men.

18B-19A. In this most important Tīrtha on Gaṅgā, with a desire to attain my love (you have performed penance). O blessed one, may it manifest itself as the granter of merits to those who take their holy dip here.

1. The five rocky-slabs are below the hot-water-spring called Agni Tīrtha. The order of slabs to-day is (1) Garuḍa or Vainateya (2) Nārada, (3) Mārkaṇḍeya, (4) Narasiṁha and (5) Vārāhī (Kalyāṇa 30. 1. p. 59). The order in the NP is as follows : (1) Nārada, (2) Vainateya or Garuḍa 3) Vārāhi, (4) Narasiṁha (5) Nara:Nārāyaṇa Śilā on the bank of the hot-spring (Vahni Kuṇḍa).

19b-20. He who takes a holy bath in the Pañcagaṅgā and performs the rites of Tarpaṇa to the Devas and others, does not return from the eternal world of Brahmā."

After granting this boon, Viṣṇu vanished then.

21-22A. At the behest of Viṣṇu, Garuḍa attained the state of being the vehicle of Viṣṇu. Thereafter, that holy centre has become destructive of sins.

22B. It is the bestower of merits on being remembered. It yields the goal of Vainateya. There is another auspicious slab of a rock. It is known as Vārāhī (Śilā).

23. It was here that the lord (in the form of a divine Boar) lifted up the Earth after striking down Hiraṇyākṣa and occupied this position in the form of a rocky slab. He is the destroyer of sins.

24. The man who goes there, plunges into the pure waters of Gaṅgā and worships that rocky slab with devotion does not attain misfortunes or hell.

25. There is another rocky slab called Narasiṁha śilā. The lord of Devas killed Hiraṇyakaśipu and rested there on the rock.

26. Later on, his anger was assuaged by the celestial sages. He was requested to stay perpetually there at Viśālā (i.e. Badarikāśrama).

27. The four-armed deity accordingly assumed the rocky form. Engaged in aquatic sports, he permanently stays in the middle of water.

28. The man who takes a holy bath there and worships the rocky slab, attains the abode of Viṣṇu from which rarely does any one return to Saṁsāra.

29. O gentle lady, know the fifth rocky slab situated on the banks of Vahnikūpa (i.e. the hot water spring thereof). It is called Naranārāyaṇa Śilā. I shall explain about it now, listen.

30. In the age called Kṛtayuga, Hari in the form of Naranārāyaṇa stayed there directly visible to all as the bestower of worldly pleasures and liberation.

31. O auspicious lady, in the age named Tretāyuga, he is seen by the sages, Devas and Yogins and not by others. He himself adopts the Yogic posture and remains as the sustainer of worlds.

32. When Dvāpara Age arrives he is seen by the path of knowledge and not by any other means. In the Tiṣya (i.e. Kali age) he becomes (completely) invisible.

33. Therefore, Brahmā and other Devas, sages and ascetics, eulogised lord Hari with various kinds of praise and propitiated him.

34. Thereupon, an incorporeal voice (from heaven) addressed Brahmā and others : "I shall not be visible in the Kali age that is devoid of virtue and piety.

35. O leading Devas, if you have faith in viewing the Maṇḍapa (ceremonial hall) take up my image of rock situated in the Nârada Kuṇḍa".

36-37. On hearing those words, Brahmā and others became delighted at heart. They took out that divine rock image situated in the Nāradakuṇḍa and installed it. After worshipping it, they went to their respective abodes. It is in the month of Vaiśākha that Devas go back to their abodes.

38-39. They come back again in the month of Kārttika and perform the rite of worship. At the beginning of Vaiśākha, due to the melting away of snow, the meritorious human beings devoid of sinful actions are able to see the deity. The deity is to be worshipped for six months by Devas and for six months by human beings.

40-41A. It is under these conditions that the image manifested itself from that time onwards. He who devoutly worships the image of Viṣṇu and partakes of Naivedya, certainly attains liberation.

41B-42. These five holy rocky slabs are thus situated in Viśālā (Badarikā). The Naivedya offered to Hari in these places is inaccessible even to Devas. What then to the human beings? If it is partaken of, it is a means to salvation.

43. Even if the boiled rice offered as Naivedya to Viṣṇu at Badarī is partaken of, it shall purify sins in the body like the blazing fire that purifies the dross in gold.

44. Thus this is the holy spot of Kapālamocana[1] which dispels sins. In its midst too, there are five rocky slabs that dispel sins.

45. O Mohinī, listen to another great holy pool here itself. By taking a holy dip here with devotion, the man becomes master of the Vedas.

46. The Asura named Hayaśiras, a terror to Devas and others, snatched away Vedas coming out of the mouth of god Brahmā.

47. Thereupon, prayed to by Brahmā, Viṣṇu manifested himself in the form of a divine Fish. The lord killed the demon and handed over the Vedas to Brahmā.

48. That Tīrtha is highly meritorious. It illuminates all lores. O blessed lady, it is called Taimiṅgila Tīrtha. By its mere vision it is destructive of sins.

49-50. Once again, the unchanging lord Viṣṇu in the form of the horse-necked being, killed the arrogant Asuras, Madhu and Kaiṭabha who stole the Vedas from god Brahmā. He handed the Vedas back to Brahmā. O daughter of Brahmā that Tīrtha dispels sins by a mere holy dip.

51. In both Tīrthas, Matsya (i.e. Taimiṅgalla)[2] as well as Hayagrīva, the Vedas exist in the liquid form of water perpetually. O gentle lady, that water is destructive of sins.

52. O gentle lady, there is a famous holy centre Indrapāda in the south-east corner. By taking a holy dip therein, a man shall attain the region of Indra (or Indra-hood).

53. There is another charming Tīrtha there named Mānasodbhedaka[3] (resolver of the mind.) It splits the knots in the hearts; it dispels all doubts.

1. It is at a distance of about one and a half furlong from the Agni-Tīrtha on the bank of the Alakanandā. When god Śiva cut off the fifth head of god Brahmā, it stuck to his hand, Śiva performed pilgrimage to all places but was rid of that sticking head at this Tīrtha. Hence it is called Brahma-Kapāla. Pilgrims offer Piṇḍa here to their ancestors.

2. According to Kalyāṇa 31. 1 P. 61, it is high up on the mountain behind the Badrīnātha temple at a higher altitude than Urvaśī-Kuṇḍa.

3. At Keśava-Prayāga, near the stone bridge or Bhīmaśilā on the Alakanandā, two cascades form this Tīrtha. Its water is famous in Garhwal for its health-restorative efficacy.

(Kalyāṇa 31. 1. P. 60)

54-55. It despels all sins also. Hence, it is called Mānasodbhedaka.

O fair-faced lady, there is another Tīrtha there called Kāmākāma. It bestows the desired objects on those who have a desire for it and confers salvation on those who have no desires.

O gentle lady, to the west of it is the Tīrtha called Vasudhārā.[1]

56-57. By taking a holy bath therein with devotion, a man obtains the desired benefit (Defective Text). The meritorious persons see the deity, stationed in the middle of waters On seeing it, the creature does not have the compulsion to stay in the womb (i.e. is not reborn).

Thereafter, in the south-western direction five currents flow down.

58. Their names are Prabhāsa, Puṣkara, Gayā, Naimiśāraṇya and Kurukṣetra. By taking a holy dip in every one of them separately, the man obtains the benefit of respective Tīrtha.

59-60A. There is another pure Tīrtha, the second name of which is Somakuṇḍa, By performing severe penance here, Soma (the moon god) became the over-lord of planets and luminaries that move about in the firmament). O gentle lady, by taking a holy bath, a man becomes free from defects and sins.

60B-61a. There is another Tīrtha there called Dvādaśāditya, (the sacred pool of the twelve sun-gods). It is excessively destructive of sins. By taking a holy dip in it, a man becomes comparable to the sun by means of his refulgence.

61B-62A. There is another Tīrtha there called Catuḥsrotas . A man who plunges into it attains whatever he wishes from among the Puruṣārthas viz. virtue, wealth love and liberation.

1. This is a beautiful waterfall at a distance of five miles from Badarīnātha shrine.

62B-63. There is another charming Tīrtha there named Saptapada. By the very sight of this Tīrtha, even great sins definitely perish. O chaste lady, what then if he takes a holy bath therein ?

64. In the sacred pools called Trilokakuṇḍas, Brahmā. Viṣṇu and Maheśvara are stationed. By dying therein the man attains the region called Satya-loka.

65-66A. O auspicious lady, there is another Tīrtha in the residence of Naranārāyaṇa. Its name is Urvaśīkuṇḍa.[1] One who takes bath here becomes endowed with handsome features. He shall be a great favourite of Nārāyaṇa. He will captivate the universe.

66B. Then to the south of it there is the great Tīrtha called Astra.

67-68. It was here that Nara and Nārāyaṇa deposited their weapons and engaged themselves in the penance. (It is true) O highly blessed lady, since the divine weapons (such as) the conch, discus etc are seen in embodied form by meritorious persons. A man who takes a holy bath there with devotion shall never be afraid of an enemy.

69. There is the holy centre called Merutīrtha there. By visiting the bowbearing deity after the holy dip, O auspicious lady, the devotee realises all desires.

70-71A. There is another Tīrtha named after the guardians of quarters. It is an excellent holy centre. It is here that the guardians of quarters performed penance. O gentle lady, the man who performs ablution into the Tīrtha attains the benefit of plunging into all Tīrthas.

71B-72A. Since it was by striking with his staff that the Tīrtha was created by Hari, it has come to be called Daṇḍapuṣkariṇī. It yields happiness to the protectors of the worlds (i.e. the guardians of quarters.)

72B-74A. That Tīrtha where the Bhāgīrathī is joined by Alakanandā is the most excellent of all holy spots in the sacred

1. Just behind the Badarīnātha shrine, high up on the hill there is the Urvaśi Kuṇḍa. Here Nārāyaṇa is said to have created Urvaśi from his lap and discomfited Indra's band of tempters.

Badarikāśrama. By takihg a holy bath and devoutly performing the Tarpaṇa rites to the Pitṛs and Devas and by worshipping them with devotion, the devotee attains the abod of Viṣṇu. He is bowed to by all Devas.

74B-75. O splendid-faced lady, there is Dharmakṣetra(the sacred place called Dharma) to the south of the confluence. I consider that holy centre as the most sacred. It is the most excellent of all Tīrthas. O gentle lady, by taking a holy bath there, the man becomes one who has reached the vicinity of that which should be accomplished (viz Mokṣa).

76. The Tīrtha called Urvaśīsaṅgama, is the dispeller of all sins of man. There is another holy centre called Karmoddhāra. It is the sole means to attain Hari's devotion.

77. The Tīrtha called Brahmāvarta is the sole cause of attaining the world of Brahmā. These Tīrthas based on the Gaṅgā have been recounted to you.

78-79A. Even god Brahmā is not competent to describe entirely the Tīrthas stationed there. He who listens to this and he who narrates this with concentration shall be liberated from all sins. He shall attain the world of Viṣṇu.

79B-80A. The man who stays here for a month and observes holy rites with devotion, will visualize lord Hari, Nara and Nārāyaṇa directly.

80B. Premature death, mental anguish, physical ailments and fear of serpents shall not befall the abode, O gentle lady, where the greatness of Badarikāśrama has been written and preserved. Thanks to Hari's favour, happiness always abides there. The riches flourish, thanks to the favour of Viṣṇu.

CHAPTER SIXTYEIGHT

*The Legend of Kāmodā

Mohini said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, recount to me the greatness of Kāmodā.[1] On hearing it directly from your mouth, I shall feel contented and delighted.

Vasu said :

2. O gentle lady, listen, I shall narrate to you the auspicious details of Kāmodā. O hearing it, one is released from all sins. There is no doubt about it.

3. O gentle lady, the city Kāmodā is situated on the banks of Gaṅgā. It is here that Kāmodā, the beloved of Hari, resides along with Devas.

4. O gentle lady, it was when the milk-ocean was churned that Kāmodā was born among the four jewels of Virgins.

5. The virgin Raṃā was the first and the second was Vāruṇī. The girl Kāmodā was the third; the fourth was Varā.

*The printed Text of the N. P. has this following introductory remark.

Thus the greatness of Badarikāśrama has been recounted. Henceforth, the greatness of Kāmodā is being recounted.

1. Kāmodā is the name of a beautiful virgin churned out of the Milk-ocean, who married Viṣṇu. She stays in a 'city' on an unscalable mountain covered with snow. The city is also called Kāmodā and is said to be on the bank of Gaṅgā at a distance of ten Yojanas upstream of Gaṅgā from Gaṅgādvāra. When she laughs with delight, her tears of joy are transformed into fragrant yellow lotuses called Kāmoda. It is generally on the 12th day of Caitra when she smiles at the vernal beauty.

These flowers can be collected from the current of Gaṅgā. If god Śiva is worshipped with these, the worshipper gets his desirable objects. If she weeps with sorrow, the tears turn out to be lotuses of bad odour. The Pd. P. Chs. 119-121 tell us the story how demon Vihuṇḍa worshipped god Śiva with such flowers and was killed by Pārvatī. From all accounts, Kāmodā seems to be a mythological town, though the NP advises pilgrims to visit and stay in the city.

There is also a Tīrtha there called Kāmodā. That becomes accessible after the melting away of snow.

6. Among them three girls were obtained by the powerful Viṣṇu. O chaste lady, Vāruṇī was taken away by the Asuras at the behest of Lord Viṣṇu.

7. Ever since that time, Lakṣmī has established herself on the chest of Viṣṇu. O auspicious lady, she became the wife of Viṣṇu. She was devoid of any co-wife.

8. Realising the task to be achieved in the future, Devas, at the behest of Viṣṇu, worship goddess Kāmodā in the city called Kāmodā.

9. She stays there perpetually with the desire for the union with Viṣṇu. She has attained the state of his wife in imagination. She is engaged in meditation on Viṣṇu.

10. Lord Visṇu, the great omnipresent deity, approachable through sincerity and devotion by her, stays there perpetually near her.

11. O gentle lady, that deity, the Ātman of the universe, is imperceptible to the Devas, Asuras, sages and human beings. He can be visualised by means of meditation.

12-15. Devas and sages observe the lord only through meditation. O Mohinī, when Kāmodā, the highly blessed lady laughs overwhelmed with delight, tears of delight fall down into Gaṅgā. O goddess of Devas, these tears become lotuses named Kāmodā. They are yellow, fragrant and extremely pleasant. He who comes to acquire them, thanks to his good luck, and worships Śiva with them, shall attain cherished desires. This is the behest of Parameśvara (The Supreme Lord Śiva).

16. Sometimes tears of misery too fall. From those tears lotuses of bad odour crop up.

17. Deluded by the previous sins, if any one worships lord Śaṅkara, the benefactor of the worlds, with those lotus flowers of bad odour he will be oppressed by all miseries.

18-21. Kāmodā is situated ten Yojanas above Gaṅgādvâra. The devotee should perform the Japa of twelve syllabled Mantra for the whole of a year. O daughter of Brahmā, at the end of the year on the twefIh day in the month of Caitra, she will see the splendour of the spring and thanks to her delight, will laugh continuously; then the devotee may get those lotuses and by no means at any other time. The man who is devoted to Viṣṇu and who takes a holy bath there after contemplating on the city of Kāmodā, shall be a favourite of Viṣṇu. There is no doubt in this that he will be a favourite with the Devas and Pitṛs.

22. O splendid-faced lady, he who stays there for twelve years engaged in the repetition of Japa shall obtain the vision of Kāmodā herself.

23. O lady, by means of holy bath alone, the pure man attains whatever worldly pleasure he may seek.

24. O gentle lady, this is an impassable rugged place. When the snow is melted away on the mountain, this greatest Tirtha may be accessible, thanks to good luck.

25. Thus the auspicious account of Kāmodā has been wholly recounted. The man who listens to this with devotion is liberated from sins.

CHAPTER SIXTYNINE

The Greatness af Kāmākṣā

Mohini said :

1. The narrative of Kāmodaka that is destructive of sins and conducive to the attainment of merit has been heard by me. O Brāhmaṇa, now I wish to hear the benefit derived from devotion of Kāmākṣā.[1]

1. It is the most important Devī pīṭha. It is at a distance of about two miles from Gauhati on a beautiful hill called Nilācala over-hanging the Brahmaputra. The author of the NP. is so overawed with the wide expanse of the Brahmaputra that he thinks it to be a sea and the goddess (Tripura-bhairavī) is described as standing near the sea (sāgarānūpa-taṭa-gā) in V. 2 below, Devī Bhāgavata VII. 38.15 states that it is the place where the private part of Tripura-bhairavī fell. According to mythological legend, when Śiva became too much grieved at the death of his first wife Satī, he carried her body on his shoulder. So to bring him to normalcy, Viṣṇu cut

Vasu said

2. The greatest goddess Kāmākṣā is stationed in the eastern quarter. She is present on the shores of the marshy place near the Sea. She is the bestower of Siddhi on men in the Kali age.

3. The devotee who goes there and observing restriction in the deity, worships Kāmākṣā and stays a night there seating himself steadfastly, shall then visualize her, O gentle lady.

4. That goddess appears before men in a terrible form. He who is not moved with fear on seeing her, shall attain the desired Siddhi.

5. If on seeing the goddess of Devas, Kāmākṣā of terrific features, the devotee sways from his seats instantaneouly, he shall then certainly become distracted in mind and behaviour.

6. O fair-faced lady, Siddhanātha[1], the son of Pārvatī stays there (engaged) in a severe penance. He is never seen by the people.

---

to pieces Satī's body with his discus Sudarśana and as Śiva went on wandering with Sati's body, one after another, her limbs went on falling on the ground. Her private parts fell on the Nīlācala and the Devī Bhāgavata calls it the jewel among sacred places where Mahāmāyā ever abides'.

Kāmākṣā is a centre of Tantrism. One wonders why the NP. which devotes a whole section to tantra, mantra etc. finishes the glory of Kāmākṣā within four (2-5) verses, when he waxes so eloquent on the Tantric worship of Rādhā (and of other deities like Rāma, Narasiṁha, Hanumān and even king Kārttavīrya).

1. This nātha is Matsyendra-nātha, the so-called founder of the Nātha Sampradāya. It is understandable that Jñāneśvara, a 13th Cent. writer from the South, being far away from Assam and writing some four centuries after Matsyendra, should look upon Matsyendra as the human founder of Nātha-Pantha. But Tibetan records show that it was sarahapā, the seventh ancestor of Matsyendra, who should be credited if at all with being the founder. Although I have discussed this problem in Marathi under the title "The spiritual lineage of jñāneśvara" in the Nava-bhārata (a monthly), I would recommend Rahul Sankrityayana's (Hindi) Introduction to Sarahapāda's Dohā Koṣa (Bihāra Rāṣṭrabhāṣā Pariṣad, Patna 1957).

It is surprising why the last redactor of NP who comes from east-India (Bengal-Orissa region) should be so ignorant about Matsyendra who was not much removed in time and space from him.

7. During the three Yugas : Kṛta, Tretā and Dvāpara he was directly perceived by every one. In the Kali age, as long as the first quarter of it does not pass off, he shall stay invisible.

8-9. When a quarter of the Kali age has passed off and the surface of the earth has become terrible, he becomes visible and controls the people. O blessed lady, by his powers like Mohana (fascination) Uccāṭana (eradication) etc., he gains control over the people most of whom are Mlecchas[1] (alien out-castes). He will spend the remaininig three quarters of the Kali age by keeping them submissive.

10-11. The devotee should go to Siddhanātha and meditate on him with devotional feelings, for a whole year. Every day he must worship Kāmākṣā. He shall then gain the vision of Siddhanātha in the dream. At the end of the vision he shall have great concentration. He shall achieve Siddhi indicated by it and be a Siddha on the Earth.

12. O auspicious lady, he will be wandering, fulfilling the desires of all the worlds. By means of the boon, he will attract all the articles in the three worlds.

13. He is Matsyanātha (Matsyendra of the Nātha cult) stationed there. O gentle lady, he has mastered the perfect knowledge. He performed a terrible penance, distributing among the people whatever they desired. But he never becomes visible.

14. Formerly, he had roamed all over the worlds without his movement being impeded, for the period of many Yugas. Today the noble-minded personage is completely engaged in penance. O auspicious lady, he is not oppressed by the velocity of Kāla (the force of the stream of time).

15. O highly blessed lady, in the previous birth he had been born as the son of a certain Brāhmaṇa. He was born during the astrologically evil period of a 'Gaṇḍānta' (the tenth astrological Yoga). Hence the moment he was born in the continent named Puṣkara, he was cast into the ocean by his father.

1. The inclusion of Mlecchas in the Nātha cult is implied here, and the initiation of Matsyendra who was abandoned by his father and had become 'casteless', shows the breadth of outlook of the Nātha cult in its early stage.

16. As soon as he was thrown into the sea, thanks to a lucky coincidence, a certain fish swallowed the boy. For many Yugas, he remained there without ageing or dying due to the flux of time.

17. Thereafter, O gentle lady, once urged by his wife, the daughter of the mountain, Maheśvara, the incomprehensible deity accompanied her to the mountain Lokāloka for the instruction in the esoteric principles.

18-19a. On its gentle and beautiful peak illuminated by jewels, the lord stood for half a moment with his mind engrossed in Hari. He enlightened spiritually goddess Umā by means of his Śakti. He drove away the Sattvas (animals, living beings) with three Tālas (clapping of hands).

19b-20. He then told her the Tattva (the real principle) in the form of the meaning of the twelve-syllabled Mantra which had been an esoteric secret. The daughter of the mountain bowed down to Maheśa, the destroyer of Māra. She understood the principle a little and sat there firmly. At that time the fish in the great ocean immediately jumped on to the peak.[1] The Brāhmaṇa boy who was within its belly became a Tattvasiddha (a person who realised the principle) and freed of all bondages.

21. O splendid-faced lady, coming out of the belly of the fish, he made obeisance in front of Śiva and Umā. Though he was aware of the truth Maheśvara asked him the cause of being within the womb of the fish.

22-23. In front of them, he recounted everything in the manner it had happened. On hearing what had happened to him, Umā was pleased. Getting the permission of Maheśa, she made him her son. O fair-limbed lady, placing him on her lap she kissed his face and said :- "O, is this not my Son? He is Matsyanātha, (lord of fish). He has understood the principle. Hence he is Siddhanātha for all.

1. The absurdity of the story—jumping of a fish from the great ocean to the peak of the Lokāloka mountain-top where Śiva was secretly instructing Pārvati in an esoteric lore—is obvious. Jñāneśvara states that it was on a small island in the ocean where Śiva imparted that spiritual knowledge to Pārvati and which was heard by Matsyendra from his fish-mother's belly.

24-25. Let him go over the worlds according to his will. May he accord happiness unto us now."

Ever since that time this son of Ambikā roamed about all the worlds as he pleased. He attained the Siddhapīṭha.[1] He has occupied that seat as one engaged in penance. By mentally meditating on Siddhanātha, a man shall be one who has realised all his desires.

26-27A. He will acquire learning. He will be drawing the multitudes of scholars in the current of his words (eloquent speech). He who hears this story which is the most sacred in the universe. (even though) it might have entered his ears (casually), realises whatever he desires on the Earth and goes to the heaven. His feet are worshipped by the Devas.

27B-C. Thus O lady of beautiful eyes, I have told you about the greatness of Kāmākṣā alongwith the story of Siddhanātha. It is destructive of sins at the outset. O gentle lady, what else shall I recount to you ?

CHAPTER SEVENTY

The Greatness of Prabhāsa

Mohini said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, recount to me the greatness of Prabhāsa[2] On hearing it I shall be delighted in my mind. May I be blessed thanks to your grace.

1. Kāmākhyā is both Śaktipiṭha and a Siddha-Pīṭha.

2. Prabhāsa, alternately called Somanāthapaṭṭaṇa, Devapaṭṭaṇa, Verāvala, is the holy place of Lord Somanātha, the famous Jyotirliṅga in Saurāṣṭra. It is here that Lord Kṛṣṇa gave up his physical body under a Pippala tree. The Mbh. Vana 82.58. 58.20 etc. mention the great sanctity of Prabhāsa while the Śiva Purāṇa, Koṭi-rudra 15. 56-58 waxes eloquent about the mere sight of Somanātha. The NP., however, is interested in the directory of various Tīrthas in and about Prabhāsa and not so much in

Vasu said :

2. O gentle lady, listen. I shall narrate to you the (glory of the holy centre named Prabhāsa. It yields great merit. It is a Tīrtha that dispels all sins of men. It yields worldly pleasures and salvation.

3-4. O daughter of Brahmā, there are innumerable Tīrthas therein. Someśa,[1] the lord of the universe, the lord of the daughter of the mountain, is present there. By taking a holy bath in the Prabhāsa Tīrtha, and by worshipping Somanātha, a man obtains liberation. What I have stated to you is the truth.

5. The zone of Prabhāsa extends to twelve Yojanas. In its centre is the Pīṭhikā (the pedestal). It is said to extend to five Yojanas.

6. In its middle is the Tīrtha extending to a Gocarma (about a hundred hands. But it excels even mount Kailāsa. Another meritorious and splendid Tīrtha is Arkasthala (the holy spot of the sun).

7-8a. There are thousands of Liṅgas such as Siddheśvara etc. By performing the holy bath there, and the Tarpaṇa rite for Pitṛs and Devas with devotion, and by worshipping the Liṅgas, the devotee attains the same worlds as that of Rudra.

8b-9a. Another Tīrtha, the Agnitīrtha,[2] is situated on the shore of the sea. O gentle lady, by taking the holy dip there, the man shall attain the world of Vahni.

Somanātha. Inscriptional evidence e.g. the Nasik inscription of Uṣavadāta (Bombay, G. XVI p. 669) testifies to the holiness of Prabhāsa. Most of the sub-tīrthas mentioned in this chapter are described in detail in the SkP. Prabhāsa Khaṇḍa.

1. This is the famous Jyotir-liṅga whose shrine faced destruction and re-construction at least five times during the last thousand years. The last re-construction of the shrine took place after Indian independence, probably due to the interest taken by Sardar Patel, the then Home Minister of India.

2. It is strange but watery places are called by the name Agni-tīrtha (The sacred 'pool' of the Fire god). Here the sea near the town of Prabhāsa is called Agni Tīrtha.

9b-10a. By worshipping lord Kapardīśa (Śiva) after observing fast, the devotee attains Śiva's world after enjoying the desired worldly pleasures.

10b-11a. The devotee shall go to Kedāreśa and worship him in accordance with the injunctions. Thereby, he attains heavenly goal. He goes there by means of an aerial chariot. He is worshipped by Devas.

11b-13. The three deities mentioned before together with the following make fourteen. viz : Bhīmeśa, Bhairveśa, Caṇḍīśa, Bhāskareśvara, Aṅgāreśa, Gurvīśa, Someśa, Bhṛgujeśvara, Śanīśvara, Rāhvīśvara and Śikhīśvara. These deities must be visited in order. By worshipping with devotion these deities severally, the devotee who knows rules of religious procedure attains the same world as Śiva. He becomes competent to chastise as well as to bless others.

14. O daughter of Brahmā, by worshipping five other Liṅgas, Siddheśvara etc., the man attains Siddhi of this world as well as of the other world.

15. By worshipping the fair lady Ajāpālā, Maṅgalā and Laliteśvarī, the man becomes free from sins.

16. By worshipping Lakṣmīśvara, Bāḍaveśa, Arghyeśa and Kāmakeśvara with devotion, a man shall attain lordship of the worlds.

17. By worshipping Gaurīśa, Varuṇeśvara and Uṣeśvara after reaching the penance grove of Gaurī, the man shall attain heavenly goal.

18-19a. By duly worshipping Gaṇeśa, Kumāreśa, Svākakeśa, Kuleśvara, Uttaṅkeśa, Vahnīśa, Gautama and Daityasūdana (the slayer of the Daityas), the man shall never go to hell (or troubles).

19b-20a. The devotee should thereafter go to Cakra Tīrtha, take a holy bath in accordance with the injunctions and worship goddess Gaurī; thereby the man shall obtain the desired benefits.

20b-21a. O fair-faced lady, after reaching the Tīrtha called 'Sannihatyā', the devotee shall take a holy dip and perform the rite of Tarpaṇa to Devas and others. Thereby, he shall attain the benefit accruing from that Sannihatyā Tīrtha.

21b-22a. He who worships the eleven Liṅgas, Bhūteśa and others, attains excellent pleasures and in the end shall attain the region of Rudra.

22b-23a. O gentle lady, by worshipping lord Ādinārāyaṇa, the excellent man shall attain salvation. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

23b-24a. He who goes near Cakradhara and worships him in accordance with the injunctions shall conquer his enemies and attain worldly pleasures high and low.

24b-25a. The devotee who goes to the Tīrtha Sāmbāditya and takes a holy bath with due observances of restraints shall be free from ailments. The man shall be endowed with wealth and food-grains on the earth.

25b-26a. Then the man should go to the goddess Kaṇṭakaśodhinī who slew Mahisa. By worshipping her, the man becomes fearless.

26b-27a. By worshipping Kapālīśa and Koṭīśa, the excellent man shall become extremely fortunate. Thus the middle pilgrimage shall be completed.

27b-28a. O queen of men, by going to the Tīrtha Bālabrahmā thereafter, the man becomes a master of worldly pleasures and salvation. He will be honoured and worshipped by all Devas.

28b-29a. By worshipping Narakeśa, Saṁvarteśa, Nidhīśvara, one shall be having worldly pleasures and liberation.

29b. By resorting to Gaṅgāgaṇapati and worshipping him in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee derives desired benefits in this world as well as in the other world.

30-31a. Thereafter, the man should go to the river Jāmbavatī. By taking the holy dip with devotion and concentration and by worshipping the deity, the man shall have his objects accomplished.

31b-32a. Thereafter, he shall take a holy dip in the well Pāṇḍukūpa and worship Pāṇḍaveśvara. That man goes to heaven and sports about in Nandana and other parks.

32b-33a. By worshipping the three Liṅgas, Śatamedha, Lakṣamedha and Koṭimedha in the proper order, the devotee rejoices in the heaven like a Deva.

33b-34a. By visiting Durvāsādityaka and by worshipping him in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee shall undoubtedly attain the benefit of horse-sacrifice.

34b-35a. By resorting to Yādavasthalī[1] and by worshipping Varṣeśa, the man attains his coveted Siddhi. He is greeted and honoured by the king of Devas.

35b-36. After taking a holy dip in the confluence of the Hiraṇyā, the devotee shall make a gift of a golden chariot to a Brāhmaṇa looking upon him as Śiva. He who does so with devotion shall obtain everlasting worlds. By worshipping Nagarārka thereafter, this devotee shall attain the world of the sun.

37. By visiting and duly worshipping Bala, Kṛṣṇa and Subhadrā near Nagarāditya, one shall attain the sāyujya (identity) with Kṛṣṇa.

38. Thereafter, the devotee shall go to Kumārikā Tīrtha and worship the deity in accordance with the injunctions. There is no doubt about this that he attains cherished desires and conquers even Indra.

39a. By worshipping Kṣetrapāla thereafter, he shall attain all desired benefits.

39b-40a. By worshipping Brahmeśvara installed on the banks of Sarasvatī[2] the devotee shall be freed from all sins. He is honoured in the world of Brahmā.

40b-41a. He should then go to the river Piṅgalā and take a holy dip there. By performing Śrāddha, the man is not born here again. By worshipping Saṅgameśa, the man wards off misfortune or hell.

1. This is traditionally regarded as the site of the last mutually-annihilating fight among Yādavas. It is on the bank of the Hiraṇyā river (Kalyāṇa 31. I. P. 419).

2. This is different from the Vedic Sarasvati of Kurukṣetra. This is also called Prabhāsa Sarasvati, Pratyak (west-ward flowing) Sarasvatī. Near Prabhāsa, the small rivers, the Kapilā, Sarasvatī and Hiraṇyā join each other near the sea and fall into. It is also called 'Triveṇī' confluence, though actually the Kapilā joins the Sarasvatī which flows into the Hiraṇyā which ultimately falls into the sea.

41b-42. By worshipping Śaṅkarāditya, and Ghaṇṭeśa, the great lord, a man shall attain all cherished desires. There is no doubt about this.

43. The devotee should then go to the Ṛṣi Tīrtha and take a holy bath with full control of the mind. By worshipping the sages there, he shall attain the benefits of all the Tīrthas.

44. By worshipping Nandāditya thereafter, he is liberated from all ailments. By resorting to Tritakūpa and by taking the holy dip therein, he goes to the heaven.

45. O Mohinī, by taking a holy dip in 'Śaśopāna' the man sees Devas and attains all desired benefits. Truth : It is the truth that has been stated by me.

46-47. By visiting Parṇāditya, the man becomes free from ailments and enjoys worldly pleasures. By resorting to Nyaṅkumatī, by taking the holy dip there in accordance with the injunctions and by worshipping Siddheśvara, the devotee shall attain Aṇimā (minuteness) and other Siddhis. By visiting Varāhasvāmin, one is liberated from the ocean of mundane existence.

48. By worshipping Chāyāliṅga one is liberated from all sins. By visiting Gulpha and worshipping him one shall attain the benefit of observance of the Cāndrāyaṇa vow.

49. O chaste lady, by worshipping goddess Kanakanandā, the devotee attains all cherished desires. On death he attains heavenly goal.

50-51a. By worshipping Kuntīśvara, one is liberated from all sins. The man who takes a plunge in the Gaṅgā and worships Gaṅgeśvara is liberated from the three types of sins.

51b-52a. He who takes a holy dip in Camasodbhedaka and offers balls of rice, obtains a merit a crore of times more than at Gayā. There is no doubt about this.

52b-53. Thereafter, O daughter of Brahmā, the devotee should go to the excellent Vidurāśrama and worship Triga, the lord of the three worlds. Thereby, he shall be happy. By worshipping Maṅkaṇeśvara, the man attains good goal (i.e. heaven).

54-55. By worshipping Traipura and Trilińga, one is liberated from sins. Thereafter, the man shall resort to Ṣaṇḍa-tīrtha, take a holy dip there and make a gift of gold. Thereafter, he shall be purified of all sins. He shall attain the region of Śiva. By taking a holy dip in Sūryaprācī, the man shall be devoid of sins and enjoy worldly pleasures.

56-57. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha, Trilocana, the man attains Rudraloka. By worshipping Umānātha in the Devikā river the excellent man attains desired benefits. On death he shall attain heavenly benefit. By worshipping Bhūdvâra the devotee shall attain the cherished desire.

58-59. By making obeisance to Vālmīki in Śūlasthāna, the devotee shall become a poet. By worshipping Cyavanārka one shall be richly endowed with all desired benefits. Through the worship of Cyavaneśa, the man shall become the attendant of Śiva. By worshipping Prajāpāleśa, the devotee shall be endowed with wealth and foodgrains.

60. A man who worships Bālārka shall be endowed with learning and wealth. By taking a holy dip in Kuberasthāna the devotee shall certainly obtain a treasure-trove.

61. By resorting to the river Ṛṣitoyā, by taking holy bath there, and by giving gold to a Brāhmaṇa as gift, the man becomes pure and is liberated from sins.

62. By worshipping Śṛgāleśvara, the devotee is honoured in the Rudraloka. By worshipping Nāradāditya the devotee shall become endowed with the perfect knowledge of the three units of time.

63-64. By worshipping Nārāyaṇa the man shall attain liberation. After taking a holy dip in the waters of Taptakuṇḍa, the devotee should worship Mūlacaṇḍīśa. The man shall be absolved of all sins. He shall attain the desired object. By worshipping the fourfaced deity Vināyaka, the devotee attains the desired benefit.

65. By worshipping Kambala, the devotee is endowed with flourishing wealth and food-grains. Through the worship of Gopālasvâmin, the devotee will possess cows and wealth. He will become a poet or a wise man.

66. The worship of Bakulasvâmin is the bestower of heavenly goal unto the man. By worshipping the goddess of Maruts, one shall attain the desired benefits.

67. Through the worship of Kṣemāditya, the man shall attain welfare and truthfully partake of all relished objects. By worshipping Vighnarāja Unnata, the devotee is not impeded by obstacles.

68. The two deities Jalasvāmin and Kālamegha, when worshipped, bestow all Siddhis. When the goddess Rukmiṇī is worshipped, she bestows the desired objects on men.

69. By worshipping Durvāseśa and Piṅgeśa, the devotee is liberated from sins. By taking the holy dip in the confluence of Bhadrā, the man sees auspicious things.

70. By taking the holy dip in Śaṅkhāvarta, the man shall become the master of all Siddhis. By taking the holy bath in the Mokṣa Tīrtha, the man shall be liberated from the ocean of worldly existence.

71. Merely by means of ablution in the Goṣpada (the pit made by the hoofs of cows), one shall attain all happiness. After going to the abode of Nārāyaṇa, a man does not grieve again.

72. Through the worship of Jaleśvara, a man shall realise all desired Siddhis. One who takes a holy dip in the well Huṁkārakūpa shall never attain a residence in the womb thereafter.

73. By worshipping Caṇḍīśa one shall attain the benefit of all Tīrthas. By worshipping Vighneśa stationed in Āśāpura, one shall never be harassed by obstacles.

74. A man taking the holy plunge in the Kalākuṇḍa shall undoubtedly attain salvation. By worshipping Kapileśa one shall attain a herd of Kapilās (tawny-coloured cows).

75. By worshipping Jaradgaveśvara the devotee is never overwhelmed by old age. The worshipper of Naleśvara is an enjoyer of pleasures. The worshipper of Karkoṭeśa is a wealthy man.

76. Through the worship of Hāṭakeśvara all the desires are fulfilled. The worshipper of Nāradeśa shall obtain devotion to Viṣṇu and Śaṅkara.

77. By worshipping goddess Mantravibhūṣaṇā, the devotee becomes one who deserves heaven. By worshipping Gaṇapati and Durgakūṭā, one shall be ever happy.

78. A person who worships Kauraveśvarī shall become one endowed with wealth and food-grains. By worshipping Suparṇeśā and Bhairavī, one shall be blessed with happiness.

79. By taking a holy dip in Bhāla Tirtha.[1] the man is absolved of all sins. By taking a holy bath in Kardamāla, one is relieved of sins.

80. By visiting Guptasomeśvara (the hidden Someśvara) one ceases to grieve further. By visiting Bahusvarṇeśvara one shall attain heavenly goal.

81. The man who worships Śṛṇgeśvara is not attacked by miseries. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha Nārāyaṇa, the man obtains liberation.

82. By worshipping Mārkaṇḍeśvara, the man becomes longlived. By taking the holy dip in the Koṭihrada and by worshipping Koṭīśvara one becomes happy.

83. By performing ablution in Siddhasthāna and by worshipping numerous Liṅgas thereof, the man shall become a Siddha on the earth.

84-85a. By visiting Dāmodaragṛha one attains excellent happiness. O auspicious lady, the holy centre Vastrāpatha is situated in the navel region of Prabhāsa. By worshipping god Bhava (Śiva) there, one shall directly become equal to Śiva.

85b-86. The Svarṇarekhā (the line of gold) is in Dāmodara. Brahmakuṇḍa (holy pool of Brahmā) is in Raivata. Kuntīśa and the highly refulgent Bhīmeśa are in Ujjayanta (mount Girnar). And Mṛgīkuṇḍa and Sarvasva—all these are remembered to be at the holy spot called Vastrāpatha.

87. By taking the holy bath in these, in the order, by worshipping Devas assiduously and by performing Tarpaṇa rite with water, one shall attain the benefit of all Tīrthas.

88. By taking the holy dip in Dunnābila and enjoying the pleasures one shall go to the heaven. By worshipping Gaṅgeśvara thereafter, one shall attain the benefit of the holy bath in Gaṅgā.

1. This is probably the Bhālaka Tīrtha of today near Bhālupura (Kalyāṇa 31. 1 P. 419).

89-90. O gentle lady, there are many Tīrthas on the mountain Raivataka (or Girnar). By taking a holy dip in them and by worshipping with devotion, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Maheśvara, Indra and other guardians of the worlds, the man obtains worldly pleasures and liberation. O beautiful lady, these Tīrthas have been narrated to you in brief.

91. In their midst there are infinite numbers of them. It is not possible to recount them all. There are detailed stories for each and everyone of these Tīrthas.

92-93a. Hence, the merit accruing from Prabhāsa has been succinctly mentioned by me. O Mohinī, there is no other Tīrtha in all the three worlds, equal to Prabhāsa. O auspicious lady, a man who takes a holy bath there competes with heaven-dwellers.

93b-95. If the greatness of Prabhāsa is written and kept in the house, there can be no danger or fear from goblins, thieves, serpents and enemies. He who devoutly listens to this and he who narrates this with concentration shall attain the goal of the good.

CHAPTER SEVENTYONE

The Greatness of Puṣkara

Mohinī said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the greatness of Prabhāsa that is extremely conducive to the attainment of merit has been heard. Now I wish to hear the glory of Puṣkara.[1]

1. A sacred place, a lake (or rather three lakes) six miles from Ajmer (Rajasthan). It is the first among all Tīrthas (Mbh. Vana 82.35). The Mbh (ibid vv. 22 ff) waxes so eloquent in its glorification that other holy places pale into insignificance—the epic style of exaggeration. It is called Puṣkara as according to the Pd. P., the lake was created out of a lotus-flower thrown by god Brahmā to kill a demon Vajranābha. Brahmā selected this place for performance of sacrifice and it is the western Vedī

2. It is the first one among the Tīrthas. It is sacred and destructive of sins. It is the abode of the Yajña of my father. Kindly narrate it to me in detail.

Vasu said :

3. O gentle lady, I shall recount to you the meritorious greatness of Puṣkara. Listen. It yields the desired benefits to all men always. It has within it many Tīrthas.

4-6. Indra and other Devas have settled here along with Viṣṇu. The elephant-faced lord, the sun-god, Kumāra and Raivata are present here. So also goddess Śivadūtī always stays here. She brings about the happiness of the holy centre. He who stays in the forest of Puṣkara[1] in the holy month of Jyeṣṭha, without exerting himself in worldly activities shall undoubtedly attain the merit of Yoga consisting of eight subdivisions. In this world there is no other centre holier than this.

7-8. Hence, this must be resorted to by excellent men with all possible efforts. The Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras whoever stay in the holy centre, are devotees of Brahmā in all respects. They bless all living beings. They go to the world of Brahmā where Yogins go.

9. The merit that a man obtains by plunging into all Tīrthas is derived by the man who takes the holy dip but once in the Jyeṣṭha Kuṇḍa (a holy pool of that name).

10. After reaching the forest of Puṣkara where the river Eastern Sarasvatī flows, a man is endowed with intelligence, memory, mercy, judgement, retentive power and comprehension.

(altar of a sacrifice) of Brahmā. This lake is regarded as next to the Mānasa lake in the order of sacredness, the other three being Bindu (near Sitapur NW of Ahmedabad), Nārāyaṇa at the mouth of the Indus in western Runn of Kaccha, and Pampā (near Anagondi, Karnatak). The temple of god Brahmā is the special feature of this holy place.

1. It appears that there was a forest in this region as Nakula is said to have conquered the forest-dwellers of Puṣkara (Mbh. Sabhā 32.8, also vide Pd. P. V. 18.217) The Prāci Sarasvatī flowed through it.

11. Those who stand on the banks of these rivers and merely look at the waters, attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice and derive happiness.

12. There are three famous and pure peaks. There are three springs. There are three lakes also which are called Jyeṣṭha, Madhya and Kaniṣṭha.[1]

13-14. There is another very great Tīrtha called Nandā Sarasvatī, O chaste lady, to the west of that lake, about a Yojana from it. By taking the holy dip therein in accordance with the injunctions, and by making a gift of a milch cow to a Brāhmaṇa who is a Vedic Scholar, the man shall attain the abode of Brahmā.

15. There is a Koṭitīrtha here where a crore of sages had come. By taking a holy dip there and by worshipping Brāhmaṇas, the devotee is liberated from all sins.

16. By resorting to the hermitage of Agastya,[2] by taking the holy dip there and by worshipping the pitcher-born sage Agastya, the devotee becomes long-lived and enjoys pleasures. On death he attains heavenly goal.

17. The devotee should then go to the hermitage of seven sages. With the intellect not turned to anything else he should take a holy bath there and worship them with devotion. Thereby, he attains the same world as they.

18. By taking a holy dip in the hermitage of the Manus, the devotee is worshipped from all quarters. By taking a holy bath at the source of Gaṅgā, he attains the benefit of a holy dip in Gaṅgā itself.

1. Both the NP and Pd. P. mention three lakes—Jyeṣṭha, Madhya and Kaniṣṭha Puṣkara. Uṣavadāta's Nasik Inscr. No. 10 mentions his having donated gifts on their banks (Bombay Gaz. XVI p. 570). Now-a-days these three lakes are assigned to the trinity of gods (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra). Bd. P. III. 34.11 and Vm. P. 65.31 refer to the Madhyama Puṣkara, Bd. P. III. 35.39 states that Kaniṣṭha Puṣkara is 2 Yojanas from Madhyama Puṣkara and Jyeṣṭha Puṣkara was two miles to the West of Madhyama Puṣkara. The Sarasvati is said to have flowed from this lake to the sea.

2. The hermitage of Agastya and the sacred pool named after him are near Yajña Parvata. The pilgrimage to Puṣkara becomes complete after bath in the Agastya Kuṇḍa (Kalyāṇa 31. 1. 290).

19. By performing ablution in the Jyeṣṭha Puskara lake and by making a gift of a cow to a Brāhmaṇa, the devotee enjoys all pleasures here and is honoured in the world of Brahmā.

20. By taking a holy dip in the Madhyama (middle) Puṣkara lake and by giving a plot of land to a Brāhmaṇa, the devotee attains the world of Viṣṇu riding in an excellent aerial chariot.

21. A man who takes a holy dip in the Kaniṣṭha Puṣkara lake and gives gold as a gift to a Brāhmaṇa attains all desired benefits and in the end is honoured in the world of Rudra.

22. By taking a holy dip in Viṣṇupāda and by giving something as gift to a Brāhmaṇa, the devotee attains all desired benefits, thanks to the grace of Viṣṇu.

23. By taking a holy bath in the Nāgatīrtha, by worshipping the Nāgas (Serpents) and by giving gifts to Brāhmaṇas, he rejoices in heaven for the period of a Yuga.

24. By performing ablution in the Piśācatīrtha and by giving food to a Brāhmaṇa, the devotee avoids the state of becoming a Piśāca (ghost). He shall go to heaven.

25. By taking a holy dip in the Śivadūtīhrada (the deep pool of that name), by worshipping Śambhu and by feeding the Brāhmaṇas on sweet cooked rice, the devotee is honoured in the heavenly world.

26. By taking a holy bath in the Ākāśa Puṣkara[1] that yields the benefit of the Mantras and Yogas, the man attains liberation, Truth; the truth has been stated to you.

27. He who meditates on the deity abiding in Ākāśa (a holy lake of that name) after taking a holy bath in Puṣkarāraṇya uttering the Mantras Āpo hi ṣṭhā etc. attains the eternal region.

28. If the constellation pertaining to fire-god coincides with the full moon day in the month of Kārttika, that Tithi is very great. The holy dip on that day in Ākāśa Puṣkara is meritorious.

1. A sub-Tirtha of Puṣkara; it is not mentioned elsewhere though Nārada praises it highly.

29. The man who takes a holy dip in the Madhyama Puṣkara lake when the constellation pertaining to Yama coincides with the full moon day in the month of Kārttika derives the same benefit as originates from the holy lake Ākāśa puṣkara.

30. The man who takes a holy dip in the Kaniṣṭha Puṣkara lake when the constellation pertaining to the deity Prajāpati (Rohiṇi ?) coincides with the full moon day in the month of Kārttika derives the same benefit as originating from bathing in the holy lake Ākāśa Puṣkara.

31. When the sun is with the constellation Bharaṇī, the Jupiter is associated with Krttikā and the moon is with the constellation Rohiṇī and it is the Nandā tithi, a bath taken at Puṣkara gives the full benefit of ablution in the Ākāśa Puṣkara.

32. When the sun is in the constellation Viśākhā and the moon is in Kṛttikā (the constellation Pleiads), that conjunction (yoga) is called Ākāśa Puṣkara—A person taking bath (in the Puṣkara lake at this juncture) goes to heaven.

33. This is an auspicious Tīrtha belonging to Brahmā. It has descended from the firmament. Those men who take a holy dip therein shall have the worlds of great rise and prosperity.

34. O chaste lady, many Tīrthas and shrines have been created by the sages and Siddhas in the forest of Puṣkarāraṇyaka in the Sarasvatī of Pañcasrotas (five currents).

35. It should be known that the Sarasvatī river is the cause of virtue and piety in all these. The charitable gifts of gold, plots of land and girls eight years of age in those Tīrthas yield great benefit.

36. He too who gives gifts of grains, gingelly seeds etc. to an excellent Brāhmaṇa in this holy centre derives worldly pleasures in this world. That man attains excellent state in the other world.

37. He who takes a holy dip in the confluence of Gaṅgā and the Sarasvatī and worships Brāhmaṇas attains the highest goal after enjoying the desired pleasures in this world.

38. The man who takes a holy bath in the tank called Aviyoga (non-separation) and offers Piṇḍas in accordance with the injunctions, leads the Pitṛs to the heaven.

39. By taking a holy bath in the well called Saubhāgyakūpa and by performing the Tarpaṇa rite to the ancestors, the man attains good goal as well as unequalled good fortune on the earth.

40. By taking a holy dip near, by touching and by worshipping the two mountains of delimitation of the boundary, the devotee attains the desired worlds as well as the benefit of pilgrimage with all its ancillaries.

41. By resorting to the deity Śiva called Ajagandha and by worshipping the lord in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee derives the desired benefits in this as well as in the other world.

42. He who worships Sāvitrī[1] installed on the mountain to the south of the lake shall be the knower of reality (of the principles) of the Vedas.

43-45a. O Mohinī, there are separate Tīrthas pertaining to Varāha, Nṛsiṃha, Brahmā, Hari, Śiva, Sūrya (the Sun-god), Soma (Moon god), Guha, Pārvatī and Jvalana (fire-god). O blessed lady, by taking a holy bath with great concentration and by making charitable gifts to Brāhmaṇas, the devotee attains good goal.

45b-46a. It is rare that people get opportunity of taking the holy dip, or performing penance, or making charitable gifts or staying in Puṣkara.

46b-47a. Even if one is stationed a hundred Yojanas away from Puṣkara but if one remembers Puṣkara devoutly at the time of bathing, the devotee shall attain the benefit of a holy dip in Puṣkara itself.

1. According to a legend, Sāvitri, the consort of god Brahmā did not arrive at his sacrifice in time. In order not to miss the proper muhūrta, Brahmā married a cowherd's daughter Gâyatrī and commenced the sacrifice. On her arrival Sāvitrī found a rival—a co-wife—occupying her position near god Brahmā and got infuriated. She went up that hill where a temple is built for her on the top.

47b. Maṅkaṇa and others who attained Siddhi by their penance resorted to Puṣkara with delight.

48-50. In whatever place he may go, at Puṣkara, the pilgrim attains Siddhi desired by him. He too who mentions the name of Puṣkara, O daughter of Brahmā, derives the merits of taking a holy bath in Puṣkara. There is no doubt about this. He who listens to the greatness of Puṣkara with devotion shall attain the merit of holy ablution therein. He rejoices in heaven like a Deva.

CHAPTER SEVENTYTWO

The Power of Austerities of Gautama

Mohini said :

1. O holy lord, O Vasu, the greatness of Puṣkara is heard. It is destructive of sins. Now kindly recount the greatness of the hermitage of Gautama.[1]

Vasu said :

2. O gentle lady, listen. I shall recount the excellent hermitage of Gautama. By visiting this place, the man does not encounter tortures any further.

1. The hermitage of Gautama is located at various places such as Ahiari in Tirhut, Ahiroli near Buxar. But here the manifestation of god Śiva is Tryambaka. The source of Godāvari near it shows that Tryambakeśvar in Nasik district is meant here. Gautama's spiritual exploit in feeding sages throughout the famine of twelve years is described in the Devī Bhāgavata (xii. 9. 1-37) but the ruse of the ungrateful Brāhmaṇas to make Gautama guilty of a (fake) cow-slaughter given in the Devi Bh. (xii. 9. 47 ff) is edited out by the NP. The NP. attributes the installation of god Tryambaka to the austere Penance of Gautama which pleased god Śiva and the heavenly river Gaṅgā and as the Godāvarī she descended in the South due to Gautama's merit (also Vide Pd. P. Uttarakhaṇḍa 268. 52-54. But these episodes are later developments as the Mbh. does not mention them.

3. The hermitage of Gautama is meritorious. It is resorted to by multitudes of Devas and sages. It dispels all sins. It bestows peace and calmness from all kinds of harassments.

4. He who is endowed with devotional feelings and resorts to the hermitage of Gautama for a period of twelve years, attains the abode of Śiva. After going there, one ceases to suffer from any misery.

5. The place where the son of Māyādevī is engrossed in a severe penance, the Godāvarī and Gaṅgā are destructive of all sins.

6. O daughter of Brahmā, while that sage was performing penance, there was a terrible drought lasting for twelve years. It was destructive of all animals.

7. In that terrible period of famine, the sages became emaciated due to hunger. O splendid lady, they came from different lands to the hermitage of Gautama.

8. They submitted to Gautama who was performing penance, "Give us food whereby our life may cling to our bodies."

9. Thus requested by the sages, sage Gautama became sympathetic and merciful. He told them who were confident of success due to the strength of penance.

Gautama said :

10. "O sages, all of you stay in my hermitage. As long as the famine lasts, I shall respectfully give you food regularly."

11. After assuring the sages thus, thanks to his reliance on the strength of his penance, Gautama meditated on Gaṅgā that realizes all objects. With great delight in his mind, he meditated on Gaṅgā.

12-13. Immediately after being remembered, the goddess Gaṅgā came out from the bowels of the earth. On seeing Gaṅgā that flooded the whole surface of the earth, the sage sowed paddy seeds, in the morning and reaped the ripe harvest at midday. With the grains of that Śāli rice, he fed those sages.

14. Then the sages became delighted, partaking of the cooked rice they became contented. Joyously they took up their residence in the hermitage of Gautama.

15. O gentle lady, with great devotional feelings, the sage thus extended his hospitality to those sages by means of the Śāli rice-grains that ripened everyday.

16. Even as the leading sage fed those Brāhmaṇas everyday, the famine ceased at the end of twelve years.

17. When the time of plenty arrived, all those sages informed the excellent sage and went back to their respective lands once again.

18. O Mohinī, sage Gautama whose prowess was of such a nature performed penance for many years with perfect control over his sense-organs.

19. Thereafter, lord Ambikāpati (Śiva) became delighted with his penance. He appeared before the sage accompanied by Gaṇas and said— "Tell me, what is the boon you would choose to have ?"

20. On seeing Śiva, the lord of Devas, the three-eyed deity, the excellent sage fell on the ground in front of him and made obeisance.

21. Rising up immediately, he joined his palms in reverence and prayed to Him, "Grant me devotion unto your feet for ever.

22. O Śaṅkara, may I see you stationed on the mountain here near my hermitage. This is the boon I wish to have."

23. Thus requested, Śiva, the consort of Pārvatī, the bestower of desires on the devotees, granted him his presence there and made him delighted.

24. O chaste lady, the three-eyed lord stayed there in that very same form. Ever since that day, that mountain is glorified by the name Tryambaka.

25. Those who resort to Godāvarī, Gaṅgā and take their holy dip with devotion, are liberated from the ocean of worldly existence, O blessed lady.

26. By taking a holy bath in the waters of Godāvarī and by worshipping Tryambaka stationed on the mountain by means of services, the devotees shall become Maheśvara themselves.

27. The greatness of Tryambaka has been succinctly described by me. Even your father Brahmā is not competent to describe it in detail.

28. As far as Godāvarī is directly visible, there are many holy hermitages on its bank.

29. There is no doubt about this that by having a holy dip in them in accordance with injunctions and by performing a Tarpaṇa rite to the Pitṛs and deities, a man attains his cherished desires.

30. O gentle lady, visible in some places and hidden thereafter, the meritorious river Godāvarī flooded the earth.

31. Where the great goddess Godāvarī had manifested herself, thanks to the devotion of men, the Tīrtha is highly meritorious. A mere holy dip therein is destructive of sins.

32. Thereafter, the goddess of invariable holy rites reached Pañcavaṭī and manifested herself clearly. She is the bestower of good goal Mokṣa to the people.

33. O daughter of Brahmā, he who takes a holy dip in the Godāvarī at Pañcavaṭī and observes holy rites, invariably shall attain cherished desires.

34. In the Tretāyuga, Rāma came to Pañcavaṭī and stayed there along with his wife and his younger brother. By staying here he made the river holier.

35. O splendid lady, everything has thus been recounted regarding the hermitage of Gautama. It is destructive of sins of those who hear and those who read. It bestows the desired benefit.

CHAPTER SEVENTYTHREE

The Greatness of Tryambakeśvara

Mohinī said :

1. O preceptor, the sacred anecdote of Gautama recounted by you has been heard. So also the greatness of Tryambaka at Pañcavaṭī on the Godāvarī.

2-4a. Now I wish to hear the greatness of Puṇḍarīkapura[1] and also how Mahādeva performed Tāṇḍava dance. O god on the earth (Brāhmaṇa), it is more meritorious than the most meritorious holy centres.

Vasu said :

Mahādeva is under the control of the devotees. He is the bestower of boons immediately. He manifests himself before the devotees and carries out what they wish.

4b-5. On one occasion, the great sage Jaimini, the disciple of Vyāsa was going on a pilgrimage to a holy place along with Agniveśa and other disciples. He went to the city of Puṇḍarīka, comparable to the city of the king of Devas.

6-9. It is prosperous and glorious. It is adorned on all sides by the trees blossoming in all seasons. It is rendered splendid by means of trees with cool shade, by large reservoirs of clear water; with very beautiful lotus-ponds which were occupied by different kinds of birds. It is frequented by women, celestial damsels and men having the lustre of Vidyādharas. It shines like an aerial chariot with pure shining houses. On seeing the splendour of that city, the sage became highly delighted. He was inclined to take a holy bath there in that excellent lake which is rendered fragrant by means of different kinds of flowers and trees with pleasant shades.

1. Puṇḍarikapura is generally taken as Pandharpur in Sholapur district of Maharashtra. But for the last eight centuries at least, it has been a centre of Vaiṣṇavism or rather of the Waskarī cult of Viṭhalā in Maharashtra Karnatak. That god Śiva performed a Tāṇḍava dance here at the request of Jaimini is not known to the tradition of saints—the flowers of the Viṭṭhala cult in Maharashtra. The author of the NP. being an east Indian, far away from Maharashtra, has vague ideas about far off places in Maharashtra. Hence the confusion about Tryambakeśvara and Pandharpur.

10. After taking rest for a short while on the banks having thick shade, the sage took a holy dip and performed the daily routine rites including the rites of Tarpaṇa to the Devas, sages and Pitṛs.

11. He made a Liṅga out of earth (clay) and worshipped it with various services such as Pādya, Arghya and others duly. He was not agitated.

12-13. He adored Śiva by means of scents, fragrant incense, lamps, Naivedyas and different fragrant flowers. When the sage stood by after worship, the lord who was pleased with him, manifested himself to him in that very same clay, Liṅga emitting the lustre of different kinds of jewels.

14-15a. On seeing lord Śiva directly, Jaimini fell on the ground like a staff. After getting up again he stood with palms joined in reverence. He then addressed Hari, half of whose body was that of Śiva, who dispels the anguish of those who seek shelter in him.

Jaimini said :

15b-16a "O God of gods, the Lord of the universe, I am blessed. I feel that I have accomplished all objectives of life inasmuch as you who are worthy of being meditated upon by great gods like Brahmā and others have personally revealed yourself before my eyes."

16b-17a. Then the delighted lord Girīśa placed his hand on Jaimini's head and told him—"O dear son, tell me what you wish ?

17b-18. On hearing those words of Śambhu, Jaimini replied, "May I see the lord accompanied by Ambā (Pārvatī) Vighneśa (Gaṇapati) and Kumāra (Kārttikeya).

Then Śaṅkara appeared before him accompanied by his son as well as by Ambā.

19a. Then the delighted lord asked again—"Tell me, dear son, what do you wish ?"

19b-20a. On seeing the merciful nature of the lord, of the preceptor of the universe, Jaimini smilingly said—May I see you performing the Tāṇḍava dance"[1]

1. In the following verses we have a graphic description of the Tāṇḍava dance of Śiva.

20b-21a. Then, in order to fulfil that desire of his, lord Ambikāpati remembered Śivā, Pramathas who are experts in different sports.

21b-22. The moment they were remembered, all of them led by Nandin, Bhṛṅgin and others came there chattering enthusiastically. After bowing down to the lord accompanied by Vighneśa (Gaṇeśa) Kūmara (Kārttikeya) and Ambā they remained silent and stood there with palms joined in reverence. They eagerly waited for the behests of the lord of the Devas.

23. Then at the behest of Jaimini, Śiva assumed a wonderful form with ornaments and dress of variegated nature, and began to dance. He shone with the tremulous creeper-like serpents appearing as kindled fire. A slight smile flickered over his face. The crescent moon rendered the forehead splendid. His arms were lifted up like a banner.

24. He excelled the moon (in beauty and splendour) and its light by the brilliances of Bhasman (ashes) applied all over his body by him of beautiful eyes (or by his beautiful-eyed consort Pārvatī). His body had been rendered wet by the sprinkling of water of the celestial river (Gaṅgā) that flowed out of his matted hair. The crescent of the moon (on his crest was scorched by his blazing eye in the forehead but the nectar that oozed out of the moon brought back to life the hide of the king of beasts who created a roaring hissing sound.

25. When the peacock, the vehicle of Kumāra, caught hold of a serpent with its beak, it began to hiss (Phūṅkṛta). The head of the lotus-born deity (god Brahmā) was enlivened by the nectar that was oozing out, and he was reviled by it (Tumkṛta). The mouse that is the vehicle of Vighnarāja(Gaṇeśa) was afraid of the serpent and so it squealed (Cuṅkṛta). His own great bull became afraid at the roaring sound of the lion (that was resucitated), the fear was visible in its eyes and it began to bellow.

26. His lotus-like feet fell frequently on the surface of the earth that shook thereby. When he heard the excellent sound of musical instruments, he was delighted and hairs stood on their ends. His lotus-like feet were further brightened up by the the jewels on the crowns of the Devas and Asuras. Gaṇeśa, Kārttikeya and Śailaputrī (daughter of the mountain-Pārvatī) were eagerly looking at his face.

27. The devotees who were highly delighted shouted cries of victory for him. The lord shone brilliantly with the Tāṇḍava dance that followed. He brightened the quarters.

28. Then, on seeing the dance of Maheśa Jaimini was immersed in the ocean of bliss. With great concentration, he eulogised the lord with hymn consisting of verses having one quatrain from the Vedic texts in each.

The Veda-Pāda Hymn :[1]

29. O goddess residing Kāmpilya, O mother of the universe, O deity whose lotus-like feet are bowed to by Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva, obeisance to you.

30. O Gaṇapati, obeisance to you, O deity saluted by Gaṇeśa, Brahmā, Sun, Moon, Indra and Viṣṇu, O lord of Brahman or Brāhmaṇas.

31. I salute Kumāra who has gold earrings, whose forehead is stroked by the lotus-like tender hands of Umā and who wears lotus garlands.

32. Which man can adequately eulogise Śiva, imperceptible to Brahmā and others. By your vision my eulogy is born like the shower from the cloud.

1. VV.29-141 contain an eulogy of god Śiva. It is called The Veda-pāda hymn as every verse contains a Pāda from Vedic mantras. To take a few examples at random

V. 37 d. Kṣetrāṇām pataye namaḥ
The same as Vāj. Saṁhitā 16.18; Tait. Saṁ 4. 5. 2.

V. 53. d ṛcaḥ sāmāni jajñire

V. 67 d. daridraṁ nīla-lohitam
cf. Tait-Sam. 4. 5. 10. 1b

V. 82. d gāye tvā namasā girā Cf ṚV 8. 46. 17

V. 98. d. yoṣā jāram iva priyam. Cf ṚV 9. 32. 5*b*

Many more examples can be quoted but the above are enough to show that the title Veda Pāda is justifiable.

33. Obeisance to Śiva accompanied by Ambā, obeisance to Śarva, to Śambhu, Obeisance to Rudra who dances; obeisance to Sadasaspati (the lord of the assembly).

34. Obeisance to the deity who has split the world with his feet; who has split the walls of the egg (i.e. cosmic egg) with his head, who has wandered over the ends of quarters with his arms (the arms are stretched on to the quarters), obeisance to the lord of living beings.

35. Hail be to the deity having a pair of jingling anklets, to the deity wearing shining hides as clothes; obeisance to the deity having the lord of serpents as a girdle, obeisance to the lord of Paśus (Individual souls).

36. Salute to Soma; Kālakāla (Death unto the god of death); obeisance to the trident-armed Yogin. Bow to the pure one bedecked in bones; obeisance to the lord of the worlds.

37. Obeisance to the protector of the entire universe; Obeisance to the leader of all heaven-dwellers, obeisance to you the lord of mountains; obeisance to the lord of holy centres.

38. Obeisance to Śaṅkara (the bestower of bliss), salute to Maṅgala (the auspicious Deity), obeisance to the lord of riches, Hail to you the lord of food, obeisance to you the lord of Ātman; obeisance to the most bountiful god.

39. Obeisance to the eight-limbed one (one having the eight cosmic bodies). Salute to the excessively hearty one. Obeisance to the bestower of the desired things on devotees in distress. Hail to the destroyer of sacrifice; obeisance to the most delighted deity; obeisance to the lord of well nourished beings.

40. Hail to the lord of five elements; obeisance to the overlord of Kāla (God of Death, Time); obeisance to the lord of Ātman; obeisance to the lord of the quarters.

41. Obeisance to Maheśa, the creator of the universe; Hail to the Pināka-bearing god, the sustainer of the universe; obeisance to the fiery-eyed destroyer of the universe; obeisance to the one having manifold forms.

42. O Īśāna, obeisance to you; O Tatpuruṣa, obeisance to you; obeisance always unto you, to Aghora; O Vāmadeva, obeisance be to you. Obeisance to Sadyojāta (a form of Śiva).

43. Obeisance to one embellished with Bhasman. Hail to the destroyer of the fear of devotees. A bow to Bhava; to Bharga; to Rudra, to Mīḍhuṣ (the liberal god).

44. Obeisance to the thousand-eyed deity; to the deity accompanied by Ambā; obeisance to the thousand-rayed one; obeisance to the thousand-armed one; obeisance to the thousand-eyed Mīḍhuṣ (sun-god).

45. Hail to the god with good cheeks. Obeisance to Soma with good forehead; obeisance to one with good eyebrows; to one with good physical body; salute to you to extremely compassionate bountiful Lord.

46. Obeisance to one who always dispels the tremendous fear caused by the distress of worldly existence; Hail to you the invincible god; obeisance to Mīḍhus (the bountiful god) the victorious deity.

47. I salute the lord who is mass of bliss; I salute the lord who is beautiful in the course of his dance, who is the lord of all the worlds and who is the wonderful Sadasaspati (lord of the assembly).

48. I bow down to the imperishable supreme lord; to Īśa of fine-calf; to Īśa wearing beautiful silken cloth (?) I bow down to the lord who is capable of destroying demons and goblins. I bow to the lord whose friend is the lord of the Yakṣas.

49. I bow down to the half-man and half woman deity who is both dark and tawny-complexioned; who has half the characteristics of man; who has forelocks in one half of his body, who is naked in one half of his body and who wears the garlands of bones and lotus petals. (This is the Ardha-nārī form of Śiva.)

50. I bow down to Īśāna who is the lord of the mobile and immobile beings and who enables those who bow down but once, to him to cross the great ocean of worldly existence.

51. I salute Īśa who is the creator of the worlds; who is bestower of riches; who is the leader of Maruts (Devas) and who is the unvanquished conqueror.

52. I bow down to you the leader of the god of death, I salute to the upholder of the Mandākinī—Gaṅgā-river on the head, I salute the lord who created these three worlds and who supports us all.

53. I salute that Īśvara who is omniscient; omnipresent, who is identical with all, who is a seer from whom Vedas viz. the Ṛks and Sāmans originated along with the Yajus.

54. I salute Lord Śiva, the excellent seer, out of fear from whom the past, present and future beings abstain from other (i.e. sinful) deeds and who overviews the universe on all sides.

55. I bow down to that Hara who annihilates, who restrains and checks the Devas and at whose behest Nārāyaṇa pervades the universe and stands by.

56. I bow down to that Mahādeva at whose behest, god Brahmā, the creator created this universe at the beginning of the Kalpa in the same manner as it was before.

57. I salute that Īśvara* whose Liṅga is worshipped day and night by the hosts of Maruts (Devas) whose eldest member is Indra, along with their wives.

58. I bow down to that Rudra by worshipping whom only for once formerly the Devas, Pūṣā and others attained their respective prowess and position.

59. I salute that god Īśāna who is Śiva. The quiescent ascetics know him well and worship him perpetually.

60. Perpetually do we offer obeisance to that auspicious body of yours, O Rudra, that has the splendour and refulgence of the lotus. O deity who have the cloth over the breasts of Umā spreading over his chest we bow down to it.

61. Obeisance to you of terrible emotional feelings. Obeisance to you of terrible sports; obeisanee to you of fierce (very deep) quiescence; obeisance to you of terrible anger.

62. O destroyer of Tripuras, obeisance to you whose feet rest on the chariots and horses of the Vedas and whose arms are equipped with the bow and arrows at the time of the conquest of Tripura).

63. O, Śaṅkara, I bow down to you whose bow-string devam* is probably a misprint for Vande.

is the serpent Vāsuki and who scatters arrows? May my salutes be to the great archer with Meru as the bow.

64. Obeisance to you to your, Paraśu (axe), to your trident of incomparable glitter. Salute to one identical with Hayagrīva (the horse-necked) or obeisance to your arrow.

65. O Hara, whatever other weapons are in your quiver they remove the necklaces of the wives of Asuras (i.e. they kill the Asura husbands, thus making them widows) I make obeisance to them.

66. Obeisance to you, to Aghora whose arms have been gently stroked with a toy-lotus by the daughter of the mountain. Obeisance to him who is praiseworthy to us.

67. O Nīlalohita, (Śiva) save me who am ignorant, uneducated, devoid of any other person for shelter and I am leaderless, indigent and wretched and in adversity.

68. O Īśa, protect me who am wicked and in a wretched condition. My face is deformed and I am of evil activities. With this vision of mine I do not see anyone other than you for my propitiation.

69. O merciful Śambhu, be our protector. We are being burned by the fire of worldly existence which has love, hatred and pride for its flames.

70. O Hara, of many great names, O oft-eulogised deity, protect me. I am after other men's wives. I live in other's houses. I am clad in others' clothes. I depend upon others' shelter. I eat other mens' food.

71. We do not endure insult heaped on your servants (i.e. devotees) by wicked people of the world. O lord of Devas, give us in plenty for many occasions.

72. O lord, even as the haughty wicked persons who never exert themselves, look on, fill us with all desired wealth. Grant us field and longevity.

73. O storehouse of kindness, you are indeed aware of our great feelings of shame for begging. Grant us to the full the eulogisers with all these riches.

74. My wife, mother, father and others excessively hate me. I am so very lean (indigent); Grant me great learning along with the wealth that nourishes the universe.

75. We are incompetent to perform rites whether the results are visible or invisible. O deity with Meru as your bow, grant the requisite strength to our bodies.

76. O lord of Devas, I have incurred a thousand evils. Everyday, I am being separated from what is desired and desirable. Do destroy the ailment in my heart and also this death.

77. Whatever ailments, ghosts, men and Devas oppress me, free me from oppression of all these. You are indeed very great.

78. You alone are our protector. There is no one else to rescue us. Hence, O lord of Devas, O lord of Brahmā, accept us and protect us.

79. O lord of Umā, you alone are my mother; you alone are my father, you are my grandfather. You are my longevity. You are intellect. You are glory. You are my brother. You are my friend.

80. Since, you alone are the doer of all rites, O lord of gods, forgive every evil deed committed by me.

81. There is no one else equal to you in lordly glory. There is no one equal to me in worthlessness. Hence, O Lord Mahādeva you are mine and I am yours.

82. In reverential terms* do I sing of you who are so gentle, whose smile is so sweet; whose person appears white with ashes; whose body is refulgent as the midday sun and whose face is beaming with delight.

83. It is our desired boon that we may continue to look at you, the president of the assembly while you should go on dancing for a hundred years looking favourably at us.

84. O lord, due to your favour we may live for a hundred years; may we be blessed ones, learned, scholars conversant with Vedic texts and free from ailments.

85. O Īśāna may we rejoice for a hundred years, drinking to our heart's content the nectar of your Tāṇḍava dance, sharing it with our wives and kinsmen.

*The reading namasā girā may mean, 'paying our obeisance to you, we praise you in words', but if the reading be manasā girā : 'I sing with my heart and soul and in words.'

86. O lord of Devas O Mahādeva, may we be happy for a hundred years, drinking honey, from your lotus-like feet to our heart's content.

87. May we be your servants, O Mahādeva for hundreds of years in every birth whether we are born as worms or serpents, ghosts or any other being.

88. O lord Īśa, O Mahādeva, may we hear for a hundred years, with our ears the sound of your vocal music, instrumental music, and behold your dance in the assembly chamber.

89. May we repeat for a hundred years your divine names that destroy mundane existence, thanks to their mere remembrance.

90. O Dhūrjaṭi (god with a massive matted locks of hair), O deity who burned the three cities merely by fixing the arrow to the bow, may we be unconquered by mental anguishes and bodily ailments perpetually for a hundred years.

91. When will I see the youthful poet, the lord of the subjects, the deity who has the charming lustre of gold and whose chest is in contact with the cloth over the breasts of Gaurī ?

92. When will I serve that greatly lustrous Sāmba who is surrounded by the Pramathas (all goblin-attendants), whose face is beaming with delight, who is fond of clothes (?), whose semen is of brilliant radiance.

93. Will Īśa, the blue-necked deity of special reddish complexion accept me who have committed many sins, have not performed even the smallest of meritorious deeds and am of wicked mind.

94. When Īśa of powerful neck who does not bow down (to anyone else) see me who am frightened, whose mind is agitated and who am (pierced and) fixed to the fiery trident of Kāla (god of death)?

95. O men, O songsters, if you are desirous of attaining the fulfilment of love etc., come on. Sing the glory of the friend of Dhanada (Kubera).

96. O my tongue, hail to thee. Loudly proclaim the eulogy of the hymn of the lord of Umā, the bestower of learning. Be as loud as the trumpet of a victorious king.

97. (Defective) O you unborn one ! You are quiescent. Do you not know that by Śiva's satisfaction the whole world gets satiated ? Drink of his name if you are thirsty.

98. O my mind, like a woman who embraces her beloved paramour embrace closely the deity who bestows the cherished desires, who is adorned by the moon, whose touch is pleasant and whose fragrance is enchanting.

99. I recite the best of hymns that is greater than the greatest, unto Maheśvara whose resplendent ray is great; whose arms are greatly mighty; whose body is immensely big; whose clothes are large and whose crown is big.

100. With these beautiful hymns I worship Ugramaheśa who is invincible, and proud. The hymns have been composed with great difficulty, yet with great respect, for the slightest of the pleasure of the lord.

101. Obeisance to Śiva, the destroyer of the three cities, Hail to the lord of the three worlds. Obeisance to the naked deity. Salute be to Hara the chief of deities. Obeisence to the lowest of all deities. Obeisance to one who is at the base of all.

102. Obeisance to the Vikāra (effect) ; obeisance to the Vikārin (cause), obeisance to you, to Bhava; obeisance to the source of origin of the world. Obeisance to you, O deity of many progenies, O deity of very wonderful features from whom the entire universe is born.

103. Obeisance to the deity whose foot-stool is encircled by the lustre of different jewels on the crowns of leading Devas, to the deity whose unguent is Bhasman (ashes); obeisance to the greatest deity than whom there is nothing greater.

104. Obeisance to you who perform beautiful Tāṇḍava dance. Within the mass of your matted hair, the king of serpents and the lord of herbs (moon) come into clash and so it is agitated. Obeisance to you in whom all this meets together and from whom all this departs.

105. I bow down to the lord whose neck is as blue as the peacock's plumage; whose lotus-like feet are worshipped by Viṣṇu; whose hands are reddish, thanks to the lac-juice from the feet of Umā; whose teeth have the golden lustre and who is fair-complexioned I go near him and bow down to him.

106. I bow down to that Hara who is infinite, unmanifest, beyond contemplation or thinking; who is single, and has the quarters for his garments (i.e. is naked); who is unborn, who is an ancient sacrificial post and one whose body is the sky. He is more minute than the atom. He is greater than the greatest.

107. Without seeing the eternal Ātman stationed within, foolish persons wander among the mountain caves; to the west, to the north, to the south and to the east. They do not know whether he is below or whether he is above.

108. O Moon-crested lord, I bow down to this lord Śiva of great bliss; devoid of sorrow and pain; who is the great Ātman, who stays in the lotus-like cavity of the heart and from whom the quarters and the interstices of the quarters originate.

109. O Moon-crested lord, I hear that you are the greatest of all physicians. See me who appear with the great ailment named Bhava (mundane existence) originating from lust, deception etc. and protect me.

110. I am drowning in the ocean of distress. I do not have even an iota of happiness. I have not even touched anything meritorious. I have committed many sins and I am within the grip of the god of death. I am, therefore, frightened. Protect me from behind, from front, from below and from above.

111. O Lord, we are blessed with thy vision alone that is full of mercy and that is very cool, thanks to glancing at the charming face of Pārvatī. With that we shall cross the miseries and evils even as one crosses the waters by means of a boat.

112. I am immersed in the middle of boundless ocean of worldly existence. I clamour. My passion is by no means little. I am helpless. O Maheśa, save me who have served you as one serves a donor by means of sumptuous Dakṣiṇā.

113. O enemy of Yama, remembering my sins accumulated formerly and the harsh and rough face of Yama, I fear enormously. Grant me sufficient life, should I be dead or should my life be broken.

114. When will the Pināka-bearing Ugra of many forms and features embrace me with his steady limbs, that emit fragrance, that are white, due to the fine Bhasman, that contain infinite means of pleasure and that are soft and mild ?

115. When will that lord of Devas who has golden features and golden vision protect me ? I am shouting loud to the lord. I am fallen into the ocean of worldly existence. I am extremely frightened like a frog stationed in an anthill wherein a serpent dwells.

116. When will I see Sāmba (Śiva) who has the colour and lustre of the sun, who is beyond darkness, whose smiles are charming, who is adorned with the digit of the moon and whose pair of eyes mingle with the side-glances of Gaurī ?

117. O ye primordial souls desirous of liberation, come and think of Śiva within your lotus-like heart. Indeed those persons who have decisively learnt the perfect Vedāntic knowledge, perpetually meditate on him for the sake of salvation.

118. Come, ye and take up the worship of Maheśa, Girīśa (Śiva) to your heart's content for the overlordship of the world. By worshipping him formerly, Hiraṇyagarbha (Brahmā) became the sole lord of living beings.

119. May they bow down to the single goal, the extensive glory; may those meritorious persons bow down to this Śrīkaṇṭha. He is glorious and prosperous. His feet are worthy of being saluted by the lord of Śrī (Viṣṇu). He is liberal. He is the supporter and bestower of prosperity and riches.

120. May those men who are desirous of good sons, worship this youthful Girīśa from whom Hiraṇyagarbha originated formerly—Hiraṇyagarbha who is self-born and who is the creator of the universe.

121. Of what avail is much talk ? Enough has been said. By resorting to him everything desired can be realised. By resorting to him day and night, formerly, sage Kumbhasambhava (the pot-born Agastya) whose hairs had turned grey became a youth once again.

122. O bees of my eyes (i.e. my eyes that resemble the bees) eschew everything else. Always resort to Śiva. He is full of fragrance. He is soft. He is conducive to happiness. He is full of sweetness. Or is he a honeyed one ?

123. (If you worship Śiva) you will be one devoid of a rival. You will be one who has conquered all men and gods. Obeisance to you O Speech ? Eulogise this well-known youth seated in the pit (i.e. the cavity of the heart).

124. O mind, whatever you think and desire for shall certainly and permanently accrue to you. The mind dwelling on worldly objects shall bring in misery (?) For the sake of good mentality we shall worship Rudra.

125. O merciful one, if out of ignorance we have improperly offended you before, forgive us entirely. Be to us like a father unto his sons.

126. On seeing me bitten by the infuriated serpent called worldly existence with the fangs such as lust, hatred, madness, covetiousness may the merciful Pināka-bearing-lord, the protector, protect me carefully without absentmindedness).

127. (?) After saying this, those who, O Rudra, bow down to you at the end of Samādhi (ecstatic trance) go (to heaven) (though) they be bitten by the serpent of rebirth (Saṁsāra). But I shall go unto you as a sūtrātman of the blue-necked deity while I shall be saluted even by Brahmā.

128. O heroic deity, stroke with your hand that is a penacea like ginger or pepper. O lord of the helpless ones, stroke us who are afflicted by the terrible fever of worldly existence, who have great ailments, who are the abodes of all sins and from whom the eyes of Kāla are not far off. You are the slayer of Kāla and you are being propitiated.

129. May he who is the lord of all Devas and Dānavas, who is the lord of the assembly-chamber, give us that great wealth, that tawny-coloured vision (?) whereby we shall conquer all these desired eight quarters, the places of the earth, of heaven, and of firmament and can have movement therein.

130. Obeisance to you, to Bhava, to Hara, Obeisance to the deity whose chest shines with the Bhasman, who is the comrade when one is afflicted by the fear of the attack of worldly existence (Saṁsāra). Obeisance to the Pināka-bearing deity. Hail to Śiva, the protector of the universe; obeisance to the deity of perpetual dalliance; Bow to that lord whose comrade is never conquered nor killed.

131. Obeisance, obeisance to the lord of the chiefs of gods, Hail, Hail to the lord of Prajāpati; obeisance, obeisance, to the lord of the rulers of the earth; Bow again and again to the lord of Ambikā, obeisance, obeisance to the lord of Umā.

132. I bow down to Vināyaka, the permanent destroyer of the anguish of those who bow down; who is the poet of poets (or the wisest among the wise) and who is the most renowned. His crown or head has never been scraped due to the bowing down or its sound (?) (i.e. He has not bowed to anyone).

133. The Devas obtain Skanda in the battle (as their leader). The Brāhmaṇas obtain him in the sacrifice. His name is mentioned in the Vedas. I salute Subrahmaṇya, Om, O Subrahmaṇya, Om, O Subrahmaṇya, Om.

134. Obeisance to Śivā (Pārvatī), the mother of the universe, the beloved of Śiva; salute to the goddess whose person is one with that of Śiva. It was she who was born as the daughter of the mountain. She had braids of four matted hair. She was a lovely and elegant youthful maiden.

135. I bow down to Gaurī whose colour and lustre is that of gold, the anklets of whose feet are set with jewels, whose face is delighted, who has a parrot and a lotus in her hands and whose eyes are large. She is the person well conversant with words she speaks.

136. I bow down to this Umā who is the daughter of Menā, who cannot be comprehended, who is full of splendour, who cannot be measured and who makes her breasts whitened by means of the Bhasman at the time of embracing her beloved lord.

137. I bow down to Umā, who is resplendent, whose refulgence of limbs is magnet-like inaction and whom Hari, Brahmā and Indra bow down to. She is the goddess who stays near Girīśa (Śiva) and surveys the worlds.

138. I salute Gaurī whose breasts are prominent and plump; whose crest jewel is the moon; whose unguent all over the body is disturbed and who, for the sake of miserable living beings, urges her own splendour to be propitiated for the accomplishment of their desires.

139. I salute this daughter of Menā whose pastime is the protection of the wretched ones; who bestows honour and bliss; who is master of the lores and the auspicious words and who makes use of affable and courteous words for propitiation.

140. O Bhavānī, O goddess Śivā who dispel the great fear of distress of worldly existence, whose sole pleasure is your ornaments (?), grant us an excellent intellect free from hindrances whereby we shall cross all evils.

141. O Śivā, where and how can your equality be extended to ? The creation of the universe is your sport; Śiva is your husband. Hari is your servant; Indirā (Lakṣmī) is your maid-servant. So also are Śacī and Sarasvatī. You are the fortunate (blessed) bestower of wealth."

Vasu said :

142. After eulogising Śivā thus with this hymn, that great sage, bowed down to Sabhāpati (the lord of the assembly chamber). His eyes were filled with tears of affection.

143. He frequently imbibed the auspicious nectar of the Tāṇḍava of Īśa. After attaining all cherished desires, he obtained the state of being the chieftain of the Śiva Gaṇas at the end.

144. Like the women who embrace their husbands, pleasing words, realisation of powers, intellect, splendour and prosperity embrace that excellent twice-born who devoutly reads this hymn orally expressed by Jaimini.

145. If a king who is desirous of fighting, reads this hymn with respect, his enemies will quickly repair to the presence of the haughty god of death, entertaining fear in their hearts.

146. If a person belonging to one of the first three castes reads this eulogy ever and anon with devotional feelings towards Īśa, at the end of the fall of his body (i.e. death), he remains at the sides of Śiva. He becomes pure and attains divine equality.

147. Those who are desirous of intellect and then read the hymn derive good intelligence. Similarly, those who are desirous of nourishment derive splendour and glory; men who are desirous of food-grains obtain food-grains. Men who are desirous of sons get sons.

148. He who retains in memory a quatrain or half of it, from this hymn, goes to the world of Śiva.

149. O splendid lady, that spot is a great Tīrtha where Śiva performed his Tāṇḍava dance. It is more meritorious than the most meritorious of the Tīrthas. By taking a holy bath there, one is liberated.

150. The excellent man who performs Śrāddha to the Pitṛs there, leads his ancestors to the heaven. No doubt need be entertained in this respect.

151. If he gives a Brāhmaṇa, a cow, gold, plot of land, bed, cloth, umbrella, beverages, or cooked rice at that place, it becomes everlasting.

152. He who listens to, or narrates this story of Puṇḍarīkapura* shall be the favourite of Rudra.

CHAPTER SEVENTYFOUR

The Glory of Gokarṇa

Mohinī said :

1. O preceptor, the narrative of Puṇḍarīkapura recounted by you, has been heard. Kindly instruct me in the greatness of the holy centre Gokarṇa.[1]

*De, p. 161 identifies Puṇḍarīkapura with Pāṇḍupura which he regards the same as Pandharpur, the centre of Viṭṭhala cult in Maharashtra.

1. A sacred Śaiva Kṣetra, in Kuṁṭā Tehsil of North Kanara district. It is about 30 miles south of the temple God. The NP. does not state the story how this Ātmaliṅga of god Śiva got twisted like a cow's ear due to Rāvaṇa's frantic efforts to uproot it and take it to Laṅkā. It tells us how it was

Vasu said :

2. Listen, O Mohinī, I shall recount to you the Tīrtha Gokarṇa, which is a holy centre of Hara; which yields merit unto men and which is destructive of all sins.

3. O fair-complexioned lady, it is situated on the shores of the western sea. It extends to one and a half Yojanas. By its mere sight it yields salvation.

4. When the surface of the earth was gradually dug up by the sons of Sagara, O gentle lady, the ocean increased in size and flooded the land nearby.

5-6a. It flooded an area extending to thirty Yojanas (360 kms) inclusive of the holy centre, sacred water-reservoirs and forests. Then Devas, Asuras and human beings who had been staying there left that spot and occupied Sahya and other mountains.

6b-7a. As they pondered over the fact that the holy centre named Gokarṇa became hidden under the sea, the excellent sages made up their mind to reclaim it from the sea.

7b-8. All of them who had occupied the upper ridges of the mountain consulted together. Desirous of seeing Paraśurāma who had settled on the mountain Mahendra, O gentle lady, the excellent sages went there with the desire of reclaiming Gokarṇa.

9-10. After climbing the mountain, they saw his hermitage that was pleasing in all the seasons; that was teeming with both wild ruthless animals as well as tame and domesticated ones. The whole penance-grove contained a dense growth of fruit-bearing trees in full bloom. It spread its cool shade; it was incomparable. The wind was very fragrant and pleasant.

11. After reaching the penance-grove, they entered the hermitage that was resonant with Vedic chants. They were delighted in their minds, and they went in (in the order of their seniority in age) with the aged ones going ahead.

submerged in the sea-water and how sages went in deputation to Paraśurāma who ordered the sea-god to vacate this part of the land around Gokarṇa lest he should be constrained to evaporate the sea by his missiles. The seagod yielded. The story is similar to that of Dāśarathi Rāma at the time of building Setu to Laṅkā.

12. They saw that ascetic comfortably seated in the pasture on Brahmāsana over a soft deer-skin and surrounded by disciples.

13. They approached the sage how was the most excellent one among the descendants of Bhṛgu; who was like the resplendent fire of world destruction that had become tranquil after burning the three worlds, and they saluted him humbly.

14. On seeing those sages come, the leading scion of the family of Bhṛgu, properly (with due formalities) and respectfully greeted them with Arghya, Pādya etc.

15-16. When they were seated after the hospitality had been duly extended, the descendant of Bhṛgu (Paraśurāma) said :— "O blessed ones, welcome to you. Tell me wherefore you have come here ? Confide in me. What is it that I can do for you ?" Then the excellent sages told Rāma why they had come.

17. "O excellent descendant of Bhṛgu, know us to be the sages residing in Gokarṇa. We have been dislodged from that holy centre by the sons of Sagara who were digging the earth.

18. O leading Brāhmaṇa, it behoves you to grant us back the excellent holy place (called Gokarṇa) by means of your own power, after causing the waters of the ocean to recede".

19-20a. On hearing their words, the sage who had already set aside his weapons, thought over the problem. He considered that the protection of good men was righteous on his part and so took up his bow and arrows. He set off along with them.

20b-21. Descending from the mountain Mahendra, he hastened in the direction of the South-West. Quickly crossing the mountain, he reached the sea-shore along with the residents of Gokarṇa.

22. After resting there for a short while, the most eloquent sage spoke to Varuṇa, the lord of aquatic animals, in a voice as resonant as thunder.

23. "O Pracetas (Varuṇa) reveal yourself to me. I am Rāma, the descendant of Bhṛgu. I have come here along with the sages on a certain mission. There is an urgent task to be performed by you".

24. Although the lord of the aquatic animals was thus called by Rāma, and although he heard his words clearly, Varuṇa, the lord of aquatic animals, out of haughtiness, did not come to Rāma.

25. When he did not come out even after being repeatedly invoked, Bhārgava (Paraśurāma) became infuriated and seized his bow.

26. Bhārgava fixed to that bow, an arrow, the deity of which was the firegod, for drying up the lord of the rivers, the ocean.

27. When the miraculous missile was fitted on to the bow by Bhārgava of great soul, O gentle lady, the ocean became agitated. The aquatic animals were in a confused state.

28. Scorched by the missile of Rāma, Varuṇa became exceedingly frightened. Approaching him in his own personal form Varuṇa grasped Rāma's feet in reverence.

29. Then Rāma withdrew his missile and immediately spoke to Varuṇa, "O lord, let Gokarṇa be visible, cause your water to recede".

30-31a. Then at the behest of Rāma, the ocean withdrew the water flooding Gokarṇa. After worshipping lord Śaṅkara at the holy place called Gokarṇa, Rāma went back to the mountain Mahendra. Those Brāhmaṇas however stayed there itself.

31b-32a. All of those sages observed holy rites, performed penance and attained great bliss. They attained a state from which there was no return, thanks to his love for that holy centre.

32b-33a. Being conscious of its greatness Śaṅkara perpetually stays there with Bhūtas(goblins), Devas and goddess Pārvatī. By visiting Maheśa (Śiva) at Gokarṇa, sins are dispelled immediately like a dry leaf in a storm.

33b-35. It is not out of compulsion that men become interested in resorting to that holy centre. All living beings mobile and immobile, that die there, immediately go to the eternal heaven.

36. The holy place named Gokarṇa by mere remembrance of which a man will become absolved of all sins, is the abode of all Tīrthas.

37. Through the vision of the deity, these men derive those benefits which they derive by taking holy bath in all other sacred places and by worshipping Sadāśiva.

38. Those who stay there free from lust, fury etc. attain Siddhi in a short time.

39. Those who stay there wedded to the vow of celibacy, quiescent and invariably engaged in Japas and Homas accomplish their desired Siddhis.

40. O chaste lady, the benefit accruing from charitable gifts, Homas, Japas etc and the worship of Pitṛs, Devas and Brāhmaṇas at that place is a crore times more than that in other centres.

41. Thus, O gentle lady, the greatness of the sacred place called Gokarṇa has been recounted to you. It dispels all sins of those who listen to and read it.*

CHAPTER SEVENTYFIVE[1]

The Greatness of Lakṣmaṇācala

Mohini said :

1. O Vasu, the greatness of Gokarṇa that is destructive of sins has been heard. Now it behoves you to recount the greatness of Lakṣmaṇa also.

*The printed text of the NP. gives the introductory remark as follows : "Thus the greatness of Jyotirliṅga (luminary Liṅga) Tryambakeśvara is completely recounted. Henceforth, the greatness of Gokarṇa is being recounted."

1. The NP. takes this opportunity to restate the story of Rāma. His effort to apply the Vyūha Theory to Rāma shows the then dominance of the Pāñcarātra system. The NP. gives a twist to the story about the end of Lakṣmaṇa. VR. 7. 106. 8-17 tells us that as soon as Rāma ordered Lakṣmaṇa to die, he straightway went to the bank of Sarayū and by a Yogic process

Vasu said :

2. O gentle lady, listen. I shall describe the greatness of Lakṣmaṇa. On seeing the deity there, a man is liberated from all sins.

3-5. (The Caturvyūha concept is applied to Rāma here). The god (Lakṣmaṇa) is Saṅkarṣaṇa himself out of the incarnation of the four Vyūhas (manifestations of Lord Viṣṇu or Vāsudeva.) He is the thousand-hooded serpent Śeṣa.

6. On being requested by Brahmā and others formerly, lord Ramāpati (Lord of Lakṣmī, Viṣṇu) was born of king Daśaratha in four forms with the names of Rāma etc.

7. After some time, O gentle lady, the leading sage Viśvāmitra approached the king and requested him for Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa for guarding his Yajña.

8. Afraid of the curse of the sage, king Daśaratha entrusted to him his sons Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa who were loved by him more than his own life.

9-10a. They went to the forest and guarded the Yajña of Viśvāmitra, the leading sage. Rāma killed Subāhu and Tāḍakā. With the arrow charged with the missile called Mānavāstra, he cast off Mārīca far into the ocean. Thus he pleased Viśvāmitra.

10b-11. From the excellent sage who was delighted, he acquired a group of miraculous missiles. For sometime, he stayed there with his younger brother duly honoured by the sage. Thereafter, he was taken to the city of Janaka by Viśvāmitra.

12. Then king Janaka asked Viśvāmitra who had been duly received and honoured. "Of what great Kṣatriya king's sons are these boys ?

13. Then the excellent sage told him that they were two brothers Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and that they were the sons of king Daśaratha.

gave up his mortal coil. The NP. states that after Rāma's order, Lakṣmaṇa went to the south and performed penance on a certain hill and gave up his body by a Yogic process after Rāma's departure to heaven.

The information about Lakṣmaṇācala is too scanty to locate it geographically.

14. On seeing Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa the king of Videha Janaka, became much delighted. In his mind he decided that they should become the husbands of his daughters Sītā and Urmilā.

15-16a. The sage who was aware of the three units of time understood his desire. He joyfully told Janaka, "show him that bow which had been a deposit of Maheśvara and has been placed in the Svayaṁvara (self-choice of a husband by the girl) of Sītā.

16b-17a. On hearing the words of Viśvāmitra, the king got that bow brought immediately through three hundred of his servants. He showed it to Rāma with great enthusiasm.

17b-18a. With his left hand, Rāma lifted that bow of Śiva instantaneously. He tied the string, stretched it and broke it suddenly like a lordly elephant breaking a sugarcane stem.

18b-19a. Then the king of Mithilā (Janaka) was highly pleased. He duly honoured Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and offered his two daughters to them in accordance with the Śāstric injunction.

19b-20a. From the leading sage Viśvāmitra he understood that king Daśaratha had two more sons. He invited Daśaratha along with those two sons and gave in marriage his brother's daughters to them.

20b-22a. He was duly honoured by Videha. At the behest of the sage, king Daśaratha went back to Ayodhyā along with all the four sons who had been duly married. On the way, Rāma suppressed the haughtiness of Paraśurāma. Along with his brothers and father, he spent many years at Ayodhyā joyously.

22b-23a. He had his own splendour explained to him by Vasiṣṭha and other scholars. Rāma understood his own splendour called Brahman, but he pretended to be a human being.

23b-25a. Then king Daśaratha became delighted on observing that his son had learnt everything that should be learnt. He, therefore, made preparations for crowning him as the Heir-Apparent. Kaikeyī, the youngest but the most beloved of all his queens, came to know of this. With stubbornness, she prevented it and wanted her own son to be crowned thus.

25b-26. To please her, Rāma went to the forest though not permitted by his father. Accompanied by his wife Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, the son of Sumitrā, he went to Citrakūṭa hill, O splendid lady. For some time he remained there alone, assuming the dress and features of sages.

27-28a. On hearing of the death of his father, Bharata returned from his maternal uncle's house. On knowing that his father had died crying "Hā Rāma", Bharata rebuked Kaikeyī and went to Rāma to persuade him to return.

28b-31. Rāma gave his sandals and made Bharata return. He then went to the hermitages of Atri, Agastya and Sutīkṣṇa, Thus he spent twelve years in those places. The prosperous scion of the family of Raghu (i.e. Rāma) went to Pañcavaṭī accompanied by his wife and younger brother. He stayed in the place called Janasthāna. He slew Triśiras, Khara and Dūṣaṇa who had been incited by Śūrpaṇakhā who was rendered ugly by Lakṣmaṇa. Then fourteen thousand Rākṣasas came there. With the iron arrows, having feathers of variegated colours, he (Rāma) led them to Yama's abode.

32-33. On hearing about this, the king of Rākṣasas (i.e. Rāvaṇa) caused them to go away (from the hut) by showing Mārīca who had assumed the form of a golden deer, and abducted Sītā. He killed Jaṭāyus who had obstructed him on the way. He then took Sītā to Laṅkā.

34-35a. The brothers returned and began to search for Sītā who had been abducted. They saw Jaṭāyu and cremated him when he died. Rāma then killed Kabandha, blessed Śabarī and came to Ṛṣyamūka.

35b-36a. At the instance of Hanumān, he became the friend of Sugrīva, the king of Monkeys. He then killed Vālin his enemy and made Sugrīva the king.

36b-37. On being ordered by Sugrīva, the monkeys who had come from all places and whose leader was Hunumān, searched for Sītā. They then reached the southern ocean. From the words of Sampāti they came to the conclusion that she (Sītā) was in Laṅkā.

38. Then the monkey Hanumān alone reached Laṅkā, on the other shore of the ocean. There he saw the chaste lady, the wife of Rāma.

39-40. He created confidence in her by giving her the jewelled ring of Rāma. He told her that both of them were hale and hearty. From her he took the crest-jewel. He then destroyed the trees in the Aśoka grove, and killed Akṣa (the prince) along with his army. He voluntarily submitted to captivity at the hands of Indrajit and so could talk to Rāvaṇa.

41. He then burned the entire city of Laṅkā and met Sītā once again. After taking her permission, he crossed the ocean and told Rāma about her.

42. On hearing that Sītā was in the abode of the demon, he came to the ocean along with an army of monkeys.

43. With the permission of the ocean, he caused the bridge to be made over the great sea by means of huge boulders from the peaks of mountains and reached the other shore. He encamped his army there.

44. Although his younger brother Vibhīṣaṇa advised Rāvaṇa to return Sītā to her husband, he did not like it.

45. Kicked by Rāvaṇa, Vibhīṣaṇa sought refuge in Rāma and Rāma laid siege to Laṅkā.

46. Thereafter, his counsellors, ministers, sons and servants were ordered by him to fight. In the battle with those two, they were all destroyed by the leading monkeys.

47. Lakṣmaṇa killed Indrajit by means of sharp arrows. Rāma killed Kumbhakarṇa and Rāvaṇa.

48-49. He made Vibhīṣaṇa perform the obsequies of Rāvaṇa. He asked his beloved to enter fire and purify herself. Rāma then gave Vibhīṣaṇa the lordship of the Rākṣasas, the city of Laṅkā and life till the end of the Kalpa. Having thus completed his holy vow of spending fourteen years in the forest, Rāma returned to Ayodhyā by the aerial chariot Puṣpaka along with Sugrīva and Vibhīṣaṇa.

50-51. Taking Bharata who was staying in Nandi-Grāma, he entered the city of Ayodhyā. He then bowed to all mothers. The other brothers made the priest Vasiṣṭha crown Rāma in the kingdom. Lord Rāma ruled over the subjects as though they were his own bosom-born sons.

52. The knower of virtue (Dharma) as he was, he was frightened due to the rumour current among the people and so he abandoned Sītā. Sītā reached the hermitage of Vālmīki and lived there comfortably.

53-54. She gave birth to two sons well-known by the name of Kuśa and Lava. They were good singers. After performing the requisite holy rites for them, Vālmīki the liberal-minded sage, composed Rāmāyaṇa and taught it to them. The two brothers used to sing this in the Yajñas and assemblies of the sages and so they became famous.

55-57a. When Rāma performed a horse-sacrifice, they came to that assembly and sang the poem. Delighted to hear his own story sung, Rāma invited the sage along with Sītā. Sītā, the mother of the universe, informed Rāma that they were his sons. She entered a crevice in the ground. It was a great miracle.

57b-58a. Thereafter, Rāma observed the vow of celibacy and performed Yajñas and other rites. For thirteen thousand years, the most excellent among the Raghus stayed on the earth.

58b. Then after some time Durvāsā* came there, on being sent by Brahmā for going back to Vaikuṇṭha.

59-60. O gentle lady, in an isolated place he told Rāma "Let no one come here. If anyone comes, let him be worthy of being killed". Rāma promised it.

61. Rāma called Lakṣmaṇa and said :—"Stand here at the threshold. He who comes in will be worthy of being killed". He said, "So be it" and began to carry out Rāma's behest. He did not allow anyone to go near Rāma.

62-64a. While Rāma was sitting alone with Kāla and discussing, Durvāsā who came to know it approached Lakṣmaṇa. On seeing him come Lakṣmaṇa told him after due prostrations— "Kindly wait for a while. Rāma is busy in the council chamber."

64b-65. On hearing these words, Durvāsas who wanted to carry out the purpose of Yama (god of death) said to Lakṣmaṇa angrily—"Allow me to enter; otherwise I will reduce you to ashes. Remember it".

66. On hearing the words of Durvāsas, Lakṣmaṇa became perplexed. Afraid of the sage, he entered within to inform his elder brother.

67. On seeing Lakṣmaṇa, Kāla who had already completed his discussion stood up and said :— "Keep your promise" He was bidden farewell to by Rāma and went away.

68. Then Lord Rāma, the most excellent among the righteous ones, came out and propitiated the sage Durvāsā and fed him.

69-70. After feeding him and bidding him farewell after due obeisance, Rāma said to Lakṣmaṇa—" Brother, Lakṣmaṇa, a delicate situation has arisen due to Dharma. As a result of it, you have become worthy of being killed by me. Fate indeed is more powerful. Abandoned by me, now you can go wherever you please."

71. Lakṣmaṇa bowed down to Rāma who adhered to Truth and Virtue. He went towards the south and performed a penance on the mountain.

72. Lord Rāma too, at the request to Brahmā, re-entered his abode without excitement. The people of Ayodhyā and Kosala accompanied him.

73. Those who thought of Rāma and plunged themselves in Gopratāra in the Sarayū entered Rāma's splendid abode that is rare even to the Yogins. They attained divine bodies.

74. After performing penance and observing Yogic practices, Lakṣmaṇa followed Rāma by his Yogic power. He then re-entered his unchanging abode.

75. Lakṣmaṇa granted that mountain his perpetual presence and then continued his regular duty. Hence, this holy centre is excellent.

76. Those who see Lakṣmaṇa on the Lakṣmaṇa mountain with great devotion, are blessed and contented. There is no doubt about this that they go to the abode of Hari.

77. They praise charitable gifts in the place, of gold, plots of land, cows and horses. Whatever is given becomes everlasting in its benefit. The homa and the Japa too derive great benefits.

78. Of what avail is much talk? Its mere sight is of rare occurrence. O gentle lady, if it is seen, there is salvation undoubtedly.

79. Both he who listens to this story of Rāma along with the anecdote of Lakṣmaṇa and he who tells this story become great favourites of Rāma.

CHAPTER SEVENTYSIX

*The Greatness of Setu

Mohinī said :

1-2a. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, well done. It is very nice, that the Rāmāyaṇa has been narrated by you. It is destructive of all sins of men and conducive to the increase of merits. Now I wish to hear the excellent greatness of Setu.[1]

Vasu said :

2b-3a. O gentle lady, listen, I shall recount to you the excellent greatness of Setu on seeing which, O queen, one is liberated from the ocean of worldly existence.

3b-5. The very sight of the Setu is meritorious. Lord Rāmeśvara there grants immortality to men by its vision only. By worshipping Rāmeśvara with fully controlled mind, a man enjoys all prosperities and glories. No doubt need be entertained in this respect. There is another holy centre here Viz. : Cakratīrtha. It is destructive of sins.

6a. The holy bath, charitable gifts, Japa and Homa there, facilitate everlasting benefits.

*The line of rocks jutting out of the sea between Rāmeśvara & Śrī Laṅkā is supposed to be the relic of the bridge that was built by Rāma with the help of monkeys. It is regarded holy even in the Bh. P. (VIII.14.31,X.79.15) Parāśara (XII.65-67) recommends a visit to Setu as atonement for Brahmahatyā.

1. As compared with the setu-māhātmya in SK. P. III. chs. 1-52, this chapter of 20 verses shows that the NP. gives a brief sketch of the Setu and sub-Tīrthas like Agastya, Agnī, Jaṭā, Sītā-Kuṇḍa near it. Some Kuṇḍas, especially in the temple of Rāmanātha (i.e. Rāmeśvara) are in good conditions and one feels like taking bath (or basketful of water) from each. The Phalaśruti of these baths is the usual routine one.

6b-7a. He who goes to Tālatīrtha and takes his holy dip there, attains excellent birth and rejoices on the earth like a Deva.

7b-8a. Then, O blessed lady, after reaching the holy centre Pāpavināśana (a Tīrtha Destructive of sins) and by taking a holy bath, the man is rid of all sins. He is honoured in the heaven.

8b-9a. He should then go to Sītākuṇḍa and perform the rite of ablution perfectly. By performing the Tarpaṇa rite of the Pitṛs and Devas, he shall attain all desires.

9b. By approaching the Maṅgala (auspicious) Tīrtha and by taking a holy dip, he is liberated from sins.

10. By taking a holy bath in the tank called Amṛtavāpī the man attains immortality. By taking a holy bath in Brahmakuṇḍa a man shall attain the world of Brahmā.

11. By performing ablution in the Tīrtha of Laksmaṇa, a man attains the goal of Yogins. By taking the holy dip in Jaṭātīrtha a man becomes free from illness.

12. By taking a holy bath in the Hanumatkuṇḍa a the man becomes unconquerable to the enemies. By plunging into the Agastya Tīrtha, the man becomes blessed with sons and wealth.

13. The man who plunges into the Rāmakuṇḍa attains the world of Rāma. By means of ablution in the Lakṣmītīrtha, the man shall become fortunate and handsome.

14. By taking a holy dip in the Agnitīrtha, the man is liberated from all sins. By means of ablution in the Śivatīrtha, the attainment of Śiva's world becomes possible.

15. One who has taken a holy dip in the Śaṅkha-tīrtha does not attain a wretched state (hell). By taking a holy dip in the Tīrthas, Yamunā etc. he goes to the heaven.

16. By plunging into the Koṭitīrtha one attains the benefit of all Tīrthas. A man who takes a plunge into the Sādhyāmṛta attains the same world as that of the Sādhyas.

17. By taking a holy dip in the Sarvatīrtha, a man attains cherished desires. One who takes a holy dip in the Dhanuṣkoṭi duly, is liberated from bondage.

18. A man taking a plunge in the Kṣīra-kuṇḍa shall attain various worldly pleasures. By taking a dip in the Kapitīrtha a man does not take any ignominious rebirth.

19. One who takes a holy dip in the Gāyatrī and the Sarasvatī is liberated from sins. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha Ṛṇamocana etc. the devotee is rid of indebtedness.

20. O splendid lady, thus the greatness of the Tīrthas at the Setu has been recounted. It is destructive of all sins of those who read and those who listen to it.

CHAPTER SEVENTYSEVEN

Sanctity of the Tirthas in Narmadā

Mohinī said :

1. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, the excellent greatness of Setu has been heard by me. Now I wish to hear the collected list of the Tīrthas on the river Narmadā.[1]

Vasu said :

2. Listen, O Mohinī, I shall recount every thing. There are four hundred most important Tīrthas on both the banks of the Narmadā together.

1. The Narmadā, though not mentioned in the Vedic literature is eulogized in the Mbh. Vana (chs. 121-122) and Purāṇas like the Mt. P. (chs. 186-194, 554 verses), the KP. 2. (chs. 40-42, verses 189), the Pd. P. Ādi (chs. 13-23, 739) while SKP. has devoted one complete book Revā-Khaṇḍa to it. As compared with the above, the treatment of Narmadā in the NP. in 35 verses is sketchy. Narmadā is superior to Gaṅgā as its mere sight inmediately sanctifies the seer. (V. 31). Thousands of sacred places happen to abide in various parts of Narmadā is a Purāṇic exaggeration. People normally visit its source (Amarakuṇṭaka), Māhiṣmatī (or Oṁkāra Māndhātā) and Bhṛgukaccha (Broach). Routine recommendations for the performance of Śrāddha, Dāna, Japa are the features of every Tirtha need not be repeated.

3. There are eleven Tīrthas on the northern bank and twentythree on the southern bank. The thirtyfifth Tīrtha is said to be at the meeting place of the Revā with the sea.

4. From the mountain Amarakaṇṭaka (where the Narmadā rises) round the Oṁkāra Tīrtha within two Krośas kms) in all the quarters, there are three and a half crores of Tīrthas.

5. There are a crore of Tīrthas situated in the confluence of the Kapilā (with the Narmadā). A hundred thousand Tīrthas are founded in the Aśoka grove.

6. A hundred Tīrthas are at the Aṅgāragarta, ten thousand at Kubjā,* a thousand in the confluence with Vāyu and a hundred Tīrthas of Sarasvatī are situated here.

7. They know that there are two hundred holy spots in the Śuklatīrtha, a thousand in Viṣṇutīrtha, a thousand in Māhiṣmatī and ten thousand holy spots in the Śūlabheda.

8. There are a thousand holy spots in the Devagrāma village, there are seven hundred in Ulūka. There are a hundred and eight Tīrthas at the confluence of the Maṇinadī.

9. As many Tīrthas are in Vaidyanātha, and as many in Ghaṭeśvara. There are a hundred and fifty thousand sacred places in the meeting place of Revā (Narmadā) and the sea.

10. There are eightyeight thousand Tīrthas in Vyāsa and also hundreds of islands. In the confluence of the Karañja, ten thousand and eight Tīrthas are situated.

11. In the confluence of the Eraṇḍī (modern Uri) there are a hundred and eight Tīrthas, there are sixtyeight tīrthas, in the Dhūtapāpā and one and a half crores in the Kokila.

12. O queen of men, there are a thousand Tīrthas in Romakeśa and a thousand in Dvādaśārka. In the Śuklātīrtha there are eight hundred lakhs and two thousand Tīrthas.

13. They know that in all confluences of rivers with Narmadā there are hundred and eight Tīrthas. There are five hundred Tīrthas in Nandā, the confluence of the river Kāverī.

*v.l. At the confluence of Kubjā with Narmadā.

14. In the Kṣetra (holy centre)of Bhṛgu, there are a crore of Tīrthas. In Bhārabhṛti there are a hundred and eight Tīrthas.

15. There are a hundred and fifty Tīrthas in Akrūreśa and hundred thousand in Vimaleśa. In the sphere of Narmadā, the number of Tīrthas is one and a half crores.

16. O splendid-faced lady, there are ten Tīrthas of the sun, nine of Kapila and eight of Vidhu (the Moon god). There are a crore and eight Tīrthas of Nandin.

17. O Mohinī, there are seven Tīrthas in each of these holy spots namely Nāgāvarta, Agnyāvarta and Siddhāvarta and there are five Tīrthas named Kedāradaiva, Indriyadaiva, Vāridaiva, Īśadaiva and Nandi daiva.

18-19. The following are mentioned to be of four Tīrthas in each Viz : Yameśa, Vaidyānātha, Vāmana, Aṅgārakeśvara, Sārasvata, Munīśa, Dārukeśa and Gautama. There are three Tīrthas at Vimaleśvara. There are then the Tīrthas of Sahasrayajña, Bhīṣmeśa and Svarṇa Tīrtha.

20. The following are great Tīrthas viz. Dhautapāpa, Karañjeśa Ṛṇamuktiguha, Daśāśvamedha, Nanda, Manmatheśa and Bhārgava.

21-23. O auspicious lady, each of these is a great Tīrtha Parāśara, Ayoni, Vyāsa, Pitṛnandi, Gopeśa, Māruteśa, Jaṅgaleśa, Śuklaka, Akṣarcśa, Pippaleśa, Māṇḍavyeśvara, Dīpakeśvara, Uttareśa, Aśokeśa, Yodhaneśa and Rauhiṇa, Lokeśa is said to be two in nnmber. There are one thousand nine hundred individual Tīrthas, O fair one.

24. In groups there are two hundred and four hundred Tīrthas. There are Tīrthas pertaining to Śiva. The Tīrthas pertaining to Viṣṇu are twentytwo.

25. All these Tīrthas pertain to Brahmā; twentyeight Tirthas pertain to Śakti. Among them, O splendid-faced lady, seven pertain to Mothers and three to Brāhmī.

26. There are two Tīrthas of Vaiṣṇavī. O gentle lady, Raudrī (among the Mothers) is stationed in the remaining Tīrthas. O splendid-faced lady, one Tīrtha is mentioned as that of Kṣetrapāla.

27. O Mohinī, three and a half crores of Tīrthas have been mentioned by Vāyu. They are intermediary Tīrthas. Some are hidden and some manifest.

28-29a. These Tīrthas are in the Revā (Narmadā) region on the ground, in the atmosphere or in the heaven. The man who takes a holy dip anywhere in these Tīrthas, O blessed lady, becomes pure in soul and attains excellent goal.

29b-30a. Holy dip, charitable gift, Japa, Homa, the study of the Vedas and the worship of the deity, everything performed on the banks of Narmadā has everlasting benefits.

30b-31a. The waters of Sarasvatī sanctify in three days. O chaste lady, the waters of Yamunā sanctify in seven days. The waters of Gaṅgā are meritorious even in a single dip; but the waters of Narmadā are holy even by their sight.

31b-32a. Thus, O gentle lady, the multitudes of Tīrthas on Narmadā have been listed. These Tīrthas suppress great sins of those who remember them.

32b-35. The man who hears about these Tīrthas, he who narrates and he who reads this list, O gentle lady, is liberated from sins. There is no fear of pestilence, or from arson in the house where these names of Tīrthas have been written down and are revered too. There is no fear from kings, thieves and enemies, nor from sickness. That house is filled with fortune, riches and food-grains perpetually. It is always joyous and auspicious through the marriage and other celebrations of sons, grandsons etc.

CHAPTER SEVENTYEIGHT

The Glory of Avanti

Mohini said :

1. O Brāhmaṇa, very wonderful is this greatness of Narmadā. It has been heard by me as it was described by you. It is destructive of sins.

2. O blessed holy lord, now tell me the greatness of Avantī[1] and that of Mahākāla worthy of being adored by the Devas.

Vasu said :

3. O gentle lady, listen. I shall recount the greatness of Avanti. If duly glorified, it yields merit unto men and destroys their sins.

4. The grove Mahākālavana is meritorious. It is an excellent place for penance. Lord Mahākāla is perpetually engaged in penance there.

5. There is no other holy centre on the earth greater than Mahākālavana. O gentle lady, by visiting it, a man competes with the deities.

6. O lady of beautiful eyes, by taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha named Kapālamocana, with devotion, even a Brāhmaṇa-slayer becomes sanctified.

7. Similarly, by worshipping the deity called Kālakāleśa, the man gains victory in disputes and always succeeds in his undertakings.

8. There is another Tīrtha here viz : the Apsaraḥkuṇḍa. The man who plunges therein shall become blessed and enjoy all worldly pleasures. He shall be like Kandarpa (cupid) himself.

9. One who takes a holy dip in the Kuṇḍa called Mahiṣa shall conquer the enemies in battle. One who takes a holy dip in the lake Rudrasaras is honoured in the world of Rudra.

1. Avanti is the region with Ujjayini as its capital, though later on they were identified. It is known since the time of Pāṇini. The NP. states that in different Yugas it was known under different names such as Amarāvati, Kuśasthali, Kanaka śṛṅgā, Padmāvati, Kumudvati and Ujjayini. It is associated with Mahākāla, a famous jyotir-liṅga. The fight between god Śiva and Andhakāsura took place in the Mahākālavana in (the country called) Avanti. A number of sub-Tīrthas are mentioned in the NP. with the usual recommendations of bath, Tarpaṇa, Dāna, Śrāddha etc. The SKP. has devoted one Volume (Khaṇḍa) to describe the great sanctity of Avanti.

10. By visiting Kuṇḍaleśvara and by worshipping the deity in accordance with the injunctions, the devotee gains in business and activities and becomes a favourite of Śiva.

11. By taking a holy dip in the Tīrtha called Vidyādhara, the man becomes purified. By worshipping Mārkaṇḍeśvara the devotee becomes rich and long-lived.

12. If a man worships goddess Śītalā stationed in Kālavana, he need never fear swelling boils (smallpox).

13. By visiting the holy centre Svargadvāra, by taking a holy bath and by worshipping Sadāśiva, a man never attains wretchedness. He is honoured in the heavenly world.

14. By visiting the holy centre Rājasthala and taking a holy dip in the oceanic Tīrtha, the devotee attains the excellent benefit of holy ablution in all the Tīrthas.

15. By taking a holy bath in the tank of Śaṅkara, the man of regular holy observances attains desired pleasures and in the end goes to the city of Rudra.

16-17. By worshipping Śaṅkarāditya, a man shall be invincible. By taking a holy dip in the Nīlagaṅgā and by devoutly worshipping goddess Gandhavatī, the man is liberated from all sins. By taking a holy dip in Daśāśvamedha, one attains the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

18. By visiting the shrine of the goddess Ekānaṁśā (?), and by worshipping the goddess of Devas with scents, fragrant flowers etc. one attains the desired benefits.

19-20a. By worshipping Harasiddhi a man shall be a lord of all Siddhis. By worshipping the fourteen deities beginning with Piśācaka, a man obtains the desired benefits. No doubt need be entertained in this regard.

20b-21. The man who takes a holy dip in the lake of Rudras and worships Hanumatkeśvara with faith, shall attain riches. By worshipping Vālmīkeśvara, one shall become a storehouse of all lores.

22. The man who worships Śukreśvara and other Liṅgas faithfully shall be richly endowed with worldly pleasures and shall be free from ailments.

23. By worshipping Pañceśāna, a man shall attain all Siddhis. By roaming over Kuśasthalī, the devotee attains the desired benefit.

24. By worshipping Akrūreśa, one attains fearlessness from cruel persons and beings. By taking a holy plunge in Mandākinī, one shall attain the benefit of a holy dip in the Gaṅgā.

25. By worshipping Aṅkapāda, a man shall become an attendant of Śiva. By worshipping Candrāditya, one shall attain different worldly pleasures.

26. By worshipping Karabheśvara, one shall attain happiness of vehicles. By worshipping Laḍḍukapriya Vighneśa (Vighneśa fond of sweets) one shall be happy.

27-28a. By worshipping Kusumeśa and others, one enjoys all pleasures. By taking a holy dip in the Yajñavāpi and by worshipping Mārkaṇḍeśa, the man obtains the benefit of all Yajñas. He stays in heaven for the period of a Yuga.

28b-29. O chaste lady, by taking the holy dip in the Somavatī and by worshipping Someśvara, the man obtains the desired benefits both here and hereafter. O Mohinī, by worshipping in Yātanākalana, the man never faces tortures in hell.

30-31. By worshipping Narakeśa, one attains the goal of heavenly world. By worshipping Kedāreśa, Rāmeśvara, Saubhāgyeśa and Narāditya, the devotee obtains the desired benefit. By worshipping Keśavārka, the man shall be a favourite of Keśava.

32-34a. By taking a holy dip in Śaktibheda, one is liberated from terrible and difficult calamities. By taking a holy dip in Svarṇakṣura Brahmavāpī and by worshipping Abhayeśvara and Agastyeśa, O daughter of Brahmā, one shall become the abode of all riches. The man who perfectly worships Oṁkāreśa and other Liṅgas, shall obtain all desires. Thanks to the grace of Maheśa.

34b-35a. O gentle lady, there is no limit to the number of Liṅgas in Mahākālavana. By worshipping any Liṅga situated anywhere, one shall be a favourite of Śiva.

35b-36. The names of Avanti are Kanakaśṛṅgā, Kuśasthalī, Avantikā, Padmāvatī, Kumudvatī and Ujjayinī. In every Kalpa it has a different name. It is called Viśālā and Amarāvatī as well.

37. The man who takes bath in Śiprā river and worships Maheśa, shall attain his cherished desires, thanks to the grace of the deity.

38-39a. By taking a holy dip in the Gomatī Kuṇḍa the man obtains heavenly goal. By taking a holy dip in Vāmana Kuṇḍa, by eulogising Śrīdhara, the lord of all Devas, by uttering his thousand names, a man shall become Hari himself on the earth.

39b-40a. He who takes a holy dip in the lake Vīreśa-saras and worships Kālabhairava, enjoys riches and attains Śiva's world.

40b-41a. He who visits Kuṭumbeśvara and worships him with various means of service, achieves his different cherished desires, and in the end achieves heavenly goal.

41b-42a. He who worships Devamādhava in the Devaprayāgasaras derives devotion for Mādhava and attains the region of Viṣṇu.

42b-43a. O chaste lady, he who takes a holy bath in the Tīrtha of Karkarāja with controlled mind, shall be rid of all ailments. He shall become rich and enjoyer of pleasures.

43b-44. The man who faithfully worships Vighneśa Bhairava, Umā, Rudras, Ādityas and other Devas in the course of his pilgrimage in the Antargṛha (?) with whatever means that are available, shall gain heavenly world.

45-46. O lady, there are many other Tīrthas in Rudrasaras. By worshipping Śaṅkara in them, the man shall be happy. By taking a holy dip in the Aṣṭatīrthī (collection of eight Tīrthas), the man obtains the benefit of pilgrimage to Kālāraṇya. O daughter of Brahmā, truth, it is the truth that has been mentioned by me.

47. Thus everything in regard to the greatness of Avanti has been narrated. By listing to the greatness of Avanti, the man is liberated from all sins.

CHAPTER SEVENTYNINE

The Greatness of Mathura

Mohinī requested :

1. O Vasu, the greatness of Avantī that is destructive of sins of men, has been heard. Now I wish to hear the greatness of Mathura.[1]

Vasu said :

2. O Mohinī, listen. I shall recount the greatness of Mathura that is conducive to auspiciousness. It was here that the lord was born on being requested by the lotus-born deity Brahmā.

3. After manifesting himself there, the lord went over to the cowherds' colony of Nanda. Staying there, he played all games in the company of young cowherds.

4. After killing demons beginning with Pūtanā, sent by Kaṁsa, he sported in the twelve forests along with the cowherdesses.

5. O Mohinī, listen. Now I shall recount to you those Tīrthas that are in the forests and in the area of Mathura.

6. The first forest[2] is what is called Madhuvana. By taking a holy bath there and performing the Tarpaṇa rites

1. Being a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, the NP naturally concludes with the descriptions of Mathura and Vṛndāvana. Mathura is famous since the 6th century B.C., as we get references in the Aṅguttara (I. 167) and Majjhima (II. 84) Nikāyas to Buddha's direct disciple Mahā-Kaccāyana preaching in Mathura. Excavations at Mathura reveal that in addition to Brahmanism, and Buddhism, Jainism also flourished at Mathura. The Vā. P 99.383, VP. V. 6. 28-40, AP. 11. 8-9 mention it but it is glorified in details in Vaiṣṇava Purāṇas like V. P. V VI aṁśa, Bh. P. X Skandha. The NP. being a Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa describes it as a Tīrtha. The NP. uses two terms—Mathura Maṇḍala, the country round Mathura within the radius of twenty Yojanas in the middle of which the town of Mathura is situated (VV. 20-21.)

2. VV. 6-18 enumerate 12 forests round Mathura—now mere names only. The NP. describes the fruits of religious acts performed in each forest.

unto the Devas, sages and Pitṛs, the excellent man is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

7. O gentle lady, the second excellent forest is what is called Tāla. The man who takes a holy bath there with devotion, has all his objectives in life accomplished.

8. O lady of beautiful eyes, the third one is what is called Kumuda. By taking a holy bath there, the devotee attains cherished desires and rejoices here and hereafter.

9. The fourth one is glorified by the name of Kāmyavana. It contains many Tīrthas. By visiting it one attains the world of Viṣṇu.

10. There is an excellent Tīrtha called Vimala Kuṇḍa. It is the most excellent of all Tīrthas. O gentle lady, the man who takes a holy dip there, attains the region of Viṣṇu.

11. The fifth forest that is destructive of sins, is called Bahula. By taking a holy ablution, the man attains all desires.

12. There is the sixth forest named Bhadravana. The man who takes a bath here, sees everything auspicious, thanks to the grace of lord Kṛṣṇa.

13. O gentle lady, the seventh forest is Khādira Vana. Merely by taking a holy dip here, the man attains that greatest region of Viṣṇu.

14. The eighth forest is Mahāvana most liked by Hari. By visiting it with devotion, the man is honoured in the world of Indra (i.e. heaven).

15. The ninth forest is Lohajaṅgha. The man who takes a holy bath there, attains worldly pleasures and salvation, thanks to the grace of Mahāviṣṇu.

16. O lady of beautiful waist, Bilva is the tenth forest. He who takes a holy dip there, goes to the world of Śiva or Viṣṇu as he pleases.

17. The eleventh forest is Bhāṇḍīra, most liked by the Yogins. The man who devoutly takes a bath there, is liberated from all sins.

18. Vṛndāvana is the twelfth one. It destroys all sins. O chaste lady, there is no other forest equal to this on the surface of the earth.

19. The man who takes a holy bath there and performs Tarpaṇa to the Devas, sages and Pitṛs, becomes liberated from the three-fold indebtedness. He is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

20. The precincts of the holy centre Mathura extend to twenty Yojanas (240 kms). If any person takes a holy bath anywhere within this area, he shall attain devotion to Viṣṇu.

21. Within it, is the city named Mathura. It is the most excellent of all cities. Merely by seeing it, one obtains devotion to Viṣṇu.

22. O queen of men, there is a jewel among Tīrthas named Viśrānti.[1] The man who devoutly takes a holy dip there, attains the region of Viṣṇu.

23. Near Viśrānti and to the south of it, is the excellent Tīrtha viz. Vimukta. It is certain that the man who devoutly takes bath there attains liberation.

24. O queen of the people, still south of it, is the Rāma Tīrtha. The man who takes a holy bath there shall certainly be liberated from the bondage of ignorance.

25. To the south of this, is the excellent Tīrtha called Saṁsāra Mokṣaṇa. A man who takes a holy dip there, is honoured in the world of Viṣṇu.

26. To the south of this is the Tīrtha called Prayāga. It is difficult of access even to the Devas. O gentle lady, the man who takes a holy dip there shall obtain the benefit of Agniṣṭoma.

27. Thereafter, is the Tīrtha Kanakhala. O chaste lady, the man who takes a holy bath there, attains heaven.

After death he rejoices in the Nandana Park and other places.

1. VV. 22 ff describe various Tīrthas in this region, declare the religious merits accrued from bath etc. in those Tīrthas. The Viśrānti Tīrtha is Viśrāma Ghāṭ. Here Kṛṣṇa is supposed to have taken rest after killing Kaṁsa. Various Tīrthas reminding one of other famous independent Tīrthas like Prayāga, Kanakhala are also included in the list of sub-Tīrthas at Mathura. The usual formula of bath, Japa etc. is recommended at each Tīrtha.

28. To the south of it is the holy centre Tinduka. The excellent man who takes a holy bath there attains the benefit of Rājasūya sacrifice. He rejoices in heaven like a Deva.

29. Beyond that is the holy centre Paṭusvāmi Tīrtha. It is a favourite of the Sun-god. By taking a holy bath and seeing the Sun, the devotee enjoys all worldly pleasures and goes to heaven.

30. O gentle lady, to the south of it is the excellent Dhruva Tīrtha. By taking a holy bath and by having a sight of Dhruva (pole star), the devotee obtains the region of Viṣṇu.

31. Beyond Dhruva Tīrtha, to the south of it is the Tīrtha frequented by seven sages. By taking the holy plunge and by visiting the sages, the devotee rejoices in the world of sages.

32. To the south of Ṛṣitīrtha is the excellent Mokṣa Tīrtha. Merely by taking a holy bath therein, one is liberated from all sins.

33. To the south of it is Bodhinī Tīrtha. The man who takes a holy dip there and offers Piṇḍa to the Pitṛs leads them to the heaven.

34. To the south of it is Koṭi Tīrtha. By taking the bath therein, a man is liberated from all sins. He shall attain the world of Viṣṇu.

35. To the northern side of Viśrānti is the holy centre Asikuṇḍaka. O gentle lady, the man who takes a holy bath there attains the region of Viṣṇu.

36. O lady of beautiful eyes, Nava Tīrtha is to the north of Asikuṇḍa. By taking a holy dip there, the man is honoured in the heavenly world.

37. The Tīrtha called Saṁyamana is situated to the north of it. By taking a holy dip therein and offering charitable gifts, the devotee does not see the world of Yama.

38. To the north of it there is a great Tīrtha Dhārāyatana. By taking the holy bath therein, the man rejoices in the company of ancestors.

39. To the north of it is the Nāga Tīrtha. O Mohinī, by taking a holy dip therein the devotee derives fearlessness, protection from the serpents. He is honoured in the heavenly world.

40. To the north of it is the Tīrtha named Brahmaloka-Ghaṇṭābharaṇaka. By means of a holy dip this Tīrtha dispels all sins. It bestows the goal of the world of Brahmā.

41. To the north of this is the great Tīrtha named Soma. He who takes a holy plunge in it, attains the world of Soma (Moon). Rid of sins he becomes the most excellent of men.

42. O auspicious lady, one should take a holy bath in Prācī Sarasvatī which is to the north of it. Merely by taking a holy dip there, the man shall become the lord of speech.

43. To the north of it is the Cakra Tīrtha. The man who takes a holy dip there, conquers hosts of his enemies and rejoices in heaven for the period of seven Yugas.

44. O blessed lady, the Tīrtha Daśāśvamedha is situated to the north of it. By taking a holy dip therein, one shall attain the benefit of a horse-sacrifice.

45. By worshipping Śiva designated Gokarṇa, in accordance with the injunctions, the man attains his cherished desires. In the end he is honoured in the world of Śiva.

46. To the north of it is situated the Tīrtha named Vighna-Rāja. By taking a holy bath there one shall attain the benefit of his holy rites without an obstacle.

47. To the north of it is the Tīrtha named Ananta. The man who takes a holy bath there shall attain the benefit of twentyfour Tīrthas of Mathura.

48. O blessed lady, Lord Hari himself is stationed in Mathura, in the form of Caturvyūha (four manifestations of Viṣṇu). He is the bestower of liberation on the citizens of Mathura.

49. The four manifestations are : one is the form of Varāha (the Divine Boar), another one is called Nārāyaṇa; the third form is called Vāmana and the fourth is Haladhara (i.e. Saṅkarṣaṇa).[1]

1. This is another variety of the Vyūha Theory including Varāha, Nārāyaṇa, Vāmana and Saṅkarṣaṇa as the four Vyūhas.

50. By visiting the lord of the four Vyūhas and by worshipping him in accordance with the injunctions, man attains liberation.

51. By visiting and duly worshipping Raṅgeśa, Bhūteśa, Mahāvidyā and Bhairava, the devotee shall attain the benefit of the pilgrimage.

52. By taking a holy dip in the Catuḥsāmudrika (where four oceans meet), the well of Kubjā and Gaṅgā called Kṛṣṇā and of the lord of Gaṇas (attendants), the devotee is liberated from all sins.

53. O auspicious-faced lady, lord Keśava, the destroyer of all miseries presides as the overlord of the entire zone called Mathura.

54. O gentle lady, if one does not see Keśava in the sacred zone of Mathura, one's life becomes purposeless. He will drift about in the ocean of worldly existence.

55-56. O splendid-faced lady, there are many other numerous Tīrthas there. By taking a holy dip therein and by giving something to the people staying there, a man wards off a wretched state. He does not go to hell. The truth has been stated to you. He who narrates or listens to the greatness of Mathura attains devotion to Hari and (thereafter) attains all cherished desires.

CHAPTER EIGHTY

The Glory of Vṛndāvana

Mohini requested :

1. O bestower of honour, the greatness of Mathura and the forests has been heard. Tell me a little about the secret of Vṛndāvana too.

2. O Brāhmaṇa, Vṛndāvana is, as it were, the glory of the earth preserved in secret. I desire to hear about it. Narrate it to me in detail.

Vasu said :

3. O gentle lady, listen to the esoteric secret from me about Vṛndāvana. After acquiring it from the excellent preceptor, it has never been recounted by me to anyone.

4. O gentle lady, the secret of the lord of the cowherdesses had been communicated to my preceptor by Nārada of great soul. But it had been at first confided to Nārada by Vṛndā.

5-6. That I shall recount to you as it is conducive to the uplift of the universe. On one occasion, Nārada, the dear friend of the lord, was wandering over the worlds. He reached Vṛndāvana and stopped on the banks of the lake Puṣpasaras.

O gentle lady, it is situated in the north-west sector of the sacred place Mathura.

7. A fourth part of Vṛndāvana is the secret rendezvous of the lord of cowherdesses. The mountain Govardhana is also there near the Sakhīsthala. (the rendezvous of his friend).

8. That is the penance grove of Vṛndā. It is in Nandigrāma near the Yamunā. O chaste lady, the beautiful Vṛndāvana is on the charming banks of the Yamunā.

9. O blessed lady, the highly meritorious Puṣpasaras lake is also there. On the same beautiful bank is the hermitage of Vṛndā which is extremely conducive to pleasure.

10-11. It is here that Hari takes rest every day at midday along with his woman friends. Nārada resorted for a short while in the cool shade of a tree. He drank the cool water of the lake Puṣpasaras after performing the midday holy rites. He sat on the bank of the lake.

12. Even as Nārada sat watching, O Mohinī, cowherds and cowherdesses came into that beautiful hermitage of Vṛndā in groups and in groups they went away.[1]

13. For the period of a Yāma (three hours) he stayed there thus, when the day was short of half a Prahara he entered the wonderful hermitage.

1. VV. 12-33 describe how Nārada who wanted to know the Secret of Love-devotion to Kṛṣṇa, was changed into a woman and enjoyed by Lord Kṛṣṇa.

14. Vṛndā, the gentle lady devoted to the love of Kṛṣṇa was staying there receiving the visitors and extending hospitality to them with fruits etc.

15. O gentle lady, on seeing that ascetic woman, Nārada who was highly esteemed by saintly persons, bowed down to her, with great humility. He sat on the bare ground.

16. At the end of her meditation and Yogic practice, Vṛndā opened her eyes. She offered a seat to Nārada who was the guest.

17. Desirous of knowing the secret of the lord of cowherdesses (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) from her, Nārada stayed there on being respectfully honoured by Vṛndā.

18. The son of Brahmā (i.e. Nārada) accepted the hospitality extended by her. Knowing that she was delighted in her mind, he informed her of his heart-felt desire.

19. Having gauged his desire of knowledge with her Yogic power and meditation, O beautiful lady, she sent for her friend named Mādhavī and told her :

20. "O Mādhavī, see that Nārada, the great soul, realizes his desire so that the meritoriousness of myself and this hermitage is enhanced.

21. If one does not carry out the loving request of a visitor to the hermitage, it is in vain. It is comparable to a jackal's den.

22. At the behest of her mistress Vṛndā, Mādhavī, the good lady, took Nārada to the excellent bank of a lake.

23-25a. She directed him to take his holy bath facing the north-west. Then, O gentle lady, at the behest of that lady, Nārada of divine vision dipped himself into the water meditating on Śrīkṛṣṇa's contact. When the excellent sage Nārada plunged into the lake, the lady Mādhavī went back to Vṛndā, O gentle lady, after completing her task of carrying out his wish.

25b-26a. Nārada came out of the water after the plunge and found himself in the form of a woman. It was very surprising.

26b-27. Nāradī (the lady Nārada) smilingly glanced all round and saw a woman stationed in the north-east. She was beautiful and was bedecked in excellent ornaments. She was beckoning with the gesticulations of her hand to Nāradī to come towards her.

28. Nāradī was called by her and so she went near that lady. After instilling confidence into her, she was taken to another place.

29. Nāradī was taken by the lady to a certain chamber full of woman and ornamentally decorated with gems and jewels. The lady withdrew thereafter and Nāradī was received duly by those women.

30. She was received by the groups of companions, Viśākhā etc. After consoling her, O gentle lady, she was taken within the inner chamber by a maid. There Nāradī saw the lord of the cowherdesses.

31. When the messengers returned, Nāradī was called by the lover of cowherdesses. After bowing down to the lord, she went near him bashfully.

32. The man of taste (Lord Kṛṣṇa) embraced her, had the sportful dalliance with her and then dismissed her. Gradually she came once again to the lake Puṣpasaras.

33. She was then made to plunge into the lake on the south-west side. Nārada then regained his manhood. He was surprised at it.

34. At the behest of Vṛndā, Nārada performed a penance in the south-eastern side of the lake in an isolated spot and stayed there eagerly to see that (?).

35. Nārada thus continued his penance sustaining himself with the fruits sent by Vṛndā.

36. Once Nārada was moving about here and there within his hermitage. He heard some charming sound uttered by some lady.

37. On hearing it, Nārada of a spiritual vision became curious. He searched the forest but could not see any trace of the person.

38. Surprised much at this, he respectfully asked Vṛndā about it. She narrated to him the story of the Kubjā (hump-backed lady) from the beginning.

39. This hump-backed lady is stationed in a house underground. She is the excellent beloved of the lord. In an isolated place, she receives her Lord and renders service to him to his heart's content.

40. O excellent sage, excepting me no one knows her. Hence I shall succinctly narrate. It is because you were desirous of seeing her that you performed the penance.

41. Early in the morning, Kṛṣṇa was wakened up by his mother. He took his bath and breakfast. Followed by his friends he went to the forest for grazing the cows. In that connection he entered Vṛndāvana.

42. He spent his time sporting about along with his friends (the cowherds) and preventing the cows (from straying). He entered my hermitage along with his two or three dear friends.

43. Propitiated by means of fruits, roots and other edibles offered by me, he used to sleep along with his beloved lady in the calf-shed covetable by everyone.

44. The cowherd fond of cowherds' colony was served by his intimate lady friend Rādhā. Thus, he used to sport about in different bowers severally for a period of about four hours and a half.

45. While he was asleep there, he was fanned by Rādhā and others. Within a Yāma and a half, he himself used to wake up and honour his beloved ones.

46-47. Surrounded by cowherds and cows, he delightedly used to go back to the cowherds' colony in the evening. His female friends used to take Rādhā[1], his beloved to the spot called Sakhī-Sthala. Every day the beautiful ladies of large eyes, used to go to their own houses along with her. Coming to and fro like this sportingly, he frequented that place everyday.

48. He is seen, O dear one, only by me and not by god Brahmā, Śiva and others. O dear one, the grandeur of the rendezvous of the hump-backed lady was not observed even by me.

49. I know it through the utterance of the delighted lover. I am telling you a secret that should be well guarded as well. She got this excellent rendezvous through the merit accruing from the offer of unguents to Lord Kṛṣṇa.

---

1. The author of the NP. regards Rādhā as the highest deity along with Kṛṣṇa. Rādhā the anonymous cowherdess—beloved of Kṛṣṇa in the Bh. P. has attained topmost eminence in pre-Jayadeva period in East India (Bengal-Orissa region). Hence this chapter is the crowning piece of the NP.

50-52. She was always eagerly occupied in Kṛṣṇa's service. She was alone and he too was alone. But there are hundred crores of similar couples imitating Kubjā and Kṛṣṇa and engaged in different kinds of dalliance. Born of the first pair they enliven the immobile ones as well. Though they are devoid of going (out of existence ?) and coming (into existence), they are still ever fresh and new (?) (Defective) that is unapproachable to the third person where the second person becomes united with one.[1]

53. O Brāhmaṇa, their form comprising in itself the origination, sustenance and dissolution of the universe is extraordinary. I alone know this. Having heard what has been heard you too know this.

54-55. A Mantra (what is secretly discussed) is burnt (doomed) if it reaches six ears. Follow (in practice) this saying. On hearing this highly inaccessible secret through the utterance of Vṛndā, sage Nārada thought of both. The sage acquired that great principle. O daughter of Brahmā, this is the subject-matter between a preceptor and a disciple.

56. They alone understand not anyone else. The same principle holds good in regard to us both. O auspicious lady, only one knows; there is only one hearer and he knows from one the speaker.

57. Hence, there is only one reality. There are not many things here. O highly-blessed lady, the secret of the lord of cowherdesses has been related to you.

58-60a. I shall narrate to you the open public behaviour of the lord. Listen with proper attention. O daughter of Brahmā, in the forest of Vṛndāvana, this Brahmakuṇḍa is highly meritorious. It is the place where Reality was clearly manifested to your father. The man who takes a holy dip there, pondering over the original dress and feature, visualizes a part of the grandeur of the Eternal Player.

60b-61a. O gentle lady, it is Govindakuṇḍa where Govinda was pondered over by Indra who understood the

1. This is the Advaita (non-dualism in Bhakti). This is the esoteric secret in the path of Vaiṣṇava Bhakti.

Tattva (the real principle). By taking the holy dip there one shall attain 'That'.

61b-62a. Where the Rāsa dance was begun by Kuñjavihārin (one who sports about in bowers i.e. Lord Kṛṣṇa) who assumed single as well as multifarious forms and danced with the cowherdesses, a Tīrtha has been formed of the same nature and efficacy. By taking a holy dip therein, one can realise the lord.

62b-63a. At the spot where Nanda and other cowherds saw the magnificence of the omnipresent Lord, is a Tīrtha called by the name Tattva-Prakāśa (Revealer of Reality). It is waters of Śrī Yamunā.

63b-64a. The place where the encounter with and pounding of Kāliya was shown to the cowherds is mentioned as a meritorious Tīrtha. It is destructive of sins of men.

64b-65a. The place where the cowherds were rescued from the forest fire along with their womenfolk, children, infants and wealth by Kṛṣṇa is a holy Tīrtha. which is destructive of sins by means of a holy dip therein.

65b-66a. A man who takes a holy dip in the place where demon Keśin who had assumed the form of a horse had been killed by Kṛṣṇa playfully, attains the abode of Viṣṇu.

66b-67a. The place where the wicked demon Vṛṣa was killed by him who thereby became pure, is well known as Ariṣṭakuṇḍa. It yields salvation merely through holy dip therein.

67b-69a. There are Tīrthas in the places where the demons Dhenuka, Agha, Baka, Vatsa, Vyoma and Lamba were killed by Kṛṣṇa sportively. By taking bath and by performing Tarpaṇa rites devoutly to the Pitṛs and the Devas, the devotee attains the desired benefits, thanks to the favour of Gopāla.

69b-70a. The places where he slept, took food, walked about, something was heard by him, or seen by him, or committed by him in an extraordinary manner are all Kṣetras (holy centres). They yield heavenly goal by means of a holy dip therein, O gentle lady.

70b-71a. Wherever he was heard, thought about, seen, bowed, embraced, eulogised or requested for by meritorious persons, there exists a Tīrtha that bestows salvation.

71b-72a. O gentle lady, the place where a terrible penance was performed by Śrīrādhā is Śrī Kuṇḍa which is highly meritorious for a holy dip, charitable gifts, Japa and other things.

72b-77. The holy place of Vṛndāvana extends to five Yojanas (60 kms.) all round and the following are the main Tīrthas : Vatsītīrtha, Candrasaras, Apsaras lake, Rudrakuṇḍa, Kāmakuṇḍa, the great temple of Harī, Viśālā (rich in merit by) having the Alakanandā, the beautiful Nīpakhaṇḍa, Dharmakuṇḍa, devoid of impurities, the spot of Kṛṣṇa's taking meals, the region of Bala, Bṛhatsānu, the place of rendezvous of Hari, Nandigrāma, Kuṇḍa (holy pool) of Kiśorī (girl), Kokilakānana (the forest of cuckoos), the milk ocean of Śeṣaśāyin, Krīḍādeśa (the place of sports), Akṣayavaṭa, Rāmakuṇḍa, Cīracaurya (the place where garments of cowherdesses were stolen by Kṛṣṇa), Bhadrabhāṇḍīrabilvaka, the sacred lake called Mana, the bank called Bhaktabhojana, the Akrūra Tīrtha, Tārkṣyagovinda and Bahulāraṇyaka. O auspicious lady, such is the holy centre Vṛndāvana.

78. It is very holy. It is resorted to by the meritorious persons. By its mere sight, it bestows salvation. Even the Devas desire for its view which is difficult of access (even to them).

79-80a. People are not competent to witness the interior sport even by means of penance. O beautiful woman, in all the three worlds, there is nothing difficult of access to that person who eschews attachment everywhere and resorts to Vṛndāvana.

80b-81a. O lady (dear to all), perpetual devotion to Nandanandana rises up even in a person who utters the name 'Vṛndāvana'.

81b-82. O Mohinī, in the holy Vṛndāvana, men, women, monkeys, worms, insects, locusts, birds, trees, deer, mountains always utter the names Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa.

83. I think that a visit to Vṛndāvana is difficult to those men who are overwhelmed by Kṛṣṇa's Māyā and whose minds are defiled by lust.

84. O auspicious lady, their lives have been rendered fruitful by those meritorious persons by whom Vṛndāvana has been visited. They deserve the compassion of Hari.

85. O daughter of Brahmā, of what use is much talk said and heard? The splendid and meritorious Vṛndāvana must be resorted to by those who desire to attain liberation.

86. Vṛndāvana must be seen, approached, resorted to and meditated upon always. There is nothing else on the earth that is as conducive to the enhancement of glory.

87. It was here that in an ancient Kalpa, a Brāhmaṇa named Govardhana performed a great penance after becoming detached from the entire world.

88. O gentle lady, the unchanging lord Viṣṇu, the lord of Devas, went to that place of his in order to grant the boon to that Brāhmaṇa.

89-92. The Brāhmaṇa saw the lord of gods thus; He was holding the conch, discus and iron club. The jewel Kaustubha was shining on his chest. His earrings had the shape of the shark. He had a good crown and beautiful bangles. He was bedecked in anklets that produced a sweet jingling sound. A garland of sylvan flowers was worn round his neck. There was a mark of Śrīvatsa on his chest. He was clad in a yellow silken garment. He had the lustre of a fresh cloud. His umbilicus, neck, cheeks, nose, teeth, knees, thigh, and the waist were all fine and beautiful. He was an ocean of mercy. He was joyous : His lotus-like face indicated his pleasure.

93. On seeing the lord, the Brāhmaṇa got up immediately and prostrated on the ground straight as a staff. On being asked, "Tell me the boon you wish to choose", Govardhana said to Hari :

94-96a. "Place your feet on my back and stand there. This is the boon I crave for". On hearing it, the lord thought over it again and again and finally stood on his back. Then the Brāhmaṇa said again : "O lord, O lord of the universe, I cannot approve of letting you come down from my back. Hence, be steady like this.

1. VV. 87-101 explain that the Govardhana hill so dear to Kṛṣṇa was originally a Brāhmaṇa who was devoted to Kṛṣṇa.

96b. Ever since that time, the lord, the Ātman of the universe did not abandon the Brāhmaṇa Govardhana who assumed the form of a mountain. In some cases he goes to Yogivana.

97-99. During the time of his incarnation as Kṛṣṇa, the lord knew that the Brāhmaṇa Govardhana had attained Sārūpya (the identity of form) with himself. Hence, he fed him through Nanda and others by means of a heap of cooked rice and milk. After propitiating the Brāhmaṇa turned into a mountain he realized that he was thirsty. So he made him drink from the fresh clouds. By this action he became a friend of Vāsudeva.

100. O gentle lady, the man who devoutly worships the mountain by means of services and circumambulates it, gets no rebirth.

101. The mountain Govardhana has become meritorious, thanks to the residence of Hari. If one visits this, he need not visit other holy mountains.

102. The sand-banks of the Yamunā are beautiful and rendered more so by the sports of Kṛṣṇa, O blessed lady, say yourself : Where else on the surface of the earth, can you see a holier place?

103. Hence, after abandoning other holy forests, rivers and mountains that yield merit unto men, Vṛndāvana should always be resorted to.

104. The river Yamī (Yamunā) is holy. The mountain Govardhana is holy. Hence, is there any forest on the earth holier than Vṛndāvana?

105. There is nothing else worthy of being resorted to by persons whose minds are deeply attached to worldly objects and who are afraid of the sins of Kali age. There is no other place in the three worlds but Vṛndāvana that is worthy of being resorted to.

106. In it Hari roams about all the while along with the cows, cowherds and cowherdesses. Peacock feathers adorn his crest. He has the form of an excellent dancer. Karṇikāra flowers adorn his ears. By the sound of his flute, the sound of the female swan is conquered (i.e. it excels it). Vaijayantī garland covers his body. He has acquired a number of jewels from Nanda's person. He is the supreme soul called Haṁsa (swan) and Aham (?)

107. Giriśa (Śiva) who melts (i.e. is overwhelmed) with devotion, meditates on him day and night in the company of the daughter of the mountain (Pārvatī) in secret. He is indeed called Ardhanārīśvara. The lotus-born deity Brahmā keeps his wife Gāyatrī within the cavity of his heart. Indra looks at Śacī with his thousand eyes (?)

108. (Defective) A person who appreciates the taste but not a master of the ear confines his wife in a secret (isolated) place due to the fear of hearing the sound of the flute. What else is the popular talk? The flute (which was originally a piece of bamboo) underwent the process of cutting, drying, burning and perforation (?). Still it yearned to imbibe the nectar from the lips of the lord of cowherdesses.

109. How can I describe the good fortune of those Ballavīs (cowherdesses) accompanied by whom, the son of Nanda came to Vṛndāvana during the nights and sported in dalliance in the bowers brightly illuminated by the rays of the moon. Even the dust from their feet is not attainable to Śrī (Lakṣmī), Śiva, Brahmā and others.

110. Even the grasses, deer, birds, worms and other living beings that have attained Vṛndāvana are worthy of being worshipped by Brahmā, Hara and Ramā (Lakṣmī). A person who comes there and is engaged in the nondualistic states (of the Lord) and who has attained Brahman-hood becomes happy in love and plays about immersed in the billows of the ocean of happiness.

111. There (in Vṛndāvana) wild beasts of prey forget their natural enmity and behave like friends and enjoy the bliss of Vṛndāvana. If one eschews this and goes elsewhere, can he be happy (in the world) that is a box of Kṛṣṇa's Māyā? Can a person who eschews lord of wealth and goes elsewhere get wealth?

112. That Vṛndāvana forest is the form of the merit of the whole world. Resorting to it, the darkness in my mind (is dispelled). I am able to excel the whole world and keep it permanently suppressed. At every step, the lord of the cowherdesses is soaked in love. He does not differentiate between a high born and a low born person, but uplifts all devotees irrespective of their states.

113. Lord Kṛṣṇa is prepared even to serve a devotee who remembers and sees the cowherds, cowherdesses, birds, deer, mountains and the dust of the land trodden by the cows and the cowherds and bows down. He is tied to them by means of the rope of love. Hence do not think of any other lord worthy of being resorted to, other than the lord of the cowherd's colony. O daughter of Brahmā I do not know any other such deity.

114-115. Thus the greatness of the forest of Vṛndāvana has been succinctly narrated to you, O daughter of Brahmā. There remains nothing to be recounted.

116. This alone should always be heard, glorified, remembered and meditated upon by sinless men afraid of worldly existence.

117. O daughter of Brahmā, the pure man who listens, to the greatness of Vṛndāvana and glorifies it, is undoubtedly Viṣṇu himself.

CHAPTER EIGHTYONE[1]

The Review of the Story of Vasu

Vasu said :

1. O blessed lady, attain everything that has been glorified in the section on the excellent greatness of the Tīrthas, by undertaking pilgrimage to the zones of Tīrthas (holy centres), O queen.

2. O queen of men, I shall invite Brahmā, your father, and going back to Vṛndāvana roam about along with the deer.

1. This chapter practically concludes the NP. by Nārada's reciting the deeds of Kṛṣṇa throughout his life. Vasu permanently stayed in Vraja on hearing Kṛṣṇa's glory.

Sūta said :

3. After saying thus to Mohinī, O Brāhmaṇas, Vasu, her priest was honoured and repeatedly worshipped. Thereafter, he went to the world of Brahmā.

4. After going there he bowed down to god Brahmā, the creator, the maker of the worlds and reported to him the complete details of Mohinī's activities.

5. On hearing the words of the Brāhmaṇa Vasu, O Brāhmaṇas, Brahmā was delighted. He said to him—" O dear one, indeed you have accomplished a meritorious work.

6. O Brāhmaṇa, the daughter of mine, Mohinī, who had been engaged by me for the purpose of Devas was unsuccessful in her mission. She was cursed by you and her destruction was effected.

7. Again, at my behest O dear one, she had been resuscitated to life by you now. She had been thus made contented and blessed. Hence who else can be more virtuous and fortunate than you?

8. The excellent news about Mohinī has been conveyed to me by you. Delighted thereby, O Brāhmaṇa, I shall grant you a boon. Tell me what you wish to have."

9. On being thus asked by Brahmā, the creator of the worlds, that Brāhmaṇa bowed to him and chose as boon (the facility) to reside in Vṛndāvana.

10. O leading sages, on hearing these words, the creator of the worlds, the remover of the anguish of those who seek refuge in him, spoke with smiles in all his four faces, 'so be it'.

11. Delighted in his mind, Vasu bowed down to Brahmā, came to Vṛndāvana and performed penance with concentration and mental purity.

12. O Brāhmaṇas, even as Vasu performed the penance, many years—More than five thousand years passed by. Thereafter Hari was delighted with it.

13. Accompanied by two or three of his most beloved cowherd friends he appeared before the excellent Brāhmaṇa and said—"Tell me, O Brāhmaṇa, what do you wish to choose? I am satisfied with your penance.

14. Thereafter, Vasu (prostrated himself before him) touching the ground with eight of his limbs. He got up subsequently and said—"O lord, I wish to stay in Vṛndāvana for ever".

15. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, Viṣṇu granted him his desire. Saluted by him again, the lord vanished.

16. Ever since that day the Brāhmaṇa stayed there assuming the forms he pleased. He pondered perpetually over the lord who was enthusiastic over the forest Vṛndāvana.

17. On one occasion, as he was seated on the banks of Yamunā, thinking about him (the lord), he saw Nārada. the son of Brahmā, who came to Vṛndāvana.

18. On seeing his grand preceptor (preceptor's preceptor) he bowed to him and asked him about the holy rites that were conducive to the increase of devotion to the lord.

19. On being earnestly asked by him thus, Nārada who had visualized the Self recounted to him the entire future deeds of Hari.

20. "O Brāhmaṇa, once I went to lord (Śiva) residing on the Kailāsa mountain; to visit him as well as to ask him about the future secret of Vṛndāvana.

21. Afterwards I bowed down to the lord of Devas surrounded by Siddhas. I bowed down to Maheśa whose greatness pervaded the entire sphere of the cosmic egg.

12-23. I asked him about the desired welfare. Lord Hara smilingly spoke to him—"O son of Brahmā, I shall tell you what has been formerly heard from the tongue of Surabhi (the divine cow) in regard to the future activities of Hari about which you have asked. Once Surabhi was seen by me staying in the middle of the world, Goloka.

24. She was accompanied by her progeny. She was delighted and affable mentally. Thereafter, the mother of cows, rich in milk was asked about the future events.

25-26. O divine sage, she told me the future history of Hari — "Now Lord Kṛṣṇa is seated comfortably in the Goloka accompanied by Rādhā.

27-28. O Maheśāna, he accords happiness to the cowherds and cowherdesses, O Śiva, once (sometime in future) he will appear on the world of earth, in the region of Mathura and will display wonderful sport in Vṛndāvana. Rādhā the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu will angrily curse Śrīdāman who will be a great favourite of Hari and his friend, and who will be stationed at the threshold of Virajā's house (?) O blessed one, he too will curse Rādhā in return.

29-30. He will curse thus : "Go down to the mortal world". And thanks to this mutual course—afterwards requested Brahmā, Hari will attain earth for removing the burden of the earth. He will take birth in the house of Vasudeva and he will be called Vāsudeva. He will be the delighter of the Yādavas.

31. Afterwards due to the fear of Kaṃsa, he will go to the cowherds' colony of Nanda. After going there he will kill Pūtanā, the murderess of infants.

32. He will also kill the Dānava Cakravāta (the Cyclone) and the Asura Vatsa of huge body who will harass Devas.

33. He will subdue Kāliya, the serpent, and expel him out of Yamunā. He will kill Dhenuka of unbeareable prowess, Baka (crane) and also the demon asura Agha.

34-36a. He will kill Dāva, Pradāva as well as Pralamba. He will remove the pride and arrogance of Brahmā, Indra, Varuṇa and the erring sons of Dhanada (Kubera). The lord will kill the Asuras, Vṛṣa, Śaṅkhacūḍa, Keśin and Vyoma. Staying in Vraja (cowherd's colony) for eleven years, he will sport with the cowherdesses.

36b-38a. Going to Mathura, he will kill the washerman and straighten the humpbacked lady. He will break the bow and kill Kuvalayāpīḍa, the excellent elephant and the wrestlers Cāṇūra and others. Thereafter, Kṛṣṇa will kill Kaṁsa, his own maternal uncle.

38b-39a. He will release his imprisoned parents. After killing the king of Yavanas, and due to his fear of Jarāsandha, Kṛṣṇa will go to Dvārakā.

39b-40. The lord will then marry Rukmiṇī, Satyabhāmā, Satyā, Jāmbavatī, Kaikeyī, Lakṣmaṇā, Mitravindā and Kālindikā After killing Bhauma (i.e. the asura Naraka) he will marry sixteen thousand wives.

41. After killing Pauṇḍaka (the pretender Vāsudeva), Śiśupāla, Dantavaktra, Vidūratha, Śālva and Dvivida, he will kill Balvala.

42. Then he will kill, Vajranābha, Sunābha along with (the demons) the residents of Ṣaṭpuras (six cities), and the Daitya Triśarīra who will be powerful, thanks to the boons.

43. O Śiva, eager to remove the burden of the earth he will create causes for mutual quarrel and kill Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas.

44. He will make Yadus, members of his own family, quarrel and destroy one another and then will come back to his own abode accompanied by his followers.

45. O Śambhu, thus the future story of Hari has been recounted to you. Go, when Hari comes down to the surface of the world of mortals you will see everything".

46. O son of Brahmā, on hearing the words of Surabhi, I was much delighted and I came back to my own abode. This has now been mentioned to you by me".

47. On hearing the wotds of the trident-bearing lord conveyed by Nārada, Vasu was delighted much. He felt his hairs standing on their ends due to delight.

48. O excellent Brāhmaṇa, I sing about the lord. I am elated. With the string of the lute, I divert the dejected universe.

This future story has thus been narrated to you by me.

49a. Just as Gautama, I too am engaged in the welfare of the worlds".

Sūta said :

49b-50a. Nārada said this to Vasu, the Brāhmaṇa, and went away sounding his lute and pondering over the scion of the family of Yadu (i.e. Lord Kṛṣṇa).

50b-51. On hearing his words, Vasu was delighted in his mind. O Brāhmaṇa, he permanently stayed in the Cowherds' colony, Vraja.

CHAPTER EIGHTYTWO[1]

The Benefit of Listening to the Nārada Purāṇa

The sages said :

1. O Sūta, O virtuous saint, the nectar-like story of Śrī Kṛṣṇa recounted by you has been heard. We are blessed thereby, thanks to your favour.

2. What did Mohinī, the daughter of Brahmā do after Vasu had departed to the world of Brahmā. It behoves you to narrate it to us.

Sūta said :

3. O sages, hear ye all, the auspicious story of Mohinī, the pilgrimage she undertook afterwards to the holy centres.

4. In the manner indicated by Vasu, Mohinī, the daughter of Brahmā went to the banks of the celestial river (the Gaṅgā) in accordance with the injunctions for the pilgrimage.

5. After going there, the daughter of Vedhas (god Brahmā) took a holy bath therein and journeyed over the Gaṅgā and other holy rivers) with a delighted mind, in the company of Brāhmaṇas.

6. She resorted to each of the holy centres in the manner laid down by her preceptor Vasu and took the journey of pilgrimage.

7. In those Tīrthas she worshipped Viṣṇu and other deities. She offered different charitable gifts to the Brāhmaṇas.

1. This chapter is divided into two parts. Part I—VV. 3-22 describe the performance of pilgrimage to various sacred places by Mohini. VV. 23 ff describe the period of Vedha (overlapping of Tithis) assigned to Mohini which should be avoided by the observer of the Ekādaśi fast.

VV. 29-49 describe the merit accrued by listening to the NP.

VV. 50 ff show the catholicity of outlook of the NP. The one-ness non-duality) of Brahman is the main thesis of the NP.

In V. 62, the author thanks his audience as it is due to them that he was reminded of Hari, 'the cause of all causes'

8. At Gayā, she duly offered Piṇḍa to her husband. After worshipping Viśveśvara at Kāśī she went over to the holy centre Puruṣottama (Jagannātha of Purī).

9. At that holy centre she partook of Naivedya of the lord of the universe and purified her body. She then reached the mountain Laksmaṇācala.

10. After duly worshipping at the shrine there, she went to Setu and worshipped Rāmeśvara. At Mahendra mountain, she paid obeisance to Bhārgava Paraśurāma.

11. O Brāhmaṇa, she went to the holy centre of Śiva, viz : Gokarṇa and worshipped Īśvara. Then along with those excellent Brāhmaṇas, she went to Prabhāsa.

12. She took a holy dip and performed Tarpaṇa rites for the Devas and others. After completing the pilgrimage, she visited Hari at Dvārakā and went to Kurukṣetra.

13. There also the queen of men duly fulfilled the prescribed rites of pilgrimage and came to Gaṅgādvāra where she took holy bath in accordance with injunctions.

14-15. After visiting and joyously bowing to Kāmodā, she reached Badaryāśrama and worshipped the sages Nara and Nārāyaṇa. She then hastened to visit Kāmākṣī. After bowing to Siddhanātha, she went to Ayodhyā.

16. After duly taking a holy dip in the Sarayū and after worshipping the lord of Sītā, she resorted to the pilgrimage of middle centres, she then went to Amarakaṇṭaka.

17. After worshipping Maheśa there, she went up the current of the Narmadā. After serving Oṁkāra and visiting Īśāna she went to Māhiṣmatī.

18-19a. After worshipping Tryambakeśa, she reached Tripuṣkara. After giving many charitable gifts at the Puṣkara in accordance with the injunctions, she reached Mathura, the most excellent of all excellent Tīrthas.

19b-21. She performed the inner pilgrimage (Ābhyantarī Yātrā) upto twenty Yojanas. (240 KMs.). After going all over the city, she visited Caturvyūha (the fourfold incarnation of the lord). After taking a holy dip in the Viṁśati Tīrtha, she concluded the circumambulation. To the citizens of Mathura, she gifted ten thousand cows, all richly adorned after feeding them with excellent cooked rice and with her mind melting with devout feelings.

22. She bowed to them and bade farewell to them. She entered Kālindī the divine river that destroys sins.

23-25a. Therein she stabilised herself in the end of Yama's Tīthi. She has not emerged out of it till today. When Mohinī attains the point of sunrise she defiles all Smārta rites (rites laid down in Smṛtis). When Mohinī attains the point of Aruṇodaya (predawn), she defiles the Śrauta rites (those laid down in Śrutis) and when she attains the midnight point, she defiles Vaiṣṇava (pertaining to the followers of Viṣṇu) rites. The man must observe fast on the Ekādaśī day when there is no Vedha (overlapping of Tithi) of Mohinī and worship Viṣṇu on the Dvādaśī day. Thereby undoubtedly he goes to Vaikuṇṭha.

25b-26a. O Brāhmaṇas, goddess Mohinī was born of god Brahmā and Ekādaśī was born of Viṣṇu. It was due to a spirit of rivalry against Viṣṇujā, the daughter of Viṣṇu that Mohini was created by Brahmā.

26b-28. The saintly king Rukmāṅgada was devoted to Viṣṇu's loyal devotion. She was not competent enough to prevent him from the holy vow of Ekādaśi. When the king went to the world of Viṣṇu accompanied by his wife and son, Mohinī stationed at the end of Yama's Tithi, vies with Ekādaśi Tithi. Thus, O leading Brāhmaṇa, the story of Mohinī has been recounted by me.

29. I have told you this also viz, Why she was created by Brahmā and how she stationed herself there. Thus the latter half of the Nāradīya Purāṇa is recounted. It yields worldly pleasures and salvation.

30. In this work, Hari's devotion is achieved at every step of men. The Nāradīya Purāṇa is endowed with all the ten characteristics.

31. It is the effective cause of the four aims viz. virtue, wealth, love and liberation. The man who listens devoutly to this shall attain the region of Viṣṇu.

32-33. This is the eternal seed of all other Purāṇas. O excellent Brāhmaṇas, everything, viz.: Pravṛtta and Nivṛtta

(the worldly activities and their renunciation) has been mentioned in detail by the intelligent son of Parāśara. Nāradīya Purāṇa is full of superhuman stories.

34. It should not be imparted to anyone and everyone indiscriminately. It has been recounted to me by Vyāsa overlooking Paila and other disciples. He recounted this Nārada-saṁhitā to me and not to them.

35-36a. Obeisance to that Vedavyāsa who is identical with Viṣṇu, and who expounded the Nārada Saṁhitā i.e. the Nārada Purāṇa to me. It was Sanaka and other highly blessed sages who revealed this Purāṇa Saṁhitā to Nārada, the learned.

36b-38. The lord in the form of a swan had instructed the eternal Brahman enhanced by perfect knowledge to these sages. The same thing, Nārada of spiritual vision, revealed to sage Veda-Vyāsa. He told him the esoteric secret. This is difficult to be obtained in the world and it has been revealed by me.

39. To men who listen and narrate it is conducive to the fulfilment of fourfold aims of life. A Brāhmaṇa shall become the storehouse of the Vedas, a Kṣatriya will conquer the Earth.

40. A Vaiśya shall be richly endowed with wealth, a Śūdra shall be liberated from misery. This Saṁhitā is glorified as containing twenty-five thousand verses (?).

41. It consists of five Pādas (sections) as mentioned by Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana. When this is being heard, all doubts of men who are devotees with some specific desires are cleared.

42-44. Those men who are devoid of desires, are liberated. The devotees shall visit holy Tīrthas such as Naimiṣa, Puṣkara, Gayā, Mathurā, Dvārakā, the hermitage of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, Kurukṣetra, Narmadā and the holy centre Śrī Puruṣottama. He should then confine himself to a diet of Haviṣya (cooked rice soaked in ghee), should lie (sleep) on the bare ground. He should avoid sexual intercourse. He should conquer all the sense-organs. Thereafter, if he reads this Saṁhitā, he is liberated from the ocean of worldly existence.

45-46. Just as Ekādaśī is the most excellent of all holy vows, just as the Ganges is the holiest of all rivers, just as Vṛndāvana is the most excellent of all forests, just as Kurukṣetra is the most excellent of all holy centres, just as Kāśī is the most excellent of all cities, just as Mathura is the best of all holy Tīrthas, and just as Puṣkara is the holiest of all lakes, so also, O Brāhmaṇas, this is the best of all Purāṇas.

47. Devotees of Gaṇeśa, Sūrya, Viṣṇu, Śakti and Śambhu—all these are authorized in this Purāṇa whether they have any desire to fulfil or not.

48. Whether a man or a woman listens to this or narrates this with a specific desire in the mind, he or she shall certainly attain that.

49. By regularly reading the Nāradīya Purāṇa, one who is dejected due to ailments, shall be liberated from ailments.

One who is overwhelmed by fear, shall become fearless. He who is desirous of victory shall be victorious over the enemies.

50. Obeisance to that lord identical with all, the Ātman of all, who creates the universe in the beginning by the attribute of Rajas, who maintains it in the middle by the quality of Sattva and who swallows it in the end by the quality of Tamas.

51. Obeisance to that Brahmātman by whom the sages, Manus, Siddhas, guardians of the quarters and Prajāpatis, Brahmā etc., have been created.

52. One shall know that to be the real form of Ātman that is formless and identical with knowledge that form from which words recede and in whom the mind does not penetrate.

53. I salute that attributeless Being beyond darkness which has a wonderful form and by the truth of which this universe evolves and develops truly.

54. The lord is birthless, single and imperishable in the beginning, in the middle and in the end. He shines in different forms. I salute that unsullied Being.

55. This universe consisting of the mobile and immobile beings is born of the unsullied Being. That is the truth, knowledge and non dualistic entity, that in which the world stands and is dissolved.

56-57. The followers of Śiva call that supreme Being Śiva, the knowers of the Sāṅkhya call him Pradhāna. O Brāhmaṇas, the Yogins call that Puruṣa, and the people who follow Mīmāṁsā call him Karman. The Vaiśeṣikas and others call him Vibhu, those who ponder over Śakti call him Cicchakti. I salute that non-dualistic Brahman that is the cause of different forms and activities?

58. Devotion of men to the lord facilitates the assumption of the lord's form. Who except a brute desires for other benefits after attaining that devotion.

59. O Brāhmaṇas, except through the association with the good, those worldly men who are averse to the lord cannot hope to gain liberation from the forest of worldly existence.

60. Virtuous men of good conduct are always conducive to the welfare of the worlds. O Brāhmaṇas, they are sympathetic towards the wretched ones. Indeed, they redeem those who seek refuge in them.

61. You are the most blessed sages in this world. You have gained approbation of the righteous ones since you glorify the renown of Vāsudeva, fresh at every time like the fresh tender sprouts.

62. I am lucky and blessed. I have been obliged by you all, since you have reminded me of Hari, the auspiciousness of the world, who is the cause of all causes.